I have dictated 36 letters this morning, & made from two to half a dozen mistakes in every one of them; and here you rebuke me with a two-page letter with only a single error in it! Years ago, a man captured me on this little error of yours, & now I get my revenge. This man said to me: “Coats are hung—on nails; cats are hung—on clothes lines; birds and fishes are hung—in the meat closet; a dead man is hung—where you please; but a living human being is the only detail of creation that is never hung, but always hanged” [MTP].

Sam also typed a long to Edward House about the difficulties he was having with LM, Republican vs. Democrat politics, and family matters. What Sam wrote one day he’d tear up the next, a case of “literary gout” he called it. He was encouraged by the people’s ability to “go straight for it, over-riding every thing in the nature of leadership” when it came to bossism. Sam loved the wondrous things his daughters said:

...CLARA [AGE 8], AT BREAKFAST YESTERDAY MORNING. LIVY AND MRS. LANGDON WERE TALKING ABOUT A TELEGRAM IN THE PAPER, WHICH DESCRIBED HOW A YOUNG GIRL HAD LOST HER LIFE ON THE STAGE OF CINCINNATI THE NIGHT BEFORE. SHE WAS PLAYING WILLIAM TELL’S SON WITH THE APPLE ON HER HEAD...AND THE ACTOR WHO TRIED TO SHOOT THE APPLE WITH THE RIFLE SENT HIS BULLET THROUGH HER BRAIN INSTEAD....THEN THE HORROR AND FRIGHT OF THE VAST AUDIENCE WAS DESCRIBED, WITH THEIR SHRIEKS, AND THE FAINTING OF WOMEN. CLARA’S THOUGHT WAS PLAINLY WITH THAT POOR ACTOR, THE CENTER OF THE CONVULSION. SHE REFLECTED A MOMENT, AND THEN SAID WITH CAST-IRON GRAVITY, “I SHOULD THINK HE WOULD HAVE BEEN EMBARRASSED.” SHE WAS MORTALLY EMBARRASSED HERSELF WHEN SHE DISCOVERED BY THE OUT-BURST OF LAUGHTER THAT HER WORD DID NOT MEAN WHAT SHE HAS SUPPOSED IT DID [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Lorenz Reich, New York importer who the New York Times called “noted all over the country as the largest importer of the highest grade of Hungarian wine” [Apr. 10, 1887 p.9].

“When doctors disagree” calamity impends. But they seem to have agreed, this time, in a solid body. I am not surprised that they, & Mr. Longfellow, & President Garfield voted as a unit in attestation of the great & unique virtues of your Tokayer Ausbruch...Ignorance is the enemy of man. I was afraid of the Aüsbruch, until I looked it in the dictionary, for I thought it meant Explosion, & dimly connected with dynamite [MTP].

Sam would later allow a line from this letter to be used as testimonial for the wine, together with a list of well-known men that reads like Who’s Who. Sam’s words: “It heals the word mind as well as the wasted body” [MTP; N.Y. Times, same article].

Joseph R. Hawley sent Sam two forms (no letter) from the American Exchange in Europe [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the bottom of one form, “Feb. 17 ’83 subscribed 500 shares. Paid in 50 per cent ($2,500)”

December 5 Tuesday – Filed with the US Patent Office: patent # 547,859: to James W. Paige: Machine for Setting, Distributing and Justifying Type [MTHHR 64n1].

December 5 ca. (after Dec. 4) – Sam wrote from Hartford to Hattie and Karl Gerhardt. Again, it was all about expenses, about the original $3,000 “limit” and to smooth things over. Hattie was also called “Josie” or “Mrs. Josie” (middle name Josephine); she was expecting and Sam sent happiness [MTP].

December 6 Wednesday – Center & Co., Private Detective Bureau, NYC wrote a postcard to Sam: “Wee [sic] have a letter of all Pawn and loan offices in City, as your watch is probably in those places. Wee will make an investigation of those places on receipt of $5.00 for expenses...send full description of watch” [MTP].

December 9 Saturday – Karl & Hattie J. Gerhardt wrote twice to Sam and Livy, in the first enclosing “a clearance paper from our consul here for a box (contents marked on invoice). It will go on the ‘Labrador’ ... which sails from Ham on the 16th of December.” The baby bust was inside. The second one page letter was simply Merry Christmas wishes [MTP].

Horace Russell wrote from NYC, hoping Sam had picked a topic for the evening of the 22nd. He listed other speakers and their subjects and did not need to know Sam’s much before a day or two ahead [MTP].

December 11 Monday – Stewart L. Woodford (chairman of the dinner committee) wrote from NYC on US attorney’s Office notepaper asking what train they might expect him, and offered to secure a hotel for him [MTP].

Julian Hawthorne (1846-1934), son of Nathaniel Hawthorne, and a prolific author and journalist in his own right wrote from NYC to Clemens. “Here are Longman’s threatening to send me up to Canada to secure their copyright” [Vassar]. Note: Longman is a publishing co. established in England in 1724.

December 12 Tuesday – Sam replied from Hartford to the Dec. 11 of Julian Hawthorne Sam explained that the way the Canadian laws read, it was impossible for a foreigner to secure a copyright there without making false claims. He mentions that “it is said—Beecher, Jeff Davis, et al” had done it.

“The Canadian law was made, distinctly & professedly, to encourage piracy...” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Horace Russell. He had arrived at a subject for his Dec. 22 toast for the New England Society of New York at Delmonico’s Restaurant. Sam proposed to be the “5th Regular toast: Woman—God bless her! Response by Mark Twain” [MTP].

Sam also inscribed Ellen C. Taft’s autograph book; she was leaving for Europe. Sam included a poem:

Who shooseth folk with wit’s keen shaft,
 Mrs Taft?
 Whose clear head maketh mine seem daft,
 Mrs Taft?
 Who aye compassion had for my sad craft,
 Mrs Taft?
 And o’er my humor wept when others laughed,
 Mrs Taft?
 Who into shams drives blade unto the shaft,
 Mrs Taft?
 But heartening cheer to merit aye doth waft,
 Mrs Taft?
 What answereth this whole raft?
 MRS TAFT!
 Hartford, Dec. 12, 1882.
 Whose heart doth keep the wine of life on draft—
 Good-fellowship—to be by all the thirsty quaffed,
 Mrs Taft?

Thomas William Clarke wrote from Chicago that the judge had taken the trademark suit under consideration [MTP]. Note: Thomas W. Clark (without the “e”) is listed as the attorney for the complainant (Sam) in Clemens vs. Belford, Clark & Co. Jan. 8, 1883. The same man.

Karl & Hattie J. Gerhardt wrote to Sam and Livy of gifts sent to the Clemens children [MTP].

December 14 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Stewart L. Woodford (1835-1913), attorney and ex-congressman from New York. Sam informed him that the Brunswick was his hotel and that he purposed to arrive there the evening of Dec. 21 for the Dec. 22 ceremonies; he thanked him for the reminder, but Judge Russell had written him the information [MTP].

George H. Morgan wrote to ask Sam, “Were you born in Gainsboro?” [MTP]. Note: see Dec 16 for answer.

December 15 Friday – Stewart L. Woodford wrote: “Thanks for card just received. I sent it to Judge Russell, who will secure your rooms at the Brunswick and wait upon you at 5⁴⁵ sharp, Friday afternoon to bring you to Delmonico’s” [MTP].

Karl & Hattie J. Gerhardt (to Sam and Livy) wrote enclosing the bill of lading for the box sent (baby bust). He mentioned making a sketch for the Paul Revere statue contest [MTP].

December 16 Saturday – Sam typed a short note from Hartford to John Brown Jr. thanking him for the picture sent “of a room whose aspect was so familiar to us and with which we have so many loving associations.” Sam sent another picture of little Jean, saying “two pictures of Jean Clemens” were much better “than none at all” [MTP].

Sam also typed a note to Edward S. Martin (1856-1939), who had written seeking an article. Martin attended Harvard University; he created the humor magazine Harvard Lampoon with a few of his friends. Following graduation, he and his friends created Life magazine, originally designed as a humor publication. He would write Howells’ obituary for Harper’s Magazine in 1920. Sam referred him to Osgood, saying he had “entered into a solemn engagement with him to this effect” [MTP].

Sam also typed a note to George H. Morgan, a resident of Gainesborough, Tenn., where Sam’s parents lived before he was born. (John Marshall Clemens opened the first hotel in Gainesborough.) Morgan supposedly lived in the old Clemens house. Sam enclosed a “slip” which probably had his basic biographical information and added:

“I am grieved to inform you that I was not born in Gainsboro. I have always regretted that I was not born there. If I am ever born again, I intend to be born in Gainsboro. P.S. I believe my parents lived a while in Gainesborough, in fact I am nearly sure of it, but it was before I was born. S.L.C.” [MTP].

Sam also typed a note to Charles Webster about putting Webster “in as director in the engineering company in my place.” Sam also wanted him to go to the American Publishing Co., to see if they had notified custom houses “on the frontier” regarding Sam’s books, “in accordance with the treasury order of October 19th” [MTP]. Note: this last item had to do with allowing pirated books into the U.S. via US mail.

December 18 Monday – Grace Meyer wrote from New Paris, Indiana to Sam, with a pathetic story of her life. A fan, but she didn’t seem to ask for anything except that the letter not be made public [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Poor devil!”

Samuel E. Dawson wrote from Montreal about sending his book and his desire to visit at Hartford. He mentioned giving Julian Hawthorne a book and also having rec’d Sam’s letter [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “refers to Plymouth Rock speech”

December 21 Thursday – Sam went to New York in the evening [Dec. 14 letter to Woodford, MTP]. He stayed at the Hotel Brunswick [N.Y. Times, PERSONAL INTELLIGENCE, p.5 Dec. 23, 1882].

William Bock wrote from Brooklyn, NY to ask Sam to sign enclosed cards “On behalf of my young Son, your namesake, Samuel Clements Bock” (2 years 7 mos. old) [MTP]. Note: no reply was found. Sam must have taken note of the misspelling of his surname, an error seen on even the ex-president Hayes’ recent letter. Sam wrote on the env., “Sarcasm?”

December 22 Friday – Sam had a list of errands to attend to during the day, probably meeting with Webster among other things [Dec. 14 to Woodford, MTP]. In the evening Sam delivered a fifteen-minute speech for the 75th annual dinner of the New England Society of New York at Delmonico’s Restaurant. The subject was “Woman – God Bless Her!” In his notebook earlier he had originally chosen “Arctic searches for Arctic explorers” but felt the topic was too solemn. Fatout describes:

“...the dining room was decorated with American flags and the shields of the thirteen original states. A string band made soft music for 250 gentlemen, among whom were General Grant, General Horace Porter, J. Pierpont Morgan, Noah Brooks, Elihu Root, Joseph H. Choate, Chauncey M. Depew, Benjamin Stillman, Stewart L. Woodford, three governors, and Mark Twain” [173-5]. (Editorial emphasis)

December 23 Saturday – The New York Times reported on p.1 the banquet and Sam’s speech of the previous night:

[Mark Twain delivered] an address which kept the tables in a roar for a quarter of an hour. The speaker brought his words out in an indescribable drawl, and puffed a cloud of smoke from his cigar between every two sentences [MTNJ 2: 505n240].

This day or shortly after, Sam returned home to Hartford.

December 25 Monday – Christmas – Sam gave Livy a copy of Robert Herrick’s (1591-1674) Selections from the Poetry of Robert Herrick (1882) and inscribed it: “Livy L. Clemens / from / S. L. Clemens / Xmas 1882” [Gribben 311].

December 26 Tuesday – Hattie J. Gerhardt wrote to Sam and Livy, photo enclosed marked “Karl 6 years old” on the back. She related Christmas and gifts [MTP]. Note: this photo in file.

Pamela Moffett wrote to Sam & Livy, still boarding in San Francisco. She wrote of her son seeing Joe Goodman’s articles in The Argonaut, but not realizing he was Clemens’ old friend. She loved the weather [MTP]. Note: The Argonaut was founded in 1877 by Frank M. Pixley.

December 28 Thursday – Sam shipped all but the “8th batch” of LM manuscript to Osgood [MTLTP 160].

Sam signed a power of attorney allowing Charles Webster to transact business in his name [ViU].

Arthur Von Rapp wrote from Painesville, Ohio asking for a loan of $200, which would “be barely sufficient to pull us out of the mire at present” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Begging letter”

December 29 Friday – In the morning Sam went to his copyist’s house to obtain the missing batch of his manuscript for LM. He discovered she’d had scarlet fever, and they’d had to disinfect the pages. Sam wrote from Hartford to James R. Osgood, enclosing the eighth batch of his manuscript for LM and advising him to “give it another good disinfecting before you meddle with it, or let your children get ahold of it.” The Clemens family was in quarantine, so he asked Osgood to “telephone Fairchild” and send his thanks [MTLTP 160].

Hartford Engineering per Joseph M. Stoughton sent printed minutes to the last Stockholders meeting on Dec. 26. Clemens was listed as having 145 shares [MTP].

Charles de Kay wrote from NYC to Sam: “I have the honor to inform you that you have been elected to the Authors Club” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Chas. de Kay. Answered”

December 30 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster. Sam sent a bill for Portfolio, a magazine he’d subscribed to that wouldn’t stop arriving. He also sent deeds and papers from the Archer County Texas land that Livy owned. He also discussed Webster taking the responsibility from Charles Perkins of sending monthly checks to Orion [MTBus 206-7].

Sam also wrote to Thomas D. Lockwood, one of the original officials with the Bell Telephone interests, who had evidently written inquiring about the Mississippi book. Sam answered that it would be issued in two or three months by Osgood & Co., as LM. Sam then talked about Lockwood's book, Electricity, Magnetism and Electric Telegraphy that he'd read and liked, "particularly the first part, which details the history of electricity." Sam observed that "to an outsider they [the book's technicalities] convey a darkness as impenetrable as our easy alphabet conveys to a comanche" [MTP].

An article titled "Trollope and Mark Twain" ran in the Elmira Daily Gazette, page 6, a humorous unsigned dialogue about Sam and his knowledge of horses, or lack of it.

I remember at a dinner at the Garick club which he [Trollope] had given to Mark Twain and myself...After dinner we sauntered back to Mark's hotel, (the Edward's, St. George square,) where he was living in great state on the same floor with Disraeli.

[Sam had to admit he knew nothing about horses]—"Nothing, nothing at all and don't want to. You see, I'm a steam-boat man." Note: the article bylines the Somerville Unionist [N.Y.?] but it could not be found for the date or signature.

Orion and Mollie wrote to Sam & Livy, thanking for the checks ($100 for them and $50 for Ma) and for Christmas gifts. Mollie wrote a page that Ma "seems entirely well" [MTP].

Billiards Tourney & Canada with Osgood – History Pegs up the Driveway
Life on the Mississippi Published – Elmira Summer & Huck Finn
Collaboration with Howells – Cable's Visit to Hartford – Matthew Arnold's Visit

1883 – Sometime during the year Sam inscribed Historical View of the Literature of the South of Europe by Sismondi (1881) to Livy L. Clemens / from SLC / Hartford 1883 [MTP]. Sam inscribed in a Rollo Book for Jean “Little-girl-left-the-gate-open-book” Jean 1883-4 [MTP]. Sam sent a copy of Punch, Brothers, Punch! And other Sketches (1878) with ALS to James R. Osgood asking for “50 or 100 heliotypes like those of the Howell children” [MTP].

Sam wrote sometime during the year to Charles Webster, suggesting he get a:

...general agency for subscription books of a Boston or Phila house....so as to get & keep together a corps of canvassers to use on our own books, later [MTP].

John Henton Carter's interview of May 12, 1882 was published in Rollingpin's Humorous Illustrated Annual for 1883. Sam was quoted about his books, the new suspender he was inventing, complaints about his image as a mere humorist, and his ability as a steamboat pilot [Budd, “Interviews” 3]. Note: this piece may have run first in the St. Louis Times sometime during May 1882.

At this time, Sam owned over 150,000 shares of stock in 23 companies [MTNJ 2: 491].

An undated page in MTP's 1883 financial file in Sam's handwriting:

Investments
 Beecher 6,000
 Lib. Lit. 8,000
 Sheridan 1,400
 Leo 9,880
 Crawford 1,041
 Total 25, 241

Sometime during the year (and possibly earlier), Sam registered “Mark Twain” as a trademark in the U.S. Patent office [Twainian, Apr. 1945, p3. Oliver R. Barrett]. Note: This from the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office website:

“The Patent and Trademark Depository Library Program began in 1871 when federal statute (35 USC 12) first provided for the distribution of printed patents to libraries for use by the public. During the Program's early years, twenty-two libraries, mostly public and all but several located east of the Mississippi River, elected to participate.”

Note: Since the Chicago case against Belford & Clarke (arguing violation of trademark) went against Sam on January 8, 1883, it seems likely that any formal registration of trademark was prior to 1883.

January – Sam bought 200 shares on margin of Oregon & Transcontinental Co. stock, worth about $15,000 [MTNJ 3: 29n50]. Sometime during the first three months of the year, Sam declined an invitation of some sort offered by George Willard Benson, Christian author. “I have a house full of sick people,” Sam explained [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote that Osgood had sent a statement showing Sam's credit balance of $5,261.59 for P&P and The Stolen White Elephant. "I am getting ready for a heavy run on the new book and hope to show results" (LM) [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the back, "My balance at Osgood's $5000. Jan '83"

January 1 Monday – In Hartford, Sam inscribed a copy of The Stolen White Elephant for Miss Laura Taft: "To/ Miss Laura Taft / With the kindest regards of / The Author. / Hartford, New Year's 1883" [McBride 83].

Sam also inscribed P&P to Susan L. Warner: "Mrs. C.D. Warner, mit herzlichsten guten Wunchen des Neujahreszeit, be the grammar & spelling of it good or bad. S.L. Clemens. Hartford, Jan. 1, 1883" [MTP].

Molly & Orion Clemens finished their Dec. 31, 1882 letter to Sam and Livy [MTP].

January 3 Wednesday – James R. Osgood wrote from Boston asking about "premiums offered" for canvassers of LM [MTP].

Dean Sage wrote from NYC with a plan to sell two stocks; he also asked for an autograph for "an interesting young lady. "Can you send it to me appended to some ambiguous (not too much so) sentiment" [MTP].

C.H. McHenry wrote from Nashville, Tenn. asking for a letter written by Mark Twain [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "O hell!"

January 3 Wednesday ca. – On or about this day, Sam received a letter from James R. Osgood & Co. asking for instructions to give to canvassers about premiums for LM sales. Sam forwarded the letter with a note to Charles Webster.

"Charley, if there are any instructions to be given, you may give them—I will not interest myself in anything connected with this wretched God-damned book. S L C

"If you know of no other instructions, you can write them & tell them I say invent instructions of their own" [MTBus 207]. Note: MTP's latest transcription assigns Jan. 5? 1883 to this letter.

January 4 Thursday – George W. Waters wrote from Elmira: "The sketches reached me safely— / Your suggestion of the 'burning Ship in mid ocean' appeals to me at once—because I am charmed by the ocean, and exceedingly fond of Color...Should I be fortunate and produce a picture which would be as 'painted Music' to you I should be most happy indeed" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Dank but Keitven [?] / Longfellow's Calendar / Waters artist"

January 5 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to an unidentified person:

"If you would be kindly spoken of, die. There is no other way. / But don't hurry" [MTP].

January 6 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Osgood & Co., with directions for sets of plates, dies and printed copies of LM. Sam was anxious for success:

"We must sell 100,000 copies of the book in 12 months, and shan't want him complaining that we are the parties in fault if the sale falls short of it."

Sam also relied heavily on Livy's editorial and censorship eye:

"In proof-reading I shall cause you no delay—but I don't answer for Mrs. Clemens, who has not edited the book yet, and will of course not let a line of the proof go from here till she has read it and possibly damned it. But she says she will put aside everything else, and give her entire time to the proofs" [MTLTP 161].

Worden & Co. sent a statement with a Dec. 31 balance of $24,680.68 [MTP].

January 8 Monday – A short article ran in the New York Times on Jan. 9 about Sam losing a Chicago lawsuit (Circuit Court, N.D. Illinois) on this day, based on trademark infringement. Sam was represented by Thomas W. Clark, while Belford & Clarke by Hutchinson & Partridge.

MARK TWAIN LOSES A SUIT.

CHICAGO, Jan. 9. - Some time since Samuel L. Clemens brought suit in the United States Court against Belford, Clarke & Co., publishers, to restrain them from republishing his works. It appeared in evidence that the books republished were not copyrighted, but Clemens claimed his pseudonym of "Mark Twain" as a trade-mark. The court in its decision yesterday held that noms de plume could not be construed as trade-marks and that his failure to copyright left his works open to republication by any one.

Oliver R. Barrett referred to this case as Clemens v. Belford, Clarke & Co., 14 Federal Reporter 728 (1883).

"In that case, Clemens in his Bill of Complaint alleged that Belford, Clark[e] & Co., had, since 1880, published 'Sketches by Mark Twain;' that many or most of the sketches 'in one form or another are substantially like sketches published prior to the year 1880' by Clemens; that he had been greatly injured and his property in the said nom de plume or trademark of 'Mark Twain' as a commercial designation of authorship had been 'deteriorated and lessened in value.' Wherefore Clemens prays damages and profits and a writ of injunction restraining the further publication of said work and that the said 'plates of such book be demasked and destroyed.'

"In a rather lengthy opinion, the court, relying on the fact that the sketches were not claimed to be protected by copyright [not in earlier newspaper printings] held that Clemens could not interfere with the publication of the book, and that he had no exclusive right to use nom de plume of Mark Twain 'assumed by him;' that his right to the use of a nom de plume 'was no better or higher' than he had in his 'Christian or baptismal name;' that 'no pseudonym, however ingenious, novel, or quaint, can give an author any more right than he would have under his own name.'" [Twainian, Apr. 1945, p3]. Note: I have also reviewed the four-page decision (cite as: 14 F. 728) on Westlaw.com.

Sam wrote from Hartford to Arthur Gilman (unidentified).

If total unfitness for such service were a qualification, I could smile at competition....I am putting an octavo to press, & have never suffered so much nor so long with the having this kind of a child before. Let me recommend you to drop a line to Rev. Francis Goodwin, a man with abundant cash, leisure, scholarship, literary taste, lofty aims, & enthusiasms, & first-class business talent, inherited direct from his late father, founder & President of the Connecticut Mutual. If he says no, I can hunt you up a smaller man [MTP]. Note: Goodwin was a cousin of J.P. Morgan.

Jane Clemens wrote from Keokuk to family. She'd been ill and told of Dr. Bancroft saying it was nerves, giving her pellets to put in water & drink when the clock strikes every hour [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam and Livy, that two more years of hard study lay before them. Also about the weather and progress with his work [MTP].

G.L. Spillman and W.H. Weller as Students of the "Awful German Language" wrote from Danville, Ind. to offer Sam a long German word, as Clemens had said in TA that he wanted to exchange same [MTP].

January 9 Tuesday – George W. Cable wrote a postcard from N. Orleans asking if there was a 2nd volume by a man named Stuart in the books he'd sent. "Made a speech last night—50 minutes—audience made no complaint" [MTP].

January 10 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Edmund C. Stedman (1833-1908) American poet, critic, and essayist, Hartford born. He studied two years at Yale; became a New York journalist on the Tribune and World, as Civil War field correspondent. He later studied law and was for a time private secretary to Attorney General Bates at Washington. He was also a member of the New York Stock Exchange on Wall Street from 1865-1900. He was one of the first chosen for membership in the American Academy of Arts and Letters in 1904. Sam extended an invitation to the Jan. 22 Monday Evening Club at his house at 7:30. Charles Dudley Warner was to present an essay about modern fiction. Sam offered to meet Stedman at the station should he be able to come [MTP].

William Bock wrote again from Brooklyn to ask for a letter from Clemens for his infant son [MTP].

January 11 Thursday – Charles J. Langdon wrote on the bottom of a stockholders meeting result for the Susquehanna and S.W. R.R. Co. and calls for stock subscriptions: “Dear Saml / I will pay these calls as they fall due from your funds here if you will authorize me to do so...$3000 is due. Please advise” [MTP]. Sam wrote on the note: “You are hereby authorized to take the $3,000 from my funds in J. Langdon & Co’s hand”

January 12 Friday – With others named below, Sam signed a menu at Young’s Hotel, Boston. This gathering, not formerly reported, was likely a celebration of James R. Osgood’s publishing of P&P and The Stolen White Elephant. The names on the back of the menu are: James R. Osgood, SL Clemens, Wm. S. Draper, Chas. Fairchild, C.H. Colburn (publisher), G. Osgood, Eben Sumner Draper (1858-1914) Governor of Mass., A.V.S. Anthony (engraver), R.H. Ticknor, and Geo. A. Draper (1855-1923) textile industrialist [Cowan’s Auctions, Dec. 6-7, 2007 Item 919]. Note: It is not known which day Sam went to Boston and returned. Thanks to JoDee Benussi.

Robert A. Stigler wrote from Lexington, Miss. Asking for a list of his books and prices [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Puppy”

Edmund C. Stedman wrote from NYC to Clemens, accepting his “hearty invitation, subject to a telegraphic revoke on Saturday—the 20th inst.” [MTP].

Francis Wayland wrote from N. Haven asking if Sam had a copy of a book he’d reviewed in the Atlantic Monthly of June 1877: Sketches in Palestine (in verse) by Rev. Edward Payson Hammond with portrait [MTP]. Note: Sam’s copy, according to Gribben, was heavily annotated. The writer of the 1877 review identified his home as Ponkapog, Mass., the home of Thomas Bailey Aldrich. So, did Twain write the review? The style doesn’t seem to fit Sam’s of 1877 (See entries for June 1877, June 6, 1877, and Oct. 27, 1879)

January 14 Sunday – In Hartford, Sam wrote a long letter to Karl & Hattie Gerhardt about art that Karl was working on; about ideas on the movement of a planned statue of Paul Revere; and of Susan Warner’s desire for Karl’s bas-relief portrait of her husband which Sam wanted to give her but Livy would not.

I am in a state of mental and bodily stupefaction from my long siege of work; but I have life enough in me to send a vast deal of love to both of you & to the coming small guest [their expected baby]. And if I ever prayed, I should pray now for patience, courage, & good fortune for Josephine [Hattie] till the end of her trial come happily. The prayers of them that pray not, avail not; but their good wishes may; & these I offer with all my heart. SLC / (Ordered by Mrs Clemens to put the same sentiment into an unshocking form. Ah, but how?) [MTP].

January 15 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster about being overcharged on a bill for work on the alarm system at the Farmington Ave. house. Sam added that he liked Webster’s “circular,” which was probably for LM, scheduled to be published in May [MTBus 208].

Sam also wrote to George W. Cable:

I have just finished my book [LM] at last, & was about to return the volumes you so kindly lent me...I am a little short-handed, in the executive department, the coachman's family being down with scarlet fever...two of our children are pretty sick, too—& 2½ weeks ago my secretary went home with scarlet fever...My life is a trifle too busy these days [MTP].

Sam also responded to Charles Langdon's note on a notice for calls in the stock of the Susquehanna and South Western Railroad Co. Sam authorized his brother-in-law to take the $3,000 in funds from his interest in the Langdon Co. [MTP].

Sam also wrote a short note to James R. Osgood about LM preparation.

"There will be 20 to 25,000 more words than necessary; so the scissors can be freely used. The whole family sick, here" [MTLTP 162].

Sam also included a note of explanation sent with a book to Francis Wayland.

"Mine is a badly mutilated copy (on account of cuttings for that review) but it's a million times better than none, or Shakespeare..." [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Miss Jenny Sharples of Lancashire, England of his birth date:

"I do wish it had been a hundred years earlier or thirty years later—either would answer" [MTP].

January 18 Thursday – George W. Cable wrote a postcard from N. Orleans: "Never mind the book. I have it. I found it last night where I have found a great many books—to wit, in my bookcase" [MTP].

January 21 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to James R. Osgood. Sam had read all the proofs for LM and Livy had read nearly all of them. Sam related the family's ills and Susy's false alarm for scarlet fever. Sam wrote of Stedman being a guest for the following night [MTP].

Donald M. Grant, a Brit in Chumparun, India, wrote a fan letter to tell Clemens "how even in this remote corner of the world your books are known and enjoyed" [MTP]. Note: see Grant's earlier letter of Mar. 21, 1882 from Ireland, describing himself as an "embryo doctor."

January 21 Sunday ca. – Shortly after Jan. 21 Sam wrote from Hartford to James R. Osgood. Sam wrote vertically down the pages and pasted an engraving of him in the grave at the top.

"Osgood Knock this picture out. The madam's orders are peremptory. She says the chapter is plenty dreadful without it" [MTP].

January 22 Monday – Sam hosted the Monday Evening Club at his house at 7:30. Charles Dudley Warner presented an essay about modern fiction. Edmund C. Stedman had accepted Sam's invitation of Jan. 10 and came to Hartford, staying the night at the Clemens' home [Jan. 21 to Osgood, MTP].

From Hartford Sam inscribed P&P to Edmund C. Stedman: "To Edmund C. Stedman, with the kindest regards of the author. Hartford Jan. 22, 1883" [MTP].

St. Paul (Minn.) Roller Mill Co. per S.S. Eaton & W.H. Lightner sent a printed First Annual Report, Articles of Incorp. & By-laws [MTP].

January 23 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Louise A. Howland, wife of his old Nevada mining buddy, Robert M. Howland. Evidently the Howlands had been in New York and Sam apologized for being laid up with rheumatism.

Luckily the scare is over. Clara's membranous croup is not that; Susie's scarlet fever is not scarlet fever...So I've lost my chance at old Robert, for which I am mighty sorry; but as soon as I get around again I've got to go to New York with Madam on shopping & business; & so we hope to at least get a glimpse of you & the children [MTP].

January 24 Wednesday – Sam wrote an aphorism to an unidentified person: “None genuine without this signature on the label: Yours Truly, SL Clemens Mark Twain Jan. 24, 1883” [Profiles in History, eBay item 230401504958, Nov. 19, 2009]. Note: Sam used this one several times, including Jan. 26, 1885.

Phillip Robinson wrote from Wisconsin “after a struggle with” his “better nature” sent Sam some sort of writing (the writing is quite illegible) [MTP].

January 25 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Karl & Hattie Gerhardt, beginning the letter this day and finishing it on Feb. 6.

Sam also wrote to (Henry) Clinton Parkhurst, a soldier, correspondent and writer from LeClaire, Iowa. At the age of fifteen he enlisted with the 16th Iowa Infantry.. He was a captive for seven months in the Confederate prison at Andersonville. After the war he returned to LeClaire and worked as a correspondent for the Davenport Democrat. He later went west, settling in San Francisco where he worked with various newspapers. Sam may have met him there. Parkhurst also worked for papers in Kansas, Oklahoma, and Illinois and wrote poetry and fiction. Some of his literary works were published, but many were not, a fact which he attributed to personal failure and injustices of publishers and fellow writers. He occasionally used the pen name Clinton Rollins. Sam gave him the benefit of his lessons about copyright:

“No, if my ten years of effort have taught me any valuable lesson, it is to consider all time given to trying to get our copyright laws put into proper shape, wasted. From that line of endeavor, I have retired permanently” [MTP].

Sam saw more promise in pursuing plagiarism as a trademark violation:

“I have won two trade-mark suits & lost a third. I will not believe that the U.S. Supreme Court will decide against me until I have tried.”

Charles Webster wrote that he'd “not closed with Newman yet.” Also he'd seen Mr. De Forest at Tiffany's who “promised to send one of the carved boards right away, the price is $20” MTP].

January 26 Friday – Edmund C. Stedman wrote from NYC.

My two days' journey in Connecticut, and the winter idyl of twenty-four hours in your beautiful home [Jan. 22], seem already like an aurora borealis—or like a fire-light dream, & about the only cheerful dream I've had this season.

—After telling Mrs. Clemens & yourself how much I enjoyed it, & thanking you for making me so instantly & constantly at home, I must hasten to set myself “right upon the record.” I now have read “The Prince & the Pauper”—and at a sitting, for no one who once dips into it will or can read it otherwise.

[MTP]. Note: he sent a copy of the “English (& eclectic) edition of verse,” which Gribben identifies as Lyrics and Idylls, with Other Poems (1879) [660].

January 27 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster about details of remodeling work at the Farmington house [MTBus 209].

January 29 Monday – Orion Clemens wrote, Orion stories enclosed [MTP].

January 30 Tuesday – John Russell Young wrote from Wash. DC to relate his trip to Japan and a visit with Edward House, “jaunty, cheerful, wise and gracious as usual.” He talked of politics: “Arthur seems to be an exceptional president—safe, conservative and patriotic...Gen. Grant writes the people are tired of paying war taxes in time of peace,—an explanation that is new” [MTP].

February – Sam inscribed The Stolen White Elephant to William M. Clemens [MTP].

Sam wrote to Francis Hopkinson Smith, returning his coat and apologizing for the used handkerchief he left in the pocket [MTP].

February 2 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to James R. Osgood asking for proofs of LM and a chapter (52) containing the convict’s letter to Twichell [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote with his needed expenses for Feb. He was “anxious to finish Mr. Warner’s Medallion” [MTP].

Hartford Sanitary per R.W. Farmer wrote to announce the annual stockholders meeting Wed. Feb. 7 at 3 p.m. for election of directors [MTP].

February 5 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells:

“I haven’t anything to write, except all hands well. But I thought I’d send you this, to show you that we are making progress. The children’s governess required them to set down the names of such celebrities as they could recall. You have here the results” [MTHL 1: 422]. Note: Sam enclosed a list of famous people from his older daughters; Susy was eleven, Clara nine. The lists may be found in the citation on note 1. They both included “Papa” in the list of famous men.

Hattie J. Gerhardt wrote to Sam & Livy: “We do not know how happy your two letters made us—we have read them exactly ten times since they came.” She wrote of Karl’s statue of Mercury and some work in bas relief she was doing [MTP].

George P. Lathrop wrote from NYC: “Hutton, Gilder & I—ably assisted by Brander Matthews—are getting up a breakfast for Barnay, the German tragedian. / I have just been to see Barrett about it, & he consents...to preside. He will doubtless speak to you about it to-night, if he has a chance...If it should be on Friday, could you not stay over?” [MTP]. Note: Ludwig Barnay (1842-1924).

February 6 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to C.L. Fleck thanking him for the honor from the “Philo Society” (unidentified) [MTP].

Sam finished the letter of Jan. 25 to Karl and Hattie Gerhardt. Sam ordered a letter of credit for the Gerhardts to continue his patronage of their training in Paris [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Edmund C. Stedman, responding to his letter of Jan. 26 sending a copy of his Lyrics and Idylls, with Other Poems (1879) in exchange for a complimentary copy of P&P. Sam thanked him for his “brief visit” which he said “was an event; & a strongly marked one” and added that he’d been ill,

“But if I couldn’t write, I have been able to read; & so I have enjoyed your poems, & with sincerest pleasure. And I found old friends among them—particularly among the war poems” [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam and Livy, again praising their two “sweet” letters rec’d. He wrote that he would send the “reduced” copy of Mercury, the original being in Naples [MTP].

February 7 Wednesday – Christian Tauchnitz, Jr. wrote hoping to soon receive proofs of LM from Chatto—he could pay Chatto or Twain direct, as Sam pleased. Seeing that they had not yet published all of Sam’s works in their Continental Edition, he sent a list of those they had [MTP].

February 8 Thursday – Mary A. Riley wrote to Sam, with the news that her late brother, John Henry Riley (d. Sept. 1872) wished Sam to have some opal studs. Her other brother had hoped Clemens would come to Phila. where he might give the studs; could she mail them? [MTP]. Note: she waited 11 years!

February 10 Saturday – At about 8 PM, Sam went to the Hartford home of ex-Governor Marshall Jewell, three times governor, minister to Russia, and also Postmaster General in the Grant Administration. Sam stopped by to “beguile an idle hour for him with a yarn or two,” but was “received at the door with whispers, and the information that he was dying.” Jewell “died that night two hours after” Sam left. He wrote about the event to Howells on Mar. 1 [MTHL 1: 427-8].

Sam inscribed The Stolen White Elephant to Margaret Warner [MTP].

In Florence, Italy, Howells wrote to Sam:

I have n’t written you because I’ve been ashamed to do so. Our two months in Florence have been the most ridiculous time that ever even half-witted people passed. We have spent them in chasing round after people for whom we cared nothing, and being chased by them. My story isn’t finished yet, and what part of it is done bears the fatal marks of haste and distraction [MTHL 1: 425]. Note: Howell’s current work, A Woman’s Reason had begun running serially in February’s Century Magazine.

February 12 Monday – “American Humorist. Mark Twain” New York: Funk & Wagnalls, by H.R. Haweis was a biography and criticism which argued that though Sam built a reputation as a humorist, he should be taken seriously; emphasized his travel writings [eBay Antique Book Central, Sept. 28, 2009, Item 400075870148]. Note: in the Sept. 1998 issue of Firsts 8.9 p.45, Mac Donnell writes: “Issued separately in wrappers and also bound in cloth by the publisher with others in the series. Haweis was known as a ‘radical curate’ and was friends with many American authors. Exactly one month later [see Mar. 12, 1883] a reprint of this work was issued by John Alden of New York, also in wrappers and in cloth. This is apparently the first separately issued biography of Twain.”

Lockwood De Forest for Tiffany & De Forest billed Sam for $69.00 for 1 carved molding and 7 narrow brass tiles, Jan. 24 and 30 respectively. A note with the bill: “I am very glad that they have proved what you want & hope that they will look nicely” [MTP].

J.E. Ferguson wrote from Wash. DC, clipping enclosed of a poem, “The Bartender” and a sketch (not in file) “Ferguson, The Martyr” based upon Ferguson the guides in IA. He hoped Sam would reply [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the back, “Literary Ass”

February 13 Tuesday – Bessie Stone wrote from Auburndale, Mass. concerned about Sam’s soul: “I expect that the Lord Jesus will knock at the door of your heart this week (Rev. 3, 20), and please let Him in” [MTP].

Note: Sam wrote on the env., “D— fool”; Rev. 3:20: “Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.”

February 14 Wednesday – Ex-Governor Marshall Jewell’s funeral was held at 11 AM. The body was then on view at Asylum Hill Congregational Church at 2:30 PM with “public exercises.” It is likely that Sam attended one or both of these services [N.Y. Times for Feb. 13, 1883 p.2]. (See Feb. 10 entry, letter to Howells of Mar. 1.) Also, from Twichell’s journal:

“Died our parishioner and friend for many years, Hon. Marshall Jewell. I was ill of a severe cold, so ill as to be confined to the house for the first time in years, and was not able to attend the funeral, which was held in our church. Parker and Gen. Hawley make up the addresses” [Yale, copy at MTP].

February 15 Thursday – Sam telegraphed from Hartford to James B. Pond informing him that George W. Cable was leaving for New York within the half-hour [MTP].

Andrew Chatto wrote but the letter is illegible. Made out one reference to publishing LM [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote asking Sam to return his autobiography MS. He wanted “to destroy all but about 100 pages. / I have taken a notion that the stupidity of my writings may have arisen from my spending too much time on them” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “More damned lunacy ’83 Feb”; When one reads all of Orion’s letters, it becomes understandable why Sam often lost patience with his brother.

February 16 Friday – George MacDonald wrote from Bordighera, Italy: “I am ashamed of my delay in answering your welcome letter, and acknowledging the excellent portrait which I am very pleased to have. But it is so difficult to write letters when one can only by a strain get through the days work of writing other kinds of things.” He asked if Sam would collaborate on a book he was writing by adding “a little bit here & there” [MTP].

February 18 Sunday – In Hartford, Sam wrote a scorching letter to J.W. Bouton:

Draw & be damned. I subscribed for your Portfolio one year & no more. I paid for it. Since then you have thrust it upon me & persecuted me with it at your own risk & in defiance of my several protests.

You’ll “draw” on me! The hell you will! Messrs. Slote & Co. “refer” you to me. No!—why you can’t be in earnest. If they refer you to me, of course it must be all right. Dear me, why didn’t you get the peanut man on the corner to add HIS authority.

Well, what a marvelous sort of publisher you must be, sure enough! You ought to write a book, & call it “How to Combine the Methods of the Highwayman & the Publisher Successfully.”

I kiss you, Sweetheart!—Goodbye, good-bye—ta-ta!—ta-ta!

Dearest, I am / Truly Yours / S L Clemens [MTP; Mark Twain’s Helpful Hints for Good Living: A Handbook for the Damned Human Race (2004) p. 45]. Note: See Feb. 22 entry. In the latter source this was published under “An Unwanted Magazine Subscription,” which says it all. the Magazine was The Portfolio, An Artistic Periodical (London). In his Dec. 30, 1882 to Charles L. Webster, Sam explained he subscribed for one year but never subscribed again and “..have done my best to keep them from throwing away that excellent work on me....I wish you would explain the case to Mr. Bouton and have the periodical stopped before bloodshed [MTBus 206 cited by Gribben 555].

Frank M. Daulton wrote from Gainesville, Ark. He had a little house with 20 acres in the suburbs, “and about a shirt-tail full of type and an old army press...and making a totally good living.” He had plans for new equipment and an improved newspaper. He asked what happened to Orion and gave his love to Sam’s mother, if she was living [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Frank Daulton / ‘Old fellow printer’ in Hannibal”

February 19 Monday – Sam read a paper titled, “What is Happiness?” to the Monday Evening Club in Hartford. This was his seventh presentation to the Club since his election in 1873 [Monday Evening Club].

An early question in his notebook: “Is anybody or any action ever unselfish? (Good theme for Club Essay)” [MTNJ 2: 498n214]. Sam would further develop his scrutiny on human motivation in What Is Man?

William Hamersley wrote from Hartford about the difficulties of getting a contract with James W. Paige for the typesetter [MTP].

February 22 Thursday – In Hartford, Sam typed a letter to Charles Webster. Sam’s ex-attorney, Charles Perkins, had made an offer to reorganize the Kaolatype Company, and Sam wanted Webster to investigate whether to “knock the thing in the head.” More said about the alarm system, the batteries, the quitting bells, the alarm clock. Also Sam was concerned about a subscription for the magazine The Portfolio, An Artistic Periodical, London, to J.W. Bouton, editor (see Gribben 555-6) that either he or Slote might have paid for. He advised Webster that he and Osgood:

“...will be down about the First of March, and then I propose to go and see Slote and Company” [MTBus 209-10].

Sam also wrote to Orion, who had been having mental problems when writing about religion, and had some far out ideas on the subject, including the idea that Jesus taught sexual abstinence as a condition for gaining heaven. Orion wrote that he would put his ideas into a lecture, as suggested by Dr. George of the Keokuk Constitution. Orion’s letter angered Sam, and he responded:

“Your Dr. George is a fool...your lecture would destroy you, and me too. Try to guard yourself jealously against two things—lecturing and writing; for you cannot achieve even a respectable mediocrity in either” [Fanning 202].

Sam enclosed an oath for Orion to sign to refrain from any literary work, lecturing or asking Sam’s advice for the remainder of 1883 and all of 1884.

“...and abide by it—then we shall have peace. You are as good and kind as you can be, but you have no more this-worldly faculty than a babe” [202].

Sam also wrote to an unidentified person, sending bio. information on a “Form for Literary damned Societies that discuss you & your works” [MTP].

Sam also sent a saying from “On the Decay of the Art of Lying” to another unidentified person:

“The man who speaks an injurious truth lest his soul be not saved if he do otherwise, should reflect that that sort of a soul is not strictly worth saving” [MTP]. Note: In The Stolen White Elephant.

February 25 Sunday – Karl and Hattie J. Gerhardt wrote to Sam and Livy, the letter from Drexel with money rec’d. “Many thanks for the new letter...I shall telegraph you when the little stranger arrives...Josie has a most excellent nurse who does everything for us so that I don’t have any worry and am losing no time” [MTP].

February 26 Monday – Chatto & Windus wrote [MTP]. (envelope only survives)

February 27 Tuesday – Orion signed the pledge to Sam and returned it with an apology (see Feb.22 entry). “I will now turn my attention to law” [MTP; Fanning 202].

February 28 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Chatto & Windus to ratify an agreement between Chatto and Herr J.H. Schufthas Boghandel of Copenhagen, Denmark, giving him the right to translate LM into Swedish [MTP].

Sam attended a lecture by John Lawson Stoddard who pioneered in giving travelogue lectures using the stereopticon. Sam wrote of the lecture to Howells on Mar. 1:

I attended one of the astonishingly popular lectures of an idiot by the name of Stoddard, who exhibits interesting stereopticon pictures and then knocks the interest all out of them with his chuckleheaded comments upon them. But all the world go there to look and listen, and are apparently well satisfied. And they ought to be fully satisfied, if the lecturer would only keep still, or die in the first act [MTHL 1: 426].

Mar. 31 statement from Worden & Co., New York, (stock brokers) shows Sam's balance this day of $3,997.08 [MTP].

March – Sam inscribed a note “To Miss Julie / With regards & kindest remembrances of / Mark Twain / (Known to the police as S.L. Clemens.) / Hartford Mch 1883” [MTP]. No further identification is given.

Lawrence Barrett wrote a short note to Sam: “Hutton tells me you will meet the ‘Kinsmen’ Monday Eve—Pray arrange also to be with me at the [Ludwig] Barnay Breakfast—It will bolster me up—in my first appearance as President” [MTP].

Sam gave a speech at The Kinsmen Club, New York City. According to Paul Fatout,

“The Kinsmen was a club without dues, clubhouse, officers or bylaws, its only purpose being good fellowship and good times—perhaps not a club at all. It was instigated by Lawrence Barrett, the name suggested by Laurence Hutton (1843-1904) to symbolize practitioners of kindred arts who made up the membership...Mark Twain attended as the guest of Hutton in 1883. Other Kinsmen, American and British, were William Mackay Laffan, [William Dean] Howells [in Europe at this time], F[rank] D. Millet, [T. B.] Aldrich, , Edwin A. Abbey, Anthony Hope, Edwin Booth, [Brander] Matthews (1852-1929), Joseph Jefferson, [Augustus] Saint-Gaudens, [Arthur Wing] Pinero, Bram Stoker, Forbes Robertson, John Singer Sargent, Henry Irving, Julian Hawthorne, Andrew Lang, and Edmund Gosse. See Hutton, Talks in a Library: 326-28; Matthews, The Tocsin of Revolt: 255.” [Editorial emphasis]

Note: A search of a five year period in the New York Times shows no mention of a Kinsmen Club, which suggests these men met privately and informally. Brander Matthews' 1917 book, in These Many Years, reveals the genesis and development of the club: Dining at the Florence House in New York on Apr. 3, 1882, the group of Abbey, Barrett, Hutton, Millet, and Laffan decided to call themselves the Kinsmen Club; they met again at Hutton's in Mar. 1883 for only second time, adding Bunner, Osgood, Elihu Vedder, and Samuel Clemens; their third meeting was in London during the summer of 1883; in 1887 a “misunderstanding” occurred and the club never met again [232-3].

March 1 Thursday – In Hartford, Sam typed a letter to Howells, who wrote on Feb. 10 from Florence, Italy, frustrated at not being able to write much, spending the prior two months there “chasing round after people for whom we cared nothing, and being chased by them” [MTHL 1: 425]. Howells hadn't finished A Woman's Reason, nor had the “put pen to paper on the play,” Colonel Sellers as a Scientist. Sam sympathized:

We got ourselves ground up in that same mill, once, in London, and another time in Paris. It is a kind of fore taste of hell. There is no way to avoid it except by the method which you have now chosen. One must live secretly and cut himself utterly off from the human race, or life in Europe becomes an unbearable burden and work an impossibility [426].

Sam was feeling liberated after finishing Life on the Mississippi. This period came before an extremely productive output during the summer.

I have been an utterly free person for a month or two; and I do not believe I ever so greatly appreciated and enjoyed and realized the absence of the chains of slavery as I do this time....Of course the highest pleasure to be got out of freedom, and the having nothing to do is labor. Therefore I labor. But I take my time about it. I work one hour or four as happens to suit my mind, and quit when I please. And so these are days of entire enjoyment [427].

Sam asked the Howellses to visit the Gerhardts if they got to Paris. He also remarked on the shocking number of deaths due to pneumonia for the winter season [428].

Sam also wrote to Christian B. Tauchnitz. Sam provided questions about The Jumping Frog book and disclosed buying and breaking up the plates for the book, then using parts of it for his Mark Twain Sketches book. He also asked to buy back issues bound for Tauchnitz's Fliegende Blätter [MTP].

Sam left Hartford and went to New York City. There he played billiards with friends for two hours,

"...got to bed at 10, slept 8 solid hours, & got up as fine as a fiddle..." [Mar. 2 to Livy, MTP].

George B. Smith, Jr. wrote Sam from the National Soldiers Home in Togus, Maine, thanking him for $10 sent to his wife [MTP]. Note: this is not George Smith the publisher.

March 2 Friday – Sam wrote from New York to Livy, excited about the possibility of staying over until Monday and seeing "Vignaux, the greatest billiard man that ever lived" in a private exhibition. It would be "an event memorable for a lifetime," and Sam was "perishing to see it." He would let her know [MTP]. Note: Maurice Vignaux (1846-1916).

March 3 Saturday – The New York Times under "PERSONAL INTELLIGENCE" p.5 reported:

Samuel L. Clemens, of Hartford, and James R. Osgood, of Boston, are at the Victoria House

The trial of Captain C.C. Duncan's suit for $100,000 against the New York Times was begun in the Supreme Court.

March 5 Monday – At the opening of the Guelph Club for billiards in New York, Sam introduced the great French billiards player, Maurice Vignaux and several other players, including George F. Slosson, Joseph Dion, and William Sexton, for an exhibition warm up match anticipating a large tournament in Chicago later in the month [N.Y. Times Mar. 6 p.5]. The Washington Post of Mar. 6, in a story datelined New York, Mar. 5, p.1 titled "Vignaux Beats Sexton Easily" reported the players were introduced, among whom were a number of noted lawyers and billiardists, by Mark Twain in a humorous speech [Schmidt]. The Times article does not mention Sam's presence.

John Bellows (1831-1902) wrote from London to ask "where Mark Twain is" and offering to send a copy of his book [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Author of the admirable little French-English Dictionary" which Clemens found useful in his 1878/79 trip abroad.

Frank M. Daulton wrote "rejoiced to hear from you, your mother and Orion and to know they are still in the land of the living. Parmelia [Pamela] was just blooming into womanhood and I was a bashful boy then, and consequently never got very well acquainted" [MTP].

March 7 Wednesday – According to the Brooklyn Eagle, p. 7, “Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) testified in the libel suit of Captain C.C. Duncan against the New York Times.” Since Sam’s letter of Mar. 9 to Cable referred to a Mar. 8 meeting with Charles Dudley Warner in Hartford, it’s likely that Sam returned from New York either on the evening of Mar. 7 after the billiards match, or the next day.

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam & Livy of the arrival of “little Olivia” who was born this evening [MTP].

Roswell Smith wrote from NYC on The Century Co. notepaper: “I send you a note just received from Mr Cable, which is in response to mine as to the Hartford lecture project. / I want him here on the 26th of March to speak on Prison Reform before the Congregational Club if it will not interfere with your plans” [MTP].

March 7–14? Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Benjamin H. Ticknor directing him to make a few changes on the foundry proof pages of LM. “It ain’t any matter about the 50,000 already printed—no importance” [MTP].

March 8 Thursday – In the evening after receiving a letter from Roswell Smith, editor and president of Century Magazine, Sam and Charles Dudley Warner discussed how to set up a trial lecture for George W. Cable in Hartford [Mar. 9 to Cable, MTP].

March 9 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford responding to English writer George MacDonald’s letter suggesting a collaborative scheme for protecting against literary piracy. If Sam would write a few short paragraphs for MacDonald’s forthcoming novel then both writers’ names would guarantee copyrights in both countries. Sam politely offered the idea would make sense only if each could do half; but he had no time for such a team effort. He again promised to send a copy of LM when it came out [Lindskoog 28]. Note: This was the second or third time MacDonald sought to collaborate with Sam.

Sam also a short wrote to Charles Webster about J.W. Bouton and the Portfolio matter (see Feb. 22 entry). He also wrote about the house remodel. Sam asked how long Dion Boucicault (1820?-1890) the Anglo-Irish dramatist would be in New York and what was his address? Horace (Harry) Wall might tell Webster, Sam added.

In Mark Twain Businessman, Samuel Webster (son of Charles) notes the mention of Dion Boucicault is significant due to Sam’s desire to write another play [212].

Sam also wrote of big plans to George W. Cable, from a discussion the night before with Warner:

Our idea is thus: That we secure a nice little hall here—Unity Hall—& trot you out before an appreciative little audience—not for pecuniary profit for you, & yet not at any expense to you—but simply for the attainment of these important objects, viz:

1. That you may try your lecture;
2. That you may try your lecture-wings;
3. That you may have the right sort of newspaper attention; and
4. That the total result shall be a valuable advertisement.

Sam suggested a title for the lecture and needed a date at least two weeks off they could work around a few days either way, in case the halls were already spoken for. “Give us a date,” he wrote, “Then Warner & I will sail in!” [MTP].

Sam also telegraphed James B. Pond in Baltimore, adding a postscript to the day’s letter for George W. Cable—select a date later than Mar. 26 to give him and Warner enough planning time to promote the trial lecture [MTP].

Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote a short note from Boston: “Don’t you want to write two or three Atlantic pages for the Club about Wiggins? You could make it immensely funny” [MTP].

John Michels wrote from NYC thanking him for his note declining to be involved in a new newspaper. He wrote that Robert Underwood Johnson would be the manager and find some capital. “Would you give your name as Editor of the paper and send something weekly if 25 per cent of the profits are guaranteed to you...” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Proposition / Decline”

March 10 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to George W. Cable, making a formal announcement from a list of leading Hartford citizens, which included Sam and Charles Dudley Warner, Joseph R. Hawley, J. Hammond Trumbull, Richard D. Hubbard (1818-1884), Austin C. Dunham, Edwin Pond Parker, James B. Patterson, William B. Franklin, Joseph H. Twichell, Henry C. Robinson, William Hamersley, A.E. Burt, Edwin E. Johnson, N. Shipman [MTP].

George W. Cable wrote: “It’s very, very good of you and the rest to take all this trouble for me, and you must consider me in your hands. I will lecture on ‘Creole Women’ and on such a date as you may choose round about Apl 3.” [MTP: George W. Cable: the Northampton Years, Butcher 1959 Columbia, p. 12].

Bothwell Graham wrote from Rome, Ga. Sam’s note explains [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Permission refused. / School teacher wants to perform dramatization of Tom Sawyer”

March 11 Sunday – An article ran in the New York Times p.4 about Sam’s father.

JUDGE CLEMENS.

HOW MARK TWAIN'S FATHER COMMANDED SILENCE IN THE COURT-ROOM.

Communication to the St. Louis Republican.

In 1843 at Hannibal, Mo., John Marshal Clemens, the father of Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain,) filled the ancient and honorable office known as Justice of the Peace. He was a stern unbending man of splendid common-sense, and was, indeed, the autocrat of the little dingy room on Bird street, where he held his court, meted out justice and general satisfaction to litigants, commanded peace, and preserved order as best he could in the village. This room fairly indicated the rustic simplicity of the people and the frugal and careful manner in which Judge Clemens lived and transacted business. Its furniture consisted of a dry goods box, which served the double purpose of a desk for the Judge and table for the lawyers, three or four rude stools, and a puncheon bench for the jury. And here on court days, when the Judge climbed upon his three-legged stool, rapped on the box with his knuckles and demanded “Silence in the court,” it was fully expected that silence would reign supreme. As a general thing the “rough and ready” characters who had lounged in to see the “wheels of justice” move bowed submissively to the mandates of the Judge and observed the utmost respect for “his Honor.” Allen B. McDonald, an overbearing, turbulent, and quarrelsome man, was an exception, and many a time he had violated the rules and been rebuked by the court.

March 12 Monday – “Mark Twain” by H.R. Haweis, in the Elzevir Library, was a biography and criticism which argued though Sam built a reputation as a humorist, he should be taken seriously; emphasized his travel writings [Tenney, Supplement American Literary Realism, Autumn 1980 p170]. See also Feb. 12.

March 13 Tuesday – William H. Gillette wrote of expenses with the play The Professor and being unable to repay Sam the $3000, hoping he’d be “a little easy on time payments.” The play was making money, but comedy-farces didn’t play for more than three seasons [MTP].

Jane Lampton Clemens wrote to the Clemens family about attending a fun party the night before. She added a note on the 16th [MTP].

March 14 Wednesday – In Hartford Sam typed a letter to Benjamin H. Ticknor about a telegram he'd sent on the cut he wanted replaced in LM. Put in any sort of picture, even if it didn't connect with the text and make sure it wasn't funny, Sam wrote. A landscape would do, Sam thought and:

“...the reader can put in such idle time as he may have in trying to arrive at the connection...” [MTP].

March 16 Friday – Jane Lampton Clemens added to her letter of Mar. 13. “Now the weather is good and I wish to come to your house, if it suits you. I can do as you said pay Orion's way there & home again” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Answer”

W.G. Watson wrote to ask if he could see Sam “on very important business (to me) for about 15 minutes” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Watson the tramp”

March 17 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to George W. Cable, at the time in Baltimore for a reading, confirming details on the planned “trial lecture” for Cable.

You are to lecture here the 3d of April, on “Creole Women,” in Unity Hall. So that's all arranged. Formal invitation, duly signed by prominent citizens, [See Mar. 10 entry] will be presently sent you. Advertising will shortly begin. Preliminary “paragraphing” will begin now. Stir up Roswell Smith, [See Mar. 8 entry] please, & have him gather his clan & make preparation [MTP].

Sam also mentioned that an idea struck him while getting out of bed; he asked Cable not to make any more lecture dates until they'd spoken. The “idea” may very well have been the joint lecture tour which took off later in the year.

Samuel E. Wells wrote from Albany to ask permission to use three of Sam's sketches in his new book on elocutions: “How I Edited an Agricultural paper,” “Jim Wolf and the Cats” and the “Speech at the Scottish Banquet in London” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Gave him my consent to use the 3 sketches named / SLC”

March 18 Sunday – Joe Goodman wrote to Sam.

Dear Mark—Here is your “Hamlet Brother,” roughly blocked out. I thought you would never get about it in earnest and did it to amuse myself. The arrangement, you will see, is an improvement upon the original, and the introduction of the new character clears up much that is obscure in “Hamlet” as it now stands. I am not a funny man and have only put words into Bill's mouth provisionally. You will have to re-write his part throughout.... I was speaking to Barrett once about your idea and he thought it would be a sort of sacrilege. That might be the opinion of the goody-goodies who are howling about the “Passion Play” (the most impressive presentation of Christianity ever witnessed); but you and I know such talk is all fudge. Anything is legitimate sport and game—and especially Shakespeare, who cribbed right and left, and ridiculed nearly everybody and everything by turns [MTP]. Note: Sam's 1873 idea of adding a humorous character to Hamlet had percolated in Joe's brain and he continued to encourage Sam by showing him the possibilities. It may be that Sam feared Lawrence Barrett's sort of reaction. Edwin Booth, however, thought the idea had value (see Nov. 3, 1873 entry).

March 19 Monday – Susy Clemens' eleventh birthday.

Sam and Livy took a morning train for New York for business and shopping. They probably arrived too late for Sam to attend a breakfast at Delmonico's for Herr Ludwig Barnay, distinguished German actor. Barnay completed a successful tour of the U.S. in 1882. Osgood was in attendance, as well as Whitelaw

Reid, Lawrence Barrett, Augustus Saint-Gaudens, Francis D. Millet, and John T. Raymond, who offered a few humorous words in honor of Barnay. The group of about 50 broke up at 5 PM, so it's possible Sam made a late appearance [N.Y. Times, Mar. 20, 1883 p.8 "Herr Barnay Among Friends"]. According to "PERSONAL INTELLIGENCE" in the N.Y. Times the following day, Sam stayed at the Brunswick Hotel [p.8].

March 20 Tuesday – In New York City, Sam and Livy took Charles and Annie Webster and attended a special matinee performance of Herr Barnay at the Thalia Theater, "to which only members of the profession were invited."

BARNAY IN FARCE AND TRAGEDY.

A PERFORMANCE FOR THE PLEASURE OF HIS PROFESSIONAL BRETHREN

The house was crowded, and it was not an easy matter to push one's way along the aisles. Lawrence Barrett and his family occupied the box on the first tier to the right of the stage, and in the box opposite were Lester Wallack and a party of friends. Mrs. Gilbert, of Daly's Theatre, was in a box on the second tier and the opposite box was occupied by Frank Mayo, Lawrence Hutton and several friends. Among the other actors and well-known people present were Samuel F. [sic] Clemens, John Gilbert, Osmond Tearle, Rose Coghlan, Georgie Cayvan, Agnes Ethel, Sara Jewett, J. H. Ryley, Louise Pallin, Brander Matthews, George Parsons Lathrop, Julian Hawthorne, John Drew, Daniel Frohman, and Frank Murtha. The first character in which Herr Barnay appeared was as Raoul Girard, in the one-act farce, "From the Opera Comique," the lover of Juliette Santeniss—Miss Wolff. The next representation was King Lear [N.Y. Times Mar. 21, 1883 p 8].

(The opera was referred to in Mar. 23 and Mar. 31 letters to Charles Webster)

George W. Cable wrote from Baltimore: "This community is trying to waltz me off my feet or else I would have had somewhere & somehow a chance to write you a genteel letter. / I have yours of Saturday & one earlier, kindly inviting me...to sojourn within the borders of your tabernacle. Many thanks, Mr. & Mrs. George Warner, however, have rented me..." [MTP].

March 21 Wednesday – Sam and Livy continued their New York stay, for both business and shopping pleasure. Sam and Livy also visited with Augustus Saint-Gaudens on this trip [Mar. 26 to Gerhardt, MTP].

Marshall H. Mallory for Churchman Weekly wrote about negotiating with Howells for a play before he left for Europe "Just before sailing he wrote that the matter was left with you..." What terms and when would the play be ready? [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Not Answered" then crossed out the "Not"

March 22 Thursday – They arrived back in Hartford in the evening. Charles Dudley Warner "dropped in" after they arrived home and suggested that George W. Cable give the same reading in Hartford he successfully gave in Baltimore, instead of the planned lecture on "Creole Women." Sam felt it would be "safer" to give a reading that had proven successful elsewhere [Mar. 23 to Cable, MTP].

In an article in Life, then a humor magazine, a cartoon figure of Mark Twain (by Kendrick) as an alchemist went with a brief, inaccurate biographical sketch:

...He was born on Plymouth Rock, April 1st, 1728...As an archeologist, however, he has won most renown, and his collection of Pompeiian, Sanscrit, Egyptian, and early Greek jokes, now in possession of Osgood & Co., of Boston, is considered the most complete in the world....He is short, florid and very corpulent, and is a rapid and brilliant speaker [Tenney, Supplement American Literary Realism, Spring 1982 p5]. See insert

William L. Alden for Harper & Bros. Wrote that he'd be unhappy without a submission from Sam for his next "Editor's Drawer" [MTP]. A note in the file gives this the probable date and says Alden was given the feature after William A. Seaver's death on Jan 7.

March 23 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, enclosing a letter of interest in the Paige typesetter.

"So I thought that if you and [William] Payton should run up here together and examine the machine, it would help these people to remember the terms upon which they can be applied to those New York men for capital" [MTB^{us} 212].

Sam telegraphed George W. Cable about the planned lecture or reading at Unity Hall—a request to change the date to Apr. 4 and a suggestion to give the same reading that was successful in Baltimore. After sending the telegram, Sam then received and read a letter from Cable. He then typed a response, repeating the content of his telegram and adding:

"I DID NOT OPEN ANY LETTERS AT THE USUAL HOUR, BECAUSE WE ARE IN A GOOD DEAL OF A FLURRY HERE. ONE OF THE COACHMAN'S CHILDREN IS DYING, AND SINCE MIDNIGHT MRS. CLEMENS HAS BEEN RATHER ALARMINGLY ILL" [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote, that Josie was walking the room and the baby was "doing splendidly". He stopped paying out extra money for models in order to meet his budget [MTP].

J.B. Loewenthal wrote from Chicago asking for an autograph [MTP].

March 25 Sunday – In the Mar. 26 letter to the Gerhardts, Sam referred to this morning as Livy passing "the danger point" in her recent illness [MTP].

WANTED—AGENTS—MARK TWAIN'S
 "Life on the Mississippi," just out; immense sales;
 large discount; exclusive territory; $2,500 in cash prizes.
 Call or address at once, CHARLES L. WEBSTER, 658
 Broadway, New York.

March 26 Monday – Sam sent a telegram from Hartford to George W. Cable, verifying the upcoming lecture date as Apr. 4 on "Creole Women" while working in the Baltimore reading. Sam added that Livy was "out of danger" [MTP].

Sam also typed a letter to Karl & Hattie Gerhardt, welcoming their new baby, Olivia Gerhardt. Sam applauded Karl's finishing seventh in a field of 60 in an art competition. Sam explained that the American Exchange in Europe would be able to handle the medallions that the Gerhardts wanted to ship to Hartford, "or an elephant or a dwelling house or anything you please" [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote on several issues after receiving Sam's of Mar. 23: He would "attend to all such letters as you speak of and let them down light" as they only wanted autographs. He enclosed a bill for opera expenses; an article on billiards; he'd found a man to fix Sam's music box and enclosed his card; and strategy about the Paige typesetter, which Hamersley wrote was "perfected" [MTP].

March 27 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to George W. Cable, who had written asking if a particular engagement would interfere with the planned trip and reading in Hartford. Sam telegraphed that it would not, but advised him to:

"...require a stipulated sum cash in advance otherwise that pair of thieves will rob you in spite of the very devil they are shameless scoundrels & I know what I am talking about and am responsible for it" [MTP].
Note: Sam did not specify who these certain "scoundrels" were or where Cable was to perform, but may have been referring to the Mallory brothers in New York.

March 30 Friday – Sam's letter to the editor ran on page two of the Hartford Courant under the headline "George W. Cable":

Of the evening of the fourth of April the gifted southerner whose name appears above, will deliver at Unity Hall, in Hartford, a lecture upon "Creole Women," sauced with illustrative readings from "The Grandissimes" and other of his books [Courant.com].

March 31 Saturday – In Hartford, Sam typed a letter to Charles Webster, conveying Livy's apologies for not saying a proper goodbye to Annie after the opera in New York. Sam wrote that the "type setter company are going to have a meeting next week, April 4th. I shall try to be present at it, but as that is going to be a particularly busy day with me I may possibly fail." This was the date Sam and Warner had set for Cable to give his "Creole Women" reading at Unity Hall in Hartford. Sam also inquired of Kate Lampton, another cousin who was seeking employment copying or typing. Would Charley ask Mr. Whitford?

"YOUR AUNT LIVY IS SUFFERING HORRIBLY WITH QUINSY [inflammation of the tonsils], WHICH MAKES SLEEPING AND SPEAKING IMPOSSIBLE, BUT WE ARE EXPECTING IT TO BREAK TODAY, AND THEN RELIEF WILL COME" [MTBns 213].

A statement from Worden & Co., New York, (stock brokers) shows a balance of $4,017.72; shows balance Feb. 28 $3,997.08; paid interest this day $20.64 [MTP].

Christian Tauchnitz, Jr. wrote to thank him for his "kind letter and for the copies of 'Sketches' and 'The Gilded Age' which came safely.." He'd arranged with Chatto to pay £85 for LM [MTP].

April – Sam wrote a maxim on stationery of the Alpha Literary Society, Greenville Ill. to an unidentified person: "It is easier—& nearly always more judicious—to tell seven lies than make one explanation..." [MTP]. Note similarity with Apr. 3 to Bellows.

April 1 Sunday – Mollie and Orion Clemens wrote to Sam & Livy. Orion thanked Sam for the German books sent. They'd written to Kate Lampton to visit when it turned warmer and that Ma would send her tickets both ways. Sorry to hear of Livy's "danger" but were glad she was better. Mollie urged them to visit [MTP].

April 2 Monday – George W. Cable arrived in Hartford at noon and stayed with Charles Dudley Warner. From Cable's letter to his wife:

Charles D. Warner met me at the door just leaving for New York. He will be back to my lecture on Wednesday. His wife is at the piano practicing for a little afternoon musicale appointed for tomorrow at this house.

I have been over to see Clemens. Found him sick or nearly so, lying down at least with a cold. He promises to be up tonight, when some of us expect to attend the meeting of the Monday club. Mr. Twichell came in while I was there, looking for me. All ask kindly after you. Mrs. George Warner is as sweet [as] ever...Mrs. Clemens is sick abed with quinsy, but out of all danger & today greatly improved [Turner, MT & GWC 12-13].

April 3 Tuesday – In Hartford Sam wrote an aphorism to John Bellows in Gloucester, England: “I would rather tell seven lies than make one explanation” [Sotheby’s catalog at MTP].

From George W. Cable’s letter to his wife:

Dear old Mark Twain sends kindest word to all of you, beginning, of course, with Nellie.

We have had a beautiful day today. I ventured over to M.T.’s house without my overcoat & felt comfortable; but on starting away from his house he cried out at the idea of no overcoat.

I said, “The air is full of a soft, warm glow.”

“Soft, warm glow! It’s full of the devil!—the devil of pneumonia! That’s what it’s full of!” and so I had to wear one of his overcoats back to Warner’s.

Here’s another characteristic speech: “Yes, sir, my poor wife must get sick, & have a pulse that ran up to—150 in the shade!”

He began to d—n Roswell Smith (whom he likes very well, I believe). I said I don’t allow my friends to abuse each other. “Yes, that’s all right; I know it. That’s the reason I forbear as I do. You see how mild my abuse is compared to what it would be if you were not here.”

He strode up & down the room holding his headachy forehead & brandishing his arms, scolding over the various miscarriages of our schemes concerning the reading.

I said, “I didn’t come over here to torment you before your time.” He answered—

“Oh, you’re not tormenting me; only give me room to swear!” But he did not swear—much [Bickle 96].

George MacDonald wrote from Bordighera, Italy, thanking him for his refusal to collaborate and seeing it “in its true light—as at least more than doubtful.” He reflected a sincere faith in God [MTP].

George B. Smith, Jr. wrote from the National Soldier’s Home in Togus, Me. Unfortunately the letter has faded to the point of being nearly unreadable [MTP].

April 4 Wednesday – Sam sponsored and introduced George W. Cable in a program of readings at Unity Hall in Hartford. To ensure a good response, Sam encouraged well-known literary types from New York and Boston to attend [Fatout, MT Speaking 176-7]. In his Apr. 6 letter to New Orleans artist Frances A. Cox, Sam wrote “George W. partially defeated himself night before last by not making a good selection of reading matter...” [MTP]. (See Apr. 5 and Apr. 6 entries.)

Cable read from “Old Creole Days” and his novel The Grandissimes. He wrote to his wife on Apr. 5:

“Poor, dear old Mark Twain! I could see that his wide experience recognized the fact & that he was not satisfied” [Turner, MT & GWC 15].

The Hartford Courant, Apr. 5 p2, reported on Cable’s reading:

When Mr. Cable came forward, and was received with hearty applause, the audience saw a slight, almost boyish figure, with a face of singular purity and refinement, black, laughing eyes, black hair, and a forehead high and fair and indicating thought and seriousness....so absolutely simple that we hesitate to apply the word dramatic to it, and yet the effect was dramatic, as the intense interest with which his sketching was followed by the audience attested.

After the readings there was a “lively supper at the Hartford Club,” including Howells, Twichell, Aldrich, Gilder, and O’Reilly. Fatout: “Of this late party Cable remarked upon an ‘abundance of innocent fun. There were a hundred good things said that I suppose I’ll never remember.’ See Hutton, Talks in a Library: 416-18” [MT Speaking 655].

Cable gave Sam copies of Old Creole Days (1879), The Grandissimes. A Story of Creole Life (1880), and Madame Dephine (1881); and inscribed them: “To S. L. Clemens. Yours truly, G. W. Cable, Hartford, Apl 4, 1883” [Gribben 123].

Charles Ethan Porter wrote from Paris to Sam & Livy—a begging letter for funds [MTP]. Note: Porter was the black artist that Sam had helped before.

Jenny Sharples wrote from Lancashire, England, sending a handkerchief she’d embroidered for him, to thank him for the autographed letter sent some time before [MTP].

April 5 Thursday – Sam introduced George W. Cable to the Saturday Morning Club, Hartford, at the home of Charles Perkins. Cable read “Posson Jones.” Richard Watson Gilder was among the guests [Bickle 97; Turner, MT & GWC 16-17]. Note: In this and a few other cases Sam’s young girls’ club met on days other than Saturday to accommodate speakers.

From the club reading, which Sam was elated with, they took a carriage to a lunch in Cable’s honor at the Hartford Club. That evening Cable wrote his wife Lucy of the gathering:

“It was the maddest, merriest three hours—the wittiest uproar that ever I heard in my life. It beat the Boston dinner of last fall and was without the grossness which hurt my ear there” [Turner, MT & GWC 18].

Sam handed Cable John C. Kinney’s “little check for” $125 for his Unity Hall reading of Apr. 4. Kinney was an editor on the Courant [19].

April 6 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Frances A. Cox. Sam thanked her again for the portrait of “Mammy” –“the lovely & lovable black face, heart of gold in ebony casket.” Sam also wrote that this reading was:

“...a splendid triumph. [Cable] read Parson Jones, & carried his house by storm. He will read that & some other good selections to-night [Apr. 6] before a company at Charles Warner’s & will score another triumph, & go forth from Hartford with banners flying & drums beating, an acknowledged conqueror” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to James R. Osgood. Sam told of Cable’s “rattling victory” at the young girls’ club—“They have made it the talk of Hartford.” Sam was “uneasy & bothered” about Livy’s weakened condition since her bout with tonsillitis [MTP].

Clemens also sent a telegram to Francis Hopkinson Smith, in N.Y.C.

“Lovinge Greeting to ye tillers and I wolde surely come but that sundry of my tribe do languish under the hand of the medicine man [.] fill high the Vedder. SL Clemens” [Smithsonian Archives of American Art, Elihu Vedder Papers, Reel 518 Frame 1566].

Notes: Sam was unable to attend a dinner given by the Tile Club for Elihu Vedder, who was to sail the next week to Rome. The New York Times reported the Apr. 6 dinner on Apr. 7, and quoted Sam’s telegram in “A Dinner to Elihu Vedder.” On May 7, 1884, just over a year later, the Tile Club gave an exhibition of “a remarkable collection of pictures just completed by Mr. Elihu Vedder,” after what had been reported as a mysterious disappearance by Vedder. The 50-some pictures were to be illustrations for a large volume edition of the Rubaiyat by Omar Khayam, published by Houghton Mifflin & Co. [The Literary World May 17, 1884, p.170].

Sam also wrote to George E. Waring Jr. Sam blundered by inviting Waring to visit the family in Elmira at Quarry Farm in the summer, since “it takes every bed in the house to hold our gang.” The solution was to have him stay with Mrs. Langdon in town and Sam would “fetch” him “up, mornings & tote” him” back evenings, & insure ...a perfectly lovely time...Will you forgive the blunderer?” Sam again raved about Cable’s talks [MTP].

Cable attended church services with the Bartletts and “heard a few tolerably good remarks from Dr. Parker & then some of the rambling stuff from a rev’d friend of his.” He stopped by Sam’s and gave him a letter from Mary Bartlett (Susy’s piano teacher [MTNJ 2: 397n141]). After putting up with a pun from Sam (a rather rare thing for which Sam abjectly “groveled”), Cable wrote his wife of the day’s events [Turner, MT & GWC 19].

In the evening Cable gave a private reading for the Warners and their guests, 55 in all. Sam stayed home with a sick Livy, but “others of the household” attended, likely the older girls and/or servants [20].

A check for $99.50 from J.C. Kinney to Sam, drawn on Hartford Trust Co., endorsed “pay to the order of Geo. W. Cable, esq” signed by each [MTP]. Note: John C. Kinney was an editor on the Hartford Courant.

April 7 Saturday – Sam’s carriage took George W. Cable to the depot so he could catch a train to Newport. Livy was too ill to accompany them [Turner, MT & GWC 20-1].

Charles Webster wrote enclosing a check for the last three months on old books. “Bliss won’t send me a price list or circular I have repeatedly requested him to do so...He says he will not supply me with books....What was your arrangement about ordering books from him?” [MTP].

April 8 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster. Sam’s mother was now living with Orion and Mollie Clemens in Keokuk by this time. Pamela Moffett was traveling in California but would return to Fredonia. Annie Webster was packing up her house there for the move to New York. Sam advised Charley not to be out of New York for more than 48 hours [MTBus 211].

“Your presence in New York is worth that of a dozen Marshes or other subordinates at this most important time.”

The Fredonia Censor ran an item on May 9, 1883 that “George N. Marsh has come from New York after an absence of seven months,” so perhaps the job of packing and closing the Webster house in Fredonia was delayed somewhat.

Sam then wrote about the Paige meeting (Sam consistently misspelled it as “Page”):

At the T.S. [type setter] meeting there were about 60 stockholders. They conferred full powers on the Directors to raise capital, &c. Pa[i]ge was brought to book—that is, made to stand up & distinctly say he knew the machine to be now flawless. A capital of $1,000,000 was proposed to be raised. I get these details from Whitmore, who was present [211].

April 9 Monday – Charles Webster wrote: “Your smallest wish shall be gratified, no matter how much it discommodes me. I did not think for a moment that I was deserting my post here or I would not have entertained the idea...” He disputed Sam’s numbers on older books published by Bliss, as he had the binders statements in front of him—he listed years and numbers bound. He was enthusiastic about the sale of LM [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “No. of various books of Bliss”

April 10 Tuesday – In Hartford, Sam typed a letter to Matt H. Hewins, about the cushions on his billiard table. “They seem to act first rate when we threaten to change them,” Sam observed [MTP].

April 11 Wednesday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Mrs. Rollins (unidentified further):

Ah, but I’m not afraid of you, after seeing how kindly your pen is...I couldn’t be as gentle as you are over those French phrases. to my mind, the woman who says “mille fois” when it is her privilege to say “shucks!” & the man who says it when it is his privilege to say “damnation!” or some other word that’s got some sand in it, is a thoroughly despicable person, & I would tear him out of a book in a minute & make a fire with him [MTP].

Sam also wrote to John Bellows in Gloucester, England (see Apr. 24, May 17 entry) responding a note sent to Webster & Co. of an offer to receive a copy of Bellows’ French-English dictionary.

“...for Mrs. Clemens will not allow me to keep hers in my study, & somebody long ago stole my own copy — our pastor, I think; who was probably beguiled by its pious aspect....”

Asked by Bellows and other authorities to ignore the terms “nom de plume” and “nom de guerre,” Sam replied:

“I think you do — can’t go to the bedroom to look, because then I should have to explain why I am sitting up enjoying myself so late to-night; & I would rather tell seven lies than make one explanation” [www.liveauctioneers.com/sothebys/item/98374; July 8, 2004]. Note: Bellows’ work was Dictionary for the Pocket: French and English, English and French (1873) [Gribben 58]. See Bellows’ of Apr. 24.

April 12 Thursday – James R. Osgood wrote that they didn’t need to start the 8th for Chicago. “Clark seemed to think about 10 days necessary in the other case, but I guess if we leave here the morning of the 9th it will be time. You come here Tuesday the 8th and dine with me and will start Wed. a.m. We can return the following Monday or Tuesday. / Glad you like the book” [MTP].

April 13 Friday – Funk & Wagnalls wrote an offer to publish Sam’s 80,000 word MS to be included in a series of 12 books by representative American authors [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Not Answered”

April 14 Saturday – Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam & Livy including an accounting page of March expenses [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote estimating 3,000 LM books would be sold by June 1. Another rundown of numbers of old books sold. Orion had written that there was no general agent in Keokuk [MTP].

April 16 Monday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to George W. Cable. Livy was not getting better and didn’t eat much so couldn’t get stronger. Sam intended to have her “travel on a mattress” to Elmira and “see if her mother can nurse her back to health.” Again Sam cautioned George to require money in advance from “those thieves” (probably the Mallory brothers) for a performance Cable had agreed to:

“They will leave a loop-hole in the writing through which their small souls can creep. I shall be at the Author’s Club and the Salvini Banquet in case Mrs. Clemens is well enough to spare me—a doubtful outlook” [MTP]. Note: Sam didn’t make either, due to Livy’s poor health.

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, reminding him to send the money to Keokuk each month. He also noted that Ralph Gillette was the man to deal with for insurance on the house. Livy was sitting up “a good deal these days, but “Sam did “not think her progress toward health amounts to much” [MTP].

The first meeting of the American Copyright League was held at Brander Matthews' home on East 18th Street in New York. Matthews writes:

“The first of the authors to arrive was Henry James, whom I had then the pleasure of meeting for the first time. The second meeting took place a little later at Hutton’s; and in a few weeks we had collected adherents all over the country. We organized for a long campaign, resolved not to quit until we had accomplished our purpose; in fact...it was more than eight years before we could rejoice over the passage of the first act recognizing the obligation of the American people toward the foreign men of letters who were amusing and enlightening us. Our ultimate victory was due largely to the zeal and the tact of our successive secretaries, George Parsons Lathrop, Henry Loomis Nelson, and Robert Underwood Johnson.

“We chose a strong and energetic executive committee, and James Russell Lowell accepted the presidency, contributing the quatrain which we adopted as our motto:

“In vain we call old notions fudge,
And bend our conscience to our dealing;
The ten commandments will not budge
And stealing will continue stealing” [These Many Years 225].

Note: Sam did not attend this first meeting, but his sympathies certainly rested with such efforts, and his interests were directly affected.

F.B. Goddard wrote about an invention by “Mr. R. T. Sperry an artist formerly of Hartford ...called the Lintograph” for lithography. Sperry had recommended W.C. Hutchings who then milked Goddard for $150 and said Clemens had promised $500—he was either “mentally astray” or a con man. “We venture to ask if such was the fact if you did lend him the money” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “About Hutchings”; Reginald T. Sperry.

James R. Osgood wrote: “Tell me now art going to N.Y. on the 25th for the Authors Club and the Salvini dinner on 26th? Hutton expects you, and I am going. Let me know...telegraph me.” He also reassured Clemens that the new book “is in the hands of most competent and experienced agents all round...” [MTP].

April 17 Tuesday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to James R. Osgood. A dispute had arisen between Charles Webster, Sam and Osgood. Sam held to the belief as almost a maxim, that the big sale took place before issue, not after. Though once true for subscription books, it no longer was certain. Webster wrote on Apr. 9 that his inspection of American Publishing Co.’s statements revealed that the reverse had been the case. H.N. Hinckley confirmed this idea, due to agents being unable to canvass without the book in hand. Still, Sam stuck to his guns.

“Nevertheless I am right. The big sale is always before issue—after issue, the agents immediately load up the bookstores and canvassing ceases....The orders that come in after the ISSUE of a subscription book don’t amount to a damn—just write that up amongst your moral maxims; for it is truer than nearly anything in the Bible” [MTLP 162-3]. Note: Osgood replied on Apr. 18.

April 18 Wednesday – James R. Osgood replied to Sam’s Apr. 17: “Perhaps you are correct: but I don’t quite believe it. The sequel will show” [163]. Sam did give way a bit, allowing Osgood and Webster to do as they preferred on The Stolen White Elephant [MTP].

April 20 Friday – Edward Jump, one-time favorite caricaturist of San Francisco, and possibly Sam’s roommate there for a time [Taper xxv], committed suicide. Note: See Schmidt’s site: for a Chicago Daily Tribune article: <http://www.twainquotes.com/edjump.html> . Robert Hirst of the MTP did not know where Taper got the idea from that Clemens had roomed with Jump, and no evidence was found.

April 21 Saturday – From Lilly Warner's pen: “Livy is doing well now, under a nurse’s care, and the sweet soft air of these good days” [Salsbury 164].

April 22 Sunday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Laurence Hutton, advising that he would not be able to stay with him Apr. 25 and attend the Salvini banquet on Apr. 27 due to Livy’s condition.

“We have a professional nurse, but I am the main nurse, & most not leave the deck until I can be better spared than at present. Mrs. Clemens is gathering strength, & is steadily improving—sits up some, now—but needs & requires constant looking after. It is the slowest improvement I ever saw” [MTP].

From Lilly Warner's pen:

Daisy [her daughter, Margaret] is as well as a kitten—and as happy—now out walking with her “Clicky Clemens” [Clara]

Livy is better and better—and the Gerhardt baby, over in Paris, a month old, is named Olivia for her [Salsbury 164].

In Venice, Italy, Howells wrote to Sam about the Mallory brothers of Madison Square Theatre and the negotiations under way for their play, Colonel Sellers as a Scientist. Howells was sickened by the “rags and dirt” of Venice and guessed he hadn’t begun to “see the misery of it when I lived here.” He told of a woman who carried two books around, the Bible and Roughing It [MTHL 1: 430].

April 23 Monday – James R. Osgood wrote: “I have your gloomy communication [not extant], and will respond to your invitation to stop over and brace you up. I will leave here either to-morrow (Tuesday) afternoon by 4.30 train and pass the night with you, or else I will go by 8.30 a.m. train Wednesday morning and arrive at 12.25 and stop over one train. Will telegraph you to-morrow which I will do” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote, having rec’d various contracts Sam signed from the American Publishing Co. He mentions possible troublesome clauses in a couple of the books, but nowhere did he see that books were to be sold by subscription [MTP].

April 24 Tuesday – Sam and Livy wrote from Hartford to Charles Langdon of sickness, gaining strength, Olivia Lewis Langdon's improved health, and Hartford’s “death-list” which had “reached the startling & disgraceful figure of 89” [MTP].

Sam also typed a letter to Whom it May Concern for Harry M. Clarke, recommending him as a typewriter copyist based on his work on LM. Sam was thoroughly impressed with revising copy done on the typewriter:

“MY COPYING IS ALWAYS DONE ON THE TYPE-WRITER, NOW, AND I SHALL NOT BE LIKELY TO EVER USE ANY OTHER SYSTEM” [MTP].

Sam also typed a letter to Charles Webster. Sam would soon send a letter from Ella Lampton containing a suggestion, probably about securing work for her daughter Kate, who wanted copy work. Livy was “improving all the time but is still confined to her bed” [MTP].

John Bellows wrote from Gloucester, England, replying to Sam’s of Apr. 11. He noted that the letter exceeded the “return after 10 days” on the envelope, for by that point “the mail steamer was 100 miles short of Queenstown!” He then wrote: “I send a copy of the dictionary by this mail, and am mortified to have failed in neatly shipping in NOM de PLUME and NOM de GUERRE under N.” He also enclosed The Life of John Roberts: (a Gloucestershire Farmer of the Time of Charles II) by Daniel Roberts, which he called “a quaint little book that will interest thee” [MTP].

Laurence Hutton wrote another nearly illegible note from NYC, sorry that Sam wasn't coming [MTP].

April 25 Wednesday – James R. Osgood arrived at Sam's [Apr. 24 to Webster].

April 28 Saturday – James R. Osgood wrote (envelope only survives) [MTP].

April 29 Sunday – Hattie J. Gerhardt wrote a short note to Sam & Livy, concerned about Livy's illness. She added, "...one thing I know will make you happy—every one says Karl has made a decided jump in his art & he is received in the salon & I am happy" [MTP].

May – Sam inscribed LM to Edwin P. Parker: "With kindest regards of Mark Twain" [MTP].

May 1 Tuesday – Sam began a letter from Hartford to Karl & Hattie ("Josie") Gerhardt, that he finished May 3. Sam questioned Josie about her remark that Charles Ethan Porter had "gone to the dogs," a remark he said for which "she gave no details." Porter, a Negro, was to be forgiven sins more than a white person, he said, which says a lot about Sam's evolution on race matters:

At the same time I must remember, and you must also remember, that on every sin which a colored man commits, the just white man must make a considerable discount, because of the colored man's antecedents. The heirs of slavery cannot with any sort of justice, be required to be as clear and straight and upright as the heirs of ancient freedom, and besides, whenever a colored man commits an unright action, upon his head is the guilt of only about one tenth of it, and upon your heads and mine and the rest of the white race lies fairly and justly the other nine tenths of the guilt. So, when you have told me all there is to tell about Porter, I shall doubtless judge his case charitably enough [MTP].

Sam also wrote a short reminder to Charles Webster to write his Aunt Ella Lampton. "WHAT DID YOU SAY TO HER?" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Jenny Sharples, thanking her for an embroidered handkerchief sent.

"I shall not degraded this handkerchief to common uses; I shall take it out only on occasions that be worthy of it; it shall be kept sacred to tears of sorrow shed for lost friends, & tears of joy shed for the destruction of enemies. And for one other occasion—to wave you a welcome when you come to America!" [MTP].

May 3 Thursday – Sam finished the letter of May 1 to the Gerhardts. He confessed that Livy was "not well enough yet, to write, but will be, soon..." He'd received the bronze portraits from Karl and thought the one of him was "very fine." He didn't think Warner's was a good likeness, but excused it because "the artist needs the living model, not the dead & flat photograph" [MTP].

Isabella Beecher Hooker wrote about going to some function with them to save $3, and not realizing Livy was so "feeble" [MTP].

May 7 Monday – In Hartford, Sam typed a letter to Mary Mason Fairbanks, gently accusing her of not "caring any great deal about us or our sufferings" since she'd made several trips east without stopping by then retiring "stealthily west again without ever coming near us." Livy had suffered through a bout of diphtheria, then quinsy (inflamed tonsils) and "several minor things," and was now emaciated.

"I could shave with her shoulder blades; she has no more flesh than one of those old-fashioned hoop-skirts."

Sam related Susy's expressed disappointment at the recovery of two of Patrick Aleer's children from scarlet fever, since she'd looked forward to "the experience of a funeral."

“It would be worth your while to come here and study Susie. As a general thing her speeches sound about forty-five years old, and are prodigiously entertaining; but Clara is a perfectly natural child, with nothing remarkable about her; and the same may be said about Jean” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, on details and plans: He paid the music-box bill this day; reminded Webster to have “that watch company’s note transferred to John Arnot”; and another reminder with address to write his Aunt Ella Lampton. Sam announced his trip to Boston and Canada the next day [MTP].

Sam also wrote a short note to the Gerhardts that Livy was sending a box of baby clothes for them with Mrs. Langdon’s medallion in it that they should have cast in bronze [MTP]. Note: Gerhardt made several medallions with images of people, likely in terra cotta.

Christian Tauchnitz, Jr. wrote about including Sketches in their Continental Ed. Thanking Sam for his Apr. 16. He asked for a good photo of Clemens [MTP].

May 8 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Boston to Livy.

“Livy Darling, I grew so uneasy, before I reached Boston, that I determined to go back home unless I got news that you were better. I have just received your answering telegram, & am greatly relieved” [Note: Livy’s telegram to Boston suggests Sam spent at least one night there].

Sam learned from Osgood that they need not stay in Canada beyond May 14, and hoped to return by way of New York to see “one evening of the great billiard match & still get to Hartford as soon as if we came home by the old regular route” [MTP].

May 9–16 Wednesday – Sam made a flying trip to Montreal during this period to protect copyright of Life on the Mississippi [LLMT 215]. In his May 18 letter to Howells, Sam wrote “When I was in Montreal three or four days ago...” would put the date there a bit later than the May 14 date which Osgood had estimated. It’s not known if Sam returned by way of New York, or how long he stayed in Boston. No N.Y. Times notices of his being in the city for this period were found.

May 10 Thursday – George MacDonald wrote from Bordigera, Italy, once again urging Sam to join him in writing a novel [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Your Ph. Is very lovely. 2 plays & 3 books. & the whole summer engaged. Can’t forecast the future with all these (& other proposed) books (& Hamlet) in my head.”

May 12 Saturday – Life on the Mississippi was published in England by Chatto & Windus [MTHL 1: 433n2]. Prior publication in the Empire was necessary to secure copyright there.

May 13 Sunday – In an unknown place (probably Ottawa or Montreal) Sam inscribed LM to an unidentified person [MTP].

John Irwin wrote a begging letter from Berkshire, Ohio as he couldn’t afford Sam’s latest book [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “No Answer”; Sam rarely complied with such requests, unless he knew the person.

May 15 Tuesday – Robert Hirst gives this as the date the “earliest copies of the first edition [LM] were published” [“A Note on the Text” Oxford edition, 1996]. The first review, this from the Hartford Courant, p.1:

Mark Twain’s new book Life on the Mississippi is just out, a handsome volume of 625 pages and over 300 illustrations. It is one of his best and most entertaining works, and likely to be one of his most successful. It is full of the genius of its author, who is equally at home in serious descriptions, in entertaining anecdotes, and in the clever sketching of queer characters. The whole book is pervaded by his quaint and irresistible humor, and is eminently readable throughout [Budd, Reviews 235].

May 17 Thursday – Life on the Mississippi was issued by the James R. Osgood & Co. (Two copies were deposited with the Copyright Office of the Library of Congress). Sales before issue barely reached 30,000, a number that enraged Sam [Powers, MT A Life 469; Hirst, “A Note on the Text” Oxford edition, 1996]. Note: under old subscription models, it was thought 40,000 sales before release was a good result.

Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster again about Kate Lampton. Ella Lampton had written again for her daughter Kate, and Sam enclosed her letter. He also asked if Webster would confirm good seats for him and Osgood for the following week:

I found complimentary tickets here from the Collender Co., for the opening billiard night, when I got back from Canada, and for which I was very much obliged. At present, Osgood and I propose to go down Sunday night [May 20], and be present at the matches of the afternoons and evenings of Monday and Tuesday [May 21-2]. Therefore if you should happen in there, you might ask the Collender Company to bear us in mind and not let the good seats get away [MTBus 214].

Sam wrote from Hartford to American Publishing Co. asking them to “Please send A Tramp Abroad to John Bellows, Gloucester, England” [MTP]. John Bellows (1831-1902), a printer by trade, was later called the “Father of Gloucester Archeology” being the first to identify the walls there as of Roman origin. He introduced the first steam-press in the area, invented a cylindrical calculator, and wrote the first French-English dictionary without first knowing French. (This is a trick you should not try at home.)

Sam also wrote one line to Miss M.J. Remann, probably an autograph-seeker. “Very heavy press of work is my excuse for this brutal brevity. Truly Yours / Mark Twain” [MTP].

May 18 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells, who wrote from Venice, Italy on Apr. 22 about negotiations with Marshall Mallory for the Colonel Sellers as a Scientist play.

I have just sent your note to the godly Mallory, and said that we would leave the matter just as it stands, not only until your return but until the play shall be completed. Said I did not wish to bind myself to write a play. Next October you will come here and roost with me, and we will lock ourselves up from all the world and put the great American comedy through. If we ever come to deal with those people, we shall not do it in person, but through the ablest legal talent that New York can furnish; and if they get ahead of us they will have to rise early [MTHL 1: 431]. Note: The Mallory brothers, George and Marshall, had cheated one James Morrison Steele MacKaye, actor, manager, and author out of royalties on a play which continued to pay them for many years (See MTHL 1: 412n2; also 432n1).

Louis Fréchette wrote a note all in French with mourning border; he mentioned Union Square Theatre on June 4, likely a reading of his [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “No answer”

May 19 Saturday – Sam wrote two drafts of a telegram to be sent from Hartford to John Douglas Sutherland Campbell (Marquis of Lorne; 1845-1914), apologizing for his delay after receiving a confused message second hand by telephone. After a:

“...long delay it has come to me correctly & lucidly in manuscript form & I hasten to accept your lordship’s kind invitation & say I shall do myself the honor to report in Ottawa” [MTP].

The Chicago Tribune, p. 9, “Mark Twain Produces Another Compound of Fiction, Humor, and Fact,” concluded LM was “one of the best, if not the best, this writer has given to the public” [Budd, Reviews 235].

Samuel E. Dawson (telegram on behalf of Lord Lorne) wrote “Governor General wants you to be his guest at meeting of Royal Society try and go.” He also sent a letter about the event and advised he’d sent the Gov. “your book with autograph” [MTP].

George P. Lathrop wrote from NYC about his wife’s plans to go to Europe foreclosing them from visiting Hartford. He PS’d that he was reading LM “with great satisfaction” [MTP].

May 20 Sunday – Sam and James R. Osgood traveled from Hartford to New York City to watch Collender’s great billiard tournament at Tammany Hall [MTBus 214].

THE GREAT BILLIARD TOURNAMENT

Lafcadio Hearn of the New Orleans Times-Democrat, reviewing LM, concluded,

Notwithstanding its lively spirit of fun, the volume is a more serious creation by far than The Innocents Abroad; and in some respects seems to us the most solid book that Mark Twain has written [Budd, Reviews 237].

Samuel E. Dawson (telegram on behalf of Lord Lorne) “Ceremony of Knighthood on twenty fourth you should see try and arrive at Ottawa in evening of twenty third at latest if you cant come earlier reply to Lord Lorne direct” [MTP].

George E. Waring wrote from Newport, RI, planning a visit in July to Elmira and thanking him for “the chaste and graphic sketch” (1601?) [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Waring / Good—don’t forget the visit / Stir up that tobacco man. & after 10th send it to Elmira”

May 21 Monday –Sam and James R. Osgood enjoyed the first two days of the Collender’s billiard tournament at Tammany Hall. The contests continued for some eleven days, with Maurice Daly the final winner [N.Y. Times, “Prizes for Billiard Experts” May 30, 1883 p.3].

Osgood telegraphed: “Missed you at the station and went back to Springfield on the train expressly to meet you can’t go to Canada hope you will enjoy it” [MTP].

Samuel E. Dawson telegraphed: “No apology needed I will see you in passing, newspapers here announce your visit” [MTP].

May 22 Tuesday – After watching more of the billiards tournament, Sam left for Canada, reaching Montreal at 8:30 in the evening. He wrote from Montreal to Livy about a mix-up in the trains that caused him and Osgood to be on different trains [MTP].

George W. Cable wrote he was unable to make the Saturday Morning Club reunion. The day before he’d rec’d two copies of LM and the “family are devouring it.” He’d had an offer from Sidney Drake of Hartford to publish his book [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the top, “Was in Canada when this came.” And across the letter, “Don’t know Drake” and “Mrs C. improving” and “love to you all”

May 23 Wednesday – Sam got up at 6:30 AM and went to Samuel E. Dawson's (his Canadian publisher) house to borrow his “best black frock coat” to “wear it at luncheons in Ottawa”. Then Sam took an 8:30 AM train to Ottawa, arriving at noon [May 22 letter to Livy].

Sam was guest of the Governor-General of Canada, Marquis of Lorne and wife Princess Louise who was Queen Victoria's fourth daughter. Princess Louise signed his notebook during his stay [MTNJ 3: 18].

Sam gave a private reading in Rideau Hall, Ottawa [MTPO].

Sam also gave a speech, “On Adam” for the Royal Literary and Scientific Society, in Ottawa, Canada [Fatout, MT Speaking 178-180]. Note: this may be the same “private reading” as above.

Sam wrote at 8 P.M. to Livy.

“Livy my dear, fun isn't any name for it! I wish I had come a day sooner, as I was invited to do. Reached here at noon today & it is now toward 8 p.m., the dinner hour—so I will stop scribbling & dress...” [MTP].

May 24 Thursday – Sam wrote from Government House, Ottawa to Livy, about how well he got along with Princess Louise and how he'd tried hard not to commit any social blunders [LLMT 215-6].

Jane Clemens wrote, “We are watching every day for Robert Creel to die. You remember Sam, his mother & mine were sisters.” More details about Creel sinking [MTP]. Note: Creel would have been Sam's great uncle. There's a parcel of early letters to Creel from various persons at the MTP.

Princess Louise sent engraved invitations for dinner on Thursday the 24th of May at 8 pm [MTP].

May 27 Sunday – The Governor General and Princess Louise went to church, while Sam played billiards with Lord Frederick Hervey. After lunch Sam played “a few games of billiards” with Miss Hervey...

...then his Excellency, Miss MacNeil, & I, & three dogs, took a five-mile walk through the woods & by the river, getting back at 6 p.m.; then all hands, including the Princess, played lawn tennis until nearly 8, & delayed dinner a good deal. I did not play very well; still I believe I could learn something of the trick of that game if I should stick to it a few days longer. The princess asked me to read, in the evening, & of course I did. After a smoke, the day ended, at 12.30 a.m., —an hour earlier than usual, everybody being pretty well tuckered out.. [May 28 to Livy, MTP].

Sam gave a reading at Rideau Hall, Ottawa, Canada, likely the one requested by Princess Louise above.

May 28 Monday – Sam wrote two letters from Ottawa to Livy: His plans to leave had been repeatedly delayed since Saturday. A raft trip down some rapids planned for three or four o'clock that day were scrapped due to a storm; Sam expected to leave at 4:30.

I was provided with only 3 white neckties, & they were rather shabby ones, too. They are shabbier, now. My dress coat has a big moth hole between the shoulders; but I have blacked the white lining with ink, & I suppose it hardly ever shows; in fact, the wise Princess said—but dear me it is luncheon time. How swiftly the time does fly! [LLMT 216].

Sam's second letter to Livy disclosed he was leaving for Montreal, where he would spend the night, then take a morning train for home. “I thought I would write this final note because maybe it will beat me home” [MTP].

Sam wrote from Montreal to Samuel E. Dawson, returning the coat with his many thanks.

“To say I had a delightful visit at the Government House is putting it tamely—very tamely, indeed” [MTP].

Sam inscribed A Tramp Abroad for Sir Francis De Winton: “How simple & easy the bovv diagrams look, until they have been explained / Sincerely Yours/ S.L. Clemens / Mark Twain / To / Colonel De Winton / May 28, 1883” [MTP]. Note: De Winton (1835-1901) was a friend of the Marquis of Lorne who later was appointed by King Leopold to take Sir Henry Stanley’s place in the Congo. He was a recognized authority of central Africa.

Joseph R. Hawley wrote an invitation for Sam to meet Prof. Willard Fiske this evening at 6:30 [MTP].

May 29 Tuesday – Sam took an early morning train from Montreal bound for Hartford. If the train was on time, he arrived at about 8 or 8:30 PM [May 28 to Livy].

May 30 Wednesday – The New York Times ran a short piece, page one, on Sam’s efforts to secure Canadian copyright:

MARK TWAIN’S COPYRIGHT STRUGGLES.

OTTAWA, May 29. - For several days past Mr. Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) has been a guest at the Government House. He has succeeded in securing a Canadian copyright for his last work, “Life on the Mississippi.” His failure to secure Canadian copyright last year for his “Prince and Pauper” probably led him to take another course this time, which would be more likely to secure him the protection he desired. In the first instance, he brought out his new work in England, which entitled him to British copyright. This only gave him partial protection in the British colonies, as any foreign publisher could introduce his work in Canada by paying him a royalty of 12 ½ per cent. on the value of each volume. Not satisfied with this, and being determined that his works should be copyrighted in Canada, he transferred his work to the English publisher, Andrew Chatto, of London, who applied for and was granted Dominion copyright on May 15.

June – Osgood & Co. published The New Guide of the Conversation in Portuguese and English, by Pedro Carolino, with an introduction by Mark Twain, written a year before. Paine calls it “an absurd little volume” [MTLP I: 431]. (See June 4 entry.)

Sam inscribed Pedro Carolino’s The New Guide of the Conversation in Portuguese and English (Sam wrote the introduction to this reissue) in Hartford to Laura Dunham: “To Miss Laura Dunham from hers sincerely, The American Sponsor of the Book. Hartford, June 1883” [MTP]. Sam also inscribed another copy of this work to Laura Taft: “Miss Laura Taft / With the kindest / regards of / The Author / Hartford / June ’83.” [McBride 416].

Note: Miss Dunham may have been related to the old Hartford family. A Miss Mary Dunham visited Sam in Paris in the spring of 1879. Samuel C. Dunham was listed as a member of Sam’s Friday Evening Club for Feb. 3, 1882; and the aged A.C. Dunham (Austin Dunham) is mentioned in Andrews, p. 112 as well as being on the Mar. 10, 1883 list of Hartford citizens who formally requested George W. Cable to speak in the city.

June 1 Friday – The New York Times reported on p.4 under “GENERAL NOTES” the following:

An Ottawa telegram says that although Mark Twain has obtained a Canadian copyright for his new book, “Life on the Mississippi,” the same difficulty as regards residency which arose when he last applied for a Canadian copyright will likely crop up again. A few weeks’ stay in Canada, even at Rideau Hall, it is suggested, will hardly constitute a permanent residence in the Dominion within the meaning of the Copyright act.

June 2 Saturday – F.J. Permenter sent a printed poem, “Maud Muller’s Answer to Mr. Whittier The Poet” [MTP].

June 4 Monday – Upon his return from Canada, Sam saw Pedro Carolino’s book with his introduction and felt it would be a nice gesture to send it to Princess Louise. He also wrote from Hartford to Sir Francis De Winton in Ottawa:

I very much want to send a little book to her Royal Highness—the famous Portuguese phrase book; but I do not know the etiquette of the matter, and I would not wittingly infringe any rule of propriety. It is a book which I perfectly well know will amuse her “some at most” if she has not seen it before, and will still amuse her “some at least,” even if she has inspected it a hundred times already...P.S. Although the introduction dates a year back, the book is only just now issued. A good long delay [MTLP 432].

Sam also typed a letter to George W. Cable, saying the “girls were mightily delighted with your telegram.” Sam felt he finally had secured a Canadian copyright. Cable may have asked his advise on securing a publisher. Surprisingly, or perhaps not, Sam answered:

... I WOULD SAY, EVERY TIME, GO TO MY FORMER PUBLISHERS, THE AMERICAN PUBLISHING CO., 284 ASYLUM ST. THEY SWINDLED ME OUT OF HUGE SUMS OF MONEY IN THE OLD DAYS, BUT THEY DO KNOW HOW TO PUSH A BOOK; AND BESIDES, I THINK THEY ARE HONEST PEOPLE NOW. I THINK THERE WAS ONLY ONE THIEF IN THE CONCERN, AND HE IS SHOVELING BRIMSTONE NOW [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mary Mason Fairbanks, who evidently achieved some honor in Sam’s behalf.

It was lovely in you to do it, & I most highly appreciate the feeling that prompted you; but I am an interested Judge & jury, & cannot sit upon my own case. In my heart I should question my verdict, whichever way I gave it...A merely reasonable good looking girl who is told she is beautiful does not like to consent that she is, & yet would not willingly confess that she isn’t, to the complimented. There is no middle ground: she must move a change a venue.

Sam confided that Livy was “still as thin as a rail,” but that they planned to leave on June 14 for Elmira for the summer [MTP]. Livy was well enough to inscribe Peter Henderson’s Practical Horticulture (1874) to the Clemens’ gardener, Daniel Maloy [MTP; Gribben 307].

John Douglas Campbell (Lord Lorne) wrote, “glad you arrived safely home.” He added, “I like to hear of Mrs. Stowe still enjoying her recollections of old days with my people in England” [MTP].

June 6 Wednesday – John Bellows wrote from Gloucester, England, thanking for LM and TA, and offering his opinions about British history [MTP].

June 7 Thursday – Sam gave a reading at the Decorative Art Society, home of Mrs. Franklin Whitmore, Farmington Avenue, Hartford. According to the Hartford Courant, June 8 p.2, “City Briefs,” there were a series of readings from Sam’s writings to about 150 members and friends.

Karl Gerhardt wrote from Paris France, relating that Howells had dropped by when he wasn’t home, “catching ‘Josie’ in her potatoe paring.” He added plans for his continued study and art [MTP].

June 8 Friday – Clara Clemens’ ninth birthday. Sam noted amusement at Clara’s efforts to understand his penciled comment on the flyleaf of John Abbott’s (1805-1877) Daniel Boone: “A poor slovenly book; a mess of sappy drivell & bad grammar” [Gribben 4].

Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, directing him to hurry and rent him and his family a special hotel car to Elmira for Friday, June 15.

“We go Thursday from here, & Friday from New York unless death or desperate illness interfere” [MTBus 214].

Arthur Collins wrote from Ottawa, pleased about Sam’s visit there and hoping to run down to Hartford in the fall [MTP].

June 9 Saturday – Sam’s Thursday reading for the Decorative Art Society noted a spot in the New York Times, p.4 under “GENERAL NOTES.”

June 10 Sunday – An interview dated June 9 ran on page 1 of the New York Times: “MR. MARK TWAIN EXCITED ON SEEING THE NAME OF CAPT. C.C. DUNCAN IN PRINT”.

With his strawberries and cream before him and his NEW-YORK TIMES in his hand, Mark Twain sat upon the portico of his handsome home this morning and made merry. He had chanced upon an item concerning an old acquaintance, Capt. C.C. Duncan, New-York’s Shipping Commissioner and the father of three illustrious young men whose powers of absorbing the funds of the United States Government are, as far as is now known, illimitable. “Well, well, well! So the old man’s in hot water,” says the author of “Roughing It” and “Tom Sawyer,” with a mock expression of pity on his face as he pushed aside his strawberries. “Poor devil! I should think that after a while he’d conclude to put a little genius into his rascality, and try to hoodwink the public as his little game of robbery goes on. It don’t become a scoundrel to be an ass. The combination always makes a mix of things, and if Duncan will persist in his wicked ways somebody ought to have a guardian appointed for him...”

The “interview” caused a furor; Duncan threatened suit; Sam, denied “all but 20 words” of it; the rest he called the “reporter’s own invention.”

June 10–14 Thursday – Sometime between these dates Sam telegraphed from Hartford to Webster about the Duncan article in the Times.

“SAY NOTHING TO ANYBODY UNTIL YOU HEAR FROM ME AGAIN. YOU DID NOT SEND ME THAT PAPER CONTAINING INTERVIEW. I MUST SEE THAT BEFORE I CAN KNOW HOW TO PROCEED. LET ME KNOW, AS SOON AS DUNCAN ACTUALLY SUES ME—A THING I AM NOT EXPECTING TO HAPPEN—S L C” [MTBus 215].

June 11 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Andrew Chatto, releasing them from “any legal expenses incurred on account of the within...” [MTP]. Note: enclosure not described.

June 12 Tuesday – Henry Allaway wrote from New Haven, clipping enclosed from the NY Evening Telegram of June 11 about Capt. Charles C. Duncan planning to take “legal action” for remarks Sam reportedly said to the NY Times. Allaway asked if he might come to Hartford and “allow me to bore you once more in getting the point for a gossipy article about your career?” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “The Interviewer”

June 13 Wednesday – Susy and Clara Clemens wrote to Mr. Francis Parsons in Elmira that they would “be happy to see” him “Tuesday afternoon” June 26 “From 4 until 8.” The note does not appear to be in a child’s hand, although Susy was twelve [MTP].

Worden & Co. Wrote having rec'd his of June 13 and enclosing a memo of the sale of 100 shares MoPac and orders from Dean Sage to sell the remaining 200 shares [MTP]. Note: Sage acted as Sam's stock broker from NY.

June 14–25 Monday – Sam wrote from (Hartford if June 14, New York if June 14 or 15; Elmira if after June 15) to the Gerhardts, advising them of sending a single letter of credit for $1,000 instead of “the final installment of the stipulated $4,500,” along with a caution for them to complete their plans carefully. Evidently the Clemenses raised the limit of their support from $3,000 to $4,500.

“We want you both to write us just as often as you can, & thus keep the bridge strong & firm between your hearts & ours,—don't let it fall to decay & leave the affections without a highway to cross on. Tell us all your affairs, circumstances, prospects, purposes, hopes, fears, achievements” [MTP].

June 15 Friday – The Clemens family left New York City and traveled by special sleeping car to Elmira [MTBus 214].

Twichell noted in his journal, “our eighth child and fourth son was b. about 11 AM” [Yale, copy at MTP]. The boy was named Joseph Hooker Twichell.

Joe Twichell wrote to Livy with news of #8—a son—Joseph Hooker Twichell [MTP].

June 16 Saturday – Charles Webster wrote about business: Bliss, sales of old books, etc. [MTP].

June 17 Sunday – Under the headline “ENGLISH BADLY FLAYED” The New York Times, p.10 ran an article about Sam's introduction to The New Guide of the Conversation in Portuguese and English by J. Osgood & Co.

Mr. Clemens says rightly that it was prepared “in serious good faith and deep earnestness” by one who “believed he knew something of the English language and could impart his knowledge to others.”...Mr Clemens inclines to confer upon it the seal of immortality, and it would be a dull and ill-natured person who refused to grant him good reasons for the claim.

Karl Gerhardt wrote “Mr. Mead did not positively advise me to come to Italy” and thinking if he stayed in Paris he needed to do some work that would impress his American friends. They enjoyed Sam's new book, LM [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “No baby summer / Italy August”; Possibly Leon Mead.

June 18 Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster. Sam anticipated a suit about the “strawberries interview” about Duncan, and directed Charley not to say anything to George Jones (1811-1891), one of the founders of the New York Times.

“There is not a sentence in the interview that ever issued from my mouth. There are two or three parts of sentences, but no complete one. As a rule the interviewer has invented both the ideas & the language” [MTBus 215].

Sam also wrote to Charles E. West, declining an invitation to the 70th birthday celebration for Henry Ward Beecher [MTP].

Henry C. Robinson wrote, clippings enclosed, “The Life of Man” by Robert J. Burdette in Phila. Times. Henry thought there were “some good phrases in it” that might interest Sam. He wished they might have a game of billiards [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote about business matters: Duncan's suit [MTP].

June 19 Tuesday – Noah Brooks wrote that he'd been subpoenaed on behalf of the prosecution in Duncan's suit, but that he knew nothing. "I wish you could get the case removed from Brooklyn. That is a bad place for you; Duncan will have things fixed to suit him" [MTP].

Richard L. Ogden wrote from NYC to promote some bonds from California. Ogden claimed to have five volumes of the old Californian. He asked Sam to introduce him to the right gentlemen. He referred to a pamphlet not in the file & enclosed a forecast schedule of earnings [MTP].

June 20 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster about Duncan's threatened lawsuit:

All right. Tell Mr. Whitford [Sam's new lawyer] about Duncan's proposed suit. Tell him also that if I can be allowed to testify on my own behalf, I will go on the stand & point out each and every word in the printed interview that was actually uttered by me, & will show that 20 words will cover the whole; & I will swear that all the rest was the interviewer's own—invented it himself. Then if Whitford lets Duncan know this, possibly he will drop his prosecution of me & strengthen his Times suit by summoning me as a witness against the Times—a chance I should not be sorry to have [MTBus 216]. Note: In Mar. 1884 a Brooklyn jury awarded Duncan twelve cents damages against the Times.

Charles Webster wrote about business matters: hearing of lawyers preparing papers to serve Sam in the Duncan lawsuit [MTP].

June 22 Friday – The likely day Sam traveled from Elmira to New York City (see June 23 entry).

June 23 Saturday – The New York Times reported that Sam was staying at the Hotel Brunswick ["PERSONAL INTELLIGENCE," p8]. When Sam went to the City after June 20 and how long he stayed has not yet been pinned down, but newspaper reports in the Times generally fell a day later than his first night's stay, which would make his arrival in the city Friday, June 22.

June 26 Tuesday – Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote, not recommending stock in a vineyard scheme for the Barton Vineyard Assoc. [MTP].

June 27 Wednesday – Bissell & Co. per George H. Burt wrote, "If present appearance are correct you are overdrawn $1662.73 we will send the usual statement the 1st prox" [MTP].

Richard L. Ogden finished his June 26 letter [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote about business matters: "Mr. Ogden & a Mrs. Rogers came to my office & laid that vineyard scheme before me & the next day they came again & I had Mr. Whitford come up & talk with them. I presume he will give you his conclusions" and then offered his, that he was "afraid of this" [MTP].

Government House, Ottawa wrote to Sam; not found at MTP [Vassar].

June 28 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, who evidently had passed the idea of travel to California to invest in vineyards. Joe Goodman was involved in vineyards but he isn't mentioned in this letter, although Samuel Webster writes that Goodman may have inspired the interest in vineyards [217]. Sam answered that no way should Webster go to "all that trouble for a thousand vineyards...The idea of you going to California to find a way for me to invest $10,000—even if you went at Ogden's expense—doesn't strike me favorably, of course." Sam needed Webster where he was [MTBus 216].

Charles Webster wrote (Whitford to Webster June 27 enclosed) about business matters: the Barnard vineyard scheme, Sam's popularity in Australia & the need for a book agent there [MTP].

June 29 Friday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster.

“All right. I will wait till Duncan goes for me individually before I bother. I guess he will not see his way to tackling me at all if Whitford gives his lawyer a hint of what my defense would be.”

Sam refused to talk business about a vineyard proposition before the matter was transacted—Webster was his business manager and Sam refused to write letters or consult about such matters. Sam was working on Huckleberry Finn again and wanted no distractions [MTBus 216-7].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote about conferring with counsel for the NY Times in the Duncan suit [MTP].

June 30 Saturday – Worden & Co. Sent a statement with a balance for June 30 of $13,852.47 [MTP].

July – Sam invented the English history game with pegs up the Quarry Farm driveway for different years from 1066. He then made the commercial board game and involved Charles Webster.

This was also a period of continuous outpouring of productivity in Sam’s writing, especially on the HF manuscript. Howells returned from a year in Europe and collaborated with Sam on several stage play projects. The next eighteen months were quite productive for both men.

July 1 Sunday – Dr. Titus Munson Coan (1836-1921) of The Bureau of Revision, wrote that he’d sent “the circulars as you kindly request” [MTP].

July 1 Sunday ca. – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles A. Collin. Sam was upset that his name was “frequently forged” by person’s putting his name on their paragraphs in newspapers, or vice versa. Collins was with the Langdon Co., probably an attorney, for Sam asked, “Have I no protection under the law?...If I have, I wish to apply it in this case” [MTP].

July 1 - 19? – Sometime during this period Clemens wrote twice from Elmira to Henry (Harry) M. Clarke: 1st of 2:

Put no space on either side of a dash (1860–1861,) / OR hyphen: (cross-hall)
Always put a good honest unequivocal space after a period. Never jam it thus: (1860.1861.) Put it thus / 1860. 1861.
 Underscore for italics with a pencil or pen. The machine’s underscoring is execrable.
 The rest of the work is perfect. / S.L.C.
 When you err & put an insufficient space after a period, correct it with a pencil or pen, thus: ~~1860.1861.~~

Dear Mr. Clark—
 Clearly the type-writing is far superior to manuscript, for printers’ use. If you can get hold of the new machine, which has both capital & small letters, it will be still better, though this change is not essential. The work is beautifully done.
 Paging at the top is sufficient. Pay no attention to my paging [numbers].
 See next page for some suggestions [MTP]. Note: Sam then included four details dealing with spacing, punctuation, and indents.

July 2 Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Karl & Hattie Gerhardt. He was hard at work on Huck:

“We have been here on the hill a week or more & I am deep in my work & grinding out manuscript by the acre—stick to it the whole day long, allowing myself only time to scratch off two or three brief letters after they yell for me to come down to supper” [MTP].

July 5 Thursday – “An American on American Humour” appeared in the St. James Gazette. Thomas Sergeant Perry’s article reported Sam’s humor as “representative of a democratic, serious, ironic quality in American national character, reacting against Europe, though not independently and perhaps not in hostility” [Tenney 12].

July 6 Friday – Charles A. Collins in Elmira wrote a long legal opinion to Sam’s questions, which were pasted to p. 1 of Collins’ letter. See ca. July 1 entry.

July 7 Saturday – John H. Garth wrote from Hannibal “thoroughly ashamed of myself for my neglect in not acknowledging long ago the receipt of your new book...” [MTP].

July 8 Sunday – Karl Gerhardt wrote of the “great interest” taken in him by Dr. Augustus F. Beard of the American chapel, a brother of “the artist Beard of New York animal painter I think.” More expense accounts sent and thoughts of going to Florence to study [MTP]. Note: because such a sojourn in Florence would require him to leave wife and child in Paris, Gerhardt struggled with it for some time. Beard had been pastor of Plymouth Church, Syracuse, NY.

July 9 Monday – An unsigned favorable review to LM ran on page 3 of the New York Times.

Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun, wrote to Sam on a mysterious opportunity. The letter implies a recent answer by Sam to an invitation to come to New York to confer with Dana:

Dear Mr Clemens:

I’m sorry you can’t come sooner; but don’t make any new contracts in the mean time.

I think I can put you in the way of making more money out of your brains than you have ever made.

Yours Truly C.A. Dana [MTP]. Note: see reply of July 11.

July 10 Tuesday – Aboard the S.S. Parisian on his way home, Howells wrote to Sam, reporting on their visit to the Gerhardts in Paris. He described their living quarters as “primitive and simple as all Chicopee, and virtuous poverty spoke from every appointment of the place.” Howells observed that Karl Gerhardt seemed “a little worn with overwork,” suggesting he might learn while resting in Italy [MTHL 1: 434].

Howells also told of meeting Thomas Hardy, the novelist. Michael Millgate, in Thomas Hardy, His Career as a Novelist puts this date as June 25, 1883 at the Savile Club dinner for Sir Edmund Gosse [198]. Millgate also writes, “During the evening Howells told the story of Mark Twain’s disastrous speech at the Whittier dinner, and Hardy responded with praise of Life on the Mississippi; and admiration of Mark Twain as more than ‘merely a great humorist.’” Note: Howells letter above does not disclose his discussing the Whittier speech.

Jane Clemens wrote to the Clemenses: “Dear children / All sizes & ages”. She talked of activities, old friends who visited, and as old people often do, talked about many others. “Orion lets nothing pass for my comfort & accommodation” [MTP].

S.H. Kent wrote from Westfield, NY asking how to copyright in Canada for a book of poems [MTP].

July 11 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Samuel E. Dawson, his Canadian publisher, thanking him again for his visit to Rideau Hall and apologizing for being “miraculously, dull, stupid, silent, & unentertaining...” He praised his hosts and confided that “When anybody wants Canadian-copyright information,” he never wasted ink and paper on him but “cut him off with a curt ‘Go to Mr. Dawson’” [MTP].

Sam also replied to the July 9 of Charles A. Dana:

Dear Mr. Dana— / I am whacking at an unfinished book, & may not go to New York till the end of summer; but when I do go I will be sure to call unless we should happen to make too close a connection with the Hartford train, an accident not very likely to happen. / Yours Sincerely / S.L. Clemens [MTP; Morgan Library Online exhib 10/20/2010].

Sam also wrote to Henry C. Robinson, attorney and one of his Friday Evening Club billiard cronies.

I hope you'll make the [Hartford] Engineering Co. take care of that note of mine July 26th [unidentified further].

I wish I could be there to assist at that 500-point game. But as you were four-fifths out at last accounts, I suppose the conflict is over before this.

Mrs. Clemens is still a skeleton, but is freighting up at the rate of an ounce a day...[MTP].

Hartford Engineering wrote that “On July 25th there matures at the U.S. Bank one of our notes for $10000# bearing your indorsement. Inclosed we beg to hand you a renewal” [MTP].

July 12 Thursday – Edward H. House wrote “a dreary letter” of failing under the curse of gout for the past 10 months, and of Koto’s seizures, which explained their infrequent letters [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Give [word torn away] account of the Reid interview / Hist game”

July 14 Saturday – Sam wrote to the Hartford Engineering Co., letter not extant, but referred to in the Co.’s July 17 reply.

An old letter of Sam’s, written July 6 1859, appeared in the Arkansaw Traveler. See July 6, 1859 entry) [MTL I: 91-2, n2].

Charles A. Dana wrote: “I’m sorry you can’t come sooner; but don’t make any new contracts in the mean time. / I think I can put you in the way of making more money out of your brains than you have ever made” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote about business matters, clipping enclosed, “Another Swindler In Custody” about one Noel Winters who had posed as book agent for Osgood & Co. [MTP].

July 15 Sunday – Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam & Livy: more about their progress & expenses [MTP].

July 16 Monday – Samuel E. Dawson wrote “to assist any of your friends about copyright” [MTP].

July 17 Tuesday – Hartford Engineering Co. wrote having rec’d his of the 14th and asking again if he would renew his endorsement on the $10,000 bond [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Can’t do it”

Joe Twichell wrote, having read Sam was “getting up from an attack of rheumatism and malaria...how sick have you been?” He told of a gathering where the ex-president Hayes asked about Twain and also about himself [MTP].

July 18 Wednesday – Sam measured off the winding driveway up to Quarry Farm, and began a game.

“...after three and a half weeks of “booming along” on his two mismatched books, Clemens had a premonition of overwork, quite for the day, and, characteristically, gave himself over to something altogether different but also, as he found it in his high mood, equally absorbing. On this idyllic summer day, with Susy, Clara, and Jean by his side, he measured off with a yardstick 817 feet...Then, using as markers pegs which he whittled and drove himself, he measured out on the scale of one foot per year all the reigns of the English rulers from William the Conqueror on” [Kaplan 252; July 20 to Twichell].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote expecting “an order for your examination” in the Duncan suit [MTP].

July 19 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun. Dana wrote Sam on July 9 and 14.

All right, I'm a candidate, & shall keep myself open to conviction & swag...our tribe will be returning home in September, & then I will look in on you as we pass through. The three summer months being my chief working time, I slave it without losing a day while we are here. I have written one small book, & am far along in a bigger one [HF]—& shall finish if I don't run around any [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Joe Twichell about the driveway peg game, which took him all day to put in place:

“The reason it took me eight hours was because of little J's interrupting assistance, I had to measure from the Conquest to the end of Henry VI, three times over...” [Kaplan 252].

July 20 Friday – In Elmira, Sam wrote to Joe Twichell, telling more about the pegs-in-the-driveway memory game. Twichell indiscreetly allowed the letter to appear in the Hartford Courant for July 24, much to Sam's consternation. To compound the error, the letter was printed with two errors [MTNJ 3: 28n47]. It also ran in the July 26 edition of the New York Times, p 3.

Sam also wrote to Howells, who wrote July 10 en route home on the SS Parisian, and was now back in Boston. Howells' letter was mostly an account of a visit in Paris with the Gerhardts (see MTHL 1: 433-4).

We are desperately glad you & your gang are home again—may you never travel again, till you go aloft or alow. Charley Clark has gone to the other side for a run—will be back in August. He had been sick, & needed the trip very much.

Mrs. Clemens had a lot & wasting spell of sickness last spring, & is still proportioned like the tongs, but she is pulling up, now, & by & by will get some cushions on her, I reckon. I hope so, anyway—it's been like sleeping with a bed full of baskets. The children are booming, & my health is ridiculous, it's so robust, notwithstanding the newspaper misreports.

I haven't piled up MS so in years as I have done since we came here to the farm three weeks & a half ago. Why, it's like old times, to step straight into the study, damp from the breakfast table, & sail right in & sail right on, the whole day long, without thought of running short of stuff or words. I wrote 4000 words to-day & I touch 3000 & upwards pretty often, & don't fall below 2600 on any working day. And when I get fagged out, I lie abed a couple of days & read & smoke, & then go it again for 6 or 7 days. I have finished one small book [probably “1002^d Arabian Night” which Howells didn't care for] & am away along in a big one [HF] that I half-finished two or three years ago. I expect to complete it in a month or six weeks or two months more. It's a kind of companion to Tom Sawyer [MTHL 1: 435].

Sam also related the creation of the memory game with the driveway pegs. The family planned to stay in Elmira “till Sept. 10; then maybe a week at Indian Neck [near Branford, Conn.] for some sea air. Then home.”

A fragment of a letter exists that Sam sent about this date to the Gerhardts:

“Jean is just over a solid attack of diptheria, & is all right again. Mrs. Clemens is fleshing up steadily—is as fat as the tongs, now” [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam & Livy: “We two are chuck full of work. I feel as though I must carry out some of my schemes this summer” [MTP]. Note: because of Sam & Livy’s financial support, the Gerhardts wrote regularly.

July 21 Saturday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Orion, Mollie and Jane Clemens, relating his current “booming” productivity at writing HF, and his new passion, the English history game, which began with pegs up the driveway in Elmira and was translated into an indoor board game:

Private.

DEAR MA & ORION & MOLLIE,—I don’t know that I have anything new to report, except that Livy is still gaining, & all the rest of us flourishing. I haven’t had such booming working-days for many years. I am piling up manuscript in a really astonishing way. I believe I shall complete, in two months, a book which I have been fooling over for 7 years. This summer it is no more trouble to me to write than it is to lie.

Day before yesterday I felt slightly warned to knock off work for one day. So I did it, & took the open air. Then I struck an idea for the instruction of the children, & went to work & carried it out. It took me all day. I measured off 817 feet of the road-way in our farm grounds, with a foot-rule, & then divided it up among the English reigns, from the Conqueror down to 1883, allowing one foot to the year. I whittled out a basket of little pegs & drove one in the ground at the beginning of each reign, & gave it that King’s name—thus:

& in bed, last night, I invented a way to play it indoors—in a far more voluminous way, as to multiplicity of dates & events—on a cribbage board.

Hello, supper’s ready./ Love to all. / Good bye./SAML [MTLP 434-5].

Paine adds:

“Orion Clemens would naturally get excited over the idea of the game and its commercial possibilities. Not more so than his brother, however, who presently employed him to arrange a quantity of historical data which the game was to teach. For a season, indeed, interest in the game became a sort of midsummer madness which pervaded the two households, at Keokuk and at Quarry Farm. Howells wrote his approval of the idea of “learning history by the running foot,” which was a pun, even if unintentional, for in its out-door form it was a game of speed as well as knowledge.”

William B. Franklin for Colt’s Mfg. wrote asking for a copy for Gen. Wilson of “Mark Twain’s book printed for private circulation. I understand that it is ‘rich racy & rare’”—Likely 1601 [MTP].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote having rec’d Sam’s reply. Whitford thought Sam would have to be examined in the Duncan suit about the 23rd of August [MTP].

July 22 Sunday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Mr. Krueger:

Dear Mr. Kreuger— / I enclose it; & if it ain’t the thing, give me the points & I’ll do it over again; for we want you to go Cornell, & hope you will. The Sages are there, temporarily—till they go to heaven where they belong—& there are other good & great folks there.

On or about this date Sam also sent a letter of Twichell’s to Jane, Orion and Mollie Clemens. Twichell had given up Sam’s letter about his driveway peg game to Charles Clark on the Courant, and Sam was in an unforgiving mood.

“I send this to beg that at least you folks will avoid this damned fool’s example. I shall never thoroughly like him again” [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote the letter that Sam wrote the above note on. “Your letter has just come and is most welcome for the good news it brings of our health...I’m going to let Charley print part of it,—that part about English History—and am going to do so before you will have time to prevent me; so don’t fret a minute” [MTP]. Note: This breach of privacy angered Sam.

July 23 Monday – In Elmira, Sam drafted a “confidential” reply to friend and journalist Noah Brooks’ June 19 letter. Brooks, of the New York Times, had been subpoenaed in the Duncan libel suit, and assumed that Sam would be anxious for the Times to win the suit. Sam’s reply may not have been sent, but revealed his defection to Duncan’s camp as the best defense of being named in the suit [MTNJ 3: 58n135].

July 24 Tuesday – The Hartford Courant ran an account of Sam’s history-memory game from information supplied by Twichell, much to Sam’s consternation. Howells noted the article in his letter of Aug. 12 [MTHL 1: 437 & n2].

Joe Twichell wrote a postcard: “The History Game makes a mighty nice little piece in this Morning’s Courant. But, some smarty in the office changed Richard Cromwell into Oliver and probably thinks he ought to be thanked for it—the ignoramous” [MTP].

George E. Waring per Virginia Waring, his wife wrote from Newport, R.I. explaining he’d been slow in answering because he’d been in Dubuque. Evidently Waring replied to Sam’s “programme” of camping out [MTP].

July 26 Thursday – Jean Clemens’ third birthday.

Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster in New York City. Sam asked him to run up to Elmira “about Monday or Monday night” and lend him his head “for a couple of hours” [MTBus 218]. It was only a ten-hour trip, after all. Sam wanted to discuss the new memory game as a commercial product, and get Webster to begin the marketing.

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote more details of the Duncan suit against the Times [MTP].

July 26 Thursday ca. – About this day in Elmira, Sam wrote a laundry list to Webster about the history game, dealings with Frank Bliss, and his having “telegraphed O. to cancel Cincin note” [MTP]. Note: “O” was likely Osgood.

July 28 Saturday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Hamlin Garland (1860-1940) novelist, poet, essayist and short story writer, best known for fiction dealing with Mid-Western farmers. Born in Wisconsin, Garland would move to Boston in 1884. Evidently he’d asked Sam for a free story.

“G’way, Leionidas! You ought to know better. I don’t give ‘em away, I sell ‘em. It’s my grub; it’s the only way I’ve got, to earn a dishonest living” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a two-liner to Kingsland Smith, of the St. Paul Roller Mill Co., asking where the July dividend was and if he’d sent it. Sam owned stock in the company [MTP].

July 31 Tuesday – Charles A. Dana wrote, “It is a shame that Krackowiser should bother you in such a case. He is a crank, however, and his function appears to be to bother somebody. I have known him these many years and have employed him sometimes as a reporter” [MTP]. Note: Dana of the NY Sun.

Charles Webster wrote, “I’ve had a smash up on the road yesterday, fortunately no one was hurt but we were going at full speed and six cars were thrown off by a misplaced switch....I go & take a weeks vacation. I have worked hard & need it, but I shall take but a week...” More about business matters: insurance and the history game [MTP].

August – Sometime during August, Sam wrote a one-liner from Elmira to Charles Webster about someone holding a fifth interest at thirty thousand dollars—“That’s a more valuable game than I realized,” he wrote [MTP]. (Unidentified game.)

Parson Adams wrote from Ft. Dodge, Iowa, enclosing a clipping from the Ft. Dodge Messenger, “A letter to Mark Twain” proposing to send him “a car load of Eureka Spring water” [MTP]. File note: “Evidently alludes to 1 Aug 83 to the Magnetic Rock Spring Company, published in the Colfax (Iowa) Clipper of 11 Aug 83”

August 1 Wednesday – Two days after Sam wanted Charles Webster to “run up” to Elmira, he wrote again to Webster.

The implements of the game, & way to play it—are the patentable features & the only patentable features, ain’t they?...So, just go ahead and take out patents, for US, Canada & England [MTBus 218-19].

Sam also wrote to Karl and Hattie Gerhardt, advising them to stay in Europe if possible, after they completed their studies there.

Then you can pick & choose for then you can make a living anywhere. And all that time, you are in an inspiring, life-giving art atmosphere—& that, in itself, is a continuous education; whereas the art atmosphere of America is thin, deteriorating & depressing, I should say. I imagine that it must be as dreary for an artist to live in America as it would be for a humorist to live in England [MTP].

Sam also wrote a spoof letter from Elmira to the Magnetic Rock Spring Co. quoting the many ailments the company’s advertising pamphlet claimed cures for. After asking that a barrel of the water be shipped to him, Sam continued,

Also, please instruct me as to dose—for adult. Also, what do you put with it? I mean, what do you put with it to divert your mind that you are taking medicine? Will it go with temperance beverages! I mean, soda water, lemonade, panada, milk, whisky, and such things. I am thus strict because I am a Grandson of Temperance, my father having been a Son of Temperance. Temperance is deeply imbedded in our family. It is for this reason that I ask, and repeat, will it go with temperance beverages?—will it go with the moistures I have mentioned? If with whisky, what portion of the water is best, combined with what disproportion of whisky?—for an adult, as remarked before. Yours, in alert expectancy. Mark Twain. P.S. The order is genuine, anyway. The rest of the screed—now that I come to read it over—appears to wander from the point, in places [MTP].

August 3 Friday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster about the history game. Never mind applying for a patent just yet, Sam advised. He’d written to Munn & Co., sending the $25 fee and asked them to search the records to see “whether my game-idea is old or new, patentable or unpatentable” [MTP].

August 4 Saturday – George E. Waring wrote from Wash. DC with plans to go to Elmira [MTP].

August 6 Monday – Webb T. Dart for Magnetic Rock Spring Co. wrote they were shipping this day a case of carbonized water, if drank cold would “certainly find relief from any disease” [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote a statement of expenses for July [MTP].

August 10 Friday – Charles Webster wrote about business matters: History game, insurance, Barton vineyard scheme (that Joe Goodman claimed a “put up job to make money” using the poorest land [MTP].

August 12 Sunday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam, advising he'd given a letter of introduction in order to "launch a lord" at Sam. The candidate was 30-year-old William Hillier Onslow, whom Howells had met on his homeward voyage, and who seemed "to know a lot of artists and literary men," and who expressed a liking for the works of Mark Twain. The Howellses had rented a house at 4 Louisburg Square in Boston, and extended an invitation to Sam and Livy to visit [MTHL 1: 436-7].

August 14 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Ellen C. Taft, wife of the family doctor, Cincinnatus Taft who had been ill.

To my poor mind the first of holy callings is the physician's; & he should walk before the Pope, & Cardinal, & all the priestly tribe, for he heals all that fall in his way, not merely the chance sufferer here & there who is willing to say, first, "Good Galilean, I subscribe to the conditions." And to my mind, first of all the good physicians is our good physician; & to him I & mine send homage & greeting...[MTP].

Mollie Clemens wrote to Sam & Livy about Ma's dementia [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Pathetic - Ma's visions"

August 16 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to his mother, Jane Clemens. He expected to be in Elmira until mid-September. Livy remained poorly and "improves so slowly." Rosina Hay, their German nursemaid had left their employ, replaced by a new girl who only spoke German:

Rosa went away to-day—to get married. She has been with us eleven years; & I believe this is the first time she has been away from us a day in that time. All the children are mourning for her—but poor Jean thinks she is coming back, & nobody undeceives her. Jean looks just like you, most of the time, & like me when the devil is in her. Also when she walks. She is a great old comfort & satisfaction. / I can't remember to drink the Rock Spring water, ma. They bring it to the room, mornings, but I forget to drink it [MTP]. Note: Rosina Hay married Horace K. Terwilliger in Elmira's Park Church on Sept. 4.

Sam also wrote from Hartford to Mollie Clemens after receiving news that his mother was acting somewhat senile and delusional.

It is distressing. It is as pathetic as it can be, the way Ma's infirmities affect her. May I never be old with ruined faculties!

I have written Ma, as you see. It will be many a long month, I fear, before Livy's health & the heavy requirements of her family & housekeeping will make it safe for her to add to her freightage of care. There has been no time since last spring when it would have done to invite Ma.

Sam also asked about some aspect of the game that Orion or Mollie was perfecting for him, relating to William the Conqueror [MTP; MTBus 223].

William Swinton wrote, clipping enclosed from the Pall Mall Gazette:

"Yet Mark Twain has shown, in parts of 'Tom Sawyer,' that he can construct a splendid sensational plot, and it is to be wished that he would 'cease his fuming' and develop his genius in this direction." [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Swinton starts a mag & wants story by M.T."

Charles Webster wrote about business matters: Sam's examination in the Duncan suit to be Aug. 22; Webster to be in Elmira on the 21st; Osgood and book agents [MTP].

August 18 Saturday – Sam and Livy spent the evening with Mrs. Langdon in celebration of her 73rd birthday the next day [Aug. 19 letter to Olivia Lewis Langdon, MTP].

August 19 Sunday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Olivia Lewis Langdon on her birthday, thanking her for the hospitality of the previous evening and for her gift, the rauchen-geschirr (ashtray?) [MTP].

George E. Waring wrote, “Swear at me, if you will. I deserve it. But I can’t help it.” He had to be in Buffalo and couldn’t leave before the next night. He had wanted to visit him in Elmira [MTP].

August 22 Wednesday – Sam appeared as a witness, ironically for Captain C.C. Duncan, in his $100,000 libel suit against the New York Times [MTNJ 3: 25n41].

Sam wrote from Elmira to Howells. Clemens had just completed perhaps the most productive period of his writing career. With HF drafted and “1002^d Arabian Night” completed, he wrote:

How odd it seems, to sit down to write a letter with the feeling that you’ve got time to do it. But I’m done work, for this season, & so have got time. I’ve done two seasons’ work in one, & haven’t anything left to do, now, but revise. I’ve written eight or nine hundred MS pages in such a brief space of time that I mustn’t name the number of days; I shouldn’t believe it myself, & (therefore) of course couldn’t expect you to. I used to restrict myself to 4 & 5 hours a day & 5 days in the week; but this time I’ve wrought from breakfast till 5.15 p.m. six days in the week; & once or twice I smouched a Sunday when the boss wasn’t looking. Nothing is half so good as literature hooked on Sunday on the sly [MTHL 1: 438].

It is instructive to note what a large number of projects Sam was involved with during 1883, everything from finishing his masterpiece, HF, along with perhaps one of his worst burlesques, “1002^d”, as well as a variety of business and investment schemes. He wrote: “I must speculate in something, such being my nature” [439].

Sam also telegraphed Charles D. Clarke, editor of the Bath (Maine) Independent. Evidently Duncan was after that paper as well.

“Clark Editor / Bath Maine / Your telegram much garbled in transmission. Did not say to Times Reporter any portion interview published. Have no copy. Suit pending against Times” [MTP]. Note: Sam also identified opposing lawyers and said he hadn’t been served.

Charles D. Clarke for Bath Independent (Maine) wrote asking if Sam could offer him hints in his own libel suit by Duncan [MTP]. Note: See Aug. 23 & 24 entries.

August 23 Thursday – From Sam’s notebook:

“I am told, Aug. 23, 9AM, that the Times lawyer proposed to Duncan that if he would let them off they would prove I said it all” [MTNJ 3: 24] Note: Evidently, the Times attempted to deflect blame to Sam. (See Aug. 22 entry.)

Sam’s article “Historical Peg Driving,” ran in Mastery—an Illustrated Weekly Magazine of Useful Pastimes for Young People, p. 248 [Budd’s list furnished by Thomas Tenney citing Baetzhold].

Charles D. Clarke telegraphed: “Grand jury just in reported no bill” [MTP].

August 24 Friday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster. Sam wanted Webster to “Pitch into Mills’s business & square it up.” He spoke highly of Mills, not identified further.

Sam also reported on Duncan’s lawsuits:

“I have a telegram from Bath, Maine,—the grand jury threw out the bill, to that editor’s vast comfort. Duncan went for a criminal indictment, in that case.”

Mark Twain gave his testimony at Elmira yesterday before a commission appointed to take evidence in the suit for libel brought by Captain C.C. Duncan against the New York Times. From the report forwarded by telegraph it appears that the distinguished humorist is disinclined to acknowledge a great many things attributed to him in the Times’ interview, which is the basis of the action. Captain Duncan seeks to ascertain whether the offensive passages truly represent what Twain said, or are the production of the reporter’s imagination. His refusal to confess the paternity of some first class examples of withering sarcasm and gall provoking vituperation cannot but cast a gloom over the large community of his admirers.

Jane Clemens wrote replying to Sam’s of Aug. 16, sorry that Livy had been “so sick” and confessing she also had been ill. “I would like to see Jean when she looks like me, but I can’t wish to see her when she looks like her father” [MTP].

Henry Heath, attorney, wrote from NYC to explain Capt. Duncan’s love of jokes but hatred of malicious attacks, and the distortions of the press on these matters [MTP].

August 27 Monday – Orion Clemens wrote a short note: “Just deposited William the Conqueror in the American Express Office Herr Bob Ogdon charged me 90 cents a page, and will allow me 30 cents a thousand for setting it up” [MTP].

August 28 Tuesday – Worden & Co. sent statement to July 31 and asked for $1,800 on margin call [MTP].

August 29 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Orion, complimenting on part of the board game he completed, probably the William the Conqueror segment Sam asked about in his Aug. 16 letter to Mollie Clemens.

“You can go on with other reigns, now, but you needn’t print any more till I tell you. Send the printing bill when you please” [MTP].

Return I. Holcombe wrote from Palmyra, Mo., trying to get something for the book he was writing— a good history of Marion County [MTP].

August 30 Thursday – William C. Hutchings wrote from Brooklyn, where he took his dying wife after doctors in Hartford recommended taking her home. He PS’d an enclosed clipping from the NY World, but it’s not in the file [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “The German Critic’s opinion”—may refer to the missing clipping contents.

William Swinton wrote from NYC, disappointed that since Sam’s reply was marked “Private” he couldn’t publish it, and asked again for a story [MTP].

August 31 Friday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, reporting that “Orion has done his work first rate” on the history board game. Sam diagrammed the game and detailed its layout, directing Charles and Annie to experiment with it [MTP].

September 1 Saturday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Andrew Chatto.

I’ve just finished writing a book; & modesty compels me to say it’s a rattling good one, too—“Adventures of Huckleberry Finn.” (Tom Sawyer’s comrade.)

Osgood & I leave for Canada the 26th of November, arriving in Montreal the same evening, where I shall remain a couple of weeks, on copyright bent [MTP].

Sam also wrote to James R. Osgood.

Welcome home, & drink hearty! ...

I've finished "1,002" (Arabian Nights Tale,) & likewise "The Adventures of Huck Finn;" had written 50,000 words on it before; & this summer it took 70,000 to complete it. We expect to spend Sept. 13, 14, & 15 at the Brunswick, New York—don't forget it if you are down [MTP] Note: "Finished" was not exactly true. Sam would spend another six months in Hartford revising the book, and would not let loose of it until mid-April, 1884 [Powers, MT A Life 477].

W.C. Bower wrote from Union Springs, Ala. A begging letter for funds to complete a half-finished church [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "A race of beggars / No Answer"

Dean Sage wrote investment advice and was "glad to see favorable notice given your last book" [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote about business matters: plates that Slote must have kept; Sam's testimony; cancellation of Forshee & Co. book agency [MTP].

September 3 Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, directing him to "mail the enclosed to the Altmans—that large dry goods concern on Sixth ave..." Sam didn't know the full name or address. [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote, "delighted" Sam was pleased with his history game research, glad that Livy was better and that Mollie suffered "pain relentlessly" [MTP].

William Swinton wrote from NYC, glad that Sam was coming and he could meet him face to face. He decried Sam putting "that story going into the fire!" and chastened him not to do that any more [MTP].

September 4 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Orion, enclosing a Aug. 29 request from Return I. Holcombe for information to compile a history of Marion County, Mo. The letter mentioned John Marshall Clemens' jury service that sent "three Illinois abolitionists" to the penitentiary for twelve years for stealing slaves (see Sept. 1838 entry). Sam wrote that Orion ought to answer the man as he was equipped for it [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Return I. Holcombe, explaining he didn't have the facts but that his brother did. Of his brother Sam said, "He had 22 years' acquaintanceship with my father, but my own knowledge of him amounted to little more than an introduction." Sam wanted to subscribe to Holcombe's book when it was completed [MTP].

September 4 Tuesday ca. – Sam wrote from Elmira to Melville E. Stone, founder of the Chicago Daily News. Sam was asked his opinion of the Arthur administration:

"I am but one in the 55,000,000; still, in the opinion of this one-fifty-five-millionth of the country's population, it would be hard indeed to better President Arthur's administration. But don't decide till you hear from the rest" [MTP].

September, a Thursday (6th, 13th, 20th or 27th) – Sam wrote from either Elmira or Hartford to Charles Webster.

The board is excellent, now.

As soon as shall seem wise, come up & we will continue with Bliss for the new book. We will keep pretty quiet about it for the present—Bliss will see the advantage of that, himself. We shall need almost all the time between now & Jan. 7 to print canvassing books, circulars, &c., & I'd like the canvassing to actually begin near that date, so that the book could issue May 25, or May 20 [MTBus 221-2].

Though Sam's focus had been on the English history board game, he was now moving toward the publishing of HF. Disappointed in Osgood's sales of LM, Sam considered returning to Frank Bliss for the book, but eventually self-published through Webster.

September 6 Thursday – Charles Webster wrote about business matters: Osgood's arrival Sept. 13; Douglas Brothers agency cancelled for putting books into the trade MTP].

September 8 Saturday – Joe Twichell wrote from Franconia, N.H., hoping Sam had cooled from his anger about Twichell publishing information about the history game. He described their vacation in N.H. [MTP].

September 9 Sunday – Sam wrote a one-liner from Elmira to Charles Webster: “Will see you at hotel Brunswick 9 or ½ past, a.m., Wednesday. SLC” [MTP]. Note: Evidently things were delayed a day.

September 12 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster:

“Dear Charley, We shall arrive, tired out, at hotel Brunswick 8.30 tomorrow evening.—Should like to see you five minutes that evening—not before 9, & not after 9.15. After which I will go to bed. Send up card & I will come down stairs. Yrs truly / S L C” [MTBus 219].

Sam inscribed a card to Miss Milly: “To Miss Milly—/ With the best wishes & kindest remembrances of / Truly Yours / S.L. Clemens / Mark Twain / Sept. 12/83” [MTP].

Charles A. Collin in Elmira, Langdon & Co. wrote another legal opinion, this time about the Clemens vs. Belford suit. Theodore Crane had acted as a go between, forwarding Sam's questions to Collin [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “A legal opinion upon a class of newspaper forgeries”

September 13 Thursday – The Clemens family's summer stay in Elmira came to an end, as did the most productive season in Sam's literary career. They traveled to Hartford by way of New York, stopping at the Brunswick Hotel on Fifth Avenue [MTBus 219; MTNJ 3: 27n46]. Sam's notebook contains a list entitled “People to see in N.Y.” and includes Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun; William Swinton, journalist and editor of Swinton's Story-Teller; Dean Sage (about the Oregon & Transcontinental stock he'd recommended that Sam bought on margin); Daniel Whitford of the New York law firm Alexander & Green; and Noah Brooks of the New York Times. These latter two individuals were key contacts in Duncan's lawsuit against the Times [MTNJ 3: 58&notes].

William H. Gillette wrote, “If Mallory calls or writes to you, stand on him. I am having no end of trouble—may have to go for him yet. As I had a specific contract—which he cannot evade—for payment of no. 2 Royalty” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Will not consider an proposition from Mallory till he satisfies Gillette”

September 14 or 15 Saturday – Given the number of people Sam needed to see in New York, the family may have stayed two nights in the city; or one, as was usual, before continuing to Hartford.

September 17 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Return I. Holcombe.

“I know of only one steel portrait. It is owned by the American Publishing Co....I enclose the only good photograph I can find” [MTP].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam offering critical advice of “1002^d Arabian Night” that it was second-rate, “and all the way it skirts a certain kind of fun which you can’t afford to indulge in” [MTHL 1: 442].

September 18 Tuesday – Edward Greey (1835-1888) wrote from NYC, appreciative that his “daughter received Sam’s amusing note, which she has placed among her treasures.” Greey sent a bottle of sake and some wine [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Author of a lot of Japanese books”; Also a dealer in Japanese art, and an unusual author who ended things with a bullet.

W. D. Howells wrote:

Osgood gave me your MS. [“1002d Arabian Night”] to read last night, and I understood from him that you wanted my opinion of it. The opening passages are the funniest you have ever done; but when I got into the story itself, it seemed to me that I was made a fellow-sufferer with the Sultan from Sheherazades’s prolixity. The effect was that of a play in which the audience is surprised along with the characters by some turn in the plot. I don’t mean to say that there were not extremely killing things in it; but on the whole it was not your best or your second-best; and all the way it skirts a certain kind of fun which you can’t afford to indulge in: it’s a little too broad, as well as exquisitely ludicrous, at times.

You’re such an impartial critic of your own work that I feel doubly brutal, and as if I were taking a mean advantage of your magnanimity when I fail to like something of yours. But I fail so seldom that I have some heart to forgive myself. At any rate I feel bound to say that I think this burlesque falls short of being amusing. Very likely, if you gave it to the public, it might be a great success; there is not telling how these things may go, and I am but one poor, fallible friend of yours [MTHL I: 441-2]. Note: see interesting notes in source. The effect of Howells’ and Livy’s Victorian sensibilities on Sam’s writing has been debated, whether for good or ill. Some critics say they toned down his muscular, Western-bred writing; others say they helped.

September 19 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to the Mallory brothers, George S. and Marshall H. Mallory.

“You have a contract with Mr. Will Gillette; & I am aware that you are trying (as usual with you) to sneak out of the performance of its conditions. I am personally interested in the matter; therefore I suggest to you couple of piety-mouthing, hypocritical thieves & liars that you change your customary policy this time” [MTP].

September 20 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells, inviting the Howellses to visit: “Right away—to-morrow, next day, any day you please” [MTHL 1: 443].

Edward Greey wrote another short note about Miss Barbara (daughter?) being concerned about his last letter to Clemens [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote about business matters, wanting to cheer Sam up by the news that one of his lady agents sold 22 books in NYC yesterday, which he thought pointed to a good sale in the fall [MTP].

September 21 Friday – Charles Webster wrote: suggested that Orion “get those 800 events together, 1 event for each year” in the history game [MTP].

September 22 Saturday – Sam wrote two letters from Hartford to Charles Webster. One was about the game under development, and a table (secretary) Charles had helped Livy buy that had not arrived, and an order for 300 envelopes with “return to SLC.” Samuel Webster writes that Livy and Charles shared a love of antiques and enjoyed shopping in New York antique shops and auctions [MTBus 221].

September 24 Monday – From Sam’s notebook: “Sept. 24, ’83, ordered Worden & co, 48 Wall st, to buy 100 Or Trans at 40.” Note: From MTNJ 3: 29n50:

“Around January 1883 Clemens bought on margin 200 shares of stock worth about fifteen thousand dollars in the Oregon & Transcontinental Company. In the next few months Clemens watched the stock go to a high of about ninety-eight dollars a share and then begin to drop. When Clemens bought another 100 shares in the railroad company, shortly after the date of this entry, he evidently expected the stock to rally, but it continued its disastrous decline and in May 1884 Clemens finally liquidated his 300 shares for twelve dollars a share.”

W. Wilkins Micawber, “nee Dewter Onerme” (sp?) wrote Sam what appears to be a crank letter from someone deep inside an insane asylum (name is a Dickens character). It was written from Forestville, Conn. and was nonsensical with Nasby-like spelling. Sam wrote on the envelope: “damfool” [MTP].

Return I. Holcombe wrote from Palmyra, Mo. thanking him for the photo, but wanting a plate and asking Sam to request one be sent from Am. Pub Co. [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “D—n this ever-lasting man”

September 28 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Orion. Sam had hired his brother to supply lists of dates for English kings for the memory board game.

My Dear Bro – Kings rec’d. Quite satisfactory. Send balance soon as you can.

O, yes!—go right along with the former labor the minute you get the skeletons done—but don’t print till I say.

The news from Ma is first rate. All well here & send love. Sam [MTP].

Charles H. Botsford for The Manhattan wrote asking writing for their Christmas issue [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Answered”

Charles A. Dana for the New York Sun wrote: “Many thanks for your valuable suggestion. We will try it on” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “I proposed that he publish the death-rate of the whole country over a week in the Sun”

September 29 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, directing him to “get that play out of your safe—‘Colonel Sellers as a Scientist’—& express it to me” [MTHL 1: 444]. Sam was now ready to respond to the Mallory brothers’ interest in the play.

September 30 Sunday – In Boston, ready to travel to Virginia to see his father, W.D. Howells wrote a short note to Sam, advising he wouldn’t be able to stop in Hartford on the way down, but hoped to stop on the way home [MTHL 1: 443].

October – “American Literary Portraits / Mark Twain” ran in the Oct. issue of The Ideal Monthly Magazine, p.8-10. Not everyone was enamored of Sam:

“To him there is nothing sacred....At times he is so coarse he is not fit for polite society...has nothing, absolutely nothing, to redeem his coarseness, his irreverence, his want of refinement” [Tenney, MTJ, Spring 2004 p4].

October 1 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Edward House. He complained that Twicheil’s publication of his letter:

“...broke up some quite extensive plans of mine, & squandered & rendered useless the material out of which I had meant to build an illustrated small book—but that was the smallest part of the plan which he ruined” [MTHL 1: 440n4].

October 3 or 4 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, sending new ideas to add to the history game and instructions for a new board—two boards with felt in between [MTBus 222].

October 4 Thursday – Sam, in Hartford, wrote congratulations to A.V.S. Anthony, Osgood's design manager, whose daughter was getting married. Sam sent his regrets at being unable to attend the ceremony [MTP].

Jane Clemens wrote of writing a letter the previous day she had to throw away as it was to the wrong folks. For Jane a rather long letter of all her goings on, including this: “There is an elm tree in Judge Mores yard, the limbs reach across our yard. I can reach them with my hands from my window up stairs. I pulled a leaf off one day. I told Orion to look & see what was in it. There was a nest something like a silkworm. The spider had a black head & large black eyes” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Ma’s strange spider”; File note: “see Orion to SLC 23 October 1883”

Worden & Co. Sent a statement of account through Sept. 30 [MTP].

October 6 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, reminding him to send the $80 secretary for Livy’s coming birthday [MTBus 222].

Sam wrote and signed a check to Fox & Co. for $121.47 [Heritage Bookshop Catalogue 130, p. 90 item 458].

Worden & Co. Wrote receipt of Sam’s $2,350 of Oct. 5 to the margin call [MTP].

October 8 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to the Miller & Bingham & Elder Manufacturing Co.

“I will explain that the shirt I wear is not a patented article, but I invented it myself, for the public benefit of lazy men. It & its collar open in the back, & the collar & the cuffs are not detachable. No buttons anywhere about it except a couple at the back of the neck. This saves much profanity” [MTP].

Arthur Collins wrote from Ottawa: “Alas! It cannot be, though I would of all things like to come & see you” [MTP].

October 9 Tuesday – Charles Webster wrote about a personal matter—a desk for Livy [MTP].

October 10 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster. Sam had received and approved of game details Webster suggested. Sam wrote to go ahead and have the game put in type. Orion’s follow through upset Sam.

“—and mind, don’t send me first-proof; & don’t send me first revise, either. Send me the second-revise....Save me what profanity you can. Orion’s MS is infernal....Make a new board, Charley, with all improvements to date, & send it to me” [MTBus 222].

October 12 Friday – In Boston, William Dean Howells wrote a short note to Sam, advising,

“As soon as I mentioned our plan for a play, Mrs. Howells nobly declared that she would do anything for money, and that I might go to you when I liked” [MTHL 1: 444].

October 13 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster. He wrote more on the progress of the history board game, and advised that “Livy’s little table which you & she bought has not arrived yet, & is a week overdue.” He also wanted more envelopes with “return to SLC” printed on them [MTP].

October 14 Sunday – Paine relates an 1883 meeting at Sam’s home with Protap Chunder Mozoomdar, brought to meet Mark Twain by Rev. Dr. Edwin P. Parker [MTB 758-9]. Mozoomdar, “a Hindoo Christian prelate of high rank,” spoke at the Congregational Church in Hartford on this day, and in his book Sketches of a Tour Round the World (1884), Mozoomdar puts the date of an invite to Clemens’ neighbor, Harriet Beecher Stowe, after his service. Since Stowe was Sam’s next door neighbor, the meeting Paine writes of is likely this day.

Jane Clemens and Mollie Clemens wrote to Sam & family. At the end of Jane’s note, more about the strange spiders, Mollie wrote that Ma had “caught cold the other day and suffered severely with her neck, but is getting over it” [MTP].

October 15 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster. Orion’s “skeletons” for the board game had arrived, though he’d been sick. He sent them on to Webster. Sam noted a check received from American Publishing Co. and that they’d “sold as many old books in the last 3 months as Osgood has new ones.” Also, the secretary for Livy had arrived [MTBus 223].

Sam also wrote to Howells, who wrote Oct. 12 that he could come to Hartford in “about ten days” to collaborate on “Colonel Sellers as a Scientist” play. Elinor Howells would come a bit later [MTHL 1: 444].

My Dear Howells —

Your letter must have reached here Saturday, but I didn’t run across it till this minute—it lay under the newspaper mail.

Good—then I will expect you at the time specified, & Mrs. Howells at the time which she has selected; & ye will both be welcome.

As to the apportionment of spoil, it would in most any play but this, be half & half, naturally & of course; but in this case I will smouch two-thirds if the reasons & arguments which I shall lay before you shall convince & wholly satisfy you; but if they shouldn’t, the apportionment will then be equal division of the swag, & no cussing.... Ys Ever Mark [444-5].

Sam felt he deserved a larger share of the royalties for having creating the Sellers character. Howells was negotiating with the Mallory brothers for production of the play, and had recently returned from a visit with his father, who had moved to Virginia. Most often they dealt with Marshall Mallory.

Richard Watson Gilder wrote: “the Century thinks it about time that you should contribute something to its classic pages.” He suggested a piece of an old fool arguing against int’l copyright [MTP].

Worden & Co. (telegram): “Please remit us fifteen hundred dollars O’ T closed forty two shall we buy one hundred at forty as ordered” [MTP]. Note: Oregon Transcontinental.

October, second half – Sam may have spent some time in New York, where the Thatcher, Primrose and West’s Minstrels performed through Nov. 3 or 4 [N.Y. Times, Oct. 30, 1883 p.5]. Sam copied the words to “There is a happy land” in his notebook and in autobiographical dictation of Nov. 30 1906 recalled,

“I heard Billy Rice sing it in the negro minstrel show, and I brought it home and sang it—with great spirit—for the elevation of the household. The children admired it to the limit, and made me sing it with burdensome frequency. To their minds it was superior to the Battle Hymn of the Republic” [Gribben 794].

Note: Billy Rice played with West’s Minstrels in New York City in Feb. and Oct. of 1883. Sam did not go to New York in Feb. He may have caught the minstrel show in another city at another time.

October 16 Tuesday ca. – Sam typed a letter in Hartford to Howells:

"TWICHELL AND I WENT DOWN TO NEW BRITAIN, BUT FOUND NOBODY DOWN THERE IN THE AGRICULTURAL MANUFACTURING BUSINESS. HOWEVER, THEY TOLD ME WHITHER TO GO..." [MTP]. Sam set Webster on the task, whatever it was.

October 17 Wednesday – Howells responded to Sam's Oct. 15 letter, agreeing that Sam's terms were "good and just." He added that Colonel Sellers had "a great play in him yet" [MTHL 1: 446].

Worden & Co. Receipted Sam for $1,500 sent Oct. 15 and a memo of 100 shs O.T. at 40 [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Sent $3000, which protects the 300 shs till it falls to 30"; Worden's Oct. 18 references Sam's Oct. 17, so this was sent this day."

October 17–November 8 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster.

"Charley, your proof-reader is an idiot; & not only an idiot, but blind; & not only blind but partly dead" [MTP]. Note: on the other side of the note, a line that compositor Hoefler isn't a compositor but a "3-weeks apprentice."

October 18 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster. He thought the game board was "excellent" and suggested "one possible improvement" dealing with the dates of several reigns. He directed a "few copies" to be printed, "25 is plenty—& keep several for you & Annie to experiment with." Sam was waiting for the right timing to "contract with Bliss for the new book" [MTP].

Hubbard & Farmer bankers & brokers wrote advise of stock purchased totaling $28,050 [MTP].

Worden & Co. Wrote receipting $3,000 from Sam's Oct. 17 [MTP].

October 19 Friday – Sam wrote to Worden & Co., stockbrokers; note not extant; referred to in Oct. 23.

October 23 Tuesday – Chatto & Windus wrote to Clemens with statement of account and book sales, royalties of £904.7.11 [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote all about the history game research he was working on [MTP].

 Worden & Co. wrote receipt of Sam's Oct. 19 order to buy 100 shs O.T. @ 25 [MTP].

October 25 Thursday – Charles Webster wrote about business matters: canvassing of books; business now good; suggestion to leave 14,000 books bound for the trade [MTP].

October 28 Sunday – Sam wrote Orion, letter not extant but referred to in Orion's Nov. 1 reply.

Nine year old Florence Dean Cope (1873-1951) wrote from Columbus, Ohio to praise TS and ask if Twain would "write a book of his manhood....All of our family would enjoy a book of Tom's manhood and whether he turned out robber or not at all" and "I think Tom is just perfect. I am getting very tired so I must stop here" [MTP]. Note: Florence's mother, Ione Cope (1845-1923) was first cousin to Wm. Dean Howells. Her father, Alexis Cope (1841-1918) was a successful attorney.

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Clemens & Livy about a sketch they'd sent that was returned, and hopes they weren't discouraged with Karl's "slow progress" [MTP].

October 29 Monday – Bissell & Co. per George H. Burt wrote they'd received Sam's acceptances made by Osgood & Co. for $20,000, and had credited his account for that amount [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "$20,000 acceptances"

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: Proof sheets on English History sent; negotiations for 10,000 LM with Watson Gill [MTP].

October 30 Tuesday – Charles Webster wrote about business matters: contract signed with Watson Gill "to act as my agent in the trade" [MTP].

October 31 Wednesday – Hubbard & Farmer bankers & brokers sent a statement with Nov. 1 balance of $22,949.11 [MTP].

November 1 Thursday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam of his plans to come for a visit on Nov. 3 [MTHL 1: 447].

Orion Clemens wrote to Sam having rec'd his Oct. 28th. Ma went to a 90 year old's party and they were all well. He worked 4 hrs a day on the Kings [MTP].

Charles A. Dana for The New York Sun wrote to Clemens, unable to get the information of death rates of various prominent towns [MTP]. Note: Sam had suggested they publish these figures.

November 2 Friday – Margaret Meestenmacher wrote from St. Louis to ask Sam & Livy for funds to help her church. Evidently she'd known the Langdons [MTP].

November 3 Saturday – After receiving Howells' Nov. 1 letter about coming to Hartford, Sam telegraphed from Hartford to Howells for him to "Come Wednesday" [MTHL 1: 447]. Sam expected "an important telegram" the same day (from Howells? Or, possibly from Raymond or Webster) but it did not arrive (see Nov. 7 entry).

Orion wrote: "Ma is well. She says tell you that she says you must write properly to these people; you are inclined to be too abrupt; be civil to them." He was sorry Sam was not well [MTP]. Note: these people were relatives.

November 4 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells, further explaining his telegram of the previous day:

"...Mrs. Clemens has a menagerie on her hands from now till Tuesday Evening—the preparation & achievement of a big lunch party of old ladies to meet her mother."

Sam had not been able to come to terms with John T. Raymond for a part in the new play, and had instructed Webster to find another actor. Sam had a plan up his sleeve [MTHL 1: 447-8]. He called again at the telegraph office expecting a telegram, but it was not there (see Nov. 7 entry).

Orion Clemens finished Nov. 3 letter [MTP].

November 5 Monday – The missing telegram from Howells turned up at the telegraph office (see Nov. 7 entry).

Kate D. Barstow wrote what is now a letter too faded to read. Likely another request for funds for activities beyond her medical training, because Sam wrote on the env., "No" [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote more about the history research; he added, “Ma had a little spell Saturday, but is well now. Mollie is not very well” [MTP]. Note: inevitably Orion included news of health and weather and his schemes.

November 7 Wednesday – This article ran in the Hartford Times (and Nov. 9 in the New York Times, p4, below), documenting the missing telegram:

THE TELEGRAM THAT WAS “MISLAID”

From the Hartford (Conn.) Times, Nov. 7

On Saturday last Mr. S.L. Clemens (Mark Twain) expected an important telegram. He called for it several times at the telegraph office on Saturday and also on Sunday, but received the answer each time that it had not come. On Monday morning the missing dispatch turned up, it having been mislaid in the office on Saturday. Mr. Clemens now contemplates a suit for damages against the telegraph company.

Charles Webster wrote about business matters: proofs sent of English History & other game board items with costs [MTP].

November 7 through 11 Sunday – Howells arrived in Hartford and collaborated with Sam on the new Sellers play. Howells telegraphed his father, William Cooper Howells, on Nov. 11: “I have been here some days with Clemens, who is expecting his nephew to report upon the scissors business very shortly...I think Clemens means to take hold of it...” [MTHL 7: 448n1]. Note: William Cooper had invented a new type of grape shears. Sam eventually guaranteed him against any loss in the manufacturing and selling of the product. Webster contracted with a Newark toolmaker who produced sixty dozen pairs of the shears. Webster advertised them for a period of time, but this was likely another losing investment for Sam [438n3].

November 8 Thursday – Francis Hopkinson Smith for Pedestal Fund Exhibition wrote about his plan to read “that letter” to a group, “if it don’t send every mother’s son of them home with a sore back, I’m a Dutchman” [MTP].

November 11 Sunday – The New York Times ran this article:

MARK TWAIN ON COPYRIGHT LAW.

The editor of the Boston Musical Record a few weeks ago wrote Mr. Samuel L. Clemens for his opinion on an international copyright law, and this was the reply: “I am 47 years old, and therefore shall not live long enough to see international copyright established; neither will my children live long enough; yet, for the sake of my (possible) remote descendants, I feel a languid interest in the subject. Yes—to answer your question squarely—I am in favor of an international copyright law. So was my great grandfather—it was in 1847 that he made his struggle in this great work—and it is my hope and prayer that as long as my stock shall last the transmitted voice of that old man will still go ringing down the centuries, stirring the international heart in the interest of the eternal cause for which he struggled and died. I favor the treaty which was proposed four or five years ago and is still being considered by our State department. I also favor engraving it on brass. It is on paper now. There is no lasting quality about paper” [Fatout, MT Speaks 133].

Joe Twichell wrote: “The best I can do about West Point is to say that I will go with you to be there Dec. 8th, if I can” [MTP].

November 12 Monday – In Hartford, Sam typed a note to Andrew Chatto, acknowledging receipt of “904 pounds, 7 shillings and 11 pence.” He expected to talk contracts on the new book (HF?) in about a month, and accepted their word on pricing their edition of TA [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Edward “Ned” House, saying the note was a PS to his last letter, that the “Pastilles” he’d had sent from Japan weren’t good until they discovered, after looking the word up in the dictionary, that when they “exploited them on a shovel of hot coals,” they experienced “vastly more satisfactory results” [MTP].

November 13 Tuesday – Western Union per W.C. Hamstone, J.H. Lounsbury wrote in response to a report in the NY Times that a telegram had been lost/delayed. He claimed from reports he’d rec’d that “our service was properly performed,” the telegram phoned to his residence at about 4 pm Nov. 3, the date it was sent from Boston by Howells [MTP].

November 14 Wednesday – In the evening Sam and Livy and Howells attended a Hartford reception for Matthew Arnold (1822-1888), who was to lecture in Hartford the next day. Arnold had lectured in Boston on Nov. 7 and would repeat the talk there on Nov. 17. The reception was given by the David Clarks [MTHL 1: 449n2]. Howells introduced Sam to Arnold and they had a conversation [Powers, MT A Life 480]. Camfield writes Arnold was “best known and reviled in the nineteenth-century United States for his stinging criticism of American culture” [36].

Sam wrote from Hartford to an unidentified person that he’d had “nothing to do with getting that item into print,” so was “in no way responsible for its statements....” Still, Sam thought “the vital fact which they seem to convey is true.” The rest of the letter is lost [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Clemens & Livy with the news he’d be sending a bust he’d made with Dr. Beard of the American Chapel, who was going to America and probably to Hartford [MTP].

November 15 Thursday – In the afternoon, the Clemenses held a tea for Matthew Arnold in their Hartford home [LeMaster 36]. Arnold gave his “Numbers” lecture after the tea. He also visited the Clemens home in the evening. Sam did not disclose to Howells what the two talked about [Powers, MT A Life 480]. From Twichell’s journal:

H.[armony] & I went to M.T’s in the P.M. to meet Matthew Arnold, his wife and daughter, at tea,—a great pleasure. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold read for me a before illegible note of Dean Stanley’s which Dr. Allen gave me in London last year. The Arnolds, all three, made a most favorable impression of themselves socially. Mr. Arnold, in particular, was a gentler, more sympathetic person than his writings would lead some people to expect [Yale, copy at MTP].

George W. Cable wrote to Clemens, wanting “to stop in Hartford Tuesday for a day & night to see you & yours & the Warners, et als. Can I do it?” He was to read in Springfield the next day [MTP].

November 16–17 Saturday – Sam, Livy and William Dean Howells went to Boston sometime during this period. Matthew Arnold lectured there on Nov. 17 [MTHL 1: 449n2].

November 17 Saturday – A pink 3x5 receipt to Sam, printed “Stock Account” for a check of $5,000 is in the 1883 MTP financial file.

William Dean Howells wrote: “When I supposed you were coming to us I engaged to take you out to Cambridge this (Saturday) evening to see my play at a friend’s done by children. If you can go, come to 4 Louisburg Square by a quarter to eight, and let me know, anyway”[MTP]. (not in MTHL)

November 18 Sunday – Sam was in Boston and accompanied the Howellses in a social call upon the Aldriches Sam returned to Hartford directly from the Aldriches, after the Howellses left. Howells wrote him on Nov. 19 about being “half dead ...from eating & laughing yesterday” [MTHL 1: 448, 450n3].

Edwin Booth, Matthew Arnold, Charles Dudley Warner, and Oliver Wendell Holmes filled out the lunch party at the Aldriches. Booth wrote that day to William Bispham that “the feast was royal...I both listened and ate my fill” [Edwin Booth: Recollections by His Daughter, Edwina (1894)]. Thanks to JoDee Benussi.

Western Union per J.H. Lounsbury wrote more about the “lost” telegram being sent by phone to a female voice at the Clemens residence [MTP]. Note: even then, telegrams were phoned if possible.

November 19 Monday – Back in Hartford, Sam telegraphed Howells. He and Livy repeated an invitation for the Howellses to visit. Sam had not received a letter from Howells written the same day expressing that he couldn’t return to Hartford for a solid week, but would come “two weeks from to-day” (Dec. 3) [MTHL I: 449-50].

“I have told thirty lies and am not out of the Woods yet; S L Clemens” [MTP].

In Boston, Howells wrote (typed) to Sam: he couldn’t see clear to come for at least two weeks to work on revisions of the Sellers as a Scientist play. He was “actually brain-weary,” and George W. Cable was coming to Boston to read on Nov. 26 and he felt he should be there; also Matthew Arnold [MTHL I: 448-9].

November 20 Tuesday – George W. Cable arrived for a visit. He went with the Clemenses and the Warners to a reception. Cable wrote his wife the next day that he’d “Talked my head off; but don’t worry, there wasn’t anything in it.” At the Clemens home, Cable read for “Mark T., his sweet wife, her mother, & Clara and her sister. They were pleased...” [Turner, MT & GWC 23].

Cable signed and dated a copy of his book for Clemens, The Grandissimes: A Story of Creole Life (1880) [Butterfield auction catalog, July 16, 1997, p.23 Item 2669].

In Boston, Howells wrote Sam that his telegram came just after posting his letter, and that Sam had forgotten to enclosed newspaper clippings mentioned in his last letter [MTHL I: 451].

November 21 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells.

“Good—& all right. Within an hour I shall be deep in an old piece of work which always interests me, any time of the year that I take it up. So I will go down into that, & not appear at the surface again till the Howellses arrive here the 3d of December” [MTHL I: 451].

Sam included more ideas on the Sellers as a Scientist play. He complimented Howells on the new typewriter he was using to write letters. He announced that George W. Cable was “stopping with us over night” and that he’d been training for public speaking and reading. The writing Sam referred to was possibly the Sandwich Islands story about Bill Ragsdale, a half-caste interpreter he had met on his Hawaii trip [MTHL I: 451-2]. Emerson writes Sam began the book in Jan. 1884; it “was to be a serious work” [160]. (See Jan. 30 to Fairbanks.)

Cable left for Springfield, Mass., where in the evening he gave a private reading to a group of about 20 ladies [Bickle 108]. Note: Cable then continued on to Boston where he was the guest of several gatherings and gave readings at Chickering Hall, which held, by his estimate, about 460 persons. In Boston, Cable met all the notables (see Bickle, p 110-111).

November 26 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, enclosing information he’d been sent about an investment. If it was “safe” he asked Webster to let him know [MTP].

November 27 Tuesday – Livy’s 38th birthday.

November 29 Thursday – Dora Knowlton “a stranger to you” and an actress, wrote from NYC to ask if he’d allow her to dramatize P&P [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Can’t / P&P”

November 30 Friday – Sam’s 48th birthday. He wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster. Sam and Howells had written a new play, American Claimant, and though Sam didn’t really want to hire John T. Raymond again, he realized the benefit of doing so. Yet, he did not fully trust Raymond.

Dear Charley—Now that you have made your opening, let Raymond do the rest. That is to say, you & Whitford sit still, & let R. come there—don’t you go to him....I wish to God he would not take it....Why do I offer him the piece at all? 1. For these reasons: He plays that character well; there are not thirty actors in the country who can do it better; & 2. He has a sort of sentimental right to be offered the piece—though no moral or legal or other kind of right...I decline to have any correspondence with R. myself, in any way [MTBns 228].

Hubbard & Farmer bankers & brokers sent a monthly statement [MTP].

December 1 Saturday ca. – About this day, Sam also wrote to the Bartholdi Pedestal Fund, a group raising money for the base of the Statue of Liberty [MTP]. The letter ran in the Dec. 3 edition of the New York Times (see Dec. 3 entry).

December 3 Monday – Howells wrote to explain his inability to leave for Hartford—his sister, Annie Howells Fr  chette was coming with her two little children. He offered a few more ideas for the Sellers play and expressed hope that Raymond would agree to play the part. He told of Cable’s lectures at Chickering Hall in Boston on Nov. 26 and 28 and holding a “blow out” for him [MTHL 1: 452-4].

December 4 Tuesday – Sam’s letter which argued for changing the under-construction Statue of Liberty into one for Adam ran on page 2 of the New York Times [Budd, “Collected” 1020].

MARK TWAIN AGGRIEVED.

WHY A STATUE OF LIBERTY WHEN WE HAVE ADAM!

Mark Twain was asked to contribute to the album of artists’ sketches and autograph letters, to be raffled for at the Bartholdi Pedestal Fund Art Loan Exhibition, and this is his response, which accompanied his contribution: You know my weakness for Adam, and you know how I have struggled to get him a monument and failed. Now, it seems to me, here is my chance.

What do we care for a statue of liberty when we’ve got the thing itself in its wildest sublimity? What you want of a monument is to keep you in mind of something you haven’t got—something you’ve lost. Very well; we haven’t lost liberty; we’ve lost Adam....what have we done for Adam? Nothing. What has Adam done for us? Everything. He gave us life, he gave us death, he gave us heaven, he gave us hell [MTNJ 3: 13].

Note: The article was in response to a call for letters and sketches by artists and writers to be raffled to raise money to build a pedestal for the statue.

Sam played a character from a Dickens novel scene, “Leo Hunter” at the Union for Home Work, Authors’ Carnival, Hartford. The Hartford Courant, for Dec. 5, 1883, p.2, ran an article titled “The Authors’ Carnival”:

The second event of the evening was the presentation on the large stage of a scene from Charles Dickens’ “Leo Hunter.” It introduced a number of clever ladies and gentlemen who not only acted their parts, but lent to it the dialogue. The principals, Miss Hamersley and Mr. Prentice, were roundly applauded, and when Mark Twain came on the stage as a character in the scene, plaudits rang from one end of the enormous hall to the other. This scene alone was enough to compensate one for the expense of the entire evening’s entertainment.

Charles Webster wrote about business matters: grape shears, an invention of Howells' father [MTP].

December 8 Saturday – Joe Goodman wrote Sam, praising LM. and offering other news:

I have not written you...since I received "Life on the Mississippi." It is one of the most thoroughly entertaining and satisfactory works you have ever published. I was undecided at first which portion suited me best, the older or newer; but a review of it determined I'm in favor of the latter. Those recollections and impressions upon revisiting your old house are inimitable. The revival of boyish emotions is one of your strongest suits. That is what makes "Tom Sawyer" so toothsome. Dickens is the only other writer that brings back our boyhood to us as naturally and vividly.

In one of your letters you [word torn away] John McCullough's visit to your house and of his delightful fine family. It is too bad that so good a fellow and so hearty a swearer should meet an early doom; but I am informed he is hopelessly afflicted with softening of the brain. Women, women, women [MTP].

Joe added a paragraph about Rollin Daggett, who was healthy and happy and married again, and with two literary projects, one a history of Hawaii. Even though Joe was "still frigging away at the vineyard," he was planning to return to "newspapering for a time" [MTP].

James R. Osgood wrote:

Mr. Webster has delivered me your message, which I must confess astonishes me, I cannot believe that on reflection you will confirm the attitude in which he represents you to stand at present. / We are deeply conscious of having done everything which anybody could have done for this book....If it is a failure it is not due to lack of intelligent, conscientious and energetic effort on our part [MTP]. Note: Sam was quite disappointed with book sales.

December 10 Monday – Chatto & Windus wrote thanking him for Osgood's memorandum on LM. Much of the letter is smeared and illegible [MTP].

December 13 Thursday – Karl Gerhardt wrote; only the envelope survives [MTP].

December 14 Friday – In Hartford, Sam inscribed 1601, Conversation As It Was By the Social Fireside in the Time of the Tudors to George Iles (1852-1942), American author and editor in Montreal. "Dear Iles— I beg a thousand pardons, but I had forgotten all about it. / . Truly Yours / S L C. / Dec 14/83" [MTP].

Livy invited the Aldriches and the Howellses for the weekend of Jan. 5 to meet some fifty of their Hartford friends and contacts [MTHL 2: 465n2].

December 15 Saturday – Worden & Co. wrote requesting $2,500 as "additional margin" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Sent $3000 Dec. 18"

M.U. wrote from Hartford urging Clemens "to turn away from your vanities, and seek with all earnestness the Lord God of Hosts" [MTP] Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Religious fanatic / Self-righteous Rot"

December 17 Monday – Sam took a train for Boston, where he spent a day or two with Howells [MTHL 1: 454n2]. In his Dec. 19 letter to Webster,

"I went to Boston, but I had no 'business' to talk, & didn't talk any" [MTB_{us} 229].

December 18 Tuesday – Clemens sent $3,000 to Worden & Co.; letter not extant; referenced in Dec. notes on Worden's letter.

December 19 Wednesday – Sam wrote two letters from Hartford to Charles Webster. The first enclosed $271 and asked him to go to George Jones (editor of the N.Y. Times) and ask for the same amount and tell him that it's an interview and that Sam wants to "build a magazine article & get that money back without any trouble." Samuel Webster calls this mystery "intriguing." Sam's second letter may explain:

"Dear Charley—It occurs to me that you could have got that information in 24 hours by paying the Sunday Mercury's dramatic Editor $10 to furnish it to you on a piece of paper. Do it, & let's hurry along. Yrs SLC"
[MTBus 239]

Sam wanted to know how many times John T. Raymond had performed in the play Colonel Sellers. Sam also disclosed he'd taken a social trip to Boston.

Sam also wrote to his mother, Jane Clemens, and to Orion and Mollie Clemens:

"We would like you to drink $10 worth of whisky apiece in honor of Christmas, & I enclose the money"
[MTP].

Sam also wrote to Jervis Langdon II (1875-1952) inscribing and sending a copy of Howard Pyle's 1883 The Merry Adventures of Robin Hood, etc. Sam wrote:

"I have always regretted that I did not belong to Robin Hood's gang" [Gribben 564].

Sam also wrote to Pamela and Samuel Moffett, wishing them a:

"Merry Xmas...love & no news—which, according to the proverb—is good news" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to an unidentified person:

"I am very sorry I cannot take a hand in trying to select the right & best motto, but I am much too pressed for time" [MTP].

In Boston, Howells sent Sam a postcard having seen William Warren (1812-1888), a celebrated comic actor. In light of John T. Raymond's refusals, Sam and Howells were searching for another actor to play Col. Sellers in their new play. Warren, Howells said, had only a "slight acquaintance" with William Jermyn Florence (1831-1891) another comedian who specialized in dialect impressions. Why not telegraph? Howells asked [MTHL I: 454].

Worden & Co. receipted Sam $3,000 sent Dec. 18 [MTP].

December 20 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster about a gift Livy was purchasing for her mother [MTBus 230].

Sam also wrote to Howells with the idea to write "a tragedy" together for the new Sellers play and enclosed a scene based on Thomas Carlyle's Oliver Cromwell's Letters and Speeches.

The enclosed is not fancy, it is history—except that the little girl was a passing stranger & not kin to any of the parties.

I read the incident in Carlyle's Cromwell a year ago & made a note in my notebook; stumbled on the note to-day, & wrote up the closing scene of a possible tragedy to see how it might work.

If we made this Colonel a grand fellow, & gave him a wife to suit—hey? It's right in the big historical times—war,—Cromwell in big, picturesque power, & all that. Come—let's do this tragedy, & do it well [MTHL 2: 455].

Sam also wrote to Laurence Hutton:

I enclose a small Xmas present ($15) for you. Spend it judiciously for whisky & in other pious ways, & always be thankful that you have friends about you like me, who will never see you come to want [MTN] 3: 41n89].

Charles Webster wrote about business matters : his long hours lately, Christmas gifts for Livy; expected information from the Sunday Mercury [MTP].

December 21 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to James R. Osgood, offering a rare apology for his remarks. Evidently, he had questioned Osgood's integrity. Powers points out that sales of LM “languished at 30,000 copies” [MT A Life, 469]. In a letter now lost, Sam accused Osgood of mismanaging the book. Osgood was “astonished” and defended himself; he'd written on Dec. 8 that if the sales were a failure, it was not due to “lack of intelligent, conscientious and energetic effort on our part” [470]. Sam then offered his apology:

No, I shall not do or wittingly say anything to interrupt our friendly relations. I am sorry I made that remark, since it hurts you; but it was not new matter—it had been conveyed, before, through Webster. And I said to Webster distinctly, “I will not have ill blood with Osgood, nor any but honest speech, plain but without bitterness—State my case,—leave the rest to Osgood and me” [MTLTP 164].

Sam recommended they get together and talk the matter out, that “writings do not successfully interpret the feeling of the writer” [165]. Sam was extremely disappointed and felt both P&P and LM had been publishing failures.

I am peculiarly situated. The Prince and Pauper and the Mississippi are the only books of mine which have ever failed. The first failure was not unbearable—but this second one is so nearly so that it is not a calming subject for me to talk upon...I have never for a moment doubted that you did the very best you knew how—it is impossible to doubt that—but there were things about the publishing of my books which you did not understand. You understand them now, but it is I who have paid the costs of the apprenticeship [MTLTP 164-5].

December 23 Sunday – Orion and Mollie Clemens wrote to Clemens & Livy: who was Ben? Christmas presents & wishes [MTP]. Note: “Ben” was a nickname for Clara.

December 24 Monday – Annie M. Barnes for Atlanta Acanthus wrote asking what he'd like to do for their juvenile publication enterprise [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Beggary”

December 25 Tuesday – Christmas – In Hartford, Sam, acting for Susy and Clara Clemens inscribed a book? to Margaret Warner [MTP].

Sam inscribed a copy of Howard Pyle's Yankee Doodle, An Old Friend in a New Dress (1881) to daughter Jean Clemens: “Merry Christmas / to the Only Jean / from Papa / 1884” [Gribben 565].

Charles Dudley Warner inscribed a copy of his book, A Roundabout Journey (1884) to Livy: “Mrs. Livy Clemens / With the affectionate regards/of Chas. Dudley Warner / Dec 25 1883” [Gribben 746].

December 26 Wednesday – Sam also telegraphed from Hartford to Charles Webster: “Get up here before new years any day will do” [MTP].

U.M. wrote (no further name given) [MTP].

December 27 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster.

Dear Charley—We will lie low until Raymond has played his new piece in New York, & if it is not a promising success, we will go for him again, with a modified proposition. Lawrence Barret[t] strongly urges this, & gives good reason for it.

Meantime, hurry up that Sunday Mercury business, as apart of the preparation. Livy was delighted with the andirons. Merry Xmas to you all. P.S. Return me the MS of the play of “Col. Sellers” if you have it. SLC [MTB_{us} 230].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam that he’d seen another actor for Colonel Sellers as a Scientist, well-known Henry E. Dixey (1859-1943). Did Sam wish Howells to See Dixey’s play? What had Sam learned from William Jermyn Florence? [MTHL 2: 459-60]. Note: Dixey, in the title role of Adonis, about a statue that came to life, became the top matinee idol of his time.

Charles Webster wrote about business matters: information they wanted from the Sunday Mercury of plays played by an unnamed actor; a bill in the Duncan suit matter; stock investments [MTP].

December 30 Sunday – Hubbard & Farmer bankers & brokers sent a statement with $18,144.61 balance [MTP].

December 31 Monday – Worden & Co. sent all 1882-83 monthly statements [MTP].

*Chasing after Stage Plays – Cable & Mumps – Lobbying for International Copyright Canvassing Huck – Duncan’s Lawsuit – April Fools! – Poor Doc Taft
Tuscaloosa Pirates – Rah for Cleveland!
Twins of Genius Hit the Road – The Children’s P&P Play*

1884 – An interesting inscription by Sam made sometime during the year, place unknown:

“Some people can smoke to excess. Let them beware. There are others who cannot smoke to excess because there isn’t time enough in a day which contains 24 hours” [MTP].

In 1884-5 Sam wrote a sketch unpublished until 2009: “Happy Memories of the Dental Chair” [Who Is Mark Twain? xxiv].

From Hartford, Sam replied to an unidentified man:

“Dear Sir: / In reply I am obliged to say that I have quitted the platform permanently. With thanks for the compliment of your invitation I am / Truly Yours / Mark Twain” [MTP].

Sam also wrote from an unknown place to another unidentified man:

“Just enclose this letter to him, with a line of your own, if you like. I don’t want any correspondence myself.
“Cable proposes to try the subscription method, & I have hogged him away from the A P Co, who applied to him. Bliss knows I choused him out of Cable. / SLC” [MTP].

Orion wrote from Keokuk on a Sunday in 1884: “I enclose MS. and samples of my work on the paper. / I presume reporting night meetings will fall regularly into my line of duty.” He added a few details on Monday, and Monday noon [MTP].

Henri (Willy) Gauthier-Villars published Mark Twain, the first book-length study of Mark Twain [Description of item for sale by Mac Donnell Rare Books 4/2/2010]. Note: see March 28 from Villars and Apr. 22 MT to Aldrich.

Knut Hamsun published “Mark Twain” in Ny Illustreret Tidende Christiana (translated in 2003): Tenney: “Finds America materialistic and unintellectual, the literature lacking richness or a national character. MT is a favorite with Hamsun, who likes the western view in RI; he preferred it to IA, ‘marred by ...their polemic, absurdly underdeveloped philosophy, and weak power of reflection.’ Hamsun heard MT on the platform: ‘Twain’s speeches are entertaining but have absolutely no content. You sit there in suspense, waiting for the introduction to end and the lecture to begin, until Twain suddenly makes his bow—and leaves. You look at the clock: an hour and twenty minutes. What can this mean? It means, my dear, that Mark Twain is a genuine public lecturer’ ” [Bibliography Number 6, Mark Twain Journal Spring/Fall 2012 50: 1 & 2, p.51]. Note: this reaction was undoubtedly based on the old assumption that a lecture was instructive, rather than entertaining.

January – As early as this month and as late as Dec. 1887, Sam inscribed the back side of his photograph to Mrs. Pemberton-Hinks: “Quarrels begun with roses breed no bloodshed! / Sincerely Yours / S. L. Clemens / Mark Twain / To / Mrs. Pemberton-Hinks. / Hartford, Saturday [illegible chars.] (It is a most damaged & piratical looking picture, & nothing can excuse it but the fact that it is the only one left on the place SLC)” [MTP].

Sam re-read “the second volume of Pepys” [Jan. 14 to House]. After immersing himself in Sandwich Islands material, He began a book about Bill Ragsdale, a half-caste interpreter who contracted leprosy and exiled himself to the leper colony on Molokai [Emerson 160].

January 2 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster. He wanted to nail down a producer and actor for the new play he'd written with Howells, "Colonel Sellers as a Scientist." He also had written a dramatization of The Adventures of Tom Sawyer he wished to have produced.

"If the book business interferes with the dramatic business, drop the former—for it doesn't pay salt; & I want the latter rushed. ...

"I have been talking with Barrett, & he thinks it will be a mistake on Raymond's part if he lets this play go to somebody else, & a mistake on my part at the same time."

Sam directed Webster to offer John T. Raymond license to act in the play for $400 per week; he also suggested Jimmy Lewis or Nat Goodwin if Raymond refused to pay that much. Note: in that day, actors preferred to license or pay for a play; they could then keep receipts over and above the amount paid, sometimes with additional royalties due.

"Now I want to come down & see somebody play, the minute you can name me a man" [MTBus 230-1].

Orion Clemens wrote about different folks, one of whom was "damned impudent." He PS'd: "Thank God you and Charlie keep sending the hundred dollars to me and the fifty to Ma. I hope the same does not inconvenience you or Livy." He continued to work on the history segments [MTP].

Herbert H. Winslow wrote from Keokuk asking for "a few lines" for a literary paper he planned to start [MTP].

January 3 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles R. Deacon, secretary of the Clover Club of Philadelphia. He had been invited to a dinner on Jan. 17, but "business & social complications" made him regretfully decline [MTP]. Note: The Clover Club was a dancing club formed in 1881. It was famous for its distinguished guests and for its humorous way of entertaining them.

January 4 Friday – Sam wrote a one-liner from Hartford to James N. Kimball, giving him "liberty to use that chapter about the Empress" [MTP]. Note: Could this have been the Mormon leader? Doubtful. The chapter about the Empress from A Tramp Abroad.

Charles Dudley Warner sent a large printed bill "Copyright" by George P. Lathrop. "How does this strike you?/ C.D.W." [MTP].

In the evening from 7 to 10, the Ladies of Benevolent Society of the Asylum Hill Congregational Church held a reception for Rev. and Mrs. Joseph Twichell. From Twichell's journal, it is obvious that the congregation gathered to help the Twichells out of a spot, perhaps financial, or personal:

"A charming time we had at this reception. Almost all our people came to greet us and we were filled with a new sense of the delightfulness of the pastoral relation, also of its sacredness and high privilege especially (i.e. as regards delightfulness) in such circumstances as ours" [Yale, copy at MTP].

January 5 Saturday – Charles Webster wrote to Sam on business: he hurried the Sunday Mercury people for information of plays played by an unnamed actor; enclosed check for $1,081.50 royalties from Am. Pub. Co. [MTP].

January 5 and 6 Sunday – The gathering of fifty or so of the Clemens' Hartford friends took place over this weekend, but the Howellses could not come due to their son John's scarlet fever [MTHL 2: 465n2].

January 7 Monday – Livy sent out invitations from her and Sam to John Day and Alice Hooker Day, requesting the pleasure of their: “...company to meet Mr. & Mrs. T.B. Aldrich on Wednesday evening, Jan 9th at 8 o’clock” [MTP].

Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells. His son, John Howells, had a touch of scarlet fever.

“The bare suggestion of scarlet fever in the family makes me shudder; I believe I would almost rather have Osgood publish a book for me” [MTHL 2: 460].

Sam was still trying to find a producer for their play, “Colonel Sellers as a Scientist.” He also had been working on a book about Bill Ragsdale, interpreter to the Hawaiian Parliament, who Sam had met on his 1866 trip to the islands. Sam decided later not to publish the book. Only a seventeen-page fragment of the book survives.

My billiard table is stacked up with books relating to the Sandwich Islands; the walls are upholstered with scraps of paper penciled with notes drawn from them. I have saturated myself with knowledge of that unimaginably beautiful land & that most strange & fascinating people. And I have begun a story. Its hidden motive will illustrate a but-little considered fact in human nature: that the religious folly you are born in you will die in...[460-1].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster.

“Am Pub check for $1081.32 received. I see they’ve sold 4,500 old books in the past 3 months. I wish to God Osgood could sell half as many new ones.

I suppose we shall find that Raymond has not lost his right to that old play” [MTB#s 232].

James Sutherland wrote from Montreal to Sam, advising he’d sent a souvenir from Montreal through Boston, from “the young fellow who had the honor –which he so much appreciated –of dining with you, in company of Mr. Geo Iles at the Windsor Hotel here in May last” [MTP]. Note: the souvenir is not identified, but was for Sam’s girls.

January 9 Wednesday – The Clemenses entertained the Aldriches in the evening. Livy sent out invitations a few days before (see Jan. 7 entry). The Aldriches stayed with Sam and Livy for a few days (see Jan. 14 to House) [MTP].

James B. Pond wrote after hearing “what the trouble was” on the “2d night in Louisville” and offered some sort of confusing explanation [MTP].

Howells wrote about plays and the improving condition of his son John [MTP]. (See Jan. 18 entry for reply.)

Charles Webster wrote some paragraphs about meeting with John T. Raymond on the proposed play arrangements; Howells’ grape shears invention; Bliss and old book royalties; Osgood’s mistakes & the need to hold the price of LM high; Fred Hall’s absence due to the death of his father [MTP].

January 11 Friday – Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam and Livy with news and clippings of the Manet Exposition. “All is not smooth sailing here for any art student” [MTP].

Charles Webster to Sam: “I send you the book you want by this days mail. I was unable to get you a bound copy so I send it in sheets” [MTP]. Note: book not specified.

January 12 Saturday – Charles Dudley Warner wrote to Sam [MTP].

January 14 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Edward House. Sam advised, there was “no course ...left you for Koto’s protection but the marriage,” given the “precarious” nature of House’s health. Evidently his “adopted” Japanese daughter was in a family way and he sought Sam’s advice. He also asked Sam to suggest reading material and Sam gave this summary of his current reading:

In English, the middle portion of the Bread Winners; all of Clarissa Harlowe; the closing chapters of Pamela; the third volume of Saint-Simon; the fourth volume of Evelyn; the second volume of Pepys; the second volume of The Autobiography of a Whore; the third volume of Geike’s Hours with the Bible; & in German, the second volume of Schiller (the poems, I mean), the third volume of the Thirty-Years’ War; & the concluding chapters of Das Geheimniss der Alten Mamsell; in French, the tenth volume of Saint-Simon, and the fifth volume of Casanova. There—if none of this happy variety strikes you, you must be dam hard to please. I’m not a good person to apply to, because I seldom or never read anything that is new; & never read anything through, be it new or old [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Joe Goodman (the letter has been lost) [MTP Goodman to Sam, Jan. 22, 1884].

James R. Osgood wrote to Sam: “Unless I am prevented by rheumatism (which at writing seems only too possible) I shall be at your house on Wednesday 16th inst. on arrival of the 9 a.m. train” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to an unidentified person:

“Stephen—nothing became of Stephen; at least nothing had yet become of him up to a recent date. Stephen still lives; & his other name is Strother Wiley P.O. address, St. Louis; & if you wish to be beguiled, you have a chance” [MTP]. (See Feb. 13, 1875 entry for more on Strother Nimrod Wiley.)

January 15 Tuesday – Sam wrote to Kingsland Smith, of St. Paul Roller Mill Co., Kingsland Smith, of St. Paul Roller Mill Co. letter not extant but referenced in Smith’s Feb. 23 reply.

January 16 Wednesday – Charles Webster wrote business: royalty check enclosed $773.20; letter from John T. Raymond asking him to call this afternoon [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Scrapbooks 6 mos ending 1883 — $773.”

January 17 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to James R. Osgood, still apologetic.

My Dear Osgood— / I have thought, and thought; and as a result, I wish to accept the kind offer which you made yesterday, if you are willing to let me. I hope you can and will stop on your way up. I am not well content with myself over yesterday’s talk, yet I do assure that I never meant to be unjust toward you in a single word or thought./ Truly Yours/ S.L. Clemens [MTLTP 166]. Note: It’s not clear what Osgood had offered, but note 1 of the cited source says it “probably involves the removal of JRO [Osgood] from the subscription selling” of Sam’s books. Sam probably owed money on the production costs of LM; Osgood may have offered settlement.

Sam also wrote a one-liner to Charles Webster that he’d received a “Slote check for $773...” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Sam of business: bindings ordered on LM and confusion surrounding a stopping of 10,000 books bound [MTP].

Worden & Co. wrote to Sam of a $2,000 margin call. O.T. had slid to 23 & ½ [MTP]. Note: he would finally sell out May 19 at $12; see entry.

January 18 Friday – Sam replied from Hartford to the Jan. 9 from Howells about writing plays. Henry Nash Smith observes that Howells became as stage-struck as Sam during this period, though he often insisted he preferred writing novels. Nash adds that Howells translated or adapted or wrote thirty-six dramas, including a musical comedy [MTHL 2: 463n2].

“Raymond still biting. Shall hear more, very soon.

Charley W. stupidly forgot I told him to contract for the scissors [grape shears that Howell’s father invented].

He will now attend to this” [MTHL 2: 464].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam about seeing Marshall Mallory, who lusted after the Sellers as Scientist play. Howells would not show him the play:

“He now wishes you to tell him simply your terms for either or both plays, and said it might be worth his while to try to meet them” [MTHL 2: 464-5].

James R. Osgood wrote to Sam, unable to get away until the next afternoon or to come to Hartford; Webster had gone to Cleveland [MTP].

January 19 Saturday – Phillip Shirley, a fellow passenger of Sam’s on his spring, 1868 return voyage to New York, submitted two of Sam’s poems to The Wasp, a short-lived San Francisco publication. The verses ran on this day [The Twainian, July-Aug. 1946, p.3-4]. Camfield lists these as “Ye Equinoctial Storm,” and “Tragic Tidings” [bibliog.].

Worden & Co. wrote to Sam. the $2,000 received [MTP].

January 20 Sunday – In Hartford, Sam replied to the Jan. 18 of Howells, of the Mallory brothers nearly begging for details about the Sellers play or the “romantic and picturesque play” (about Bill Ragsdale and leprosy). Howells wrote that Marshall Mallory wished Sam would “tell him simply your terms for either or both plays, and said it might be worth his while to try to meet them.” Sam responded that the Sellers play wasn’t a Madison Square piece.

“Let the Madison Square nibble—by the time they work themselves up to a fair rate of remuneration we can have a play ready for them” [MTHL 2: 465].

Sam also offered caution about Johnny Howells’ scarlet fever, and advised keeping Johnny in bed an extra six weeks. He reminded Howells of his man Patrick’s child and the loss of hearing possible from scarlet fever.

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster:

“You can come up here, Monday or Tuesday & make contract with Am Pub Co for Huck Finn, & then go on to Boston & reach an understanding about the N.Y. office. I shall put off the Library of Humor, & publish Finn first” [MTP]. Note: Of course, Sam would end up self-publishing Huckleberry Finn under Webster & Co.

Stephen C. Massett (“Jeems Pipes”) wrote to Sam: “I am coming next week—will you be in your Inn?” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “The old humbug”; playbill enclosed in file.

The Hartford Assessor’s Office wrote to Sam, only the top of the letter survives [MTP].

January 22 Tuesday – In California, Joe Goodman telegraphed, then wrote a long letter to Sam, pleading for a piece for his new publication, The San Franciscan.

Dear Mark— / Your disfavor of the 30th net[?] and 14th inst. Came today. It was the first setback to my hopes that I have encountered since our scheme was afoot. I had counted so confidently upon our catching the inspiration of our old Washoe days and coming to the fore. The slogan has raised the remnants of the old clan on this coast, and they are gathering enthusiastically. Daggett's first contribution came from the Hawaiian Islands today; Fitch responds from Arizona, and sends the watchword on to his wife at Denver; Goodwin hails from Salt Lake, Sam Davis from Carson, awhile Dan de Quille wafts us a greeting from the old home nest on the Comstock; —

the freemen;

You alone sink to the rear and the slaves!”

It mustn't be, Sam; we want no lost leader in arms; and such it would be if you fold yourself in silence. I don't care that your effort be super-excellent, or excellent, or even good; that rests between you and your God; but I do want your name to complete the goodly fellowship of the Table Round.

Joe also related that John McComb was the new warden of the State Prison at Folsom and passed on McComb's suggestion for topics for Sam:

He laughed in his old quiet, hearty way, and said: “Tell him to write the story of his fencing and boxing experiences at Chauvel's gymnasium in Virginia; or, if he like better, the history of his attempt to learn Spanish in this city.” I hadn't time to ask explanation of the second proposition; you may recall it, however. McCrellish, you know, is dead. Woodworth busted, and the Alta is now a Democratic railroad organ. Note: Woodworth was probably Joseph Woodworth, who led the rush into Washoe after the Comstock silver strike [Mack 22]. Frederick MacCrellish was a proprietor of the Alta in 1867 [MTL 1: 17n1].

Goodman was a fair writer in his day. Now excited and confident about the opportunities of a new newspaper he prophesied success in great style:

We shall hit square from the shoulder at everybody and every thing that deserves to be hit; and if we can only make it as attractive as it will be aggressive there will be no more question of its success than there would of that of a show comprising John L. Sullivan and the Jersey Lily [MTP].

Joe also inquired again after Clara Spaulding: “My heart was full fain for her long years after I last saw her...” and warned Sam about “the clutches of that succubus—Kitty Barstow,” who Joe called a “natural-born beggar.” Note: she begged Sam out of a few hundred.

January 24 Thursday – Edward L. Burlingame of Charles Scribner Co. wrote to ask Sam for Edward H. House's address in Japan [MTP].

January 27 Sunday – George W. Cable, visiting the Clemens home while on a reading tour, came down ill, probably with a case of the mumps, though Webster describes the illness as measles [234]. Kaplan describes it as a “fever and racking pains in his lower jaw” [254]. Sam hired a private nurse to care for his guest. The nurse and all three Clemens girls came down with the mumps [254]. Cable was nursed back to health but would be laid up at Sam's until Feb. 15, preventing Sam from getting together with Howells to collaborate on plays [MTNJ 3: 47n107].

January 28 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, again about the proposed play, The Adventures of Tom Sawyer. Webster was trying to find an actor to play the role of Tom, and Sam had definite (and rather inflexible) ideas about the money angles.

“No, the actor must play Tom Sawyer till it is down to where it pays him only an average of $300 or $400 a month clear & above expenses, for a whole season. It's important” [MTBus 233].

Sam also telegraphed James B. Pond three times about Cable being sick and unable to give a reading [MTP]. Cable wrote his wife that it was just “little attack of neuralgia in that part of my face I make my living by, in short, my lower jaw—the part that wags, and the doctor, in order to make short work of it, has ordered me to keep my bed for twenty-four hours” [Turner, MT & GWC 25].

January 29 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to John Chalmers Blair (1848-1910?), of Huntingdon, Penn. “Your packets are an unspeakable convenience. They make authorship a pastime.” [MTP]. Note: In 1879 Blair started a tablet factory, which grew to a worldwide business, so Sam’s compliment probably had to do with writing tablets. Blair’s wife would name a hospital after him in 1911, which still operates.

Sam also sent a note to Charles Webster, asking him to search for a “small 31-page pamphlet” by Samuel Watson Royston, titled, The Enemy Conquered, a Love Triumphant [MTP]. Note: See Apr. 22, 1884 entry for Twichell’s surprise on this publication.

Cable was still suffering what he thought was “neuralgia of the jaw,” and wrote his wife that he hoped he’d be well enough to “be on the platform tomorrow night” [Turner, MT & GWC 26].

Julian Magnus wrote from NYC to ask about dramatization rights to TS [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the note: “Mental Telegraphy.” And “I was finishing the fourth & last act of my drama of Tom Sawyer yesterday, Jan. 29, while he was writing this letter. / SLC”

January 30 Wednesday – Sam telegraphed from Hartford to Louise Cable: “Your husband will be out of bed by tomorrow S.L. Clemens” [Turner, MT & GWC 28].

He also telegraphed James B. Pond twice in Cable’s behalf that he would be unable to read the following night [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mary Mason Fairbanks.

“Only a line, to say how glad I am, for dear Mollie’s sake—yes, & for yours; for you can’t be as indifferent to the thing as you seem. That’s all—I shall be cool & distant till you stop this dam nonsense of shirking Hartford every 3 months & then rushing home to apologize for it.”

Sam mentioned that Cable “has been sick in the house several days”; He answered Mary’s question about the Bill Ragsdale, Sandwich Island novel with:

“The novel? Yes, it’s serious; the scene is laid in the Sandwich Islands 65 years ago [before missionaries]; that is, the first part—second part is a number of years later” [MTP]. Note: Emerson reports that “Very little survives of what he wrote that January, only a few pages of description, although he had referred to it as finished. Nothing more was said about the manuscript” [160].

Jeannette L. Gilder of The Critic wrote to ask Sam’s opinion whether he believed in “cash down” or a % from Publishers to Authors for their books. The letter was a pre-printed form with name & signature added [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “D—d impudence”

January 31 Thursday – Sam continued to entertain George W. Cable, down with a case of the mumps, and recovering slowly. Drugged with quinine, Cable had to dictate letters to his wife through either Livy or Lilly Warner. Cable told of enjoying Sam’s company and the:

“...funny stories he tells the little Jean. Jean has a magnificent mental digestion, she must have a tiger in every story; and no tiger seems to her to be really worth the money unless he’s in a jungle” [Turner, MT & GWC 28].

Worden & Co. sent a statement [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “$4000 short”

February 1 Friday – Sam took Livy to a play, Robert M. Bird’s The Gladiator in Robert’s Opera House in Hartford. Marshall Mallory pestered Sam about producing a play, but Sam put him off.

Livy wrote from Hartford to Louise Cable about her husband’s condition.

February 2 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to William Dean Howells. George W. Cable was at Sam’s house and down with the mumps. Sam expected Cable to get well in a “couple of weeks.” He related Mallory’s contact the night before at the play. Before Sam would make a decision about doing business with the Mallory brothers on the new Sellers play, he needed:

“...to see Mallory’s proposed actor play before talking any business about the farce,—so there is no sort of use in reading the MS to Mallory yet” [MTHL 2: 467].

Sam also telegraphed James B. Pond again in Cable’s behalf that he’d had “a bad night great suffering in his head the highest fever he has had yet and is weak this morning” [MTP].

Charles Warner came and Sam discussed “the copyright plan of campaign,” about HF, no doubt [Feb. 4 to Hutton, MTP].

Elton Fulmer for Nebraska State University wrote to ask questions for an oration he was to deliver on “The American Humorists and their productions” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “A curiosity of cheek”

Edgar W. Howe for Atchison (Kansas) Globe wrote to send his book, mentioned next in Sam’s note, hoping that Sam would read it, being a Mo. story [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Answered / Howe, author of ‘The Story of a Country Town.’” Clemens and Howells both would offer a testimonial for this book.

February 3 Sunday – Sam wrote a one liner to Charles Webster, asking for his pen or “a carefully-selected one like it” [MTB_{us} 233].

Sam also wrote a note to James B. Pond in Cable’s behalf, following up on his telegram of Feb. 2:

“He is in no danger, but I do not believe he will be out of bed for several weeks yet. I am sure he will not stand on a platform again this season” [MTP].

Sam went to the Asylum Hill Congregational Church:

“I attended divine service...to leg for Cable; & carried the copyright matter along in my mind, so as to have something to keep my spiritual bowels open in the event of a constipated discourse. By chance, Mr. Twichell’s text was the simple & beautiful words with which the Sermon on the Mount begins: ‘Gentlemen, business is business’ ” [Feb. 4 letter to Laurence Hutton, MTP].

Sam claimed Joe’s sermon was his inspiration—that what was needed in Washington was a “permanent committee of one or two faithful hard workers” who would lobby until they had the votes for a forceful copyright law.

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam and Livy with more of their goings on. Karl was now cutting marble [MTP].

February 4 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Laurence Hutton about a campaign for a new copyright law he'd discussed with Warner on Feb. 2 and thought about since (see Feb. 3 entry). At the end of the letter, which was a plan to pass the Dorsheimer bill, Sam listed those he felt would contribute to his plan, including: John Hay at $100 a month, Clarence King, the Longfellow heirs, Doctor Holland's heirs and President Garfield's [MTP]. Note: Congressman Dorsheimer brought an international copyright bill in the House that failed to get a hearing. A similar bill, the Hawley bill was introduced in the Senate but also fell to the same fate. Neither bill made provision for printing foreign copyright books in the U.S. Paper-makers, type-founders, compositors, printers, binders, and a few publishers lobbied quietly against the bills.

Sam telegraphed James B. Pond that Cable was “very much better” [MTP].

Sam gave a reading of “Southern Literature” at the Hartford Monday Evening Club [Fatout, MT Speaking 656]. This was his eighth presentation to the Club since his election in 1873 [Monday Evening Club].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam, more about the Sellers-Raymond-Mallory brothers developments. He'd allowed Mallory to take the play to New York and get a final answer of its sale by Feb. 6 [MTHL 2: 467].

William Preston Harrison, age 14, wrote from Chicago to Clemens.

Dr. Sir, / I had just finished one of your stories and was thinking about it as I was walking down the street the other day.

All at once I was disturbed from my reverie by hearing a man say “that you deliberately murdered your grandmother in cold blood.” This I could not believe and though I am only a boy I knocked the man who thus accused you, down. Was I not right?

Please answer & tell me. / Yours respectfully / W.P. Harrison [MTP].

Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Too thin,” which reveals he doubted the veracity of this letter. Sometimes autograph and letter seekers pretended to be children in order to secure a valuable keepsake. William was the son of Chicago mayor Carter Harrison Sr. (1825-1893) who was later assassinated. Chicago hasn't changed much. William got out of Chicago in 1918 and became an art patron and museum art director.

*James R. Osgood Wrote to Sam:

I have received your telegram as follows: “Charley is equipped with full authority and also with the amplest possible instructions.” I take this to be an answer to my letter of Feb 2d, and I shall accordingly write to Webster covering a copy of the telegram and advise him that we shall await his further communications.

Is it proper to say that I did not gather from Mr Webster in our interview on Saturday that he was armed with the authority and instructions which you mention. If I had, I should have not have troubled you with that letter [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “I did not answer this bit of stupidity”

February 5 Tuesday – Livy telegraphed from Hartford to James B. Pond: “Mr Cable is improving and feels much better today” [MTP].

Livy also wrote from Hartford to Louise Cable about her husband's improvement [MTP]. Note: Since Livy took up the daily task of telegraphing Pond and writing Louise Cable on this day, it's probable that Sam's quick trip to New York was also this day. Sam was back in Hartford on Feb. 6 to telegraph Pond.

Sam went to New York City and saw Nat Goodwin (1857-1919) in a play [MTBus 234]. (See Feb. 8 entry). Note: The Brooklyn Eagle advertised Goodwin in “Those Bells” this evening at Colonel Sinn's Park Theater [Feb. 5, p 3 “Amusements To-Night”].

Charles Webster wrote to Sam: a talk with Marshall Mallory and Howells; Osgood's letter [MTP].

February 6 Wednesday – Sam telegraphed from Hartford to James B. Pond:

“Medicines are about discarded food has taken their place further telegraphing not worth while” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Milicent W. Shinn (See Oct. 27, 1882 entry):

Private. Ah, if I could only be there! I would delight in revealing the dark history of Bret Harte's treatment of me when I contributed & he was editor [Overland]. But I couldn't do it in a letter, you know. It would be out of place; & besides, it would look as if I held the present Overland responsible for the crimes of the one which is departed & gone.

Livy again wrote from Hartford to Louise Cable [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Sam: a pen sent; agreement made with Prang & Co.; talks with Marshall Mallory about a new play [MTP].

Marie Josephine Williams wrote to Sam asking for help publishing her poems [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Poetess who wants an editor (euphemism for introducer to the public)”

February 7 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Frank Bliss:

“By the middle of next lecture season Mr. Cable's name will be a household word in this country. He has in his hands a couple of literary bonanzas which I think ought to be published in no way but by subscription...”

Sam urged Bliss to talk to Cable, even though the literary bonanzas were not “completely ready for the press” [MTP].

February 8 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, directing him to contact Jimmy Lewis and then Nat Goodwin about producing the new Sellers play [MTHL 2: 469n2]. Sam had reached the end of his patience with Marshall Mallory.

The thing I had in my mind, when I went to see Nat Goodwin play, was, to offer him the play at one-third of the profits, & we keep the two-thirds. You perceive that the ingenious [Marshall] Mallory has been sent the same idea from on high—for what sufficient service, I would like to know? For risking the amount of capital necessary to start the piece on the boards? I don't need his help there—neither do I need any of his peculiar book-keeping.

Hang Mallory. Drop him [MTBMS 234].

February 9 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells and marked the latter “Private & Confidential.” Howells wrote on Feb. 4 that he'd shown the Sellers play to Marshall Mallory before receiving Sam's advice to make him wait. Though Sam easily dismissed Mallory's offer of thirds of the profits to Mallory, the actor, and the writers, Sam's focus was elsewhere—his relationship with Osgood. Sam was increasingly dissatisfied with Osgood's efforts to sell LM.

If you still have the Library of Humor in your possession, keep it there, until I tell you otherwise. I will explain when I see you.

Osgood & I have not quarreled, but I think we are pretty completely dissatisfied with each other; & if we are destined to fall out, I will not deliver that book into his hands until the clause in the contract which requires me to pay two-thirds of all losses shall be stricken out. I think that if he were given the copyright on the Bible, his gang are stupid enough to publish it in such a way as to lose money on it [MTHL 2: 468].

Sam also sent $8,000 check to Hubbard & Farmer bankers & brokers, note not extant but referred to in H&F's Feb. 11 acknowledgment.

Charles Webster wrote to Sam: talk with Jimmy Lewis, actor under Augustin Daly; PS "I will see Goodwin at once" [MTP].

February 10 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, again about Marshall Mallory. Sam seems to have cooled off some from the angry tone of his Feb. 8 letter to Webster.

You may drop a note to Mr. Mallory & say I don't think the Sellers play would be sufficiently profitable to any of us with the gains divided into thirds. And say to him, likewise I am now writing a new play by myself (while Howells & I are kept asunder by Cable's illness,) & that if I finish it to my liking maybe we can strike up some terms for it which will be mutually satisfactory. It is a 4-act play, & two acts are nearly done. I think I can finish it in a couple of weeks, but of course I can't tell for sure. I'm kind of boiling with it, & so it gets on paper pretty fast [MTBus 234].

Samuel Webster, Charles Webster's son, in Mark Twain Business Man, succinctly expresses the difficulties Sam had placed his father in about stage plays:

"I don't quite know how the play business was run in those days, and I don't believe Uncle Sam knew either. He seems to want to begin with the actors before he has a producer, and he has an idea that the producer is going to offer a good price for a play he's never seen, and he's not going to let him read it until he gets his terms, and then if he wants to make anything out of it Uncle Sam will tell him where he gets off" [MTBus 235].

George W. Cable had improved, and wrote his wife:

I have seen some friends today who dropped in from church, telling what a fine sermon Mr. Twichell had just preached. First, Mrs. Chas Dudley Warner & then Mr. George Warner. Mrs. Clemens, too, came into my room & Dr. Davis, my physician...

After my dinner I returned to the library & had a long chat with Mark Twain. Now he has gone out with the children for a walk, Mrs. Clemens is upstairs, my nurse lies fast asleep on the lounge just beside me, & all is still. I look out upon the snowy prospect & think of home.

Clemens has finished the play he was writing when I fell ill and has commenced a new work. He is in splendid working trim. I seem to have made great way in the hearts of these dear good people. Clemens, specially, seems to warm to me more & more [Turner, MT & GWC 30]. Note: The plays Sam was working on during this period were Colonel Sellers as a Scientist, and on dramatizations of The Adventures of Tom Sawyer and Pe&P.

Joe Goodman wrote thanking Sam; the "Carson Fossil-Footprints" article arrived in California on Feb. 6. Joe loved the piece:

God bless you for the article!...You evidently do not know how good it is. I never saw anything from your pen that had more broad-gauge fun in it—and with never an intermission from beginning to end. McEwan and Flynn—who make some pretensions to humor—read it separately, and both laughed till they became hysterical.

Joe told Sam of two changes (he called "liberties") he was making to the MS—placing Sam's name at the head of it, and spelling out Daggett's name instead of using initials:

“Daggett has become a public character, and likes to see his name in print in any connection that will give it currency. ...I trust you do not grudge him assistance.”

Joe had followed Sam’s career from afar and was prescient about the disposition of HF:

I see by the papers that you are going to write a sequel to “Tom Sawyer” at last. I’ve often wondered why you didn’t do it—it was such a good subject, and so ready to hand. You’re at your best in recalling to your readers recollections of their boyhood, and you left Tom and Huck just at the most interesting period of their lives. I suppose you will let Huck drift West, augment himself, and become a Sagebrush Statesman or hero [MTP].

February 11 Monday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam. He’d sent the “Library of Humor” to Osgood for his evaluation. Howells would be happy to complete his work on the volume and “have it off” his hands. He reported that Mallory had offered only a “widow’s third” of the take from the Sellers as Scientist play, so he felt they should wait for Raymond, “till he has worn out his present success.” He also told of a dream he had which he’d “laid the foundations in a potato salad full of onion” [MTHL 2: 469].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam about their baby, “Olive” (Olivia) being sick all week; more about his work [MTP].

Hubbard & Farmer bankers & brokers wrote they’d rec’d Sam’s of Feb. 9 with $8,000 check [MTP].

February 12 Tuesday – George W. Cable was well enough for Sam to discharge the private nurse he’d ordered for him [MTHL 2: 471]. Sam telegraphed James B. Pond: “...nothing but the impossible can prevent his being ready for the platform four or five days hence” [MTP].

Sam wrote from Hartford to Laurence Hutton on the copyright legislation strategy. Evidently, Hutton had made a stronger case for a different approach, but still one that would require contributors. “You see what Geo. Lathrop says. All right, then, I put up $100 with you & withdraw my proposed plan” [MTP].

February 13 Wednesday – Sam and Cable breakfasted together and spent four hours talking in Sam’s library. It was the first idle day in four weeks, in which time Sam wrote The Adventures of Tom Sawyer play and made progress on a dramatization of P&P, neither of which he was able to sell [MTHL 2: 471].

Cable wrote to his wife that Sam was “ferocious & funny” when talking of publishers, and that he played the piano “& sang a German song—one that Longfellow has translated—‘O, hemlock tree, O hemlock tree, How faithful are thy branches.’” Cable sang a tenor part “not trying to use the words.”

Then back to our talk and out to the library where Mark proposed a little literary scheme for him & 1 or 3 or 4 others; & when Mrs. Clemens came in at 1 P.M. we were still talking...

Mrs. Clemens is reading aloud to Mark & the children. Howard Pyle’s beautiful new version of Robin Hood [1883]. Mark enjoys it hugely; they have come to the death of Robin & will soon be at the end [Turner, MT & GWC 31-2]. Note: the “little literary scheme” was a book to be written jointly.

Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells. He discussed Mallory brothers and Nat Goodwin and noted “Concerning a play, it seems to take longer to hear from New York than from California.” As for Osgood, there was still the matter of the “Library of Humor,” which Howells answered on Feb. 11 that he’d given to Osgood by Sam’s direction. No matter, Sam responded, Howells had done the work for him, not Osgood.

You have not delivered it to him for PUBLICATION—nobody can do that but me.

But if the work is really FINISHED, don’t take a bit of trouble about it; leave it where it is. It is its own & my protection: it is not usable, for I have not delivered it to him.

But this is all splenetic talk & nonsense, anyway. I have made a contract with him, & will fulfill it or go to hell [470-1].

Sam also wrote to Edgar W. Howe, editor and publisher, author, philosopher and noted “Sage of Potato Hill,” (1853-1937). In 1877, Howe established the Atchison (Kansas) Daily Globe. For nearly half a century, the paper was one of the most widely quoted publications in the country. Sam and Cable had read Howe’s first novel, The Story of a Country Town (1882). Sam praised the book, offered constructive criticism, and expressed a wish that Howe would visit [MTP].

February 14 Thursday – William L. Hughes for A. Hennuyer wrote from Paris that Hennuyer was about to print his translation of TS; he wanted Sam’s “sanction” for TS & also HF; forwarded a copy of Helen’s Babies, a humorous novel by John Habberton (1876) which he said was in the style that the TS would be published [MTP].

February, latter half – Sam made two short trips to New York City during the last half of Feb. He wrote in his notebook to see “Dr. Knapp” and Augustin Daly [MTNJ 3: 46n105]. Sam’s letter of Feb. 18 to Howells states that he “just got home from New York, quite handsomely fagged out” [MTHL 2: 475]. This refers to the trip he made with Cable on Feb. 15 to 18 that follows.

February 15 Friday – George W. Cable and Sam went to New York City [Turner, MT & GWC 33; MTNJ 3: 47n107].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam, saying he’d received Sam’s two letters about Nat Goodwin, who was being considered for the new Sellers play:

I confess that it would be extremely distasteful to me to have my name connected in any way with Goodwin’s. I was willing to consent if he went about under the wing of a respectable hen like the Madison Square management; but I cannot stand the thought of him “on his own hook.” His name has been connected with low flung burlesques, and his family appear before the public habitually in nothing but stockings; at Montreal I saw him in a play so indecent that I was obliged to leave the theatre with Mrs. Howells [MTHL 2: 472].

February 16 Saturday – Sam and George W. Cable dined at the Union League Club with Clarence C. Buel, assistant editor of Century Magazine. They then took a carriage to see General Grant, who was asleep and did not see them. Sam intended to return to Grant’s on Monday, Feb. 18, about a show for relief of the Ohio River floods. The plan included Cable and Henry Ward Beecher providing the entertainment at the Academy of Music in New York City [Turner, MT & GWC 33-4]. Note: Beecher was unavailable.

Sam’s article, “The Carson Fossil-Footprints” ran in The San Franciscan [Camfield, bibliog.]. See Goodman’s Jan. 22, 1884 entry.

James B. Pond and George W. Cable wrote two separate letters in the same enclosure; Pond related that he met “the young man” (Cable) at the depot and that “he ate a tremendous dinner.” Cable sent blessings in a PS [MTP]. Note: Sam later would object to Cable skimping food on his own dime but gorging on others.

February 17 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Augustin Daly. Would Daly consider producing Sam’s dramatization of The Adventures of Tom Sawyer? [MTNJ 3: 46n106]. Sam may have left in the evening for New York.

Edgar W. Howe editor of the Atchison (Kansas) Globe wrote long, responding to Sam’s remarks about Howe’s book, The Story of a Country Town [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “From the New Author”

February 18 Monday – Sam arrived home from a quick trip to New York City, perhaps staying the night of Feb. 17 there [MTHL 2: 475]. He may have returned to talk to General Grant before leaving the city (see Feb. 16 entry).

He wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, enclosing Howells' Feb.15 letter. Sam directed Webster how to deal with Nat Goodwin:

You need not show the play to Goodwin. Simply tell him Howells objects to changing Sellers name; that Howells has thought the thing over & arrived at the conclusion that it could do no real good to change the name, for the character would remain Sellers. Say I disagree with Howells, but I bow to the decision of course, for he may be right; & is entitled to have his objection respected by me, anyway. ...

I have written Howells a letter which will probably make him inextinguishably ashamed of his letter; & of the infantile objection which he makes to Goodwin; & of the preposterous idea that the Mallorys can make a thing or a man respectable where our names couldn't [MTBus 236].

Sam then wrote to Howells on the matter.

You will not be able to see the force of your objection, if you will look it straight in the face.

It amounts to this: If an actor plays the piece (under our) backed by our names alone, his reputation for indecency will soil us, smirch us.—But if he plays it so, additionally backed by the Mallorys names, that will make everything respectable; we suffer no smirch, because the name of the Mallorys is our protection.

Now the facts are, that you & I are respectable men, & quite well known to be so; whereas, from the Atlantic to the Pacific the Mallorys are just as well known to be thieves & ghouls, cheats & liars [MTHL 2: 473-4].

George W. Cable wrote to Sam, wondering “what has become of Ambulina”—he couldn't find it anywhere [MTP]. Note: Vic Fischer of the MTP offers: Ambulinia (sometimes called “Ambulina”) is a character in The Enemy Conquered, by Samuel Watson Royston, who Clemens renames “G. Ragsdale McClintock” in his satirical review of the book, “A Cure for the Blues.”

H.B. Vandiver wrote from Weaverville, NC to Sam: “I want you to give me all your works, will you?” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “‘Nicodemus Dodge’ Another Southern beggar”

February 19 Tuesday – In Hartford Sam wrote to Laurence Hutton. He was unable to go to Washington to help with the copyright legislation lobby “but Warner is already there, for a few days, staying with Hawley.” Sam recommended Hutton write Howells, who Sam felt was “the man to go for Hay—pre-eminently.” Sam begged being too busy to write Howells [MTP].

Sometime later this day or the next, Sam and Susy Clemens went to Brooklyn with Twichell.

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam, backing off somewhat over the issue of using Nat Goodwin in the new Sellers play. Goodwin had wanted to change the name of Sellers in the play; Howells had seen no sense in that but now was amenable. The fates seemed to be against the two playwrights, or, as Howells put it:

“We seem to be in the hands of Providence—and Raymond, who are probably strong enough to beat us. Why not have Webster let Raymond know that when he has failed with his new piece we are open to propositions?” [MTHL 2: 476].

Augustin Daly wrote to Sam, interested in seeing his play [TS] and do it if suitable [MTP].

Hubbard & Farmer bankers & brokers wrote to Sam [MTP].

February 21 Thursday – From Twichell's journal:

"Thursday M.T. and his Susy, also the artists Miss [Candace] Wheeler and her daughter Dora, dined at D.S's [Dean Sage] and passed the night—a very pleasant party indeed" [Yale, copy at MTP].

George W. Cable wrote from Hotel Lafayette, Phila. to Sam that he'd found "Ambulina" [MTP]. Note: see Feb. 18 entry.

February 21 Thursday ca. – On Hotel Brunswick stationery, Clemens wrote: "Dear Mr. Daly—Introducing Mr. Webster. / Mark Twain" [MTP].

February 22 Friday – Sam and party moved from Brooklyn to New York. From Twichell's journal:

"Friday, after a charming morning in Brooklyn (M.T. sang Negro 'spirituals' at the piano, deliciously) we went to N.Y. and put up at the Gilsey House" [Yale, copy at MTP].

February 23 Saturday – Kingsland Smith, of St. Paul Roller Mill Co. wrote to Sam that he'd been forced to postpone his visit; he'd rec'd Sam's "kind note" of Jan. 15; they'd agented their flour in Hartford and sold a car load of it; it was 18 below zero there [MTP]. Note: Sam's of Jan. 15 not extant.

February 24 Sunday – Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam and Livy; their baby Olive was better after someone volunteered to pay for a nurse and going out of the city to find good air; he gave a sheet of expenses [MTP].

February 25 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Josiah H. Gilbert, permitting use of up to 600 words from his "Babies" speech [MTP]. Note: Gilbert may have been the editor of Three Thousand Selected Quotations from Brilliant Writers (1904).

February 26 Tuesday – Howells responded to Sam's letter of Feb. 18 that he was "down in the dust at the notion" that he'd made Sam "take a journey to New York and back for nothing...." Sam answered:

"Ah, what the reader puts into a letter, that is what said reader finds in it! There couldn't have been any irascibility in my letter, for the reason that there wasn't any in me" [MTHL 2: 476].

Sam reported on dramatic royalties he'd found, and said that Mallory had the new Sellers play but Sam had "no faith in his being able to find the right man for it." He asked if Howells had blocked out the Sandwich Island play (about Ragsdale) [476].

Sam wrote his regrets to John McK. McCarthy of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, a group founded in Philadelphia in 1771 for relief of Irish emigrants. He would be unable to join them for the Mar. 17 celebration [MTP]. Note: Sam often disparaged the Irish.

On or just after this day, Sam wrote from Hartford to James B. Pond on a Feb. 26 note from Charles Fairchild "Many thanks for the information about the Bad-Boy play—and love to you & Cable [MTP]. Fairchild's note was about the whereabouts of Cable.

February 27 Wednesday – Augustin Daly turned down Sam's dramatization of The Adventures of Tom Sawyer. Daly wrote "I fear that Tom Sawyer would not make a success at my theatre." He disagreed with Sam that grown ups could play the part of children [MTP]. Webster claims that Sam "seems to have dropped playwrighting at this point" [236-7].

William Dean Howells stopped off briefly for a visit with Sam in Hartford on the way to meet his father in New York. Howells left New York and returned home to Boston on Mar. 1. In New York Howells interviewed Mallory, probably with Webster [MTHL 2: 477, n1-2].

In Hartford, as Sam was finishing a letter to Edward House, Howells arrived. Sam thanked House for a photo of Koto, and related Cable's sickness and that he'd just gone away.

"Why, man, he made 280 times more fuss over his little pains than you did over your big ones. Lord, if I dared to laugh as I want to laugh—but Mrs. Clemens would kill me" [MTP].

Rose Terry Cooke wrote from Winstead, Conn. advising she'd sent a book of "dialect" stories to Cable at the Clemens home; seeing how he was no longer there would Sam hold the book until she came for it? [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Sam: written to Osgood asking for statement on LM; mixing of ad costs, etc. which were not to be included in statement as Osgood & Co. was to pay for all those [MTP].

February 28 Thursday – Sam wrote to Ainsworth R. Spofford, Librarian of Congress, enclosing $1 fee and asking that the synopsis of his play for "The Prince & Pauper, a romance in 4 Acts" be copyrighted [MTP].

February 29 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster with ideas to discount subscription sales if a buyer bought two or more different books [MTBus 239-40]. He'd been writing "original matter" for L. Prang & Co, a big calendar and Christmas card publisher that used color to spur sales. Sam's arrangement was to receive ten cents for each dollar calendar sold. Simple, yet Sam saw a loophole that might yield him more:

If Prang is going to have but one price for the calendar, & that price a dollar, it is all right—10 cents to me is correct. But don't you think there ought to be a clause saying that if he should conclude to charge any higher price for any or all of them, my royalty in that case shall be 10 per cent?

It isn't the amount of extra money involved that is bothering me particularly—it is the dread of a loose, unclear contract. Carefully look into the thing & get it just right [MTBus 240].

Charles Webster sent telegram: "Will you take one third profits from Malory, or on weekly basis what is your limit" [MTP].

Hubbard & Farmer, bankers & brokers, sent a statement of Sam's balance this date of $10,124.58, with a strip showing each day's balance in Feb. [MTP].

Worden & Co. Sent a statement showing $3,997.08 balance [MTP].

March – Sam inscribed a copy of Edgar Watson Howe's The Story of a Country Town (1883): "S.L. Clemens, Hartford, March 1884, Sent by the Author" [Gribben 326].

March 1 Saturday – Charles Webster wrote to Sam: bulk of letter is about play negotiations with Marshall Mallory, etc. "Your idea about the three books is certainly good. I will write in a day or two about that" [MTP].

March 2 Sunday – In Boston, Howells wrote after returning home from New York the day before. He recommended waiting for John T. Raymond, though how long he didn't know. Should the Mallorys be able to secure Nat Goodwin at $350 or $400 a week, Howells felt they'd be "far better in the long run, even money wise, than if we let the play take its chances with an actor and a temporary combination" [MTHL 2: 477].

March 3 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Andrew Chatto, enclosing the Feb. 14 from William L. Hughes, translator.

“Here’s another of those fellows. I’ve told him you have full authority and will answer him. Please do. I’m keeping Huck Finn back till next fall. I found I couldn’t publish it in the spring, there wasn’t time enough left for a long enough canvass” [MTP].

From Twichell’s journal:

“Took the five oldest children, with a dozen or so of their friends, on a sleigh ride, in the evening to Farmington” [Yale, copy at MTP]. Note: Unless he was out of town or sick, Sam wouldn’t miss a sleigh ride with Joe and kids right outside his door. Sam was home.

Henry Irving wrote from Wash. DC, a near illegible note about it being a “burning shame” to have visited Hartford and not to have seen Clemens [MTP].

March 3 or 4 Tuesday – Sam wrote “Mch 3 or 4/84” from Hartford to Charles Webster.

I’ve made my head sore over these dramatic calculations this morning, with the final assistance of the manager of the Opera House, & now I have to give it up. It’s too complicated for me, so let Mallory do the proposing, & we will try to answer....call the lowest figure [net] per week $350. And I think that whenever you & Mallory think you have nearly reached an understanding, you’d better run up here & explain it to me. It will save a world of time [MTB_{us} 241].

March 5 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells, complaining of Webster “writing & telegraphing conundrums...which remain unguessed.” Webster had send a play proposal for a play with Marshall Mallory based on a gross percentage of the take. He also wrote of another sick child.

Susie’s turn. She has had 4 of the most hellfiredest days & nights, now, with the mumps—has suffered 13 times more than Cable did (whose pains lasted but 2 days), & yet has not made as much fuss in the 4 days as he used to make in 15 minutes; though she has shed whole barrels of noiseless tears. She staid in our room last night. None of us slept. I think she & her mother spent the night praying. But I didn’t. Yrs Ever [MTHL 2: 478].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, skeptical that 15% of the gross take on the new Sellers play would be roughly equivalent to a third of the profits. Webster had favored a percentage on the gross, especially after Sam had dictated no deal where the Mallorys could “boss the expenses & make them what they please” [MTB_{us} 240]. “What about the Prince & Tom Sawyer?” Sam asked. He was thinking of sending those plays to England and asked for copies of them [MTB_{us} 241].

Sam also wrote to the Gerhardts, who had written of a sick baby. Sam sympathized. He also wrote “We like your plans, & think they are wise & good.” After discussing letters of credit and uncertainties about which letters had reached them, Sam confided that:

“Susie is racked all to pieces with the mumps—left as a legacy by Mr. Cable; Clara & Jean are now through with the infamous disease” [MTP].

March 6 Thursday – Something had changed Sam’s mind on the calendar work for L. Prang & Co.—perhaps Sam’s questioning of the agreement had made Prang reevaluate the deal and offer Sam a way out; or he added to the work needed for the same price. Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster.

“This is the best luck I’ve had in 7 years. Get the Prang contract canceled, right away—don’t let him change his mind. You can’t imagine what a horrible 3-months’ job it would have been. I wouldn’t sign the Prang contract again, though it offered me ninety per cent” [MTB_{us} 242].

Sam also reminded Webster to get the rest of the money that Osgood owed. “Don’t let him bust on us,” Sam wrote [242].

George H. Warner wrote from New York, evidently answering Sam’s request about viewing some quilts. Warner described three, and wrote, “I will wait for your telegram tomorrow before going to the auction.” He confessed quilts were out of his line, and wondered what the value of Japanese quilts were [MTP].

March 7 Friday – Sam’s notebook: “Friday in the night, March 7, the telephone went out of service” [MTNJ 3: 48].

An article ran on page 7 in the Brooklyn Eagle, headlined Duncan’s continuing libel suit:

MARK TWAIN

He Disclaims the Article Libeling Captain Duncan

The deposition of Mark Twain was read. He deposed that the article represented as being an interview with him did not even remotely approach correctness. Not one single line as printed was uttered by him

In cross examination Mr. Clemens admits that he was informed that Captain Duncan had lodged information against him for criminal trial. He thought Duncan had full authority on the Quaker City, but did not exercise it. [See the rest of the article for Sam’s interesting cross-examination.]

Sam wrote from Hartford to Laurence Hutton, inviting him to come and spend the night: “Mr. Irving will lunch at our house Thursday March 13 at 2 p.m. Warner & 3 others & 2 or 3 ladies will be present” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Sam; checks enclosed for interest on Livy’s western loans; mention of the Duncan suit [MTP].

March 8 Saturday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: he retrieved the TS play from Daly; hoped P&P would make a splendid play; looking over Osgood’s statement; referred to Whitford; Prang’s letter enclosed. “In regard to canvassing Huck & Tom both at once would you advise having the covers alike?” [MTP].

March 12 Wednesday – Frank H. Fenno wrote from Altay, NY to ask Clemens for a piece for “Fenno’s Favorites” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Fenno’s book”

March 13 Thursday – The gathering with Henry Irving, the British actor, and the Warners and others at the Clemens home took place at 2 P.M. It is not known if Laurence Hutton attended, and Twichell’s journal does not mention him. (See Mar. 7 entry.)

“H[armony] & I dined at M.T.s (at 2 pm) and met there the English actor Mr. Henry Irving. The company sat long at table and there was most pleasant talk. Mr Irving made himself most agreeable though his manner was very quiet and he had no great facility in conversation...I was sorry not to be able to see him on the stage” [Yale, copy at MTP].

Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells, but made no mention of the gathering.

I have been dead to all interests of this life for 5 days with an unspeakable cold in the head; so I don't know what's been going on. I haven't seen any mention of the Prince & Pauper, but I take said mention to mean that Webster & Mallory have come to a conclusion of some sort or other concerning Col. Sellers, for the reason that Webster was not to let Mallory see the P&P or talk any business about it until the Sellers matter should be disposed of. Webster wanted to come up & report a day or two ago, but I telegraphed him to come tomorrow [MTP].

Andrew W. Hendman wrote from Big Island, Nova Scotia, sending some papers & asking if they were worth anything; was one really satirical, he asked [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Cheek"

March 14 Friday – Charles Webster arrived in Hartford and conferred on the agreement reached with Marshall Mallory [Mar. 13 & 15 to Howells].

March 15 Saturday – Sam telegraphed from Hartford to Howells about the new Sellers play. Webster had negotiated with Marshall Mallory on the matter and brought the results to Sam:

"MALLORY IS SICK AND CANNOT TALK BUSINESS BUT HE BADLY WANTS THE THING AND HAS NOT OBJECTED TO THE TERMS REQUIRED SL CLEMENS" [MTHL 2: 479].

March 16 Sunday – Worden & Co. wrote to Clemens a statement of stock purchase [MTP].

William M. Laffan for The New York Sun wrote to introduce Mr. Garrett Serviss, an astronomer, who was to lecture in Hartford next Thursday [MTP].

March 18 Tuesday – James R. Osgood wrote & replied to Sam's request for $5,000; he'd ordered a detailed accounting to Webster [MTP].

Chatto & Windus wrote from London that they knew William L. Hughes (... "a very decent sort of person and an old correspondent of ours") and had written him that "authors sanction is worth something and should be paid for." They suggested if he paid 30p (pounds?) for the French translation of HF then Clemens would not press for payment of TS translation. They were anxious to get some sheets of HF to canvass with [MTP].

March 19 Wednesday – Susy Clemens' twelfth birthday. Sam gave her a copy of Tennyson's Idylls of the King and inscribed it: "Susie Clemens / from her father / March 19 '84" [Gribben 693].

Karl Gerhardt wrote a postcard: "We have 12 days more in which to finish our group, so I will write at the end of that time. Your last letter rcd yesterday, all love to you all" [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: Osgood's last statement "at last intelligible"; things there don't belong; clarified with Osgood that advertising was to be paid by Osgood; other details about Osgood and paying Sam the balance owed; Set of William Cullen Bryant and Sydney Howard Gay's A Popular History of the United States shipped to Sam [MTP].

March 20 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to James R. Osgood, acknowledging receipt of $5,000. Sam matched the amount and "paid off that old endorsement"—probably settling accounts on LM, which Sam had agreed to produce at his cost, with a royalty going to Osgood. He encouraged a prize for subscription sellers who reached 400 sales of LM. Sam was also afflicted:

"Publicly, I'm confined to the house with rheumatism; but under the holy seal of secrecy I reveal to you that it is gout. I suppose this comes of high living when I was a boy—corn-dodgers and catfish. / Yrs Truly SLC" [MTLTP 167].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, asking him to send him an unbound copy of Bayard Taylor's translation of Göthe's *Faust. Sam wanted to divide it into 100-page sections to read in bed [MTP].

In Boston, Howells wrote a short note to Sam, asking whether he wanted him to see John T. Raymond again. Sam had had a cold and Howells assumed that it had worsened, which is why he hadn't answered his last letter [MTHL 2: 480].

March 21 Friday – James R. Osgood wrote (twice) to Clemens: first: sorry for Sam's affliction, whether gout or rheumatism; "Webster is going through that prize question when he comes. We will send you acceptances when we arrive at the balance." Second note: Chatto & Windus had written asking progress on HF; "Shall I reply to this, and if so, how?" [MTP].

H.B. Vandiver ("Nick Dodge") wrote from Weaverville, NC to again pester Clemens to send him all of his books [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "fool"

March 22 Saturday – Sam purchased a 4-volume set of William Cullen Bryant and Sydney Howard Gay's *A Popular History of the United States (1876-81) [Gribben 108].

Nicholas Wolff wrote from NYC for autograph and brief sketch of Sam's life [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Good lord! Impudent auto hunter"

March 23 Sunday – Edgar W. Howe wrote to ask Sam for the addresses of "a dozen or more of the principal book writers" whom Sam esteemed, including Cable, Eggleston, Howells, etc." [MTP].

March 24 Monday – T.F. Plunkett wrote to Clemens: "You didn't invite me to your Irving lunch, but I forgive you and would like you to meet Mr & Mrs Florence here 11 pm Thursday, charm & oysters" [MTP].

March 25 Tuesday – Kate D. Barstow wrote from Wash. DC, what is now a very faded letter. She mentions having sent him invitations to Howard College of Medicine's graduation exercises but received no congrats. Thanked him for his financial support [MTP].

March 26 Wednesday – James R. Osgood wrote to Clemens.

Mr. Webster has shown us my letter of Apl. 5, 1882 proposing the terms of 7 1/2% for the first 50,000 copies, and agreeing to exempt you from the working expenses of the book....We have therefore agreed with Mr. Webster that we will assume these charges.

The two other items alluded to in his letter, viz. Anthony's time, and the losses by bad debts are properly chargeable to you both equitably and by understanding. ...

As to the losses, you must remember that I told you we could not be responsible for any losses on a 5% commission, to which you acceded. I said we would administer the book to the best of our ability as against loss, and I think that the amount is pretty small considering the magnitude of the transaction [MTP].

March 27 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster objecting to costs charged by someone named Anthony for looking over HF and suggesting illustrations, something he felt the artist should do. He directed Webster to find out how many hours and the rate per hour charged and for what work. Sam added:

"It isn't worth while for Osgood to write me on isolated details—he can lay all his objections before me at one & the same time, through you when you come back here" [MTBus 246]. Note: Disagreements over costs incurred on the production and sale of LM led Sam to disengage from Osgood and form Webster & Co. as his own publisher. He would later advise the Elmira Herald:

“I am Webster & Co., myself, substantially” [MTLTP 169]. Note: See July 6 entry.

March 28 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Edgar W. Howe, who had evidently written for addresses:

“Care of the Century, Union Square, New York” will fetch half of them; “Care of the Atlantic, 4 Park street Boston,” will fetch the other half. [He also added individual addresses for Aldrich, Cable, Uncle Remus (Harris), Col. George E. Waring and Col. T.W. Higginson of Newport, R.I., John Hay, Cleveland, Ohio, Willie Winter, N.Y. Tribune and Edmund C. Stedman, care of the Century] [MTP].

Henri Gauthier-Villars (1859-1931) wrote to convey an episode about late night laughter coming from the room next to his, in the small town of Darmstadt. Upon investigating he discovered his “old friend Will” was reading a book (not specified) signed by Mark Twain.

Since that evening, Sir, I have learned to know you like Willy, I have devoured the handkerchiefs; like Willy I have rolled on my bed, but I have wanted to do more than him, and I tried to explain in some pages that I published why your humor has pleased the French so much, just like your own countrymen, “laughter is the nature of man” [MTP].

Note: Henri is now best known as the first husband to Sidonie-Gabrielle Colette (1873-1954), successful French novelist (notably Gigi). Henri published Mark Twain this year; Clemens was aware of the book (see Apr. 22 to Aldrich). Ironically, Henri published over 50 novels under the pseudonym “Willy.” In fact, his mention of “Willy” in this letter may have been a thinly veiled reference to himself and an attempt to publicize his book on Twain. No reply to Henri is extant.

J. Hyatt Smith wrote a fan letter from Brooklyn to Clemens with request for autograph [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “P.S. Good / J. Hyatt Smith”

William Dean Howells wrote to Sam: “Here is the grand result of my negotiation, I always knew that business was my forte. / I simply answered that the terms did not differ from those proposed to Mr. Webster last autumn, and it was useless to submit them to you. / Of course I gave Raymond no points [? Prints] of the play. / Yours ever... [Vassar copy at MTP].

March 29 Saturday – Sam forwarded Howells’ note to Charles Webster, about failure to get John T. Raymond for the new Sellers play. Howells suggested changing Sellers name. Sam replied he would make the changes and wanted Webster to answer Howells.

“I am willing to do anything, I care not WHAT it is. Tell him our talk about Raymond’s proposal” [MTP].

George W. Cable wrote a rather silly letter to “implore you for your autograph” [MTP].

Bloodgood H. Cutter wrote from Little Neck, Long Island, enclosing a pink printed poem about the Bartholdi Statue (base for the Statue of Liberty). He asked for an autograph & recalled the Quaker City voyage [MTP].

Richard Smith Elliot wrote from St. Louis to Clemens, enclosing a printed circular with letters from several men including Gen. Sherman. He was too poor to send Sam his book, Notes Taken in Sixty Years but hoped Sam would buy it and let him know what he thought [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Nonsense”

Lucius Seth Huntington wrote from NYC to Clemens, recalling “one of the most distinguished acts of my life was presiding at the dinner given you in Montreal in 1881.” He asked if he might use photos given of the Clemens girls in a book he was writing of a “lost child” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Answer Huntington / Yes”

George P. Lathrop wrote asking for autograph[MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Joke from Lathrop”; part of the April Fool’s joke instigated by Cable.

Osgood & Co. wrote to Clemens, letter accompanying check for $2,500 [MTP].

March 30 Sunday – Daniel C. French wrote to Clemens [MTP]. April fool request for autograph

Dr. John S. Billings wrote from Wash DC to ask for auto & photo Clemens [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Dr. Billings .Apl fool”

Francis D. Millet wrote to Clemens [MTP]. April fool request for auto

Gerald Massey wrote from Springfield, Mass. to thank him for his contribution to his “little fund.” He was to lecture there on Wednesday then head to S.F. [MTP].

Effie B. Waring wrote to Clemens [MTP]. April fool request for auto; a full set of his books with his name in each.

Dean Sage wrote asking for autograph for a young lady [MTP].

George E. Waring wrote to Clemens [MTP]. April fool request for autograph

March 31 Monday – In Hartford Sam wrote to Charles Webster, seeking the man who would be hired as the illustrator for Huckleberry Finn, Edward Windsor Kemble (1861-1933). Sam had seen Kemble’s work in Life magazine, at the time an illustrated comic weekly. He especially liked Kemble’s cartoon, “Some Uses for Electricity” [Oxford MT edition of HF, 1996, after-notes by Beverly David & Ray Sapirstein].

“Is that artist’s name Kemble?—I can not recall that man’s name. Is that it?...That is the man I want to try....Osgood has sent me $2500” [MTBus 246].

These subscribed to George W. Cable’s “April Fools” joke (see Apr. 1 entry), writing to Clemens: Lillian W. Aldrich; Thomas Bailey Aldrich; William S. Andrews; Charles Y. Beach; Moses S. Beach; Henry Ward Beecher; William Constantine Beecher; Hjalmar Boyesen; Noah Brooks; Clarence C. Buel; Henry C. Bunner; William Carey; Robert J. Collier; Charles C. Duncan; Austin C. Dunham; Frank J. Eakins; George Cary Eggleston; Charles S. Fairchild; Mary Fiske; Charles Frohman (1860-1915); Daniel Frohman; R.S. Gifford; Jeannette L. Gilder; John E. Gowers; Julian Hawthorne; John M. Hay; Andrew Hendman; Joseph Howard; Joseph Hutton; Laurence Hutton; Henry Irving; Robert U. Johnson; Clara L. Kellogg; Jane E. Kellogg; Horatio C. King; John C. Kinney; Thomas Wallace

Knox; Charles M. Leoser; D.G. MacNeill; Brander Matthews; Elizabeth M. Millet; Henry L. Pierce; T.F. Plunkett; James B. Pond; Nella B. Pond; Ozias W. Pond; Quixote de la Mancha; Rossiter Worthington Raymond; H. Robinson; Napoleon Sarony; Horace E. Scudder; Wesley Sisson; Francis Hopkinson Smith; Edmund C. Stedman; Ellen Terry; Charles Watrous; Charles G. Whiting; Della Young [MTP]. Note: many of these letters were outrageous requests for autographs, letters, pieces of writing, appearances, and the like. They are not included here due to space restrictions.

Statement from Hubbard & Farmer, bankers & brokers, shows Sam's balance $10,176.89; interest pd this date $52.31; balance Mar. 1 $10,124.58 [MTP].

April – On an unknown date in April, Sam telegraphed Howells that Webster had gone to Providence to make John T. Raymond another offer to take the new Sellers play [MTHL 2: 482]. The communications between Sam, Howells, Webster, and Raymond took place over several months. More certain success rested with Raymond, who'd been successful as Sellers in the past. It was considered by Howells to change the Sellers name and to secure another actor.

April ca. – Sam wrote on a Monday to Charles Webster about his planned stage play of TS.

I want Louis Aldrich to play Tom Sawyer's part, & Parsloe to play Huck Finn.

How does that strike you? I think it would be a strong team—and have all the boys & girls played by grown people [MTBns 232].

April 1 Tuesday – George W. Cable, in a stunt “to pay off his debt of gratitude for his recent entertainment in the Clemens's home,” [MTB 768-70] arranged for 150 friends of Sam's to write him on April Fool's Day requesting his autograph. The MTP has a copy of the formal flyer Cable had printed, sent to “150 persons of the literary and journalistic guild, in Boston, Hartford, Springfield, New York, Brooklyn, Washington and other cities.” Some of those who responded requested quite specific needs for poetry, original sentiment, chapters copied from his books, etc. Powers observes:

“Clemens, notoriously thin-skinned about jokes at his expense, elected to be amused, and the friendship [with Cable] solidified” [MT, A Life 485]. (See Mar. 31 and below for list.)

Twichell wrote about the joke:

“This amiable ‘April Fool’ proved very successful. A large number of letters and some telegrams came from the literary folk and many of them were of charming wit. M.T. was pleased with the joke, and well he might be, for it was a great compliment” [Yale, Copy at MTP].

Sam wrote from Hartford to Andrew Chatto about securing Canadian copyright and sending “early sheets” of Huck Finn. “...we shall have this book in type & printed, many months before we issue it” [MTP].

More of Cable's “April Fools” joke wrote to Sam: J.W. Beach; Stephen Fiske; Henry P. Gray (telegram); Celeste A. Hendricks; Charles de Kay; Sara T. Kennedy; E.K. Lockwood; Helena Modjesky; G.W. Sheldon for New York Commercial Advertising (telegram); Ellen D. Stedman; Virginia Waring; Charles Dudley Warner [MTP].

April 3 Thursday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: enclosed Am. Exchange stock; Hooper, artist for Life and the Graphic, “a very cheap man” so he gave him 2 chapters on trial to illustrate; Edward W. Kemble quoted $1200; offered to bring drawings up Mon or Tues to see who they would hire [MTP].

April 5 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to the Gerhardts, advising when they return to America, to make some connection with Augustus Saint-Gaudens or John Quincy Adams Ward [MTP].

Sam's letter to Karl Gerhardt was sold at auction by Sotheby's on June 19, 2003, and this addition expands the short explanation at the MTP:

A lengthy letter in which Clemens gives the artist advice:

So the long letter which I wrote at the time the new letter of credit went, never reached you, & I must write it over again. It's hard luck, for you know letter-writing & tooth-ache rank together in my affections. The new letter finishes the stipulated sum, & so I wanted you to so plan that half of it would be left for you to get home on, in case you decided to come home. If I may advise, I would strongly advise that you now write A. St. Gaudens & V.Q.A. Ward, & ask them if they can give you employment in New York. If they can & will, that is a certainty; it is sure bread & butter I have talked with Warner, & the above is what he suggested. He said it was the course which Ward followed when he returned from his European studies: he worked in a New York sculptor's studio for wages until he became able to set up for himself. Warner says there is a world of work in this country of a modest sort soldier-monuments, portrait busts, &c humble work, maybe, but affording plenty of bread & butter; & that for this reason New York is probably a better field than Paris for a beginner. [Y]ou must not take [this] as anything weightier than a suggestion. You ought, & must, do the thing which shall seem wisest & best to you. Keep us informed of your movements & purposes, & always let us know when we can help you in any way. I am broken in upon by an irritating telephonic message from Meriden which has taken the last rag of patience out of me & raised my temper to feverheat; & so I need not try to finish my letter. Imagine all I would say that is loving & kind & pleasant, & believe that you will still fall short of the affectionate regard in which I hold you. [Sotheby's Lot 57].

The New York Critic reported the April Fool's joke of 150 notables writing for Sam's autograph [Tenney 13].

Henry G. Carleton wrote on Life note paper: "I know you are in need of something soothing and emollient....I send you the accompanying copy of my great humorous work" [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: he asked him to write to Howells, whom he suspected thought Sam was offended at him; trouble obtaining Bayard Taylor's translation of Goethe's Faust: more on hiring an illustrator—did Sam want him to run up with specimens Tuesday? [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam and Livy: more about his work which he hoped to send photos of, and of still being torn about going to Florence to study, which meant he'd have to leave Josie & the baby behind [MTP].

April 6 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, telling him to "come up & bring the pictures." He also directed that a cloth P&P and a cloth LM be sent to Mrs. Olmsted's Southern school or charity [MTP].

Richard Watson Gilder wrote to Sam: "Your failure to reply to my urgent telegraphic request for your autograph I can only account for by my forgetting to enclose a postage stamp." He pasted in a used stamp from Persia! [MTP].

April 7 Monday – Celeste A. Hendricks wrote from Boston, thanking Sam for his of Apr. 3. "I talked with Mr. Marshall about it and he advised me to go and see you and state my case. / As soon as I have read before critics and managers—I hope to write you again" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "This fool again"

Gracie Stearnes wrote from Burlington, Ia. to ask for an autograph on a piece of Sam's clothing! This for a quilt she was making [MTP]. Note: The letter may have been a spoof April Fool's sent late, or a ruse, as the hand is quite fine for an 8 year old girl.

April 8 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells.

“It took my breath away, & I haven’t recovered it yet, entirely—I mean the generosity of your proposal to read the proofs of Huck Finn” [MTP].

This offer may have been made in a letter to Webster now lost. Powers claims Howells had used the wrong word, “proofs” when he offered to read the Huck Finn manuscript, not meaning “galley proofs” but a typewritten version of Sam’s copy [MTA Life 483]. Nevertheless, Howells did the work.

Sam also reported that Webster had ironed out a contract with the Lowentraut Co. in Newark for production of 60 dozen pairs of the grape-shears invented by Howells’ father (by year’s end Howells had not sold a dozen pairs). Though burdened by “the dam gout & ...too much insulted by it & annoyed by it to write” Sam wrote that he was better, and that he was “loafing—loafing all the time—& enjoying it” [MTHL 2: 482-3&notes].

April 10 Thursday – Sam wrote from New York City to Thomas Bailey Aldrich about being unable to come to Boston until Thursday next, due to a dinner invitation for Wednesday (Apr. 16), but would plan on being at the Aldrich home about 4 PM on that day [MTP]. Sam purchased a copy of Faust. A Tragedy, translated by Bayard Taylor (1879) [Gribben 264].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam about reading his Huck Finn proofs:

It is all perfectly true about the generosity, unless I am going to read your proofs from one of the shabby motives which I always find at the bottom of my soul if I examine. But now, it seems as if I were glad of the notion of being of use to you; and I shall have the pleasure of admiring a piece of work I like under the microscope [MTHL 2: 484]. Note: this suggests Howells read a draft of the book previously, perhaps on his short stop at Sam’s on Feb. 27.

Hubbard & Farmer per Babcock wrote to advise they’d purchased 200 shares of stock totaling $17,225 [MTP].

April 12 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, in a rather scolding tone:

“The book is to be issued when a big edition has been sold—& not before...Now write it up somewhere, & keep it in mind; & let us consider that question settled, and done with...Write it up, & don’t forget it any more” [MTBus 248].

Sam sent the Huck Finn manuscript and wrote, “Let Kemble rush—time is already growing short.” He warned that Osgood had:

“fooled away no end of time on his canvassing book, & then got out one that was eminently calculated to destroy the sale (for LM)” [248]. Note: Canvassing books were pre-publication mock-ups of the finished book, with some illustrations and excerpts, used by subscription salesmen.

April 14 Monday – Sam gave a reading of an unfinished paper to be completed by each member at the Hartford Monday Evening Club [Fatout, MT Speaking 656].

Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster about issuing HF, repeating his mantra that “we don’t issue till we have made a big sale,” 40,000 copies sold before publication. Canvass early, “drive it with all your might” and aim for Dec. 10 or 15 for the Christmas market [MTLTP 173]. Note: Sam still planned on publishing “1002^d Arabian Night,” but anonymously, and in a cheap, “15 or 20 cent form” [174]. Sam’s adamant stance on subscription sales was based on a faulty understanding of Bliss’ practices.

Sam also wrote a short note to George P. Lathrop of the Kinsmen Club (see Mar. 1883 entry):

“Nothing in the world would suit the undersigned better, but alas it may not be, as I am a guest in Boston on said date. With love to the Kinsmen & their illustrious guest, Truly Yours, S.L. Clemens” [MTP].

H.B. Vandiver wrote from Weaverville, NC to Sam having read of Cable’s April fool’s joke. He too wanted an autograph. He admitted to being 18 and “something of a ‘galoot’” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Read this some time or other”—not relating to anything in the letter but perhaps the letter itself.

April 15 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Henry G. Carleton (unidentified). Evidently Carleton had sent Sam a story for evaluation.

“In my opinion isn’t mainly a ‘humorous work’ at all...it is a fine & stately & beautiful tragedy” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a paragraph to his mother, Jane Clemens:

“...there was nothing new to report...though Jean is still in the doctor’s hands—though nothing serious. [They would go to Elmira] a little before the middle of June [and] shall go to-morrow & do a couple more [days shopping] in Boston” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a short note to Charles Webster to send the Chicago Press Club “a full set of my several books” [MTP].

George W. Cable wrote to Clemens:

“Dear Saint Mark: / I have submitted our project of one story five times told by 5 authors, to Roswell Smith & Gilder & they are charmed with the scheme & have taken it up. Don’t let it out. You will hear from them. I passed through Hartford yesterday, and longed to stop—knowing how badly you want to see me” [MTP].

April 16 Wednesday – In his letter to Aldrich of Apr. 10, Sam cited a dinner engagement with that he and Livy could not get out of for this evening, where they were to “meet some strangers who will be unmeetable later.”

Sam wrote a one-liner to Charles Webster: “Find out where Parsloe is, & drop a line & tell him I’ve got a play to show him which may possibly suit him & Louis Aldrich” [MTP].

Richard Watson Gilder wrote to Clemens about Cable and his idea for the five stories told by five authors. He suggested Clemens, Cable, Howells, Aldrich, Henry James, Joel Chandler Harris, Eggleston, Constance F. Woolson, Frances Hodgson Burnett, Maurice Thompson, Saxe Holme—this group, six to be chosen and if declines others asked. He added Frank R. Stockton in a PS [MTP].

April 17 Thursday – Sam and Livy were scheduled to travel to Boston on this day and be entertained at the Aldrich home (see Apr. 10 entry). They may have gone on Apr. 16 as Sam wrote to his mother, Jane Clemens, on Apr. 15. See Apr. 22 for Twitchell’s journal entry for Apr. 17.

Hubbard & Farmer per Way wrote advise of selling 100 shares of St. Paul at 86 & 1/8 [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: about finding actors; starting Kemble with the drawings; details of printing HF; cover design questions to be decided, color, etc. [MTP].

April 17 to April 19 Saturday – Sam and Livy spent “a day or two in Boston” [Apr. 20 letter to Howe].

April 18 Friday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: rec’d MS all right (HF?); unable to find Parsloe or Aldrich; Osgood was there, Howells the next day [MTP].

April 19 Saturday – Lucius Seth Huntington wrote to Clemens, more about her book of the lost child. She asked for a letter from him to any press people, and she’d send him advance sheets [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Let press people alone / troublesome Huntington”

April 20 Sunday – Back home in Hartford, Sam wrote to Edgar W. Howe, reporting that Howells was “drunk with admiration of your book,” The Story of a Country Town (1883).

“As T.B. Aldrich was present during one whole evening [on the recent trip to Boston], & had to listen to so much talk about a book which he has not seen, he naturally got pretty well filled up with curiosity” [MTP].

Note: Evidently, Howe had sent Howells the book thinking he was still the editor of the Atlantic, but not realizing that Aldrich had taken that post. Send him a book, directed Sam. At one time, The Story was listed as one of America’s top ten novels, yet was rejected by several publishers. Howe finally printed the first edition in his shop.

In a short article on page 10 of the Brooklyn Eagle, George W. Cable revealed the genesis for the April Fool’s day autograph joke he recently played on Sam:

CABLE NEWS FOR MARK TWAIN

“The autograph joke came into my head last February, when I was sick at Mark Twain’s house. Mark and I used to open our budget of letters together at breakfast. We had a good many. Nearly every morning Mark would slug out, ‘Say, George, here’s an autograph hunter,’ and a moment later I would echo his remark, as I found a correspondent asking for my sign manual. From this time the idea of the joke may have sprung. My most enthusiastic ally was the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, who loves a practical joke better than his dinner.”

“Will Mark Twain get even with you?”

“If he lives he will.”—Interview with George W. Cable.

April 21 Monday – George E. Waring wrote to ask Sam to send him a copy of “Ambulina” [MTP]. Note: see Feb. 18 entry on Ambulina.

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: enclosed letter (not specified); agreement with Osgood for rent; several drawings—should he send them? Raubs trial and their subpoena as a witness; Howells was there—was he to have carte blanche in making changes? suggested “omit that old Mississippi matter” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Old Raft matter. / answered / About Howells – Huck Finn”

April 22 Tuesday – From Hartford Sam replied to Charles Webster’s Apr. 21. He wanted the raft chapter, which was used in LM, “left wholly out” of HF. He badgered Webster about getting official pledges, called “acceptances” out of Osgood for money owed. He wanted pictures for HF sent “by batches of half a dozen or more,”; he wanted “Howells to have carte blanche in making corrections”; and lastly, that a proposed book by Howells wait till after Huck Finn was out, because “thanks to Mr. Osgood, spare cash is main scarce” [MTBus 250].

Sam also wrote to Thomas Aldrich that he'd "never had a more enjoyable visit" than his recent to Boston and stay at the Aldrich home. Sam wrote that Mrs. Aldrich had offered "right & true hospitality, which permits slippers, & general laxity, & unspeakable comfort." Clemens also wrote:

Look you, sirrah, Mrs. Clemens left that French 'Mark Twain' up stairs in the bedroom, at last, instead of packing it. Will you kindly be so good as to put it in a trunk & tie it up & ship it down to me by Adams' Express, charges paid? (I enclose) That's a good boy. I will say something fine about you to the Frenchman. I will say it in French [MTP]. Note: Sam signed this letter: S.L.C.M.T. "The Frenchman" was Henri (Willy) Gauthier-Villars, publisher of Mark Twain this year.

The Hartford Courant, page 2 with editorial articles, ran an article, "Mark Twain's Search for a Rare Book," which Twichell called "a substantially correct statement of facts" concerning Sam's search for The Enemy Conquered, a Love Triumphant, by a young Southern writer, Samuel Watson Royston (1845).

The "book" was a 31-page pamphlet with a most melodramatic story, and on Jan. 29 Sam asked Webster to find him a copy. Sam thought it so rare as to be unavailable, and must have mentioned his frustration to Twichell. Remembering a friend who owned a bookstore, Twichell made inquiries and found a huge pile of the work about to be destroyed. He bought six of the pamphlets and on his next visit to Sam's (on Apr. 17) casually asked what he would pay for a copy. Sam was reported to have answered, "Any amount! It cannot be had." Joe then presented six copies and dropped the idea that he could easily obtain a hundred more if desired [Twichell's journal, Apr. 17 entry, Yale, copy at MTP].

April 24 Thursday – Richard Watson Gilder wrote to Clemens with Mrs. Burnett's suggestion about the story project (5 tales from 5 authors) [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "My skeleton novelettes"

April 25 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster. He planned to go to New York City "next Tuesday" (Apr. 29) and stay at the Brunswick Hotel. He wanted Webster to either meet him there or at Laurence Hutton's in the evening. Sam enclosed 300 shares of Oregon Trans-Continental stock, which he eventually took a huge loss on. Sam bought it at 73 and it was now worth only 15 or 16.

Dean Sage bought it for me a year ago, just as I had sworn off permanently from stocks (speculative ones.) It went up to 98—he was very sick at the time, & so gave no orders to sell, & so I got caught.

Ask Sage if he can help you to any points. If he can't, go ahead & keep it or sell it, just as you please. I am perfectly indifferent as to what figure you sell at, or how long you keep it. I've had enough, & don't wish to ever look at a stock report again [MTBms 250-1].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Clemens with an announcement of his work at a salon. "We are all well and hope you have not lost all of your faith in us?" Announcement enclosed (in French) with two of Karl's work written in, one in marble [MTP].

Edgar W. Howe sent Clemens a printed flyer with Howells' and Twain's recommendations of his book. See insert [MTP].

April 26 Saturday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: office stationery printed; would hold the drawings for him to see on Tuesday; Howells suggestion to print a book "about the adventures of a young country boy in Boston" in the fall; paper costs; Osgood money; office rent contract; Raub trial postponed [MTP].

April 27 Sunday – Roswell Smith wrote to Clemens about a farm house in Simsbury, Conn. for Cable to rent at $350 per year [MTP].

April 27 to May 4 Sunday – In his May 4 letter to the Gerhardts, Sam wrote:

"...Twichell & I have been breaking our necks & bones all the past 7 days trying to learn to ride the bicycle—but we have acquired the art, now, & shan't break anything more" [MTP]. (See May 4 entry.)

Sam wrote to Edward H. House about his bicycle experiences and considered sending the article to the New York Sun [MTNJ 3: 55n123]. (See May 23 to, for the continued struggle with bicycles.)

"The Story of a Country Town."

By E. W. HOWE, Editor of the Atchison (Kansas) Globe.

From W. D. HOWELLS.

I wish to thank you for the very great pleasure I have had in reading your "Story of a Country Town." Consciously or unconsciously, it is a very remarkable piece of realism, and constitutes a part of the only literary movement of our time that seems to have vitality in it. I have never lived so far West as Kansas, but I have lived in your country town, and I know it is every word true, down to the perpetual Scriptural disputes of the inhabitants. Fair-view and its people are also actualities, which, even if I had never seen them—and I have—your book would persuade me of. The people in the story are excellent, both natural and sentient, except the last half of "Jo," who drops into sentimentality and wickedness wholly unworthy. "Biggs" is delightful, and all his household. "John Westlock" is a grim and most pathetic tragedy; his wife moves me less, but she is alive, too. I have no time to specify, and I don't know how to tell you of the impression of the simple, naked humanness that the book gives me. It has faults, as any fool might say, but be sure that you have written so good a book that it will be hard for you to write a better. I am afraid that you will never write another so sincere and frank. I wish I could see you; but upon your honest piece of work, I give you my hand with my heart in it.

From ELWYN A. BARRON, Chicago Inter-Ocean.

It is not only an exceptionally strong story, strikingly original in treatment, but in many respects quite the best American novel of its day. The great obstacle in the way of its early popularity will be the absence of that quality of rose water insipidity so common in the so-called modern novel. But it has so very much to recommend it to people who know and value that which is good in literature that "The Story of a Country Town" will continue to be read with pleasure when the butterfly books of immediate success have been forgotten.

Condensed from a column and a half criticism in the New York World.

In presenting this book to readers of the World, the reviewer takes especial pleasure; for we are not sure but we have at last actually trapped and caught that will-o'-the-wisp, the American novel. * * The reader will turn to this quaint, uneven book again and again. It will bear reading more than once. Its style is wholly quiet and unpretentious, therefore charming. * * It abounds in epigrammatic sentences, keen as a needle and slyly satirical. * * Tragedy? There is both unwritten and written tragedy. The death of Mateel, and, again, the gray-haired wanderer upon his knees, sobbing out volcanic grief when it was too late beside the coffin of the wife whom he had deserted, and who had kept a light burning in his room to welcome him back every night as long as she lived—these scenes are unsurpassed. Tragedy, comedy, quaintness, intensity, power and character painting—you have them all in this marvellous Western book. That it has escaped the notice of the critics, as it has, is not complimentary to them. Wise people, we reviewers! * * One striking point in the book is the large number of characters the author weaves into his story and carries to the end. Dickens scarcely surpassed him in this. The analysis of the life and inner workings of the soul of Rev. John Westlock is a story of spiritual tragedy that has scarcely been excelled.

From MARK TWAIN (S. L. CLEMENS.)

I believe this is the first time I have ever furnished an opinion of a book, but I like "The Story of a Country Town" so much that I am glad of the chance to say so. Your style is so simple, sincere, direct, and at the same time so clear and strong, that I think it must have been born to you. * * Your pictures of that arid village life, and the insides and outsides of its people are vivid; and, what is more, true. I know, for I have seen it all; lived it all. * * In the person of "Big Adam" you have contributed a mighty figure to the procession of originals that is marching out of the ark of American literature to possess the land. * * Usually I don't care what becomes of the people in a story, but I was interested in these folks, and often think of them now.

From the Baltimore Morning Herald.

"The Story of a Country Town" is decidedly one of the most notable books of fiction from the pen of an American writer. * * There is nothing more striking in the range of fiction than the "Rev. John Westlock." It is to be hoped that Mr. Howe may be encouraged to devote himself to fiction, for if the promise held out is fulfilled, American literature must be prepared to welcome a new star.

Note: Fatout reports a speech to the Banquet of Wheelmen in Springfield, Mass., as “September 16 or 17, 1884,” but Sam was in Elmira with a sick wife on those days; no evidence was found of a trip to Springfield that fall. In the short speech, which may never have been given, Sam cited May 10 as the day he mounted “a bicycle for the first time “of the present year” [181]. His May 4 letter to Gerhardt puts it at least two weeks earlier, so it may be that Sam wrote the piece late in the year and did not recall the exact date.

April 28 Monday – Sam wrote a short note from Hartford to Charles Webster, directing him to call at Laurence Hutton’s “Wednesday morning, & walk up to the station with me....Remind me to give you all of Huck Finn that Howells has revised for the artist & printer” [MTBus 251].

Sam presented an unfinished paper to the Monday Evening Club; the idea being for each member to complete the paper as he thought best. This was Sam’s ninth presentation to the Club since his election in 1873 [Monday Evening Club].

On or after this day Sam wrote to Josephine Beemer per Frederick J. Hall. The woman was looking for “Wan Lee the Pagan,” a story she thought Sam wrote, but it was one of Bret Harte’s [MTP].

Sam purchased Edmund William Gosse’s Thomas Gray from the English Men of Letters Series [Gribben 269].

Sam left for New York City and stayed at the Brunswick Hotel [MTBus 251].

Josephine Beemer wrote to ask where she might find his story, “Wan Lee the Pagan” [MTP]. Note: this was Bret Harte’s tale.

George MacDonald wrote from Bordighera, Italy to ask: “Would it be of any use to attempt a lecture in Hartford in the month of October?” [MTP].

April 29 Tuesday – Sam gave a speech at a breakfast for Edwin Booth in New York City [Fatout, MT Speaking 656]. He likely spent the night at Laurence Hutton’s house, for he’d directed Webster to meet him there at 9 AM the next morning [MTBus 251].

April 30 Wednesday – Sam wrote two notes to Charles Webster (possibly the planned meeting for this day did not take place). He wanted to retrieve the P&P dramatization from Marshall Mallory and didn’t “want any nonsense out of that man” [MTBus 251]. His second note directed a sale of “that stock at 20” [MTP].

Sam inscribed Mark Twain’s (Burlesque) Autobiography to Laurence Hutton: “This space reserved for a sentiment, when one shall occur to the undersigned / Truly Yours S.L. Clemens— Apl. 30/84” [MTP].

Statement from Hubbard & Farmer, bankers & brokers, shows Sam’s balance: “$27,490.24; int 88.35; activity apr 12, 15, 21; on hand 200 St. Paul; 200 Mo Pac” [MTP].

May 1 Thursday – Sam and Charles Webster executed “some kind of informal agreement concerning the publication of Huckleberry Finn” [MTLTP 169]. Sam would be his own publisher, through Webster. The Charles L. Webster & Co. was created as a new subscription publishing house during May [Emerson 153].

May 3 Saturday – Hubbard & Farmer per Way bankers & brokers advised stock purchases [MTP].

May 4 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to the Gerhardts in Paris, France. Sam disclosed the family wouldn’t be traveling to Europe this year—pleading poverty.

We have made but few investments in the last few years which have not turned out badly. Our losses during the past three years have been prodigious.

Sam sent their love with the Twichells who would “sail for Europe June 14 (Julia doesn’t go)”. The rest of the letter is praise for the Gerhardt’s artwork, especially a work called “The Echo” [MTP]. Note: this “Echo” may have been Hattie’s painting, but Karl Gerhardt did a statuette by the same name which was placed on exhibition at Vorce’s in Hartford [Courant Feb. 7, 1885 p.1].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam about the P&P play, which Howells thought was “not more than half long enough,” needing more “fill in from the book with more life and incident.” He offered to show it to the Boston Museum Theatre people, but was convinced he knew what their answer would be [MTHL 2: 485].

May 5 Monday ca. – In his Autobiography, Sam gives “about the 5th of May” as the date “the crash came and several Grant families found themselves absolutely penniless” from the fraud of “a brisk young man by the name of Ferdinand Ward” [MTA 1: 29-30]. This event would greatly affect Sam’s life.

Worden & Co. wrote to Sam on his account [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote about business: Marshall Mallory appointment; play sent to Howells; John T. Raymond written to; Sample cover for HF sent; Chatto sent acceptance of terms on HF [MTP].

May 6 Tuesday – Howells had received and read Sam’s dramatization of P&P and wrote on May 4 that it was “altogether too thin and slight.” He felt Sam needed to fill in more from the book and that overall it was too short, and “the parlance is not sufficiently ‘early English’.” Sam replied:

“Well, then, some day I’ll try to remedy the play, but I’d rather take a dose of medicine. I am greatly obliged to you for reading it & telling me” [MTHL 2: 486].

Sam also wrote from Hartford to Parish B. Johnson, probably from his Nevada days.

My Dear Warrior— / I remember when you went away soldiering—as Captain, I think—and I also remember the mountain-mahogany beef & the cobblestone biscuits, & a number of the boarders. But a charitable Deity, overlooking services shirked, & other sins, has permitted me to forget the rest of the belongings of that boarding house & our sojourn in it...The life out there had its pleasant side, but it was the side that was outside Mrs. Doyle’s hashery [MTP]. Note: There is a record of Parish B. Johnson resigning as a 2nd lieutenant from the army on Dec. 20, 1863, as well as a member by that name in the Washington State 1st Biennial Legislature at Walla Walla (Ed: the town so well liked it was named twice) in 1867.

Sam also wrote a short note to Roswell Smith, editor and owner of Century: “I hunted up the house, along with my wife and we liked it immensely...I’ll retire to my den & my repose again” [MTP]. Note: the house in question was for George W. Cable to rent in Simsbury, Conn.

May 7 Wednesday – Sam had received and approved of the cover for HF. He wrote from Hartford to Webster of his approval, with one detail: “the boy’s mouth is a trifle more Irishy than necessary.” Edward W. Kemble had been chosen as the artist for the book and had to rework many illustrations from such objections [MTLTP 174]. As always, Webster handled the details and the dirty work.

May 8 Thursday – Charles A. Dana for The New York Sun wrote: “There is no use talking. I don’t see any way but for you to write me two or three short stories not exceeding ten or twenty thousand words apiece. As for pay I will agree that you shall have more than you ever got and you can print them in a book as much as you like afterwards” and “I have got Henry James and Bret Harte, and I must have you” [MTP].

May 9 Friday – Lorenz Rohr (1846-1902) editor of the Kansas Freie Presse wrote to Sam, sending him a translation of the song, “Lorelei” [MTP]. Note: Sam replied on May 12. He wrote on the env., “Another Lorelei ass.”

May 10 Saturday – Sam had not forgotten the new Sellers play. He wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster enclosing a May 10 letter from Howells about an actor Frank Daniel. Howells had seen Daniel in a Boston play, The Rag Baby, by Charles Hoyt. John T. Raymond had not come around, and his continued success in another play left him uninterested. Note: though Sam dated this May 10, so had Howells, from Boston. It’s possible that either man misdated his letter, so this letter may have been written May 11.

“If you have had no correspondence with Raymond, Charley, maybe it would be well for you to write Howells & suggest that he have a talk with this manager about the Sellers play.” Note: Webster received a letter from Raymond dated May 11 from Denver, Colo. refusing Webster’s May 5 offer for the new Sellers play. There wasn’t enough money in it for him [MTBus 253].

May 11 Sunday – Sam responded from Hartford to an unidentified person, that he could not “remember having ever been on a school committee in Virginia City...” nor did he “remember knowing a man in Virginia City named Freeborn.” Sam did know a man by that name in San Francisco and figured he’d be “quite sixty years old, now, if alive” [MTP].

Orion and Mollie Clemens wrote to Sam and Livy (Mollie added to this on May 12). Orion talked of an article in Science Monthly, which ascribed good health to sleeping in “careful ventilation.” Ma read the article and was doing well with that advice. Molly wrote that Orion was living on bread & water and that “Ma eats more than she has for years—without it hurting her” [MTP].

George P. Wallihan wrote to Clemens on Minneapolis notepaper asking for “some memento” for their library [MTP].

May 11 Sunday, after – Sam wrote from Hartford to Frank Bliss, enclosing a request from George P. Wallihan (May 11) of the Minneapolis Press Club for books to supply their library. Sam directed Bliss (on Wallihan’s letter) to “send him, in cloth, such of my books as you have published...” [MTP].

May 12 Monday – Sam wrote a short note from Hartford to Charles Webster. “Parsloe and Aldrich are not in Europe, they are playing in the West. I’m beginning to look for you here, now” [MTBus 254].

Sam also wrote to Howells, congratulating him on the acceptance of his sale of an opera to the “Bijou Theatre people” announced in a letter of May 10. Sam asked Howells to approach “that manager about running Sellers” [MTHL 2: 487].

Sam also wrote to Charles A. Dana, editor/owner of the New York Sun, who wrote on May 8 asking for “two or three short pieces not exceeding ten or twenty thousand words apiece” [MTHL 2: 490]. Sam replied:

“I am busy writing up my recent experiences on a bicycle, now, but when I finish that I will sit down & take a solid think & see if it is in me to write a short story of an acceptable sort....I want to write it” [MTHL 2: 490-1n1]. Note: Sam would ask Howells on June 1 how much the Sun paid.

Sam also replied to the May 9 of Lorenz Rohr. Born in Bavaria, Rohr emigrated to the U.S. in 1869. He translated French and German plays for Augustin Daly, and some standard American poems into German, including works by Longfellow and Lowell. Sam wrote this about the difficulty translating lyrics from “Lorelei.”

“The translators all approach it, but they all fail, in one place or another....There is a subtle something about the Lorelei which is intangible as air, & as elusive as a fragrance; & no translator has quite captured that, & in my belief no translator ever will. It is the soul of the thing, the poetry” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: his travel plans to come see Clemens; pictures brought; paper costs [MTP].

May 13 Tuesday – Mary Keily finished her Jan. 23 letter [MTP].

May 14 Wednesday – Edgar W. Howe for Atchison Globe wrote to Clemens: He’d sent Aldrich a book and all those on the list Sam furnished. He was working on another book, this one not as much a history as the first [MTP].

James B. Pond wrote to Clemens: “I have had a talk with Mr. Roswell Smith about the house for Mr Cable. He & I think it would be best for you to take charge of the affair. I am willing to pay my share...” [MTP].

May 15 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to James B. Pond about Roswell Smith’s proposal:

Roswell has got up a Hartford-Cable-Lecture; & he put the Hartford end of it in my hands, & described how he was going to put the New York end of it through, himself. Do you remember how he carried out his contract? I do—and don’t you doubt it. And now Roswell would put another project in my hands! Why, it almost makes me smile.

Sam rejected Smith’s idea of taking up support for George W. Cable without first asking him, and wasn’t even sure Smith was serious. Sam suggested “...another candidate for Hartford lecture-honors—George McDonald.”

Frederick J. Hall sent a telegram to Clemens: “Received the following from Worden & Co. Please send us check for 2500 additional margin” [MTP].

May 16 Friday – Sam sent to an unidentified person: “Very Truly Yours / S.L. Clemens / Mark Twain / Hartford May 16/84” [MTP].

Charles E. Wilson wrote to Sam, enclosing a newsletter/flyer and an invitation. Wilson was president of a Boston club, the Amateur Journalist’s Club. He invited Sam to the “Grand Reunion and Ratification Meeting” on May 17. Sam wrote on the envelope:

“Amateur Journalists / One of the Chief 19th Century Absurdities” [MTP]. Note: this is not the same man Sam wrote to in 1855.

Worden & Co. wrote advising sale of stock [MTP].

May 17 Saturday – Sam telegraphed Charles Langdon: “Can I see you in New York tomorrow evening answer C.L. Clemens [sic]” [MTP]. Note: this found with Langdon’s May 21, 1884 answer in Langdon’s letter of 22 May 1885!

Milicent W. Shinn for Overland Monthly wrote to Clemens about a planned dinner for Mr. Scott that would have to be put off until fall, and also some of Harte’s irregularities: “Yes, I have heard many things from many men of Mr Harte’s editorial peculiarities” [MTP].

Worden & Co., wrote to Clemens, financial statement enclosed, $5,062.50 balance [MTP].

May 19 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, telling him he'd sold the Oregon & Transcontinental stock at 12 dollars; asking him for a copy of Rubayat by Omar Khayam published by Osgood, and that Osgood was about to sail for Europe, so “get everything squared up before he leaves” [MTP].

May 20 Tuesday – Willard C. Gompf for Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. wrote to Clemens, “yours of the 19th inst. is at hand. Of course we are sorry that you do not ‘talk’ now,” and they invited him to their meeting of writers to talk [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “answered”

May 21 Wednesday – Charles Langdon replied in NYC to Sam's May 17 telegram: “Your message of the seventeenth to C.J. Kingdon has just accidentally fallen into my hands. I shall be here tomorrow. Start for home Saturday” [MTP]. Note: the name errors were ascribed to the telegram being sent by telephone.

May 22 Thursday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens twice. First note enclosed John T. Raymond's answer; Howells' success in placing the play in Boston; how many cloth books should he contract? And how many in sheets? Second note: Crown Point trip & stock; working to settle with Osgood; paper costs; advised not to invest in stocks but in mortgages: “with all this scare here in N.Y. some one is going to get pinched” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Close with Raymond. / Bind how many books?” Second note on env., “Price for paper—6 87/100 per lb binding 20 to 70.”

May 23 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Edward House. Commenting on an old controversy about who wrote a book Bread-Winners, Sam remarked:

Gott im Himmel! I would delight to live in Japan; for my idea of heaven itself is a place where all the issues are dead ones, & no man, not even the angels, cares a damn.

There is a live issue here, but it will be no longer alive by the time this reaches Japan. It is this: whether Twichell & I will beat the bicycle, or whether the bicycle will beat us. We have fought the creature a couple of weeks, now, & we have honorable wounds to show for it. This morning we traveled a couple of miles, mainly up hill, —& made it derved uncomfortable for the wagons; for they could never tell just which way we were proposing to steer—& neither could we.

Sam further remarked that he was presently “catless & forlorn” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a list for Charles Webster: take Raymond's offer; congratulations on the paper bargain struck for Huck Finn; his relief that all was wrapped up with Osgood before he sailed; Order 30,000 copies of Huck Finn printed & bound; get a contract with good terms on subsequent printings up to 5,000 each; begin the canvass early to have the desired 40,000 orders by Dec. 5, which would allow publication by Dec. 15; last, did he get the sketches not included in White Elephant from Osgood? [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: 17 drawings by Edward W. Kemble sent by express [MTP].

May 24 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford, the last extant business letter to James R. Osgood. He'd received the sketches left out of The Stolen White Elephant. Though business had ended between the two men with Sam forming his own publishing company with Charles Webster, friendly relations continued, as evidenced by the sharing of Sam's off-color story, 1601.

“I have mailed you a 1601; but mind, if it is for a lady you are to assume the authorship of it yourself.

I have invented a new game of billiards, and I want you to stop over with us, next time you are passing Hartford, and try it on. It is meaner than cushion caroms—a good deal meaner. Truly Yours, /S.L. Clemens” [MTLP 168].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster.

“Some of the pictures are good, but none of them are very very good. The faces are generally ugly, & wrenched into over-expression amounting sometimes to distortion.... The pictures will do—they will just barely do—and that is the best I can say for them” [MTBus 255]. Note: Many of the pictures were redrawn.

Sam also wrote to William Dean Howells:

Good land, have you seen the “poems” of that South Carolina idiot, “Belton O’Neill Townsend, A B. & Attorney at Law?”—& above all, the dedication of them to you?

If you did write him what he says you did, you richly deserve hanging; & if you didn’t, he deserves hanging.—But he deserves hanging any-way & in any & all cases—no, boiling, gutting, brazing in a mortar—no, no, there is no death that can meet his case. Now think of this literary louse dedicating his garbage to you, & quoting encouraging compliments from you & poor dead Longfellow. Let us hope there is a hell, for this poets sake, who carries his bowels in his skull, & when they operate works the discharge into rhyme & prints it.

Ah, if he had only dedicated this diarrhea to Aldrich, I could just howl with delight; but the joke is lost on you—just about wasted. Ys Ever Mark [MTHL 2: 488]. Note: Howells responded on May 26.

May 26 Monday – In Boston, Howells responded to Sam’s May 24 letter and called Belton O’Neill Townsend “That incredible wretch” and his poetry “trash.” Howells had printed some good prose articles by Townsend in 1877 and 1878 [MTHL 2: 489].

Arthur B. Deming wrote from Kirtland, Ohio about “discovering” laws of heredity in the Bible [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Rot”

Miss E.T. Morgan wrote from Northville, Tenn. thanking him for the set of books he sent their school library and asking him to lecture there [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Damm!”

May 27 Tuesday – Sam wrote for Livy to Isabella B. Hooker. “I write in Livy’s place because I am idle for the moment & she is very busy.” Isabella had asked the Clemenses in a May 3 letter to support her suffrage program, and had solicited other Nook Farm support. She wrote:

“I will ask you to help me pay expenses of other speakers from New York & Boston & the hall—all which I have assumed in order to make the sessions free” [Andrews 261n72; Note: year is questioned]

Sam responded that he’d conferred with Livy and offered $50 a year toward her salary [MTP].

A statement dated Sept. 2, 1884 by Charles Webster shows Sam purchased a copy of “Rubayat” for 67¢ on this day.

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Clemens, against the idea that he would work for St. Gaudens or Ward, as they would not allow him to compete with them: “I am willing and glad to start in a small way, but I must be independent, or it’s the end of my career” [MTP].

William H. Gillette wrote to Clemens with his opinion that P&P made into a play would take some work and “rearranging” and also the insertion of “some slight ‘romance’ better be worked in if possible” [MTP].

May 28 Wednesday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam, sending paper dolls and “a few colored pictures” for the Clemens girls made by his daughter Mildred (Pilla) Howells (1872-1966) [MTHL 2: 490].

Bissell & Co. wrote to Clemens advised of purchase 200 shs of Union Pacific @ 39 ¼ [MTP].

Edward W. Bok wrote from Brooklyn to ask Clemens to give “a few words” at his society—the Young Men’s Philomathean Society [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “From that accursed Bok”

May 29 Thursday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: 20,000 cloth books binding ordered, a splendid bargain at 17.5¢ each with Robert Rutter; cost estimates for new book; Kemble’s pictures [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Pub details for Huck”

Bissell & Co. wrote to advise sale of 50 shares of Adams Express at 128 [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam & Livy about the statue of a horse he was working on [MTP].

May 31 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, praising the contracts for paper and printing he’d made on Huckleberry Finn. “If we had had such on those other books I would have come out a good deal better.” Sam felt the project of the cheap book (1002^d Arabian Night) had been delayed too long, and gave Webster “one solid day” to “catch that American News manager,” probably an agent who would sell/distribute the work. Sam had an article about how to ride a bicycle that he’d send to the New York Sun if the cheap book didn’t come off [MTBus 258].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: American News people wouldn’t commit to taking certain number of HF until they’d seen the book; would advise further [MTP].

Bissell & Co. wrote advice they’d sold 50 shares Adams Express @128 [MTP].

May, after – Sam gave a short speech for the Banquet of Wheelmen, Springfield, Mass., (reported by Fatout in error as conjecturally Sept. 16 or 17). The speech may be found in Mark Twain Speaking, p.181, and concerns Sam’s first experience with the bicycle as being “on the 10th of May, of the present year...” It is noted, however, that Sam wrote of a week of bicycle accidents on May 4 to Gerhardt. Robert Hirst said that Fatout never visited the MTP; this may account for several of his errors I discovered [D.F., ed.]

June 1 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells asking how much the New York Sun and other papers paid him for a story. Charles Dana, editor/owner of the Sun, wrote on May 8 asking for “two or three short pieces not exceeding ten or twenty thousand words apiece” [MTHL 2: 490].

June 2 Monday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam about selling one of his plays to Richard A. Dana of the New York Sun. He also mentioned Edgar W. Howe’s novel, The Story of a Country Town, which he and Sam had praised. Howe was the editor of the Atchison Globe. Howells wrote “an open letter” about the novel to the Century Magazine, and mentioned Thomas Sergeant Perry, a long time friend, and a close friend of Henry & William James (1842-1910) [MTHL 2: 491-2].

June 3 Tuesday – Annie M. Barnes for Acanthus Magazine wrote to Sam; a begging letter asking his autograph on a blank check so she might fund her printing office [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “This offers me beggar again”

Hattie J. Gerhardt wrote to Clemens & Livy, two photos enclosed.

We are so nicely here now in the family of an ancient Prof.—I can not exactly saying boarding because we are more at home: and every morning from 6 to 8—French lessons & as Mr. Grit is quite severe, I hope to make great progress. Just now I am trying to commit to memory the first book of “Telemaque” and also have three French exercises to write besides verbs. ... Baby is growing very fast and has eight little teeth and tries to outdo the children in talking—we are quite delighted with our two dozen photographs which Maison Hauteclair sent us free—Karl agrees with you that the little “Eve” is not idealized quite enough but if he has an offer liberal enough to allow him to cut in Marble he will remedy all that [MTP]. Note: The Adventures of Telemachus is a didactic French novel by Fénelon, Archbishop of Cambrai. It was published anonymously in 1699 and reissued in 1717 by his family.

June 4 Wednesday – Charles Webster wrote to Sam: Mr. Williams, Gen. Mgr of American News (book agent) wanted to see a HF dummy before committing to a number to sell [MTP].

June 6 Friday – In the afternoon, Sam played billiards with Sam Dunham, Franklin Whitmore, Henry Robinson, Charles Perkins, and Edward Bunce, while George Griffin, the butler, received telephone updates and announced ballots from the Chicago Republican convention. In mid-afternoon, James G. Blaine won the nomination on the fourth ballot. Connecticut's twelve delegates cast their votes for favorite son, Joseph R. Hawley [NY Times p.1, June 7, 1884]. Note: The convention's selection stimulated an interesting discussion in Sam's billiard room. See MTA 15-18 for a full account.

Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, that he'd given up on the bicycle article, not liking what he'd written; he needed to get to Quarry Farm and get busy on his "regular work." Don't give Dana of the N.Y. Sun any indication that he'd write something for the paper, and please get the drawing room car on the Lackawanna train for June 18 [MTP].

June 7 or 14 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to their ailing family doctor, Cincinnatus A. Taft, offering for him to be carried on a water bed to their home to escape the "cannon, the brass bands & shouting, & the other noisy harassments of Buckingham Day." The family was leaving on June 17 but would "gladly & cheerfully" stay if "our staying can be also of service" [MTP].

June 8 Sunday – Clara Clemens' tenth birthday.

Sam wrote in German to Edward K. Root. Translated by Sotheby's:

Dear Doctor: The next meeting will be taking place here on Thursday at eight o'clock. This evening we have made a change ?? the lecture consists only of 1_ pages of Schiller's 'Der Verbrecher aus verbornen Ehne,' and did not start at the beginning, but with the 7th paragraph of the story where one reads the following: 'Christian Wolf Warder owner of a restaurant ? [Sotheby's auction June 19, 2003, Lot 134].

Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster—no, he wanted a:

"...special sleeping car—dern the drawing room car...leaving Hoboken the morning of Wednesday the 18th ...Provide a comfortable chair for Livy, Charley—she doesn't like the sleeping-car seats" [MTP].

June 10 Tuesday – Charles A. Dana for the New York Sun wrote to suggest Sam write 16 or 18 thousand words, which would allow them to divide it into two parts; or two stories [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Wants 2 stories or 18000 words"

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: where to buy the Harden Hand Grenade fire extinguisher; inability to find Pond in; special RR car for Sam; Seen Mr. Dana; failed so far to get list of books Sam wanted: got note from Osgood for $6,884.65 of four months, which Bissell could discount; PS: Pond was in Poughkeepsie [MTP].

June 11 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, shipping back Kemble's pictures for Huck Finn. After modifications, Sam thought, "this batch of pictures is most rattling good," and only wanted one removed—"the lecherous old rascal kissing the girl at the campmeeting." Sam didn't want any pictures of the campmeeting—"The subject won't bear illustrating" [MTP].

Mettie Curry wrote from Carson City, Nev. “I am in great trouble and appeal to you for aid—I want ‘Tom Sawyer’ very much, indeed, I do not think I can live much longer without him, and am too poor to buy him. Will you send me a copy” [MTP]. Note: see ca. June 12 entry.

June 12 Thursday ca. – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, inserting a note from Mettie Curry of Carson City, Nevada, pleading poverty and asking for a copy of The Adventures of Tom Sawyer. Sam directed him to write her a note saying Sam had instructed him to send the book [MTP]. Note: This is probably Abraham Curry’s widow. Curry—“Old Curry, Abe Curry, Old Abe Curry”—was an instrumental leader in the formation of Nevada. He died in 1879. (See Mack, p.352 for a story of Mrs. Curry’s objection to Sam’s lecture tall tale of camels bearing snow in the Holy Land.)

June 12 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, saying he wanted “some of those hand-grenades. Say about 1 dozen for the stable, &c.” and a list of the other rooms. “I reckon that’s enough, ain’t it?” [MTP]. Note: The Hayword Hand Grenades were sealed bottles of water in a rack, to be thrown at a fire.

June 13 Friday – Hugo Erichsen in Detroit, Mich. sent a printed form asking what was Sam’s method of authorship [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “O, hell!”; Sam resisted any explanation of how he wrote, of the motivations of characters, and the like. He did not like to share such introspections or methods and felt they were unwarranted intrusions of his privacy.

June 17 Tuesday – The Clemens family’s annual trek to Elmira and Quarry Farm began. They left Hartford and traveled to New York City, where they spent the night [MTNJ 3: 55n124].

June 18 Wednesday – The Clemens family had escaped Hartford just in time. June 18 in Hartford was Buckingham Day, a local civic celebration for Union veterans. From the Hartford Courant:

If the weather is pleasant to-day there will be a great crowd of people in Hartford. The railroad companies have made arrangements to transport as many passengers as came here on Battle Flag Day in 1870. It has been thought, however, that the attendance would not be as large as on that day; but later reports indicate that the rush will be quite as great.

The Clemens family left New York by way of the Christopher Street Ferry to Hoboken, New Jersey, where they took a special car on the Delaware, Lackawanna, and Western Railroad for the ten-hour trip to Elmira. This was their usual routine each summer [MTNJ 3: 55-5n124].

June 22 Sunday – Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam & Livy about shipping a statuette [MTP].

June 23 Monday – Charles Webster wrote to Sam, c/o Crane in Elmira: possible postal fine of $50 for sending the prospectus with the words “sheep, half calf, & half morocco, written on the sample bindings”; billed Osgood another $225 for advertising he charged, and a bill for $600 for paper as well; $4,000 needed to buy paper soon—send $6,000 [MTP].

June 24 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles H. Clark of the Courant. The Clemenses were watching the papers closely but had seen nothing about Doctor Cincinnatus Taft—how was he doing? Sam didn’t want to burden the Taft family by writing [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, advising him to sue Osgood if he didn’t “pay that $825 instantly...before he gets out of the country. Better tell him I have so instructed you. I enclose check for the $6,719.45” [MTP].

June 25 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, correcting a drawing of Kemble’s:

“...on the pilot house of that steamboat-wreck he artist has put TEXAS—having been misled by some of Huck’s remarks about the boat’s ‘texas’—a thing which is part of every boat. that particular boat’s name was Walter Scott, I think” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Sam: Rec’d Sam’s check for $6,719.45; ad from NY World enclosed of June 23—what should they do about it? (ad from Frank Coker News Co., Talladega, Ala. selling cheap copies of Twain’s works) [MTP].

June 26 Thursday – Homeopathic Doctor Cincinnatus A. Taft died in Hartford at the age of 64. Four decades before he’d been diagnosed with “one lung gone” and given six months to live by two of the best physicians in the country. Taft’s autopsy revealed that his lungs were both perfect, but that he died from a stomach ailment [N.Y. Times, “THE DOCTORS MISTAKEN” June 30 p1].

On or just after this date, Sam wrote a letter from Elmira to Charles Webster, enclosing Webster’s June 25 letter and warning about The Frank Coker News Co. of Talladega, Ala. advertisement in the New York World of cheap paperback books for seven of Sam’s books.

“If the American Pub will immediately bring suit & smash these pirates, all right; but otherwise I know what I will do. Notify Bliss that I expect him to protect & defend my copyrights (all that his Co has anything to do with) promptly & thoroughly” [MTP].

June 27 Friday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam, asking if it were “wholly convenient” he’d like to be paid $2,000 on account for his Library of Humor work [MTHL 2: 492].

June 28 Saturday – In Elmira, Sam responded to Howells’ request of June 27 for payment of $2,000 on the work he’d done on the Library of Humor. Faced with mounting costs on the production of HF, the first book of Webster & Co., Sam begged off. Besides the financial pinch, Sam was in no mood to be generous.

“My days are given up to cursings—both loud & deep—for I am reading the H. Finn proofs. They don’t make a very great mistakes, but those that do occur are of a nature to make a man curse his teeth loose” [MTHL 2: 493].

Orion Clemens wrote to thank Sam for the $150 in checks; “All pretty well” He wanted a new picture of the family [MTP].

July ca. – Sam sent a letter of condolence to Ellen C. Taft (Mrs. Cincinnatus A. Taft) on the recent passing of her husband, the Clemens’ family doctor. Evidently Mrs. Taft and her daughter were leaving the area [MTP].

July 1 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, wanting to know how much was paid for the elder Mr. Howells on his grape-scissor invention; and reminding him that after Huck Finn was published he wanted him to “go to work & publish one or two of the historical games”; to watch out for the Canadian pirates—Sam had been told by Bliss that they sometimes hung with pressmen and paid for advance sheets; Sam concluded that “Kemble’s pictures are mighty good, now” [MTP].

July 2 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, asking about illustrations not returned with the 1002^d Arabian Night tale [MTP]. Note: The 131 pictures, called “grotesque drawings of his own composition” [MTS&B 88] were lost and have never been recovered.

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam, saying it was all right about the $2,000 payment, that now he had money, but when he asked he was buying a house and his railroad stock had fallen thirteen points. About Sam's struggles with the HF proofs he wrote:

"Why need you read the Huck Finn proofs? I went over the printed copy so carefully that a good office reading was all that was necessary. If I'd supposed they [Webster & Co] were going to send them to you I would have read them again myself" [MTHL 2: 495].

Ellen C. Taft, now a widow, wrote to Sam upset about the New York Times article on her late husband:

We as a family have had our feelings so hurt by an article in the Times, purporting to be a kindly notice of Dr Taft, that I want you, who knew, loved and appreciated him to write something which will be as pleasant to us to read as the one I allude to was unpleasant. You knew his tender gentle ways in a sick room, the courage he gave his patients to live, as well as the skill that supported the courage, the blessed cleanliness of his person, and of his attire—How the little children loved him, and how he returned this love. All these traits give so much...Isn't it strange that the world goes on just the same and he out of it—where? [MTP].

James B. Pond wrote to Clemens that Cable made no answer to his proposition and suggested John Henry Riley who was very popular in Indianapolis [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Suggests Riley. Told him I would have nobody but Cable—or the thing was 'off'"

Hugo Erichsen in Detroit, Mich. again sent the same printed request to Clemens & wrote "PS please answer soon" [MTP]. Note: sent before on June 13.

Charles Webster wrote business matters to Clemens [MTP].

July 2–10 Thursday – Sam wrote in his July 10 letter to the widow Taft, that he'd been:

"...almost daily in the dentist's hands during the past seven or eight days" [see July 10, July 18 entries].

July 3 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to James B. Pond, that he'd only "hitch teams" on the lecture circuit with George W. Cable, "So don't throw out any feelers toward Riley or make any propositions to him" [MTP].

James B. Pond wrote to Clemens: "I will answer all the letters you will forward. Everybody says 'Mark Twain' would do better alone, or he would be the one everybody wants to hear. So why not nerve up & go at it" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Have already told him no / will not go alone"

* Charles A. Dana for the New York Sun wrote: "What is the prospect? When do you think we can get it?" [MTP]. Note: "it" unspecified.

July 4 Friday – In Boston, Howells wrote Sam that Webster had advised him that John T. Raymond accepted their terms for the new Sellers play. Webster had asked if Raymond could read the play, and Howells wanted to confirm it met with Sam's approval. Sam answered affirmatively the next day [MTHL 2: 495].

July 5 Saturday – Sam wrote from Elmira to unidentified persons, who evidently had asked about the cheap (50 cent) paperbacks being advertised by the Coker Co.

"Dear Sirs—They are pirates—& unusually frank & bold, it seems to me. We are after them with a legal gun-boat" [MTP].

Sam wrote twice to Charles Webster:

Keep an eye out, & see if the ad. of the Alabama pirates disappears from the newspapers. If it doesn't disappear pretty soon, I will try to take my copyrights away from the Am. Co.

Yes, let Raymond see copy of the play. When you come to make contract with him, try to leave as few loopholes as possible, or he will be a big annoyance to you...He will report to you, not me [MTP].

Weed Sewing Machine Co. (manufacturer of sewing machines & bicycles) Hartford wrote to Clemens: "We express your bicycle to-day, addressed as your request" [MTP].

July 6 Sunday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, asking that Richard Irving Dodge's book (he thought he'd only written one) be sent, though Sam couldn't recall the exact title. (See Gribben 196-7.)

"I want several other PERSONAL narratives of life & adventure out yonder on the Plains & in the Mountains, if you can run across them—especially life among the Indians. Send me what you can find. I mean to take Huck out there" [MTP]. Note: Shortly after this date, during July, Sam began work on a 228 page manuscript "Huck Finn and Tom Sawyer Among the Indians." He abandoned the work, probably in mid-August [Camfield, bibliog.].

James B. Pond wrote "I have a post from Cable. He will be here Tuesday." He proposed a scheme [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "No"

July 7 Monday – Richard Garvey (1843-1931) wrote on Missouri Wheel Co. letterhead, St. Louis:

Saml. L. Clemens Esq / Friend "Mark"

When yourself and a Companion left the "Quaker City" at Naples in July 67 and came to Rome you there met a young American who roomed at the Via Babuino #68 (Pincion Hill) it was his pleasure to show you some points of the Eternal City.

After exactly 17 years he now addresses you first to Congratulate you on your continued success and next to greet you as a brother wheelman.

By todays express I send one of our patent Duryea Saddles try it and if found worthy give us a few lines on it. / Yours Truly / Richard Garvey [MTP]. Note: "brother wheelman" refers to Clemens recent struggles learning to ride a bicycle; Garvey was Captain of the Missouri Bicycle Club. Clemens was in Rome from July 27 to Aug. 1, 1867.

July 8 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to James B. Pond. He was impatient to contract with Cable, who didn't jump at $350 per week. Sam didn't want to consider others; evidently, Pond had suggested Thomas Nast:

"O damnation, I would rather pay Cable $450 a week & his expenses than pay Nast $300. I don't enjoy roosting around & waiting."

Sam wanted a final answer by July 15, and if it took a day longer, he'd "have made other arrangements" [MTP].

In Elmira Sam wrote to Mr. H. Speight (this may be Harry Speight 1855-1915).

No, it was at the Plow inn Ottenhöfen ... a girl of about 18, the landlord's daughter. There was nothing German about her form or features .. These were American decidedly—but she was German, born & bred. After several months of uninterrupted German uncomeliness, she was to me superhumanly beautiful ...

[Note: TA pages 213 (Oxford facsimile ed.): “We took our meal of fried trout one day at the Plow Inn in a very pretty village (Ottenhöfen)” and p.489: “And I remember that the only native match to her I saw in all Europe was the young daughter of the landlord of a village inn in the Black Forest. Why don’t more people in Europe marry and keep hotel?”. ABE books Bookseller: Sophie Dupre ABA ILAB Calne, WIL, United Kingdom; Inventory # SD31792; accessed April 29, 2009].

Charles A. Dana for the New York Sun wrote to invite Sam to Long Island next Saturday afternoon, “and pass the sabbath there under my roof? The billiard table is good, the light beautiful, and the society first rate” [MTP].

July 9 Wednesday – James B. Pond wrote to Clemens about what he thought it would take to get Cable on the lecture circuit with Sam [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Tell him yes, offer him $450 a week & expenses”

W. Schmidt wrote from Phila. a letter all in German [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “German letter / Answer it”

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: he never saw the 1002 tale, Osgood must have it; gave Raymond a copy of the play to read; the TS play was sent to Sam in Hartford, Howells didn’t have it; Dodge’s book and Buffalo Bill’s book sent; enclosed Bliss’ check for old books sold [MTP].

July 10 Thursday – Sam wrote a one-liner from Elmira to James B. Pond:

“Yes, offer Cable $450 a week & expenses—but be sure & let me know the result by the 16th” [MTP].

Sam wrote from Elmira to Ellen C. Taft, widow of Dr. Cincinnatus A. Taft about the New York Times article of June 30 that focused on her husband’s autopsy (See June 26 entry). Mrs. Taft wrote Sam on July 2, upset about the article, but did not send it. Sam asked for it and reflected on the “certain beautiful traits” of her husband. He added:

“...I do not wish to seem to be defending Dr. Taft; for to Hartford people that would be like defending light, & warmth, & water.... I have been a long time answering; but you will understand the delay when I explain that I have been almost daily in the dentist’s hands during the past seven or eight days. It has unfitted me for everything” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote the Courant on July 18. See entry.

Sam also wrote five notes to Charles Webster—the first one congratulating Charles and Annie on the birth of their son, his grand-nephew, Samuel Charles Webster, born on July 8, 1884. The second note was a follow up to the book Sam wanted by Colonel Dodge—Charles had sent Our Wild Indians, but Sam wanted Dodge’s first book, but couldn’t recall the name (The Plains of the Great West and Their Inhabitants—see Gribben, 197) [MTP]. One way to angle for a raise is to name the baby after the boss.

The third note was a question/reminder to “draw the Osgood money out of Bissell’s bank & transfer it to” Webster’s bank in New York [MTP].

The fourth note was a list of short notes that Bliss’s check had been received; he didn’t want the “Texas Siftings” book; “Give our love to Annie & the baby”; a package had arrived that he hoped was Buffalo Bill’s book [MTP].

The fifth missive was a bit longer—a letter about Karl Gerhardt sending a statue to Hartford that was to be exhibited in New York and then placed in the Clemens home. Evidently Gerhardt had written that he’d sent the statue to Hartford.

“Now when you get a chance will you just go to work & collar that little statue & stop it from getting to Hartford? Just hang on to it till 6 east 23d street is ready to take it & exhibit it. I could swear my teeth loose over this d——d idiocy [PS] We don’t want it till autumn” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: “I send you by mail today 11 galleys of proof”; should they take on a book from Hubbard Bros.—Blaine and Logan? [MTP].

July 11 Friday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, acknowledging receipt of a check from American Publishing Co., but still waiting for one from Slote & Co. Keeping Webster hopping on a plethora of details and projects, Sam added:

As you have a couple of dull months, now, suppose you tackle my soon-to-be portable calendar, & heave your surplus energies into it [MTP].

George W. Cable wrote from Simsbury, Conn. to bless Sam for recommending “this place. We have been here two days now and are quite delighted” [MTP].

Jane Clemens wrote from Keokuk to Sam & family about the pictures received. “Where Jean is by her self she is the best looking one of all”; she offered critiques on each picture [MTP].

July 12 Saturday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens that Annie & the baby were doing well; he had to have the invoice & bill of lading on the statuette in order to get it out of customs [MTP].

July 12–August 14 Thursday – Sometime during this stretch, Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster bout the dwindling profits on the scrapbooks with Slote & Co.

“Won’t Koch & Co buy the Slote two-third interest? They ought to get it for next to nothing; then I would buy my one-third interest.”

Evidently, Webster had received the note of July 10 about Gerhardt’s statue and had trouble locating the gallery where it was to be exhibited, because Sam responded:

“As to the statuette, you know it is to go to the Art Exhibition I told you of, in 23d st. That’s all I know. 6 E 23d st., Madison Square South. It opens September 1” [MTP]. Note: July 12–Aug. 14 is chosen here over July 10–Aug. 14 as in the MTP designation.

July 13 Sunday – Sam wrote two notes from Elmira to Charles Webster. The first was a directive to find a man in New York City, Ellis or Alison, recommended by Twain’s neighbor Newton Case, who would fix their Hartford furnace. The second note was a directive to support his recommendations for projects with his reasons.

“...a mere blind conundrum, without either recommendations or reasons, is a sort of thing which I don’t want the bother of trying to answer” [MTP].

July 14 Monday – After much searching Charles Webster purchased Richard Irving Dodge’s Our Wild Indians, and Life on the Plains for Clemens, who used these books for information of Indian depravity in writing “Huck Finn and Tom Sawyer Among the Indians.” The total cost was $3.84 [Gribben 197].

James B. Pond wrote to Clemens that Cable had accepted Sam’s offer of $450 a week plus expenses during dinner with him at Simsbury. “I suppose you will want the route about 20 or 24 weeks, with two weeks for holidays” [MTP].

July 15 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Howells, who wrote on July 2 and July 4. Howells had obtained the money elsewhere and told Sam to forget he'd asked. In the latter letter Howells wrote that he'd been notified by Webster that John T. Raymond had accepted their terms on the new Sellers play. Howells wasn't certain he should let Raymond see the play. Sam responded:

I meant to write you that I told Webster to let Raymond see the play, but I have fooled around & neglected it. This fooling around has been done in the dental chair. I go down every other day & have one or two teeth gouged out & stuffed. I have been in the dental chair ten days, a couple of hours a day; & shall be there 3 days this week & I suppose as many more next week. The dentist is a bright man, & gouges & digs & saws & rasps & hammers, & keeps up a steady stream of entertaining talk, all the time, like his professional ancestor the barber; & so these have been very pleasant relaxations to me, & I shall be rather sorry to see them come to an end. They have been a vast improvement to me, too—an education; I can stand the most exquisite pain, now, without outward manifestation; & indeed without any very real discomfort. The Indian has fallen in my estimation; he is no better than you or me—he is merely a product of education. I have picked up a lot of good dental stuff, & I wish I had the time & energy to write it up. / On my off days I work at a new story (Huck Finn & Tom Sawyer among the Indians 40 or 50 years ago) [MTHL 2: 495-6].

Sam also wrote to James B. Pond. George W. Cable had agreed verbally to terms for a reading tour under Pond's management. Sam didn't want to be bothered by people writing him about the tour.

"I mean to forward the letters to you unanswered & depend on you to answer them. Is that satisfactory?" [MTP].

Sam then wrote to Charles Webster, directing him to draw up his contract with Pond. The readings were to begin after November 4, election day, and continue through February, with ten days off for the holidays. Pond would be paid $450 per week and expenses; Pond would accompany them or send his brother, furnish a treasurer, attend to all details that would come "under the head of business," be "boss & head-ringmaster," and "make the journeys as short & easy as circumstances will allow," and receive "10 per cent of the profits of the raid for his services." Several other details were listed, among which was the arrangement of the tour so that Sam could be in Canada December 18 to 20, in order to copyright Huckleberry Finn there, if the book was ready—of course, once more, Sam reminded Webster that this would depend on 40,000 orders; if that number hadn't been reached then the tour would "be so arranged as to throw" him "into Canada 3 days again, 4 or 5 weeks later" [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens about receiving letters from competing firms anxious to get HF. Bancroft & Co. in San Francisco wanted it badly but they hadn't sold many books in the prior year, only 2,825. An unnamed firm claimed they were much better. He'd given up the Blaine book as it would interfere with the canvassing of HF. He liked the idea of "Huck among the Indians" [MTP].

July 16 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to James B. Pond, asking for the tour prospectus to be sent so he might add a paragraph. His P.S. reminder—he would not read in Elmira or Hartford—no objections to other places [MTP].

July 17 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster.

July 18 Friday – Sam wrote from Elmira to the editor of the Hartford Courant in tribute to Dr. Cincinnatus A. Taft.

Outwardly—if one may apply the term to a man—he was beautiful; a stately figure, faultlessly clothed, an intellectual face, white hair & the long white beard of a sage, an eye that could be severe but preferred to be kind, a carriage & bearing full of courteous grace & dignity. And the inner man was companion to the outer; for his heart was firm & strong, but it was also compassionate, & freighted with human sympathies. [MTP].

July 21 Monday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens, enclosing a draft of a contract with Pond, who had not yet seen it. He announced the baby boy's name was Samuel Charles Webster [MTP].

July 22 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, who had drafted a contract with Pond and advised Sam, who more clearly defined Pond's expenses to be "food, lodging & transportation."

"If he should become unmanageable & go to thrashing people, I should not want to have to pay his daily police court expenses. And it will be like him to do that." Otherwise, Sam offered that "this contract sounds right." [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: proofs sent; history game worked on [MTP].

July 23 Wednesday – Augustus Saint-Gaudens wrote to Clemens about Gerhardt, who had been in to see him. He didn't want to hire him as an assistant since that never seemed to work out. He thought Gerhardt was a good sculptor based on the works shown but didn't think it fair for him to evaluate him. He advised him to do the bust of Twain and also the medallion [MTP]. See insert of Twain's bust by Gerhardt.

Bissell & Co. wrote to Clemens his 19th recd, "the note in a/c as requested & hld the stock named as collateral" [MTP].

July 24 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, asking if a small change in the title page to Huck Finn might still be possible. Sam wanted it to say "Time, forty to fifty years ago," rather than simply "Time, forty years ago." If printing had started, "let it go" [MTP]. Note: Sam's change appears on the facsimile Oxford copy.

Sam also wrote to Charles Erskine Scott Wood, who had asked for a letter of introduction, which Sam enclosed "with great pleasure." As for news from West Point, Sam confessed:

"I tried to get to West Point in June but made a failure of it; so I can't tell you any news from there. But I've brought a bicycle here to this mountain-top, & if you wait a while, that can be made to furnish you some" [MTP].

July 25 Friday – James B. Pond issued a circular announcing the joint appearance of Mr. Sam'l L. Clemens and George W. Cable "in a unique series of literary Entertainments" [MTNJ 3: 60n143]. See Lorch, p 166-7 for the entire text.

July 26 Saturday – Jean Clemens' fourth birthday.

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: statuette safe at his office; conferred with Pond who didn't think a treasurer was needed, but an advance agent was; he referred Pond to Sam on the question; would alter the title page as Sam requested; he hadn't forgotten the furnace or the game; please return proofs [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "return the pages"

July 27 Sunday – James B. Pond from Everett House wrote that he thought the tour should run through March or to mid-April, which was only 14 weeks when there should be 20. "Everybody says our show is going to pull like the Devil. If you know how that is---hot! HOT!! HOT!!! HOT!!!!" [MTP].

July 28 Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to James B. Pond. The circular looked good but Sam made a few corrections to the proof. It was best not to mention there would be new material, as Sam wanted to “draw just on our names alone.” Pond was evidently lobbying for a longer tour; Sam’s answer:

“Goodness knows I would gladly run 20 weeks, & I did my best to persuade the madam, but did not succeed. So that idea is killed. She almost said I might read again next year if I didn’t read too long this time, so I thought I better not press the matter too far” [MTP].

July 30 Wednesday – Orion Clemens wrote to wish Sam would send him photos like he’d sent Ma. He was still working 4 hours a day on the history research [MTP].

August 1 Friday – A.H. Kelland wrote from N. Haven to Clemens sending him an article similar to the one she once wrote on the death of the Democrat party (not in file) [MTP].

George C. Blanchard wrote from Fairfield Conn.—an oblique begging letter [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “from a fraud”

August 2 Saturday – Charles Eliot Norton wrote from Ashfield to invite Sam to their annual dinner, between the 17th and 26th of this month, whatever suited him; bring the wife, the children, his home was “elastic” [MTP].

August 5 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to an unidentified person.

“I apologize for this rag of paper, & explain that I am cruising in strange waters, where paper is scarce. (Paper is always scarce in strange waters—& even in the other kind)” [MTP].

Percy Aylmer wrote from Durham, England to ask Clemens if he’d consent to having them publish a book entirely of his quotations that an unspecified young lady had compiled [MTP].

August 6 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Eliot Norton declining an invitation to the annual dinner for the arts in Ashfield Mass., pleading age and rheumatism for “so long a journey in the heats of summer.”

Some day, I hope, you will change your dinner-hour to winter; then I am likely to be close by & idle; also hungry. ...

P.S. I seem to enlarge upon my work as if it were something important. Indeed it is not; but I do it, just as if it were—that’s the heroism of the thing [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens, sending more proof pages [MTP].

August 7 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Howells.

I have no doubt I am doing a most criminal thing & outrageous thing—for I am sending you these infernal Huck Finn proofs—but the very last vestige of my patience has gone to the devil, & I cannot bear the sight of another slip of them. My hair turns white with rage, at the sight of the mere outside of the package; & this time I didn’t even try to glance inside it, but re-enveloped it at once, & directed it to you. Now you’re not to read it unless you really don’t mind it—you’re only to re-ship it to Webster & tell him, from me, to read the remnant of the book himself, & send no more slips to me, under any circumstances. Will you? / Blackguard me if you want to—I deserve it.

Sam also told of Dr. Rachel Brooks Gleason of the Elmira Water Cure visiting in the evening with Miss Ella Wolcott, a friend of the Langdons, who quoted one of the invalids from the Water Cure. The quote put Howells, Henry James, Walt Whitman, Swinburne, and Shakespeare at the same level—"when you've read one, you've read 'em all!" [MTHL 2: 497-8].

Karl Gerhardt was at Quarry Farm sculpting a bust of Sam [MTP]. Note: see picture insert earlier.

Sam also wrote a note to Charles Webster that he'd "miscalculated" his fortitude. "I can't read any more proof." Sam let Webster know that he'd sent the proofs on to Howells, who might return them to Webster to read, and if so, Sam would take them again and get his "profanity together & tackle it" [MTP].

George Gebbie wrote to Clemens, relating the history of the humor book and enclosing a prospectus for his The Library of Wit and Humor, which he sent Sam by express [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "No Answer / wants to use his name in Library Wit & H. Also refers to prop of 4 years ago"

Bissell & Co. per George H. Burt wrote to advise that Am. Express paid dividends in Sept [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Explaining Am Ex dividend"

August 8 Friday – William F. Cody for Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show wrote to Clemens [MTP].

Stephen C. Massett wrote from the Catskills, about Mrs. Sheffield, mother of Mrs. Bartholomew, "with whom you used to board & lodge on 16th street in 1869!" She was in NYC and would like to see Clemens [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Tiresome Jeems / No answer"

August 9 Saturday – The Critic ran an article, "The Lounger," unsigned, which noted the tact with which James B. Pond announced the upcoming lecture season, giving Mark Twain and George W. Cable billings which would cause neither to feel slighted [Tenney, Supplement American Literary Realism, Autumn 1980 p170].

Frank E. Bliss wrote to Clemens, surprised to hear that Coker has put out the ad for cheap books of Clemens. Bliss had conferred with their attorney [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Pirates"

August 10 Sunday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam:

If I had written half as good a book as Huck Finn, I shouldn't ask anything better than to read the proofs; even as it is I don't. So send them on; they will always find me somewhere. I'm here in town for the present; but I'm going to Kennebunkport where the family are on Tuesday, and then to Campobello, N.B. Back to Boston the last of the month. / I see the circus has been finally reduced to Cable and you. That is right. The public wants to hear both of you; but I should have been a drag [MTHL 2: 499].

The New York Times ran a short paragraph at the end of "The Theatrical World," p.3:

An engagement in New York has been arranged for Mr. Samuel Clemens (Mark Twain) and Mr. George Cable, who will give combination entertainments next season. Mr. Cable and Mr. Clemens will read from their own works, and Mr. Cable will sing Creole songs. For the relief of many anxious inquirers it may be stated that neither of the gentlemen will dance, although the advantages of winding up the show with a walk-around and break-down have been repeatedly suggested to them.

August 11 Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to American Publishing Co., probably about the cheap editions being advertised by The Frank Coker News Co. of Talladega, Ala

“Unless you bring suit at once to enjoin these pirates, I must sue for the annulling of my contracts with you, upon the ground that you make no sufficient efforts to protect my copyrights from infringement” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster about some of the proofs being a “disgraceful mess” [MTP].

Hugo Erichsen sent the form a third time to ask about Clemens’ writing methods. This time he included a handwritten note asking why Sam didn’t answer [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: going to Hartford to see about the furnace problem; hadn’t heard from Howells; wanted to hurry printers on HF as he couldn’t make contracts with agents until book was at binders [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “furnace”

August 13 Wednesday – Bissell & Co. wrote to Clemens trying to reconcile his account [MTP].

August 14 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster—more about the Huck Finn proofs “If all the proofs had been as well read as the first 2 or 3 chapters were, I should not have needed to see the revises at all. On the contrary it was the worst & silliest proof-reading I have ever seen. It was never read by copy at all—not a single galley of it.” He added that the game had only a year to file patent; see Oct. 9 entry [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: galleys returned from Howells; furnace diagnosed needing a new boiler, costs, etc. [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Furnace to cost $750”

August 15 Friday – Bissell & Co. wrote to Clemens that the Am. Express in Europe would look up his dividend and advise [MTP].

August 16 Saturday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, who evidently had advised that the furnace improvements in the Hartford house could be done for $750. Sam approved, but dictated that no workmen need to go up into the house from the cellar [MTP].

August 19 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, asking for a copy of the Sellers as a Scientist play. Ask Howells or look in the:

“...safe in the billiards room. There must be a copy somewhere. I’m going to elaborate it into a novel. /Gerhardt is completing a most excellent bust of me.”

August 21 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Karl Gerhardt, advising him to get letters of introduction from “Warner; he knows everybody in Washington...” [MTP].

August 22 Friday – William M. Laffan for the New York Sun wrote to advise Clemens: “I put her into type and I think her highly amusing and seasonable. She’s on the Boss’s proofs and, I take it, is going in on Sunday” (in the file a copy typeset of “Hunting for H——” unsigned) [MTP].

August 23 Saturday – James B. Pond wrote from Cottage City, Mass. The circular “brings hundreds of inquiries. All my letters are about Clemens & Cable” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens, pasting Coker’s ad for Twain’s books at the top. He’d written to Howells about “that play” and “drawn a contract with the furnace man and he has gone to work.” He felt that something must be done about Coker’s ad, which appeared in Frank Leslie’s Illustrated Newspaper of this day [MTP].

August 24 Sunday – Sam wrote from Elmira to George Iles, Montreal editor:

“I am on the warpath next winter, with George W. Cable—that is to say, on the platform. Therefore I didn’t accept your & the Snowshoe Club’s kind invitation, for I shan’t know for some time, yet, whether my route is going to carry me through Montreal during the Carnival or not...” [MTP].

A sketch titled “Hunting for H——” ran on page 2 of the New York Sun. Budd makes a strong case for this being Sam’s article in “Who Wants to Go to Hell? An Unsigned Sketch by Mark Twain?” William Mackay Laffan had written to Sam on Aug. 22 about the article “going in on Sunday” [Studies in Am. Humor online; Camfield, bibliog.].

Augustus Saint-Gaudens wrote to Clemens; letter not found at MTP but catalogued as UCLC 42231.

August 30 Saturday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: “It seems impossible to make any arrangement whereby the other Gen. Agts. Can sell ‘Huck Finn’ and ‘Tom Sawyer’ together, at a reduced price...” [MTP].

August 31 Sunday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Howells, thanking him “ever so much for reading that batch of the proof.” Sam regretted that he’d not be able to attend the first night of Howells’ opera A Sea-Change in November, due to his readings with Cable that were to begin “about Nov. 5” [MTP; MTHL 2: 500n6]. Howells wrote on Aug. 10 inviting Sam and Livy [MTHL 2: 499]. Sam had plenty to say about current national politics:

This presidential campaign is too delicious for anything. To see grown men, apparently in their right mind, seriously arguing against a bachelor’s fitness for President [Cleveland] because he has had private intercourse with a consenting widow! Those grown men know what the bachelor’s other alternative was—and tacitly they seem to prefer that to the widow. Isn’t human nature the most consummate sham & lie that was ever invented? Isn’t man a creature to be ashamed of in pretty much all his aspects? Is he really fit for anything but to be stood up on the street corner as a convenience for dogs? Man, “know thyself”—& then thou wilt despise thyself, to a dead moral certainty. Take three good specimens—Hawley, Warner, & Charley Clark. Even I do not loathe Blaine more than they do; yet Hawley is howling for Blaine, Warner & Clark are eating their daily crow in the paper for him, & all three will vote for him. O Stultification, where is thy sting, O slave where is thy hickory! [MTP]. (See Sept. 4 entry for Howells’ reply.) Sam also told of the ruin of Gerhardt’s bust of him, but his fresh start in three days of making an even better copy.

September 1 Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster. Frank Bliss had offered terms too difficult for Sam’s plan of offering a discount for a paired sale of Huck Finn and Tom Sawyer, so Sam commented that the “question appears to answer itself.” The Frank Coker News Co. of Talledega, Ala. had been running ads for Mark Twain books in Frank Leslie’s Newspaper—Sam asked Webster to “send me pirate ads which are calculated to enrage me.” All the bothersome details had robbed Sam of any productive writing time.

This is the first summer which I have lost. I haven’t a paragraph to show for my 3-months’ working-season. But there was no help for it—been in the doctor’s [& dentist’s] hands the greater part of the time....We shall reach our hotel the evening of Sept. 16. And thenceforward we can meet when there is business to be discussed—it is the only good way....Do not imagine from anything in this, that I misappreciate you. No, I am at loggerheads with myself [MTLTP 179]. See Sept. 16 to Twichell for purpose at the doctor’s.

Sam also wrote to James B. Pond, advising the family’s plan was to reach their hotel in New York “the night of the 16th & remain 2 or 3 days” [MTP].

Frank E. Bliss wrote to Clemens, after being absent found Twain’s letter of Aug. 26 about suing the Coker Co. Bliss explained they would have to prove “the defendant knew that our books were copyrighted” and so begged off; they’d tried to serve notice but Talledega was out of the way and not an easy thing to find a competent lawyer to serve them [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote twice to Clemens: shouldn’t they copyright the new book? Agents appointed for HF; furnace work under way; he finally caught John T. Raymond at 10 pm [MTP].

Worden & Co. Sent statement of a/c Aug. 31 bal $13,693.70 [MTP].

September 2 Tuesday – Charles Webster wrote twice to Clemens [MTP]. (financial statements enclosed) [MTP].

September 3 Wednesday – Susy and Clara Clemens were accosted by a “drunken ruffian” down the road from Quarry Farm. The man “drew a revolver” on them but they managed to escape. See Sam’s Sept. 7 & Sept. 15 to Howells [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: about Howells and the Col. Sellers play, scene changes, final speech, etc [MTP].

J. Chester for Lincoln University wrote to thank Clemens for his of Aug. 25 with check, $150 [MTP].

September 4 Thursday – William Dean Howells responded to Sam’s letter of Aug. 31 about the candidacies of Blaine and Cleveland. He did not share Sam’s perspective.

I shall vote for Blaine. I do not believe he is guilty of the things they accuse him of; and I know they are not proved against him.

As for Cleveland, his private life may be no worse than that of most men, but as an enemy of the contemptible, hypocritical, lopsided morality which says “a woman shall suffer all the shame of unchastity and a man none,[]” I want to see him destroyed politically by his past. The men who defend him would take their wives to the White House if he were President, but if he married his concubine—“made her an honest woman”—they would not go near him!

I can’t stand that.

Besides I don’t like his hangman-face. It looks dull and brutal [MTHL 2: 503].

September 5 Friday – Sam wrote a short note from Elmira to Charles Webster about the furnace bill. He also directed Webster not to go away “without first completing my contract with Pond” [MTP].

Sam then wrote a longer letter to Webster about stock sales, and not being able to re-write the new Sellers play even though Raymond’s suggestions were good [MTP].

September 6 Saturday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: Am. Exchange stock issue resolved—error in the London office & Sam would get his full dividend; he had no copy of the Seller’s play & Howells had only an “imperfect copy”; should he draw up a contract with Raymond? [MTP].

Jeannette L. Gilder for The Critic wrote to ask Clemens to contribute for their series of sketches—could they send someone to interview him? [MTP].

September 7 Sunday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Howells, upset about a:

“...drunken ruffian who has been a trouble to our neighboring farmers for a couple of years & who drew a revolver on Susie & Clara last Wednesday when they were down the road a piece & without a protector” [MTP].

September 8 Monday – Sam wrote a short note from Elmira to George Iles, the Canadian editor.

“You have my best thanks; & when Pond has fixed my dates I will drop you a line; & shall hope that they fall as you have suggested” [MTP].

Sam also wrote two notes to Charles Webster. The first enclosed a photograph of the Gerhardt bust of Clemens—Sam wanted the image to be a frontispiece for Huck Finn and credit given to Gerhardt. It might require Webster going to Boston to contract for a heliotype of the photograph from the Heliotype Printing Co. The second, shorter note sent news of a stock Sam had sold at a profit and a check for $5,000 [MTP]. Note: the picture of Gerhardt’s bust of Sam was included in the first edition of Huck Finn.

Bissell & Co. wrote to Clemens, enclosing letter of Mr. Gilleg in reply to their inquiry of Sam’s dividend [MTP].

Buffalo Bill Cody wrote and enclosed three tickets to his wild west show: “I would be pleased to see you at one of the entertainments of the Wild West” [MTP].

September 9 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, sending what he thought looked like a bill for “more hellfired statuary.” Gerhardt had “just gone to Philadelphia. I wish it was in hell. / If this is a bill, step in there & pay it. It looks like a bill” [MTP]. Gerhardt had made the trip to cast the bust in bronze (Sept. 16 to Twichell).

Frederick J. Hall for Webster & Co. wrote to acknowledge Sam’s check for $5,000 [MTP].

September 10 Wednesday – Sam wrote Buffalo Bill Cody: “I have now seen your Wild West show two days in succession, and have enjoyed it thoroughly. It brought back vividly the breezy, wild life of the great plains, and the Rocky Mountains and stirred me like a war song” [MTP].

George W. Cable wrote to Clemens that he was leaving for Saratoga where he would read there the following day. On Friday he would return to Simsbury ready to meet Sam & Livy. “We shall greet you with a hurrah” [MTP].

September 11 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Karl Gerhardt, advising him to let some unspecified matter “wait till another time.” Livy was “sick, & we may be here 10 or 12 days yet” [MTP]. Note: the matter to wait might have been Gerhardt’s bill, which upset Clemens on Sept. 9.

A. Edwards, Hartford billed and receipted Sam $25 for “Pasturing 1 pr. Horses 10 weeks at $2.50 pr week” [MTP].

September 12 Friday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam having finished Sellers final speech, though he wasn’t “proud of it.” Some bad news about his opera, the manager had fallen and died getting on his yacht and Howells didn’t “know whether it will go on or not” [MTHL 2: 505]. Note: the opera was A Sea-Change and was finally performed in 1929, nine years after Howells’ death, by the BBC.

Chatto & Windus wrote to Clemens anxious for early proof sheets of HF; they enclosed draft for £356 on his English editions [MTP].

September 13 Saturday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster.

“The bust was made in Elmira & is just finished. The photos were taken here & I have the negatives myself. But do nothing in the matter unless you find advantage for us in it. —I thought it would advantage the book” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote twice on various business matters [MTP].

September 14 Sunday – James B. Pond wrote to Clemens [MTP].

September 15 Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster. John T. Raymond had backed out of doing the new Sellers play. The heliotype was acceptable to Sam at a cost of two cents each. Livy had been:

“...sick—is sick—and will not be able to travel for a week or ten days yet. Keep the Sellers play in your safe until I am done with the platform—then I will send for it & turn it into a novel” [MTP].

Sam also answered Howells’ “bad luck” letter of Sept. 12:

Well, isn’t the devil in the luck? Raymond backs out at last—I wish to thunder you hadn’t had the trouble of writing the speech for nothing. Then your manager had to go & get killed. That is your share of the ill luck. Mrs. Clemens has fallen sick, & our return home is frustrated, just as we were nearly ready to start. And that miscreant who drew the revolver escaped from the jailor & has got away into Pennsylvania. That is my share [MTP].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam, saying “Never mind about the play. We had fun writing it, anyway” [MTHL 2: 507].

E.M. Ormsby wrote from Springfield, Mass. to demand an autograph [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Some ass or other”

September 16 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Joe Twichell, who evidently had written recently.

On the contrary, the summer has been lost time to me. I spent several weeks in the dental chair, coming down the hill every day for the purpose; then I made a daily trip during several more weeks to a doctor to be treated for catarrh & have my palate burnt off. The remnant of the season I wasted in ineffectual efforts to work. I haven’t a paragraph to show for my summer.

Sam had brought a bicycle with him to Quarry Farm but had little luck with it due to all the hills. Livy wouldn’t be ready to travel for at least a week. Sam told of Gerhardt and ruining the bust when casting was attempted in plaster; that Gerhardt had gone to Philadelphia to cast it in bronze. Sam was glad Joe and family were home again and that the Clemens “tribe” would be there soon [MTP].

September 16? Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Henry C. Robinson, attorney and one of his Friday Evening Club billiard cronies in Hartford.

“P.S. I spoke too soon, Brer Robinson. Mrs. Clemens has been sick & won’t be strong enough to travel for a week or ten days, yet. So I’ll have to appoint another & later billiard-meeting” MTP; [www.historyforsale.com #42883]. Note: Sam signed this “Elmira, Monday 16th” so date is uncertain.

September 17 Wednesday – Sam wrote two letters to Howells. Even though Howells wrote on Sept. 15 and had not commented on Sam’s opinion of Blaine and Cleveland, Sam didn’t let the subject go.

Somehow I can't seem to rest quiet under the idea of your voting for Blaine. I believe you said something about the country & the party. Certainly allegiance to these is well; but as certainly a man's first duty is to his own conscience & honor—the party & the country come second to that, & never first. I don't ask you to vote at all—I only urge you to not soil yourself by voting for Blaine. When you wrote before, you were able to say the charges against him were not proven. But you know now that they are proven, & it seems to me that bars you & all other honest & honorable men (who are independently situated) from voting for him [MTP].

The second letter involved Livy, and something she told Sam that was worth repeating:

...A drop letter came to me asking me to lecture here for a Church debt. I began to rage over the exceedingly cool wording of the request, when Mrs. Clemens said "I think I know that church; & if so, this preacher is a colored man—he doesn't know how to write a polished letter—how should he?"

My manner changed so suddenly & so radically that Mrs. C. said: "I will give you a motto, & it will be useful to you if you will adopt it: Consider every man colored till he is proven white."

It is dern good, I think [MTP].

September 19 Friday – The contract with James Pond for the readings tour with George Cable was signed. The tour was to run from Nov. 5, 1884 through the end of Feb. 1885 [MTNJ 3: 60n143]. Sam wrote a list of possible readings in his notebook before this date.

September 20 Saturday – In Elmira Sam wrote to James B. Pond.

"I & the family will arrive at the Brunswick on Tuesday evening. I will talk to you about the lithograph & learn the proposed size & style of it. This is necessary for Mrs. Clemens is dead opposed to it; & if she remains so, that'll end it."

Sam hoped to make his reading choices as soon as he reached Hartford, which he hoped would be a week from this day. Livy's illness had delayed him one week, he explained [MTP].

Sam also wrote to an unidentified man:

"The album has gone to Hartford, I judge, where I have not been for 4 months, but where I shall doubtless be, a week or ten days hence. / Very Truly, SL Clemens" [2007 October Grand Format Rare Books & Manuscripts Auction #675 Lot 30310; Oct 24, 2007]. <http://historical.ha.com/>

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, asking for an unbound copy of HF to be waiting for him in Hartford, as he wished to choose excerpts to read on the tour [MTP].

September 21 Sunday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Karl Gerhardt, giving permission for him to "go ahead & put the medallion-children in marble" for an exhibition. Sam expected to reach New York City on Thursday evening, Sept. 25 and Hartford on Friday, Sept. 26 [MTP]. Note: Sam was still in Elmira on Wednesday, Sept. 24, and the family probably left that day for New York. See Sept. 26 notes.

September 23 Tuesday – An envelope only survives from Elmira to Karl Gerhardt [MTP].

The Clemens family (without Sam) left Quarry Farm for New York City [MTNJ 3: 57n128]. They stayed at the Brunswick Hotel. Sam stayed behind a day and then went to Philadelphia incognito (see Sept. 24 entry).

September 24 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Karl Gerhardt in Philadelphia:

“Dear K—Call at the Lafayette Hotel [in Philadelphia] at 9 SHARP, day after to-morrow (Friday) morning, & ask for J. B. Smith. That will be me. Keep my real name quiet. If nothing happens, I shall be there—otherwise I will send you some letters of introduction.”

Sam lectured him about sending original copies of letters with instructions to “preserve this” or “Return this,” etc. “Don’t ever do that again—send me a COPY of the thing...” [MTP].

On or just before this day Sam wrote to Charles Webster. He’d waited “a couple of days” for a special ink to come from the Heliotype Co. in Boston to be used on the bust page for Huck Finn, but it hadn’t come.

“—so now the signatures must wait till I get back from Philadelphia Saturday morning. I reach there to-morrow evening & shall stop at the Lafayette Hotel under the name ‘J.B. Smith,’ if you should want to communicate with me to-morrow night or Friday” [MTP]. Note: Just why Sam’s presence in Philadelphia for the bronze casting of Gerhardt’s bust was necessary, or why Sam wanted to travel incognito, is unknown. Sam’s letter of Sept. 26 to Pond suggests Sam hoped to have met Cable there for a photo of the two of them to be made, but that it wasn’t the primary aim of the trip.

September 25 Thursday – Sam left Elmira on this day, two days after his family left for New York, and traveled to Philadelphia (see letter to Webster, Sept. 24). He stopped briefly at the Brunswick Hotel in New York to check on the family. See Sept. 26 notes.

Wallace Muzzy sent another crank letter and signed it “Muzio Clemens” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Lunatic”

September 26 Friday – Sam wrote from New York to James B. Pond.

Cable didn’t come. However, I wasn’t expecting him or depending on him. But it wasn’t any matter, for Gerhardt doesn’t need a picture of me, & if he does he can get it at Falk’s, who has made a large one in profile. All he will need, now, is a suitable picture of Cable. I want the things to be made by Gerhardt—it will advertise him. Give G.W. my love, & tell him he didn’t disappoint me, I wasn’t looking for him.

Sam specified the programs for the tour should be printed on cards, not paper, which would rattle during the performance. Note: Sam’s letter of Sept. 21, 1884 to Karl Gerhardt is collected in its entirety in the Lilly Library’s “Mark Twain: Selections from the Collection of Nick Karanovich” (1991, p.19 #29; Sotheby’s auction June 19, 2003 Lot 45.): “We all reach Hotel Brunswick, New York, Thursday, & Hartford Friday evening” (editorial emphasis).

Note: This letter prior reported from the MTP TS as “Tuesday” in error. This correction makes the stop at the Brunswick in the Sept. 25 entry definite. It also removes the “?” from the Sept. 26 entry as to the place of the letter to Pond. One correction or additional piece of information can affect multiple entries.

Karl Gerhardt wrote to Clemens, relating talks with Mr. Childs about the Peter Cooper Monument in NY; other contacts made [MTP].

William F. Barrett for Psychical Research Society wrote from Montreal to advise he’d sent a complete set of their proceedings [MTP].

September 27 Saturday – Sam wrote on a Hotel Brunswick postcard from New York City to Karl Gerhardt.

“My Dear K—I may want a clay medallion of Cable & myself made from a photograph by Sarony. Drop a line to Maj. J. B. Pond, Everett House, New York City & ask him if you had better run up here & get his ideas as to size, style, &c. I talked with him. He is my agent. He is out of town but returns in a day or two” [MTP].

September 28 Sunday – The Clemens family arrived back in Hartford either this day or the day before. Sam wrote from Hartford to Karl Gerhardt, reminding him to:

“...thank Mr. Childs & Mr. Gowen cordially for me for the kindnesses which they have shown you. I shall be in Philadelphia within a month or two, & shall go to them & make my personal acknowledgments” [MTP].

*William Mackay Laffan wrote from NYC, back from a Canada vacation and feeling good about beating Osgood at billiards; he offered Sam a challenge [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Laffan / answered him”

James B. Pond wrote to Clemens, having reassured Cable that Sam did not have hard feelings over waiting an hour for him; he asked if Sam had any notions about programs for the tour [MTP].

September, late–October, early – The earliest copies of the first edition of Adventures of Huckleberry Finn were printed, though official publication did not take place until Feb. 18, 1885 [Hirst, “A Note on the Text” Oxford edition, 1996].

October, a Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to James B. Pond, asking for a “list of our appointments & dates as far as you have got” for Livy. Sam wanted the list “immediately.” Her “acceptance or declination of an invitation to spend several days in Boston is depending on it” [MTP].

On a day in October, Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, asking him to “Look into that hand-grenade thing” to see if it was worth a speculation. “It is going to do an enormous business some day” [MTP]. Note: the Hayword Hand Grenades were a rack of small bottles of sealed water, to be thrown into a fire.

October 3 Friday – At one time Sam was instructing Charles Webster to telegraph important information; now he wrote from Hartford telling him “to use the telegraph less freely...it is not twice in 5 years that a W.U. telegram beats a letter between N.Y. & Hartford” [MTP]. Sam wrote another short note to Webster on or about this date about having a rubber stamp made that would cross out the “Osgood & Co.” on envelopes he had and print Webster’s address [MTP].

October 4 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to William Fletcher Barrett of the Journal of Society for Psychological Research.

I should be very glad indeed to be made a Member of the Society....; for Thought-transference, as you call it, or mental telegraphy as I have been in the habit of calling it, has been a very strong interest with me for the past nine or ten years. I have grown so accustomed to considering that all my powerful impulses come to me from somebody else, that I often feel like a mere amanuensis when I sit down to write a letter under the coercion of a strong impulse...[MTP].

October 6 Monday – Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: positive reactions to the mockup book of HF; details of the agents and pay [MTP].

October 9 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Mervyn Drake, identity not known. Sam wrote six and a half lines in German and then recalled a Professor Ihne, who, with his wife and daughter, called on Sam and Livy on May 26, 1878 in Germany (See MTNJ 2: 89n85). Ihne was the author of several works on Roman history. Note: corrected name & date by Hirst email, May 17, 2007.

“I am trying to persuade my wife to say we shall pack up our household tribe & spend next summer at the Schloss Hotel and then I will furnish you some picturesque samples of German if you are there” [MTP].

Twain also signed a letter with 20 other leading men of Hartford to invite Lt. Mason L. Shufetde, U.S. Navy, in view of his “secret visit to Madagascar,” to lecture in Hartford. M.G. Bulkeley, Hartford mayor, headed the list, which included J. Hammond Trumbull, Joe Twichell, and Edwin P. Parker [ABE Books, Stodolski, Inc. Autographs 9/27/2010].

The Hartford Courant ran a front-page notice on Karl Gerhardt’s bust of Sam:

The bust of Mr. S. L. Clemens, which Mr. Karl Gerhardt modeled at Elmira last summer and which has just been put in breeze in Philadelphia, can now be seen at the gallery of Mr. Vorce. Mr. Gerhardt, who belongs in Hartford, has been for four years a student of sculpture in Paris...

Patent Engraving Co, New York sent Sam card & diagram “Game apparatus; filed this day [patent #] 324,535 ; with a quote of 1.75 to make game board [MTP, 1884 financial file].

October 10 Friday – Richard Watson Gilder for Century Magazine wrote to propose Sam let him run “half or three quarters” of HF “with a whole lot of pictures” since the book wouldn’t be out for a month or two; he admitted this was against Sam’s rule but felt it would help the book’s sales [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Serial”

October 10 or 11 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Richard Watson Gilder, chief editor of the Century Magazine. He had received a telegram from Gilder about HF excerpt submission. Sam asked, “do you mean lump price $400—or $30 a page?” [MTP].

October 11 Saturday – Sam wrote a short note from Hartford to James B. Pond, extolling Gerhardt’s medallion of him and George W. Cable. Sam verified that the reading tour would resume on Dec. 29 [MTP].

Richard Watson Gilder for Century Magazine wrote “Your telegram here has received & I have ordered the Dec. no. closed up without delay. Four numbers is what we would like to have” and “do you mean lump price $400—or $30 a page?” [MTP].

October 13 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Caroline M. Hewins, of the Hartford Library, asking her to “kindly allow the privileges of the Library to the bearer, Mr. Karl Gerhardt...” [MTP]. Note: Hewins was a prolific writer authoring the first popular bibliography of quality books for children; she is considered one of the great pioneers in library science, and today a scholarship fund bears her name.

George W. Cable wrote to Clemens, “delighted with the proof sheets I have read.” He especially liked (for reading) “Jim’s account of his investments winding up with the 10 cents ‘give to de po” [MTP].

Richard Watson Gilder for Century Magazine wrote that Sam’s “long letter was at hand. We’ll drop the idea of a serial...perhaps you’ll live up to the idea, yet; with another book” [MTP].

October 14 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Richard Watson Gilder about the selection of Huck Finn for the Century that Gilder chose.

“I have tried to put the explanation of the situation into Huck’s mouth but didn’t succeed to my satisfaction. Will the note do, which I enclose? Alter, emend, shorten it or lengthen it to suit yourself—if any of these shall seem necessary—but in some way preserve the fact that the thing is from an unpublished book...” [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote from Hartford to Clemens that “the bust must go tomorrow, in order to enter the exposition, so perhaps it will be best for me to take it personally” [MTP].

October 14 and 15 and 16 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Thomas W. Russell, a director of the Connecticut Fire Insurance Co., declining an invitation (probably to speak at the Mugwump political rally on Oct. 20. Sam held back the note for two days, hoping to be able to accept, and reminded Russell to be sure to include Twichell’s name on his list [MTP]. Note: Sam did speak at the rally.

During this week Sam wrote Howells and included a note that Clara Clemens was ill [MTLH 2: 510n1]

October 15 Wednesday – Sam wrote a short note from Hartford to James B. Pond: no, he wouldn’t read in Elmira; “Thank George W. for the suggestion about ‘lendin to de po.’”; Gerhardt was in New York for a few days [MTP].

October 16 Thursday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam.

Osgood has asked me to let him see the copy of the Library of Humor, and is waiting for me to get it a little more in shape. You can’t suffer any disadvantage in any event from his looking it over...I am glad that there is a reasonable hope of our having Mrs. Clemens here with you when you come to read in November. I’m sorry to hear that poor Ben [Clara] is under the weather [MTHL 2: 510].

October 17 Friday – In Hartford, Sam responded to Howells’ Oct. 16 letter:

Yes, give Osgood the MS—I haven’t the least objection. I am about half glad that Laffan beat him at billiards the other day, because he promised to stop over here & play with me, & didn’t do it.

By George, the refreshment & rest there is in a change of air & scenery once in a while! I am to preside at a Mugwump meeting Monday night. / Yrs Ever / Mark [MTP].

Richard Watson Gilder for Century Magazine wrote again about the excerpt of HF to run in the magazine, and suggested $30 per page would be fairer than a flat $400. “I enclose the first page which we have sent to press. Have only omitted the poem, and a few cuss words—about the fog.—” [MTP].

Louis M. Passmore wrote to Clemens for his autograph [MTP].

October 18 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Frank Fuller:

Dear Governor—

I changed publishers once—and just as sure as death and taxes I never will again.
‘Rah for Cleveland! [MTP].

Critic ran an unsigned article about Gerhardt’s bust of Sam, “Mark Twain in Bronze,” which included a description of the work by Charles Dudley Warner [Tenney].

October 19 Sunday – William F. Barrett for Psychical Research Society wrote to thank Clemens for his “interesting and characteristic letter” [MTP].

October 20 Monday – Sam spoke at a Mugwump Rally, Allyn Hall, Hartford, introducing Carl Schurz, the main speaker. His remarks as Chairman are published in Fatout’s Mark Twain Speaking, p.186-7. Thomas W. Russell, a director of the Connecticut Fire Insurance Co. introduced Sam [MTNJ 2: 74n26]. Note: James G. Blaine never explained how he became rich with little visible means of support, so that the cloud of corruption remained on him. “Mugwumps” were Republicans who favored Grover Cleveland, the Democrat candidate.

Alexander & Green attorneys wrote to Clemens that they’d written the American News Co. in Alabama about the ads for Sam’s books. Frank Bliss responded that “he had taken action through a local attorney in Alabama to stop the sale and thought it effectually stopped” and that Fred Hall had sent them a “decoy letter” asking for Pe&P and LA and enclosed Coker’s reply (not in file) [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “See Bliss about this tomorrow”

October 20? Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells after reading the first two chapters of The Rise of Silas Lapham, serialized in the Nov. issue of the Century. Sam asked for a copy of the new Sellers play so he might “get some truck out for the plat-form readings.” Of Lapham, Sam wrote:

“I was glad & more than glad to meet young Hubbard again, & I prodigiously like the Colonel; the story starts most acceptably” [MTP].

October 22 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Henry L. Pierce (1825-1896), Boston industrialist, past Massachusetts Representative to Congress, and twice mayor of Boston—also friend of the Aldriches. Sam lobbied for Pierce’s support to put a “Mr. Edmunds” on the ticket as an Independent for the Presidency, an action Sam felt:

“...would work absolutely certain defeat to Blaine & save the country’s honor” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to James B. Pond that he’d selected for one-night readings, “King Sollermun” and “Can’t Learn.” He signed off again with “Rah for Cleveland” [MTP]. Note: Clemens would consistently admire and praise Cleveland throughout his life.

October 23 Thursday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam, advising he would send the new Sellers play to Osgood by express that day. He diplomatically told Sam that there wasn’t room for Sam’s “fellow-reader” [Cable] should Sam and Livy come to visit. Howells also felt that Silas Lapham wouldn’t sell well until the presidential campaign was over. On the Englishman Henry Irving returning to America and playing to half houses:

“What a mistake for him to come back, poor fellow. But one of those constant Englishmen could never understand our fickleness in celebrities. Genius we stick to, but he hasn’t got that” [MTHL 2: 512].

B. Schuehaffer wrote to Clemens about supporting Cleveland for Mugwumps [MTP].

Alexander & Green attorneys wrote to Clemens, more on efforts to stop Frank Coker Co. [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Alex & Green / Ala pirate / Sent $100”

October 24 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to James B. Pond that he’d decided to substitute an enclosed program for the one he’d sent, “All but 5 minutes of it is bran-new—never been played or published.” He asked for Cable’s “2-night program” so he might see how his would coordinate [MTP].

Alexander & Green wrote to twice Clemens, two letters enclosed, one from Bliss and their reply. They related that Clemens told them to do whatever was necessary to “prosecute the Coker Co.” They’d rec’d Sam’s of the 24th (not extant) authorizing action [MTP].

October 25 Saturday – From Sam’s notebook:

Oct. 25. To be attended to tomorrow:

Furnace doesn’t heat enough.

Sell cow if she is going dry.

We not to keep 3 cows.

D. is a failure; can’t raise turnips & roses.

Fix damp place in library shelves.

See Barnard of the Committee [Note: Henry Barnard was a member of the committee to choose a sculptor for the Nathan Hale statue in the state capitol building in Hartford. See MTNJ 2:75n29]

Ask C [Cable] to send me a full ticket [a complete list of his readings].

Hair cut.

Patrick, milk & alarm.

Das Bank Theilen verkaufen [Sell the bank shares].

Hotel in New Haven. [No doubt a reminder to ask Pond which hotel they might meet in].

George W. Cable wrote to Clemens:

Dear Friend: / Pond and I have talked and thought much over the programme. Enclosed please find the embodiment of our conclusions. We both think that more alternation than this would weaken and break the effect. The time here comprised is the same as originally decided on — 2 hours. My memoranda make it so on the margin. The first and second numbers suffice to give the audience a sense that both stars are “present or accounted for” and the 3d and 4th give each a fair swing at their attention & interest without interruption.

One item in the programme shows a suggestion which I beg to offer. It is a substitute, almost literally from your text, for the phrase “Can’t learn a nigger to argue.” When we consider that the programme is advertised & becomes cold-blooded newspaper reading I think we should avoid any risk of appearing—even to the most thin-skinned and supersensitive and hypercritical patrons and misses—the faintest bit gross. In the text, whether on the printed page or in the readers utterances the phrase is absolutely without a hint of grossness; but alone on a published programme, it invites discreditable conjectures of what the context may be, from that portion of our public who cannot live without aromatic vinegar. I hope you’ll pardon the liberty I take, and restore the original phrase if you think I’m entirely mistaken.

Wouldn’t you say “carriages at ten”—People like to know; especially when the carriages are sleighs.

I am sending duplicate program to Pond. Please let him have your verdict as soon as convenient. I shall be in N. York with him Monday. “King Sollermun” is enough by itself to immortalize its author. I read it privately to Waring, his wife and her sister, after midnight of Thursday and I thought they would laugh themselves sick. ... [MTP].

October 26 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to James B. Pond, directing him never to print a program “till a day or two before it is to be used.” Sam knew that practice and change on the circuit would most likely be necessary. He recommended they “get up a third program” (instead of using two and alternating), “& practice it on the small towns too, before we strike Boston” [MTP].

Edgar W. Howe for Atchison Globe wrote to relate remarks B. McAuley made bout Twain at a dinner; he “was overjoyed” to receive a letter from Howells [MTP].

October 27 Monday, after – Sam wrote from Hartford to James B. Pond—a longer letter with details of the upcoming tour, including Gerhardt plaques [MTP].

James B. Pond wrote to Clemens, not having heard a word concerning the programme. “Mr. Cable wrote you about it, sending the division of the time” [MTP].

October 28 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Neil Burgess (1846-1910), a popular comedy actor who specialized in playing roles of elderly women. His greatest success was Widow Bedott in 1879. Burgess had evidently invited Sam to a performance or a social engagement, but Sam had to decline [MTP].

Sam also wrote to James B. Pond, suggesting a meeting; all that could be done by correspondence had been done.

I got Cable’s note yesterday, & do immensely approve of the change he suggests in the distribution of the stage-work. Let us stick to that plan—each to read a very short piece first; then Cable to bunch the rest of his rime together; & afterward I follow him & bunch all my remaining time together, & so close the performance [MTP].

Neil Burgess (1815-1910), comedian, wrote from Hartford, enclosing tickets for this evening [MTP].

October 29 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Thomas Bailey Aldrich, whose invitation arrived this day for Sam to stay with him when he read in Boston. Howells had asked first, but Sam hoped to see them both. Politics and a candidate of independent status for president was good for a comment; Sam thanked him for “Mr. Pierce’s speech” [MTP].

Louis M. Passmore wrote from NYC, a second request for autograph [MTP]. Note: unused SASE in file

October 30 Thursday – Sam wrote to J.M. Stevenson for Illustrated Christian Weekly, letter not extant but referred to in the Nov. 1 reply from Stevenson.

Joseph Stein for Mark Twain Literary Union, NYC wrote to announce the formation of their group, 32 including 12 ladies. He asked Sam for “a few words” [MTP].

Samuel S. McClure (1857-1949) for Wheelman Magazine wrote: “I am making arrangements with a large number of newspapers for the simultaneous publication of stories of leading American authors.” Of course, he wanted to include something from Clemens [MTP].

October 31 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Edward House, who evidently had reminded Sam of a promise made that Sam could not recall. House hadn’t been specific. Sam wanted to “run to Japan” but felt it was not possible. He told of his upcoming four month platform tour, wishing he hadn’t promised but it was too late “to cry about it.”

Four days hence I shall have the pleasure of casting a vote against Mr. Blaine; shall vote the entire democratic ticket, from President down to town constable. All the republicans of this section are & have for years been bitter against Blaine; but they are party-slaves & nearly all will vote for him—including all the clergy but two—Twichell & one other. Lord, the amount of buzzard these shabby people are gorging, these days! [MTP].

Sam also wrote to James B. Pond, accepting a meeting in New Haven for Wednesday, then thinking Pond meant Monday—what hotel should he meet Pond and George Warner? [MTP].

Sam also wrote two letters to Charles Webster. He’d heard rumors that the American Exchange in Europe was shaky. Would Webster “inquire about this & if” true advise and he would sell out his $10,000 holdings? Furnace brushes had not arrived as promised. Gerhardt was “making a beautiful statue of Nathan Hale.”

“I read in New Haven Nov. 5, & shall read in New York about Nov. 17. You can get a list of all my appointments from Pond, so that you can keep tract [sic] of me. Get from him also either my hotel in each town or the name of the hall” [MTP].

Enclosed in the second letter was a list of people who had projects which were possibly good investments. Sam gave Webster the authority to “look into their project, make a contract with them if you like the look of it.” Sam had three months left to refuse half-interest in a patent for a device to keep children from kicking clothes off or rolling out of bed.

“We use it all the time, now, on three beds, & it works all right. But I have invented a more expensive & convenient one, & presently when I see you we will talk about it. Mine is not easily infringed; but any man can make the other thing for himself” [MTP].

Alexander & Green attorneys wrote to Clemens (Bliss to A&G enclosed), explaining that Anthony Comstock had been sent to Alabama to try to buy Twain books [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Ala pirates”; Bliss didn’t wish to sue over possible obscenities by Coker but only if they were selling a lot of Twain’s books.

October, Late – Sam gave another political speech “Turncoats” at a Mugwump Rally, Hartford:

Why are we called turncoats? Because we have changed our opinion. Change it about what? About the greatness and righteousness of the principles of the Republican party? No, that is not changed. We believe in those principles yet; no one doubts this. What, then, is it that we have changed our opinions about? Why, about Mr. Blaine. That is the whole change. There is no other. Decidedly, we have done that, and do by no means wish to deny it [Fatout, Mark Twain Speaking, p.182-4].

November? – A short speech may have been delivered titled, “Mock Oration on the Dead Partisan,” at some private gathering this month. If given, it would have followed the election of Nov. 4 [Fatout, MT Speaking 188-9]. Note: Budd observes, “May never have been delivered” [“Collected” 1021].

November 1 Saturday – J.M. Stevenson for Illustrated Christian Weekly wrote to Clemens: “In response to your courteous note of Oct. 30th anent ‘A True Story’ published in J.C.W.[?] Oct 25th I hasten to say that we supposed it was true...so could not have touched it” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Loose editing”

November 3 Monday – Sam may have gone to New Haven, as implied in his Oct. 31 letter to Pond, to discuss the upcoming reading tour with Pond and perhaps George Warner.

In the evening, Sam wrote from Hartford to Orion. The family admired a colored picture of Jane Clemens and couldn’t decide whether it was a photograph, or a pastille, or water-color.

“We agree upon one point only: that it is admirable work, with the details most delicately & pains-takingly wrought out. What is it?” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Miss Corinne Howells (relation to Wm. Dean Howells?). about the late Thomas Carlyle’s writing.

“But he is an angel now. If of the one other-world, he is already educated; if of the other, his education is mainly before him” [MTP].

November 4 Tuesday – Election Day. Sam, a Mugwump, voted for the narrow winner, Grover Cleveland, the first democrat elected president since before the Civil War. Note: for a scholarly treatment of the Mugwumps, see Gerald McFarland’s “The New York Mugwumps of 1884: A Profile” in Political Science Quarterly (Mar., 1963) p 40-58. In MTA, Sam remembered the pact he, Twichell and Rev. Francis Goodwin made to vote for Cleveland. This was before the Australian system of secret balloting, so that everyone knew who a person voted for. Sam wrote that the vote for Cleveland nearly cost Twichell his congregation. (See MTA 2: 21-25.) Note: Was this story Sam’s imagination? Strong writes,

“As it actually happened it is not so interesting a story as Twain later made it by inventing the tale of Twichell’s almost losing his church because of the statement in the paper and because his Republican parishioners would not put up with his declaration that he was not going to vote a straight ticket. But this was Twain’s imagination at work. The only actual adverse reaction was one letter in the ‘Letters from the People’ column in the Courant regretting that a minister should express a political opinion instead of sticking to his theological concerns!” [88].

Sam also wrote to Charles Erskine Scott Wood (1852-1944) (a man who needed four names to be recognized), after James G. Blaine failed by 28 votes in his bid for the Republican nomination for President. The text is not available, but the paraphrase is that the letter was “full of explosive and obscene matter...bitter with rage against the corruption in Lincoln’s once great party” [MTPO; was 14 June 1876 MTLE 1: 70]. Blaine’s opponents chanted: “Blaine, Blaine, James G. Blaine, the continental liar from the State of Maine!”

November 5, 1884 to February 28, 1885 – Mark Twain and George Washington Cable went on a grand tour,” Twins of Genius” tour, with over 100 engagements, managed by James B. Pond. Sam read and delivered passages from numerous works including Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, The Celebrated Jumping Frog, and others. Cable read from Dr. Sevier and sang Creole songs.

Luckily both men wrote their wives almost daily, and most of those letters have survived.

Note: Basic tour stops and information taken from four sources: Cardwell Twins; Lorch Trouble; Fatout Circuit, and Railton’s site: <http://etext.virginia.edu/railton/huckfinn/hftourhp.html>

November 5 Wednesday – During the day, Sam wrote from Hartford to Chatto & Windus, thanking them for a royalties check for £356.

“I think the country spewed up the filthy Blaine yesterday. At least such is our hope & belief this morning. Webster is in California or Oregon establishing general agencies, so I’ve no book news. I take the platform to-night, after an eight or ten years’ absence...This trip’s my last—forever & ever” [MTP].

In the evening Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Opera House, New Haven, Conn. Livy was in the “large and refined audience,” according to Cardwell [15]. Cable wrote to his wife that the performance had been “an emphatic success.” After the reading Dr. Francis Bacon and wife gave a tea for the performers and friends [Turner, MT & GWC 50-1].

Walter Besant for Incorporated Society Authors wrote to bestow honorary membership [MTP].

November 6 Thursday – The “Twins of Genius Tour” continued with a reading at Music Hall, Orange, N.J. Clemens included: “A Telephonic Conversation,” “Col. Sellers in a New Role,” “A Dazzling Achievement,” “Tragic Tale of the Fishwife,” “A Trying Situation,” “A Ghost Story,” and “A Sure Cure” [MTPO].

On Nov. 7, Cable wrote to his wife, “Had a great success in Orange last night.”

November 7 Friday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Gilmore’s Opera House, Springfield, Mass. Lilly Warner and Livy accompanied Sam to Springfield, but did not continue with him on the tour. Clemens included: “Tragic Tale of the Fishwife,” “Col. Sellers in a New Role,” “A Trying Situation,” and “A Ghost Story,” [MTPO].

Cable reported that the performance was “against terrible odds—brass music & fire-works in front of the hall, vast crowds blocking the streets and cannon firing directly in the rear of the house” [Turner, MT & GWC 51; Nov. 12 to Livy, MTP].

November 8 Saturday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Blackstone Hall, Providence, Rhode Island. Cable’s Nov. 9 to Lucy:

Yesterday’s double duty did not hurt me at all. I never did my work before so brilliantly. You will be proud when I tell you that Mark & I seem to divide the honors as nearly even as two men well could. Mark seems greatly pleased with my work, as I am with his. As I came off the platform yesterday afternoon followed by a tremendous clatter of applause & he met me in the door as he was going to take my vacated place he exclaimed, “superb! superb!” Even Pond, sitting back at the rear of the house, applauded — first time he has ever done it. One lady — when I read “Mary’s Night Ride,” quite lost herself and wrung her hands hysterically [Turner, MT & GWC 51-2].

November 9 Sunday – In Providence, R.I. Sam wrote to Charles Webster, advising that Pond would “presently begin to render his weekly-or-whatever-it-is account to you, accompanied by money.” Sam wanted these funds untouched and if Webster needed money to apply for it and Sam would draw on Elmira or Hartford banks. Gilder of the Century was “profoundly indebted” to Sam for recommending Kemble as an artist. The magazine would use Kemble “to illustrate a long article of Cable’s” [MTP].

November 10 Monday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Town Hall, Melrose, Mass. Cardwell says “The polishing of the readings begun in New Haven was continued in other small towns, including ...Melrose” [16]. Extra seats had to be brought in for the large crowd. The next day the Boston Morning Journal reported at length on the performance, describing Twain’s humor as “purely American” [16].

November 11 Tuesday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Huntington Hall, Lowell, Mass. Clemens included “Toast to Babies,” and “Encounter with an Interviewer” [MTPO].

Sam wrote from Boston to James B. Pond, sending revised programs for two New York nights, and enclosing a letter from Orion in Keokuk, Iowa. Jan. 13 was one of the open dates there; Sam hoped he might read in Hannibal, Mo. on Jan. 12 and the next night in Keokuk. He advised Pond not to “sell the show” in Hannibal but to write to Sam’s old schoolmate, John H. Garth and he’d put Pond in touch with the right people. Sam wished to give all of his Hannibal proceeds to “some charity of the town” [MTP].

November 12 Wednesday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Rumford Hall, Waltham, Mass. [MTPO].

Sam wrote from Lowell, Mass. to Livy:

Livy Darling, only a word, to say I have not heard from you since I left you stricken & lonely in the forever accursed town of Springfield—the only town where we have suffered a defeat. I have not heard from you, & it has depressed me all day. It is now midnight, & has been a hard day. Good night my love. Sam [MTP].

Interview: The Boston Herald, p.4, under “Notes” printed Sam’s “comic remarks ...as a way of generating free publicity.” Sam joked about the longish nature of joint readings.

November 13 Thursday – Here was the first big test in a big city—Boston. Pond placed advertisements in the Evening Transcript several days in advance, starting with Nov. 8. He presented the reading as part of the lyceum lecture series. The focus of these ads became the standard for the tour—“Twain is a comedian; Cable a master of humor and pathos” [Cardwell 17].

Sam and Cable read in Boston’s Music Hall. Cable sang Creole songs and read selections from his novel, Dr. Sevier; Sam read passages from Huck Finn and “narrated his struggles with the German language and its unreasonable genders. He also described an incident in Tramp Abroad and threw in examples of “odd humor” [MTHL 2: 513n1]. The audience “applauded frequently.”

Howells was in the audience and wrote Sam the next day that he’d never enjoyed him more.

Montreal Snow Shoe Club per H.S. Tibbs wrote bestow membership on Sam [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Answered”

November 14 Friday – Boston papers reviewed the performance of the previous evening—The Transcript, the Globe, the Journal, and the Post. The Globe compared Cable to Dickens and praised Twain for his struggle with the German language, his trying conversation with the young lady in the hotel dining room at Lucerne, and his ghost story. On balance, all reviews were positive, although the Post called Cable “amateurish in his manner,” but praised him for his singing of Creole songs [Cardwell 18]. Cable wrote home:

We had a great time last night. Twenty-two hundred people applauding, laughing & encoring, In Music Hall. This morning Clemens & I go out to make a call or two. Tonight we read in Brockton. Tomorrow afternoon & night in Chickering Hall. Our show is a great success.
It isn’t easy to write as Mark Twain is singing “We shall walk through the Valley” [Turner, MT & GWC 59.]

Turner writes of “slack attendance” at the evening reading in Brockton, Mass. and also of the following afternoon in Boston [59]. The Boston Journal ran an account of Sam’s comic remarks to reporters as a way of generating free publicity [Budd, “Interviews” 3].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam:

Three of us went to hear you read last night and I think I never enjoyed you more. You were as much yourself before those thousands as if you stood by my chimney-corner grinding away to the household your absence bereaves here. You are a great artist, and you do this public thing so wonderfully well that I don’t see how you could ever bear to give it up. I thought the bits from Huck Finn told the best—at least I enjoyed them the most. That is a mighty good book, and I should like to hear you read it all [MTHL 2: 513].

November 15 Saturday – The Boston Daily Advertiser touted George W. Cable as a southern gentleman, Sam as a Connecticut resident—adding the Civil War reconciliation aspect, a “literary bridging of the bloody chasm” and a “rostrum of rapprochement of Louisiana and Connecticut” [Lorch 164].

Sam and Cable gave a matinee reading in Boston [Turner, MT & GWC 59].

Sam wrote from Boston to Orion, asking him not to telegram about open dates, that it wasted his money.

I placed the matter in my agent’s hands two days ago; & there I leave all such things. We have but 2 dates open in January—that is, we had 2 open; but it is quite possible that the N.Y. agency has filled them before this. We have no engagements on the river except St. Louis—not a single hall or theatre to be had, upon a convenient date, in any town from St. Louis to St. Paul [MTP].

Sam also wrote from Boston to James B. Pond. There'd been too many empty seats at Brockton and at the matinee reading in Boston.

"Louder advertising is absolutely necessary. We must have, in every town & city, one of two or half a dozen vast red posters with the single line, MARK TWAIN—CABLE . . ." [MTP].

November 16 Sunday – Cardwell says Sam was in Providence, R.I. on this day, and Cable "presumably had one or two days at home in Simsbury" [19]. Sam must have continued on to Hartford, because he wrote from there to James B. Pond, setting the program for the first night in New York to be the standard: "There will not be a single change made in it for a month to come—it will always be our one-night & first-night program." Changes were given for the matinee program [MTP].

The Boston Herald ran an article, "Mark Twain and the Police / The Humorist's Experience in a Boston Station House." Budd says "Not quite an interview but contains long statement from SLC about his treatment at police station after helping to prevent a suicide" ["Interviews" 3].

November 17 Monday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Plainfield, N.J. [MTPO]. He did not read in Elmira as planned.

Sam wrote from Hartford to Orion, who evidently had sent him some poetry and a check. The check was acknowledged and Sam added this about Orion's poetry:

Your poetry is all right, only the man whose attention could be diverted by the sun, while dimmed to a farthing candle by the insupportable splendor of the visible face of God, would certainly be a curious duck. Livy is getting along only tolerably, but the children are in matchless health [MTP].

Sam and Cable traveled to New York. The Times reported Sam staying at the Everett House [Nov. 18, 1884 "Personal Intelligence," p2]

Dean Sage wrote from Brooklyn to invite Clemens to stay with him Saturday since Sam & Cable were to perform there that night [MTP].

November 18 Tuesday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Chickering Hall, New York City. Cardwell calls the houses "well-filled" and that Pond ran the same advertisements leading up to the three New York performances [19]. Included: "King Sollermun," "Tragic Tale of the Fishwife," "A Trying Situation," and "A Ghost Story" [MTPO].

William Smart (1853-1915) wrote on the S.S. Umbria on his way back to his Glasgow, Scotland home after hearing Sam's NYC reading. He bemoaned the fact that Sam had never spoken in Scotland (though he did visit there in July-Aug. 1873) [MTP].

November 19 Wednesday – Sam and Cable gave two readings in Chickering Hall, New York City. From The New York Times, Nov. 19, 1884:

GENIUS AND VERSATILITY.

MR. CABLE EXHIBITS BOTH AND MARK TWAIN SOMETHING ELSE.

A numerous and enthusiastic audience assembled at Chickering Hall last evening to listen to readings from the writings of Mr. Samuel L. Clemens — who prefers to be known as "Mark Twain" — Mr. George W. Cable. The gentlemen who read were the gentlemen who had written. The management, in its newspaper advertisements, spoke of the entertainment as a "combination of genius and versatility," but neglected to say which of the gentlemen had the genius and which the versatility. Some of those who were present last evening may have felt justified in coming to the conclusion that Mr. Cable represented both these elements, while Mr. Clemens was simply man, after the fashion of that famous hunting animal one-half of which was pure Irish setter and the other half “just plain dog.” Mr. Cable was humorous, pathetic, weird, grotesque, tender, and melodramatic by turns, while Mr. Clemens confined his efforts to the ridicule of such ridiculous matters as aged colored gentlemen, the German language, and himself.

It became evident early in the evening that the gentleman who conceived the plan of bringing these two readers together had a marvelous faculty for grasping the sublimest possibilities of contrast. The audience appeared, however, to enjoy the sensation of dropping abruptly downward from such delightful people as Narcisse, Ristofalo, and Kate Riley to such earthy creatures as Huckleberry Finn.

The first selection was from “Dr. Sevier,” the interesting scene in which Narcisse thinks he can “baw that fifty dolla’ “ himself. Then Mr. Clemens recited a selection from “The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn,” which will be continued in Mr. Clemens’s next book. Mr. Cable followed with the scene from Dr. Sevier,” in which Kate Riley yields her hand so eagerly to Ristofalo. The audience appeared to enjoy hugely the Italian’s complacent “Da’s all right.” Mr. Clemens then read his “Tragic Tale of a Fishwife,” which continued some remarkable linguistic contortions produced by adapting the German genders to the English language. Mr. Clemens was recalled after this effort and ladled out another section of the “Huckleberry Finn” advance sheets.

Then Mr. Cable read “A Sound of Drums,” from “Dr. Sevier.” This masterly bit of word painting was recited with fine elocutionary art, and held the audience spellbound to the close, when a burst of enthusiastic applause recalled Mr. Cable to the stage and compelled him to sing one of the old Confederate war songs that he learned by the camp fire. Mr. Clemens recited “A Trying Situation,” one of those peculiar productions which attributes to its author much idiocy, and suggests the thought that it was written in the hope that it would make men deem the writer a very different kind of man. Mr. Cable’s last selection from “Dr. Sevier” was “Mary’s Night Ride,” in which weirdness, tenderness, and melodramatic force were joined with a rare skill that evoked hearty and continued applause.

Mr. Clemens concluded the entertainment with “A Ghost Story,” which had no merit beyond the reader’s suggestion that it was a queer story to tell children at bedtime. This afternoon the same programme will be given, and this evening this combination of contrasts will present a fresh batch of readings.

It was on this night that Sam, recalled in his 1906 autobiography, overheard a conversation that would greatly affect his life:

I had been lecturing in Chickering Hall and was walking homeward. It was a rainy night and but few people were about. In the midst of a black gulf between lamps, two dim figures stepped out of a doorway and moved along in front of me. I heard one of them say, “Do you know General Grant has actually determined to write his memoirs and publish them? He has said so today, in so many words.” That was all I heard—just those words—and I thought it great good luck that I was permitted to overhear them [Kaplan 261].

November 20 Thursday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Newburgh, New York.

Sam wrote a letter marked “Confidential” from Hartford to William N. Woodruff, Hartford machinist and contractor, about the Nathan Hale statue competition for the Conn. State Capitol [MTP]. Gerhardt won the competition in Mar. 1885 [Perry 168; Schmidt]. (See MTNJ 3:179n6 for more about Woodruff.)

An advertisement began in the Youth’s Companion for subscription agents for Huckleberry Finn. The ads ran Nov. 20, 27 and Dec. 11, 1884, and carried the line: AGENTS: “Splendid Terms. Canvassing Books Ready,” together with Charles L. Webster & Co.’s New York address. The canvassing books used by salesmen to pitch sales carried the famous obscene defacement of page 283, since Webster did not detect the obscenity until November 28, 1884, eight full days later. He then informed the New York Tribune and the New York Herald about the defacement [The Twainian, Mar-Apr 1946, p.1-3]. See Nov. 29 entry for the Herald article.

Sam called on General Grant at his New York City home on East 66th Street to offer to publish Grant's memoirs. When he left, "he was convinced that the general would give Charles L. Webster & Co. the rights to publish his memoirs" [Perry 115]. (See Nov. 23 to Susy with mention of this visit.) Grant discussed Sam's offer with his children and Adam Badeau, then wrote to close friend and advisor George W. Childs to help him evaluate the situation [116].

The New York World ran an article "Mark Twain as a Lecturer / How He Feels When He Gets on the Stage before an Audience," p. 5. Sam explained "how he watches, gauges, and adjusts to the reactions of audiences" [Budd, "Interviews" 3].

Robert J. Burdette wrote to Clemens, sorry that a lecture engagement called him to Saratoga just as Clemens & Cable were to arrive in Philadelphia [MTP].

November 21 Friday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Association Hall in Philadelphia. Included: "King Sollermun," "Tragic Tale of the Fishwife," "A Trying Situation," and "A Ghost Story" [MTPO].

Sam wrote from Philadelphia to Livy:

"Livy darling, a most noble big audience, & a most prodigious good time.
We are to be here again Wednesday afternoon & evening, 26th —the day before thanksgiving.
I must straight to bed, for we rise at 6 in the morning, & talk twice in Brooklyn tomorrow" [MTP].

An article on page 4 of the Brooklyn Eagle, "Authors as Elocutionists," raved about the "Twins of Genius" technique of "combining literature with the Lyceum." The article said the "form of entertainment that Mr. Clemens and Mr. Cable are engaged in..." was original and effective, and that "The public is greatly the gainer by this novelty."

George Cable wrote on the back of his Philadelphia program to his wife, Lucy:

"Mark is on the platform, there goes a roar of applause! We have a superb audience—both in numbers & quality—and we are beating ourselves. Mark says as he passes me on the retiring room steps 'Old boy, you're doing nobly'" [Turner, MT & GWC 60].

November 22 Saturday – Sam and Cable left Philadelphia and traveled to Brooklyn, where they gave two performances at the Academy of Music. The Brooklyn Eagle called it "The Literary Event of the Season" [p.5]. Henry Ward Beecher and Dean Sage and wife were in the audience. A Miss Copelin from St. Louis sent Sam a note and he went to see her. She was the daughter of a young girl he once knew. Miss Copelin was 21 and her mother was only fifteen when Sam knew her. "It made things seem a long time ago, & also made me feel very old & useless" [Nov. 23 to Clara Clemens, MTP].

The performance finished at 10 PM. Sage came behind the curtain afterward. Cardwell points out that Beecher was "a friend and patron of Cable's," as well as one of Pond's main lecturing stars [22].

The reviews of the readings the next day were extremely positive [Eagle, Nov. 23, 1884 p.12].

November 23 Sunday – Sam and Cable left New York early on their way to Washington, D.C. [Turner, MT & GWC 60].

Sam mentioned in his Nov. 21 letter to Livy that he enjoyed letters from his daughters. He answered and wrote from New York to Clara Clemens (“Ben”).

I enjoy your letters ever so much, & am exceedingly thankful to get them, for I like to hear all about Flash & the cats & all the rest of the family. Now comes a little secret. If a little birth-day present comes to mamma about Wednesday, you can tell you don't know for certain who sent it. And if it doesn't come, you can write & tell me so, privately [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Susy Clemens.

Susie dear, I don't know how to sufficiently thank you or Ben for writing me such good letters & so faithfully. And I want to thank you both for making Jean say things to be sent to me, too. I called at Gen. Grant's the other morning [Nov. 20], & when I saw all his swords, & medals, & collections of beautiful & rare things from Japan & China, I was so sorry I hadn't made Mamma go with me. And Mrs. Grant was sorry, too, & made me promise that I would bring Mamma there to luncheon, some time. Gen. Lew Wallace was there—he has an article in this month's Century about the great Victory of Fort Donelson—and when I told him Mamma was at the reading the other night & was sorry I didn't make her acquainted with the author of Ben Hur, he was very sorry I was so heedless myself [MTP]. Note: Lewis (Lew) Wallace (1827-1905).

Sam also wrote after midnight of Nov. 22 to Livy of the grueling campaign, the big meals he was eating, the Brooklyn talks, and the “welcome letters” from his “dear sweet children” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, directing him to go to Mr. Green at Tiffany's and order a diamond ring for Livy and have it sent on Nov. 25 for her birthday on Nov. 27 [MTP].

Eugenie Alexander wrote from Berlin, Germany having read A Tramp Abroad, and being told Clemens had never visited those countries. She asked that he “fulfill the wish of a young lady” and confirm [MTP]. Note: on the env., Sam wrote “Bid for autograph.”

November 24 Monday – Thomas Nast invited Sam to spend time with him since Sam and Cable were to lecture in Morristown, New Jersey on Thanksgiving eve.

“Or, if you cannot spend so much time here we can give you a substantial tea at six or seven. Do you require reinforcing after the lecture is over? That was always my hungry time” [MTP].

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading in Congregational Church, Washington, D.C. Included: “King Sollermun,” “Tragic Tale of the Fishwife,” “A Trying Situation,” “Col. Sellers in a New Role,” “Encounter with an Interviewer” and “A Ghost Story” [MTPO].

Afterward Cable wrote to his wife Lucy:

A crowded house that went off like gunpowder the moment it was touched; a delicious audience. The brightest, quickest, most responsive that we have yet stood before....When I arrived in town the local manager told me he had between 12 and 15 requests for me to sing Zizi. The audience encored it; but I gave them “Mary's Night Ride” & then they encored that, & I sang Aurore. How I love to read the Night Ride; but it is a good half-day's work crowded into seven minutes... [Turner, MT & GWC 61].

Sam wrote from Washington, D.C. to Livy:

Splendid times, Livy dear! A Congregational church packed with people—$750 in the house. The most responsive audience you ever saw. We did make them shout, from the first word to the last. I say “we,” for the honors were exactly equal—as they pretty much always are, now. I worked the ghost story right, this time, & made them jump out of their skins.

Sam wrote of playing billiards with Robert Allen, his “vast supper at 10.40 this evening” and thanked the children for their letters [MTP].

Sam also wrote to George Iles, that it was:

“...no use—all our efforts have failed, & we can’t get to Montreal this year” [MTP].

Webster & Co. per Frederick J. Hall sent Clemens a statement of a/c [MTP].

November 25 Tuesday – In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a second reading in Congregational Church, Washington, D.C. The Washington Post printed a very positive review of the previous night, and announced that President Grant would attend the reading this night.

“Mark Twain,” for it does not seem natural to call him Mr. Clemens, first recited from the advance sheets of “The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn.” This classic was an account of King Sollymun, his wives, wealth and wisdom. It was down in the Mississippi Valley. Huck Finn, a white boy who was maltreated by the old man, ran away with Nigger Jim from the plantation and camped out in the woods. Their conversation was about kings. Jim wasn’t familiar with kings. The only kings he knew anything about were the four kings in a pack of cards. Then Huck told what he knew about kings in general and “Sollymun” in particular. To his youthful mind they were persons who got $1000 per month, went to war occasionally, but “as a general thing they hung around a harem.” Jim was disposed to question “Sollymun’s” wisdom in cutting the disputed child in two. In vain Huck told him he did not understand the case. “It was all on ‘count of his raising,” said Jim. “He had about five million children. Take a man with two or three. Is he gwine to be wasteful of children like dat?” [Railton]

Note: Nowhere in Huck Finn does Sam refer to Jim as “Nigger Jim.” When did this label start? Ernest Hemingway is often blamed for this, but the above review shows, even before Huck Finn was published in the U.S., that some referred to Jim as “Nigger Jim.”

After this performance, Cable discovered three visitors in his dressing room waiting to congratulate him—President Chester A. Arthur, a daughter of Frederick T. Frelinghuysen (Arthur’s Secretary of State) and another unidentified lady. After a time Frederick Douglass came in. Cable was ecstatic about the significance of a meeting between a “runaway slave” and the President; Cable wrote of the meeting to his wife Lucy [Cardwell 22]. (See Nov. 26 entry.)

The Washington Post ran an article on “The rambling narrative style of Twain, Riley, and Artemus Ward” being the pose of “innocence victimized by the world, flesh, and the devil” [Tenney 13].

Andrew Chatto wrote to thank Clemens for his letter of Nov. 5; he fixed Dec. 10 for the publication date of HF in England and had written that to Webster; he advised following the same plan of Canadian copyright used for LM; Moncure Conway had asked for an early copy of HF which would be sent [MTP].

Charles B. Norton for Am. Exhibition in London wrote to ask Clemens if they might add his name to a list of “representative Americans” used for the programme in London in 1886 [MTP].

November 26 Wednesday – Sam and Cable left Washington for Philadelphia, where they gave a reading in Association Hall. In the evening, they gave a reading in Morristown, New Jersey and spent the night at the home of Thomas Nast, just before Nast began his own tour. The cartoonist arranged for them a quiet supper...Oysters on the shell were served at the little repast, and Mr. Clemens expressed his delight at the quality thereof and at Nast's urging ate five plates full, after which he asked for an apple. Sam and George were to leave early the next morning, and Mrs. Nast agreed to see that they were up in time. When she woke she found the men still asleep and every clock in the house stopped. Sam said, "Wal, those clocks are all overworked, anyway. They will feel much better for a night's rest" [Paine, Nast 511-12].

The first copy of HF was bound with a tipped-in dedication that was later removed in favor of the current one. This page, apparently on the same paper as MS2, survives tipped into a copy of the first American edition in which Webster wrote: "This copy of 'Adventures of Huckleberry Finn' was bound by J.F. Tapley Nov 26th 1884, and is the first copy ever bound."

Note: This same item, book with page tipped in was sold at Christies [sale 51, item 1388] on 9 June 2004, price realized $265,100. Here is the deleted page:

To the Once Boys & Girls who comraded with me in the morning of time & the youth of antiquity, in the village of Hannibal, Missouri, this book is inscribed, with affection for themselves, respect for their virtues, & reverence for their honorable gray hairs.

The Author

"It was probably sometime during these months [from Sept 1883 to mid-April 1884] that he wrote a dedication for the book and added it (in holographic manuscript) to his assembled typescript — although he ultimately deleted it before publication" [MTP].

George Cable wrote from Philadelphia to his wife, Lucy:

I wrote you last in Wash'n. I didn't tell you that I met Fred. Douglass. He came into the retiring room & was there when the President was there. They met as acquaintances. Think of it! A runaway slave!

Mark is on the stage reading (reciting) his "Desperate Encounter with an Interviewer," and the roars of laughter fall as regularly as a surf. I think it's a great thing to be able to hold my own with so wonderful a platform figure [Turner, MT & GWC 62].

November 27 Thursday – Livy's 39th birthday.

Sam and George W. Cable left the Nast home in Morristown, New Jersey on Thanksgiving morning [Paine, Nast 512]. Once again, Sam was away from home on a family member's birthday. Willis describes Livy's Hartford life at the time:

"Occupied with the house, children, paying the bills, taking care of her husband's correspondence, she wrote him, 'I love you but I can only send you this line today there are so many things waiting to be done.' German lessons continued as part of the daily routine of the Clemens household. Susie was memorizing and reciting Tennyson, as Clara was doing with Aesop's fables. With Livy's further encouragement, Clara began violin lessons in addition to the piano" [159].

The New York World ran an article about the defacement of a Huck Finn illustration, which created an obscenity and delayed production. The unsigned article was titled, "Mark Twain in a Dilemma [sic—a Victim of a Joke He Thinks the Most Unkindest Cut of All" [Tenney 13]. Note: Several other papers ran articles about this also, including the New York Tribune and the New York Herald on Nov. 29.

The Philadelphia Press, p. 3, ran “Mark Twain and the President / The Humorist Reads before That Official and Thinks That He Impressed Him” [Scharnhorst, Interviews 52-3].

November 28 Friday – Sam wrote on board the train from Washington to Livv [MTP]:

We dined & stayed all night with Tom Nast & family, & had a most noble good time. I occupied his eldest daughter's room—Miss Julia Nast, aged about 20—the most remarkable room I was ever in—a curious & inexhaustible museum. Not an inch of the four walls could be seen—all hidden under pictures, photographs, etchings, photographs, Christmas cards, menus, fans, statuettes, trinkets & knick-knacks in all metals—little brackets everywhere, with all imaginable dainty & pretty things massed upon them & hanging from them—the most astounding variety of inexpensive & interesting trifles that was ever huddled together upon four walls in this world .

Sam and Cable gave a reading in Academy of Music, Baltimore, Maryland. While Sam was on stage, George Cable wrote his wife, Lucy:

“I am again in the retiring room. Mark is making the house roar as only a Southern audience can. It is an immense house too, although the rain has poured all day long” [Turner, MT & GWC 63].

Charles Webster caught an obscene defacement on page 283 of Huck Finn after 250 copies had gone out. He blew the whistle and contacted the press (see Nov. 29 entry, also Nov 20.)

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens that Col. Fred Grant “writes that he will see you on the subject of his father's new book at any time” and that he'd showed Sam's letter to his father [MTP].

November 29 Saturday – Sam and Cable gave a second reading in Academy of Music, Baltimore, Md. From the Baltimore Morning Herald of this day:

The announcement that Mark Twain and George W. Cable would give readings from their works filled the lecture room of the Academy last night. Applause broke out when a short, slender figure, clad in evening dress, advanced with a dainty tread to the front of the stage and bowed to the audience. The figure was that of Mr. Cable. His hair is dark and his eyes gleam now with humor and now with pathos.

He wears a full beard and long, well-twisted mustachios that droop on either side and form a complete semi-circle. His feet and hands are small and the latter he uses with all the grace and delicacy of a woman. Mr. Cable's voice is pitched in a high but musical key. His modulation possesses a charm which suggests the rippling of a stream. It rises and falls with almost every word.

With the exception of the Creole songs which Mr. Cable sang, all his readings were from his “Dr. Sevier.” To say the least, they were delightful, and were heartily appreciated by the audience.

Mark Twain no sooner put his head outside the flies than the audience began to laugh as well as applaud. There was something indescribably droll about the very look of the man.

He, too, wore the conventional swallow tail. He came forward with a lazy air. It was as much as he seemed able to do to drag one foot after another. His dark, iron-grey hair was brushed back. He has a heavy brownish moustache. As he walks he stoops slightly. He never smiles. When he says anything that creates laughter, he simply pauses, throws his head a little on one side and peers sleepily out of the corner of his eye.

His favorite use of his hands is either to scratch the back of his head or with the outside of his thumb to rub his half-closed eyes. The program of last evening will be repeated at 2 P. M. to-day. An entirely new program will be produced to-night at 8 o'clock [Railton].

Sam also submitted to an “interview” by the Baltimore American. (See Fatout, Mark Twain Speaks for Himself, p137.)

Sam wrote from Baltimore to Livy

“Livy darling, Judge Turner has been in—however, I believe you do not know him. Ross Winans has just gone. He came to invite me to dinner to-morrow, but we dine with President Gilman of Johns Hopkins University, or President Hopkins of John Gilman’s University, darned if I remember which” [MTP]. See Nov. 30 for more on Gilman.

Sam had seen Thomas Winans’ “palace” years before (see Apr. 26, 1877 entry), and was fascinated with the technological features of the home. “Winans married one of the Whistler girls...” Sam explained. He was about to receive Richard Malcom Johnston, author of Dukesborough Tales (Gribben includes this book in Sam’s library, p357, claiming it is “widely believed to have influenced the drunk’s bareback riding act that so astonishes Huckleberry Finn in chapter 21”) but had refused an invite from “That dam Goddard” (unidentified). Sam had telegraphed an acceptance of an invitation from Mrs. Dean Sage, of Brooklyn. He thanked Livy and the children for pictures and letters: “The pictures are an immense company to me” [MTP].

The New York Tribune and the New York Herald ran articles about the tampering with page 253 of Huck Finn which created an obscenity (Giving Uncle Silas a penis—well, that is, one that showed.) This from the Herald:

MARK TWAIN’S ALTERED BOOK

Mr. Charles L. Webster, nephew of Mark Twain, yesterday offered a reward of $500 for the apprehension and conviction of the person who so altered an engraving in “Huckleberry Finn” as to make it obnoxious. Mr. Webster said yesterday: “The book was examined before the final printing by W.D. Howells, Mr. Clemens, the proofreader and myself. Nothing improper was discovered. On page 283 was a small illustration with the subscription, ‘What (sic) do you reckon it is?’ By the punch of an awl or graver, the illustrations became an immoral one. But 250 copies left the office, I believe, before the mistake was discovered.

Had the first edition been run off, our loss would have been $25,000. Had the mistake not been discovered, Mr. Clemens’s credit for decency and morality would have been destroyed.” Mr. Webster thought that the culprit would soon be discovered. He believed no malice or bribery existed, and absolved the American Publishing Co. from any connection with the act [The Twainian, Mar-Apr 1946, p2].

Note: Sam may have prompted Webster to make the aspersion against his late publisher. At the time Sam was in a bitter legal battle to regain his copyrights or to force Am. Pub. Co. to go after the Alabama pirates, The Coker Co. (See Nov. 20 entry.)

The Baltimore American, p.4, printed “Mark Twain’s Ideas.” Sam complained about traveling, and discussed audience psychology and Americanisms of speech [Scharnhorst, Interviews 53-6].

November 30 Sunday – Sam’s 49th birthday. Johann Schiller’s The Fight with the Dragon, a Romance, was inscribed: “Saml. L. Clemens, Nov. 30th, 1884” [Gribben 606]. Note: Perhaps a birthday gift.

Sam and Cable dined with Daniel Coit Gilman (1831-1908), first president of Johns Hopkins University [Turner, MT & GWC 63].

This was a travel day for the “Twins of Genius,” as they went from Baltimore to Adams, Mass. Sam may have gone home to Hartford briefly, as he took a ride north with Livy and the children the next day to Simsbury, Conn., where George W. Cable then resided.

December – Sam telegraphed Charles Webster. The place and day are unknown. “Plucky lawyers are scarce in Hartford,” Sam wrote, but recommended Charles S. Cole if Webster needed a lawyer to go after the American Publishing Co., to sue for copyright in light of the piracy of The Frank Coker News Co. of Talladega, Ala. (See June 26 entry.)

Sam thought of describing a battle between “Prince de Joinville’s Middle Age Crusaders” and “a modern army” with modern weapons [Gribben 142]. Note: this anticipated CY.

The December Century ran an excerpt of Huck Finn: The Grangerford-Shepherdson Feud [Camfield, bibliog.]. The same magazine also ran the first of three small (approx. 3” x 4”) display ads, announcing MARK TWAIN’S NEW WORK, with Kemble’s picture of Huck Finn doffing straw hat, “sold only by subscription, agents wanted, Chas. Webster” etc. The same ads also ran in the Jan. and Feb. 1885 Century [MTP, 1884-5 financial files].

December, early – George W. Childs, friend and advisor to General Grant had decided that Sam’s offer to Grant was the best available [Perry 117]. Webster was to work out the contract for Grant’s book. He offered either a 20 per cent royalty on sales or 70 per cent of the net profits beyond the cost of production [118]. Alexander & Green, Sam’s New York law firm, together with Clarence Seward, Grant’s attorney and son of Lincoln’s secretary of state, drew up the contract [MTA 1: 41].

December 1 Monday – The Clemens family drove north a few hours to Simsbury, Conn., where Cable resided. Sam and Cable may have caught a conveyance there to Adams, Mass., on the western side of the state.

Sam wrote at 6:30 PM from Adams, Mass. to Livy, that he’d enjoyed the few hours ride to Simsbury with her and the children. His hoarseness had disappeared, he hadn’t had a nap and hoped Livy could cheer her mother up about Charles Langdon, who was in poor health [MTP].

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading in Town Hall Adams, Mass. [MTPO].

December 2 Tuesday – Sam and Cable arrived at Albany, New York at noon. Governor and President-elect Cleveland requested an audience. Writing to Livy the next day about the meeting:

...we had a quite jolly & pleasant brief chat with the President-elect. He remembered me easily, have seen me often in Buffalo, but I didn’t remember him, of course, & I didn’t say I did. He had to meet the electors at a banquet in the evening, & expressed great regret that that must debar him from coming to the lecture; so I said if he would take my place on the platform I would run the banquet for him; but he said that that would only be a one-sided affair, because the lecture audience would be so disappointed. Then I sat down on four electrical bells at once (as the cats used to do at the farm,) & summoned four pages whom nobody had any use for [Note: See MTA 2: 165-6 for another account].

We were all over the Capitol, which is a palace, & got acquainted with a lot of the State officers; then to the Senate chamber & saw the beginning of the solemn ceremony of the casting of the electoral vote of the State of New York for President of the U.S. [MTP].

Later, Sam and Cable gave a reading to “an enormous audience” in Music Hall, Troy, New York. From the Troy Daily Times the following day:

The unique entertainment given by Mark Twain and George W. Cable at Music Hall last evening was attended by an audience which filled nearly every seat on the floor and in the galleries. Mr. Cable has taken his place among the best American novelists and has created a unique and striking original style of story. There was much curiosity, therefore, to see the author of the Creole tales which have won such remarkable popularity with the reading public of late years. Mr. Cable is not a handsome man, but his face and head show an active intellect and a vivid imagination. His recitations, which were all taken from his strongest work, “Dr. Sevier,” were delivered in a striking and pleasing though not artistic manner. His singing of Creole songs was warmly applauded. Mark Twain, though laboring under a severe cold, managed to make himself heard by the large audience, which showed a disposition to laugh whether he spoke or was silent. There was nothing remarkably witty in his remarks, but his manner and the humorous expression of his mouth and eyes would create laughter if he should read an act of congress to an audience. Altogether, the entertainment was pleasing, not only from its novelty, but from the originality of the men who conducted it. It did not drag, and the audience as it retired at 10:45 o’clock was by no means weary of listening to the pathos and humor of Cable and the laughable remarks of Mark Twain. A literary entertainment is a success if the auditors remain in their places to the end. Few, if any, left the hall last evening till they were startled from their seats by the sudden ending of Mark Twain’s ghost story [Railton].

December 3 Wednesday – George W. Cable wrote en route between Albany and Ithaca to his wife, Lucy:

We had 1400 hearers at Troy. Mark was half sick with a cold—hoarse and weak-voiced, and compared with Balt/o & Wash/n the evening’s success was feeble; but the audience thought it was great. Mary’s Night Ride had to go without an encore at last. But it wasn’t my fault and it was the hit of the evening. The Ghost Story (Mark’s) fell almost flat by reason of persons (2 or 3) rising in the audience just at the critical moment. It was outrageous & I don’t wonder M.T. came off the platform angry. . . . We were given a nice little supper & got to bed at the neat hour of two o’clock, with Mark at peace under the influence of our solemn pledge to each other henceforth to stop our reading and poke unmerciful fun at any one who dares to rise in the audience while we are speaking. It is our only defense against this double imposition on the audience and us [Turner, MT & GWC 64-5].

Sam and Cable gave a reading in Wilgus Opera House, Ithaca, New York. The pair visited Henry Sage, once a partner of the late Jervis Langdon [Turner, MT & GWC 65]. Note: father of Dean Sage.

Sam wrote from Albany, New York to Livy, about meeting President-elect Grover Cleveland, their tour of the New York State Capitol, and the “enormous audience” at Troy.

“I met young Smith of Elmira, & got all the news about the Arnots—very sad news it is” [MTP].

J.H. Usay for Durham Co., Chicago wrote to relate having his copy of RI rebound; the title page was missing and the book was bound and lettered “Mormon History” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Pleasant note”

December 4 Thursday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Grand Opera House, Syracuse, NY [MTPO].

Sam wrote from Syracuse, New York to Thomas Nast, thanking him for the Nast family’s recent hospitality in Morristown, N.J.

“...do all your praying now, for a time is coming when you will have to go railroading & platforming, & then you will find you cannot pray any more because you will have only just time to swear enough” [MTP].

December 5 Friday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Opera House, Utica, NY [MTPO].

Sam wrote from Utica, New York to Susy Clemens.

“Susie, my dear, I have been intending to write you & Ben for a long time, but have been too busy. Nach meinen vorlesung in Ithika..." [etc. the rest in German; MTP].

December 6 Saturday – Sam and Cable rose at 4:30 A.M. and took the train to Rochester, New York, arriving at 10 A.M. They gave a 2 PM matinee reading in Rochester at the Academy of Music for a small, but “appreciative to a degree” audience, who fought a downpour to hear the two men. The evening performance was to “a large house and great fun.” Cable wrote his wife that neither of them had ever done so well [Turner, MT & GWC 66].

At Cable’s urging [Cardwell 26] Sam purchased Thomas Malory’s Le Morte d’Arthur, and began writing notes for what would become, five years later, A Connecticut Yankee [Cardwell 54].

Sam wrote two letters from Rochester to Livy. He’d promised to write twice to make up for days when his schedule prevented writing. The first included:

“Been railroading since 4 oclock this morning. My hoarseness seems to be entirely gone, at last, & I feel fresh & splendid. But we got to talk here twice, to-day, & so I am going at once to bed & snatch a couple of hours’ sleep. I have acquired the blessed faculty of sleeping in the day time, in spite of clatter & racket.”

Sam felt the trip was a “great thing” for his health, but was sorry it was a hardship for Livy.

“Curse the matines! I have ordered that this be the last one for the present” [MTP].

In the second note, Sam noted that it had rained hard all day and spoke at a matinee performance.

“The houses were good but not crowded, & we made them shout. I wore that coat for the first time—and the last. It will go back to you by express. I shall never wear anything but evening dress again. I will not defer to fashion to the destruction of my comfort” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to remind Clemens that he “must be in Canada on Wednesday Dec. 10th” he gave directions [MTP].

N.C. Crane wrote from Mount Hope, NY to ask Clemens for his autograph [MTP].

December 7 Sunday – Sam wrote two more letters from Rochester to Livy. In the first note, Sam admitted being homesick on a “sour, bleak, windy day...with trifling flurries of snow.” He’d stayed in bed all day reading and smoking. Except for the weather the houses would have been overflowing.

The second note in the afternoon was a P.S. describing a “violent & absurd” performance of his “first sample of the Salvation Army” [MTP].

Cable wrote home that the hotel put Sam and him “on different floors, instead of adjoining rooms as usual. I am told the papers say he was to have enjoyed the hospitality of a club, The Elks, this evening” [Turner, MT & GWC 66].

December 8 Monday – Sam and Cable arrived in Toronto, Canada at 4:30 P.M. on the Great Western train from Niagara Falls [Roberts 19]. In Toronto, Rose Publishing Co. applied to Sam to buy the Canadian rights to publish Huck Finn [Dec. 10 to Webster, MTP]. Ozias Pond was not the tour’s manager until after New Year’s day, but came with the pair. They all stayed at the Rossin House, Toronto’s first luxury hotel.

In the evening Sam and Cable gave a reading in Horticulture Gardens Pavilion, a 2,500 seat hall only six years old. The next day the Toronto papers, The Telegram, The Globe, The World, and The Mail were unanimous in pronouncing the reading a success. Tickets were 50 cents, reserved seats 25 cents extra. [Roberts

As he sometimes did, George W. Cable wrote his wife Lucy while waiting for his turn on stage:

Such a time as we are having! Such roars of British applause. I never heard anything like it out of N. Orleans. . . . We are in a big glass Horticultural Hall with people so far away at the bottom of the audience that their features can hardly be discerned. . . .

When I go back upon the platform again (in a moment) I have to sing my 2 or 3 Creole songs. I always shrink from this, the only thing I do shrink from; though it's always encored [Turner, MT & GWC 67].

Sam wrote at midnight from Toronto to Livy, listing the items he ate for his “hearty breakfast at 9 this morning.” He also ate a large lunch at 1 PM on the “hotel car.” He’d also just finished a late “supper of beefsteak &c.” Sam told of the night’s performance:

“To-night a noble hall to talk in, & an audience befitting it. Both of us had a gorgeously good time. I saw ladies swabbing their eyes freely & undisguisedly after Cable’s ‘Night Ride.’ He did it well” [MTP].

The Rochester Herald, p. 8, printed “Mark Twain Encountered,” Sam’s comments on the Cogswell Fountain in Rochester; his partnership with Cable; the architecture of his Hartford house [Budd, “Interviews” 3-4; Scharnhorst, Interviews 57-9].

Mrs. B.W. Hall wrote to Clemens wondering if he was the son of “Old Judge Clemens.” She told of her days in Florida, Mo. [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Get Agric Editor” and “Preserve this characteristic Southern letter”

December 9 Tuesday – Sam and Cable were driven around Toronto to see the sights, which included the University of Toronto. They visited the studio of painter Andrew Dickson Patterson (1854-1930) famous a year later for his portrait of Canada’s first prime minister, John A. Macdonald (1815-1891).

Sam wrote from Toronto, Canada to Livy:

Livy darling, guess who I stumbled on in the hotel car yesterday, with cheery countenance & healthy appetite? Frank Hall the exile. He said he was going to Chicago.

We have been all over town, to-day, in the crisp cold air, but I read too long, after going to bed,—read past the sleepy point—& so I have lost my afternoon nap. However, I’m getting a bath ready, & shall go from that to the platform & be all right, no doubt [MTP].

Sam enclosed a short article about the power of a half dozen schoolgirls to brighten up Sphinx-like people on a railroad car. “These be the heavenly bodies in the firmament of our home & life,” Sam wrote across the article.

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a second Toronto performance in Horticulture Gardens Pavilion. Both Toronto events were sold out [Roberts 22]. The Toronto Globe ran a 2,000-word article on the Dec. 8 performance, including a near verbatim record of Sam’s conversations between Huck and Jim [Cardwell 27-8].

The Toronto Globe printed “The Genial Mark: An Interview” on page 2. Sam explained why he broke his vow never to lecture again [Scharnhorst, Interviews 59].

Daniel A. Rose for Rose Publishing Co., Toronto wrote to “respectfully enquire if you are in a position to consider an offer for the publishing of your new book in Canada.” He mentioned prior efforts to republish TA and P&P from Sam’s publishers [MTP].

Edward H. House wrote from Tokyo, Japan, enclosing “bits of lace work, which Mrs. Clemens has doubtless been wondering about...” [MTP].

December 10 Wednesday – The Dawson Brothers in Canada and Chatto & Windus in London published Adventures of Huckleberry Finn [Powers, MT A Life 489; Roberts 22].

Sam needed to satisfy the copyright requirement for Canada by staying in the country until the end of the business day, so he stopped in Fort Erie, while Cable and Pond continued on to Buffalo, New York. Sam later caught up with them there and the pair read in Concert Hall [Roberts 22]. Fatout says Sam had to talk above steam pipes banging [Circuit 212]. “A Ghost Story,” “King Sollermun” and “Personal Episodes” [MTPO].

Sam wrote from Fort Erie, Canada to Charles Webster, notifying him about Rose Publishing Co. wishing to buy Canadian rights to Huck Finn. Sam wanted him to send them an answer, provided they hadn’t pirated P&P [MTP].

Andrew Chatto wrote to Clemens that HF had been published [MTP].

William R. Nichols wrote to ask Clemens his views on amateur journalism [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Impudent puppy. / Not answered”

December 11 Thursday – Sam “rushed to David Gray’s...with Cable, arrived at noon” and had to wait for his steak to be re-cooked, and so drank two cups of strong coffee that did not agree with him [Dec. 12 to Livy, MTP].

Sam and Cable gave a second reading in Concert Hall, Buffalo, New York.

The Buffalo Times:

A very large and fashionable audience assembled in Concert Hall last night to hear that prince of humor, Mark Twain (Samuel M. Clemens), and that celebrated novelist, George W. Cable, in their joint readings. They went expecting a treat and they got decidedly more than they bargained for. A more delighted, amused, thoroughly satisfied audience never filled the auditorium of any building in Buffalo. Mark Twain, like old wine, or old friends, seems to improve with age, and his dry, unconscious, apparently spontaneous humor kept the audience in convulsions of laughter. With the exception of his first reading, given in the program below, most of the great humorist’s admirers have heard or read the selections he gave last night, but they are of the kind that never grow “stale, flat or unprofitable” by repetition [Railton].

The Buffalo Express, Sam’s old paper:

“Mark Twain,” as an old resident of Buffalo, felt it necessary to renew former acquaintances. He scanned the audience from beneath those heavy brows and said that he missed many faces that he knew so well here fourteen or fifteen years ago. They had gone, gone to the tomb, to the gallows—or to the White House. All of us must at last go to one or another of these destinations, and he advised his audience to be wise and prepare for them all [Railton].

In the evening he met with the Hartford Club of Buffalo for dinner, but, “...ate not a bite, & spent 2 of the infernalist weariest hatefulest hours that ever fell to my lot” [Dec. 12 to Livy, MTP].

December 12 Friday – Sam took a train from Buffalo at 12:30 A.M. and arrived at Ann Arbor, Mich. at 10 A.M. Sam wrote from Ann Arbor to Livy:

...went straight to bed, declining President Angel's [Buffalo University] invitation to dinner & meet ex-President Hayes's wife & others at 6 this evening. It will be a long time before I sample anybody's hospitality again. I have been asleep two hours, & shall resume it right off. I find no letters here—hope for some before we get away. I love you sweetheart [MTP].

Sam and Cable gave a reading in University Hall, Ann Arbor [MTPO].

December 13 Saturday – Two copies of Adventures of Huckleberry Finn were deposited in the Copyright Office, Library of Congress, though the official publication did not take place until Feb. 18, 1885 [Hirst, "A Note on the Text" Oxford edition, 1996].

Sam wrote from Grand Rapids, Mich. to Livy, that they'd spent the whole day on the train and would rest in bed an hour before his reading. He was homesick again, and ate chestnuts the children had left in his overcoat pockets. Cable visited a Baptist church where he was called on to talk to the Sunday school [Cardwell 29].

Sam and Cable gave a reading in Grand Rapids, Mich. Afterward the two went to Professor and Mrs. Rogers' reception given to Mrs. Rutherford Hayes (Lucy Ware Hayes), wife of the ex-President. Cable wrote she was "a fine looking woman." Cable reported they...

"...got away very early & went to the tavern & to supper. A deputation of students waited to see us in the parlor. Rec'd them standing and after some pleasant exchanges parted from them & went to bed..." [Turner, MT & GWC 70].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: "We brought out the book all right and the copyright on Huck Finn is perfect" Good sales were coming in from agents, though the depression hampered [MTP].

December 14 Sunday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Muskegon, Mich. on Dec. 14. Previously reported as Dec. 4. See SLC to Andrew Chatto on Dec. 14, also from Muskegon. Mark Twain Journal misreported the date.

Sam wrote from Muskegon, Mich. to Andrew Chatto, telling him about the good time he was having "on the highway i.e., the platform, giving readings on Huck Finn" and other books. Should he venture over and try it in London in the spring or summer? [MTP]. Note: This letter may have been misdated, because Sam wrote the day before and this day from Grand Rapids, as did Cable.

Sam also wrote short notes in German from the Morton House in Grand Rapids, Mich. to each of his daughters, Clara, Jean, and Susy. He also wrote to Livy, happy that the "thundering hard week" would end at home.

Livy dear, I have just written three German letters to the children, & now I will give the fag-end of my time before train-departure to a word with Mamma. By George these are terrific days of travel!—eight, ten, twelve hours in the cars every day or night, & a talk on the platform at the end. Toledo & Detroit have been interchanged; consequently I leave here at 6 p.m. to-day, reach Jackson toward 10; leave there half past 5 a.m., & get to Toledo during the forenoon. Cable would land in — — — — — in a minute if he were to go a mile on Sunday; consequently he leaves here at 5 to-morrow morning, & is on the road the entire day till night [MTP].

Sam also wrote a two-line note to Charles Webster, asking him to get the Globe edition of Thomas Malory's "Le Morte D'Arthur" and leave it with James B. Pond for his brother, Ozias W. Pond [MTP].

Sam stayed in Jackson, Michigan, population then about 16,000, and wrote about the hotel and furnishings the next day to Livy. It snowed lightly all day and night [Dec. 15 to Livy].

December 15 Monday – Sam wrote two letters from Toledo, Ohio to Livy. After remarking on the “prettiest furniture” of the hotel the night before in Jackson, Mich., Sam told of his day:

“We got up at 5 & took the train. All the way, in the cars, was a mother with her first child—the proudest & silliest fool I have struck this year. She beat the new brides that one sees on the trains” [MTP].

In his second letter, Sam asked his wife not to make any appointments for him outside the home during the holiday break. Sam wanted to improve his program for second nights in the same city. Livy had made reading choices for him and he wanted to “go to work on them the minute” he got home, and “make another hunt through the books” with her [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, asking how the bedclothes invention happened to tear?

How in the nation can the thing tear, when it has got a couple of coverlets in its grip, & when the elastics give, & won't let it tear?

You want to experiment more carefully.

Sam expected:

“...to be at the Everett House Friday the 19th for a couple of hours. Call at 8 or 8.30 a.m.” [MTP].

Sam and Cable gave a reading in Opera House, Toledo, Ohio. During his turn off stage, George Cable wrote his wife Lucy:

Our experience with such [apathetic] houses is that I lift them a little with my first number, then [MT] lifts them from that stage a little higher, then with my 2/d number I lift them to a third elevation & with his 2/d no. (being the 4th) he gets them into a good strong glow. I am happy to see it is working just so now, after all. If he can get an encore from them on this we shall have them to the end without any trouble.

There! Mark gets the call back twice over. Now we're all right. It will be encores right through to the end [Turner, MT & GWC 72-3].

December 16 Tuesday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Whitney's Grand Opera House, Detroit, Michigan. The Detroit Post featured the Toledo visit, observing that Sam's gait:

...resembled the motion of a tall boy on short stilts, [with] one of the oddest looking faces ever worn by man...his neck swan-like and white, but much thicker than a swan's [Cardwell 29].

December 17 Wednesday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Case Hall, Cleveland, Ohio [MTPO]. Clemens included: readings from HF, “A Ghost Story,” “Personal Anecdote” [MTPO].

A review of Sam and Cable's readings ran in the Detroit Post and included the following “interview”:

A “POST” REPORTER DISTURBS TWAIN AND INTERVIEWS CABLE.

Messrs. Clemens and Cable arrived in the city yesterday afternoon and registered at the Russell house. They had not long been in their rooms, 26 and 24, when a POST reporter called to interview the celebrated humorist. Pretty soon the door was opened an inch or two, and the well-known face of the humorist appeared in the opening. The white covering which enveloped his neck and shoulders created a suspicion in the reporter's mind that the author of “Innocents Abroad” was in his night-shirt, and further investigation disclosed the latter to be the case.

TWAIN VERY SLEEPY.

“Hello. Glad to see you. Can’t ask you in, though, as I’m just going to bed.”

“I will only detain you a few minutes, Mr. Clemens,” apologized the reporter.

“I want to go to sleep. You’d better come around after the lecture. By the way, the POST is a good paper. I read an excellent article on copyright the other day which was taken from your paper.”

“I would like to ask you a few questions regarding your opinions on copyright privileges,” remarked the writer, who began to imagine that he had gained the humorist’s attention at last.

“Ask Mr. Cable. He knows all about copyright. Whatever he says you can put in my mouth and I’ll be responsible,” replied the literary hero with a tremendous yawn.

“But it won’t take you five minutes to answer my questions.”

“Too sleepy. I feel the yearning for slumber here,” and he tapped his forehead. “If I don’t get it now I won’t get it at all. Interview Cable in the meantime, and come around and see me after 10 this evening.” [Denney 24].

Charlotte Fiske Bates (1838-1916) sent Clemens a poem “To ‘Mark Twain’” and a short note, after being read a passage by a sick friend from HF. She referred to the character Emmeline Grangerford, who would write funeral poems before the undertaker arrived, but whose fatal failing was the inability to rhyme “Whistler” [MTP].

December 18 Thursday – Sam and Cable took a Christmas break, this day being a travel day. Sam headed for New York where he spent the night at the Everett House, where he’d asked Webster to call on the morning of Dec. 19 [Dec. 15 to Webster, MTP]. Cable headed to his home in Simsbury, Conn., but stopped in New York where he appeared alone on Dec. 19 at the Y.M.C.A. [Cardwell 31; Turner, MT & GWC 75].

December 19 Friday – Sam, after meeting with Charles Webster, probably headed straight home for Hartford, although no documentation for this date has been found. Upon reaching home, Sam was in store for a surprise.

I returned to Hartford from the far West, reaching home one evening just at dinner time. I was expecting to have a happy and restful season by a hickory fire in the library with the family, but was required to go at once to George Warner’s house, a hundred and fifty yards away, across the grounds. This was a heavy disappointment, and I tried to beg off, but did not succeed. I couldn’t even find out why I must waste this precious evening in a visit to a friend’s house when our own house offered so many and superior advantages. There was a mystery somewhere, but I was not able to get to the bottom of it. So we tramped across in the snow, and I found the Warner drawing-room crowded with seated people. There was a vacancy in the front row, for me—in front of a curtain. At once the curtain was drawn, and before me, properly costumed, was the little maid, Margaret Warner, clothed in Tom Canty’s rags, and beyond an intercepting railing was Susy Clemens, arrayed in the silks and satins of the prince....This lovely surprise was my wife’s work [MTA 1: 59-60].

Jervis Langdon Jr. remembered:

Susy as the Prince, the son of the irascible Henry the Eighth, in that first scene with the Pauper, the son of brutal John Canty, was saying seriously: “Fathers be alike mayhap; mine hath not a doll’s temper,” when someone, I rather think Mr. Charles Dudley Warner, gave an irrepressible giggle, and the whole audience went off into appreciative shouts of laughter. The scene was interrupted, the children were indignant, but Mr. Clemens was highly pleased that the possibility of just such a connection had never struck Mrs. Clemens, who had coached the cast [Salsbury 188].

The family put on the P&P play “a number of times” in their own house to a limit of 84 persons. Sam once took the role of Miles Hendon when Frank Warner “caught a severe cold and could not play it” [Salsbury 189].

Note: Powers mistakenly identifies a March 1, 1885 performance as this pre-Christmas performance [500]. Willis identifies this “surprise play” as pre-Christmas, during Sam’s reading-tour break [160].

To muddy the water slightly, see Mar. 14, 1885 to James B. Pond, which clearly states the surprise play took place on that date. Of course, it may have been a repeat performance. Or, Sam’s memory in his Autobiography may have been faulty once more.

December 20 Saturday – The Dec. 20, 1884 article by H.B. Stephens, “Mark Twain’s ‘Dorg’,” which ran in Every Other Saturday, is available in The Twainian (July-Aug. 1953) p.3-4, and contains a letter from Sam to Stephens, as well as a reference to a prior incoming letter from Stephens, both letters undated and unlisted by MTP. The article (which seems to have had much input from Mark Twain) plus Sam’s letter with poem, “My Dog Burns” are given here in full:

MARK TWAIN’S “DORG”

In or at his home in Hartford, Connecticut Mark Twain keeps a dog and he says it is the most curious dog he has ever seen. It has a long pedigree and long hair—in this it is not singular as all heirs have long pedigree. It was sired by Jupiter and has been dam’d by everybody—it has therefore become well known and is celebrated. This dog is of the Scotch female race and Mark Twain calls it “Burns” because it is Scotch or looks scotch’d and also because Burns made Scotland. “Burns” wanders around a good deal and often gets into hot water—the consequence being a lot of little “burns”. But it is necessary in describing a dog to give a de-tailed description.

“Burns” is of the terrier type, possesses a shaggy coat of hair which is continually matted and is about as long in body as she is high in stature. Very plucky she is, and has been chronicled in the Hartford press as having on two occasions killed a rat—whether it was the same one or not was not mentioned in the report, but as the item was furnished by Mark himself, it may be accepted as reliable, very re-li-able.

“Burns” has four legs, and Mark Twain is excessively proud of this feature (is a leg a feature) in his dog. He says he has often seen dogs with only three—the fourth always being broken. The ears, (the dog’s not Mark’s) are well shaped and small, and differ from those of Mark in that poor “Burns” cannot use hers in flytime as fans. It must be very earitating.

The chief d’oeuvre of “Burns” is her tail. No such tale was ever told—no, that’s not it, no such tail was ever unfold[ed] before to mortal ken. It is longer by several degrees than the dog itself, and is used in various ways. One is to wag the dog. Once started in this it will continue to wag the dog until poor little “Burns” becomes very faint and tired. It is a wonderful tail and Mark Twain has often told me that he has seriously often thought that the only way of stopping this tail from running on in so many numbers was to cut it short. But owing to the unprecedented popular demand this has not as yet been done. An awkward peculiarity pertaining to the dog’s tail is that, owing to its extreme length very few ever see the end of it and when the dog is making a brave attempt to get around a corner, a high wind will catch the tail and over it goes, pell, mell, dog, tail and all. The tail should never have been issued in one volume.

Mark Twain’s dog has one tooth in its head—it is the only toothin thing about “Burns.” Owing to the absence of molars, “Burns” is fed by Mark Himself, every day on prepared diet consisting of articles of a light character—written or prepared by Twain, himself. The result is that “Burns” is a little hairy in her temperament and condition. She is a great favorite with all the children of the village, as it is Mark who never goes out unprotected by his dog, and even strangers and tourists have been known to ejaculate, “Mark, the dog”. We may safely conclude that Mark and “Burns” will go down in history indisolubly connected—an immortal twain.

Adam and Eve’s names are connected with an apple, that of what’s his name, the inventor of the steam engine, with a tea-kettle, and that of Mark Twain with burns. By such trifles—light as air—is our life made up.

The above are a few notes I made some time since in preparation of a life of Mark Twain, a biography to be published in a series of “men of letters” now being placed before the public. Before proceeding much further in my work, I was informed that only “dead author’s lives” were available. I wrote Mark to that effect, and informing him that if he wished to attain the highest pinnacle of fame he should now die and the world would be happy. I received from him the following reply:

Dear Friend,

I am much pleased at the interest you take in my death, but as it is only to sell my “life” I must say that the interest is not very disinterested. In my present state of health I have no desire to occupy the pinnacle of fame: I never did like pointed attention and prefer to remain on one of the lower stories where I am not so liable to exposure. I have always had the very deepest veneration for you and as you know, would do anything for you in the way of reason. But to die for you is a “leettle onreasonable” and I prefer to live for you and to die for myself. My “Burns” never got well. She is now dead. I send you the following lines.

MY DOG BURNS

No more shall her beauteous form
Be seen in the raging storm.
No more shall her wondrous tail
Dodge the quickly dropping hail.

She lived a quiet harmless life
In Hartford far from madding strife;
Nor waged no War on peaceful rat
Nor battled with wild fierce tom-cat.
No, No, my beloved, dear ‘cause dead
What though thy coat was a brick dust red?
Like a good author, thou wast a trusty friend
And thy tail, like his, red to the very end.

Mark Twain

P.S. I am full and very sad.
P.s.s. Blaine came to “Burns” funeral: he is very kind just now.
And this was the last of Mark Twain’s dog.

H.B. Stephens.

Edward H. House wrote from Tokyo, Japan to Clemens, with “the best idea in the world....Get yourself made minister to Japan and come and pass four pleasant years here” [MTP].

December 22 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Laurence Hutton, congratulating Miss Eleanor Varnum Mitchell, soon to be Mrs. Laurence Hutton.

“And now I am relieved of a burden which has long been secretly oppressing my heart. Months ago, fully aware of the relations existing between you & my daughter, I was shocked & grieved to discover that she had transferred her affections to a ~~horse~~ kitten” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to James B. Pond. Evidently, newspaper reviews aside, Sam was growing tired of Cable, and had concluded he’d do better without him.

You were right, when you said in the Brunswick hotel last summer that I would draw better all by myself. It is true. I thought Cable would be a novelty, but alas he has been everywhere, & is a novelty nowhere. I wish I could pay him $200 a week to withdraw, & pay the little Russian musician a reasonable sum to take his place. I would do it in a minute. Personally I like Cable immensely; & in his right place he ought to be a good card—but he is not in his right place now.

Sam felt that Cable drew only a “sixteenth part of the house, & he invariably does two-thirds of the reading. I cannot stand that any longer. He may have 35 or 38 minutes on the platform, & no more.” Sam wanted Cable to cut his selections because overall he felt the show was too long. He also felt Cleveland and Detroit were “well worked & advertised” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster with a list of things for him to do; directing him to “Call at the Everett House 10 o’clock next Sunday morning” (Dec. 28); Osgood had not sent a statement in a year and needed

“stirring up”; a reminder that Huck Finn would not issue until 40,000 had been sold; another reminder about the American Exchange in Europe—was it still a sound investment or should he sell out? Should he sell Western Union stock? A reminder of his demand to American Publishing Co. to:

“...enjoin those pirates...[The Coker Co.]—Watch the files of the advertising agencies, & see if the ad disappears” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens: Estes & Lauriat matter. “Alexander & Green say they are clearly actionable. What shall I do in the matter? / It seems to me if we let it go, any one can advertise our book, at any price they please in the middle of a canvass & hurt our business” [MTP].

December 23 Tuesday – Sam wrote two letters from Hartford to Charles Webster. Sam enclosed an advertisement by Estes & Lauriat of Boston for “Just ready” copies of HF, reduced from $2.75 to $2.25; Sam was infuriated.

Charley, if this is a lie, let Alexander & Green sue them for damages instantly. And if we have no chance at them in law, tell me at once & I will publish them as thieves & swindlers.

Hadn't you better send 6 witness[es] to try to buy 3 copies each? Use their testimony. I think you better print the enclosed in fac simile of my handwriting, & put a copy in every canvassers hands [MTP]. Note: Slotta supposes someone working for Webster or the press of J.J. Little may have been “pilfering” copies, since 30,000 copies were already bound then [49].

The second to Webster was a one liner to sell the Western Union stock at 60 [MTP].

December 24 Wednesday – Edward Zane Carroll Judson (Ned Buntline) wrote to Clemens:

My Dear—Two Fathoms—/ A Merry Christmas / to you—merrier than when / we met in Cal. & Nevada / years—long years ago, / in 67—& 68. / Will you / Kindly tell me the names / of the Subscription / Book Publishers / in your town. I have / a job for some one / of 'em. / Resp. & Truly / E Z C Judson / “Ned” [MTP].

December 25 Thursday – Christmas – Sam inscribed a copy of Adventures of Huckleberry Finn to Livy: “To / Livy L. Clemens / with the matured & perfect love of / The Author. / Xmas, 1884” [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of Parts of Speech to Clara Clemens: “Merry Christmas / to / Clara Clemens / 1884. / From Papa” [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of The Chronicle of the Cid, Richard Markham, ed. (1883): “Merry Christmas / to / Clara Clemens / 1884. / From Papa” [Butterfield auction catalog, July 16, 1997, p. 26 item # 2684].

Livy inscribed to Sam, a copy of The Myths of the Rhine, by Xavier Boniface Saintine (1875): “Merry Christmas to Papa / from Susie and ‘Ba’ / 1874” [Butterfield auction catalog, July 16, 1997, p. 28 item # 2690].

James B. Pond wrote to Sam, having rec'd his of Dec. 22. Christmas wishes [MTP].

December 26 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Orion.

I am just starting off again. I ought to have answered you long ago, but am driven to death. We read in Hannibal the day before we read in Keokuk, & in Chicago the day after we are in Keokuk. Of course I shall strike for Keokuk by the first train from Hannibal; & after all shall get but little time with you, considering how far away Chicago is.

...Keep that ghostly face there, if you can, till I come. I want to see it [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Philip H. Sheridan, Union general in the Civil War.

"I beg to introduce you to Mr. C. L. Webster, who may not succeed with the conspiracy which he has in mind, but I very much hope he will "[MTP]. Note: the "conspiracy" may have had to do with convincing Grant to write his memoirs.

December 27 Saturday – Sam wrote from New York City to Livy, with news about Charles and Ida Langdon, and also the Cranes, who were in the city:

I called & saw Ida, but the children were already abed, I judge, as it was about 9. Charley was gone over the river to meet Ida's sister, so I did not get a chance at him. Ida said Charley was feeling pretty fine, to-day, & so she herself was in good spirits...I was sorry to have cut my visit short & see so little of her; but I must get up at 7 in the morning. Sue is at the Murray Hill with a heavy sick headache; if I had only known she & Theodore were there I would have stopped as I passed by from the station [MTP].

The Critic, in "The Lounger," described the reading where George W. Cable did not have Sam there to introduce him; the editor continued that Cable had profited as a story-teller by exposure to Sam [Tenney, Supplement American Literary Realism, Autumn 1980 p171].

The London Athenæum praised HF:

For some time past Mr. Clemens has been carried away by the ambition of seriousness and fine writing. In Huckleberry Finn he returns to his right mind, and is again the Mark Twain of old time. It is such a book as he, and he only, could have written. It is meant for boys; but there are few men (we should hope) who, once they take it up, will not delight in it [Budd, Reviews 259].

Estes & Lauriat per Dana Estes wrote to Clemens: "Will you please interview our Mr. J.F. Gallier for a few minutes. I feel sure he will show you something which will interest you, and I will guarantee he will go when you tell him to, without the intervention of a big dog, or the use of a shot gun" [MTP].

December 28 Sunday – Sam took the train from New York in the morning and traveled all day. He wrote at 9:30 P.M from Pittsburgh to Livy. Cable had arrived on Dec. 27. Sam asked that a letter he'd left at Hartford from a "Chicago poetess" be sent on to him. He told of an attempt by the railroad to "curtail his liberties" after breaking some rule (possibly smoking). After tangling with the head conductor, who got civil at some point, Sam insisted the man report him, because he was going to "drag it [the rule] in the dirt all day."

Of course he couldn't do anything, so he had to leave me alone—to the joy of all the passengers. They said they had often seen the rule applied, but had never seen it resisted before. I wonder if we shall have any liberties left, by & by, if we keep up our American habit of meekly submitting to every imposition that is put upon us [MTP].

Sam also penned a short note to his brother, Orion, that he'd worked out a whole day in Keokuk, and that Pond had changed one of his three days in Chicago to one day in Burlington, the day after he was to read in Keokuk [MTP].

Sam also wrote another letter to Charles Webster. Sam wanted monies put in the name of Livy, in case both he and Webster should die.

“Then you & I can die if we want to, & there will be no complications.”

Sam told of seeing “one of Estes & Lauriat’s chief men on the train” and being told they’d assumed that HF would come out before the holidays, which is why they ran the ad.

“I said we couldn’t help what they ‘supposed,’ & we should have to require them to pay for supposing such injurious things [MTP].

December 29 Monday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, Pa. Clemens included “Tragic Tale of the Fishwife,” and “Infestation of Phelps’ cabin with snakes and rats” [MTPO].

Later, Sam wrote from Pittsburgh to Livy. Besides adding that he’d “Heard a wonderful banjo-player to-day,” named “Cable—but no kin,” [Dec. 30 to Livy] he wrote of the performance:

Well, mamma, dear, the child is born. To-night I read the new piece—the piece which Clara Spaulding’s impassibility dashed & destroyed months ago—& it’s the biggest card I’ve got in my whole repertoire. I always thought so; It went a-booming; & Cable’s praises are not merely loud, they are boisterous. Says its literary quality is high & fine—& great; its truth to boy nature unchallengeable; its humor constant & delightful....It took me 45 minutes to recite it (didn’t use any notes) & it hadn’t a doubtful place in it, or a silent spot [MTP].

Note: The piece referred to was the episode in Huck Finn where Tom and Huck put snakes in Jim’s cabin and then set him free with “a crowd of farmers after them with guns.” Ironically, this comic ending to the book is often criticized in literary circles.

Not all newspaper reviews were positive. Here’s a snooty one from the Pittsburgh Dispatch:

The whole performance was a hippodrome. Either’s works shine better in books than when read by them. The unbecomingness and the charlatanism of an author’s going around the country reading from the proofs of a book he is about to publish are degrading to literature. How Mr. Clemens could allow himself to do it is past comprehension. Still, viewed in the light of the miserable performance of Mr. Cable, he may feel that he is a benefactor, for his recitals are so much superior to those from “Dr. Sevier.” At best it is very sad to see men who have done clever literary work, “barn-storming” the country with their own works. If the works are good, it is a lowering of the dignity of the authors that is anything but commendable, and if they are not good, to read them in public is almost a crime. It is true Dickens read his works on the platform, but it never added to his fame, and it did lower him in that he became general, common [Dec. 30, 1884].

The Pittsburgh Penny Press on page 4 printed “Mark Twain Gets Shaved / And Talks to a ... Reporter at the Same Time” [Scharnhorst, Interviews 60-1].

The Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph, page 1: “Talk with Twain / ...His Comments on Authors, Magazines and General Literature” [62-4].

The Pittsburgh Post, p 4: “Mark Twain / ...He Gives His Experiences with an Interviewer and Jokes at His Own Expense” [64-5].

December 30 Tuesday – Through his attorney in Boston, George L. Huntress, Sam filed a “bill in equity” (complaint) against Estes and Lauriat booksellers of Boston for advertising Huckleberry Finn at the price of $2.25, below the $2.75 subscription rate [N.Y. Times, Dec. 31, 1884, p3; MTBus 318]. (See Jan. 14, 1885 entry.)

Sam and Cable rode the train all day and gave a reading in Grand Opera House, Dayton, Ohio.

Afterward, Sam wrote from Dayton, Ohio to Livy:

“Livy darling, we got up at 7 this morning & traveled all day, arriving here an hour after dark. I did not feel tired, & do not feel tired now, though I nearly always do feel tired after a reading. However, I suppose I am tired, even if I don’t feel so.”

Sam told again of the wonderful banjo player they’d heard the day before, how George Cable accompanied the banjo-playing Cable (of no kin) on the guitar.

Sometimes it seemed to me it was almost the most inspiring music I ever heard; & his Way Down upon the Swanee River, with soft, fine variations was singularly tender & beautiful. He is self-made, self-taught. I liked his “Golden Slippers” —in fact I enjoyed everything he played, & he must have played forty & fifty pieces in our rooms [MTP].

December 31 Wednesday – George Cable wrote from Dayton, Ohio to his wife Lucy:

“I told you in last night’s letter that we had a good time in Pittsburgh; & so we did. Not the best sort, however. We pleased our audience thoroughly & it was a large & cultivated audience. The newspapers, however, must have taken some grudge against us; for they made offensive reports of the affair” [Turner, MT & GWC 77].

Sam and Cable traveled south and gave a reading in Court House, Paris, Kentucky. This from the Paris Kentuckian on Jan. 3, 1885:

The Twain-Cable entertainment at the Court House on New Year’s night was not in the nature of lectures, but consisted chiefly of recitations. Interspersed with these were anecdotes, Creole songs, incidents of travel, and personal experiences under circumstances of embarrassment, the most perplexing, ludicrous, and convulsively amusing. Humor, at once genuine and refined, is a rare gift. It is better than physic. It dispels gloom, sheds sunshine into the care-worn heart, and like a touch of kindness, “makes the whole world kin.”

The house was handsomely filled, and we never saw a more highly amused, or better pleased audience.

Mark Twain in appearance is a sort of living and moving anecdote. In manner, quaint, easy and unctious; his voice, deep bass and drawling, like an old fashioned country preacher, wearing a benevolent, but solemn countenance, he creates the impression that he would make sinners howl if he got after them in evangelistic style.

Cable is somewhat younger in appearance; is spruce and polished, a fine reader and delineator of character, and a good actor with splendid voice in song. He would be classed by Zack Chandler as one of “them literary fellers.”

Each, is accomplished in his part, and to be appreciated must be seen.

Note: This newspaper article refers to “New Years’ night” which may be interpreted as Jan. 1 not Dec. 31. However, listings on Railton and Schmidt put this reading to Dec. 31. To complicate matters, Cable’s letter to his wife on Jan. 1 speaks of the “gay time last night” in Hamilton, Ohio.

Charles Webster wrote to Clemens about bank accounts and misc. business matters [MTP].

*Sanctimonious Cheapskate – Huck Finn Took Off – 1,000 Investment Opportunities Grant's Memoirs – Path Worn to N.Y. – Banned in Concord – Black Bunting
Fantastic Sales & Royalties – Why Not the Pope? – Paige Quicksand
Sam Honored at 50 – Susy Starts a Biography*

1885 –Paine ascribes several segments of Mark Twain's Autobiography to this year, including those relating to General Grant and his Memoirs. There are a few specific dates in these segments [MTA 1: 13-70].

Sam wrote from Hartford to his sister, Pamela Moffett (No date on this letter). He used Webster to handle family errands as well as business matters.

I have sent for Charley to get you a special car. He will see you tomorrow morning. Therefore wait [MTBus 187].

Sam inscribed copies of: Mark Twain's Sketches, New and Old, and Huck Finn, and The Stolen White Elephant to Ulysses S. Grant Jr.: “To U.S. Grant, Jr. from the Author. 1885” ; and: “To / U.S. Grant, Jr / from / S.L. Clemens / 1885”; and: “To / U.S. Grant, Jr. / from / The Author. / 1885” [MTP]. Note: unknown place.

Sam also wrote from Hartford to Laurence Hutton, declining a Kinsmen Club dinner:

Indeed I wish I could be there, but I can't. I've got to sit as a judge in a Trinity College debate that night, & so I couldn't do justice to the Kinsmen's debauch & expect to be in proper form to average the debaters that night [MTP]. Note: further investigation into possible dates for such a debate might yield a month and/or day.

Sometime during the year Sam wrote to Charles Webster, asking him to send,

Munn & Co the $20 at once—don't forget it, as you did to send me some book proofs (which I am getting along very well without). [Sam wrote he] kind of [expected to] run down Thursday [MTP]. Note: Sam enclosed a printed notice, probably by Munn & Co., that dealt in patents. Back on June 12, 1870 Sam wrote Orion that he was gratified Munn & Co. liked Orion's wood cutting machine.

Several of Sam's manuscripts published posthumously are assigned to 1885. Among these, “The Chicago G.A.R. Festival,” “The Character of Man,” (early in 1885) and “Kiditchin” [Camfield, bibliog.; Budd, “Collected” 1021].

Jesse R. Grant sent Sam a note dated only “Friday”: “I am in town staying at the Union League Club. Will you let me know when you arrive so that I may call” (on Hotel Normandie card) [MTP].

January – A chapter from Huck Finn, “Jim's Investments, and King Sollermun,” ran in the Century Magazine for the January issue, pages 456-8 [Camfield, bibliog.]. Perhaps more immediately of influence was George W. Cable's controversial essay in the same issue, “The Freedman's Case in Equity,” which argued for full civil rights for the Negro. Though openly scorned by many, mostly in the South, the article made Cable a famous champion of justice and brought bigger crowds out to see him perform.

The same magazine also ran the second of three small (approx. 3” x 4”) display ads, announcing MARK TWAIN'S NEW WORK, with Kemble's picture of Huck Finn doffing straw hat, “sold only by subscription, agents wanted, Chas. Webster” etc. [MTP, 1884-5 financial files].

Robert J. Burdette sent a small engraved Happy New Year card, no letter in file [MTP].

January 1 Thursday – George Cable wrote to his wife, Lucy, perhaps in wee hours of the morning, of the performance a few hours before in Paris, Kentucky:

We have just finished a delightful evening on the platform before a hearty, quick-witted audience that laughed to tears and groans at Mark's fun & took my more delicate points before I could fairly reach them.

I have a little bunch of flowers given me by a young lady of the Clay family. Many persons crowded round us after the entertainment. All this was particularly pleasing to me inasmuch as this is a Southern town & the two feelings which I always have to encounter in Southern towns were present & evident here. A ball was given in opposition [Turner, MT & GWC 78].

Sam took a train north to Cincinnati, Ohio for the day. He returned to Paris, Kentucky and wrote to Livy.

Livy darling, we have had a most pleasant evening here—in a region familiar to Ma when she was a girl, some seventy or eighty years ago. Wherever we strike a Southern audience they laugh themselves all to pieces. They catch a point before you can get it out—and then, if you are not a muggings, you don't get it out; you leave it unsaid. It is a great delight to talk to such folks.

Sam related a conversation he heard on the smoking-car, writing in dialect about a farmer turned educator [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of some book (probably Huck Finn) to Ozias W. Pond, brother of James B. Pond: “Happy New Year's / to Ozias Pond / from / The Author (inventor) of this Book / (S. L. Clemens) / Cincinnati O. Jan 1/85” [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote from Hartford: “Barnard refused to sign the contract, so Mr Webster had Alexander & Green cable Waller, to cable his willingness to sign....Let me know when you want my presence for the Prince and Pauper entertainment” [MTP]. Note: Henry Barnard.

January 2 Friday – Sam wrote from Paris, Kentucky to Livy. He was sorry he'd missed going to a soldiers' home in Cincinnati for General Franklin.

I froze to death all last night, & never once thought of Sam Dunham's camel's hair shirt—but I did think of it a couple of hours ago, & am very comfortable, now. I mean to lay it on the bed every night after this. When we came to put out our washing yesterday in Cincin, Mr. K. piled out a whole trunkful—all saved up since we were on the road last. I called Pond's attention to it, & he said he would not permit that; he would make K pay for that wash out of his own pocket, I speak but the truth when I say I like K better & better; but his closeness is a queer streak—the queerest he has got [MTP]. Note: “K” was Sam's way of referring to Cable.

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading at Odeon Hall, Cincinnati, Ohio. Clemens included: “A Dazzling Achievement,” “Tragic Tale of the Fishwife,” “A Trying Situation” [MTPO].

Cable wrote home that “we hardly had time to eat & dress for the platform” after reaching Cincinnati in the evening [Turner, MT & GWC 81]. Fatout says the men registered as “J.B. Pond and two servants” [Circuit 209].

Murat Halstead wrote from Cincinnati in a huge scrawl, mostly illegible [MTP].

January 3 Saturday – Ozias Pond recorded in his diary that Sam was examined by a phrenologist (reading bumps on the head). Cardwell writes that Ozias, “infected with the humor of the two writers and amazed at Twain's extravagance punned feebly: ‘There was nothing in it’” [33].

Sam and Cable gave two more readings at Odeon Hall, Cincinnati, Ohio, a matinee and an evening performance. Ozias Pond stood in as manager for his brother, James B. Pond. The Cincinnati Enquirer reviewed both evening performances separately, and concluded on Jan. 4 with the following:

They must have felt flattered by the audience that greeted them, for, in addition to being of goodly size, it was made up of the best of society people.
The lecturers' engagement in this city has been a success financially, and the entertainments have been highly satisfactory to all who attended [Railton].

Sam wrote from Cincinnati to Livy:

"Livy darling, we finished one of those awful days, where you talk twice in the same day. It is a dreadful pull on a body's muscle."

Sam told of a young college girl from the music college where the hall was, asking him if the readings were over and if Mark Twain was going to read again, and would "he read something good?" Sam answered affirmatively and took the girl back stage, giving her a seat off-stage. When other girls came looking for her he gave them seats with the first girl.

"Then I went on the stage & shouted away, for the delectation of 1200 women in front, & this little group in the rear. Take it all around, we had a mighty rousing time, & a most pleasant afternoon" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Allen Thorndike Rice (1851-1889) editor of the North American Review, who had evidently sought a submission from Mark Twain. Sam answered he hadn't time to write anything, but suggested Rice contact Webster, who "no doubt" would "furnish ...a chapter from my new book" [MTP].

The Cincinnati Enquirer, p. 4: "Twain and Cable / The Humorists Interviewed." Sam discussed his stint on the Territorial Enterprise, Bret Harte, and the sketch (unnamed in the interview) "Typographical Howitzer" [Scharnhorst, Interviews 65-8]. Note: The sketch was by Sam P. Davis and is included in The Sagebrush Anthology, Lawrence I. Berkove, ed., 2006.

January 4 Sunday – Sam's wrote from Cincinnati to Livy of the day's activities:

"I breakfasted with the Halstead family at noon; spent 3 hours in the pottery [the "ceramic factory" he referred to in his Jan. 3 letter to Livy]; dined (over) at Mrs. Geo. Ward Nichols's; spent a most shouting good lovely 3 ½ hours at Pitts Burt's fireside; & then he brought me home, & I have just now got my clothes off."

Sam wished he could take Livy to the pottery factory and show her "what Mrs. Nichols & those other wonderful people have been doing." He bought several pieces and had them shipped to Hartford, cautioning Livy not to let George open the box without her "personal superintendence...he mustn't break those things." Sam also sent a piece to Susan Crane, and one to Ida Langdon.

Sam also wrote a short directive to Charles Webster to send verification of an amount for an unspecified action or item, to "Keep at that Am Ex in Europe stock" and added that he hoped "Peyton's project will succeed" (unidentified) [MTP].

January 5 Monday – Sam rose at 6 AM and took a train to Louisville, Kentucky (Cardwell says 8:15 AM train [34]). They stayed at the Galt House. At 4:30 they went to a reception at the Louisville Press Club, and a stop at the Pendennis Club [Cardwell 34].

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading at Leiderkranz Hall. En route, Cable wrote to his wife Lucy about distractions in the audience during performances:

The other night, in Hamilton, O., a man with creaking shoes stalked out of the hall in the midst of one of Mark's numbers. You know I told you we had decided to give any such person's a shot across his bows. So Mark calls out in the most benevolent & persuasive tone, "Take your shoes off, please; take your shoes off" — to the great delight of the applauding audience [Turner, MT & GWC 82].

The Louisville Post, p1: "A Great Humorist / ... Mr. Twain Gives Some Information Concerning Himself and Partner—How He Met the Reporter and the Instructions He Gave." Sam talked about the struggle for international copyright [Scharnhorst, Interviews 68-70].

Henry Watterson wrote from Louisville inviting Sam & Cable to take pot luck the next day [MTP].

January 6 Tuesday – Sam and Cable gave a second reading at Leiderkranz Hall, Louisville, Kentucky. From the Louisville Courier-Journal:

Despite the rain there was a large audience at Leiderkranz Hall last night to hear Cable and Mark Twain read. Mr. Cable last year prepared for himself a welcome to Louisville, and the people were ready with a hearty greeting for Mr. Clemens.

Mr. Cable's selections were familiar to the audience, as was the manner of his interpretation, but they lost none of their charm on this account. "Narcisse" and "Kate Riley" and "Richling" and "Restofalo" delighted every one last night with their strange and fascinating humor, of which one never wearies, but the most striking and effective of the pieces recited by Mr. Cable was "Mary Richling's Night Ride." There is no more pathetic, no more moving story in all Mr. Cable has written than that which recounts the weary wandering of "Mary Richling." Caught in the North when the war broke over the land with her child, whom her husband has never seen, she started for New Orleans, confident she could somewhere pierce the line. One disappointment followed another, but the brave-hearted woman never lost courage. Finally it seemed all obstacles were conquered, and, under the guidance and protection of a spy, she rode through the lines, avoiding the pickets and escaping the scouts. It is this last ride Mr. Cable reads with such dramatic force, and it is wise to repeat it to-night.

Mark Twain's humor is indescribable, as it is inimitable. His "Tragic Tale of a Fishwife," in its wild absurdities and extravagant incongruities, was greeted with continuous laughter, the appreciation of the situation, no doubt, being heightened by the recollection that last winter there was in Louisville a professor who promised to teach the German language in six weeks, and in the audience there were several score who once thought they had learned it in that time. Mark Twain promises to-night, in addition to regular programme, to tell the story of the "Jumping Frog." There should be to-night even a larger audience than on last night, and it is to be hoped those who secure seats in advance will obtain them, and the annoyance experienced last night be avoided [Railton].

After the readings, Sam and Cable went again to the Pendennis Club with Sam's second cousin by marriage, Colonel Henry Watterson, and editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal. Sam enjoyed a "2-hour supper wich was full of delightful conversation, & also full of tropic enthusiasm over the readings" [Jan. 7 to Livy, MTP]. Cable wrote home that Watterson "didn't please" him, "Talks shamelessly about getting drunk &c &c." In a discussion of the "negro question" at the Press Club, Cable observed, "Freedom of speech has yet to come to us of the South" [Turner, MT & GWC 83].

Note: The Pendennis Club was founded in 1881 as a private social club, modeled after English gentlemen's clubs. Pendennis is the name of Thackeray's novel. Sometime in the 1880s, the club was the birthplace of the "Old Fashioned," claimed as the first drink to be called a cocktail.

January 7 Wednesday – Sam wrote to Livy on the train from Louisville, Ky. to Indianapolis, Ind., relating the dinner of the last evening at the Pendennis Club. Sam remarked on the differences of a Southern audience:

In truth, Baltimore, Washington & Louisville prove that none but a Southern audience can bring out the very best that is in a man on the platform. There is an atmosphere of affection for you, pervading the house, that you seldom feel, at least in a strong inspiring way, in a northern audience. If you make a miss-fire, they are troubled about it, not glad of it, & jump eagerly at the very first excuse they get to wipe it away & shout the memory of it out of your mind. One feels as if he were in front of his own family, & every individual personally anxious for his success [MTP].

Sam, in Indianapolis, responded to the Dec. 31 explanation of Estes & Lauriat, Boston booksellers that they'd been told by one of his subscription agents of the publication date for Huck Finn. Sam's "quarrel," a lawsuit pressed now by Alexander & Green Law firm of New York, wasn't with the price offered, it was that they'd advertised,

"...for sale at a low price, a book of mine which you have not bought, & do not possess."

Sam pointed out that what a canvasser might tell them about a publication date,

"was of no value, as evidence, —[That they] could have applied at headquarters & got the truth, without difficulty or delay" [MTP].

Sam also telegraphed Thorndike Rice, editor of the North American Review, that he was seeking Webster by telegraph, and if Bromfield didn't hear from Webster by Thursday evening, he may give Rice a chapter of HF [MTP]. Note: P.B. Bromfield had an New York Ad agency [MTNJ 3: 252].

Cardwell says "Ozias made Mark happy by playing billiards with him, and Cable was made happy, no doubt, by testimony on the front page of the Indianapolis Journal to his growing reputation as a champion of civil rights for the Negro" [35].

Cable toured the Louisville High School with Prof. Allmond and others, as well as the Colored High School—both schools singing "America" for him. Cable pled fatigue and Sam went alone to to dine at Watterson's home. Cable grabbed two hours sleep then ate with Sam and went to the reading, which he reported so crowded that "Pond turned people away" [Turner, MT & GWC 84-5].

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading at Plymouth Church, Indianapolis, Ind. Clemens included "Dick Baker's Cat" [MTPO].

Andrew Chatto wrote "pleased to hear that you are on the platform once more and especially glad to think that you may be tempted to give your readings in London again....'Huck Finn' is making his way very satisfactorily. I enclose two cuttings" (not in file) [MTP].

Jane Clemens wrote to Sam & to family):

Livy you are praising Sam. When I first saw him I could see no promise in him. But I felt it my duty to do the best I could. To raise him if I could. A lady came in one day & looked at him she turned to me & said you don't expect to raise that babe do you. I said I would try. But he was a poor looking object to raise. So Livy I have brought him out. Now Livy you work night & day as hard as I did, perhaps you will succeed. Last night. I thought I was going to die. my greatest trouble was I thought they would bury me in my best dress. My wish was to be buried in a shroud. Muslin [MTP].

Edmund C. Stedman for Library of Am. Literature wrote for permission to quote HF [MTP].

January 8 Thursday – Sam wrote en route from Indianapolis to Springfield, Ill. to Livy:

We were up at 7, this morning, with a 9-hour journey before us & no parlor car. But we are getting along all right. The train stops every half a mile. It is now 1 p.m., & this car has been filled & emptied with farmer-people some 300 times. They are a constant interest to me—their clothes, their manners, attitudes, aspect, expression—when they have any. A small country boy, a while ago, discussed a negro woman in her easy hearing-distance, to his 17-year old sister: “Mighty good clothes for a nigger, hain’t they? I never see a nigger dressed so fine before.” She was thoroughly well & tastefully dressed, & had more brains & breeding than 7 generations of that boy’s family will be able to show [MTP].

On the train Sam “spent an hour rewriting a boasting match (probably from Chapter 3 of Life on the Mississippi) so that he and Cable could hurl brags at each other ‘for Pond’s amusement’ at night in their rooms” [Cardwell 36].

At 3 PM Sam added to the letter from Decatur, Ill. They’d got on the wrong train but noticed it at the last moment, “just time enough to snatch on or wraps & overshoes & skip aboard the right train.” Sam added a paragraph accusing James G. Blaine of betraying his wife [MTP].

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Chatterton’s Opera House, Springfield, Illinois. The Daily Illinois State Journal (Springfield) reported the next day:

The Twain-Cable combination was greeted last night by the largest “downstairs” audience that has assembled in the Opera House this season, and it is safe to say that few audiences have congregated there composed of more intelligent and cultivated people. The entertainment was all that was promised, and the audience testified their delight by numerous bursts of laughter and applause. “Mark Twain’s” first peek-a-boo at R.1.E. was greeted with laughter, and his droll recitations of his own funny stories tickled his hearers prodigiously. Mr. Cable’s readings were so unlike Twain’s stories that a pleasing contrast was formed. His selections from his own novel, “Dr. Sevier,” were given with wondrous grace and effect, captivating the audience and winning genuine applause. His graphic description of “Mary’s Night Ride” was realistic in the extreme, while Twain’s final effort, a ghost story, was impressive as well as vehemently ludicrous. The combination is a strong one, and with a good management, “there is millions in it” for both the actors and their manager [Railton; the last line a reference to Col. Sellers famous line in The Gilded Age].

Andrew Chatto wrote, sending William L. Hughes’ translation of TS and that the publisher “has had the grace to acknowledge your interest in this volume by agreeing to pay 750 francs” [MTP].

January 9 Friday – The party left Springfield for St. Louis at 6:35 AM. A train accident delayed them; the engine and baggage car derailed at the bridge over the Big Muddy. Sam joked that he would have been all right if he’d made it into the River, because he knew it well. The party walked across the bridge, took a car to the Southern Hotel, and were set for the evening’s performance [Cardwell 37].

Sam wrote from St. Louis to Rebecca Pavey Boas. The Paveys were from Hannibal and also lived in St. Louis. Sam had stayed with the family a couple of times while working there (see Aug. 7, 1854 and Feb. 13, 1855 entries.) No doubt Rebecca was a daughter of Napoleon “Pole” W. Pavey (see MTNJ 1: 37n45). Sam’s expressed hope of visiting and dining with his old friend.

“I shall certainly not fail to come if I get the time, but the chances are against me...Sincerely your old friend S.L. Clemens” [MTP]. Note: On the reverse of this note, written and signed by Becky Pavey (now Boas) she wrote on Apr. 14, 1919: “It was with sincere regret that my childhood friend Samuel Clemens did not dine with us” [AbeBooks.com by Raab Collection #9034].

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch announced the pair's arrival and printed a humorous "interview" (see Railton for the full account, or Scharnhorst, Interviews 70-72).

CABLE AND TWAIN. The Author and the Humorist Arrive in the City To-Day.

While Mr. J. B. Pond was this morning standing in the rotunda of the Southern Hotel with Samuel C. Clemens (Mark Twain) standing upon one side of him and George W. Cable upon the other, the POST-DISPATCH reporter present was struck by the touching likeness which the group bore to that beautiful legend which provides a human being with two attendant spirits, one of them of diabolical mien always urging them on to commit felonies and misdemeanors, the other, of angelic aspect, constantly coaxing him to give up his criminal ways. Mark Twain's features, familiarized to the public by several brands of chewing tobacco, cigars and cigarettes, are so well known that it only becomes necessary to describe the appearance of his less Mephistophelian companion [Railton].

The St. Louis Chronicle , p1: "Two of a Kind / Samuel L. Clemens and George W. Cable." Sam compared audiences, Northern, Southern, Canadian, British [Scharnhorst, Interviews 72-4].

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading in Mercantile Library Hall , St. Louis. Clemens included: "Tragic Tale of the Fishwife," "A Trying Situation," "A Ghost Story," and "King Sollermun" [MTPO].

Edith Cockburn Kerr wrote from Oxford, England for an autograph [MTP].

James B. Pond wrote to Clemens; letter not found at MTP though catalogued as UCLC 42381.

Charles Webster wrote various business matters [MTP].

January 10 Saturday – In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a second performance in Mercantile Library Hall , St. Louis. The Post Dispatch, and the Daily Globe-Democrat gave the pair positive reviews [Railton]. Cardwell says the crowd was not good, and according to Ozias Pond, Saturday night was "not popular in St. Louis 'with the better element'." [Cardwell 37].

Alexander & Green wrote about the threatened suit of Estes & Lauriat, who were not repentant [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote various business matters, including the bed clamp invention [MTP].

January 11 Sunday – Since Sam had decided back in 1866 or 1867 to put his Sandwich Islands Letters into a book, he understood the value of pre-selling books by running excerpts in popular newspapers or magazines. On this date the Chicago Times and the New York Tribune ran portions of Huck Finn [The Twainian, Mar. 1944 p4].

Sam wrote two letters from St. Louis to Livy. The expressed,

"How measureless & lonesome the time since I have seen you, my dearest! This is Sunday, & I am abed all day. Instead of writing you, I thought I would translate the German prose verse of the Pied Piper of Hamelin for you."

And did do a large portion of it. The second letter followed one he wrote to Mrs. Whiteside, a young "(married, but a mere child)" woman who'd sent him a story to evaluate. Sam gave the woman some wise words about writing fiction, and then copied the letter to Livy in his second note to her:

"Literature is an art, not an inspiration. It is a trade, so to speak, & must be learned—one cannot 'pick it up.' Niether can one learn it in a year, nor in five years. And its capital is experience—& you are too young, yet, to have much of that in your bank to draw from" [MTP].

Sometime during the brief stay in St. Louis, Sam's cousin James Lampton, the model for Colonel Sellers in The Gilded Age, visited Sam's hotel room. Sam left the door ajar to Cable's adjoining room and let his relative talk away. After Lampton left, Cable stuck his head through the door and said, "That was Colonel Sellers" [Cardwell 38].

January 12 Monday – After another early rise to catch a 9:40 train, according to Ozias Pond's diary, Sam was in a foul mood and attacked (and won) a battle with a window shutter at the Southern Hotel in St. Louis [Cardwell 41-2]. The troupe arrived in Quincy, Illinois in the afternoon. Sam and Cable stayed with the widow of Erasmus Mason Moffett and her daughters (Lizzie Moffett, Ella Moffett), relatives of sister Pamela's late husband [42]. A photograph of the group was taken (see Meltzer p. 188.)

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading to a packed Opera House in Quincy, Illinois.

Alexander & Green, wrote, Western Co. to Webster Jan. 9 enclosed, more about a Kansas City bookseller advertising Twain books at discounted prices, and making them back down [MTP].

January 13 Tuesday – Sam telegraphed from Quincy, Illinois to Charles Webster about the chapter to be given to Thorndike Rice of the North American Review. Sam had given orders to Rice that if Webster had not been heard from within a day then Bromfield could leave him a chapter of Huck Finn. Bromfield decided to leave the excerpt without waiting for Webster, which Sam wrote was a "pretty cool treatment of my orders...." Webster had written but Sam thought he should have telegraphed [MTP]. Sam often disagreed with how Webster communicated. Sam and company went to Hannibal.

Sam inscribed in Minnie Dawson's autograph book: Truly Yours / S L Clemens / Mark Twain / Hannibal, Jan 13/85 [MTP]. (See Apr. 14, 1847 entry for more on the Hannibal Dawsons.)

Sam and Cable gave a reading in Opera House (?) Hannibal, Missouri. Meanwhile, the London Pall Mall Gazette was reporting favorably on the "great combination entertainment" of "Mark Twain and Mr. Cable" [p 3].

January 14 Wednesday – Delayed by a snowstorm, and "Long past midnight," Sam wrote from Keokuk, Iowa to Livy. He'd had "no time to turn around, for 2 or 3 days" and so was behind in his letters. He wrote poignantly of his mother and of Hannibal, and an old friend since childhood, Tom Nash. Nash had been deaf and dumb for 40 years and handed Sam a letter which he read and sent to Livy to keep.

A beautiful evening with ma—& she is her old beautiful self; a nature of pure gold—one of the purest & finest & highest this land has produced. The unconsciously pathetic is her talent—& how richly she is endowed with it—& how naturally eloquent she is when it is to the fore! What books she could have written!—& now the world has lost them.

The visit to Hannibal—you can never imagine the infinite great deeps of pathos that have rolled their tides over me. I shall never see another such day. I have carried my heart in my mouth for twenty-four hours [MTP].

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Opera House in Keokuk, Iowa.

A check from James B. Pond to Sam for $1,540.46 with this date is signed "for deposit, Chas Webster" [MTP].

In Boston, U.S. Circuit Court, Judge Colt heard arguments by attorneys for Samuel L. Clemens, plaintiff, (George L. Huntress and S. Lincoln) seeking to prevent Estes & Lauriat from issuing a catalogue offering HF at prices less than the subscription rate [N.Y. Times, “Mark Twain a Plaintiff,” Jan. 15, 1885 p1].

January 15 Thursday – Cable rose at four in the morning to catch a train, reaching Burlington, Iowa at a quarter to seven. Sam stayed behind in Keokuk to spend more time with his mother, Jane Clemens [Turner, MT & GWC 88]. The Keokuk Gate City ran an article discussing Sam’s lectures and his greetings to his mother [Tenney 14].

Sam wrote from Keokuk to Charles Webster. He included a long list of things for Webster to keep track of—“a list like this, & stick it on the wall where you can see it when you go to bed & when you get up...” Sam wrote of the bed-clamp enterprise, the chapter that Bromfield felt he could give to Rice without waiting on Webster, the “500,000 times” he had said he would “fill no engagement after Feb. 28” with Pond. Sam wanted a weekly report on the list given so that he wouldn’t have to keep asking about each item [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Edmund C. Stedman, giving permission to “take from any book you want to, new or old, good or bad. Huck Finn included.” Evidently, Stedman, at the time a journalist with the New York Tribune and the New York World, had asked for a submission excerpt from Sam. Sam referred him to Howells, who might make a better recommendation [MTP].

Sam arrived late in Burlington due to train problems; Cable spoke for an hour and a half by the time Sam arrived. Their reading was given at the Opera House, Burlington, Iowa. The next day, From the Burlington Daily Hawk-Eye:

When Mark Twain finally appeared, his first task was to explain the delay. He said he had stopped through the day with his mother in Keokuk. She was eighty-two years old; she was the only mother he had; their homes being a thousand miles apart he might never see her again. He thought he could trust the St. Louis train, but his trust was betrayed. It started from Keokuk an hour late, and had been getting an hour later ever since. On the way they broke something. A dispute arose as to what it was that was broken. It took forty minutes to decide the dispute, and five minutes to repair the damage. He detailed his disastrous experience with the German language, wove all the erratic applications of the German genders into the “Tragic tale of the fishwife,” described a “trying situation” in his foreign travels, in which an American young lady whom he fails to recognize, insists upon talking to him about “old times,” etc.

The audience went home in the best of humor. They were charmed by Cable and amused and entertained beyond their expectations by Twain.

Cable wrote on Jan. 17 to his wife Lucy about the Burlington delay:

I have not told you about our evening in Burlington, Iowa. Clemens lingered behind at Keokuk to see his aged mother—from whose fine aged face he gets all his own best lines—and was to reach Burlington just in time for the reading. But the snow storm was tremendous, his train was dreadfully belated and I had to lift a stone-dead audience out of the grave, as it were, and put life & mirth into them & keep their spirits rising for an hour & a half all alone. I did it, however, & when Clemens came into the house at 9/35 my work was much more than done & he had an enthusiasm to start on. I was proud of the job [Turner, MT & GWC 88-9].

January 16 Friday – Sam wrote from Chicago to Susy Clemens, thanking her for a letter and asking her to write “two or three times a week in Mamma’s place...What I’m after is to save her” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Orion, thanking him for a “perfect 24 hours there, with the sort of social activity which produces rest instead of fatigue” [MTP].

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Central Music Hall, Chicago, Illinois.

Chicago News, page 2, ran an article/interview making comic remarks to reporters as a way of gaining free publicity [Budd, "Interviews" 3].

E.F. Blanchfield wrote from Chicago, wanting to call on him for information about patents [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote, deeply grieved by not having set up the carriage to take Sam to the train [MTP].

January 17 Saturday – Sam and Cable gave two more performances at the Central Music Hall in Chicago. Before the matinee performance, Sam wrote Livy:

Livy darling, Clara Wiley & her husband came behind the scenes last night, & saw me. She looks as young as ever, & as pretty. I told Pond to telegraph his brother to send you every new date & hotel just as fast as the engagements were made. He attended to it. Dr Jackson called yesterday, & asked that he & his wife be remembered to you [MTP]

Sam also confided that his attorneys hadn't yet come to terms with Estes & Lauriat, Boston booksellers, who had refused to drop the case on payment of Sam's legal fees.

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a second performance at the Central Music Hall in Chicago. Sam began a second letter to Livy, answering that a "Mr. Wilson is a fraud & a liar. It is a satisfaction to know that he had got hemorrhages" (Wilson is unidentified) [MTP]. Note: Wecter points out, "Mark probably confuses hemorrhages with hemorrhoids" [LLMT 229].

Cable wrote home that the Chicago readings were "one of the greatest successes, if not the very greatest, artistic and pecuniary success of our season. The thermometer is 4° below zero and falling."

Clemens's story of Huck Finn & Tom Sawyer liberating runaway [Jim] was received with a continual tempest of merriment and when I gave "A Sound of Drums" I saw persons in tears all over the house. I was called back twice after my Creole songs and twice after "Mary's Night Ride." Mark & I both seemed especially inspired tonight & to inspire each other." Along the tour people came up to Cable and thanked him, often in tears, for his Freedman paper [Turner, MT & GWC 89].

Charles H. Clark's article "Authors at Home" ran in The Critic. This included a general account of Sam's homes in Hartford and Elmira, "his current activities, including bicycling, billiards, the Monday Evening Club, and smoking cigars" [Tenney 15].

E.F. Blanchfield "desperate" and appealing "to your humanity" to see him [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "a fraud?"

Jane & Mollie Clemens (& to Livy) wrote. They had just rec'd the Grant book and had just finished HF. Mollie: "It simply amazes me to see how you kept up the dialects and the underlying moral lesson without a particle of apparent effort. It is real, to me." Jane: "Dear Children. I wish to know why you say nothing about your income. Sam writes to me, he gives you the interest on twenty thousand dollars because it justly belongs to you. Love to all. Mother" [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote (Osgood to Webster Jan. 16 enclosed). Webster had just bought a 3-story brownstone for $13,130. He discussed various business matters. Osgood wrote he looked favorably on Webster's offer to buy out their interest in the Library of Humor [MTP].

January 18 Sunday – Sam finished the letter to Livy, writing in the morning and after breakfast adding to it at noon, when he wrote about the Chicago readings:

We've had an immense time here with these three big audiences in this noble Central Music Hall. But for the fearful storms, we would have turned people away from the doors. It is a beautiful place, & you should have seen that alert & radiant mass of well-dressed humanity, rising tier on tier clear to the slope of the ceiling. Last night was the greatest triumph we have ever made. I played my new bill, containing The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County (cut it down & told it in 13 minutes—quickest time on record) & Tom & Huck setting Jim free from prison—25 minutes—but it just went with a long roll of artillery—laughter all down the line...& after a thrice-repeated crash of encores, I came back & talked a ten-minute yard (Gov. Gardiner)—on the state 35 minutes, you see, & no harm done—encored again after the encore, & came back & bowed. And mind I tell the old Jumping Frog swept the place like a conflagration. Nothing in this world can beat that yarn when one is feeling good & has the right audience in front of him [MTP].

In the evening Sam and Cable gave a reading in Evanston, Illinois. From the Jan. 24 Evanston Index:

Mr. Clemens, or "Mark Twain," was at his best, and kept the audience convulsed from the time he commenced with "King Sollermun," to the loss of the golden arm. His quiet, drawling manner and perfectly immovable face lend an additional zest to the ludicrous things he says. He does not at any time stick to his text, but if the audience is appreciative, as this one was, he touches up the things that seem to take best. It was hard to determine which provoked the most laughter, the struggle with German grammar, "Huck Finn," "A Trying Situation," or "Who's Got My Golden Arm." In the latter, the painfully intense hush caused by the speaker's dropping his voice almost to a whisper, was broken by his shouting "You have," so loud as to bring the audience to their feet, and before he could reseal themselves he had bowed "good night" and left the stage. Both gentlemen were frequently recalled and gracefully responded.

Laura W. Richard wrote asking autographs from Twain and Cable [MTP].

January 19 Monday – Sam wrote from Chicago to Charles Webster, adding to the list of things he wanted progress reports on, including the weekly total of money received from Pond [MTP].

He also wrote to Charles Webster from Janesville, Wisc. About statements from Osgood, the possibility of buying him out (he left that up to Webster), statements wanting from American Publishing Co. and Slote & Co., plus he'd heard nothing back from Webster on "that Bromfield and Rice business" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Livy.

1 line—only 1 line, sweetheart—got to get up early in the morning.

Yes, I got Stedman's & all your letters, without doubt...I've written to Bissell & to Charley Webster about that bond. The loan was made under Mr. Perkins Administration [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote (three telegrams enclosed, A.J. Bromfield wishing a chapter of HF), having rec'd Sam's of Jan. 15 from Keokuk: bedclamp matters; the Estes & Lauriat suit, forcing him to leave the office with Bromfield in charge; agent complaints [MTP].

January 20 Tuesday – Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Opera House in Janesville, Wisconsin. Cable wrote home:

Arrived here at 1/30 P.M. from Chicago. Snow, snow, snow! But clear skies overhead and sweet sunshine. So let it be in your heart. Now I must be off to bed so as to be fresh tonight. My health & strength need give you no concern. I weigh 111 pounds..." [Turner, MT & GWC 90]. Note: Cable seldom weighed more, and often less than 100 pounds.

January 21 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Madison, Wisc. to Livy. He reported that it had been seven days since the thermometer had risen above zero; it was ten below at the time of his letter, but he was in his “bag, in bed, & unspeakably snug & comfortable. That bag is the greatest thing in the world.” He wrote of meeting Lucius Fairchild, brother of Charles Fairchild and ex-governor of Wisconsin from 1866-1872:

Got here at 2:30 pm & ate dinner & went at once to bed—as usual. Fairchild came in, a moment (poor fellow, he will be defeated for U.S. Senate tonight—he told us so himself) & said the girls are out of town; asked us to supper—declined. We didn’t go to see Emma Sayles...[MTP]. Note: Emma Sayles (Mrs. Henry Sayles) (1844-1916).

Sam wrote that they would leave Madison at midnight. Cable wrote that it was midnight and they must take a train after 1 AM. “I can’t write. Mark Twain is telling California yarns to Ozias and Kark Strakasch” [Turner, MT & GWC 90].

Sam also wrote Charles Webster, reminding him to look into the stock of the Hayword Hand Grenade Co. and see what the cost would be [MTP]. Note: the Hayword were bottles of water to be thrown at a fire.

The Fort Madison Democrat: “Lecture Trips and Visits of Mark Twain in Iowa.” Sam commented on local Indians [Scharnhorst, Interviews 74-6].

Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Methodist Church in Madison, Wisconsin.

Charles Webster wrote about various business matters; he was too busy to look into the hand grenade fire extinguisher matter [MTP].

January 22 Thursday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in LaCrosse, Wisconsin.

Sam wrote from St. Paul, Minn. to Charles Erskine Scott Wood, his old West Point friend, who evidently had asked Sam why he never poked fun at Jews.

I have never felt a disposition to satirize the Jews. I have no reason to offer for I think it is a matter of feeling not a conscious intellectual impulse. Hang it, what I am trying to say is, that I have never had the disposition....But the intellectual origin of the disposition lies mainly in two facts, I think; (and they long ago deeply impressed me) that I have never seen a Jew begging his bread; and have never seen one procuring it by Manual labor. The one fact must mean that the Jews take care of their unfortunates with a fidelity known to no other race; and the other fact must mean that the Jews are the only race with whom brains are a universal heritage (by contrast consider the Irish race.) We do not satirize people we singularly respect—one would do it but indifferently well, and be ashamed of it when it was done. Twenty years ago I knew Adolph Sutro well (of Sutro Tunnel)—a fine, manly beautiful character; and I have always found something of Sutro is a sufficient equipment for an average man. No, I never knew Ben Holiday—I only knew of him [MTP]. Note: See also Feb. 5 from Morris W. Fechheimer.

January 23 Friday – Sam wrote from St. Paul to Livy, who’d asked if Pond ever failed to mail his letters. Sam didn’t think so and told the story of Orion taking one of his letters to the post box and when he got there forgetting why he’d gone, returning with the letter still in his pocket. Sam also related walking nine blocks to see the “ghost,” a “mysterious something on a school-house window pane,” which various people saw as various objects or persons.

If all the fools in the world should die, lordy God how lonely I should be.

Sam told of meeting old printer pals:

In Quincy I saw—well, first it was an old man with bushy gray whiskers down to his breast, & farmer-like clothes on. When I saw him last, 35 years ago, he was a dandy, with plug hat tipped far forward & resting almost on his very nose; dark red, greasy hair, long, & rolled under at the bottom, down on his neck; red goatee; a most mincing, self-conceited gait—the most astonishing gait that ever I saw—a gait possible nowhere on earth but in our South & in that old day; & when his hat was off, a red roll of hair, a recumbent curl, was exposed (between two exact partings) which extended from his forehead rearward over the curve of his skull, & you could look into it as you would into a tunnel. But now—well, see Holmes’s “the Last Leaf” for what he is not.

And there also I saw Wales McCormick, the giant printer-cub of 35 years ago—he & I were apprentices & the above dude, Pet McMurry, was the journeyman [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Susy Clemens, glad that she and “Daisy had such a good time over Huck Finn” [MTP]. Note: Margaret Warner (“Daisy”) was the daughter of George and Lilly Warner and a few months older than Susy.

Sam also wrote to Kingsland Smith of the St. Paul Roller Mill Co. that he wouldn’t be able to see friends in St. Paul on this trip, that the “railroad has fagged me out & I must like here & sleep & rest till lecture time this evening.” Sam invited him to come behind the curtain and see him in the evening [MTP].

Sam also wrote three notes to Charles Webster. The first note directed him to send unbound copies of Huck Finn to “the prominent journals & magazines of the country.” The second questioned Pond’s accounts and the royalties offered Osgood on the Library of Humor; the third seems to be a response to Webster’s (telegram?) about Pond’s accounts and several other matters discussed before—the weekly report Sam wanted, the Bromfield-Rice matter for the North American Review, the bed clamp and a dividend from Western Union stock [MTP]. It is difficult to read all these letters to Webster without feeling sympathy for the man.

Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Market Hall, St. Paul, Minnesota.

Charles Webster wrote various business matters; a second letter of financial needs [MTP].

January 24 Saturday – Sam and Cable gave two readings at the The Grand Opera House, Minneapolis, Minnesota, a matinee and an evening performance. According to the Minneapolis Tribune, the matinee reading was “fairly attended” and there was a “full house” in the evening [Railton].

Jane Clemens wrote to Sam & Livy:

Livy we enjoyed Sam’s short visit very much although very much of the time he was in my room he was writing & I could not talk. In the afternoon our friends came in to see him quite a number of them. I was glad to see them come although I could not talk to Sam. I suppose I am as well as most of old people are. The people here are kind & meet me half way, but I can’t get out this weather. A little baby died in the neighborhood but I can’t go to the funeral. I don’t find a great many old friends here they are most of them gone where I shall very soon follow. Robert Creel died here since I came here his mother and my mother were sisters. Robert’s mother and my mother were sisters. You see I am getting tired & repeat. Sam you remember the Timberman family. Jane came to see me & I called at her house. After William Timberman married and took his wife to live with his mother & sister they could not live together his wife had temper. He moved his wife away afterwards. Timberman was standing in the street talking and dropped dead. Property had been divided.

Jane & her mother were living together & her mother died. Jane is left alone. Before William was married Jane raised a poor girl called Nancy. She got married. I called to see Jane she told me all about her trials & troubles. Jane had built a nice little cottage on a corner. I don’t remember the street angling from that corner she had built a house for Nancy, her husband and children. Jane said it was the greatest blessing that she raised Nancy. Her husband & children are the greatest blessing on this earth. The winter is very cold here. I don't go out much. I am not sick much but old age is creeping along. I expect I am as well as people generally are of my age. I don't feel much the matter. I will tell the children what a beautiful well like a fucia Orion spelt that name this morning. I told him I would not remember I spell it fusia. But trouble will come. A very cold night came & next morning fucia was down. I raised it, propped it, but it all died but the main stem. Such a cold country I wish I was down south. No person about but the girl in the kitchen. Love to all, Mother. Orion, Mollie, the hired girl are very kind. I have no fault to find.

My memory don't serve me I have mixed my letter. Mother & Grandma [The Twainian Jan-Feb 1981, 2].

January 25 Sunday – Sam wrote from Minneapolis to Charles Webster, again about business matters—the bed clamp, Osgood's statement, books sold, American Publishing Co., and money Webster needed, probably for continued production of Huck Finn. Sam ended with,

I ought to have staid at home & written another book. It pays better than the platform [MTP].

The Minneapolis Tribune, p.3: “An Interesting Chat with Clemens and Cable Upon Their Work.” Sam discussed the origins of the reading tour and on sources for HF. Cable took part in the interview. Some excerpts were reprinted elsewhere [Scharnhorst, Interviews 53-6].

January 26 Monday – Sam wrote from Minneapolis to Charles Webster, more of the same—directing him again about putting funds in his name, and sending unbound copies of HF to magazines [MTP].

In the evening Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Philharmonic Hall, Winona, Minnesota. Cable wrote that they had to “rise at 5 tomorrow morning to take cars. O how home-sick I am” [Turner, MT & GWC 91].

In Minneapolis or Winona, Minn. Sam wrote an aphorism to an unidentified person: “None genuine without this signature / on the bottle: / Mark Twain / Jan 26/85.” [MTP: Bauman Rare Books online sale Nov. 19, 2009].

January 27 Tuesday – This from Sam's Jan. 31 letter to Livy, about visiting Governor Lucius Fairchild and family in Madison, Wisc.:

On the 27th Cable & I walked up from the RR station & happened in on Fairchild & family just as they were ready for dinner. So we dined with them. It is a very nice attractive house, & has a noble view of the beautiful lake, which is very close at hand. Mrs. Fairchild was exceedingly pleasant, & she & Mrs. Conover were full of talk of you & wanted to be remembered to you. Mrs. Conover is Gen. Fairchild's sister, whom we knew in Paris [MTP].

Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Methodist Church basement, Madison, Wisconsin.

En route from Madison to Milwaukee, Wisc., Sam wrote to Charles Webster, countermanding his previous directive: “Send no copy of the book to ANY newspaper until after the Century or the Atlantic shall have reviewed it.” Sam wanted, as usual, a favorable review to introduce the book before distribution to the press [MTP].

In Madison, Ozias Pond fell ill, possibly with a heart attack. In spite of this he went with the troupe to Milwaukee, then was forced to bed [Cardwell 52].

January 28 Wednesday – Sam telegraphed from Milwaukee, Wisc. to Charles Webster to draw $5,000 from the “No 2 account” [MTP].

Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Academy of Music in Milwaukee, in front of what the Milwaukee Sentinel called “a small but delighted audience” [Railton].

January 29 Thursday – Sam and Cable gave a second reading at the Academy of Music, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. The Sentinel reported on Jan. 30: “The audience was much larger than on the previous night and appeared to heartily enjoy the readings” [Railton].

During the performance off stage, George Cable wrote to his wife, Lucy, of the struggle:

Now here is the strangest thing! A house full of people, seemingly highly entertained but feeble in their final applauses. Mark was not called back & I, following, was so feebly encored that I did not feel justified in doing more than bowing. Fact is Mark is under a cloud tonight — feels it, confesses it, but cannot explain it. He doesn't take hold of his hearers and swing them as usual. There! he gets it at last. Even now it came as a kind of after thought from the audience after they had entirely ceased clapping. But it came good and heartily.

Strongest, heartiest kind of a reception to “Mary's Ride.” Now Mark is on to finish; but I know he is going to come off wringing his hands with vexation. Fact is our hard railroad travel is telling on us — has let out — slackened — our nerves. Queerly, but truly, we feel it most after a partial resting spell... The clock strikes ten. The end is only a few moments away. Finis. Mark explains it all. He had a warm bath an hour before the reading. He'll never take another [Turner, MT & GWC 92-3].

The Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin, p. 2: “Talk with Mark Twain.” Sam discussed Canadian copyright, the faulty illustrations in HF, and his nom de plume [Scharnhorst, Interviews 79-81].

January 30 Friday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Rockford, Illinois. Ralph Emerson and wife wanted Sam to “camp in their house, which is the best one in town (Rockford), but” he had to leave at 11 P.M. in a freight train [Jan. 31 to Livy, MTP]. Ozias Pond remained in Milwaukee, and his brother James was at the Everett House in New York City. James wrote Cable on this day arguing that he shouldn't be expected to travel back, that he could send a “perfectly honest, industrious man,” but Sam would have none of it—this had been explicit in their contract—either James or his brother Ozias, no substitutes [Cardwell 52-3].

I am reminded by something Mark is saying, of what a fine instinctive art he has for the platform. He has worked & worked incessantly on these programmes until he has effected in all of them — there are 3 — a gradual growth of both interest & humor so that the audience never has to find anything less, but always more, entertaining than what precedes it. He says, “I don't want them to get tired out laughing before we get to the end.” The result is we have always a steady crescendo ending in a double climax. My insight into his careful, untiring, incessant labors are an education ... There! It does me good to hear them call him back at the place where the encores generally begin, instead of letting him go as they did in Milwaukee last night [Turner, GWC Bio. 93-4].

Charles Webster wrote twice of various business matters [MTP].

January 31 Saturday – From Davenport, Iowa, Sam wrote of his recent travels to Livy:

“...struck a sleeping-car train at 12.30 [A.M.], but did not go to bed, as we had to change cars at 2.⁴⁰. Did it, slept till 6, when we reached Rock Island; then Cable & I walked up through the town & over toward this place, when a sleigh overtook & we rode” [MTP].

Sam and Cable gave a reading in Burtis Opera House, Davenport, Iowa. Clemens included: “King Sollermun,” “A Trying Situation,” and “A Ghost Story” [MTPO].

The first major conflict occurred between Sam and Cable, according to Sam's Feb. 5 to Livy:

It was announced that unless we left (Davenport) that night at 11, we could not meet our Chicago engagement Monday evening [Feb. 2]. Cable calmly said "I cannot travel on Sunday." I was furious. I said "You will travel on Sunday, just the same,—this time." He said, "It is in my contract that I am not to travel on Sunday, & I shall not do it." I said, "Damn your contract. This is the accident of a change of RR service since the appointment was made; & your contract cannot cover accidents, & has got to yield. I am not going to be made a plaything of in order to humor the corpse of a superstition of the Middle Ages" [MTP]. See Feb. 5 entry for the resolution.

Brander Matthews (1852-1929) reviewed HF for the London Saturday Review, observing that though a sequel to The Adventures of Tom Sawyer, the book was of a "higher level" than its precursor. Matthews identified one aspect that has made the book one of the greatest American novels:

We see everything through his [Huck's] eyes—and they are his eyes and not a pair of Mark Twain's spectacles. And the comments on what he sees are his comments—the comments of an ignorant, superstitious, sharp, healthy boy, brought up as Huck Finn had been brought up....one of the most artistic things...is the sober self-restraint with which Mr. Clemens lets Huck Finn set down, without any comment at all, scenes which would have afforded the ordinary writer matter for endless moral and political and sociological disquisition [Budd, Reviews 260-1]. See also AMT 2: 475.

January 31? Saturday – Possibly from Davenport, Iowa, Sam wrote to Charles Webster, directing him to:

"...drop in & tell them the agreement was not carried out, & expect them to take the book away & refund the $270 already paid" [MTP]. [The circumstance is not identified further.]

February – A chapter from Huck Finn, "Royalty on the Mississippi, As Chronicled by Huckleberry Finn" ran in the Feb. issue of the Century Magazine, p.544-67 [Camfield, bibliog.]. The same magazine also ran the third of three small (approx. 3" x 4") display ads, announcing MARK TWAIN'S NEW WORK, with Kemble's picture of Huck Finn doffing straw hat, "sold only by subscription, agents wanted, Chas. Webster" etc. [MTP, 1884-5 financial files].

Sam wrote a short note to Orion from an unknown place:

"Don't show that to Ma if it would make her impatient & set her mind to running on such a thing as a so far distant visit" [MTP].

Sam also mentioned the Travelers Insurance Co., and said they "give away those books, they don't sell them." This may have been the in-house magazine that Sam once submitted a poem for, "The House That Twain Built" (see 1877 beginning entry).

Early in the month, Charles Webster notified Sam that Huck Finn pre-sales had reached the 40,000 mark [Perry 143]. A month later, things really looked up (see Mar. 16 entry).

Sometime during the month Sam also wrote again from the Everett House in New York to Charles Webster, who must have been out of town. Pond had asked Sam if his brother Homer Pond could become the book agent for Kansas. Sam asked Webster not to forget Homer.

"There are 80,000 Grand Army veterans resident in Kansas. [sic] & Homer Pond is Grand Commander" [MTP].

February 1 Sunday – Sam wrote from Chicago, Illinois to Livy, giving her the future reading dates and reviewing the past few days.

...last night we made a great triumph before a great Davenport audience. At 7.⁴⁵ I was old & seedy & wretched from traveling all night & getting no sleep; but then I drank a big cup of black coffee & went on the stage as fine as a fiddle; answered an encore; was uproariously encored again, immediately; was encored again, straightway, & went on & made a happy excuse, & did the same after another encore at 9.⁴⁵ I guess we sent that multitude home feeling jolly. It was the only big audience that has assembled in that town since 1875. Took the train half an hour after midnight—had then been mainly without sleep for 2 days & nights—so we got a stateroom & I slept the night through. When I am in such trim as I was last night, I would rather be on the platform than anywhere in the world [MTP].

Sam did not forget that “tomorrow is the great day”—their fifteenth wedding anniversary.

Myra L. Fuller wrote from Northampton, Mass.—a begging letter for money [MTP].

Sam also wrote from to Charles Webster, directing him to see a “fine notice” in the London Saturday Review. He sent a list of people who should get books, and wanted a half dozen sent to him in Hartford [MTP]. Note: Webster’s of Feb. 4 places Sam’s letter at this date.

Cardwell refers to a “scorching telegram from Twain” to James B. Pond, demanding he return and manage the rest of the tour as provided in the contract. Such a telegram, not in the current MTP files, would have been on or just after the first of February; shortly thereafter, Pond rejoined the group in Chicago [Cardwell, 53].

February 2 Monday – Sam wrote from Chicago, Ill. to Livy, that he loved her dearly fifteen years ago but loved her “more dearly now.” He reflected how they were,

“...well off; but poor [then], compared to what we are now, with the children...those dear rascals” [MTP].

James B. Pond wrote again from New York to George W. Cable, pleading for time and not to be pushed. Pond had Henry Ward Beecher’s arrangements to make on another tour and summer expenses to make. Meanwhile, Ozias was still holed up in Milwaukee, unable to travel [Cardwell 53].

Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Central Music Hall, Chicago, Illinois. Sam tried a new program (Buck Fanshaw, Agricultural Editor, and the Blue-Jays) and was quite concerned with it, being unable to “deliver it to a dog” without being “full of haltings and stammerings.” From his Feb. 3 to Livy:

“...at 7.³⁰ I drank a big cup of strong black coffee, & at 8.²⁰ went on the platform before a big house & put the Agricultural editor through spiritedly & without a flaw.”

More coffee made the Blue-jays piece a “rattling success” also. Livy had asked if Sam had yet read The Bostonians, by Henry James:

“Yes, I tried to read the Bostonians, but couldn’t. To me it was unspeakably dreary. I dragged along half way through it & gave it up in despair.”

Sam had not yet turned against George W. Cable:

“Speaking of Cable, he is no ordinary man, he is a great man; & I believe that if he continues his fight for the negro (& he will,) his greatness will come to be recognized—and it will be a greatness of a kind & size that will overshadow his merits as a novelist & make them small by contrast” [MTP].

February 3 Tuesday – Sam and Cable gave a second reading at the Central Music Hall, Chicago, Illinois. From the Chicago Tribune, Feb. 3:

A large audience again met George W. Cable and Mark Twain at Central Music Hall last night, leaving only a few seats vacant on the outskirts of the hall. Mr. Cable's recitations again received intelligent and smiling consideration, while Mr. Clemens convulsed the house with uncontrollable mirth. His account of the runaway slave's escape from the log cabin under the auspices of Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn was irresistible. There will be another reading tonight.

Mark is telling one of his very best numbers & the old surf-roar is booming. They will encore every number to the end.

Ah! what a noble applause calls Mark back, continuing until he has returned entirely back across the broad platform to the footlights.

Funny thing just now. I had been out & sung two Creole songs & on retiring the applause died down & Mark in his nervous way stepping out on the platform a little too promptly was met by a patterning encore intended for the singer. It was awkward for him, but he was equal to the emergency. He stood still a moment, then said in the drollest way imaginable — "I'll go back and get him" — At which there was a roar of laughter & applause in the midst of which he came back to make his word good. Of course I would not go, so he went back and raised another laugh, saying, "He's sung all he knows" — and went on with "The Jumping Frog," which is getting a superb reception [Turner, GWC Bio 181].

Sam wrote from Chicago to Livy (see Feb. 2 entry). He also wrote to Susy Clemens, thanking her for the composition she'd sent, and praising it. He told about a very unusual man at the hotel:

In this hotel, (the Grand Pacific) there is a colored youth who stands near the great dining room door, and takes the hats off the gentlemen as they pass into dinner & sets them away. The people come in shoals & sometimes he has his arms full of hats and is kept moving in a most lively way. Yet he remembers every hat, & when these people come crowding out, an hour, or an hour & a half later he hands to each gentleman his hat & never makes any mistake. I have watched him to see how he did it but I couldn't see that he more than merely glanced at his man if he even did that much. I have tried a couple of times to make him believe he was giving me the wrong hat, but it didn't persuade him in the least. He intimated that I might be in doubt, that that he KNEW. / Goodbye honey / Papa

Sam also wrote to James B. Pond, evidently answering a question put to him about where he wanted to read in the days ahead. Sam preferred Toronto and Detroit because "we know both of those cities" and "neither of them has heard our new program" [MTP].

Sam and Cable telegraphed from Chicago to Ozias W. Pond, Plinkinton House, Milwaukee, Wisc., who was ailing and feared near death. Sam had given Ozias a copy of Thomas Malory's Le Morte d'Arthur, and addressed it to "Sir Sagramore le Desirous"—a nickname that stuck:

Now wit you well, Sir Sagrarmore, thou good knight and gentle, that there be two that right wonderly do love thee, grieving passing sore and making great dole at thy heavy travail. And we will well that thou prosper at the hand of the leech, and come lightly forth of thy hurts, and be as thou were tofore [MTP].

Western Union Telegraph Co. Feb. 28 bill shows above telegram sent this day to Chicago, and also one from Newport, R.I., sender not specified (see entry for others) [MTP].

Wales R. McCormick wrote from Quincy, Ill. “Your check recd this a.m. and I am much obliged for same & your promptness. I have forwarded your photos to the parties whom you directed.” He would have liked to spend more time with him, and sometime he’d like to know Sam’s life since leaving Hannibal [MTP].

February 4 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Chicago to Livy:

Livy dear, we hit them again last night, & hit them hard. We have now appeared four times before big audiences here & made a ten-strike every time. The ghost story was simply immense. I made those 1600 people jump as one individual. It is a pity to leave Chicago. We could repeat here a week longer. We go to South Bend, Indiana, this afternoon toward 4 o'clock. Charles Warren Stoddard is a Professor of English Literature 2 miles from there in a big Catholic College [MTP]. Note: Sam revealed in his Feb. 5 to Livy that the College was Notre Dame.

Sam also remembered that this was their engagement day, sixteen years before. He enclosed the telegram that Cable had sent to Ozias Pond for the two of them the day before.

Fatout says Sam had a “brief reunion” with Stoddard, and the two “Probably talked about those pleasant London days of almost twelve years before” [Circuit 225].

In the evening Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Opera House, South Bend, Indiana. The South Bend Daily Tribune reported the next day:

Mark Twain, the great humorist and George Washington Cable, the popular novelist, were greeted by a large and enthusiastic audience at the opera house last night, and a better pleased people never sat through a two hours' entertainment of any sort, in the uncomfortable seats of the old hall.

Charles Webster wrote having rec'd his of the 1st: various business matters, incl. Grant book [MTP].

February 5 Thursday – Sam wrote from South Bend, Indiana to Livy:

Livy dear, we are grinding out the days pretty fast, now that we are at last fairly into the last month & unquestionably on the homestretch. Major Pond [James] is with us, now. He wanted to send his brother Edward, but we needed an expert, not a novice.

He also told of the Jan. 31 argument with Cable over traveling on Sunday (see Jan. 31 entry).

Better information settled the fact that he could start Monday morning at 8 & have abundance of time. If he had missed that engagement, I was going to deliver a lecture about him to the Chicago audience....I do not believe that any vileness, any shame, any dishonor is too base for Cable to do, provided by doing it he can save his despicable Sabbath from abrasion [MTP].

Sam and Cable gave a reading in Ft. Wayne, Indiana. [Feb. 6 to Livy, Sam mentioned having a “most delightful time with the Ft Wayne audience last night,” not listed by Railton; Schmidt verified there’s a record in the Ft. Wayne Sentinel for Feb 6].

Alexander & Green wrote about the hundred Sam sent and the action against The Coker Co. [MTP].

Morris W. Fechheimer (1844-1866) wrote from Portland, Ore.

Dear Sir, / My sole apology for obtruding in this manner consists in the fact of my having suggested to Mr. Wood the inquiry which you have kindly taken some pains to answer x As you are doubtless aware the Jews for centuries furnished a field upon which every amateur satirist did “flesh his maiden blade,” and each veteran wield his trenchant sword, even Heine, himself one of “The Lords Body Guard” only quitted it with his last breath, so that no sooner had the thought occurred to me that I had found a distinguished exception, than with it came a curiosity to know the reason for such a marked singularity x At the same time I was surprised that this had not been noticed before, for I have noticed comments at various times upon the fact that Scott in Ivanhoe and Lessing in Nathan the Wise were the first authors in their respective countries, who in modern times had represented a Jew in other than the most contemptible light x Now, to me it seems that what under the circumstances you failed to do, is equally as noteworthy as what they did do x Please accept my thanks for your trouble to satisfy my curiosity and explain what, as it would appear, you had not been requested to do before [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “from a distinguished Jew”) [MTP]. Note: Charles E.S. Wood; see Jan. 22 to Wood.

February 6 Friday – In the afternoon, Sam wrote from Lafayette, Indiana to Livy:

We rose at 5.45 this morning & took a train which ought to have had us here at 10.30, but it lost 2 hours on the road. I slept a couple of hours on the way, & I feel rusty & seedy, now. I have not eaten for 12 hours & it will doubtless be another 12 before I do eat; for I got up with a sour stomach. Pond has just been in, mad. He went in to dinner with Cable, who was shown to a table where some children sat; & he whirled on his heel & marched out before everybody in grandiose style & told Pond to have his dinner sent to his room. Pond was deeply mortified at this fantastic exhibition of petty magnificence [MTP].

Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Plymouth Church, Indianapolis, Indiana [Schmidt lists this, Railton does not]. Sam's black coffee again helped him through the evening reading, according to a Feb. 7 letter to Livy. Sam also mentioned enjoying a reading in Ft. Wayne on Feb. 5 in this letter. At 10:30 In the evening, Maurice Thompson, the poet, came by and visited until midnight.

The Lafayette Courier, p. 1: “Mark Twain Interviewed / His Views upon Subjects of Interest.” Sam joked about the local canal, the courthouse, and George Cable's effect on audiences [Scharnhorst, Interviews 81-2].

February 7 Saturday – Sam got up at 7 AM and took a train to Indianapolis, Indiana. On the train he wrote to Livy, explaining how black coffee made him “cheerful, & easy, & confidential & conversational with the audience,” but it didn't protect him from “disastrous lapses of memory which come of over-fatigue.” Sam was counting the days now till he would be home, “at half past 3 on a Sunday morning Feb. 22!” [MTP].

At the Hartford house, Fox, Brusselars & Co., did massive work on the carpet, ceiling and woodwork (see Mar. 2, 1885 entry & bill.)

Sam and Cable gave two readings at the Plymouth Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, a matinee and an evening performance.

Anne D. Cooper wrote from Westfield, N.J. She rec'd his “kind reply” but asked more about the ghost story [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “the cheek of it”

Julia Handover wrote from London asking for an autograph; SASE in file unused [MTP].

Charles Webster, wrote, receipt by Osgood of $3,000 from Webster enclosed, to buy his interest in the Library of Humor [MTP].

February 8 Sunday – Sam wrote from Indianapolis to Livy. He blamed Cable for his own supposed shortcomings:

It is Cable's fault that I have done inferior reading all this time. He has hogged so much of the platform-time that I have always felt obliged to hurry along at lightning speed in order to keep the performance within bounds; but now I take my own time, & give 25 minutes to pieces which formerly occupied but 15.

If this show were new, I would cut a third of him out of the program....I am paying Cable $450 a week & expenses. He isn't worth a penny over $200. He is not a novelty anywhere...his same old stuff...doesn't prepare himself with untried matter....He will find a sickly way of making a living [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, excited about the possibility of publishing Grant's memoirs. Sam reminded that he was reading in Brooklyn Feb. 21 and he wanted to see him at the Everett House that day.

You can bring a Huck Finn in a nice binding, & I will write in it & we will send it to Col. Fred Grant's eldest little girl.

Sam also suggested sending out 300 press copies early; he suggested Feb. 23, without waiting for the magazines. He ended with the matter of D. Appleton & Co.'s "humiliating swindle" of $300 for their "Artistic Homes." Sam wanted to know what Webster thought of his plan to order "several hundred dollars' worth of books" from them and then...

"...tell them to come & cart away the Artistic Homes & pay back my $300 & they can have the other books; or, if they prefer, I will come to New York & be sued for the other books & state my case to the interviewers" [MTP].

Sam also wrote a note to Susy Clemens, quoting from Thomas Malory's Le Morte d'Arthur.

There isn't that beautiful? In this book one finds out where Tennyson got the quaint & pretty phrases which he uses in The "Idyls of the king" —"Lightly" & "Wave" & the rest. Yes you must read it when I come sweetheart. Kiss Momma for me; & Ben & Jean / Papa [MTP].

February 9 Monday – In Indianapolis, Sam wrote Livy a letter full of indignation and disgust with George W. Cable. He told of Cable interrupting an anecdote at a Saturday evening reception to tell him he was leaving (due to the Sabbath). Sam accused Cable of "insulting & insolent ways with servants" and relayed Pond's opinion that the "servants of the Everett House all hate him," and that he would starve himself if on his own expenses, but his "appetite is insatiable" if "somebody else is paying...." Sam said Cable wouldn't even cross a bridge on a Sunday, though he'd wanted to hear Beecher. For Sam this was:

"...the most beggardly disease, the pitiful, the most contemptible mange that ever a grown creature was afflicted withal" [MTP].

Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Comstock's Opera House, Columbus, Ohio. Sam told of the day and the performance in his Feb. 10 letter:

Livy darling, rode all day in a smoking car, stopping every 30 yards, arrived here in a rain storm about 2 hours after dark, jumped into evening dress in a desperate hurry & came before a full Opera house of the handsomest people you ever saw, & made them shout, & tore them all to pieces till half past 10, & not an individual deserted till the thing was over [MTP].

February 10 Tuesday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Opera House, Delaware, Ohio [MTPO].

....After the show (& a hot supper, Pond & I did play billiards until 2 a.m., & then I scoured myself in the bath, & read & smoked till 3, then slept till half past 9, had my breakfast in bed, & now have just finished that meal & am feeling fine as a bird [MTP].

Sam also complained again about Cable keeping “his program strung out to one hour, in spite of all” he could do. Sam was especially sick of Cable’s piece, “Mary’s Night Ride,” a sentimental episode at the end of Cable’s novel, Dr. Sevier, where Mary Richling crosses Confederate lines to reach her dying husband [LLMT 236].

And it is in every program. This pious ass allows an “entirely new program” to be announced from the stage & in the papers, & then comes out without a wince or an apology & jerks that same old Night Ride on the audience again [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, pessimistic about upcoming sales of Huck Finn, and suggesting papers to send copies “bound & unbound” to. “Never send any to N.Y. Graphic,” he warned [MTP].

Cable wrote home of seeing Ohio Governor George Hoadly, and of his later visit to talk with Sam [Turner, MT & GWC 100].

Sarah E. Griswold wrote from Brattleboro, Vt. About her cousin the cigar manufacturer, a cripple since youth [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Order sent for one box of cigars”

February 11 Wednesday – Sam and Cable gave a reading sponsored by the Union Library Association, at the First Congregational Church, Oberlin, Ohio. Reviews were mixed [Cardwell 58]. Clemens included: “Tragic Tale of the Fishwife,” “A Trying Situation,” “A Ghost Story,” and “Incorporated Company of Mean Men” [MTPO].

February 12 Thursday – Sam and Cable gave a reading to a packed house at Whitney’s Opera House, Detroit, Michigan. Even though there was a scheduling conflict with a high society event, the Light Guard’s Grand Levee Honors for Governor Russell A. Alger (1836-1907), and even though the thermometer had plummeted to 20 to 30 degrees below zero, “Luke Sharp” (Robert Barr, 1849-1912) of The Detroit Free Press reported the following Sunday that the audience was large and pleased [Denney 26].

George Cable wrote to his wife, Lucy:

“Clemens found himself as heavy as lead—I mean in his own consciousness, and although the audience showed some heartiness of appreciation while he was before them, yet he came off disheartened, vexed & full of lamentations over his condition” [Turner, MT & GWC 101].

In Detroit, Mich. Sam wrote to George Iles.

My Dear Iles: / I am so driven that I am obliged to cut correspondence down to telegrams; but I must drop just a line to thank you for your kindnesses & courtesies, {O, h—l, it’s platform time}

Midnight.—P.S.

I got your other telegram a while ago, & answered it, explaining that I have only a couple of hours in the middle of the day for social life. I know it doesn’t seem rational that a man should have to lie abed all day in order to be rested & equipped for talking an hour at night, & yet in my case & Cable’s it is so. Unless I get a great deal of rest, a ghastly dullness settles down upon me, on the platform, & turns my performance into work, & hard work, whereas it ought always to be pastime, recreation, solid enjoyment. Usually it is just this latter; but that is because I take my rest faithfully, & prepare myself to do my full duty by my audience. I am the obliged & appreciative servant of my brethren of the Snow-Shoe Club, & nothing in the world would delight me more than to come to their hours without naming time or terms on my own part—but you see how it is. My cast-iron duty is to my audience—it leaves me no liberty & no option. With my kindest regards & compliments to the Club & to you, I am ... [MTP].

Sam began a routine of eating his dinner late, this one at 11 P.M. [Feb. 13 to Livy, MTP]. Western Union Telegraph Co. Feb. 28 bill shows telegram sent this day to So. Manchester, Mass, recipient not specified (see entry for others) [MTP].

February 13 Friday – At 9 A.M. Sam wrote from Detroit, Michigan to Livy, whose last letter transmitted a hint by some Hartford charity for Cable to perform for their benefit. Sam wanted no part of trying to coax or persuade Cable to donate his time. “I imagine that if a charity wants his in-his-opinion-almighty aid that charity will have to pay dollars for it.” Sam didn’t want Livy to allow herself, “to be in any way, directly or indirectly, concerned in the applying to him.” Sam recalled that Cable had charged a charity in New Orleans, and believed “he wouldn’t read in Heaven for nothing” [MTP].

To an unidentified person, Sam inscribed the back of his photograph by Sarony, 87 Union Square, N.Y.: “Sincerely Yours / S.L Clemens / Mark Twain / Feb. 13, 1885” [MTP].

Sam took the train for Canada where he and Cable gave a reading in London, Canada. In the audience were 151 girls, by Sam’s estimate, from Helmuth Female College [Cardwell 61]. After the lecture, Sam met many of the girls as well as the principal, who offered to send a sleigh for Sam and Cable in the morning if he would visit the college. Sam agreed [Feb. 15 to Susy Clemens]. Cable wrote that this reading was in the Y.M.C.A. hall [Turner, MT & GWC 104].

February 14 Saturday – Sam was introduced to tobogganing by 74 young ladies from Helmuth Female College, “2 ½ miles” out from town. It was twelve below zero.

You sit in the midst of a row of girls on a long broad board with its front curled up, & away you go, like lightning....the sport was so prodigiously exciting & entertaining that it was well for us it was cut short by telephonic message that the train was being held for us; otherwise we should have tired ourselves to death...Tobogganing is very violent fun...[Feb. 15 to Livy; MTP].

Sam and Cable gave a reading in Toronto, Canada, again at the Horticultural Gardens Pavilion. This time the audience was only half as large as their Dec. 8 and 9 sellouts a few weeks before [Roberts 22].

Charles Webster sent Sam a financial report that showed Sam earning $14,168.50 for the tour through the week ending Feb. 7 [Cardwell 11].

February 15 Sunday – While Sam most likely slept in, Cable attended morning service at a Toronto Methodist church, and again at a 3 PM Sunday school [Roberts 22].

Sam wrote from Toronto to Livy about the tobogganing fun of the previous day. He also wrote to Susy Clemens about the “girl’s college in the country” (Helmuth College) near London, Canada where he tobogganed (see Feb.14 entry) [MTP].

Sam also wrote Charles Webster to “draw up a contract in accordance with the enclosed, & have it ready for the signatures when we reach the Everett House Feb. 21” Also, “the death of that Southern obscene pirate [Coker] ends that suit to my satisfaction,” so tell Whitford of it [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Noah Brooks:

My Dear Brooks — The both of us thank you most heartily for your kind offer, but to our great regret we have got to lose the opportunity. Business matters will keep me in New York till the latest moment; & besides, the platform is an exacting damned institution, & does not permit me to eat anything after 2 o'clock p.m.—have to talk on an empty stomach always. But I hope you will give me a chance to look at you that night & have a shake of your hand for old friendship's sake. / Sincerely yours / S.L. Clemens [ABE Books, John K. King Rare Books, 7/26/2010].

The Detroit Free Press, p. 15 by Luke Sharp: “The Re-Mark-Able Twain.” Backstage remarks by Sam and George [Scharnhorst, Interviews 82-5].

February 16 Monday – In a Feb. 17 letter to Livy, Sam explained why he did not write on Feb. 16. On the train all day, Cable asked to borrow Sam's writing pad. Though it was “pretty thin,” Sam thought there'd be enough. Cable wrote eight letters and used up the pad.

“I was so disappointed & so mad that I spoke my mind rather freely—at least in manner, though not so much in words. (He has never bought one single sheet of paper or an envelop in all these 3 ½ months—sponges all his stationery ... from the hotels. His body is small, but it is much too large for his soul” [MTP].

In the evening Sam and Cable gave a reading in Grand Opera House, Brockville, Canada. Cable wrote, “We did not read in Kingston. The appointment was changed to Brockville...” [Turner, MT & GWC 108].

Elder Publishing wrote to promote Literary Life, a monthly out of Chicago. They would send a sample upon hearing from him [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Impudent . No answer”

February 17 Tuesday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Opera House, Ottawa, Canada.

Sam wrote from Brockville, Canada to Charles Webster. Sam still had not heard if Osgood had sent a statement for the account.

I have paid Osgood for 50,000 Mississippis, bound & complete. He has not accounted to me for more than 33,000. You speak of a remainder of 6,000. What has he done with the other 11,000? Follow him up sharply in the matter; for I want to know [MTP].

Sam wrote to Livy en route from Brockville to Ottawa, Canada, explaining why he didn't write the day before (see Feb. 16 entry). The letter is a rant on Cable's shortcomings, including the famous line, “He is the pitifulest louse I have ever known.” Sam finished the letter complaining that the train would be all day going 3 hours worth. He described a man with “enormous cluster-diamond” jewelry, and made an entry about it in his notebook as well [MTP; MTNJ 3: 93].

St. James's Club, Montreal, per H. Mackenzie sent an engraved card conferring “privileges of the club” upon him for two weeks [MTP].

February 18 Wednesday – The official U.S. publication date for Adventures of Huckleberry Finn. [Hirst, “A Note on the Text” Oxford edition, 1996]. Note: other dates are sometimes given, for example, Budd in MT “Collected” gives Feb. 16 [978]. In the first month the book sold 42,000 copies [Willis 161]. By the year 2000, the book had sold perhaps twenty million copies and approximately 60 foreign editions [162].

Ozias Pond finally left Milwaukee and returned to New York [Cardwell 53].

En route from Ottawa to Montreal, Sam began a letter to Livy, to which he added a P.S. on Feb. 19 in Montreal. Sam stayed at the Windsor Hotel.

“On board the train, Feb. 18/85. / This is a most superb winter morning—snow up to the fence-tops splendid sunshine, no wind, white smoke floating up in lazy columns from the scattered log houses, the distances vague & soft in a haze that is lightly tinted with blue” [MTP].

The Athenæum Club, a literary society of high rank, held a reception for the reading troupe at the Windsor from 4:30 to 6:00. Some 200 leading citizens, mostly ladies, were there to meet Sam and George. A long list of attendees was printed in the Feb. 19 *Herald and Daily Commercial Gazette along with a notice for the next evening’s performance [Cardwell 62].

Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Queen's Hall, Montreal, Canada.

Afterward, Sam gave an impromptu speech at Tuque Bleue Snowshoe Club in Montreal Canada.

“Husky young club members seized Clemens, Cable, and the huge major [Pond] and tossed them repeatedly to the ceiling. Each of the visitors made speeches, Cable sang “Pov’ Piti Momzel Zizi,” club members sang a snowshoe song, and, finally, all joined in “God Save the Queen” [Cardwell 63].

The Brockville (Canada) Evening Recorder, p.1: “Mark Twain’s Wicked Moments.” A reporter wrote down some of Sam’s dinner-table conversation [Scharnhorst, Interviews 86].

February 18 or 19 Thursday – Sam wrote from Montreal to Captain Jim Smith, declining an invitation to some event. “The readers connected with this circus must attend strictly to business—no social life allowed them” [MTP].

Zon gives us a “not as yet cataloged” “reply” from Sam to Henry Perkins Goddard (1842-1916), written “in Montreal:

“MY DEAR CAPTAIN,—We thank you ever so much, but we can’t. The readers connected with this circus must attend strictly to business—no social life allowed them. / Sincerely yours, / S. L. Clemens” [323].

February 19 Thursday – Sam’s P.S. to his Feb. 18 to Livy, simply added that he’d “talked here in Montreal last night.” Before the reading Sam wrote another letter to Livy, enclosing the itinerary for the tour for February. Livy had referred twice to an invitation sent Sam but he’d not heard of nor seen of one for “the Union for Home Work ladies.” If they wanted him to speak, he hoped it would be set for “some time in the first fortnight of March, so that” he would “still be fresh & not have to use a book” [MTP]. Cable wrote home that he received Dr. Louis Fréchette at 3 PM [Turner, MT & GWC 112].

Sam and Cable gave a second reading at the Queen's Hall, Montreal, Canada.

Charles C. DeZouche (1830-1896) wrote from Montreal:

“Your ‘Tragical tale of a Fishwife’ [in “The Awful German Language” in A Tramp Abroad] last night reminded me that I, too, tried to learn German. It was years ago, and when I had crept in, about up to my ankles, I discovered words which looked badly, sounded badly, and almost smelled badly.” He included a poem with such words and then asked for Sam’s autograph [MTP].

February 20 Friday – En route from Montreal to New York City Sam wrote to Livy. He’d sent a toboggan for the children but cautioned, “They better not try to use it till I come.” He wrote just as the train left the Lake Champlain area.

You look miles & miles out over the frozen snow—white floor of the Lake, with the dazzling sun upon it, & huge blanket-shadows of the clouds gliding over it, & here & yonder a black spec on the remote level, & away on the far further shore a dim & dreamy range of mountains rises gradually up & disappears in a ragged, low-hanging leaden curtain of clouds [MTP].

The Montreal Evening Star, p3: “Movements of Clemens and Cable.” A reporter was nearby when Sam chatted and tobogganned with the college girls [Scharnhorst, Interviews 53-6]. (See Feb. 14 entry.)

In the evening, Sam and Cable gave a reading in Town Hall, Saratoga, New York. Fatout reveals that “the Town Hall was so cold that the audience wrapped in ulsters and capes” [Circuit 228]. Clemens included: “Tragic Tale of the Fishwife,” “A Trying Situation,” and “A Ghost Story” [MTPO].

February 21 Saturday – Upon arriving in New York, Sam and Cable breakfasted with Ozias Pond and his wife, Nella. He inscribed a copy of the newly published Huck Finn for Ozias, whose health had improved [Cardwell 64]. Sam then immediately made his way to the home of General Grant, hopeful that Grant’s memoirs would be given to Webster & Co. [Perry 137]. Grant confirmed that he, his son, and George W. Childs had been negotiating with Webster, since Sam’s last call (see Nov. 20, 1884 entry). “I mean you shall have the book—I have made up my mind about that,” Grant said [138]. The bad news was the doctors gave Grant “only a few weeks to live.” (See Perry’s Grant and Twain for the full story.)

Sam went straight to the offices of his nephew, Charles Webster, and directed him to finish the details on the Grant contract and deliver it to his home. Sam agreed to hire a stenographer to help Grant finish the work. Noble E. Dawson was chosen—he’d been with Grant in Mexico [Perry 140-1].

Sam and Cable gave a reading in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, New York. From the Brooklyn Eagle for Feb. 22:

The Academy of Music was well filled last night by an audience which was entertained by Mark Twain and George W. Cable. It is not long since these gentlemen visited Brooklyn, but they have entirely failed to exhaust their welcome. Both readers were in excellent humor, their drolleries competing with the more pathetic efforts by which the programme was diversified [MTP]. Note: Others misidentify this reading as New York City; Brooklyn was an independent city prior to 1898. Fatout lists the take from this reading as $983 [Circuit 218].

He also inscribed a copy of Huck Finn with this date and city to an unidentified person [MTP].

Twichell’s journal holds tickets to the dedication of the Washington Monument this date [Yale, copy at MTP].

February 23 Monday – Sam and Cable gave a reading at the Opera House in New Haven, Conn. [New Haven Evening Register for Feb. 18, 21 and 23].

J. Chipchase wrote from Baltimore about losing money on an offer by Bissell’s [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Bissel’s victim & my reply”

February 25 Wednesday – Cable’s Feb. 26 letter home:

Had a great time in Newark last night; one of the finest nights we have had for some ten days. Orange [NJ] was very poor—i.e. the audience was slim; which was a great surprise to us & not to be accounted for [Turner, MT & GWC 113]. Note: Although not listed in Railton or Schmidt, it seems from this letter that the men read in both places, probably a matinee and an evening performance.

James Whitcomb Riley (1849-1916) sent a copy of his first book, a small 50-page volume, “The Old Swimmin’-Hole,” and ‘Leven More Poems (1883). Riley wrote that Sam’s “characters and their varied dialects...have interested and delighted me for many years, and in thanking you ...I beg you to accept the little book of Hoosier dialect...” [Gribben 580]. Note: Riley, Indiana writer and poet known as the “Hoosier Poet” and the “Children’s Poet.”

Western Union Telegraph Co. Feb. 28 bill shows telegram sent this day to New York, recipient not specified (see entry for others) [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote to make a case for higher wages and % of profits [MTP].

February 26 Thursday – Sam saw Nat Goodwin, actor and vaudevillian, on the train going to Philadelphia. Goodwin told Sam he was “very anxious to play” the Sellers as Scientist [Feb. 27 to Howells].

In the evening Sam and Cable gave a reading to an audience of about 3,000 at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia, Penn. Clemens included: “A Dazzling Achievement,” “Tragic Tale of the Fishwife,” “Incorporated Company of Mean Men,” and “The Bluejay’s Mistake” [MTPO].

Fatout, citing Pond’s finance records says the $918 take reflected a crowd of one thousand [Circuit 218]. From Cable to his wife on Feb. 27:

It was the finest sight I have ever looked at from the platform. And I had great success. As to Mark his was not up to high water mark though — excuse me, the pun was accidental — he created much enthusiasm. I don’t see what is the matter with him except that he seems tired out. [Turner, MT & GWC 113].

Sam inscribed a copy of HF to Erroll and Gwendolyn Scoville-Drake: “To Gwennie and Erroll Scoville-Drake— / with the best wishes and kindest regards of the author. / New York, February 26, 1885” [MTP].

Western Union Telegraph Co. Feb. 28 bill shows a telegram sent to New York, recipient not specified (see entry for others) [MTP].

February 27 Friday – Sam wrote from Philadelphia to William Dean Howells:

To-night in Baltimore, to-morrow afternoon & night in Washington, & my four-months platform campaign is ended at last. It has been a curious experience. It has taught me that Cable’s gifts of mind are greater & higher than I had suspected. But—

That “But” is pointing toward his religion. You will never know, never divine, guess, imagine, how loathsome a thing the Christian religion can be made until you come to know & study Cable daily & hourly. Mind you, I like him; he is pleasant company; I rage & swear at him sometimes, but we do not quarrel; we get along mighty happily together; but in him & his person I have learned to hate all religions. He has taught me to detest the Sabbath-day & hunt up new & troublesome ways to dishonor it [MTP]. Note: Fatout, using Pond’s records, lists the take for the Baltimore reading at $754 [Circuit 218].

Sam planned to return to New York City on Monday and stay one or two days, “mainly at Webster’s office,” so he asked Howells if he’d write him there (Sam was in Washington, D.C. on Monday, Mar. 2, but may have left that day for New York.)

Sam and Cable traveled to Baltimore, Maryland, where they gave a reading at the Oratorio Hall. Clemens included: “A Dazzling Achievement,” “A Ghost Story,” “Jumping Frog” and “The Bluejay’s Mistake” [MTPO].

February 28 Saturday – Sam and Cable read at the Congregational Church, Washington, D.C.

Note: Fatout gives figures from Pond's cashbook, listing $789 as the take from this reading [Circuit 218]. Thus ended the "Twins of Genius" tour: total gross receipts, $46,201, from which Cable's salary and expenses took more than $20,000. Cable earned $6,750, Sam approximately $15,000, and Pond's commissions "a modest $2500 to $3000" [228].

Howells responded to Sam's Feb. 27 letter, advising him to "let Goodwin have the play." Howells thought Nat Goodwin would pay more than Raymond offered. As to the complaints about Cable's religion, Howells recalled that he came to tea and made "me go to church with him..." [MTHL 2: 521].

Western Union Telegraph Co. billed Sam $2.03 for February telegrams sent: Feb. 3 to Chicago and from Newport; Feb. 12 to So. Manchester [Mass.], Feb. 25, 26 to New York; paid Mar. 4 [MTP].

William L. Alden wrote that he'd read excerpts of HF in the Century "& enjoyed them more than I ever enjoyed any magazine articles anywhere" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "very personal letter unanswered"

March – Sam inscribed a copy of Huckleberry Finn to Edith Beecher: To Edith Beecher with the very best wishes of Mark Twain March 1885 [MTP].

Sam made many day trips to New York during the month, as General Grant's strength waned. From Perry:

"It was as if Grant, Julia, Fred, the doctors, and all of his regular visitors had now steeled themselves for Grant's last campaign. This was true also of Twain, who came from Hartford nearly every day to visit the offices of Charles L. Webster & Co before stopping at 66th Street to check on Grant's condition and his progress on the memoirs" [Perry 162].

Charles Webster moved the publishing co. to bigger rooms at 42 E. 14th Street in early March, right after signing the Grant contract [AMT 2: 494].

Karl Gerhardt was given the commission to sculpt the Nathan Hale statue for the capitol in Hartford [Schmidt].

March-June, 1885 – Ulysses S. Grant wrote a small card note to Clemens: "There is much more that I could do if I was a well man. I do not write quite as clearly as I could if well If I could read it over myself many little matters of anecdote and incident would suggest themselves to me." [MTP].

March 1 Sunday – Washington, D.C.: George W. Cable wrote home that he spent the day with friends "Carrie Henderson & her husband Lieut. Wadhams." Cable wrote: "Clemens was with us. I got him out to church at last!" [Turner, MT & GWC 114].

From Sam's notebook:

In October, I will go to Pittsfield & read "Mental Telegraphy" to the Young Ladies Club—a promise made to Miss Dawes. Mch 1/85 [MTNJ 3: 99 & n106].

Note: See Oct. 7, 1885 entry. Miss Anna Laurens Dawes, daughter of Senator Henry L. Dawes of Mass., was a Washington correspondent from Pittsfield, Mass.

John Henry Boner (1845-1903) wrote from Wash. DC “Let me thank you once more for your kind words, written and spoken. Farewell—and joy be with you” [MTP].

March 2 Monday – Sam wrote from Washington, D.C. to J. Chipchase, who evidently solicited information on Feb. 23 from Sam about the American Bank Note & Co. stock, and called Sam “shrewd.” The stock was down, no doubt, as Sam answered he was:

...too shrewd to ever again invest in anything put on the market by George P. Bissell & Co., of Hartford, Conn...He sold me $10,000 worth of another rose-tinted stock about the same time. I have got that yet, also...A financial scheme advertised in any religious paper is a thing which any living person ought to know enough to avoid; & when the factor is added that a Mallory runs that religious paper, a dead person ought to know enough to avoid it [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Livy about the uniqueness of Washington:

Similarity between Washington and other cities probably doesn't exist. The differences are almost innumerable. The city is big; it is also small; it is broad it is narrow; sometimes it is wet, sometimes it is clouded with dust. The sun rises early, without a smile, thinly veiled and cold; later it burns like Hell; still later the clouds rise up, and suddenly you find yourself engulfed in darkness, wet through with rain—and, as a consequence—your moral state quite probably upset. Before you can open your umbrella, the bad weather has again vanished and everything lies in bright sunshine. You shut your eyes, deliver a solemn “Thank God,” open your eyes again, and Holy Moses, its snowing! [MTP].

Fox, Brusselars & Co., Hartford billed Sam $205.44 for Feb. 7 work: “upholstery mtls and labor, carpet lining; labor decorating ceiling and on woodwork; 130 yds materials”; paid; Fox & Co. “fine groceries, teas, wines & segars” billed $12.57 “to Mdse as per pass book” [MTP].

Messrs. Charles L. Webster & Co, publishers of this city, have been engaged by Gen. Grant to publish his forthcoming book entitled “Personal Reminiscences.” The book is in two volumes of about 500 pages each, and is to be sold only by subscription. The manuscript of the first volume is ready for the press and will be issued soon. Gen. Grant is engaged every day upon the second volume, which is well advanced toward completion.

Sam must have preferred a low-key announcement, perhaps due to General's failing health, or possibly to avoid controversy with the Century Magazine which had assumed publication of the memoirs (see Mar. 8 entry).

Sam traveled to New York City (see Mar. 4 N.Y. Times).

Orion Clemens wrote thanks for the monthly checks. He'd finished Richard I on his research/writing; his diet of only oatmeal crackers and half cup of coffee; Sam going to Europe made him feel lonesome [MTP].

March 4 Wednesday – General Grant had resigned his commission rather than wait till retirement, which left him without retirement income. Upon failure of Grant & Ward brokerage firm on Wall Street, the General was bankrupt. Chester A. Arthur's last act as out-going president was to sign the bill reinstating Grant's pension (See Perry's Grant and Twain for a full account of the political machinations.) Sam was there when the General got the good news telegram.

The New York Times reported under “Personal Intelligence,” p.8, that Sam was staying at the Everett House, which would show (given the normal one day delay of local reporting) that Sam arrived in New York from Washington on Mar. 3. He telegraphed from New York to Livy on Mar. 4:

We were at General Grants at noon and a telegram arrived that the last act of the expiring congress late this morning retired him with full Generals rank and accompanying emoluments. The effect upon him was like raising the dead. We were present when the telegram was put in his hand [MTP; AMT 2: 496].

March 4, 1885 – Grover Cleveland sworn in – 22nd
President of the United States

March 5 Thursday – Sam reached Hartford and home in the afternoon. He wrote from there to Orion and Mollie Clemens. He thought it best to put off a reading-trip to England and Australia until the next year as he wanted to closely supervise the canvas of Grant’s biography, which Webster & Co. would publish. Upon reflection he wrote, “Ma seems to be growing young again very fast” [MTP].

The Boston Evening Traveler called Huck Finn, “singularly flat, stale, and unprofitable” [Perry 146].

Charles Webster wrote various business matters: Grant book scheme [MTP].

March 6 Friday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Charles Webster, reporting that the furnace had not been improved, even “after spending all that money” to do so. Livy claimed it was even “less capable than it was before.” Get right on it, Charley, and let Sam know what the furnace repairman says [MTP].

Also, on or about this day, Sam wrote again to Webster, not to forget he wanted a dozen of his photos from Sarony’s, and that the furnace “threatens to quit heating the house altogether” [MTP].

March 8 Sunday – Sam’s coup of Grant’s memoirs, though not widely proclaimed, had been noticed. The Brooklyn Eagle, on p. 2 reported that Sam was in New York:

There is a great deal more bitterness than he [a Century man] intimated, and it is certain that no more papers by Grant will appear in the Century. Some say that Mark Twain has incidentally closed the pages of the magazine to any further transcripts from his forthcoming books, which will be a loss of advertising. He is in town to help Webster in the new project. The terms of the partnership between them and the Grants are not divulged, further than that Mark advances the considerable capital required to put the books on the market.

March 9 Monday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Roswell Smith, editor/owner of the Century Magazine.

All right—I’ve just written to Cable; & when he gives me the date I want him to furnish it to you & Gilder also, so you can work out the N.Y. end of the enterprise.

The rest of the letter involves an “Imperial Dictionary” that Sam wanted to buy at the cheapest rate. Just what the “enterprise” was with Cable, Gilder, and Smith, is unclear, but may have been a sop to the Century for scooping Gen. Grant’s Memoirs.

Reviews of Huck Finn came in slowly; the San Francisco Examiner was one of the first to do so, but found the book “very much the same character as many of the author’s Pacific Coast sketches, in the utter absence of truth...” [Perry 144].

Jane Clemens wrote to Sam & family, and finished it on Mar. 10: “When you all get over on the other side of the world, I don’t expect to see you again...If I live until the 18th of June I will be 82 years old” [MTP].

March 10 Tuesday – The Hartford Daily Courant, page one, printed “Grant’s War Reminiscences,” which included Sam’s comments on how he acquired the contract to publish the Memoirs.

Richard Watson Gilder for Century Magazine wrote urging Sam to come and consult with them about the Grant matter. Gilder was reacting to announcements made about Grant’s Memoirs by the Webster Co. [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Had a talk about it”

A.P.T. Elder for Elder Publishing Co., sent a printed circular (Literary Life) asking his opinion and an article of 2,500 or 3,000 words [MTP].

U.S. (no further identification) wrote from Cleveland, Ohio, a scathing blast on a postcard to Clemens:

For Gods sake give a suffering public a rest on your labored wit.—Shoot your trash & quit it.—You are only an imitator of ARTEMIS WARD & a sickening one at that & we are all sick of you. For Gods sake take a tumble & give U.S. a rest.— / U.S.— [MTP]. Note: no specific work was mentioned, but HF was published in the U.S. a month earlier.

March 11 Wednesday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Charles Casey. He addressed Casey as “Ex-President.” This is probably the Charles Casey Sam wrote to on May 15, 1876, president of a “Mark Twain Fan Club” in Ireland.

I hurried all I could, but it was a very very severe strain upon that part of my bowels which is called my intellect, & I perceived long ago that I had not asked for time enough on that problem by as much as two years. Well, there is a another & a longer world, & I will think it out there. It is not one of these ephemeral questions, anyway [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Andrew Chatto, informing him of excellent sales of Huck Finn in the U.S., his completed reading tour, and Grant’s autobiography, which he planned to issue Dec. 1.

General Grant will own his foreign copyrights himself, but Webster will go abroad in August & make the contracts with publishers for him. Webster will necessarily have to make the best trade he can for the General, but I want you to think it over & be prepared to make an offer that will put the book into your hands.

General Grant’s death will strike this country to the heart when it comes; & we are afraid it is not far away now. He is failing steadily, & the disease is incurable [MTP].

Sam also wrote to James Whitcomb Riley. Sam admired Riley and complimented him on his poem the “Old Swimmin’ Hole,” saying “what a strong text it was,” and how well he handled it [MTP]. Note: see Mary Bowe’s article in Fall 1995 Traces, “On Stage and Off with James Whitcomb Riley and Mark Twain.”

Howells wrote an invitation for Sam and Livy to visit him in Boston [MTHL 2: 522].

George Farquhar Marchmont wrote from the Phila. Hospital for the Insane [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env. “lunatic”

March 12 Thursday – Reginald Cholmondeley wrote having read he was “about to visit England” and asked for him to send his address. He added, “I have been reading Huckleberry Finn with delight. You appear to be inexhaustible & evergreen but is it possible that blood-feuds really existed in Arkansas within 50 years? I want to present you to the original Bilgewater” [MTP].

D.W. Howland wrote. See Mar. 13 to Howells [MTP].

March 13 Friday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Charles Webster about an offer made by the Rose Publishing Co. of Toronto, Canada (see also Dec. 8, 1884 entry). Sam advised Webster not to trust Rose’s word, but to draw a contract or bond that would “tie him fast to it,” such as a forfeit.

“I think his proposition indicates two things, 1. That our Canadian copyright is strong, this time; & 2, that he wants the Grant book” [MTP].

On or about this day Sam sent a one-liner to Howells about D.W. Howland:

“Who is this man, Howells? tell me, & return me his cheeky damned letter. Mark [MTP].

The note was written on a letter from D.W. Howland to Sam, dated Mar. 12, 1885. Howland wrote that he was gathering after-dinner speeches for a book and would Sam offer suggestions [MTHL 2: 522].

March 14 Saturday – In New York City, Sam autographed a banquet invitation at Delmonico’s to British actor Henry Irving. About this day Sam presented the proofs of volume one of Grant’s Memoirs to the General for his approval [Perry 166]. Note: Sam may have been in New York between this day and Mar. 20, since Perry puts this presentation of proofs as the “third week in March.”

Sam also wrote from Hartford to James B. Pond, a letter which puts into question the date of the surprise P&P performance by Susy Clemens and cast:

My boy, you ought to have been here tonight to see Susie & Clara & a dozen of the neighbors’ children play half a dozen stirring scenes from the Prince & the Pauper—one of the prettiest private theatrical performances I have ever seen. Audience of 25 neighbors. Mrs. Clemens has been drilling these kids 3 or 4 weeks in their parts, & to-night the thing was sprung on me as a surprise. When it is repeated, you must run up & see it [MTP].

Was this the first performance, later recalled by Sam and cited by others as pre-Christmas 1884 during the break from Sam’s tour with Cable? Or, was this the first follow-up show? (See Dec. 19, 1884 entry).

Sam also told Pond he was coming down to New York “next Friday, arriving at 6,” and would “stay over Sunday.”

39,000 copies of Huck Finn sold by this date [Budd, “Collected” 978].

Charles Webster wrote “Huck Finn is a success...I have sold 39,000 books” He had contracts of another 6,000 [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Re – Huck / 46,000 copies”

March 15 Sunday – The Sunday San Francisco Chronicle loved Huck Finn:

Anyone who has ever lived in the Southwest, or who has visited that section, will recognize the truth of all these sketches and the art with which they are brought into this story [Perry 144-5].

William L. Alden wrote “I would if I could but I am not a man of authority, having editors under me. I proposed it to the authorities, but they didn’t seem to see it. ... / I have just read Huck through in course. It is the best book ever written” [MTP].

March 16 Monday – The Concord, Mass. Public Library banned Huck Finn from its shelves (see Sam’s Mar. 18 to Webster). The Boston Globe reported the event on the following day.

Sam inscribed a copy of Huckleberry Finn to Edwin P. Parker: “To / Rev E.P. Parker / with the warmest / regards of / The Author. / Hartford, March 16, 1885” [MTP].

Sam also wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, who had written with the news of great early sales of Huck Finn:

“Your news is splendid. Huck certainly is a success, & from the standpoint of my own requirement. This result sets my fears about at rest as regards the General’s book. It insures a sudden sale of 250,000 copies of the first volume.”

Sam also warned Webster to “keep on good terms with the Century people,” and not to overwork (“overwork killed Mr. Langdon, & it can kill you”). He wanted to be notified each time Webster sold a thousand copies of HF. Sam advised him that he’d be at the Everett House on Friday at 6 PM [MTP].

Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote having just rec’d HF and expected “great pleasure from it,” as he had all of Twain’s books, beginning with The Jumping Frog [MTP].

Robert U. Johnson for Century Magazine wrote: “I was not joking the other day in suggesting to you that you should write out your experiences in the Rebel Army” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Only said I would see about it in August”

March 17 Tuesday – In Hartford, Sam inscribed a copy of Huckleberry Finn to Margaret Warner, daughter of George Warner: “To / Margaret Warner / with the love of / The Author / Hartford March 17, 1885” [MTP].

The banning of Huck Finn by the Concord Public Library brought this article from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, which quoted library board members, one of whom said:

While I do not wish to state it as my opinion that the book is absolutely immoral in its tone...it contains but very little humor, and that little is of a very coarse type...I regard it as the veriest trash [Powers, MT A Life 490, 670n36].

Sam wrote or telegraphed Howells, “naming Tuesday” for a visit. The communication is not extant, but is referred to in Howells’ Mar. 18 letter—see entry that date [MTHL 2: 522].

James Whitcomb Riley wrote Sam again (see Feb. 25 entry). “It is a very great delight to read what you have written me of ‘The Old Swimming Hole’ and over and over I review your gentle tribute.” When would they meet? [MTP]; Gribben notes “Clemens began to think of speaking with Riley in England on a lecture tour” [580]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “The poet Riley with two poems”; two poems from news clippings in file: “like his mother used to Make” and “down on Wriggle Crick”

Charles Webster wrote he couldn't recall what he'd written in a letter Jean destroyed; sales were up "making 40,000 in all and no apparent let up." He'd found an old picture of Lt. Grant in uniform [MTP].

March 18 Wednesday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Robert Underwood Johnson, editor of Century Magazine, who had written asking if Sam wanted to contribute to the upcoming "Battles and Leaders of the Civil War" series. Sam wanted to be in series, which he wrote was "the greatest thing of these modern times & nobody who is anybody can well afford to be unrepresented in it," but he wouldn't know till August after he'd been at Quarry Farm a month and tried a book which he'd "begun in my mind..." [MTP]. Note: According to Perry, Johnson was the first to approach Grant about his memoirs [in photo insert after p.218].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, about the banning of Huck Finn by the Concord, Mass. Public Library:

Dear Charley— / The Committee of the Public Library of Concord, Mass., have given us a rattling tip-top puff which will go into every paper in the country. They have expelled Huck from their library as "trash & suitable only for the slums.["] That will sell 25,000 copies for us, sure [MTP].

The book was controversial upon release, as it remains. Sam well understood this meant sales.

Howells wrote accepting Tuesday, Mar. 24 as a date for Sam and Livy to visit Boston:

We have just got your dispatch naming Tuesday for Mrs. Howells's tea-fight, and so that is all right. Now I want you personally to give me Wednesday night for dinner at the Tavern Club, of which I'm President. It is mostly young fellows of 30 or 35, but some good old heads, and we always have a good time. We dine, and then we go up stairs into a painter's studio, where we have singing, piano-playing, fiddling and other jinks [MTHL 2: 522-3].

Howells added that he'd never heard of D.W. Howland (see Mar. 13 entry). In 1884, Howells was chosen the first president of the Tavern Club, a group of artists, musicians, writers and professional men who met at the Carrolton Hotel in Boston [MTHL 2: 523n1].

The Boston Evening Transcript (and likely other newspapers) ran ads for Babcock fire extinguishers, which included an extract from a letter from Mark Twain to an unidentified person (probably a vendor) for this date. "We have had a fire in the billiard-room this morning. The Babcock Extinguisher saved the house from destruction—a service which it has rendered us four times since we lived in Hartford. Be sure and send me a box of ammunition for the extinguisher right away." See ad insert.

Brander Matthews wrote: "Here is a page of the Saturday Review just rec'd. I don't know who wrote the article. But I suspect that it is the work of our Kinsman, Mr. Andrew Lang. I think he ought to be asked over to lecture at Concord" [MTP].

Rodney K. Shaw wrote from Marietta, Ohio enclosing a tribute to Gen. Grant [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "answer dam fool"

Charles Webster wrote that 42,000 HF's had been sold to date, in the first month [MTP].

March 19 Thursday – Susy Clemens' thirteenth

Howells wrote again on Mar. 19 and changed the date for the Tavern Club gathering to Monday, Mar. 23 [MTHL 2: 523]. He also invited Thomas Bailey Aldrich [524n1].

Mary E. Donly, a farmer's wife, wrote from Knoxville, Tenn. to ask if it was possible to get pay for a MS. if one was "not a hero or heroine and not highly cultured or educated, also without knowledge attained by travel as the reading of many books." "What course would you advise me to pursue" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Some time answer this literary aspirant"

March 20 Friday – Sam went to New York City for the weekend and stayed at the Everett House [Mar. 14 to Pond; Mar. 16 to Webster]. At about 2:30 PM, Sam and Karl Gerhardt went to the home of General Grant. Sam suggested "several days previously" that Gerhardt make a life-size bust of the General that could be photographed for use as a frontispiece in Grant's reminiscences. Gerhardt carried a clay bust he'd completed from photographs of Grant. Col. Fred Grant and Jesse Grant were there. With the aid of Julia Dent Grant, Gerhardt worked over the bust in a few areas while Grant sat for the work [Perry 168-70; Mar. 21 telegram to Livy]. (See MTB p.808 for a detailed account of the visit to Grant's.)

He probably met Webster after 6 PM as intended by his letter of Mar. 16.

A new contract with Webster was drawn on this day, providing with the same salary ($2,500 a year), and 1/3 of the net profits up to $20,000, with 1/10th thereafter. Sam was given 8% on capital he put in [AMT 2: 495]. See notes connected with this contract and later sources of conflict between the two.

March 21 Saturday – Sam and Cable gave a reading in Steinway Hall, N.Y. Clemens included: "A Dazzling Achievement," "Tragic Tale of the Fishwife," "Incorporated Company of Mean Men," and "The Bluejay's Mistake" [MTPO].

Sam telegraphed from New York City to Livy:

"Gerhardt worked three hours in General Grants presence yesterday with excellent results" [MTP].

While in New York, Sam also inscribed a copy of Huckleberry Finn to Jervis Langdon II: To My Nephew Jervis / with the love of his uncle / The Author. / ~ / New York, March 21, 1885 [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of Huckleberry Finn to Oscar Marshall: "To / Mr Oscar Marshall / with the compliments of / Mark Twain / ~ / March 21, 1885" [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of Huckleberry Finn to unidentified persons: "To the General's boys / this book is offered, / with the compliments of / The Author. / ~ / New York, March 21, 1885" [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote from NYC to Sam: "Col. Fred Grant is delighted with the bust and does not want me to touch the face" [MTP].

March 22 Sunday – Sam probably returned to Hartford as planned (see Mar. 16 to Pond) but there is no documentation. However, since Sam and Livy traveled to Boston on Mar. 23, this is the last date Sam could have returned home.

March 23 Monday – Sam and Livy went to Boston for a short visit with the Howellses [MTHL 2: 522-3]. Sam and Howells joined in the fun at the Tavern Club.

Chatto & Windus wrote “Dawson Brothers of Montreal have sent us the enclosed letter which they have received from the Rose Publishing Company Toronto offering $1000. for the exclusive privilege of publishing in Canada” HF. “We were under the impression that you had already arranged with Dawson Brothers for this right...” [MTP].

March 24 Tuesday – The Howellses put on a tea for Livy Clemens. In his Mar. 19 letter moving up the date for the Tavern Club gathering with Sam, Howells wrote:

Mrs. Clemens must not think we are putting up much of a party on her. It will be short and sharp, and she will feel better when it is over. Don't let her be tired by apprehension of it. We are joyous to think of seeing you both [MTHL 2: 523-4].

George W. Galloway, M.D. (1846-1893) wrote from Ft. Collins, Colo. to ask where he might obtain a “nicely bound copy” of TS, a book read to him during a convalescence by a woman who later became his wife [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote they'd sold 1,500 HF's since Saturday night. “What did Genl Grant say about those matters Sunday?” [MTP]

James Hanson Larned wrote from Hartford offering poems for publication, one enclosed which used the F-word twice [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “An obscene lunatic”

John Lewis RoBards replied to Sam's question about Mount Olivet Cemetery, public or private? He sent the by-laws for Sam to read [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “This was always a poor well meaning ass—& at last has gone & stuck that big B in the middle of his name!”

March 25 Wednesday – Sam's article, “The Carson Fossil-Footprints” was re-printed in the Sacramento Record-Union. The Twainian article speculates that this article, which was misdated by Merle Johnson in his 1935 bibliography, was planted by Sam as a way of promoting Huckleberry Finn, and because he knew an old friend on the staff of the paper [May-June, 1949 p1]. Note: Budd's list, furnished by Thomas Tenney, shows this piece for 1884 in The San Franciscan as cited by Branch. Camfield also lists it as Feb. 16, 1884 in that paper.

Andrew Chatto wrote to thank Sam for giving them the preference in making an offer for the English edition of General Grant's Autobiography [MTP].

George P. Lathrop wrote from NYC to urge Sam to take part in readings by authors at Madison Square to raise money for the Copyright League [MTP].

March 26 Thursday – Sam and Livy returned home from Boston on Mar. 25 or 26.

Sam wrote on this day to Howells, saying they had a “most noble good time in Boston...” He enclosed a penciled draft of a letter to Frank A. Nichols, secretary of the Concord, Mass. Free Trade Club, in response to Nichols' notification that Sam had been elected an honorary member. Sam asked if Howells could:

“...read it, & riddle it & scarify it with expungings & other emendations, & get it right & the way it out to be, against the possible accident of its getting into print.”

Sam sent the praise of Clara Spaulding for Howells' new book, The Rise of Silas Lapham, which was to be his masterpiece—“I & madam are clear behind with” the book, Sam confessed [MTHL 2: 524].

Mrs. A.A. Ward for Ladies Aid Society wrote from Vacaville, Calif. to ask for an autograph for their autograph quilt [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Cheek – not answered”

March 28 Saturday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Reginald Cholmondeley of Shrewsbury, England. (Cholmondeley had warned Sam about the Australian imposter.) Reginald had asked if feuds like the Shepherdson-Grangerford trouble were factual. Yes, they had existed in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Arkansas, just like he’d described in Huck Finn.

“I came very near being an eye-witness of the general engagement detailed in the book. The details are historical and correct.”

Sam also responded about revisiting England:

“Mrs. Clemens wont let the children’s schooling be interrupted this year. But next year maybe I can meet the original Bilgewater...” [MTP].

With the editing help of Howells, who wrote again after receiving the draft on Mar. 26, Sam finished a letter from Hartford to Frank A. Nichols, thanking him for his honorary membership in the Concord Free Trade Club:

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your favor of the 24th instant, conveying the gratifying intelligence that I have been made an honorary member of the Free Trade Club of Concord, Massachusetts, and I desire to express to the club, through you, my grateful sense of the high compliment thus paid me. It does look as if Massachusetts were in a fair way to embarrass me with kindnesses this year. In the first place, a Massachusetts judge has just decided in open court that a Boston publisher may sell, not only his own property in a free and unfettered way, but also may as freely sell property which does not belong to him but to me; property which he has not bought and which I have not sold. Under this ruling I am now advertising that judge’s homestead for sale, and, if I make a good a sum out of it as I expect, I shall go on and sell out the rest of his property.

In the next place, a committee of the public library of your town have condemned and excommunicated my last book and doubled its sale. This generous action of theirs must necessarily benefit me in one or two additional ways. For instance, it will deter other libraries from buying the book; and you are doubtless aware that one book in a public library prevents the sale of a sure ten and a possible hundred of its mates. And, secondly, it will cause the purchasers of the book to read it, out of curiosity, instead of merely intending to do so, after the usual way of the world and library committees; and then they will discover, to my great advantage and their own indignant disappointment, that there is nothing objectionable in the book after all.

And finally, the Free Trade Club of Concord comes forward and adds to the splendid burden of obligations already conferred upon me by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, an honorary membership which is worth more than all the rest, just at this juncture, since it indorses me as worthy to associate with certain gentlemen whom even the moral icebergs of the Concord library committee are bound to respect.

May the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts endure forever, is the heartfelt prayer of one who, long a recipient of her mere general good will, is proud to realize that he is at last become her pet Thanking you again, dear sir, and gentlemen,

I remain, / Your obliged servant, / S.L. Clemens. / (Known to the Concord Winter School of Philosophy as “Mark Twain.”) [MTHL 2: 877-8]. Note: see this source for Howells’ edits used and unused by Sam.

Sam may have gone to New York again, for on this date he inscribed a copy of Huck Finn to Dean Sage: “To / Dean Sage / with the warmest regards. / The Author / ~ / Mch 28/85” [MTP]. Note: Sage may have visited Hartford.

In Hartford, Sam also sent a note to an unidentified person who had furnished him with a review, probably of Huck Finn [MTP].

On or about this date, in Hartford, Sam wrote to Charles Webster, directing him to leave:

...2 cloth Finn's at Everett House Monday afternoon & write in pencil on one of the brown paper covers, “Remus,” & on the other, “J R Randall, Augusta Ga., Chronicle”. Note: James Ryder Randall (1839-1908), author of the famous war song of the Confederacy, “Maryland, My Maryland” became the Washington correspondent for the Augusta Chronicle.

Sam wrote he intended to go to General Grant's house “toward 2 p.m.” and if there were anything he should know before going there, “you or Gerhardt meet me at the RR station” [MTP]. Note: this letter may have been earlier than Mar. 28, but does not refer to the Friday, Mar. 20 date when Gerhardt accompanied Sam with the bust of Grant. Sam made many New York trips during this period to supervise the publication of Huck Finn and to check on General Grant's progress, to show proofs, etc.

On or just after this date Sam went to New York; he was there on Mar. 31.

Pitts H. Burt wrote from Cincinnati, having just rec'd HF [MTP].

March 29 Sunday – N.E. Collins wrote from Pittsburg to praise HF [MTP].

March 31 Tuesday – Sam spoke at the Tile Club Dinner for Laurence Hutton in New York City—the title of his talk “On Speech-Making Reform” [Fatout, MT Speaking 190-3]. Note: Fatout says this speech is conjectural for this date.

Sam inscribed a copy of HF to Mary Mason Fairbanks: “To / Mother Fairbanks / with the love of her eldest, / The Author. / ~ / March 31, 1885” [MTP].

Sam also wrote from New York City to Brander Matthews, literary critic, essayist and dramatist, who invited him to some gathering. Sam replied in a friendly way that he had a “whole raft of business” and people with appointments “to get themselves swindled” [MTP]. Note: Matthews was a writer, critic, and educator, the first U.S. professor of dramatic literature and among founders of the Author's Club and the Players' Club, both of New York.

April – On an unknown Friday evening in April, Sam wrote from New York City to Charles Webster of his plans to go home to Hartford in the morning and stay there for the time being unless Webster needed him back in New York. He gave instructions about the galley proofs on Grant's book, and noted that Charles Langdon was in Hartford or on his way with “a lot of papers to sign & business to straighten up, which may take us several days.” Sam thought he might return to New York and bring Livy the following Thursday [MTP].

Likewise, on an unknown Sunday, Sam wrote another note to Charles Webster about an error on page 92 of Grant's book, one which would have to be fixed on the plates. The note closed with, “Livy & Susy & I will be down at noon Thursday,” which seems to connect with the preceding unknown Friday evening letter—that is, these letters were written Friday and Sunday of the same weekend in April.

Webster & Co. contracted with J.J. Little & Co. to print 50,000 copies of Grant's Memoirs; Little later sued for breach of contract (see May 20, 1888).

April 1 Wednesday – Sam's Mar. 28 letter to Frank A. Nichols ran in the New York World. It was widely copied in other papers [MTHL 2: 526n2].

In Hartford, Sam wrote to an unidentified lady who had asked if he might send his short tribute to Adam. Sam replied positively and sent her a paragraph from Innocents Abroad [MTP].

Gerhardt informed Sam that sculptor James Alexander Wilson MacDonald had claimed the right to make a desk mask of General Grant. Sam didn't want to get involved over the issue. Gerhardt then got permission to make the mask upon Grant's death from his son Fred Grant [MTNJ 3: 127n5].

Tracy, Tarbox & Robinson, "Hardware & Woodenware" Hartford billed $5.88 for purchases: Mar. 16, May 8, 23, 29, June 4, 24: "cup hooks, bristle brush, curry comb, grass hook, pr sheep shears, ball twine, scythe stone" etc.; paid July 9 [MTP].

April 2 Thursday – On or just after this day, Sam telegraphed from Hartford to Frederick Dent Grant (1850-1912), son of General Grant. Sam's note was in response to an Apr. 1 letter from Gerhardt, who was in New York at the time. "I hope you can speak a moment with Gerhardt. I am sending him to you on a matter of importance" [MTP]. Note: Such a matter of importance unspecified would lean toward Sam sending the dispatch as soon as he received Gerhardt's, or Apr. 2 at the earliest. Mail between New York, Hartford, and Boston seems to have been timely in the 1880s.

Sam then telegraphed Karl Gerhardt:

"Go see Col. Grant & if that man's name is mentioned you can tell him what you have told me. I have telegraphed Col. Grant you are coming" [MTP].

The Boston Daily Advertiser, on page 2, ran a short announcement:

Concord, April 1—At a recent meeting of the Concord Free Trade Club, Mr. S.L. Clemens (Mark Twain) was elected an honorary member of the club. A certificate of his election was sent Mr. Clemens in due course, and the following acknowledgment of the same has just been received—

W.W. Taylor for Rockwood Pottery wrote they'd sent the vase to Hartford [MTP].

April 3 Friday – Sam wrote on the envelope of a letter from Karl Gerhardt:

"Telegraphed Gerhardt not to send this letter—leave the matter alone or put it in General Badeau's hands" [MTP]. Note: Adam Badeau was an old friend of Grant's and one of his closest advisors during the war. He was an accomplished writer and also a public figure [Perry 72-73].

Sam also wrote from Hartford to Miss Wachschrager, probably an autograph seeker.

"Ah, if I had but a moment's time!—But one gets not even time to sleep" [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote, enclosing a letter to Col. Grant if it met with Sam's approval. The letter outlined why and what a plaster cast of the face would mean [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Telegraphed perhaps not to send this letter—leave the matter alone or put it in General Badeau's hand / SLC"

S.L. Caldwell for Vassar College wrote “gratified” that Sam would consent to meet the young ladies and read to them [MTP].

April 4 Saturday – From Sam’s notebook:

“General Grant is still alive to-day, & the nation holds its breath & awaits the blow” [MTNJ 3:127].

The Hartford Courant ran Sam’s Mar. 28 letter to Nichols, prefaced by these remarks about the Concord Library and the Boston Advertiser:

The Boston Advertiser attacks Mark Twain as venomously and persistently as if his recent suit against a Boston publishing-house had been brought against itself; and it ventures into declaration which it would have hard work to prove. For example, it says that there is “something very suggestive in the eagerness and unanimity with which library committees and newspapers throughout the country have followed the precedent established by the Concord library in condemning Mark Twain's last book,” but it omits to mention the libraries or to list the newspapers.

Indeed, some of the leading newspapers of the country have taken the liberty to laugh at the Concord folks for their conduct, and the libraries that have rejected the volume are, we venture to say, few and far between. They must all be of the class that the Concord library belongs to; for one of the trustees of that library, when interviewed on the matter, said that no fiction was permitted on the Concord shelves. Of course, “Huckleberry Finn” isn’t a true story. It is fiction, and so it’s barred by this Concord limitation. The discovery that they had bought a biography in good faith and had got something that was not true may be the cause of the discontent, although the life of Huck Finn is not the only biography that partakes of the nature of fiction, and the Concord library would be further depleted if all biographies that are not true were cast out from it [Railton].

In Hartford, Sam wrote to Charles Webster—he had a trick up his sleeve as well, for the Boston Advertiser and the Springfield (Mass.) Republican. He wrote a “prefatory insertion” for all future editions of the book, answering gossip as to whether Huck Finn was real or imagined:

Huckleberry Finn is not an imaginary person. He still lives; or rather they still live; for Huckleberry Finn is two persons in one — namely, the author’s two uncles, the present editors of the Boston Advertiser and the Springfield Republican. In character, language, clothing, education, instinct, and origin, he is the painstakingly and truthfully drawn photograph and counterpart of these two gentlemen as they were in the time of their boyhood, forty years ago. The work has been most carefully and conscientiously done, and is exactly true to the originals, in even the minutest particulars, with but one exception, and that is a trifling one: this boy’s language has been toned down and softened, here and there, in deference to the taste of a more modern and fastidious day [MTP]. (See Apr. 5 entry for the result of Livy’s censorship.)

Sam also wrote a second letter to Webster, which he added a PS to on Apr. 6. The letter is all about financial details for the Paige typesetter, which Sam always misspelled as “Page.” [MTP].

From Sam’s notebook:

“A telegram from Gerhardt tonight says Col. Grant has personally given him the desired permission. I am very glad indeed; for the mask must be made when the General dies, & it is so much better that Gerhardt who is honest & whom the family know, should do it than some tricky stranger” [MTNJ 3: 127n5].

Karl Gerhardt wrote and telegraphed. “Telegram rec’d will do as you say.” Telegram: I shall make mask permission given personally by Col Grant” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Gerhardt has received Col. Fred. Grant’s personal permission to make death-mask of Gen. Grant”

Wellington Evarts Parkhurst (1835-1924), editor of the Clinton (Mass.) Weekly Courant, wrote:

Dr Sir / Presuming on a brief acquaintance with you, formed on the occasion of your visit to our town some fifteen years ago, I made you a copy of my paper, by wh. you will see that our Library directors have decided to help your sale of "Huckleberry Finn" by refusing it a place in our library. I can assure you, that the anxiety to see and read "Huckleberry" is on the increase here; the adults are daily inquiring where "Finn" can be had, and even the children are crying for "Huckleberries"; the only way by wh. we can preserve some of our young lads in the facts of moral rectitude is a promise to give them a copy of Mark Twain's rejected "H.F."—Both as an incentive and as an opiate the promise of a copy of this work is a marked success... [MTP].

April 5 Sunday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Charles Webster.

"Livy forbids the 'Prefatory Remark'—therefore, put it in the fire."

Sam also discussed the son, age 34, of brilliant criminal lawyer Samuel F. Jones, who was looking for a position. Sam referred him to Webster to evaluate as a state agent for book sales. Sam also vowed to raise the money for Hamersley necessary for the "type-writer speculation" [MTP]. Note: Paige typesetter.

April 6 Monday – Sam added a PS to his letter of Apr. 4 to Webster. He noted that the man made two errors in an enclosed galley proof, but the Paige machine made "not a single error" [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote "I carried bronze bust to Col Fred Grant this afternoon and he gives it to his mother. I give the other members of the family terra cotta busts" [MTP].

George P. Lathrop for Am. Copyright League wrote; "Dear Clemens: / Have you attacked Mrs. Stowe? You must use all your powers of persuasion. Get Mrs. Clemens to join in the campaign, too. [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Answered"

Thomas May Peirce for Peirce College of Business, Phila. wrote about their commencement: "In your last letter to me you encouraged me to believe that you would deliver the address to our graduates if you did not go to Europe the coming season" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Damn Thomas May Pierce/ answered"

April 7 Tuesday – Sam presented and signed a copy of his "Burlesque Autobiography" to Wellington Evarts Parkhurst: "Hartford, Apl 7/85. W.E. Parkhurst, Esq." [MTP]. Note: Wellington Evarts Parkhurst of the Framingham, Mass. Parkhursts, brother to Dr. Parkhurst of New York, famous for his fight against Tammany Hall. If so, (1835–1897?).

Webster & Co. sent a telegram: "Col Grant writes, tell Gerhardt will have to withdraw permission about mask have made other arrangements" [MTP].

April 8 Wednesday – Sam went to New York on his way to Philadelphia, a trip which he'd expected to take Livy. She had a bad cold and a headache, so she did not go. Sam wrote late from New York to Livy of his disappointment on leaving her home. He went to General Grant's in the evening. Grant's son, Colonel Fred Grant, conveyed that the General was "restful & happy, exceedingly pleased" at the "expressions of sympathy from rebel soldiers of all ranks in the South. His last hours are among the happiest of all his life."

As for the book, Sam's good news offset Livy's initial worries about him taking all the risks for a small portion of the profits:

General Grant's book is not in type—indeed, the work on it is only fairly begun, & not a scrap of advertising has been done; & yet 20,000 sets are already in effect sold—they have been ordered by two responsible general agents; 20,000 sets is 40,000 volumes, for it is a 2-volume work. This affords a clear profit to us of $13,000—& over $26,000 to Mrs. Grant. You were a little afraid to have me venture on the book & take all the risks for so small a share as 30 per cent of the profits. I did not think there was any risk. These 40,000 books are ordered for only 2 States—Michigan & Iowa—wait till you hear from the other 37! [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, that Webster & Co. should be the general agents for “New York & a fair area of territory around it, & receive the general agent's commission.” Such a commission would be a “handsome addition to the firm's assets” [MTP].

David Gray wrote from Buffalo to thank him for HF, but that they'd rec'd the copy addressed to “Mother Fairbanks” so she probably had theirs [MTP].

W.W. Taylor for Rockwood Pottery Co. wrote about “tiger eye” bowl sent and Mr. Burt being there to consult [MTP].

April 9 Thursday – In Philadelphia Clemens inscribed a drawing to the Clover Club, where he was to speak in the evening. “Ys Truly / Mark Twain” [MTP].

Sam read “The Tragic Tale of the Fishwife” at the Actors Fund Fair, Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Fatout's introduction in Mark Twain Speaking, p.194:

An Actors Fund Fair was a philanthropic project, assisted by the gratis services of actors, musicians, writers, and socialites, who manned bazaars and put on vaudeville acts. Mark Twain, attending the Philadelphia Fair, praise...

At 5:30 PM Sam wrote from Philadelphia to Livy, about the day's event. He was just “starting for the Clover Club dinner.” He planned to leave for “New York in the morning & expect to leave for Hartford at 4.30 p.m., arriving in time for billiards” [MTP]. Note: The billiards were part of his Friday Night male gathering.

“...a superb performance, and of prodigious variety. It began shortly after noon and lasted till 4. There were 4,000 people present, and they sat it through” [Apr. 9 to Livy, MTP].

“More than once I have been accused of writing obituary poetry in the Philadelphia Ledger. I wish right here to deny that dreadful assertion. I will admit that once, when a compositor in the Ledger establishment, I did set up some of that poetry, but....I did not write that poetry” [Fatout, MT Speaking 194].

Also at the gathering was Harry Kellar, the great magician, who performed his famous “Mysterious Cabinet” illusion [Slotta 51-2].

In the evening, Sam gave a dinner speech at the Clover Club in Philadelphia [Schmidt].

Charles H. Clark forwarded the Southern New England Tel. Co.'s letter to him, about Sam's complaint that the phone rang too many times on a call [MTP].

S.L. Caldwell for Vassar College wrote encouraging him to allow his daughter (not specified) to stay there during his talk [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Accepted”

April 10 Friday – Before leaving for New York, Sam wrote from Philadelphia to Karl Gerhardt, recommending Erastus Brainerd, who had inquired after Gerhardt “with great interest” [MTP]. Note:

Brainerd (1855-1922) a Connecticut native and Harvard graduate was a journalist. He would later move to the Northwest and become editor of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Sam returned home to Hartford, probably in time for billiards with the Friday Night boys.

April 11 Saturday – Sam wrote a one liner from Hartford to S.L. Caldwell, accepting for Susy and himself the invitation sent. Caldwell's identity and the event referred to are unknown.

Sam also wrote a rather brusque letter to Orion about William Lampton wanting a photo of Sam. Sam also wrote "Curses on the War Dept man," (who evidently had requested a copy of Huck Finn) and told Orion if he's sent the man's address it would have saved him a "½ page of writing." Lastly, he directed his brother,

"Don't send me newspaper rubbish—can't find time to eat my meals" [MTP].

Sam also corrected a slip sent him by Mrs. A.P. Cosgrove (identity unknown, not to be confused with Margaret Cosgrave, a former housekeeper for the Clemenses), about his mother's memory of his pledge not to drink. He was "only 15" then, Sam wrote, and "it was not a limitless promise." She'd "voluntarily released me" after seven years.

"The instant a person pledges himself not to drink, he feels the galling of the slave-chain he has put upon himself; & if he be wise, & not a fool, he will go instantly & break that pledge" [MTP].

Sam also wrote two letters to Charles Webster, warning him not to leave proofs of Grant's book on his desk at night but to lock them in the safe. Sam would have to borrow $200,000 before issuance of the book, and was concerned about Canadian pirates. He instructed other security measures—private marks on the proofs, irregular mailing envelopes, surveillance by watchmen of printers, compositors, binders, etc. He also wanted to insure against such disasters and wanted Webster to find a company that would do so to $300,000 for a $10,000 premium. He also wanted Webster to keep separate account of any work on the Grant book performed by his attorneys, Alexander & Green. "Keep your proofs in your safe" [MTP].

Major Pond wrote and invited Sam to an Apr. 29 dinner at Morelli's Restaurant for the Alumni Association of Cornell University [MTNJ 3: 137n35].

April 14 Tuesday – Orion Clemens wrote: "I humbly apologize. / I did not expect you to write a letter, but merely send the photograph and autograph. I will send to Charley for the book for Fitzgerald." [MTP].

George P. Lathrop for Am. Copyright League wrote "I happened to be in the Century office to-day, just after you had left. Now look here: this won't do. If you can come down here just to attend to your sordid private interests, you can read twice for the Cause" [MTP].

John M. Hay wrote thanking him for HF, which was a life he thought was obsolete and forgotten by him. "I shall never forgive you for voting for Cleveland, but bar that I am always / Affectionately yours..." [MTP].

April 15 Wednesday, before – In Hartford, Sam sent a note to James B. Pond asking him to send James Redpath $200, that he would refund it later [MTP]. Note: from the Apr. 15 note repaying this amount, which Sam wrote he "was forgetting about," it stands to reason this request was most likely made at least a couple of weeks prior to Apr. 15, and should more properly be entered earlier.

April 15 Wednesday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to his sister, Pamela Moffett, who had written concerned about the Concord Library's banning of Huck Finn. She also asked if he'd seen Dan De Quille's recent articles.

The Chronicle understands the book—those idiots in Concord are not a court of last resort, & I am not disturbed by their moral gymnastics. No other book of mine has sold so many copies within 2 months after issue as this one has done.

No, I haven't seen Dan's articles; but if they are good they will turn up in the eastern papers & fall under my eye [MTP].

Sam also sent James B. Pond the $200 which he'd given to Redpath [MTP].

Sam also sent a thank you for a book received on Apr. 7 from an unidentified person [MTP].

George P. Lathrop for Am. Copyright League wrote, upset that Clemens and Howells declined to read more than once [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote: contract with Century Co. signed—"all future articles are to be copyrighted by us in the name of U.S. Grant" [MTP].

April 16 Thursday – John Linahan wrote from St. Louis to suggest a subject for the next book: a Comic History of the U.S. [MTP]. Readers would have to wait for Stan Freburg on this one.

April 19 Sunday – Sam wrote a short note from Hartford to James B. Pond, inviting him to the Clemens' home Wednesday evening, Apr. 22 for a presentation of P&P by Susy and crew. Jean Clemens added scribbles to the top of the note, to which Sam referred:

"The above is a postscript—I should say an ante-script—by Jean—& she has gone off without translating it" [MTP].

April 20 Monday – Howells wrote from Boston to Sam, advising him not to use his Cornell speech on Apr. 29 to defend Huck Finn against the Concord Library Committee—he thought them:

"...game too small for you, and you can't stir it up without seeming to care more than you ought for it. You have done enough" [MTHL 2: 526]. Note: Howells was one of the few people who could be so blunt and directive with Sam and ward him off of obsession which might be damaging to his image. Clemens left it alone.

April 21 Tuesday – Sam visited U.S. Grant at 9:30 a.m.

Albert H. Dowell wrote a begging letter "for a few dollars" from Hahnemann Hospital, NYC [MTP].

Webster & Co. wrote, Gerhardt to Webster Apr. 19 enclosed: "We refer the enclosed to you as it is something which you are personally concerned" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Send 1000"

April 22 Wednesday – The Prince & the Pauper play was re-staged by the Clemens and neighborhood children. This may have been the time Sam played the part of Miles Hendon. James B. Pond had been invited the prior Sunday [Apr. 20 to Pond].

A.B. Anderson for Robert L. Downing, Joaquin Miller to Sam Apr. 22 enclosed. Anderson requested “a line” from Clemens “commending Mr. Downing’s rendering of Horace Greeley’s ride with Hank Monk [MTP].

Joaquin Miller wrote a small card: “Dear ‘Mark’ only a line to say Downing is doing grandly with ‘Hank Monk’ whom you have helped to make immortal; and if you can say a line or so for him it will be a favor to me” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote various business matters: Grant’s book sales, HF sales [MTP].

April 23 Thursday – Thomas S. Nash wrote a long, tender reminiscence of Hannibal boyhood days. Most of the letter here:

Dear old friend, / I have waited for a long time for an opportunity of inflicting on you some more of my poor penmanship and bad grammar, but did not know for certain whether you were out west interviewing the earliest settlers or down South among the Cannibal Islands hence you have been spared the infliction until now, and I hope not to tire you with too many words

In the first place dear Sam I was very gratified for the kind letter you wrote me from Keokuk, and have added to my deep gratitude by sending me your new Book Huckleberry Finn, which I received some time since. I have not owing to the press of business had a chance to read much of it. I read several Chapters in the “Century” and was very anxious to find out how the “Duke” & the “Dolphin” were finally checked off. The mere mention of the Book, takes me back in memory to “old Jim Finn of Craig’s Alley” who if I remember right perished with the burning of the old Calaboose on front St

In yesterdays Courier I was reading a long article copied from Chicago Inter Ocean of an interview had by the reporter with your Mother in which you are shown up as being very much opposed to going to school in your early days, and this reminds me of the days when I went to school to old Cross in a little frame building on the park, and of the many pranks I had a hand in in those days, such as stealing the Bell Clapper pitching the Black Boards out the window when locked up at noon etc. I went to school then with “Andy” Fuqua, “Buck” Brown George Robards “Jim Brady” Henry Fuqua Jim McDaniel and others—Remember “Orion” well, and poor Henry. I met him on the wharf in St. Louis only a short time before the fatal accident that deprived him of life and it was from him that I received some of your earliest literary productions while in California. How dear are the early friends of our boyhood I remember the “Hannibal Gazette” office and the time you stuck type there—Also the old Hannibal Courier— When I came home from Jacksonville where I went to school I missed you with other of the boys who had gone overland to California. I was in the post office from 49 to 53, then apprenticed to W^m League who published the “Hannibal Messenger” and deviled it rolled it pressed it and set up for near a year but it did neither agree with my inside nor my ambition to get rich in a hurry, so I took to Printing under old “Dick Hardy” and have stuck to it ever since though it has not proved a way of gaining wealth in a hurry.

I was married 25 years ago to a nice little woman in Monroe Co. Had two children both girls and are married & am grand pa

I have been to Keokuk several times but never knew until to day that Orion & your mother lived there or I should certainly have gone to some trouble to have had a good shake of Orion’s hand once again—

Since you were here another of our old friends has gone to his reward, Tho^s K. Collins died the last of February. One by one the old settlers dissappear, and even I after an absence of near Twenty years return here to live and walk the streets of the town in which I was born. I meet but few familiar faces that I knew in other days, but can find the names of an hundred inscribed on the white marble of the surrounding grave yards— Soon they will lay me there, and I shall sleep quietly, but I hope I shall not be entirely forgotten—

Time flies swiftly away and admonishes me to be up and doing. So I will bring my somewhat extended letter to a close, but cannot do so without renewing my deep sense of gratitude for the beautiful Book you wrote and which you so kindly sent me—I shall value it highly, as I can in memory see you speak as I read—Don’t forget me Sam. I cherish the memory of all the friends of my youth, whether they have in the struggle of life gained wealth and fame or merely like myself still possess only a plain but honest name

This of me often Write to me Sometimes—Ever your friend [MTP].

James B. Pond wrote from NYC about the hot weather for April. “Homer writes that the Jenny will be shipped as soon as he can find one nice enough” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “get a little donkey”

An unidentified person signed as “A Socialist” wrote to encourage Clemens to emulate Voltaire, who he claimed “ridiculed dogmatic superstition of the 18th century out of existence....Why should not Mark Twain imitate his noble example and wield his mighty pen for the abolition of Wage-slavery—the curse of the 19th century!” [MTP]. Note: Clemens was sometimes compared to Voltaire; see mentions of him in Gribben 729.

April 24 Friday – From Sam’s notebook:

“Accident—man backed almost into us—we had to almost run into the curbstone to keep from taking his wheel off—injured it, anyway” [MTNJ 3: 138]. Note: note 42 of source corrects date.

April 25 Saturday – Sam received a letter from J.B. Clapp, secretary of the Blodgett & Clapp Co. an iron and steel merchant of Hartford.

“I was unfortunately ran into by your carriage and my own carriage somewhat injured. The carriage I have placed in the Hospital & trust it will soon be convalescent. The Doctors bill I presume you will see in due course of time” [MTNJ 3: 138-9n42]. Sam wrote on the envelope, “Ha-ha!”

Clemma L. Bradley (nee Lampton) wrote from McKinney, Texas to “earnestly request that you honor our state by a visit at your earliest convenience.” “I am the youngest daughter of your Mother’s uncle Wharton Lampton; the ‘curly headed Sis,’ that you mischievously nicknamed “The Weather Office” [MTP]. File notes: that SLC had ‘no shred of remembrance of her (to Orion 5 May; in MTBM, 321”

J.B. Clapp wrote that Sam ran into his carriage which now was in the “hospital & trust it will soon be convalescent. The doctor’s bill I presume you will see in due course...” [MTP].

April 27 Monday – Sam wrote a short note from Hartford to George Iles, Montreal editor:

“I hope to live to see you swing your scepter by & by, in accordance with that plan we talked of” [MTP]. Note: The “plan” is not identified. Sam may have left for New York this day or early the next.

April 28 Tuesday – Sam, Livy, and thirteen-year-old Susy Clemens went to New York for a four-day outing, which included a reading up at Vassar in Poughkeepsie on May 1. Sam conferred with Webster and General Grant and gave a reading on Apr. 29 [MTNJ 3: 140n48].

The American Copyright League Benefit was held in the afternoons of Apr. 28 and 29 at Madison Square Theater, New York City with a host of authors reading, including W.D. Howells, Julian Hawthorne, Hjalmar Boyesen, Edmund C. Stedman, Henry Ward Beecher, Dr. Edward Eggleston, and others. The New York Times advertised the event, announcing on Apr. 25 that John Greenleaf Whittier wrote his apologies [page 8]. On April 29 a long page 4 article did not list Sam among the many authors who had read or who would read that day. Fatout lists Sam reading of “A Trying Situation” for the second day, a story Sam had delivered several times on his reading tour with Cable [656].

Sam’s notebook cites Chatto’s draft for £178.0.5 paid—$861.35 for royalties on the English versions of his books [MTNJ 3: 141].

April 29 Wednesday – Sam gave a reading on this second day at Madison Square Theater, Author’s Reading given for the Longfellow Memorial, an entertainment managed by George Parsons Lathrop

(1851-1898). Charles Eliot Norton introduced the readers [MTB 817]. Note: Paine mistakenly identifies this event as “early May.”

At this matinee performance Sam appeared in formal evening dress, a display which surprised everyone. As reported by the New York World next day, Sam explained: “I knew it would be night before they reached me, and so I came in evening dress.”

From Madison Square Theater he went to a Cornell alumni dinner at Morelli's Restaurant in New York [656]. Major Pond invited Sam on Apr. 11. Sam responded to the toast “The Politician” [MTNJ 3: 137n35].

Susy Clemens, accompanied by her father and Major Pond, went to a dog show at Madison Square Garden. The show was an annual event of the Westminster Kennel Club, patronized by many well-to-do New York families. Susy wrote of the show in her unfinished biography of her father [MTNJ 3: 130n11]. From Susy's Biography:

...when we got through seeing the dogs papa thought he would go and see General Grant and I went with him—this was April 29, 1885. Papa went up into General Grant's room and he took me with him. I felt greatly honored and delighted when papa took me into General Grant's room and let me see the General and Col. Grant, for General Grant is a man I shall be glad all my life that I have seen [MTA 2: 143].

April 30 Thursday – From Susy Clemens' unfinished biography (her spelling):

...mamma planned to take the four-o'clock car back to Hartford. We rose quite early that morning and went to the Vienna Bakery and took breakfast there. From there we went to a German bookstore and bought some German books for Clara's birthday.

Then mamma and I went to do some shopping and papa went to see General Grant. After we had finished doing our shopping we went home to the hotel together....Papa came home and gave mamma her ticket; and after visiting a while with her went to see Major Pond and mamma and I sat down to our lunch. After lunch most of our time was taken up with packing, and at about three o'clock we went to escort mamma to the train. We got on board the train with her and stayed with her about five minutes and then we said good-bye to her and the train started for Hartford. It was the first time I had ever been away from home without mamma in my life, although I was 13 yrs. old. Papa and I drove back to the hotel and got Major Pond and then went to see the Brooklyn Bridge we went across it to Brooklyn on the cars and then walked back across it from Brooklyn to New York [Salsbury 198].

Sam wrote from New York City to Frederick D. Grant, making a suggested change in a letter Fred wrote for Gerhardt. He strenuously argued that a libel suit be brought against the New York World for an article printed Apr. 29, namely, that the memoirs were not the work of General Grant, but a ghost-writer. The World claimed that the book was the work of Adam Badeau. Sam was enraged [MTP; Perry 196].

May – Sam's article “What Ought he to Have Done?” ran in the May issue of Babyhood [Lou Budd's list furnished by Thomas Tenney and citing Branch]. Note: this piece also ran in The Christian Union, July 16, 1885 [Camfield, bibliog.]. It was also reprinted in the July 21 Courant as “Mark Twain on the Government of Children.” Susy Clemens reported that upon reading the piece, Livy was “shocked and a little displeased” [MTB 820].

Sam's notebook listed the German titles of three works by Ivan Turgenev (1818-1883)—translated, A Daughter of Russia; First Love; Spring Floods. Beneath these is listed Berthold Auerbach's (1812-1882) melodramatic novel of illicit love, Auf der Hohe (1865) [Gribben 719; 31]. Also listed is the name of Karl Friedrich Becker's children's book about Greek myths, Erzahlungen aus der alten Welt für die Jugend (1810) [MTNJ 3: 148]. Also in his notebook, “Boots & Saddles, E.B. Custer” [Gribben 169]. Note: Elizabeth B. Custer (1844-1933).

May 1 Friday – Sam spoke at Vassar College in Poughkeepsie, New York, for their Founder's Day, reading the popular "Trying Situation" and "Golden Arm" [Fatout, MT Speaking 656].

From Susy's unfinished biography (her spelling):

The next morning we rose early, took our breakfast and took an early train to Poughkeepsie. We had a very pleasant journey to Poughkeepsie. The Hudson was magnificent—shrouded with beautiful mist. When we arrived at Poughkeepsie it was raining quite hard....It was a long drive from the station to Vassar College and papa and I had a nice long time to discuss and laugh over German profanity. [After being made to wait]. At last we were called to dinner, and I went down without papa as he never eats anything in the middle of the day....After dinner I went around the College with the young ladies and papa stayed in his room and smoked. When it was supper time papa went down and ate supper with us and we had a very delightful supper.

Papa read in the chapel. It was the first time I had ever heard him read in my life—that is in public...I enjoyed the evening inexpressibly much....After papa had finished reading we all went down to the collation in the dining-room, and after that there was dancing and singing. Then the guests went away and papa and I went to bed [Salsbury 199-200; MTA 2: 170-1].

From Sam's notebook:

60,000 sets of Gen. Grant's book (or 120,000 single vols) I am to publish next December, are already ordered by a region comprising one-fourth of the territory lying between Canada & Mason & Dixon's line, & the Mississippi river & the Atlantic Ocean. At this rate, the rest of that territory will take 180,000 sets more—240,000 sets in all, or 480,000 single volumes. The vast West, & the body of Southern States, ought to take, together, 120,000 sets, perhaps—say 600,000 single volumes. If these chickens really hatch out according to my count, Gen. Grant's royalties will amount to $420,000, & will make the largest single check ever paid an author in the world's history....If I pay the General in silver coin (at $12 per pound) it will weigh 17 tons [MTNJ 3: 141-2].

May 2 Saturday – From Susy's unfinished biography:

The next morning we rose early, took an early train for Hartford and reached Hartford at ½ past 2 o'clock. We were very glad to get back [MTA 2: 171].

In New York City: three days after the appearance of the New York World's claim that Ulysses Grant was not the author of the forthcoming book, Grant dictated a letter to Sam—the Memoirs composition was entirely his own [Perry 197]. Sam made sure Grant's letter was well circulated to other New York newspapers. Badeau had started the rumor, dissatisfied over his recent lesser role. See Perry 198-202 for a full account of Badeau's disservice.

Charles Webster wrote various business matters, including a possible suit of the NY World, which Alexander & Green thought would take a year [MTP].

May 3 Sunday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Charles Webster. He'd "watched closely" and had "not seen a single reference to the World's lie in any newspaper" (The New York World's lie about Grant—see Apr. 30 entry). He realized that if no other papers copied the report, that suing them would only give "that daily issue of unmedicated closet-paper" publicity. Sam PS'd that he was coming to New York on Wednesday, May 6 [MTP].

May 4 Monday – James Redpath wrote to arrange a meeting in NYC. "If you are to be down on a Thursday I wish to take you to the Twilight Club". He offered several other plans [MTP]. Note: this is clearly a reply to a non-extant letter by Clemens.

May 5 Tuesday – Sam wrote a short note from Hartford to Orion, enclosing a letter from a relative he had “no shred of remembrance of. ...maybe you & Ma may like to read her letter. All well & send love” [MTP]. Note: see Apr. 24: Clemma L. Bradley (nee Lampton) from McKinney, Texas.

Sam also wrote a longer letter to Howells, praising him on his reading at the Apr. 28-9 American Copyright League in New York. Sam had sometimes teased Howells about his ability to read to an audience, but now he was effusive:

Who taught you to read? Observation & thought, I guess. And practice at the Tavern Club?—yes; & that was the best teaching of all.

Well you sent even your daintiest & most delicate & fleeting points home to that audience—absolute proof of good reading. But you couldn’t read worth a damn a few years ago. I do not say this to flatter you; it is true.

Sam also wrote of Osgood’s business failure, that he’d seen it coming a year before. Osgood still held the Library of Humor, which Sam said he’d hand to Howells “whenever you want it”—then added that to avoid a mix up perhaps Howells “had better send down & get it.” Sam PS’d derisively that Cable’s response to Pond about the Copyright League wanting him to speak was they’d have to pay his price.

“He is intellectually great—very great, I think—but in order to find room for this greatness in his pygmy carcase, God had to cramp his other qualities more than was judicious, it seems to me” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a short note of condolence to James R. Osgood, wishing him “an early return to prosperity,” then turned around and wrote to Webster, “Osgodo’s busted, at last. It was sure to come” [MTP].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam, grateful for the kind words about his recent reading. As to Cable’s refusal to read for charity,

“I don’t see how a reasonably selfish author could have refused to read there. Wasn’t it our own interest we were promoting? Cable ought to have thought that his books were to gain as much as anyone’s. And Warner failed too! Well, the show netted $1700, Lathrop tells me” [MTHL 2: 530].

May 6 Wednesday – Ulysses S. Grant wrote to Adam Badeau, saying “you and I must give up all association so far as the preparation for any literary work goes which bears my signature.” Sam was fully behind Grant’s action [Perry 200]. Sam and Grant knew that Badeau had likely planted the story in the New York World claiming that Grant’s book was written by a ghost-writer. Perry claims Mark Twain was that ghost-writer [202].

May 7 and 9 Saturday – The Boston Herald ran an article publicizing Sam’s complaints against George W. Cable in their recent reading tour, “Personal Peculiarities of a Well Known Author.” Sam remained silent on these accusations of stinginess and inconvenience caused to others as a result of Cable’s refusal to travel on Sundays. It wasn’t until ten years later that Sam came out against such claims, which Fatout asserts were generated by Sam’s talk with others [Circuit 228-31].

May 10 Sunday – In the wake of the rumor in the New York World, Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, admonishing him to “write nothing in any private letter to friend, relative, or anybody, which you do not want published.” Sam felt he’d been burned “so often, in my own experience, that I feel like warning & saving” Webster [MTP].

May 11 Monday – Karl Gerhardt wrote twice, one to Sam & one to Sam & Livy, about medallions, his need for a small office, and his circular (on the back of the letters) for the Grant busts: (twice, one to Sam only). His second letter added that James B. Pond had offered a part of his office; Pond suggested a terra cotta bust of Henry Ward Beecher [MTP].

Robert U. Johnson for Century Magazine wrote, again pursuing the idea that Clemens would write up his brief experiences in the Confederate ranks [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Wants war article”

May 11 or 12 Tuesday – Sam’s notebook designates this as the period he began dictating the events surrounding General Grant’s illness to James Redpath [MTNJ 3:144].

May 13 Wednesday – Sam notified Edward M. Bunce, Henry C. Robinson, and other Friday night billiard players that he was moving up their gathering to the next day, Thursday, May 14, in order to attend a lecture by Chauncey M. Depew (1834-1928) at the Opera House in Hartford on Friday [MTP]. Depew was a Yale-educated lawyer and businessman who later served as a U.S. Senator from New York.

Sam also dictated a letter to Edward House. James Redpath took down Sam’s words. Most of the letter is a discussion of General Grant’s book and Sam’s conclusions that the Century had underpaid Grant for his previous articles. House was forced to return home from Japan by recurrence of severe gout, which left him unable to work, or even walk [Huffman 18]. Sam wrote “We are infinitely grieved to hear of your latest calamity” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, “more & more bothered by the French & German translations.” Sam wanted them printed in New York, not Europe, and he wanted to wait till Nov. 1 to avoid theft and reentry into the U.S. market, as in the Belford travesty. He recommended Hjalmar Boyesen, now teaching at Columbia College as an “absolutely trustworthy” translator. Sam also wanted to be kept informed of all his various enterprises: “Dictate me a letter every week if you die for it” [MTP].

Sam also had Redpath take down a short note to an unidentified person who suggested Sam write about some topic. Sam answered it was a good idea but that it had already been done “in the Georgia Scenes, & quite well done, too” [MTP].

May 14 Thursday – Newspapers were reporting grossly inaccurate earnings for Sam and Cable from the reading tour—The Boston Transcript and the Boston Evening Journal claimed the tour had netted Sam “nearly $35,000.” On May 17, the New York World also claimed that amount for Sam, and an equal number for Cable [Cardwell 11]. The actual amounts were much less—see Feb. 28 entry.

The Friday night billiards gathering took place on this Thursday night at Sam’s home. (See May 13 entry.)

Charles Webster wrote about Grant doing 20 pages this day, though he was not well. Also wrote about the photo of Grant as a young lieutenant. Webster was “awfully busy” [MTP].

May 15 Friday – Sam attended Chauncey M. Depew’s talk on “Poetry and Politics in the British Isles” at the Opera House in Hartford. Governor Henry B. Harrison (1821-1901) was in attendance. Sam and Joseph R. Hawley and other dignitaries sat on the lecture platform. The lecture included Depew’s impressions of Ireland, Scotland, and England, along with personal anecdotes [Hartford Courant, May 16, 1885 p.1]

In Hartford, Sam wrote to Dr. George C. Jarvis, arranging to have minor surgery on his palate the first week in June. He was giving a Hartford reading and wanted the doctor to come to his house for the procedure right after. “I shan’t need my voice after that reading, nor my palate either” [MTP].

George W. Cable telegraphed: “All intimations that you and Pond are not my Beloved Friends are false and if you can say the same of me do so as privately or as publicly as you like” [MTP].

L.A. Stager for Stager School of Languages wrote a fan letter with some history [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Engel’s fine compliment”

May 16 Saturday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Orion that the family would leave for Elmira the fifteenth of June. Marked “private” Sam praised Charles Webster and noted General Grant’s high regard for him.

Charley has tackled the vastest book-enterprise the world has ever seen, with a calm cool head & a capable hand, & is carrying it along in a serene unhalting fashion which is fine to see. All well, —love to all [MTP].

Sam also wrote to James B. Pond, about a “small donkey, with saddle, harness & two little carts, all for $75,” most likely for his girls. Sam told Pond to have his brother Homer “hold on for a while,” if he hadn’t already got some of these items, since Sam wanted this lot. Sam had written to reserve the lot for up to two weeks [MTP].

Puck Magazine wrote to request autograph for Mr. Schenk, the editor of the German Puck [MTP].

George W. Cable wrote to explain his telegram and that he thought the slander about himself, Pond and Clemens originated in the Boston Herald [MTP].

May 17 Sunday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to George W. Cable, who wrote and telegraphed the day before, upset at things he was reading in the papers. Sam assured him that they were the “slanders of a professional newspaper liar,” and that “this thing did not distress” him “for one single half of a half of a hundredth part of a second” [MTP]. The source of Cable’s upset? From Turner’s biography of Cable:

“Yet within a few weeks after the reading team had disbanded, the newspapers printed comments on the tour, critical particularly of Cable, some of which could have originated ultimately with no one but Mark Twain. These slanderous charges were written and published, however, after the way had been prepared by the stand Cable had taken on the race question and the newspapers had heaped abuse on him for that reason” [193].

Sam also telegraphed Charles Langdon at the Gilsey House in New York, asking if he could come see him there the next evening [MTP].

Sam also wrote a short note to James B. Pond, asking for “two or three of those broadsheets of notices” of his readings. Sam intended to give a double performance the first week in June at Unity Hall in Hartford [MTP]. (See June 1 entry to the Art Society of Hartford.)

May 18 Monday – Sam probably went to New York City as referenced by his May 17 telegram to Webster [MTP]. (No other documentation found; no letters published for May 18 to May 19.)

Orion Clemens wrote. “I sent cousin Clemma Bradley directions for obtaining the agency. I also had a letter from her.” He suggested forwarding letters from such relatives [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “No don’t send me any family trees—don’t take interest in them”

Dean Sage wrote from NYC. “Your telegram happened to catch me during a few hours stay in N.Y. the first time in a month. I return to Albany much against my will tomorrow morning early & so shall be unable to see you” [MTP].

Theodore W. Crane wrote, two letters enclosed, about getting a donkey for the Clemens girls [MTP].

May 19 Tuesday – Jane Clemens wrote to Sam & Livy about the weather, not getting out much, good neighbors, her new set of teeth, and asked Jean to tell her how the stockings fit [MTP].

May 20 Wednesday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Charles Webster. Progress had been made on the Paige typesetter; a big test was in the offing. Sam was ready to sign a contract:

“Just take a day & shin around & get experts & capitalists together & send them up here without waiting any longer for Peyton. CAN’T wait any longer. When those people see the machine at work, now, they will see at a glance that there is no occasion to remove it to New York for the test” [MTP].

May 20 Wednesday ca. – Sam went to Albany, New York to discuss another invention by Paige (an electric telegraphic apparatus) with Dean Sage. Sam’s notebook notes to telegraph “Ch & Norv. Green or Watterson.” The source speculates that “Ch” may have been George W. Childs, owner of the Philadelphia Public Ledger [MTNJ 3: 144n57].

Evidently, Sam made a brief stay with Sage and visited the Shaker community at Watervliet, New York. Sage wrote on May 23:

“We enjoyed your short visit very much & don’t want you to forget your promise to the Shakers, the fulfillment of which will of course involve the long promised visit here of Mrs Clemens & yourself” [MTNJ 3: 148-9n70].

May 21 Thursday – Karl Gerhardt wrote to Sam & Livy: great hopes for Josie’s getting well; more about the Grant bust—he offered to sell “outright my share of royalty in Grant bust (Terra Cotta) for $10,000...and cancellation of indebtedness to you, reserving the right to withdraw this proposition after June 15, 1885, is that fair?” [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote: “I was hunting among the telegrams here yesterday expecting one from another party when I came across the enclosed. Please note it with care, and lay the fault where it belongs, viz! to the telephone” [MTP]. Note: enclosed lost telegrams to and from Clemens to Langdon from May 1884, with misspelled names. Sam wrote on the env., “Queer!”

May 22 Friday – Sam typed a letter from Hartford to Orion in Keokuk, Iowa, admonishing him not to send “any letter from the Gogginses or anybody else,” that he had no “interest in relatives born to me,” due to the fact that such interest required correspondence.

CORRESPONDENCE IS THE CURSE AND BANE OF MY LIFE, AND I CAN’T BEAR THE THOUGHT OF YOUR DIGGING UP RELATIVES GRATUITOUSLY TO ADD TO IT.

DON’T IMAGINE THAT I HAVE LOST MY TEMPER, FOR THAT WOULD BE ANOTHER ERROR. I AM MERELY PREPARING TO LOSE IT IN CASE YOU FRIGHTEN ME AGAIN WITH A LOT OF POSSIBLE CORRESPONDENTS. ALL WELL HERE AND SEND OUR LOVE. S.L.C. [MTP].

Sam also dictated for his Autobiography, and gave this date in connection with a bust made by Gerhardt of General Grant:

“Up to the present day, May 22, 1885, no later likeness of General Grant, of any kind, has been made from life, and if it shall chance to remain the last ever made of him from life, coming generations can properly be grateful that one so nearly perfect of him was made after the world learned his name” [1: 68].

May 23 Saturday – The Graphic (London) ran a notice:

Dean Sage wrote to Sam, Gov. Cornell to Sage May 21 enclosed. Subject: “what his idea is of any new telegraphic inventions” [MTP].

May 25 Monday – In his notebook, Sam drafted a letter in German in response to a letter from her sister asking if Rosina Hay, their ex-governess, was still alive. Sam answered of course she was still alive, happily married and now Mrs. Horace Terwilliger, Elmira New York. The letter may not have been sent. [MTNJ 3: 150 & n78].

In his Autobiography, this date is given for more dictation about Grant’s book, and the startling fact that without advertising, Sam wrote:

“...we have bona fide orders for 100,000 sets of the book...and these orders are from men who have bonded themselves to take and pay for them....We also have under consideration applications for 50,000 sets more...” [1: 54-5].

May 26 Tuesday – Joel Chandler Harris’ unsigned review of Huck Finn ran in the Atlanta Constitution (p4, cols 2-3) [Griska 585]. In answering those critics who had followed lockstep with the Concord Library’s indictment of the book as “coarse, crude and inartistic,” Harris pointed out the falseness of that view and the true value of the book:

It is the story of a half illiterate, high spirited boy whose adventures are related by himself. The art with which this conception is dealt with is perfect in all its details. The boy’s point of view is never for a moment lost sight of, and the moral of the whole is that this half illiterate boy can be made to present, with perfect consistency, not only the characters of the people whom he meets, but an accurate picture of their social life. From the artistic point of view, there is not a coarse nor vulgar suggestion from the beginning to the end of the book. Whatever is coarse and crude is in the life that is pictured, and the picture is perfect. It may be said that the humor is sometimes excessive. But it is genuine humor—and the moral of the book, though it is not scrawled across every page, teaches the necessity of manliness and self-sacrifice.

Note: Harris sent a clipping of this review to Sam along with a short note on June 1, 1885.

Sam was in New York and spent time chatting with General Grant.

To-day talked with General Grant about his & my first Missouri campaign in 1861 (in June or July.) He surprised an empty camp near Florida, Mo., on Salt river, which I had been occupying a day or two before. How near he came to playing the devil with his future publisher! [MTNJ 3: 153].

(It is curious & dreadful to sit up this way & talk cheerful nonsense to Gen. Grant & he under sentence of death with that cancer. He says he has made the book too large by 200 pages—not a bad fault—a short time ago we were afraid it would lack 400 of being enough. He has dictated 10,000 words at a single sitting, & he is a sick man! It kills me these days to do half of it! [MTNJ 3: 152].

May 27 Wednesday – From New York City, Sam wrote a letter of introduction for Charles Webster to take with him overseas, in the securing of foreign publishers for the Grant book. Although Grant owned the foreign rights to the memoirs, Sam wanted to establish contracts with foreign publishers to protect copyright. This letter was not to any specific person [MTP].

From Sam's notebook:

Called on Postmaster Pierson (New York City)—a very young man—is 42—but I have already made this note.)

Then called on Dr. Norvin Green, President of the Western Union Telegraph Co & had a long talk about James W. Paige's printing telegraph. One of the Virginian Wises was there—a very pleasant gentleman. We were on good terms once, because one of my tribe of Clemenses shot one of his tribe of Wises in a duel once—or was shot himself by a Wise, I don't remember which [MTNJ 3: 153].

Thomas & Anna Fitch wrote from San Francisco, having just read P&P and HF. He thought P&P was timeless. "You have money enough. Instead of 'pot boilers' why don't you write antoehr such a book as" P&P [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote that he'd "chased after" Sam to show him the Beecher bust but missed him [MTP].

May 28 Thursday – In Hartford, Sam also wrote to Karl Gerhardt, answering a letter of May 27. Paraphrase: "Answered him with 'No'—with thanks" [MTP]. From Sam's notebook:

"May 28—At Western Union building was introduced to Jay Gould & lunched with his son. Damned insignificant looking people" [MTNJ 3: 155-6].

May 29 Friday – E. Evans wrote a begging letter from London [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote: "Have Woodruff see Mr Green at Tiffany's. They wish to control the bronze bust—The 'Courant' article changed their eyes" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Tiffany wants bust"

Slote, Woodman & Co. wrote sending paper and gum samples "as we understand your description given us yesterday" [MTP].

May 30 Saturday – In Hartford, Sam and Livy wrote to Hattie Gerhardt. Hattie had been ill, so coordinating a visit was the object of this letter, the body by Livy with PS added by Sam. Livy wrote that they were leaving for Elmira on June 17; their last guests at Hartford would be arriving on June 10, making the only time available for Hattie to visit with her baby, June 6 to 9. If that didn't work, Livy suggested they could "catch a glimpse" of her as "we got through New York on the 17th." Sam cautioned her to beware—"That is too deadly & treacherous disease to take any chances with, at all" [MTP].

Note: Sam to Howells, June 5, revealed that the "last visitors" were "Miss Murfree & her sister." Mary N. Murfree wrote Southern mountain stories under the pen name Charles Egbert Craddock. After Howells had printed one of her stories, he discovered she was a "young crippled woman of great charm" [MTHL 2: 532n3].

Sam also wrote to Buvva Morgan Smith [Referenced by her letter of June 1, MTP].

June – Sometime during the month, Sam wrote from either Hartford or Elmira to Charles Webster, suggesting the text and layout for business envelopes, which included "Personal Memoires of General Grant" in red ink [MTP].

Sam's notebook carries an entry recalling Sydney Smith's (1771-1845) famous line, "Who reads an American book?" [Gribben 650]. He also noted to "Get Carlyle's Essays" [MTNJ 3: 160]. Sam also noted "Perfect: About ben Adhem & the Rubiyat," referring to Leigh Hunt's poem, "Abou Ben Adhem." Sam used a phrase from Hunt's poem in Ch. 9 of IA: "may his tribe increase!" [3: 159].

Ulysses S. Grant finished a letter he began Mar. 1885 [MTP].

June 1 Monday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to the Art Society of Hartford, accepting an invitation from the ladies there to give a reading in Unity Hall on the evening of Friday, June 5, and also the afternoon of June 6 [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Warren Stoddard. During this year Stoddard accepted the chair of the English department at Notre Dame College, but soon gave it up due to ill health. When Stoddard confessed discomfort about publishing A Troubled Heart, the story of his religious quest, Sam replied:

I have read it. Yes, I think you were right to print it; for there are all sorts of people, & they require all sorts of comforting; consequently there are those who require this sort—I mean the sort of comfort that is found in what is called religion. Peace of mind is a most valuable thing. The Bible has robbed the majority of the world of it during many centuries...I have found that as perfect a peace is to be found in absolute unbelief...May your belief & my unbelief never more be shaken in this life! [MTP].

Buvva Morgan Smith wrote to Sam.

54 East 11th St / June 1st '85 / Dear Mr. Clemens:

Communication of Saturday last received. I am much obliged for your courtesy. But, upon my word the idea of writing up our pleasant call never crossed my mind until the next day. I only wish now that it had, for the sake of the many funny things you didn't say. "Of all sad words of tongue or type-writer" &c. You know the quotation.

Dear Mr. Clemens, I do hope that if in the future I may ever enjoy the honor of a note from you, that your type-writer will have gone to pieces like the "One Hoss Shay." I prefer your chirography [sic], however bad you may moderately affirm it to be [MTP]. Notes: "our pleasant call" may refer to Sam's visitors, "Miss Murfree & her sister" recollected in June 5 to Howells. It may be that Buvva accompanied Miss Murfree to Hartford, or was part of the company there before the Clemens family left for Elmira. Since Murfree was a writer, perhaps Sam was concerned the visit would be publicized. MTP gives "daughter of Confed. General Morgan-Smith; first name uncertain", yet the envelope reads, in Sam's hand, "Daughter of Rebel General Morgan Smith". This is probably the daughter of Union general Morgan L. Smith, under Sherman's command. No record of a hyphenated Morgan-Smith could be found. Also, the MTP in-coming letter lists her as "Bulla," but the signature is spelled out and is clearly Buvva, perhaps a nickname or stage name; the letter suggests some connection with the stage:

West Hartford Ice & Pressed Brick Co., billed $24.62 for deliveries Jan. through May, total 9,850 lbs @ 25 cents lb.; paid June 6 [MTP].

Joel Chandler Harris wrote from Atlanta, enclosing a notice of HF contributed to the Editorial columns of the Atlanta Constitution, "less a review of the book than of its critics." Evidently this was in response to a favor asked by Sam, for Harris wrote it was the best he could do [MTP].

June 2 Tuesday – Orion Clemens wrote: thanks for the $150; his history game research; "Ma is well, and takes lots of exercise"; Mollie was not well [MTP].

Pitts H. Burt wrote from Pittsburg about pottery sent and the thanks of the pottery crew [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt sent a telegram from Mt Vernon, NY: "Eve's Lullaby has been awarded a diploma of honor by the Jury of fine arts at the New Orleans Exposition ward just received" [MTP].

June 3 Wednesday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to James B. Pond.

“Damn it, we could not get that donkey, after all, & so I hope you will get Homer to rush a gentle small burro to Elmira in a hurry, for Jean, or she will be dreadfully disappointed. We shall arrive there the 18th of June & go up to the farm a few days or a week later” [MTP]. Note: Jean would be five on July 26.

June 4 Thursday – Sam, wrote from Hartford to Karl Gerhardt, advising him to tag along with Webster to see General Grant “two or three days in succession” and to observe him in various poses so as to work on a large statue to be presented to the City of New York. Sam hoped for orders of it from other cities. He also admonished Gerhardt not to neglect “the Beecher bust,” and wanted a bronze copy of “Mother Langdon’s medallion” [MTP].

June 5 Friday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to Howells. He had read the June installment of The Rise of Silas Lapham in the Century, and “found it as great & fine & strong & beautiful as Mrs. Clemens had already proclaimed it to be.” Sam extended an invitation for the Howellses to visit them on June 10 [MTP]. Note: in a June 6 response, Howells explained his daughter had been sick and that Osgood’s business failure had caused them to be “a great deal distracted.” They would not be able to visit. With the conclusion of his agreement with Osgood, Howells was now in negotiation with other publishers [MTHL 2: 532 & n1].

In the evening, Sam gave a reading for the Art Society Benefit, Unity Hall, Hartford. His selections were “King Sollermun,” and “German Lesson” [Fatout, MT Speaking 656].

June 6 Saturday – Sam gave a matinee reading, the second for the Art Society Benefit, Unity Hall, Hartford. His selections: “Trying Situation,” “Short Story” [Fatout, MT Speaking 656].

In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam with reasons why they’d not yet been able to visit: Osgood’s failure (which put payments to Howells in a ping-pong match between other publishers), daughter Pilla’s illness, and packing for a week in the country [MTHL 2: 532].

Karl Gerhardt wrote twice, one to family: “In case I should wish to replicate the “Echo” and exhibit the original at Tiffany’s Gallery, may I have your permission to do so?” [MTP].

June 7 Sunday – The last entry in Sam’s “A Record of the Small Foolishnesses of Susie & ‘Bay’ Clemens (Infants),” was made this day.

Livy Clemens’ diary:

“I am reading with great interest George Elliott [Eliot (Mary Ann Evans)’s Life by her husband J.W. Cross.] It is most delightful....The only thing in the book that annoys me is her constant mentions of her ill health.”

Notes: Sam undoubtedly read or discussed this book with his wife, and in late Oct. 1885 entered in his notebook the idea of writing an article about such “whines & complaints” of authors [Gribben 217]. Eliot (1819-1880), not to be confused with George W. Elliott or George W. Elliot.

Livy began this diary as a log for visitors, the first of whom was entered on Oct. 26, 1877. On this day she wrote:

“This book was started for a visitors book but—as we always forget to ask visitors to write in it—As ‘I’ have gone from Nov 16th 1880 until now, unused—will try to make some use of it.”

Livy then wrote about Harriet Beecher Stowe, “so gentle and lovely,” bringing her flowers [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote: Sam's of June 4 to Josie arrived late; he wouldn't be able to talk to Webster until return from Peekskills; this day he got to observe Beecher in the pulpit; a colossal (8') stature of Gen. Grant to be made [MTP].

* Jane Clemens & Pamela Moffett wrote of family doings and the wish to see the children play P&P [MTP].

June 8 Monday – Clara Clemens' eleventh birthday. She received a lawn tennis set, Livy recording the gifts in her diary [Mark Twain News 39.2 (Summer 1995): 9].

Sam took the early morning train to New York and took a room at the Everett House. From Livy's diary:

The little maiden is eleven years old today and a precious little maiden she is. She had her school this morning only that it closed about half an hour earlier than usual. Then we had her table as has been our habit for several years on the Ombra. She had given to her a lawn tennis set, books—some little pieces of pottery, two little pins (brooches) one silver and one shell. Note paper, a pretty little Japanese pencil box—a work basket etc.

We had Susy, Julia and Harmony Twichell, Daisy Warner, Fanny Freese, Susy Corey and Miss Foote here for supper. A jolly time playing games, dancing, and so on. It is a great pleasure to see the children together they do have such a good time....When I came up to bed tonight they were both wide awake waiting to tell me what a good day they had had and how much they thanked me for it. They are blessed children and tremendous comforts [Salsbury 200-1; MTP].

Just as the children's company was breaking up Mr & Mrs Geo. Warner came in to help me decide which two pieces of pottery Mr Clemens and I should give to Miss Lizzie Foote for her wedding gift [MTP].

In New York, Sam wrote his mother, Jane Clemens. He noted that he wouldn't be home to celebrate his daughter's birthday. He was sending $50 a month extra to Jane "while the warm weather lasts" that she must spend. Sam boasted that "Our little sculptor, Gerhardt" was making a "mighty fine bust" of Henry Ward Beecher. He marked "private" that Osgood had owed him $1,800, but that he was "very sorry Osgood failed—mighty nice man." Sam told of a rat that "traveled across the floor" as he wrote:

"The idea of these people charging $7 a day for a room with a rat in it, & allowing the rat board & yet charging me extra for board. Love to you all. Sam" [MTP].

Ulysses S. Grant informed Sam that volume two of his memoirs were completed. The cancer had spread and Grant could barely speak [Perry 202-3].

Julius Blasius, Hartford music teacher billed Livy $21.20, for Jan. 26 to June 8 for music lessons [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote from Keokuk, Ia. to his brother:

I just now met John H. Craig, the leading lawyer here, and possessing the chief local reputation as a poet and popular orator.

He says he read Huckleberry Finn through, and then reread it and studied the points. In his view Huckleberry Finn is as distinctly a created character as Falstaff [Shakespeare char.] The dialogues between him and Jim are inimitable, and the dialect perfect. How you could get down to their ideas, especially Jim's of King Sollerman, and manage so many dialects he does not see[.] His boys lie on the floor and read it, and roll over, and laugh. It is full of fun.

Tom Sawyer was read and loaned till it had to be re-covered; and Huckleberry will soon start on the same journey.

He regards Jim as a very clear-cut character; standing out with Huckleberry[s] natural distinctness. He can see them. To him they are real characters.

The feud is a perfect picture.

I am going to take ma to the park this afternoon. The artesian well water has iron, magnesia and sulfur and other things, and seems to benefit her. It is in the park / Love to all, / Your Brother, Orion [MTP]. Note: Orion added a lengthy P.S. about one Charley Whitney and an unnamed man who scammed the people there selling soap for all sorts of cures and legal services without a license.

Charles H. Clark wrote thanking Sam for an unspecified article. He could only print about half of it and then return it [MTP].

E.B. Webb wrote from Washington, NJ, enclosing a copy of a paper read at the last meeting of their Washington Literary Circle, asking “an expression of your views as to its usefulness” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Burlesque critique”

William N. Woodruff telegraphed from Hartford: “Philadelphia accept I go there Saturday thirteenth letters by mail.” He also wrote a letter this day: “I have just received a letter from Phila’, and they accept our terms on the busts. I am to go there on Saturday of this week...to close contract.” When would Sam be home to view the contract? And if Sam saw Gerhardt he advised “coming to some definite understanding” for his pay [MTP].

June 9 Tuesday – Sam was in New York. He gave notice to his canvassers that volume two of Grant’s work would soon be published. Perry writes that Sam:

“...contracted for the use of twelve more printing presses and seven more bindaries, all of which combined would produce one set of memoirs every second. All of Twain’s funds were now tied up in printing, marketing, and distributing Grant’s memoirs” [203].

From Sam’s notebook:

Paper contract for 2 years let to Warren & Co, Boston, at 6 ¹/₃ cents per pound—they charged Osgood 8½ for the same paper for Life on the Mississippi at a time when the market was lower than it is now. We may possibly want 600 tons of it—we already require 300.

Called on Genl. Grant to-day [MTNJ 3: 160].

June 10 Wednesday – Sam was attending to “imperative business” in New York. This is the third day of a three day stay there [Sam to Moffett, June 12].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote they couldn’t get “the note of introduction to Mr Bates President of the Baltimore & Ohio Telegraph Company (which you desire) until tomorrow” [MTP].

June 11 Thursday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to the editor of the Christian Union. Sam’s letter, a reaction to a Union article, “What Ought He to have Done,” ran in that publication on June 16 on pages 4-5, and is a great argument for the proper application of a whipping to a wayward child, given in the right spirit “with hearts wholly free from temper.” Significantly, Sam ended the letter about proper parenting by referring to Livy:

In all my life I have never made a single reference to my wife in print before, as far as I can remember, except once in the dedication of a book; & so, after these fifteen years of silence, perhaps I may unseal my lips this one time without impropriety or indelicacy. I will institute one other novelty: I will send this manuscript to the press without her knowledge, & without asking her to edit it. This will save it from getting edited into the stove. Mark Twain [Note: see the full response in Neider's Mark Twain: Life As I Find it, p. 209-211]. See also July 16.

He also wrote to Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green, letter not extant; referred to in June 12 reply.

Livy and the girls decorated their schoolroom in anticipation of examination day [Salsbury 201].

East India House of Boston billed Livy $2.50 for "2 ½ yds Pink Arab Cotton"; paid June 18 [MTP].

Edward Abbott for The Literary World Magazine wrote to invite Sam to a welcome home reception for James Russell Lowell on June 27 in the magazine; they asked for Sam to join "with such words of greeting as you may feel moved to write" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "No"

Karl Gerhardt wrote "I hear the Century Club is gathering money for a statue to the poet Bryant do you know anything about it?" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Don't know nothing 'bout it"

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote, enclosing a note of introduction to Mr. Bates [MTP].

June 12 Friday – In Hartford, Sam wrote to his sister, Pamela Moffett, explaining against her admonitions why he hadn't written her.

Correspondence is the despair of my life. Suppose you had to have 15 teeth pulled every day; & every time you lost 3 days...

I have been to New York 3 days on imperative business—& at this table I must stick this entire day & answer the accumulation of letters—adding a deep, strong, heartfelt curse to each & every one of them except this one [MTP].

From Livy's diary:

Yesterday the children and I decorated the school room with wild flowers, grasses and ferns for today's examination. We made the room exceedingly pretty, the children enjoyed so much the process of doing it. This morning Mrs. Geo. Warner, Daisy, Miss Price and Miss Corey came to the examination. All the lessons went very nicely I thought. The children were both examined in Arithmetic. Next Susy was examined in Geography, then Clara in United States History.—then Susy in United States History, Susy's was a brief but very good synopsis of United S. H. from the earliest discoverers down to the Civil War—Clara's was giving more particulars of the Civil War.

Supper tonight on the Ombra. Billiards evening—Mr. Robinson, Mr. Bunce, Mr. Whitmore and Sam Dunham came for billards [Salsbury 201].

Hawley, Goodrich & Co., Hartford, billed Sam $4.25 to adv. "cow for sale" 2.25; Daily Courant 1 quarter 2.00; paid July 9 [MTP].

W. Minor wrote from Nashville, "humorous story" enclosed. "Touch it with the humor of your prolific pen" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "O, hell!"

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote, having rec'd his of June 11. About the Paige typesetter and the Delaware people and W.A. Paton [MTP].

June 13 Saturday – Livy recounted the day's activities in her diary:

This morning the last day of the childrens examination, Clara passed a most excellent examination in her Geography. Susy told the story of Cupid and Psyche in Latin, Miss Foote asking her questions. Susy gave what I think without partiality was a brilliant recitation in Ancient History. She talked for fully an hour with an occasional question from Miss Foote, telling us in a most concise and felicitous way about what she had been going over in this last Winter. Describing what History is—about the races of men, about Egypt, Assyria & Babylonia, Phenicia &c &c &c....

After dinner which we ate on the Ombra we took a drive in the long carriage, first taking Jean a little way, then bringing her home as it was her bed time. In the evening Mr & Mrs G. Warner & Miss Price came in. Lilly going home after a little, Miss Price and Mr Warner staying for whist. After we had played four games Mr & Mrs Charles Warner came he having just returned from a long trip away. A little later Dr. Smith and Miss Corey came....We had a jolly remainder of the evening, eating ice cream hearing and telling funny stories of which latter Mr Clemens was full [MTP].

A bill of $51.85 from Roberson & Wiley of Ft. Scott, Kansas to J.B. Pond for H.W. Pond [Homer Pond] for “1 donkey shipped to Elmira” – Sam reimbursed Homer for the animal for his children to ride [MTP].

William H. Avery wrote from Lamar, Mo. about John (Judge) Main, a 65 yr old man worth 100k to 250k. Avery thought Main could be “valuable” to Sam, though besides interesting reminiscences he doesn’t say how [MTP].

June 14 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to the Gerhardts in New York City.

We arrive at the Everett House Wednesday evening & leave for Elmira on Friday morning, & shall hope to see one or two of you, if we can see the whole trinity [MTP]. Note: The family stayed at the Hotel Normandie (see June 19 entry).

June 15 Monday – The New York Times ran a short note on page 3 under “Literary Notes” that volume one of Grant’s memoirs would not be out till December and the second volume about March, 1885.

C.L. Webster...will go to Europe to arrange simultaneous issues in several other languages, besides French, German, and Italian.

In Hartford, Sam inscribed a copy of Huck Finn to an unidentified person [MTP].

The family was preparing for the summer move to Elmira. From Livy’s diary for this day:

A busy day getting picking up done and articles put together for our Summer absence. Down town immediately after lunch taking Clara with me to hear a talk with Mr Blasius about as to how she is to practice on her violin this Summer. The “blessed Miss Jane” of course went too. She has been with Patrick nearly the entire afternoon, riding seeing him milk the cows and so on.

Just after we had finished our dinner on the Ombra Lilly and Mr Warner came, he to say good bye as he goes to New York tonight—and will not return until we are gone. While Lilly was still here Harmony and Joe came they staid and visited with us until Mr Dunham, Sally and Molly came after a little. We went into the Library having two tables of whist players. A most delightful evening—the Dunhams the Warners & Miss Price. Mr Charles Warner played with us this evening [MTP].

Livy also wrote of a discussion she had with Charles Dudley Warner about charity work for some Indians at Hampton, New York; she agreed to pay half of the cost for a cottage there, $250.

June 16 Tuesday – General Grant left New York City a little after 8 AM and took a five-hour train ride to Saratoga, New York. From there he boarded a smaller-gauge train for the final twelve miles to Mt.

McGregor, where a welcoming committee waited. It had been the doctor's recommendation that Grant spend time in the Adirondacks, where the air was clean and much cooler than New York in the summer. Grant had to be carried the last distance up a steep hill to a cottage where he would stay [Perry 206-8]. Sam would travel to Mt McGregor on June 30.

Sam and Livy went to "Armsmear," the Colt Mansion for a dinner with Mrs. Elizabeth H. Jarvis Colt. From Livy's diary:

This evening we dined at Mrs. Colts to meet some southern friends of hers. There were twelve of us at the table, a delightful time we had and the decorations were beautiful—Such superb masses of roses. About half past eight or nine other guests began to arrive and I should think there might have been two hundred there. A charming last evening in Hartford, seeing so many friends that I was glad to say good bye to. A band and fire works in the grounds as we sat about in the drawing room and on the porches. It has been an excessively hot day [Salsbury 202].

June 17 Wednesday – In Hartford Sam sent a short note to W. Minor.

"I believe if I were you I would continue to sort beans & sand sugar, & not stray out of my God-appointed beat & strain my capacities" [MTP]. Note: This implies the recipient is a grocer, but not much else.

Sam also wrote a short note to James B. Pond, thanking him for the burro sent to Elmira by Pond's brother Homer Pond [MTP]. Sam added,

"Redpath is in New York, & I shan't need him for 2 or 3 weeks. I have written him to go & see you"

Sam also wrote a short note to Charles Webster, enclosing a note from Charles Clark of the Courant and one from a man named Joseph Fewsmith, a friend of Clark's as well as Gerhardt's, who was looking to be an agent in Newark, New Jersey for the sale of Grant's book [MTP]. Note: It seems to have been Sam's habit to write many short notes on the day the family was to leave a place—possibly to avoid much of the hubbub involved with the move.

Sam inscribed in volume 1 of John Lord's (1810-1894) Beacon Lights of History (1884-1896): "2 vols subscribed for—and the same taken & paid for, June 17 '85./S. L. Clemens" [Gribben 423].

June 18 Thursday – Sam wrote from New York to James B. Pond thanking him for another jackass that Homer Pond had sent and asking if Pond would pay Homer, then he'd reimburse him once he was in Elmira. He was sending Homer copies of Huck Finn, Tom Sawyer and P&P, "in the hope that he has some little people around him who will read them" [MTP]. The family spent the day in New York City, staying at the Hotel Normandie. Livy did some shopping.

Jane Clemens wrote to family. Unfortunately the letter has bled through and it would take "an army of coolies to decipher it." (Thanks to the MT Forum for this burst of inspiration) [MTP].

Pamela Moffett wrote having rec'd his letter "last night". She understood why he didn't write much; she had an easy life though her health was not good. Sammy read aloud to her a lot. Her dyspeptic childhood; being an "invalid wife"—all to explain "why I am so stupid when I visit you, and manage to mortify you and Livy and myself." She claimed her illness had weakened her mind [MTP].

June 19 Friday – The Clemens family took a special car from New York to Elmira, a ten-hour trip. They stayed at Mrs. Langdon's home (See June 14 to Gerhardt). Livy wrote in her diary, "On June 19th we arrived in Elmira, we went directly to Mothers spending a little more than a week with her" [MTP].

Hotel Normandie, New York, billed Sam $42.05 for "room 1 day 12; restaurant 16.35, telegrams .20, baggage .75, carriages 1, 2 dollars each"; bill paid (no date); envelop mailed June 23.

Hattie J. Gerhardt wrote from Mt Vernon, NY to Sam & Livy, sorry she could not see them but hoped to get better. "Baby Olivia is slowly improving" and sang songs in both French and English ; she loved them [MTP].

June 20 Saturday – Waldstein Optician of New York, billed Livy $2.50 for "altering gold E.G." [MTP].

June 21 Sunday – Frederick D. Grant wrote from Mt. MacGregor. "Your very kind letter was received. As I agree with what you say there is no chance of an argument on the matter contained in it. My poor dear father is worse again today. I would like (to try) to write you a snice a letter as you have me; but on account of his feeling so badly I am unable to do so" [MTP].

Courtlandt Palmer wrote from Stoningham, Conn. to ask if he would "consider an appearance before the Nineteenth Century Club next winter on the subject of American Humor"[MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Humor lecture"

June 23 Tuesday – Karl Gerhardt wrote from Mt. MacGregor that he'd met Mr. & Mrs. Jesse Grant on the train from Saratoga. "They report the General sadly changed" [MTP].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote, enclosing W.A. Paton's letter about the Paige typesetter. Paton liked the mechanics but thought the financial scheme unworkable [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Paton retires"

June 24 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster. By this time the family may have removed to Quarry Farm. He asked Webster to follow up on a "little water heater" that Livy had purchased in New York "at a small Japanese store between Aitkin's & Arnold & Constable's." The heater was to have been expressed to Elmira but hadn't come. Livy didn't know the name or address of the store, Sam confided [MTP].

Sam also replied to the June 21 from Courtlandt Palmer; letter not extant; referred to in reply of June 27.

Samantha Bowie wrote from Shakers, N.H. to thank Sam for the books that Dean Sage "so unexpectedly presented" to her yesterday [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "One of the Shaker Sisters"

Charles H. Clark wrote to thank Sam for his "kind interest in Mr Fewsmith" [MTP]. Note: Joseph Fewsmith had been a classmate of Twichell's and sought a book agency in NJ (see June 17 to Webster); the Joseph and Millie Fewsmith befriended the Gerhardts in Paris.

Frederick D. Grant wrote from Mt McGregor, disclosing his polite answer to the enclosed Winegar Albion Tourgée to Gen. Badeau June 10 [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Col. Fred Grant—enclosing Judge Tourgie's foolish letter to General Badeau"

Karl Gerhardt wrote from Hotel Balmoral, Mt. McGregor, NY that he'd had the first sitting for the Grant child of Mr. & Mrs Jesse Grant this a.m. and of their desire for a statue of Gen. Grant seated as the Napoleon statue [MTP].

June 26 Friday – Sam wrote from Elmira to his mother, Jane Clemens, enclosing a letter from his old childhood friend, “Puss” Tabitha Quarles, now Greening. Puss wanted a loan to buy a hotel in Hunnewell, Kansas. Sam had spent many idyllic summers at his uncle Quarles’ farm with Puss.

Now I must not venture a cent, at present. I need every penny I can raise; & I may have to borrow a hundred thousand dollars within the next few months, to apply upon General Grant’s book.

Sam suggested his mother send Orion to Hunnewell to see if:

...Puss can make a living out of that hotel, and if a thousand dollars will answer Puss’s purpose, you furnish her the cash & I will make you perfectly safe by giving you my note at 6 per cent interest—or 7, if that is the interest you get out there. Of course, Puss will never be able to pay back a cent—I don’t expect it & I don’t want it, & probably wouldn’t take it if she offered it—but I want her helped, & I will see that you don’t lose a penny. Lovingly, Sam [MTP].

Sam also wrote a letter of encouragement to Karl Gerhardt: “You can’t help making a noble statue of the General, even if you only catch glimpses of him & get no regular sittings” [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to suggest that Jesse Grant’s child’s bust in bronze would make them a nice present. “How does it strike you?” [MTP].

Robert U. Johnson for Century Magazine wrote to advise Clemens he’d been “elected to membership” in the American Copyright League Committee along with Gilder and Poultney Bigelow [MTP].

June 27 Saturday – General Grant had continued working on revisions of volume two, and even adding “plums and spices” to volume one, a process which made Sam impatient [Perry 219]. On this day Grant believed he was within a few pages of finishing. He telegraphed Sam to come to Mt. McGregor [221]. Note: Sam’s notebook stated that Grant telegraphed him on June 28 [MTNJ 3: 164]. If this latter date is correct, Sam left the morning after, June 29.

Sam accepted an invitation from Courtlandt Palmer (who wrote June 21) to speak next winter on the topic of American Humor—a specific subject and date subject to Sam’s choice. Though Sam made several notes and at least three attempts to write a speech, he finally gave up and refused to speak (See Sept. 23 to Palmer)[MTNJ 3: 162n121]. Sam was too involved with the Grant book and with business.

In the morning, the Clemens family left Mrs. Langdon’s home for Quarry Farm. From Livy’s diary:

...two loads of us drove up here....At once...the children all went out to see a new donkey that had been purchased in Kansas and sent to the farm for them. Jean’s first exclamation was “dear old fellow” as she advanced toward the “creature” with a little embarrassed air. The children all had a ride on the donkey....and we began to get ourselves settled for our Summer’s stay here. [Note: Livy noted that the children named their donkey Patience Cadichon (pronounced Kaditchin)] [Salsbury 203].

Jennie F. Snell wrote from Seven Oaks, Penn. asking for help publishing her Gospel hymns and poems [MTP].

Clara Y. Cramer wrote from Elizabeth, NJ. She was the niece of Gen. Grant. She asked for an autograph plus “a line or two, composed by you” [MTP].

Courtlandt Palmer wrote from Stonington, Ct. “Your welcome answer to the 24th inst recd. I sincerely hope you may be able to arrange your engagements so as to speak before our club” (in 9 months) [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Courtland Palmer / — 9 months time”

June 28 Sunday – At Quarry Farm, Livy wrote in her diary:

“This morning Theodore, Sue, Susy and I went down to church, it was Anniversary Sunday, there was a very large number large number baptized, first infants, later in the service young people, and older people all excepting the infants professed their faith. It was an exceedingly interesting and touching service” [MTP].

Sam didn’t go to church. Instead, he wrote to Karl Gerhardt. After scolding him for ordering negatives without asking the cost, Sam said he was “prodigiously glad” that Gerhardt was “succeeding with the little child’s bust”—one of Jesse Grant’s children [MTP].

Sam also wrote to his sister, Pamela Moffett, who had written of a crop failure in her son Samuel Moffett’s farming effort. Sam felt his nephew had been more suited for a career in science or academia.

Oh, well, Sam’s experience is that of everybody else: he must waste half of his life in finding out what he was sent into the world to do, when he could just as well have found out before he was seventeen. I suppose Sam must continue the usual course: he must go on experimenting in one mistaken occupation after another; & at last, at forty, strike the right one & call himself an ass for not seeing that that was the right one in the beginning. Of course there are people who never do find out what they were intended for—Orion, for instance, who at sixty is still meddling with the law, when if God would grant him but one single fleeting lucid interval he could not help but perceive that he is no more fitted for that occupation than is a horse [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote about Sam’s “beautiful perfect letter” which made the rounds, including Gen. Grant. He wrote about a plan of Jesse Grant’s involving the Sultan of Turkey and Gov. Stanford of Calif. [MTP].

June 29 Monday – Sam left Quarry Farm at 6 AM. Traveling all day to Mt. McGregor, New York, in the Adirondacks, and arriving at 8.40 [MTNJ 3: 164; June 30 to Livy, MTP].

John C. Black wrote, misidentifying Sam as an applicant for a pension [MTP: Pall Mall Gazette 3 Aug 1885].

Orion Clemens wrote: checks rec’d; progress on history research for game; Ma upset by Puss’s “supposed distress”; Puss’s finances; volunteered to run errands or answer law questions [MTP].

June 30 Tuesday – Sam wrote to Livy.

Livy darling, what a journey it was!—sneaking along all day in accommodation trains, till half past 6; then I snatched a bite in Saratoga, then jumped into a buggy at 7.20 & reached here at 8.40—after dark. I shall have to remain here all day, but I can get away tomorrow I hope—& expect [MTP].

July – Frank M. Scott was hired as a cashier and bookkeeper by Webster & Co. He had previously worked for Haney & Co. of Newark, N.J. Scott was arrested for embezzlement on Mar. 11, 1887 [N.Y. Times, Mar. 18, 1887, p.5, “Confessions of a Thief”].

Sam wrote Mary Harriott Norris’ name in his notebook 24, but didn’t indicate that he’d read her novels [Gribben 509]. He also alluded to Arthur Penrhyn Stanley’s (1815-1881) Historical Memorials of Westminster Abbey, noting events there, in preparation for CY [657].

Sam noted to “inquire for Gen Wallace,” (Lewis Wallace, author of Ben Hur) about a Turkish railroad investment [Gribben 734]. He also noted “The Children’s Crusade to Palestine,” referring to Charles Mackay’s (1814-1889) Memoirs of Extraordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds (1841) [MTNJ 2: 168]. Sam repeated the entry in Aug. 1885.

July, before the 23rd – Sometime before Grant's death Sam sent a petition statement advocating an International Copyright Law to Richard R. Bowker, asking him to ask Charles Webster to lay the petition before Grant for his signature [MTP]. Sam composed the petition, perhaps by request, and sent it to Bowker to get the ball rolling. He may have referred to this petition in his undated Sunday-in-July letter to Webster: "If Gen. Grant signs that paper," etc. (See entry.) Note: Bowker, Vice President of the American Copyright League, was known as the "original Mugwump" because he had organized a "Young Scratcher" movement to oppose Alonzo Barton Cornell's run for the governorship of New York back in 1879. The Mugwumps figured in the outcome of the presidential campaign of 1884, Sam among them.

July 1 Wednesday – At Mt. McGregor, New York, Sam telegraphed and then wrote Livy that he would leave for Hartford at noon the next day. He added that Gerhardt took a good photograph taken of Grant and that the bust done of Jesse Grant's child was:

"...a very successful thing, & they are all pleased with it. [The General was] placid, serene, & self-possessed as ever...Manifestly, dying is nothing to a really great & brave man" [MTP].

In the evening he saw General Grant, who handed him the Century's edited version of Grant's piece on the Vicksburg battles. Richard Watson Gilder of the Century had requested several additions and transitions, so Sam and Fred Grant worked it over. Sam wanted those changes to be included in the memoirs, so he and Fred worked all night [Perry 222]. Note: Perry puts the date as June 28; but Sam did not arrive at Mt. McGregor until the night of June 30 and left on July 2. So the all-night work, if it did occur, had to have been the night of July 1.

Sam's delay in leaving was also partly due to waiting for Jesse Grant, who wanted Sam to underwrite a trip to Turkey to investigate a railroad franchise offered by the Sultan [MTNJ 3: 165]. (See notebook notes for full story.) Sam wrote he "had to leave before Jesse could get back, but I shall furnish the money for the experiment."

Livy's diary, in Elmira:

A visit today from Ella Corey and Grace Collin, the latter came up to have a day in the country and get acquainted with our children. Ella read to us from the July Atlantic the last installment of Charles Egbert Craddock's "Prophet of the Great Smoky". It was wonderfully fine....She also read to us the part of Mr Howells Silas Lapham in the July Century that we found also unusual, it seems as if it showed more the moral struggles of moralists than any thing Mr Howells has ever done before. The characters are all so well drawn. You are compelled to like "Silas" and "Persis" in spite of their commonness—particularly Silas [MTP].

Bills/receipts/statements from Hartford merchants for Sam:

Robert Garvie, plumber (on bill: "Successor to Wm. A. Garvie"), billed $12.78: 17.5 hrs tot labor; Apr. 18, May 7, June 26; drain tile, rubber packing, putting in water boxes; paid July 9; G.A. Hayden, "dlr in fresh, salt & smoked meats, etc." $21.42 for Apr., May, June fish, clams, lobster, paid; E.A. Buell billed $59.35 for "mch 23 repair eye glasses; ditto Mar. 30, Apr. 1 diamond collar button $50; Apr. 10 collar button; Apr. 16 Ice pitcher, June 2, 2 pins sleeve buttons" paid; J.G. Rathbun & Co. druggists & chemists $13.37 for long list of toiletries, soaps, cleaners; cholera mixture, etc: Feb. 11, Apr. 9, 29, May 7, 14, 20, 27 June 11, 20, 24, paid July 9 [MTP].

Western Union Telegraph Co. billed $2.82 for telegrams sent July 3 to N.Y., Hoboken, Elmira; July 11 to Elmira, July 25 to New York and Elmira [MTP]. Note: telegrams sent on July 3 no doubt arranged and notified Sam's trip back to Elmira.

July 2 Thursday – Sam said his goodbyes to General Grant, left Mt. McGregor and went to New York City [Powers, MT A Life 503].

July 3 Friday – Sam took the ten-hour train ride to Elmira [Sam to Jesse Grant, July 4].

Western Union Telegraph Co.'s July 1 bill shows telegrams sent this date to New York, Hoboken, Elmira [MTP]. Note: the Hoboken connection was with the Eirie, Lackawanna R.R.

Henry H. Clements wrote from Jersey City, N.J. to ask for “the methods to be pursued in the attainment of an International Copyright” [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote about the sitting statue of Grant and Mrs. Jesse Grant's subscription [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the letter, “If this thing is started at once we are ahead of any other sculptor don't you think?”

July 4 Saturday – Sam wrote a short note from Elmira to Jesse Grant.

I got back last night, & am detained here for the present, but shall reach New York Wednesday or Thursday evening to ask some questions & get some information—further information, for the satisfying of hard-headed business men—and then I shall hope to see you [MTP].

In the evening the Langdons and the Clemenses watched fireworks from the hilltop of Quarry Farm [Sam to Gerhardt, July 5]. Also, from Livy's diary:

On the 4th of July Charlie and Ida with the children came up to dinner and to have some fire works in the evening. Mother had been here since the day before. Charlie set off the fire works as soon as it was dark, quite a number from outside gathered to see them. They were exceedingly pretty. Two carriage loads drove down after the fire works—I felt a little anxious about Charlie's horses as they seemed quite restive as they started away, but they arrived at home safely [Salsbury 203].

Hotel Normandie, New York, billed Sam for his one-day stay the night of July 2: “1 day $4; restau 2.85; telegrams 1.00; cash $10, $5, carriage to depot 1.50” total bill $24.35 paid July 9 [MTP]. The New York Times reported Sam was staying at the Hotel Normandie [“Personal Intelligence,” p2]. Note: such local notices were usually one day after the fact.

Karl Gerhardt wrote that Jesse Grant had “just returned and likes the idea of the subscription for statue very much. He thinks $5000 will cover the expense of the whole thing and will give you ½ interest” [MTP].

Jesse R. Grant wrote he'd intended to write out “a general idea of my plan” but since they would meet in NY soon he would “defer the description until then. / I feel that you will enter into the Turkish Railway with the same enthusiasm that I have felt” He referenced a telegram from Clemens, not extant [MTP].

July 5 Sunday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Karl Gerhardt. He thought the idea of Karl and Mrs. Jesse Grant's was the right one concerning the statue. Whatever idea that was, Sam thought it an “inspiration.” Sam made a reference to giving messages to Woodruff (who favored the G.A.R. raising money for the statue—see July 18 to Gerhardt). He then said it was “quite likely” that he would be in New York twice this coming week and stay at the Hotel Normandie—Thursday evening and Saturday evening, going to Hartford in between [MTP]. Sam was on the move.

July 5 or 12 or 19 Sunday – The Boston Herald and other newspapers had run editorials casting aspersions on Sam's character in the publication of Grant's Memoirs. Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster on one of these Sundays, directing him to "Stir up the Am Pub Co—July statement is due." He also wrote what to do if "Grant signs that paper"—Sam wanted a copy to keep as a "standing advertisement in the Hartford papers till those thieves make reparation," and provided an additional statement accusing unnamed persons for attempting "to obtain money under false pretenses." Sam would then add the names of the directors of the American Publishing Co. and wanted Webster to provide those names. Sam asked if Webster shouldn't take the "General's note to all the N.Y. papers as a news item" [MTP].

July 6 Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to the editor of the Boston Herald, which had run an article Sam felt was damaging to his and Gen. Grant's character and "untrue in spirit," an article that accused Sam of leading Grant to break an understanding with the Century. "I want to ask for fair play—only fair play, nothing more," Sam began. There was no understanding with the Century. He'd offered Grant "double as much" as the Century, and Grant had chosen the best terms. Though several publishers had duplicated his offer, none were set up for subscription sales in the way Webster & Co. was. Sam made his famous line here:

For I am Webster & Co, myself, substantially.

I seem to be fast getting the reputation in the newspapers, of being a pushing, pitiless, underhanded sharper—but I don't quite deserve it. General Grant was considering the Century's offer for his book—that is all; there was no "understanding." He said I could speak freely, & without any impropriety. I estimated the sale of the book at a quarter of a million sets—2 volumes to the set. At the Century's offer, such a sale would pay him $175,000. At my offer his pay would amount to $350,000. He had the wisdom to decline the Century offer—& to this day I can't help thinking he was right. I would have done it myself. Upon my word I have done nothing underhanded in this whole business. Every step has been taken in the broad daylight, & nothing concealed. Neither have I done anything unfair or in any way dishonorable [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Karl Gerhardt, advising him on a price and contract for the large statue of Grant to be presented to the City of New York. Sam wanted to subscribe $500 for the completion of the statue, but not be included in the list of subscribers, to avoid claims that he was "craftily advertising himself" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Robert Underwood Johnson, editor at the Century, agreeing to be on some sort of committee:

"I'm glad to be on the committee—I mean as bric-a-brac—but I calculate to let you boys do the work while I hog the glory."

Sam then asked Johnson not to print any criticism of the correspondents who'd run articles about Sam being sneaky with the Grant book [MTP].

Clemens also wrote to Selmar Hess, Publisher of Our Living World, etc. (1885), a set of six volumes which he would give to Clara for a Christmas gift.

I am the Head Chief of a small tribe of small animal worshippers. Consequently I am a person of large experience in the chase after animal books wherewith to feed this special family appetite. I shall not have to hunt anymore, now, for this book furnishes the larder with an inexhaustible supply.

The plan of the work is judicious. The matter is persuasively instructive. The style compels the interest of the old and young. One cannot speak of the illustrations without running considerable risk of seeming intemperate in his praises. The paper and typography are answerable to the matter and the pictures. It is indeed a sumptuous work, in every way a desirable work, and puzzlingly cheap to one who is so well acquainted with bookmaking as I am.

Yes, I shall be very glad indeed to have the rest of the work. It is one of those books which this family cannot do without.

Mark Twain [Robert Slotta's Twainucopia (2006) p. 46]. Note: See Dec. 25 entry.

Orion Clemens wrote to reassure Sam that no one had repeated anything from his letters, not Grant's writing or anything; Ma's excursion and love of fireworks, she seems to have forgotten Puss [MTP].

July 7 Tuesday – Orion Clemens wrote about a letter from Puss, who was anxious to go; the doctor advised a steamboat; plans to go to Hannibal; Puss feared she could not repay a loan [MTP].

H.B. Vandiver wrote from Weaverville, NC about the prospectus of LM. He confessed to not being out of his teens, and wrote, "Wont I be a fiend when I'm grown?" and asked for LM and HF to be sent [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "From the average Southern gentleman"

July 8 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to John C. Black, Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D.C. Sam received a June 29, 1885 letter from Black that a pension application had been denied on June 23 [Brooklyn Eagle, July 17, p6]. Sam responded:

I have not applied for a pension. I have often wanted a pension often—ever so often, I might say; but in as much as the only military service I performed during the war was in the Confederate army, I have always felt a delicacy about asking you for it. ... very truly yours / S.L. Clemens, / Known to the police as / Mark Twain [MTP; also in the July 21 Halifax Morning Herald and other newspapers].

Samuel E. Moffett wrote from Kingsburg, Calif. to clear up the "annoyances" which he was sorry his mother had written about to Sam. He did not see farming as an end. He explained that a vineyard seemed a good way to make a living, increasing in value, worked by hired men, etc. He'd used his leisure time to study. He revealed plans to write books on history and political science [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to ask Sam to send his idea of a heading for the subscription statue [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Gen Grant & Gov Stanford are furnishing letters to the Sultan of Turkey"

July 9 Thursday – In Elmira Clemens wrote to Henry M. Stanley.

My Dear Stanley— / I am publishing General Grant's Personal Memoirs, & I venture to send to you my nephew & partner, Chas. L. Webster, to act on behalf of General Grant, & also myself, for a sort of information which you are better able to furnish than any other man I am acquainted with on the author's side of the book business, for you have made many foreign book-contracts, & your books have been translated into many languages. Won't you please give Webster some points upon royalties, share-publishing, &c; & also advise him as to what languages he had better have this book translated into; & whether he had better give all Europe to a London publisher, or go to Germany, Austria & France, & make special contracts there.

Eighty-five per cent of the European result goes to the General's pocket; we simply take the remaining 15 per cent to cover Webster's time & expenses. I know that you will be prompt & willing to do the General a service as any other American, & so I intrude this matter upon you without remorse or hesitation.

With always increasing admiration I am / Sincerely Yours ... [MTP].

Charles King, Hartford dealer in "Stoves, ranges, furnaces" billed Sam $8.85 for Jan. and Mar. work, grates, pieces, labor; paid; Linus T. Fenn, Hartford Mfg. & dealer in furniture, bedding was paid $34.90 for an undated bill for "use of 42 oak finished chairs; doing over mattresses; 1 library step ladder, carpeted top" [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote more about Ma, Puss, and family matters [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote to ask advise about denying “such scurrilous paragraphs as this, disgusting to the family of Grant’s.” He mentioned the Chicago Tribune and the Milwaukee papers, but no clippings in file [MTP]. Note: rumors were passed that Grant did not write the Memoirs.

July 11 Saturday – Sam wrote a short note from Elmira to Orion. Evidently Mollie had suggested a pension for Puss Quarles Greening, rather than a thousand dollar investment in a Kansas hotel. Sam offered to have Webster set one up and send money to her monthly. “I hate complications,” Sam wrote [MTP]. (See June 26 entry.)

Sam also wrote to the editor of the Albany Journal, stating,

“...neither Mrs. Grant nor any other member of Gen. Grant’s family has any pecuniary interest in it [the bust of Grant], whatever—not a single farthing’s worth” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Karl Gerhardt and enclosed a copy of his letter to the editor of the Albany Journal. Sam advised to ignore it when lies were told about him or the General, that denial would only bring more lies in order to generate publicity for the newspapers.

“But the case is different when a lady is slandered. The slanderer ought to be confronted with a denial, or he ought to be disemboweled. The latter is by all the odds best, but is indiscreet. Therefore, one is forced to fall back on the other way.”

Sam added he was “going down tonight to see Jesse Grant,” with a plan that would work—probably a reference to Jesse’s desire to go explore the railroad for the Sultan of Turkey [MTP].

Sam left for New York, where he stayed two days.

Western Union Telegraph Co.’s July 1 bill shows telegram sent this date to Elmira [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote enclosing Puss’ answers to his queries about payments on a house, the hotel she wanted to purchase, farming, etc. [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Eminently characteristic”

James Redpath wrote from NYC that he’d telegraphed this night “asking if you cd excuse me for a week or two weeks. / I will explain why when I see you” on business matters [MTP]. Note: telegram not extant.

William N. Woodruff wrote from Hartford with a plan to raise funds for Gerhardt’s statue of Grant [MTP].

July 12 Sunday – Pamela Moffett wrote from Kingsburg, Calif. about the letter she’d sent and her son’s concerns about it; the letter they’d both written him. Her son was upset thinking Sam would take his troubles with locusts as a plea for help [MTP].

July 12 to 13 Monday – Sam was in New York, where he saw “Buffalo Bill’s Wild West” show “two days in succession” [July 14 to Cody].

July 13 Monday – Charles Webster wrote of business matters & details [MTP].

July 14 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to William F. Cody (“Buffalo Bill”).

I have now seen your Wild West show two days in succession, enjoyed it thoroughly. It brought back to me the breezy, wild life of the Rocky mountains, and stirred me like a war song.

Sam felt the show was genuine and suggested he take it to England, where “it is said the exhibitions ...are not distinctly American” [MTP].

Town and City of Hartford and School Districts billed Sam $1,773.71 for taxes on $100,550 value of property; West Middle School District billed Sam school tax 1 ¾ mills on the dollar of value; amount listed at $100,650 [MTP: 1885 financial file].

Charles Webster wrote with information and a warning to Sam about the Turkish railroad scheme of Jesse R. Grant’s [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote, Puss Greening to Orion July 13 enclosed; a proposal to send Puss $200 [MTP].

July 15 Wednesday – Livy wrote in her diary that she and her children were “reading together” Grace Aguilar’s (1816-1847) The Days of Bruce; A Story from Scottish History (1834). Livy added the girls enjoyed it “very much,” and Clara Clemens later remembered it as one of their favorite books. Sam may have read this to his girls also. During this summer the Clemens girls named their Quarry Farm playhouse “Ellerslie” from the novel [Gribben 13].

Susan E. Dickinson wrote from W. Pittston, Pa.—a begging letter for an unnamed girl (Sade E. Bond) to finish her education [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the letter, “I’m to give $50 if she raises the other $160”

July 16 Thursday – Sam’s response, “On Training Children,” to the article, “What Ought He to Have Done” was reprinted in The Christian Union (see June 11 entry). Note: This is sometimes given as the first printing. Also ran in August issue of Babyhood, p. 275-6.

Robert U. Johnson for Century Magazine about Sam’s help in the copyright effort; Gen. Grant’s name on the list would help the effort [MTP].

July 16 to 17 or July 19 to 20 – Livy wrote in her diary on July 26:

Since I wrote in my journal on the 12th we have all had a pleasant trip to the soft-coal regions with Charley [Langdon] and his family. Charley, Ida, Julia, Jervis, Josie Clark, Mr. Clemens, Susy, Clara and I made up the party [MTP]. Note: These are the only two open dates for such a trip in this period.

July 17 Friday – The Brooklyn Eagle ran an article with Sam’s letter about the pension mixup. Other newspapers reprinted the story. Note: Camfield lists the Boston Daily Advertiser on this for July 18 [bibliog.].

July 18 Saturday – The final details of volume two of Grant’s Memoirs was handed to Charles Webster in Mt. McGregor, New York [July 24 to Livy].

Sam wrote a scolding note from Elmira to Orion telling him to settle the Puss Quarles Greening matter; that her “$200 proposition ought to have been accepted instantly” [MTP]. (See June 26, July 11 entries.)

Sam also wrote again to Karl Gerhardt gently chiding him about the statue of Grant:

And again, if you had asked Mrs. Grant’s judgment about the subscriptions for the statue, we should have saved some time & ink there, also.

Again, Woodruff proposes to have the Grand Army raise the statue money; & I hardly have time to tell him. I think it’s a good idea when you tell me of Mrs. Grant’s idea of having the statue ordered by Congress—another good idea, & the best, too, only Congress might not order you to make the statue...

Sam also warned Gerhardt about wearing out his welcome with the Grant family during this distressing time [MTP]. Sam's tone was as a father to a young son.

Jesse R. Grant wrote more about the Turkish RR scheme [MTP].

Susan Matilda Bradshaw Swales (1843-1916) (Mrs. Charles Everett Swales) wrote from Detroit, Mich., referring to her letter of "about fifteen years ago" for which she cherished Sam's reply.

"Since then nothing that you have written has so appealed to my feelings as this paper on the Government of Children, in the Christian Union." She praised his essay as "so sensible, so alert, vigorous and twainy," coining a word. "My thirteen year old daughter says she cannot imagine the lazy, drawling, humorous reader of the Blue Jay writing such an article; and her mother says that you have risen head and shoulders above yourself" [MTP]. Note: the correspondence she refers to is not extant. Sam's essay, "On Training Children," was Sam's retort to "What Ought He to Have Done?" in the June 11 issue of Christian Union. See June 11 entry.

July 19 Sunday – Orion Clemens wrote more about helping Puss (Tabitha Greening (Puss)) to Orion July 17 enclosed)

Karl Gerhardt wrote from Mt. McGregor: "your very nice letters are with me—Josie has again made the fatal mistake of letting my private correspondenced get out..." And, "Josie and baby have come here to the mountain and are all the rage" [MTP].

Henry C. Robinson wrote from Hartford to thank Sam for his "communication to the Christian Union" [MTP].

July 20 Monday – Joseph Blackburn Jones wrote from Chicago, having been to Hartford twice and missing him both times. He hadn't seen Sam since the "babies" speech in Chicago. He mentioned the time they roomed together at Tom Fitch's in Va. City. He just returned from Europe and told how popular Twain was there [MTP].

July 21 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Edward House, marking the letter "private." Sam covered again the events leading to his publication of Grant's Memoirs, the sales figures and royalties, comparing what the General would have received if he had signed the Century contract vs. Sam's. He was glad to hear that House and his daughter Koto were returning to the states and that he'd look them up should they be unable to come to Hartford [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Howells, whose ninth installment of Silas Lapham had run in the July Century Magazine.

You are really my only author; I am restricted to you, I wouldn't give a damn for the rest.

...I can't stand George Eliot and Hawthorne and those people; I see what they are at a hundred years before they get to it and they just tire me to death. And as for "The Bostonians," I would rather be damned to John Bunyan's heaven than read that [MTHL 2: 533-4].

Sam also wrote to his nephew, Samuel Moffett, who had a new idea to become a historian. Sam thought it a "good sound sensible idea." Sam wished he might help, but until the Grant book was published, he had no leeway on financial matters. Sam suggested a history book for his nephew to write that Webster & Co. could sell by subscription, "Picturesque Incidents in History & Tradition; a 500 or 600-page octavo" [MTP]. There is no evidence that Moffett ever worked on such a book [MTNJ 3: 167n135].

Lizzie C. Grant (Mrs. Jesse Grant) wrote that Gerhardt's "bust of her baby is the most perfect thing I ever saw, & now that he is succeeding so wonderfully with our statue I want that he should have every advantage" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Mrs. Jesse Grant / Answer"

Thomas Twain, (an obvious pseudonym) wrote with anger about Clemens' reply to "What Ought He Have Done" in The Christian Union; clipping enclosed. Sam suspected this lengthy insulting letter was sent by the writer called "Father Senior" in the original CU article. The writer was graphic in how he would tie and torture Livy: "I would bare her to the skin, and then proceed to ply a stout leather strap with knotted tails to her buttocks"—sentiment that likely made Sam's blood boil [MTP]. Note: the clipping told of a girl who had surfaced after three years earlier being petrified by a teacher's threat of a whipping. The argument for and against corporal punishment wages on even today.

A.H. Warner wrote that while on a train he learned from Clemens that his copy of "Jim Wolfe and the Cats" had been lost. He found a copy and enclosed it. See July 22 [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Jim Wolf & the Cats"

William N. Woodruff wrote, having just returned from Mt. McGregor. He offered three transcribed letters praising Gerhardt, enclosed [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Pleasant words for Gerhardt"

July 22 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to A.H. Warner (no connection found to the Hartford Warners). "Dear Sir: I thank you very much—& also your friend—for the enclosure." [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote that he'd sent no proof pages as he had none to send. He thought "it very dangerous to cart those proofs about," feeling better when they're in the safe. Details added about the Grant volumes [MTP].

July 23 Thursday – General Ulysses S. Grant died. Sam took a ten-hour train ride to New York City, arriving in the early evening [July 24 to Livy].

From Sam's notebook:

On board train, Binghamton, July 23, 1885,—10 a.m. The news is that Gen. Grant died about 2 hours ago—at 5 minutes past 8.

The last time I saw him was July 1st & 2^d, at Mt. McGregor. I then believed he would live several months. He was still adding little perfecting details to his book—a preface, among other things. He was entirely through, a few days later...He was a very great man—& superlatively good [MTNJ 3: 168].

Sam wrote from Quarry Farm to Howells, the first page of the letter is lost, so it is assumed the letter was written this day.

General Grant will probably die today, & lack of space will protect me from the Advertiser (Boston) for awhile. If they start in on me again, later, it will be fair proof of malice.

Webster & Goodwin are to have a talk when the latter gets back to New York [MTHL 2: 534-5].

Note: Perry claims Sam was at Quarry Farm when Grant died [227]. MTHL gives the place of the fragment letter as Hartford, while the more recent copy in MTP lists it as "unknown place." If the letter was indeed written on the day of Grant's death, and Perry is correct, then it was written at Quarry Farm.

Note: The Boston Advertiser had attacked Huckleberry Finn, and before was highly critical of Sam for the 1877 Whittier Birthday speech. Sam's famous "prefatory remark" ascribing the source of Huck and Tom Sawyer's nature to editors of the Advertiser and the Springfield Republican had been squelched by Livy. Also, Goodwin (above) refers to Nat Goodwin; Webster was to talk with him about playing Colonel Sellers as a Scientist.

James W. Paige wrote that both he and an expert could not figure out why the dynamo failed, but would apply Sam's thousand to the typesetter [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Failure of the dynamo machine / The $1000 to apply on the setter"

July, after the 23rd – Sam sent another note to Richard R. Bowker, saying it was a pity he hadn't attended to getting Grant to sign the petition himself, because he knew "General Grant felt the injustice wrought by the absence of international copyright" [MTP]. (See July, before the 23rd entry.)

July 24 Friday – Sam wrote from New York City to Livy:

Livy darling, I reached here so drowsy & dull with railroading that I forgot to telegraph you till 9 o'clock; so I was probably too late with it, considering the slowness of the Western Union service.

I woke refreshed about half past eight; & now am through with today's business & ready to take the 4.30 train for Hartford.

The second volume was finished last week, to the last detail; & was formally delivered to Charley Webster at Mt. McGregor last Saturday [July 18]. General Grant having not another interest in this world to live for, died. He would have died three months ago if his book had been completed. I am satisfied of that.

I love you darling, more than ever I can tell [MTP].

Sam went to Hartford for undisclosed business. How long he stayed there is not yet documented.

The New York Times ran "How the Memoirs Were Written," on page 6, which explained Sam's role in obtaining the publishing contract, the composition process, and issues of piracy.

July 25 Saturday – From Sam's notebook:

Home (Hartfd) July 25/85 (Saturday) noon. James W. Paige has just told me that I can dispose of his telegraphing machine & have half of the proceeds for my trouble. Each of us is to give a certain share of said result to Hammersley [MTNJ 3: 170].

Fred Grant traveled from Mt. McGregor to New York City to tour proposed sites for the burial of his father. The family had made no decisions about a burial place even yet [Perry 229]. Sam may have made suggestions to Fred, but could not have been on site during the tour.

Western Union Telegraph Co.'s July 1 bill shows telegrams sent this date to New York, Elmira [MTP].

J.J. Frater wrote from Chattanooga to ask for a set of his books for the YMCA [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote: "Mr Newman tells me he is constantly receiving telegrams from sculptors who wish to use his influence for casting the [death] mask." He'd rec'd compliments his mask was "fine" [MTP].

L. McKinley wrote from Hartford to ask for a loan of $35 [MTP].

July 26 Sunday – Jean Clemens' fifth birthday.

Sam returned to New York City, from whence he traveled back to Elmira, since he wrote from there on July 27.

From Susy's unfinished biography of her papa:

It is Jean's birthday to day. She is 5 yrs. old. Papa is away today and he telegraphed Jean that he wished her 65 happy returns.

Papa is very fond of animals particularly of cats, we had a dear little gray kitten once that he named "Lazy" (papa always wears gray to match his hair and eyes) and he would carry him around on his shoulder, it was a mighty pretty sight! The gray cat sound asleep against papa's gray coat and hair. The names that he has given our different cats are really remarkably funny, they are namely Stray Kit, Abner, Motley, Fraulein, Lazy, Buffalo Bill, Soapy Sall, Cleveland, Sour Mash, and Pestilence and Famine [MTA 2: 82].

There are eleven cats at the farm here now. Papa's favorite is a little tortoise-shell kitten he has named "Sour Mash," and a little spotted one "Fannie." It is very pretty to see what papa calls the cat procession; it was formed in this way. Old Minnie-cat headed, (the mother of all cats) next to her came aunt Susie, then Clara on the donkey, accompanied by a pile of cats, then papa and Jean hand in hand and a pile of cats brought up in the rear, mama and I made up the audience [Salsbury 208].

From Livy's diary:

...Her father was in New York, he telegraphed her wishing her sixty five returns. Where shall we all be at that time [?] 1950. Jean saw the little birds picking up seeds and worms at all sorts of irregular times and she said to Aunt Sue, "doesn't it hurt the birds to eat between meals [?]" [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt wrote about interest in a statue of Grant with pedestal for Mt. McGregor [MTP].

July 27 Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to the editor of the New York Sun, discussing the controversy and objections to Grant being buried in New York City. Sam argued that it was just the place:

But as long as American civilization lasts New York will last....Twenty centuries from now New York will still be New York, still a vast city...I observe that the common & strongest objection to New York is that she is not "national" ground. Let us give ourselves no uneasiness about that. Wherever Gen. Grant's body lies, that is national ground [MTP].

Sam also wrote a short note to Charles Webster, that Western Union had delayed the telegram Webster had sent by a day and a half.

This delay makes it necessary for you to come to Elmira as my business is important—S.L. Clemen" [MTP].

Webster telegraphed back that it was impossible for him to come to Elmira—"if important you must come here. If I come to Elmira I can't sail Saturday & we can't publish, which will damage us one hundred thousand dollars"

Karl Gerhardt wrote more about the statue of Grant, transcript of J.P. Newman to Gerhardt July 27 enclosed [MTP].

July 27? Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Charles Webster, telling him to look up Henry M. Stanley's address and send him the enclosure. Stanley knew "all the ropes of procedure, & the value of each & all the European States" [MTP].

July 28 Tuesday – Fred Grant decided that his father would be placed in a temporary tomb in Riverside Park next to the Hudson River, while the city architect drew plans for the permanent tomb and memorial. Formal plans for the funeral were completed this week [Perry 229].

Sam also wrote to Robert Underwood Johnson of the Century about his piece for the Civil War series. He had been floored by all the “railroading” he’d had to do and told Johnson not to wait for him, “just game in the other Generals,” and leave Sam “to meander along in a kind of gravel-train fashion,” which Sam claimed was his way [MTP].

Sam also telegraphed to Charles Webster that he’d write instead of coming to New York and would follow Webster’s letter [MTP].

Sam then wrote two letters to Webster, saying part of his business could be done by letter, the rest must wait. Sam’s new idea was to publish both of Grant’s volumes Dec. 1. “Don’t throw this suggestion overboard without giving it serious thought.” Sam then discussed the pros and cons of achieving that goal, which ultimately didn’t prove practical [MTP]. The second letter was full of calculations about the Paige typesetting machine:

“Three years from now I calculate to have about 1000 of those machines hired out in the country at $2,500,000” [MTP].

July 30 Thursday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Annie Webster, sending her $250 “to spend on trifles” she “would not otherwise feel justified in buying....” Annie and her husband Charles were about to sail for Europe (on Aug. 1). The letter was high praise for Charles and included praise from the late General Grant. [MTP].

The New York Sun ran Sam’s article, “The Future National Capital” [Camfield, bibliog.].

Clarence C. Buel for Century Magazine wrote in Johnson’s absence about the article Sam was to furnish for their Nov. number on his brief Confederate career; he suggested a few of Kemble’s pictures to go with the article [MTP].

Richard S. Tuthill wrote to invite Sam to another Reunion of the Grand Army on Sept 9 & 10 [MTP].

July 31 Friday – J.P. Haynes, “tea and grocery house” Hartford, billed $6.50 for “1 bbl of flour” [MTP].

Annie Moffett Webster wrote: “Your very kind letter enclosing $250.00 received. I thank you and Aunt Livy very much. I am very much pleased that you feel as you do about Charlie; and I hope he will always be as successful as he has been...” [MTP].

Alexander & Green wrote returning a MS. Also, “You will get the burro in due course” [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote twice, thanking for the present of $250 to Annie and compliments of his work. He would sail in the morning. The second letter was details of the Grant book [MTP]. Note. Sam wrote on the env., “London address / Brown, Shipley & Co.”; Webster was going to Europe to contract publishing of Grant’s Memoirs there.

August – Sam’s history game was patented, but no attempt was made to market it until Feb. 1891 [MTNJ 3: 19n37]. Sam wrote ideas in his notebook for “Picturesque Incidents in History & Tradition” and cited “Plague & Fire of London, Copy from Pepys” diary [Gribben 540]. Sam alluded again here to Sydney Smith (see June 1885 entry) [Gribben 650]. He also made a note for the “Library of Humor,” to “refer to & quote from Nasby.” Curiously, no entries for Petroleum Nasby made the book [415]. Sam repeated an entry referring to the Children’s Crusades (see July entry).

Also in Sam’s notebook, a reference to Defoe’s Robinson Crusoe, which he may have been re-reading:

“Robinson Crusoe leaves the bag of doubloons in the wreck; a fine literary point, but untrue. No man would have done that” [MTNJ 3: 173].

August 1 Saturday – Sam went to New York, probably to see Charles Webster sail for Europe. He went to arrange English and European editions of Grant’s Memoirs, and to feel out foreign investment interest in the Paige typesetter [MTNJ 3: 131n13]. Frederick J. Hall was temporarily head of Webster & Co., while Charles was in England [MTNJ 3: 191].

Park & Tilford, New York, billed $2 for “5 Oolong tea”; paid Aug. 15 [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote about a complication involving a photo of Gen. Grant “that was in Mrs Jesse Grant’s hands & which we intended for our De-Luxe Edition. An artist by the name of Howe appeared for the Century Co. and took the photo” [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote from Willoughby, Vt.

I think I never wanted to see you so much:—in fact, that I never wanted to see anybody so much, (unless ‘twas Harmony,) as I have you the past ten days—to talk over General Grant. / I’d give anything for a day or two with you just now sitting or strolling around, and letting our converse run freely, where it would, through the whole subject. Your heart is full of it, I know, and mine certainly is [MTP].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote, enclosing papers served on the Century Co. about Gerhardt having all rights to the photo that Mr. Howe had taken [MTP].

August 2 Sunday – Beginning this night or the next, Sam stayed seven nights at the Normandie Hotel, returning home Aug. 10 (see that entry).

E.V. Satterfield wrote from Mt. Vernon, Illinois, agreeing with Sam about the final resting place of Gen. Grant being in NYC. “P.S. Mt Vernon Ills. is away down in Egypt and the writer of this is a printer by trade and a lawyer by profession and practice, and never have been known as a very ‘shining light’ at either” [MTP].

Ella Lampton wrote a begging letter “on account of my child” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Neither read nor answered—a woman who has been all her life a coarse, vain, rude, exacting idiot. / SLC”

Samuel Moffett wrote “If I could carry out your idea, nothing would suit me better. At all events I shall make the attempt, and see what luck I have” He doubted his ability to write on a subject Sam had suggested (see July 21 to Moffett) [MTP].

August 3 Monday – Tisdale & Davis, “mfg and dealers in tobacco & cigars”, Hannibal, Mo., for 500 “Old Fish” cigars. Sam wrote on this bill: “These are first-rate S.L.C.” No paid date [MTP]. Only Sam would enjoy a cigar named “Old Fish.”

August 4 Tuesday – Sam wrote from New York City to Livy, describing the black draped buildings and how much more so the City was for Grant than it had been for Garfield.

“I think I have seen a thousand big portraits of the General, set in the centre of a desert of black, on store-fronts” [MTP].

August 5 Wednesday – From Sam’s Aug. 6 to Livy for this day:

I sat in the Lotos Club this afternoon & saw the procession pass on its way to City Hall with Gen. Grant’s body. It was very grand & impressive...The procession on the day of the funeral will be a memorable spectacle & I shall be glad to be here, since the General must be buried. I wish you were with me; & at the same time I don't wish it, since it would involve a couple of exhausting railway journeys [MTP].

Lucia Booth wrote from Cleveland, a begging letter [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Poor woman wants $100”

August 6 Thursday – After lying 24 hours in the Capitol at Albany, Grant's casket, was put on a train for the six-hour ride to New York City. The train slowed passing West Point for the cadets to salute. Once in the city, where tens of thousands waited, the casket was taken to City Hall, where it lay in state another 24 hours [Perry 229].

Sam telegraphed from New York to Livy that he'd just received her dispatch about his going to New York City. Sam also wrote two letters to Livy. The first began at midnight of Aug. 5-6, and told of the events of Aug. 5. Sam doubted he could go to Hartford, but if he did, he agreed to obey her “orders.”

Sam spent “an hour or two” at the Fifth Avenue Hotel with both Grant families. People dropped by to pay their condolences, many of whom Sam:

...had met before; among them General Sherman & his brother the Senator General Sheridan, General Van Vliet. Ex-President Hayes also came in. By & by I went to a private room with the Shermans & Gen. Van Vliet, & talked army life & anecdotes & Grant & the war; for an hour, over whisky & cigars, & had a very good time. Stumbled on Watterson & some other friends in the lobby...[MTP].

From Sam's notebook:

Talked an hour with Gen. Sherman. He spoke in terms of prodigious praise of Gen. Grant's military genius. “Never anything like it before.” I think those were his words. But he said this talk of Grant's never listening to indelicate stories was bosh. Said he had seen Grant listen & laugh by the hour at Governor (Jim) Nye's yarns. They were seldom delicate, as I well remember [MTNJ 3: 171]

Sam also wrote a short note to Thomas Corwin Donaldson (1843-1893), collector of Americana and a close friend to ex-President Hayes, enclosing ten dollars. Donaldson had a great interest in Walt Whitman, writing a biography of Whitman in 1896, and I suspect Sam's letter made reference to Whitman:

“I comply instantly, with thanks for letting me in. I have a great veneration for the old man, & would be glad to help pay his turnout's board, year after year, & buy another when it fails. The secret is safe with me—I shall not speak of it to anyone [MTP]. Note: Walt Whitman (1819-1892). Donaldson was taking up a collection to buy Whitman a new horse and phaeton (see Sept. 15 entry).

Cammie Bowling wrote to ask his advise and influence in changing from elocution to drama as a career [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Addie Gentry's daughter. / Told her how to proceed” Addie boarded with the Clemens family one winter in Hannibal.

August 7 Friday – Over 300,000 people passed by Grant's casket in New York City Hall [Perry 229]. The New York Times reported Sam staying at the Hotel Normandie [p.4 “Personal Intelligence”].

August 8 Saturday – Grant's funeral and procession included 60,000 members of the military assigned by President Cleveland. Sam was not in the funeral, but took a place in the window of Webster & Co. overlooking Union Square. He stood for five hours watching as the procession worked its way north through the City, passing along 14th Street toward Fifth Avenue [Perry 231]. Kaplan says 40,000 military. A lot, anyway. The procession included twenty-four black horses pulling the catafque, and in the throng a President and two ex-Presidents rode [Kaplan 279]. Sam did not attend services at the temporary tomb [MTNJ 3: 173]. He wrote that after five hours of watching the procession he “plowed thorough the sidewalk crowd up Fifth avenue to 40th st.” [174].

In Hartford’s 1st Regiment Armory, Twichell gave an address for Grant’s memorial services there [Twichell’s journal, Yale].

Edgar Wilson (Bill) Nye wrote a rather whimsical letter about rheumatism, sore eyes and piles. He sent his congrats at Sam’s success [MTP].

August 9 Sunday – Sam had arranged “business...with Hartford people” on Tuesday (Aug. 11), but moved it up to Sunday so he might return to Elmira the next day [Aug. 15 to Johnson]. The nature of his business with Hartford people is unknown. It is possible that the Hartford people referred to came to New York.

Several newspapers printed nasty things about Sam and the Grant book and the Century Magazine. The Brooklyn Eagle ran this item on page 10 the day after Grant’s funeral:

THE MAN HEAVILY enriched by Grant’s death is Mark Twain. He is the principal in the firm of Webster & Co, the publisher of Grant’s biography. He has already received orders from the army of canvassers for three hundred thousand and he expects to finally sell half a million here and in Europe. The retail price is $5.00, the share to agents and middlemen $2.00, the royalty to the Grant family 75 cents, the cost of manufacturing and delivery $1.50, leaving 75 cents clear to Twain and his partner. The shrewd humorist had to risk his entire fortune in the enterprise, but he pluckily refused to shirk the chances of loss by dividing the possible profits, and the net result to him and his partner will be a quarter to a third of a million dollars. Mark is a very solemn and docorous attendant at the funeral.

Note: Of course, this sort of thing enraged Sam. See his answer that ran in the New York Times on Aug. 20, 1885.

In Bethlehem, New Hampshire, Howells wrote to Sam thanking him for his “kind letter,” which stated Howells was his “only author.” W.D. also wrote about literature and General Grant:

Did you ever read De Foe’s Roxana? If not, then read it, not merely for some of the deepest insights into the lying, suffering, sinning, well-meaning human soul, but the best and most natural English that a book was ever written in. [Note: Sam may have named the heroine of Pudd’nhead Wilson after Defoe’s Roxanna.]

We had a funeral service for Grant, here, yesterday, and all the time while they were pumping song and praise over his great memory, I kept thinking of the day when we lunched on pork and beans with him in New York, and longing to make them feel and see how far above their hymns he was even in such an association. How he “sits and towers” as Dante says [MTHL 2: 536].

August 10 Monday – Sam left New York in the morning for the long train ride to Elmira. He telegraphed from Portland, Penn. to Theodore W. Crane: “Shall arrive at the usual / S L Clemens” [MTP]. Portland was en route to Elmira.

Hotel Normandie, New York, billed Sam $154.53 for “room 7 days @ 4$; restaurant 22.90; boot black .50; telegrams 1.60; messages .75, washing 2.22; cash Aug. 6, 7 and 9th $5, $5 and $50; Aug. 10 $5” = $65 [MTP].

Robert U. Johnson for Century Magazine wrote about receiving criticisms to the Grangerford and Shepherdson feud in HF. He enclosed a clipping from the Cincinnati Enquirer (not in file) of Aug. 10.

[MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Southern feud. / Answer”; Johnson also sent a note with a Kemble sketch for the MS. of “My Campaign against Grant”

John C. Fuller (b. ca. 1838) wrote from Cincinnati, Ohio enclosing a clipping (not extant) from the Aug. 10 issue of the Cincinnati Enquirer reporting a real family feud paralleling the Grangerford-Shepherdson conflict in HF. Fuller closes with: “If it lies within your power either as writer or publisher to bring this knowledge to the attention of the lunkheads who disbelieve in the reality of the southern vendetta, I pray you do so, and confer an everlasting favor upon / Yours Truly...” [MTP].

Robert Spaulding wrote regretting he could not attend Sunday afternoon [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “The Spaulding dog declines our cat’s invitation to a garden party.”

Webster & Co per Frederick J. Hall wrote enclosing a clipping from this morning’s NY World quoting Fred Grant as saying “that there might not be enough matter for two volumes.” This was a problem since they’d taken large orders for two volumes [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “shall I write Col. Grant?”

Worden & Co. Wrote sale of a stock and they’d send proceeds of $4,887.50 to Webster & Co. [MTP].

August 11 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Richard S. Tuthill, at this time District Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois (Chicago). Tuthill had sent an invitation for Sam to come and break bread with some of his old Midwest friends.

“I would give anything in the world if I could go; for that is true which you have said: the boys are growing old & passing away—did not we deliver to the rest & peace of the grave the greatest, noblest, the chiefest of them all, three days ago?”

Sam pled he was: “overwhelmed with engagements & business for months to come” [MTP].

Sam also replied to an unidentified person regarding Grant’s burial place in New York. Sam argued that the City would still be there:

“...20 centuries hence...[like] London, Constantinople, & one or two others, whose commercial situation will always insure their being rebuilt as fast as the earthquakes can shake them down” [MTP].

August 12 or 19 or 26 Wednesday – On one of these days, Sam wrote to Webster & Co. (Charles Webster was sailing to Europe). He hadn’t received a letter referred to in a telegraph from someone at the company. There were “bogus Grant books” being canvassed and Sam suggested “Mr. Hall employ detectives or trustworthy friends to write” a solicitation to canvass to be sent to “several fraudulent publishers” [MTP].

August 13 Thursday – W.H.H. Daggett, Hartford awning dealer, charged Sam $2 for “putting up awnings” [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote of checks rec’d and of work completed on the history game; Ma went to a picnic [MTP].

August 14 Friday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Daniel Whitford, his attorney, asking if he knew the “President of the Balt & Ohio Tel Co, or parties connected with the new Co.” Sam was touting Paige’s telegraph invention. “Any idiot can operate it. No experts required” [MTP].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote that the Century people had given up all claim to the picture of Gen. Grant [MTP].

August 15 Saturday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Robert Underwood Johnson, of the Century Magazine. He began a draft of this letter in his notebook [MTNJ 3: 172]. Webster & Co. intended to use what was purported to be the last photograph of Grant for the deluxe edition of the Memoirs, but Webster wrote Sam on Aug. 1 that another copy had been made secretly by the photographer and given to the Century Co. to use in their October issue. Whitford, Sam's attorney investigated the legalities of prohibiting Century, and concluded each party could prevent the other from using the photograph. [3:172n154]. To Johnson:

I did what I could in the photograph matter, but I found that there was more behind it than I had supposed; so I dropped it. Any judicious person would have done about the same, I judge. I did not call on you again, because a business which I was expecting to arrange with Hartford people Tuesday I arranged Sunday, & so came away Monday morning. Ever since I have been grinding away on my war article, & have only finished it this moment [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote of Sam's invitation to "come down to New York and share your facilities for viewing the Funeral procession." He couldn't accept [MTP].

Robert Armstrong wrote from Kirkfield, Ontario, a begging letter for "any amount" [MTP].

August 16 Sunday – Hjalmar Boyesen wrote to ask if Sam thought an illustrated history of Norway would pay as a subscription book [MTP].

August 17 Monday – Henrietta B. Babcock wrote from Cleveland to ask Sam's help with producing her play [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Answer — Don't [know] anything aboutg dramatic literature"

J.E. Buerk wrote from Boston to sell a German translation of TS to Sam made by his late brother [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "No—don't want it"

T.R. Burnam in Boston, sent one telegram, wrote one letter. "Will you be in Hartford Tuesday noon so that I can see you on important business connected with the Grant book answer giving address" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "No / answer". The letter revealed Burnam was a photog with pictures he made of Grant on June 5, 1868—would Clemens like to use them if not too late?

August 18 Tuesday – Sam was granted his third and last patent, number 324,535, for a "Game Apparatus," the board version of the history game [The Twainian, Nov-Dec 1957 p3; Aug. 27, 1965 letter from GSA on file at MTP]. See filing date and card info made by Patent Engraving Co., New York Oct. 9, 1884 entry.

Sam wrote from Elmira to Hjalmar Boyesen, and reviewed the possibilities of a book by Boyesen. He compared the clientele of Howells with Boyesen's possible clientele [MTP].

Sam wrote "A LETTER FROM THE PUBLISHERS," which ran in the N.Y. Times on Aug. 20.

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote, two letters enclosed by Webster, denying claims made by the NY World and also exposing fake volumes of the Grant book [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Letter to the public to deny a lying World statement"

August 19 Wednesday – Livy's mother, Olivia Lewis Langdon, celebrated her 75th birthday. The Clemens family all went to town for the celebration [Salsbury 209]. Susy and Clara Clemens performed the second part of The Merry Wives of Windsor as part of the birthday fun [Gribben 629]. From Livy's diary:

We were all in town today to celebrate Mother's 75th birthday. We all made our various gifts to her. Susy had worked an umbrella case, and she had also learned the second part of the Merry Wives of Windsor to play with Clara, as part of her contribution Clara had learned the part before with her teacher, but Susy learned hers alone.

It seemed almost useless to prepare anything for Mother, for she does so much for us, it seems wrong for her to give us gifts on her birthday...but it is her pleasure so I suppose we must all be content. She gave Sue and Charlie and me each of us a check of $100, so it made fifty dollars for each of the children and children-in-law [.] Theodore, Ida and Mr. Clemens were to share our one hundred dollar checks. Beside the checks she made us gifts. She gave me three pieces of Crown Derby Tea-pot, sugar bowl and cream pitcher.

Mother looked so young and bright and handsome that it was impossible to realize she is 75 [MTP].

August 20 Thursday – The New York Times printed on page 5 “GENERAL GRANT’S BOOK / A LETTER FROM THE PUBLISHERS,” Dated Aug. 18, with a note from the late General dated July 4. The letter addressed rumors of the Grant contract, that Mrs. Grant would “receive nearly three-fourths of the profits arising from the sale of the book, and upon some sales even more.” Grant’s note advised simply letting the public know about unscrupulous and cheap imitations of the Memoirs. Note: Sam was constantly irritated during this period by rumors that Grant was not the true author; or that there wasn’t enough material for two volumes. Also, other publishers, including American Publishing Co., brought out rival biographies.

Sam’s notebook contains an entry that Paige reminded him on Aug. 20 that the $3,000 sent was $1,000 too much [MTNJ 3: 180]. Note: there are many undated entries in the notebook during this period about the Paige typesetter. Sam was getting in deeper, buoyed by the success of Grant’s book.

James W. Paige wrote “Upon my return from Block Island I find your two favors. One with a check for three thousand dollars enclosed, which, please let me remind you is one thousand more than it should have been” [MTP].

Dean Sage wrote expecting Sam & Livy to stay with them Monday night at Albany [MTP].

Webster & Co per Frederick J. Hall wrote, enclosing copy of a circular which made unsubstantiated claims about royalties the Grant book was paying the family. Whitford advised putting this with a private detective to discover the source; they suspected the Am. Pub. Co. [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “A singularly villainous circular”

William Hamersley wrote after having “a long talk” with James Paige about the typesetter stock [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Paige gives H & me 1/10 each”

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote: “I waited for some response from you as late as I dared and then let the letter go. So far as we have been able to ascertain it is very well received indeed and is not looked upon as an advertisement” [MTP]. Note: the letter was an explanation about publishing the Grant Memoirs.

Mr. Whitford told us the [illegible word] of the situation.” He was anxious to see the “Missouri sketch” about Sam’s time in the Marion Rangers [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “They give up the Grant photograph”

Livy’s diary entry:

Mr Clemens and I started today to visit some acquaintances in the Catskills. We had a long days journey, being obliged to wait three hours in Binghampton. We arrived at Albany about seven in the evening. Mr Dean Sage met us at the station, and took us out to his summer place, Hillside, about three miles from Albany. We have had a delicious supper and a pleasant chat this evening. One can not see Mr & Mrs Sage with out being brightened up in all sorts of ways, they are such live people [MTP].

August 25 Tuesday – Sam, Livy, and the Sages traveled to Mt. Onteora, New York in the Catskills near Tannersville to visit Candace Wheeler (Mrs. Thomas M. Wheeler), mother of Dora Wheeler Keith, the artist. “Mrs Wheeler specialized in the design of tapestries and fabrics for Louis C. Tiffany & Company” [MTNJ 3: 179n5; 212n85]. Note: Candace was a founder of the New York Society of Decorative Arts, and advised the Clemenses on the remodeling of their Hartford Home in 1881 [MTNJ 3: 178n2]. While at Onteora, the Clemenses met Elizabeth Clift Bacon (Mrs. Geo. A. Custer) (1842–1933). Susy quoted her mother as saying Mrs. Custer “was a very attractive, sweet appearing woman” [Salsbury 209].

Tannersville 25th

We reached here about five in the afternoon – Mr & Mrs Sage came with us from Albany – it has been a pouring rain all day. We had trouble making connections & so have had a rather tiresome day of it – but with a good deal of fun interspersed. Mr Dinsham Wheeler, the son of the lady that we were to visit met us in Tannersville. We had a ride of about half an hour out to their cottage, there we found Mrs Wheeler and her daughter Miss Dora Wheeler, beside Mrs Custer the widow of Gen'l Custer. Miss Dora Wheeler is the artist & she and her mother are both connected with the Associated Artists.

Mr & Mrs Sage & Mr Clemens and I had rooms in the house of Mrs Wheelers brother Mr Thurber [MTP].

See insert drawing of Clemens by Dora Wheeler; autographed.

W.E. Welsh billed Sam $20.85 “for Miss Spaulding making dress,” and $499.68 for dresses made for Livy, including Foulard dress, silk suits—a great long list of items these include. All paid Sept. 5. [MTP].

Write those people / If necessary we will issue a 25c German edition”

August 27 Thursday –Sam wrote from Mt. Onteora, New York to Miss Nettie (last name not given).

“Dear Miss Nettie— /Anybody can tell the bare truth: let us study to adorn it./ Truly Yours / Mark Twain” [MTP].

August 28 Friday – In a Aug. 31 letter to Sarah A. Sage, Sam refers to his “finished business in New York in about three hours and a half,” so it would seem he and Livy traveled from Onteora back to New York City, and then on to Quarry Farm the next day. (See Aug. 31 entry). The New York Times reported Sam in the city at the Hotel Normandie [Aug. 29, p2 “Personal Intelligence”].

J.T. Marion wrote from Richburg, S.C. to thank Sam for the information about the Confederate burial ground [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “From a Confederate General”

"Quarry Farm Aug 29th / Here we are back again after our pleasant trip away. We enjoyed our stay in the Catskills exceedingly....We found the children all well and glad to get us back"[MTP].

August 30 Sunday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Orion, who was anxious about agents taking books from Webster & Co., and not paying for them. Sam explained that "Books are not delivered to General Agents till we get the money; if they fail to get it back again out of their canvassers, it is their misfortune, not ours." Sam added a note to the letter that since Orion had sent "Puss" Quarles Greening $150, that "if she needs the other $50" to let him know and he would send it [MTP].

Sam also wrote to an unidentified person, declining, as Grant's publisher, to write on the subject of Grant's "burial place."

"I could not write upon the subject which you propose without experiencing that uncomfortable sensation again...When a man deliberately offends other folk, he invites sorrow; when he deliberately offends himself, he insures it. I should strike the latter snag if I complied with your very kind & most complimentary request" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Candace Wheeler, their host at Onteora, New York in the Catskills. Wheeler and her wealthy brother established Onteora Park.

"It was the perfection of a visit; just enough rain, just enough sunshine; just enough people, & just the right kind; just enough exercise, just enough lazying around; just enough of everything desirable, & no lack of anything usual to the details of a lark away from home..." [MTP].

August 31 Monday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Sarah A. Sage (Mrs. Dean Sage).

I find my youth renewed by that lark in the mountains, whereas it is to be hoped that Dean Sage is just as old as he was before, for throwing away his opportunity. I believe he would have profited by staying and letting business run it's [sic] self for a while. Come to think of it, Joe ought to have been there, that was just the place for Joe [Twichell] [MTP].

Sam wrote that he'd finished up his New York business in three and a half hours, so he must have traveled from Onteora to New York City, then back to Elmira.

F.G. de Fontaine for Grant Memorial Assoc. Sent a printed circular letter with a plan to raise money for a Grant statue & memorial [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "A Grant Memorial scheme"

September 2 Wednesday – Susan E. Dickinson wrote: "I sent Miss Bond off to school 24 hours before your letter came. Now I send her your check; and she will send it back to me to draw from bank here..." [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Anna Dickinson's sister"; Sade E. Bond.

Mrs. C.L. Roddey wrote a small card from Hackettstown, N.J., advising that she'd been misidentified as the model for Sam's Laura Hawkins in GA. She wished to see him ASAP for a denial [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "A frightened villager of New Jersey"

September 4 Friday – William Hamersley wrote with his usual illegible scrawl about the Paige operators and stock [MTP].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote another couple of large pages in longhand, suggesting that nothing from the Grant book be published ahead of time [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Possibly 250,000 sets sold"

September 5 Saturday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Karl Gerhardt. Sam did not want a connection between the Webster Co. and Gerhardt's bust and statue of Grant. He did not want either of the two works by Gerhardt to be seen as his attempt to profit from Grant's death. Sam's attorneys at Alexander & Green thought it "better & safer that the book agencies & the bust agencies be kept as separate as possible." Sam informed Gerhardt that the Clemens family would leave Elmira on Sept. 15 and "stop over a day or two in New York" [MTP].

Frederick D. Grant wrote receipt of his letter and the 2 P.S.'s in different envelopes; as each PS "added" 25,000 volumes sold he'd "like to get them daily" [MTP].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote to convey Webster's letter in England about his efforts to secure contracts for the Grant book sales there and on the Continent [MTP].

Webster & Co. per Frederick J. Hall wrote "We sent you books asked for by mail yesterday." Other news about canvassing agents in Middlesex Co. N.J. [MTP].

September 6 Sunday – Sade E. Bond wrote, enclosed in Dickinson Sept. 16 [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote: Check for $150 rec'd. "Ma went up to Burlington (40 miles) with a steamboat excursion Thursday. Returned same day." Ma sent Puss and bought a dress to overdraw her account $4 [MTP].

September 8 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Elmira to Chatto & Windus, acknowledging receipt of their Aug. 21 letter with notes for £986.10.5.

"It is true that Huck Finn has not treated you kindly, but it must be because the English people do not understand that dialect; for here, where the people do understand it, the book has sold more than 60,000 copies, at my usual high prices—$2.75 to $4.50 a copy."

Sam noted that sales were also weak for Tauchnitz, his European publisher, due to his clientele being:

"...mainly traveling Englishmen & native Germans. That dialect would give these latter the belly-ache every time."

Sam expressed sadness that Chatto would not be the English publisher for Grant's Memoirs, writing, "It's like going out of the family." But he'd directed Webster to "get the best terms, & accept none other" [MTP].

Sam's notebook contains an entry on Chatto's notes sent to his banker, Bissell, for collection [3:185].

Sam also wrote a short note to Robert Underwood Johnson. Sam had finished the war article for the Century's "Battles and Leaders of the Civil War" series, but Livy "confessed, under cross-examination, that she does not like that article yet." Sam suggested it would:

...look like mighty poor weak stuff...in the smoke and thunder of the big guns all around it [MTP].

Henry Ward Beecher wrote (see Sept. 11 reply for content) [MTP].

September 9 Wednesday – Sam entered in his notebook Bissell's acknowledgement of Chatto's notes [MTNJ 3: 188].

Webster & Co. per Frederick J. Hall wrote: "Your favor enclosing statement from Chatto & Windus is received; we have placed it in the safe." More sales numbers on the Grant books, this time from Indiana and Illinois [MTP].

September 11 Friday – Sam wrote a rather long reply, from Elmira to Henry Ward Beecher, who wrote on Sept. 8 asking to see the Grant Memoirs to aid in a eulogy Beecher was to deliver on Oct. 22. He asked for Sam's views on Grant and especially his opinion on Grant's drinking. Sam hid behind a "promise" he'd made to Webster to "Honor no order for a sight or copy of the Memoirs while I [Charles] am absent, even though it be signed by Mr. Clemens himself." Sam had not foreseen that Beecher would ask, or he would have made an exception. On the drinking issue, Sam defended Grant, said that such sprees had ceased before Grant came east to be Lt. General, and referred Beecher to General William B. Franklin on the matter.

It was while Grant was still in the West that Mr. Lincoln said he wished he could find out what brand of whisky that fellow used, so he could furnish it to some of the other generals [MTP].

Fox & Co. Hartford grocers, billed Sam $28.48 for "Mdse as per pass book", no paid date shown [MTP].

Clarence C. Buel for Century Magazine wrote "I have outflanked Johnson (who is having a letter vacation) and sent the 'Private History' to the printer" [MTP].

September 14 Monday – Livy was depressed about leaving Quarry Farm, but was encouraged at Susy's unselfish instincts in making up a bag of amusements for Jean on the trip. Livy's diary entry:

We start for New York tomorrow the 15th leaving this beloved Quarry Farm. We expect to spend a few days in New York & then on to Hartford....The blessed child...was doing some thing for the pleasure of some one else [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote to give some of the statistics on type setting Sam requested [MTP].

Edgar Wilson (Bill) Nye wrote, clipping enclosed of a wood engraving, possibly of himself, because he goes on four pages noting every detail and saying he found this work of art in an "obscene paper" [MTP].

September 15 Tuesday – The Clemens family left Elmira and Quarry Farm and traveled to New York City [Sept. 5 to Gerhardt; MTNJ 3: 189].

“A handsome horse and a phaeton” was delivered to Walt Whitman in Philadelphia as a gift from his friends, to aid him in “his financial embarrassment.” The name of Samuel L. Clemens was among those who donated for the $500 gift [N.Y. Times, Sept. 16, 1885 p5]. (See Aug. 6 for Sam’s contribution.)

Frederick D. Grant wrote a small note with mourning border: “I think I can get the lines together you wish. I will be in N.Y. the last of this month...” [MTP].

Theodore W. Crane wrote:

Dear Mr Clemens / Your Telegram just reached us, while sitting on the stoop trying to comfort the cats who seem to miss you all, as much as we do[.] The place, from the tent to the lower gates seems funereal and desolate—we look for Jean and she is not—for Clara & Susie and they do not appear—The Donkeys hang their heads & mourn their occupation is gone & they soon go into winter quarters & the Cats will be distributed (except Sour Mash) to new owners—all this should not be—Sell the Castle & build on Quarry farm, and let Susie teach the Deestrect school and Clara & Jean become her pupils—

I will keep you posted about the Coal business, and we will keep our spirit alive until you return next June or we go to you in the winter—Sue joins me in very much love to all your good family. / Theodore [MTP].

William Tecumseh Sherman wrote from St. Louis to inquire about publishing his notes made in 1871-2 traveling in Europe [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “General Sherman / Answer today”

September 16 Wednesday – The Clemens family intended to spend “a day or two” in New York City before traveling on home to Hartford for the winter [Sept. 5 to Gerhardt].

Susan E. Dickinson wrote forwarding Sadie E. Bond’s note of thanks for Sam’s assistance [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “From the Normal School girl”

September 17 Thursday – Sam entered a list of fifteen things to do, an “order of procedure,” relating to the Paige typesetter and business organization for it [MTNJ 3: 187-8].

September 18 Friday – Livy wrote in her diary: “We arrived home safely on the 18th of Sept. and the children began their lessons on the 21st” [Salsbury 212; MTP].

September 19 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to General William Tecumseh Sherman. After sending a telegram in the morning, he sent a note of apology for not answering Sherman’s letter sooner. Sherman had asked if Sam would consider for publication his manuscript, a collection of Sherman’s travel notes from Europe. Of course he would read it, Sam answered.

“Webster is in Europe, now, making contracts for General Grant’s book with the publishers in those countries; but he will be back within a fortnight—in time to help me convince you as to what you ought to do, General [MTP]. Note: It was agreed in early Oct. that the MS was not publishable” [MTNJ 3: 193n41].

Frederick J. Hall for Webster & Co. wrote about a sales strategy from the “Banner Report” that began with quoting the highest price style of binding and working down to cloth, which it was thought led buyers to think they were getting a bargain [MTP].

Leila Watson (Mrs. Charles Watson) wrote from Ottawa asking him to write a recommendation on her as a reader, even though he’d never heard her read! [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “O, hell no!” and “Mrs. Watson the reader”

September 20 Sunday – Sam and Twichell walked to Talcott's Tower, as was their custom in the summer and fall, about a ten mile trip. Joe wrote in his journal,

“To the Tower on foot with M.T. Plenty of delightful talk. Much to tell on both sides” [Yale, copy at MTP].

September 22 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Orion. He wanted to know more about compositor rates in small towns and the country—what did the fastest man set in 7 ½ hours? He was sorry to hear that his mother was not well [MTP]. Note: Sam wanted this information because the “foreman of the N.Y. Sun” told him some very high em rates were now required, and Sam was calculating how much savings the Paige typesetter offered a newspaper.

Frederick D. Grant wrote another small card that he would be in NY by Sept 28 [MTP].

R.L. Blakeman wrote from Troy, NY with criticism of the French translation of The Jumping Frog [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “!! Singluar ass.”

William Tecumseh Sherman wrote from St. Louis, having rec'd Sam's telegram and letter of Sept. 19. “The MS/ss of which I wrote you is all ready and after submitting parts to the Rev'd Dr. Eliot, President of Washington University in this City—I will land the whole to you per Adams & Co” [MTP].

September 23 Wednesday – Twichell's journal reveals how the Twichells and the Clemenses spent this evening:

H[armony] & I dined at M.T.'s where we met Hon. John Russell Young late U.S. Minister to China. The talk was largely of Gen. Grant of whom he had intimate knowledge having made the Great Tour with him and written the book “Around the World with Gen. Grant” But though so well furnished with matter of interest (of various kinds) he was so unskillful a talker as to make the least of it [Yale, copy at MTP].

Sam wrote from Hartford to President Grover Cleveland. As a Mugwump, Sam wanted Cleveland to know that Mugwumps were not dissatisfied with him, that they would all vote for him again.

“...they believe in you, rest in you, stand by you, & are day by day increasingly proud of you & grateful that you are where you are. We are not disturbed by the Brooklyn Weigher & the New York Custom house matters...”

These were merely mistakes, Sam assured; they had faith that Cleveland would correct them [MTP].

Sam also accepted an invitation from Henry L. Dawes [MTP]. Note: back on Mar. 1 Sam made a reminder in his notebook to speak in Pittsfield, Mass. for the “Young Ladies Club” in October. The promise made was to “Miss Dawes,” Anna Laurens Dawes, daughter of Henry. The invitation most likely related to Sam's Oct. 7 reading in Pittsfield, perhaps to stay with the Dawes family.

Sam also wrote to Frank Finlay of Belfast, Ireland, who was about to visit the U.S.

My Dear Finlay: / I am home all those days except the 6th & 7th. Now then, you reach New York Oct 1; can't you get through with your business there by the 3^d & run up here & stay till the 6th? (I don't go away till the morning of the 6th.) Give me a line saying you'll come [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Courtlandt Palmer, New York lawyer, resident of Stonington, Conn. and head of the Nineteenth Century Club, who on June 21 asked Sam to speak at the club. He'd tried several times to come up with a humorous speech and failed, so he finally declined the invitation to speak:

“wrote the thing three times & put each attempt in the fire where four-fifths of my manuscript goes to, of late years. I gave it up then; for the same thing which had caused my defeat up to that time, would keep on causing it for an indefinite period: the Grant book”[MTP].

September 24 Thursday – Grover Cleveland replied to Sam’s Sept. 23:

My dear Sir: / Your letter is this moment received; and I am so pleased with it and so grateful for it, that I must put every thing else aside for a few minutes, and thank you for your kind, sensible, and hard-headed words.

I want to do some good in the cause of reform and better government. I think my back is stiff enough to withstand palpable pressure and cursing; but I have every day to guard my temper lest in an explosion aimed at certain provoking hunters after mice, I should injure a good cause. If your boy (if you have one) should demolish your most expensive vase in an effort to whack a mosquito he found upon it, you’d find it pretty hard to work coolly reason on the subject. I think like the mosquito but I want to save the vase if I can, and the boys certainly ought to be careful—that’s surely mild talk, under the circumstances.

Thanking you again and all the good men in Hartford that feel as you do, I am / Yours sincerely... [MTP].

September 25 Friday – Courtlandt Palmer wrote that Sam’s “kind but disappointing letter of the 23rd is received” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Appoints May 1 (no good) & will write me Mch 1. I can’t”

Webster & Co. per Frederick J. Hall wrote that Webster sailed on the Aurania on Oct. 3; Brockhous of Leipzig and Baron Tauchnitz would publish the German and English Continent Editions respectively [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Continental royalty on Grant book”

William Tecumseh Sherman wrote that he sent the MS referred to earlier [MTP].

September 26 Saturday – Charles J. Langdon wrote that he hadn’t “a cent to put into” the typesetting co. stock as he was “about ‘busted’” [MTP].

Webster & Co. per Frank M. Scott listed the drafts drawn by Gerhardt totaling $1,031 from July 30 to Sept. 21 [MTP].

September 27 Sunday – From Livy’s diary:

Today we have had a quiet day having only Miss Corey to dinner, and Jean also eating with us, but we had a merry time this evening. I invited Miss Foote, Ward Foote, Hattie Foote, Daisy [Margaret Warner], Fanny Freese, the Twichell children and two or three other children—the grown people came with them and we had a most merry time—dancing, we all danced the Virginia-Reel—Mr. Twichell, Mr. Clemens, both Mr. Warners, and then charades in which the gentlemen led and all together a very good wholesome time for the children [Salsbury 212].

September 28 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Frank Fuller.

“want you to run up here & stop over night & let me tell you how I think you can make a considerable stack of money”[MTP].

Sam’s notebook contains an entry about Fuller putting Paige’s telegraphic invention on the market. Sam wrote on Nov. 11 that he’d dropped the scheme. (See MTNJ 3: 181n12.)

Orion had gathered information for Sam about the work rate for newspaper compositors in the Keokuk area (see Sept. 22 entry); he reported that they averaged about 1,000 ems per hour for seven and a half hours, and that one boy consistently did 1,200 ems per hour [MTNJ 3: 202n64]. This was information Sam needed to calculate the savings to a purchaser of the Paige typesetter.

September 29 Tuesday – Fred Hall informed Sam that Colonel Fred Grant was planning on writing a biography of his father, taking up the story where the Memoirs left off. Sam left the negotiations to Charles Webster. Fred Grant asked for more than what was possible and the biography was never published [MTNJ 3: 201n58].

R.L. Blakeman wrote from Troy, NY, rather humble about correcting Sam's French; he cited a professor of French there and concluded though there were flaws in Sam's French, "that is a small matter compared to the many valuable things you have written" [MTP].

Frank Fuller wrote from NYC: "Your telegram is here & I have a minute in which to say that as a month or two will pass before action is needed, I will be greatly indebted to you if you will tell me all about it" [MTP].

Robert U. Johnson for Century Magazine wrote:

We thank you for sending us the letter from Mr Putnam of Virginia City concerning General Dent's prediction of Grant's prominence in the War. We have already written to Mr Putnam to say that it would give us great pleasure to print a brief note on the subject. / Did you overlook my inquiry in regard to the compensation for "The Campaign That Failed," or does your modesty forbid a reply? [MTP]. Note: Charles A.V. Putnam.

Charles J. Langdon wrote "I read your letter to John Arnot & we discussed the matter. John says that he has been so badly hurt in all his outside ventures that he cannot bring himself to go into any more of the kind." He complained that 'things very blue in our future. She is pretty nearly played out in health and money, & the situation is fast wearing me out' " [MTP]. Note: Sam was likely trying to entice the wealthy Arnot into investing in the typesetter.

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote twice, both about Col. Grant's "swagger" and appearance in the Webster office [MTP].

Webster & Co. per Frederick J. Hall wrote of business matters: binding totals, General Agent reports & the Co. share of profits on each type of binding; Col. Fred Grant had been in and talked about doing a biography of his father, but would do nothing until he talked to Clemens [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Proportion of profits"

October, early – Thomas and Candace Wheeler returned the visit to the Clemenses in Hartford, who for a "lark" went with the Sages in late August to Onteora near Tannersville, New York [MTNJ 3: 178n2]. Dora Wheeler, daughter, drew a flower in Sam's notebook during this stay. Sam drew another flower on the opposing page and labeled hers "Marsh-mallow By Dora Wheeler" [MTNJ 3: 221].

Harper's Monthly Magazine printed an article "A Model State Capital," by George Parsons Lathrop, which included some remarks by Sam on his Hartford house. Sam didn't have a name for his house, just a number, though there wasn't a number on it anywhere. Note: this was also printed as "Mark Twain's House" by the Hartford Courant, Sept. 23, 1885 p1.

October 1 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Fred Hall, who was acting for Charles Webster during his absence in England. Sam advised Hall to put off some question to General Badeau and Mrs. Grant till Webster came home in a few days [MTP].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote, warning against any disagreements with the Grant family; that it jeopardized a proposed 400,000 sale [MTP].

October 2 Friday – W.A. Paton for Scribner's Sons wrote to introduce from England, Joseph Tyler and Philip Bright who would visit Hartford on pleasure [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Telegraph & write Mrs. Wheeler Monday. Write W.R. Plunkett"

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote "Mr Alexander wishes me to say to you from him that your letter is worthy of Talleyrand and I have placed it in Hall's hands with a form of a shore-note from him to Col Grant for wording it which he will copy and send" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "What do I think of Badreau's article"

October 3 Saturday – Sam's notebook:

I think I've struck a good idea. It is to reduce a series of big maps to mere photographic fly-specks & sell them together with a microscope of ¼ to 1 inch focal distance. By this means I could conveniently examine my synchromatic map which is 36 ft long [MTNJ 3: 196]. (See also note 48.)

Sam wrote from Hartford, for Livy, to Candace Wheeler, thanking her for "the fragrant cushion" and saying Livy would "be most glad to welcome" her "& Miss Wheeler on the 9th, & so shall I also." Livy was "a trifle ailing" and so Sam was standing in [MTP].

Henry Ward Beecher wrote, "Yes—the MSS. came duly & safely—Grant's in heaven—I wish I had been there too, before agreeing to deliver his eulogy!" [MTP]. Note: Twain agreed to send some proofs of Grant's Memoirs.

October 4 Sunday – Belle C. Greene wrote from Nashua, N.H. to send him her first book (A New England Conscience). She needed "honest, literary criticism of the right sort." She enclosed clippings, not in file [MTP].

International Typographical per E.S. McIntosh wrote to Orion, who passed the stats on to Sam [MTP].

October 5 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Fred Hall in New York, directing him to take a $1,000 note to Gerhardt and have him endorse it payable to Webster & Co. Gerhardt had turned the note over to Sam for monies owed. The note was from Goodwin Brothers, Elmwood, Conn., the manufacturers of Gerhardt's bust of Grant [MTP; MTNJ 3: 202n61].

Sam also wrote most of a letter to William Tecumseh Sherman that he added a paragraph to on Oct. 6. Sam's learned advice was for him not to publish his book of travel notes [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote: checks rec'd $150. Grant book subscription sales in Keokuk [MTP].

October 6 Tuesday – Sam added the PS paragraph to his Oct. 5 letter to Sherman. If Sherman wished to disregard Sam's advice and go ahead and publish, he needed to remember:

Tom, Dick or Harry can reduce the size of his footprint if he wants to, but Hercules can't. He must leave a No. 19 track behind him all the time [MTP].

Sam left Hartford in the morning and traveled to Pittsfield, Mass., where he was to give a reading the next day for the Wednesday Morning Club for young ladies, an engagement he'd promised Anna Dawes while in Washington on Mar. 1 (See Mar. 1 entry; Sept. 23 to Finlay). Sam was a guest of William R. Plunkett, a "leading citizen and public official of Pittsfield" [MTNJ 3: 196n47].

E.S. Cunningham wrote from Melbourne, Australia. “Since my return from your country I have had the pleasure of widely spreading the news that you are likely to visit us.” HF had “boomed” there [MTP].

Webster & Co. wrote sales amounts and expense list on the Grant books, having rec’d his of the 5th [MTP].

October 7 Wednesday – Sam gave his reading, “Mental Telegraphy” for the Wednesday Morning Club for young ladies, in Pittsfield, Mass. [Fatout, MT Speaking 656].

October 8 Thursday – Sam sent a two-liner note from Hartford to Karl Gerhardt. He’d not sent his estimate of monthly expenses, “& time passes.” Had the “Governor been brought to name a date yet” Sam wanted to know [MTP]. Most likely the “date” had to do with Gerhardt’s statue of Grant.

An envelope only survives to Candace Wheeler, 115 East 23d Street, New York City [MTP].

Moncure Conway wrote a short note from Boston; he and the wife would “come by express Wednesday, unless you receive telegram modifying the time of the inevitable invasion” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Conway – which express”

October 10 Saturday – Webster & Co. per Frank M. Scott wrote of more drafts honored to Gerhardt, making a total paid to date $1,206. They’d rec’d Sam’s letter of Oct. 9 [MTP].

October 11 Sunday – Clemens wrote to E.S. Cunningham of the Melbourne Argus.

I wish I were able to promise myself a look on an Australian platform, just to enjoy seeing the prophecies made good, but indeed I don’t see any prospect of it. I find I was only beguiling myself with the false notion that I liked the platform in order to keep up my spirits while I was chained to it last winter. It was, indeed, beguilement—delusion pure & simple—and it all vanished, & passed utterly away within two months after my emancipation. I dread the platform now, as not even a novice is capable of dreading it, & I am well convinced that I shall never stand upon one again until I do so with a sheriff at my side with his warrant in his hand. I haven’t my any means given up the hope of seeing Australia some day, but when I come I am coming innocently, & not to rob. I have relinquished the latter project entirely. Henceforth, even in my own country, I shall lead in many respect a reformed life.— / Sincerely yours...[MTP].

October 12 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to William Tecumseh Sherman, who had agreed with Sam not to publish his travel notes. Sam thought he had “decided wisely,” and would return the General’s manuscript. He would see if it violated copyright to send Sherman an early copy of Grant’s Memoirs. Sam also suggested several memoirs the General might benefit from reading [MTP].

Charles and Annie Webster returned from England on the steamer Aurania. Charles spoke to a New York Times reporter who ran an article the next day Oct. 13, on page 5: GEN. GRANT’S MEMOIRS. / A LARGE FOREIGN SALE ASSURED FOR THE WORK.

His contract in England was made with Sampson Low & Co., of London, and in Germany with Brockhouse & Co. Of Leipsic, the great centre of the book publishing trade. Lack of time did not allow him to conclude his contracts for Italy and France, but instructions regarding these contracts were intrusted to Sampson Low & Co.

Webster was asked what the probable royalties would amount to for the Grant family, and answered, though it was difficult to exactly estimate, enough had already been sold to bring in $300,000 to $400,000 and that the total might even reach $750,000 [MTP].

Mrs. O. Barnes wrote a begging letter from Smithfield, R.I., asking for $150 for a feeble man [MTP].

* Moncure Conway wrote they'd leave Boston Wednesday at 11, arriving Hartford 2.30 pm [MTP].

Henry C. Robinson wrote from Hartford about "a matter of Col. Clapp's claim for damages" [MTP].

October 13 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, repeating his intention to retail commissions as general agents for the New York City district. Sam instructed this to be fifteen per cent and not to "make any other calculation." Sam and Livy were "glad you & Annie are back again & well." Sam was "very uncertain" when he would be down next [MTP].

Jesse R. Grant wrote, just returned from London. He had too much to tell him in a letter but if Sam wouldn't be in NY soon he would write again. "I made very satisfactory arrangements in London as to our business—and returned simply because of the elections in England and the revolutions in Turkey" [MTP].

October 14 Wednesday – Moncure Conway and daughter Mildred visited the Clemenses. Moncure's oldest son was practicing law in New York City [MTNJ 3: 201n57].

Charles Webster wrote: "Who has proposed turning the 15% that we make on New York City territory into the general pool? I never thought of such a thing, it clearly belongs solely to the firm, just as much as any other General Agents profit belongs to him" He asked Sam "to come down for a day" as there were many things to decide [MTP].

Richard Watson Gilder for Century Magazine wrote: "We very much want a brief article on Frank R. Stockton. Mr. Buel suggests that you are the man to write it" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Gilder 1885 wants article on Stockton"

Will J. Smyth wrote from Ft. Grove, NY. "Your letter rec'd and many thanks." He couldn't come but had in mind a man who might "take charge of your house soon" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Gardener / Answered"

October 15 Thursday – Jacob L. Greene for Grover Cleveland wrote thanking Sam for a letter. "I am glad you have voiced to him [President] the satisfaction of the Hartford Mugwumps with him" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "From the President of the U.S."

October 16 Friday – In Boston, Howells wrote to Sam of his new agreement with Harper & Bros. Conditions of his employment forbade his name from appearing save over their imprint, so it affected his part in the Library of Humor book. Howells suggested he sell out at a "sacrifice" to Sam, settling for $2,500, or half of the original agreement. He suggested Sam call the work "Mark Twain's Library of American Humor" [MTHL 2: 537]. (See Oct. 18 entry.)

Sam may have gone to New York overnight. (See Oct. 17 entry.)

William Tecumseh Sherman wrote to acknowledge Sam's letter of Oct. 12 and the return of his MS. "I assure you that I feel a sense of relief to again possess that pile of papers" [MTP].

October 17 Saturday – The New York Times reported under "Personal Intelligence" p.2, that Sam was in New York staying at the Hotel Normandie. If true, Sam may have accompanied the Conways to the city after their Hartford visit, since Moncure's son was practicing law in New York. Sam was back in Hartford on Oct. 18.

Mary L. Leverette for Acorn Magazine, Chicago, sent a copy of the magazine and asked him to solicit editors of children's magazines "to give me a place as a contributor. I'm a young writer..." [MTP].

October 18 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford, answering Howells' letter of Oct. 16. Howells had rejected Ticknor's offer to become his publisher, and through Charles Fairchild's efforts came to an agreement with Harper's which would pay him a $10,000 per year salary for the serial rights to a yearly 300-page novel, plus other income for articles and a column. Howells had offered to "sell out to you at a sacrifice, and let you call it 'Mark Twain's Library of American Humor'—a capital selling title—suppressing my name altogether." Howells wanted $2,000 for the sacrifice, for a total of $2,500, or half of the original agreement. Sam answered:

"I reckon it would ruin the book—that is make it necessary to pigeon-hole it & leave it unpublished. I couldn't publish it without a very responsible name to support my own on the title page, because it has so much of my own matter in it" [MTHL 2: 538].

Sam decided to pigeon-hole the manuscript; it wasn't printed for two years. Sam begged off on paying the $2,000 right away, since it would be 30 days before the Grant book "relief-money" began "to flow in."

"Mind, I am not in financial difficulties, & am not going to be. I am merely a starving beggar standing outside the door of plenty—obstructed by a Yale time-lock which is set for Jan. 1st" [MTHL 2: 539].

October 19 Monday – A.P. Fulkerson wrote from KC asking if Sam had referred to him in an 1870 sketch, "Yaller Dog" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Yaller dog"; In HF Sam wrote "It don't make no difference whether you do right or wrong, a person's conscience ain't got no sense, and just goes for him anyway. If I had a yaller dog that didn't know no more than a person's conscience does I would pison him. It takes up more room than all the rest of a person's insides, and yet ain't no good, nohow."

October 20 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, advising him to get a new set of plates for the printers. If Sam remembered rightly, 150,000 impressions was the life of the plates. After that, the impressions would not print clearly. [MTP].

Karl Gerhardt received the "Diploma of Honor" from New Orleans for his exhibit there, which included his bust of Mark Twain, now on exhibit at Vorce's Gallery in Hartford, along with the marble statuette, "The Echo" [Hartford Courant Oct. 20, 1885 p.2 "Honors to Karl Gerhardt"]. See insert of "The Echo" rear view.

Jane Clemens wrote to Sam & family about the weather, "like a beautiful spring day." She added an anecdote about George Hagerman striking a car man [MTP].

October 21 Wednesday – Sam borrowed $100,000 from Samuel G. Dunham, director and treasurer of the Dunham Hosiery Co. of Hartford, a friend of the Clemens family. (Note: this is not Samuel C. Dunham, Hartford atty.) The loan was to cover publishing costs for Grant's Memoirs, with $15,000 payable Jan. 29, 1886 and $85,000 payable Feb. 27, 1886 at six per cent interest. Sam sent the notes "by the office boy, per 4.30 train" [MTNJ 3: 204].

Lizzie C. Grant (Mrs. Jesse Grant) wrote “The little lady arrived safely / I did not know the bust had been photographed and was delighted with the picture. I am glad you are pleased with what Mr. Grant accomplished in London. / His friends are enthusiastic about the project...” [MTP].

John D. Collins wrote from Dalton, Ga. with hopes for his book. Evidently Sam had written to him before since he thanked “for your prompt and candid reply to my letter” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “No answer needed / Man with a book”; Sam and Collins prior correspondence not extant.

October 22 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster with the financial matters of the loan from Dunham, whom he did not name. Sam repeated that since he’d made himself personally liable for the notes, Webster needed to fully insure the books, both finished and unfinished.

“I mean, get all the insurance you can on them” [MTP].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote a “Personal” note confiding that a telegram to Webster had caused him “a good deal of annoyance.” Whitford felt Sam misunderstood some things [MTP].

Brooklyn Magazine (Bok, editor) wrote to ask Sam to take place in a symposium [MTP].

October 23 Friday – Joe Twichell wrote a short note, clipping enclosed “Aerial Navigation”: “Don’t you remember how one of us said, when we last walked to the Tower, speaking of aerial navigation, that the problem was bound to be solved sometime, because it was never given up, but there were always men at work on it. / The sight of the enclosed recalled the remark” [MTP]. Note: Steering a balloon had always been a challenge.

October 24 Saturday – Charles Webster wrote from New York to Sam in Hartford:

If you could see the piles of stock at the printers and binders and see the hundreds of men boys and girls at work upon it...what you would see would astonish you...I have telegraphed for paper in large quantities and am using the set of plates that I had made for Canada while another set is being made for them...I shall drain this city of printers & binders. All the other publishers are howling about me they are obliged to send their Christmas books out of town to get them bound [MTNJ 3:204-5n70].

Orion Clemens wrote, Puss Greening to Orion Oct. 20 enclosed:

I enclose a bill of lading and letter from Puss. Ma instructs me to so write to Puss as not to encourage her to think she will get any more money. / The other evening Ma wanted to know where you and Livy were to sleep. She thought you were here. She walked 3 squares to a Congregational sociable last night, and walked home. She had much attention, and was bright. / I have commenced Henry III [MTP].

Daniel Whitford for Alexander & Green wrote a complimentary letter: “I have your letter and I like and admire you for it. I have always admired you as an author but I say to you now what I have often said to others that what I most like in you is that frank manly way of always doing full justice when the facts are properly presented to you” [MTP].

* Charles Webster wrote: “Yours is recd. All the stock bound and unbound has been kept fully insured from the first and will be. Don’t you worry about business. I have never yet made a business mistake that I am aware of and it is not probable that I shall commence on this book” He offered a total of 296,497 orders for the Grant set, “Entirely unprecedented in the history of book making”[MTP].

October 26 Monday – Sam had returned to New York, this time with Livy [see Oct. 28 to Annie Webster]. He made a notebook entry that “Up to date, 320,000 sets of General Grant’s book have been subscribed for—that is to say, 640,000 single volumes” [MTNJ 3: 204]. He also noted seeing a play at the Metropolitan in New York:

“Saw [Tommaso] Salvini in Othello. His was a grand performance, but his support was wretchedly poor. They might as well all have talked Italian—or Sanscrit, for that matter—nobody would understand what they said” [205].

John O’Neil began work for the Clemens family as their gardener, paid $50 per month. He would serve them many years [MTNJ 3: 206n75]. John’s wife Ellen O’Neill, was also employed [MTA 2: 32].

Sam also wrote a letter of introduction for his attorney, Daniel Whitford, to Samuel G. Dunham, who had loaned Sam $100,000. Whitford would “take this loan business off my ignorant hands, & furnish some information which I was not able to furnish myself.” Sam added a PS that he would be at home at “7.21 to-morrow evening” [MTP].

Jane Clemens wrote from Keokuk to Sam & family that she wished to see “you all.” She’d lost a letter to them she wrote this day but couldn’t find it. “I like this city. Because it is so healthy. The most of the old people I knew are gone. But there is good people here yet. I don’t care so much for company as I did” [MTP].

October 27 Tuesday – Livy shopped while Sam tried to finish business but failed to visit his niece, Annie. After stopping at Mrs. Grant’s, he could not see Charles Webster in time to catch his train. Livy was worn out (Sam wrote “she had the cholera morbus lately”). The trip went all wrong, Sam wrote, and he apologized for not calling [MTP].

October 28 Wednesday – Samuel G. Dunham remitted the proceeds from Clemens’ $100,000 notes to Charles Webster, for the working capital to publish Grant’s Memoirs [MTNJ 3: 204n69].

Sam wrote from Hartford to his niece, Annie Webster, apologizing for not being able to stop for a visit with Livy the day before [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster on several matters. He wanted $5 a month added to the amount sent Orion monthly—“for an impecunious cousin,” (Puss) he said. He wanted to donate $500 for the construction of “a wooden barrack” for soldiers guarding Grant’s temporary tomb. Such donation to be made instead of one for the monument. Samuel C. Dunham had telephoned that he’d sent the drafts to Sam in New York, care of the firm, which reminded Sam that when Webster got mail addressed to Sam, even marked “private,” he was to open and read it and not to send it on unless he couldn’t answer it. Sam had left some suggestions at Charley’s office about an offer for Fred Grant’s book and ideas about the lawsuit that Adam Badeau was bringing. Lastly, Sam had bought a 25 cent toy watch for Jean Clemens from a street vendor in front of Schwartz; had broken it; Jean’s heart was broken; he requested Webster to go find the street vendor and buy another [MTP].

The evening is revealed in Twichehll’s journal:

“H[armony] & I dined at C.D.W’s [Charles Dudley Warner’s] with M.T. & wife, to meet Mr & Mrs Fred K. Church, with both of whom we were much pleased. Mr. Church a frail, thin man physically, quiet in manner but attractive. M. T. at his best” [Yale, copy at MTP].

October 29 Thursday – Charles Webster notified Sam that the proceeds of the notes had been received all right from Dunham. “I have offered Col Grant ½ profits on his book up to 50,000 and if it sold more than 50,000 to give him 60% of the profits. We can afford this and no more” [MTNJ 3: 204n69; MTP].

October 30 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to his mother, Jane Clemens.

Dear Ma— / I suppose I owe you a good deal of money by this time, on account of Puss; but I will make it good, & more besides, as soon as I get the General's second volume launched next March. Still, if you need any extra money now, or should need it at any time, you must let me know, & I'll be sure to send it. You mustn't deny yourself anything you want, but call upon me without the least hesitation. I shall take it as a favor. [Note: see June 26 entry.]

Sam added that Livy hadn't been well but was now and would write soon. [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, discussing further offers made to publish Fred Grant's biography of his father, which would pick up where Grant's Memoirs ended. They did not come to terms. Sam also wrote that they could not publish Adam Badeau's book—if it was clean and respectful, it would “have but a poor sale”; if it were “malicious...it may be expected to have a great sale, but we can't touch it.” Sam rethought the amounts going to Keokuk monthly and told Webster simply to send $155 [MTP].

October, late – From Sam's notebook:

Got 12 more presses at work; this makes 20, that are going night & day; if we could get 37, we could print a complete volume every second; but it is impossible to get them.

We have got 7 binderies at work—all large ones. One of them turns out 1500 volumes per day in sheep, by hand. This one occupies 3 large floors, & works upon nothing but this book. The building was rented, the machinery bought new, & the hands brought from Philadelphia,—all for this book. We are being well scolded by other publishers, for they have to send their printing and binding to other cities [MTNJ 3: 204].

Sam also entered the idea of writing an article about “Carlyle's whines & complaints” and “George Elliot's [sic] ditto” [Gribben 217]. (See June 7 entry.)

November – Sam, in Hartford, inscribed a copy of P&P to Ulysses S. Grant Jr (“Buck”): “To / U.S. Grant, Jr. / from / The Author. / ~ / Nov. '85” [MTP].

November 1 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to unidentified persons:

“Dear Sirs: I think you have been ordering & paying for our several magazines, & charging to us in your usual bills. If so, please continue to do it & oblige” [MTP].

November 2 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster about a mix up with too many books sent to station masters on the Delaware, Lackawanna, and Western Railroad—men who were involved in arranging “hotel” or “parlor” cars for the Clemens family when they traveled back and forth between Elmira and Hoboken. Griffith, A. Reasoner, and Billings of said railroad, plus Collins of the New Haven line had received Grant's book, but Sam never gave an order to send them his other books. “I must apologize to these folks for overloading them with my precious literature.” Livy wanted an apology and explanation sent to “these gentlemen.” Sam wrote “she is thoroughly ashamed,” and thinks it better that Webster send the apology [MTP]. Note: See Dec. 1.

Orion Clemens wrote: “Your 2 letters to Ma and 1 to myself received. / By Ma's directions I this afternoon sent $5 to Puss” [MTP].

C.A. Glyn wrote from NYC to ask if Sam might read his MS. he wished to publish, “a reminiscence of my travels abroad, written up in a humorous vein,” which he compared to L4 [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “No.”

November 3 Tuesday – George Walton Greene wrote to encourage Sam to attend the annual meeting of the Copyright League on Saturday [MTP].

The “Troy ass” R.L. Blakeman also wrote...from Troy NY. Only the envelope survives [MTP].

November 4 Wednesday – Sam wrote a letter from New York City to Annie Eliot Trumbull, daughter of Hartford historian and philologist J. Hammond Trumbull, who wrote the multilingual chapter epigraphs for The Gilded Age. The Trumbulls were family friends. The letter was entirely in German [MTP].

Robert B. Porter wrote from Bloomington, Ill., enclosing a small pamphlet on the Longfellow Club. Porter was to give a talk on Mark Twain and wanted to know if Twain was “original” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Infernal”

November 5 Thursday – Orion Clemens wrote check rec’d for $155. “Jean’s letter was very interesting. Tell her to write again”[MTP].

Rollin M. Daggett wrote from Washington DC about having Sam publish a book of “fifteen or twenty legends of love, chivalry and barbaric pomp, extending back for over seven hundred years,” he was preparing with King Kalakana of Hawaii [MTP].

J. Chester for Lincoln University wrote asking his help to endow a chair for the study of “Sacred Scriptures” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Damn this humbug. / Wanted an endowment for a chair”

Charles Webster sent a telegram: “See page 4 this morning’s Tribune Thorndike Rice a violation of our contract have written Col. Grant” [MTP].

Jane Clemens wrote to Sam & Family that she found a mislaid letter. Her body was strong but she felt her mind was failing. She felt it wasn’t “best” to give Puss too much money [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “From Ma – Read it Livy”

November 6 Friday – Frank Fuller wrote from Madison, NY. About being lied to by a solicitor that Clemens would “take charge of this magazine,” Literary Life. He then wrote of a financial scheme [MTP].

* Belle C. Greene wrote from Nashua, N.H. “Your kind letter in relation to my book ‘A New England Conscience’ makes me wish I had chosen a more cheering theme. I did not mean to be so disagreeable. I think you and Mr Savage should be boon companions—perhaps you are?” She was planning a volume of humorous sketches and would send him a copy as “an antidote” for her first book [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “An author”

Edward O. Sharpe (1862-1942), minister in Watseka, Ill., wrote asking how to “get loose” from P&P, as he could not “let go of it. I read it and it won’t stay read. Some how or other, that miserable Tom Canty keeps following me and scratching my imagination until I am forced to go with him again through his troubles....Can you not devise some remedy for my trouble [?]” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Compliments Prince & Pauper.”

Charles Webster wrote all about Charles Allen Thorndike Rice publishing Col. Grant’s book in violation of their contract. He’d persuaded Grant to their cause though he’d already taken funds from Rice; it wouldn’t matter, Webster advised—they could get an injunction [MTP].

November 7 Saturday – James Fraser Glück (1852-1897) for Young Men’s Assoc. Buffalo wrote to ask for the HF MS for display in their library [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Sent what was left of Huck Finn / Buffalo Library”

George E. Waring wrote on Union League Club notepaper, NYC that he'd come "near invading you last week. I shall have that pleasure soon" [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote, sorry Sam was sick and hoped it was nothing serious. "I have taken means to stop the matter you speak about and I think the plans on foot will stop it effectively." He'd told Col. Grant that "in telegraphic communication with you we had decided that it must not be published..." [MTP]. Note: this was likely about Rice's attempt to publish Col. Grant's book or excerpts from Grant's Memoirs in a reminiscences book (see Nov. 10).

November 8 Sunday – Sam entertained an old Virginia City friend, landlord, and editor of the Territorial Enterprise, Rollin M. Daggett (see Jan. 24, 1878). Daggett had been U.S. Minister to the Sandwich Islands. He stayed two days and showed Sam a manuscript he'd written with the King Kamehameha V of the Islands; Sam was interested in publishing it [Nov 11 to Webster, MTP].

November 9 Monday – Henry Ward Beecher wrote scolding Sam and assured that the pages of Grant's Memoirs he had were safe "and will soon be on their way home" [MTP].

James Redpath telegram: "Would like to see you tonight or tomorrow morning. Will be at the Allen House" [MTP].

November 10 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, directing him to send William Hamersley a check for $3,500—"it finishes the type-setter business in a very satisfactory fashion," Sam wrote. Sam also instructed Webster to gather information regarding "General Grant's literary powers—his happily proven ability as an author..." [MTP]. Because Grant had not been a good speaker, many were still skeptical that he could have written his memoirs with any ability.

Rollin Daggett left Hartford [Nov 11 to Webster, MTP].

James Redpath came to Sam's and talked three hours on behalf of Charles Allen Thorndike Rice, "the ambitious young editor and publisher of the North American Review" [MTNJ 3: 284n195]. Rice had compiled Reminiscences of Abraham Lincoln by Distinguished Men of his Time and had included anecdotes by Fred Grant directly from the manuscript of Grant's Memoirs. Rice had hired a Webster & Co. bookkeeper to gain information regarding the company's subscription methods. When the prospectus of the Lincoln book appeared, Webster and Sam suspected foul play. Redpath gained permission after the fact for use of the anecdotes, but Sam would not budge. He deferred prohibition of Fred Grant's chapter in Rice's book until his attorneys at Alexander & Green could judge that it would do no harm to Grant's Memoirs.

Mary L. Leverette for Acorn Magazine wrote to thank Sam for his "kind, friendly letter" which evidently told of his being rejected at the start of his career. "We forget that noted authors have had trials, like the rest of us, don't we" [MTP].

Daniel Whitford sent a telegram: "Have seen Rice & am to see him again tomorrow morning. Colonel called today but I was out. He says in note did not agree to any time to deliver the manuscript. I think it will be all right" [MTP].

November 11 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Frank Fuller, advising him not to pay Literary Life a cent to advertise for him. Sam wrote he'd "dropped that scheme I wrote you about" (on Sept. 26.) realizing it would take all the time from an "idle man."

"But mainly I dropped it because I was afraid it would hamper & delay a scheme of mine of 4 years' standing which absorbs all my love, & interest, & spare time [Paige typesetter]. Your own scheme looks well, but it doesn't begin with mine, honest man! Till I look in on you next week, Affectionately yours / Mark" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster about Rollin Daggett's Sandwich Islands book that he'd "constructed" with the King of the Islands. Sam wanted the book and would pay a higher royalty if both names were on the title page.

"I would rather have this book than any that is offering now. It can be fascinatingly illustrated."

Sam told of Redpath's visit and his response (see Nov. 10 entry).

When Webster went to Canada "about the 28th of November to copyright the General's book," Sam said he might go along if he wasn't "needed on American soil by any etiquette of law" [MTP].

November 12 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to James Fraser Glück, a Buffalo lawyer and rare book collector, who had written asking Sam to donate the original manuscript of Huck Finn to the Buffalo Library [MTP]. Note: this is the half that survived and was re-discovered in early 1991.

Sam also wrote a short note to Benjamin H. Ticknor, seeking the original MS of P&P for Glück. "He wants to glass-case it in the great Buffalo Library" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Orion, letter not extant but referred to in Orion's Nov. 17 reply.

James F. Glück wrote from Buffalo to thank Sam for sending the HF MS. He then asked for the LM MS, no matter the "shabby condition" [MTP].

William D. Whitney wrote from N. Haven to introduce Rev. Pelham R. Ogle, an English gentleman...who desires the pleasure of your acquaintance" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "Prof. Whitney. Philologist Yale College"

November 14 Saturday – Lizzie C. Grant (Mrs. Jesse Grant) wrote to thank Sam for an article she'd rec'd from the Philadelphia Ledger about the portrait of Gen. Grant [MTP].

James Fraser Glück wrote that the HF MS. arrived this afternoon. He asked Sam to use his influence with Charles Dudley Warner to contribute his papers [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., "MS. for Buffalo"

R.L. Blakeman wrote from Troy NY "Aha! Students at a mathematical institution are an ill-chosen lot among whom to trust to an effort at wit to get you over a blunder like that. The boys opened the envelope, but when they caught the drift, their ridicule was not for the critic, but for the author, of the words 'five or six trees in a straight row, equidistant from each other.' Yours..." [MTP].

A.J. Williams, M.D. wrote a letter from McGregor, Ia. of "admiration" for Sam's essay in the Christian Union, a response to John Senior. "My wife & I both think that was the best & wisest & most human-hearted thing ever written on that subject, & we want to thank you" [MTP].

November 15 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Pelham Ogle.

Your kind note arrives at the moment that I am taking the train for New York—for a business-sojourn there until the Christmas holidays...a note addressed to me at the Hotel Normandie will find me, & I will answer in person—almost surely: (the slight uncertainty is based upon the fact that New York is only headquarters for a month—my business is scattered, from Washington to Boston, & betwixt & between [MTP]. Note: Pelham Ogle's note does not survive; he was "that English clergyman" of the Anglican Church, referred to Nov. 17 to Livy.

An envelope survives postmarked from Hartford on Nov. 16 and addressed to Sam's mother, Jane Clemens. The lost letter was likely written this day [MTP].

Sam left for New York City, leaving the family at home, with Mrs. Langdon as a house guest. Sam stayed at the Normandie Hotel. The publication of Grant's book was pending and there were still proofs to be read and many business matters to be attended to.

Kibbry Greening (Tabitha Quarles Greening "Puss") wrote; the letter copy is now too faded to read [MTP].

November 16 Monday – Sam referred to "12 hours' cast-iron sleep," going to "bed at 6" in his Nov. 17 to Livy. "...was asleep at half-past. I woke up twice for ¾ of an hour in the night..." [MTP].

November 17 Tuesday – Sam wrote from New York City to Livy.

Livy darling, another solid day's work on proofreading, two hours of it at Mrs. Grant's house, & the rest at the office...

I am going to dine with Laffan this evening (thanks for the dress suit, which has come)—& I shall read some proof after I go to bed. Three or four days of this constant work will enable me to catch up, & then I shall have a little easier time of it.

I am afraid I can't go home Saturday, because they want me to go to Washington the end of this week & talk international copyright to the President. One must not refuse an office of that kind, when asked—a man who prides himself on his citizenship can't refuse [MTP].

Sam also wrote to James W. Paige; letter not extant but referred to in Paige's Nov. 18 reply.

Sam did dine with William Mackay Laffan in a private room at an unspecified restaurant. Joining in were James R. Osgood and "two young Harpers." The two Harpers:

"...forced Laffan to match half dollars with them & in 15 minutes they hadn't a cent, & Laffan had won enough to pay for the dinner."

They then played billiards and drank champagne (Sam had none) till 1:30 AM [Nov. 18 to Livy, MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote, Orion stories enclosed. Orion had rec'd Sam's of Nov. 12 (not extant). "I sent you the answer of the Director of the mine last Friday...but before writing to him again, I will wait till the latter part of next week, as the answer he has already made may suggest some modifications of your interrogations, or additions to them" [MTP].

November 18 Wednesday – Sam wrote from New York City to Livy on Western Union form as stationery:

"Livy dear, I suppose I shall leave for Washington at 8 in the morning, arriving at the Ebbitt House there about a quarter before 2 in the afternoon."

Sam wrote about the dinner the night before, only three courses but "a marvel"—raw oysters, very small, fresh, terrapin stew:

"...in dainty little covered pots, with curious little gold-&-silver terrapin spoons from Tiffany's, [an] entire canvass-back duck, red hot from the oven. [It was a] memorable dinner" [MTP].

From Sam's notebook:

There was an understanding with Gen. Grant, in Co. Fred's presence, that we should run the N.Y. Genl. Agency instead of appointing a Genl Agent, & that we should take 80 per cent of a Genl Agent's commission, & give the Genl the other 20%. But this have never yet been signed, though written out & sent to Mrs. Grant by Col Fred some time ago. Yesterday—no, I believe it was the day before yesterday—Webster asked Col. Fred about it in my presence in our office, & Col. Fred said he believed he had mislaid that paper somewhere, & added "But you needn't be uneasy about it; mother understands it & I understand it, & know that agreement was made; & that it isn't signed is only an accident..."

That was entirely satisfactory to me, & also to Webster, & we said so [MTNJ 3:211].

James W. Paige wrote having rec'd Sams of Nov. 17; the name of the foreman of the NY Herald that Sam requested was John Brusnahan [MTP].

November 19 Thursday – Sam left New York City for Washington, D.C.

Sam wrote to Rollin M. Daggett, letter not extant but referred to in Daggett's Nov. 28 reply.

Sam sent a full morocco copy of Grant's Memoirs to Philip H. Sheridan (1831-1888) [Gribben 640].

From Sam's notebook:

Nov. 19 Called on President Cleveland at the White House, by appointment, with Johnson of the Century Magazine & Geo Walton Green, Chief of the Authors' League. By little & little I wandered into a speech—having got speedily warmed up by the first remark or two made on international copyright—which remark or two I made myself without intending to say anything further. Then there was a 4-cornered talk of an hour. The President showed great interest in our subject & will do it as good a turn as he can in his Message. I ventured to urge him to make I.C. the child of his administration, & nurse it & raise it [MTNJ 3: 211].

November 20 Friday – Sam wrote from The Normandie Hotel, New York City to an unidentified person, and gave his plans, thinking he might return to Hartford for the weekend then return on Monday for the entire week.

“Dear Sir: When & where can I see you for a moment—meaning an hour—on business?” [MTP].

Brooklyn Magazine wrote asking him to reply to their Oct. 19 asking whether he thought Boston was “losing its literary prestige” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “No answer / Beg”

Edward Gruy wrote from NYC with birthday wishes for his 50th (some 10 days early) [MTP].

Mrs. F.M. Houts wrote to ask for the MS. copy of Sam's article “What Ought he to Have Done” which ran in the Christian Union [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Babies. / No—Can't”

November 21 Saturday – In New York City Sam wrote to Livy after telling Webster to send her a telegram that he was planning on spending Thursday and Friday (Nov 26-7) at home, taking “the 11 oclock train, reaching Hartford at 2.21.” Sam thought he might be able to stay home until Monday (Nov. 30) but was unsure. He was just on his way to Fred Grant's and would “stop in & hurry up Mrs. Wheeler [Candace Wheeler] on the way” [MTP].

November 21 or 22? Sunday – MTP marks Sam's letter to Orion as either day. Sam enclosed a letter from Kibbry Greening (Tabitha “Puss” Quarles Greening) in Hunnewell, Mo., asking him to answer it, as he was “home for only a day” [MTP]. If Sam did run up to Hartford on either of these days, it wasn't mentioned in his Nov. 21 letter to Livy. It could be the letter was later, say Nov 26-29.

November 23 Monday – While Sam was in New York on business he ran an errand for Livy's friend, Fiedele Brooks (Mrs. Henry Brooks); he inquired about curtains from Candace Wheeler for Mrs. Brooks [MTNJ 3: 212n85]. Candace “at once telegraphed Mrs. Brooks to come & get the curtains & instructions” [Nov. 25 to Livy; MTP].

November 24 Tuesday – Sam read proofs early and made the rounds of newspaper offices, talking up the Paige typesetter. He called it a “wild day” in a letter to Livy the next day. He accompanied Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun home...

...at 4 p.m. & played billiards till dinner time, 7 pm; then stayed to dinner with the family, Mrs. Dana & two married daughters, & had a very lively time; billiards again after dinner, & got home at 11, where I met a disappointment in not getting any letter from you [Nov. 25 to Livy; MTP]. Note: Sam added that Livy's letter had just come.

William A. Brownell for Keokuk National Bank wrote in behalf of Mary Timberman (see Nov. 25 entries) [MTP].

U.S. Grant, Jr. wrote a short note on a small card "Fred wants to see you here tomorrow. If you will not be here will you please let Fred know" [MTP].

Joseph Jefferson telegraphed Sam about seeing him; telegram not extant but referred to on Nov. 25.

R.B. Ogden wrote from Keokuk on behalf of Miss Mary Timberman asking Sam's "aid in her advancement in her profession" [MTP].

Mary Timberman wrote asking for aid in entering the dramatic profession [MTP].

November 25 Wednesday – Sam wrote from New York City to Livy, describing the "wild day" he'd had the day before (see Nov. 24 entry) [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Ross R. Winans, letter not extant but referred to in Winan's Nov. 27 reply.

Joseph Jefferson scrawled awfully that he'd telegraphed Sam yesterday that they would not come till late in the day; he could see him from 4 to 5 pm. He'd be at the US Hotel at 3 [MTP].

November 26 Thursday – Thanksgiving – Sam returned to Hartford.

Twichell's journal:

"We dined—nine of us —ie all but the two youngest children with our dear friends Mr & Mrs C. D. Warner. / In the evening we passed a couple of delightful hours at M.T's. where there was dancing and charade actings for the young folks" [Yale, copy at MTP].

Livy's diary entry:

More than two months since I have made any entry in this book. We arrived home safely on the 18th of Sept. and the children began their lessons on the 21st. They have been going on busily ever since, being also much occupied with their Christmas work. Mr Clemens has had to be much in New York seeing to the publication of Gen'l Grants book reading proof of it &c. Today we have had a quiet day having only Miss Corey to dinner and Jean also eating with us, but we had a merry time this evening. I invited Miss Foote, Ward Foote, Hattie Foote, Daisy, Fanny Friese, the Twichell children and two or three other children – the grown people came with them and we had a most merry time —dancing, we all danced the Virginia Reel—Mr Twichell, Mr Clemens, both Mr Warners, and then charades in which the gentlemen led and all together a very good wholesome time for the children [MTP].

Orion Clemens wrote: "I am spending Thanksgiving principally in Ma's room. She has had a pretty tough time—doctor here twice yesterday; but she is better to-day, and chances good." He enclosed more of his history research for the game [MTP].

November 27 Friday – Livy's 40th birthday. Sam wrote Livy his sentiments on her 40th:

We have reached another milestone, my darling, & a very very remote one from the place whence we have started; but we look back over a pleasant landscape...And here we have company on the journey—ah, such precious company, such inspiring, such lovely & gracious company!...our old love grows & never diminishes...Your husband [MTP].

From Livy's diary:

When I went down to breakfast I found a little table trimmed with smilax and with my gifts on it beside my place at the breakfast table. Mr. Clemens gave me a most beautiful copper vase, shaped much like the old estruscan vases; with beautiful design and motto on it. Mother gave me some money to buy some silver, (I think I shall buy soup spoons.) Susy gave me a blotter, with some work of hers in sepia on the cover, her first attempt at using water color it is very pretty. Clara gave me a little Japanese match box. Jean a little steel implement to use in keeping your sleeves down when you draw a sack over them [Salsbury 213].

The Clemenses threw a dinner party for twelve: "the Warners, & Twichells & Joe Jefferson & a son of John Bright among the company. Had a riotous time" [Nov. 28 to Orion; MTP]. From Livy's diary:

Tonight or rather this afternoon at four o'clock we had Mr. Joseph Jefferson to dinner, with some friends to meet him—we sat twelve in number at the table, among the guests was a young Mr. Bright.—son of Mr John Bright the English liberal. He brought letters to Mr Clemens. We had a pleasant time enjoying Mr Jefferson exceedingly. The guests were Mr & Mrs Twichell, Mr & Mrs Charles Warner, Mr Dunham, and Sally & Mollie Dunham....In the evening I took Clara and Susy to see Mr Jefferson in Rip Van Winkle. They enjoyed it all immensely—it is the first time they have ever been out in the evening to a place of amusement here. Susy has been once in New York.

Since we came home from Elmira we have had visitors in Moncure Conway and his daughter [.] much interesting talk then about Mr & Mrs Carlyle. Mrs Wheeler & Miss Dora Wheeler the artist have been with us for a few days. A Mr & Mrs Daggett, he was a friend of Mr Clemens were with us for twenty four hours. Mr John Russel Young we gave a little dinner to. Cousin Earrin Lewis was here for a few days, so have not been quite alone. Clara Spaulding came home with us and staid two weeks. [MTP; Salsbury 213].

Twichell also noted the gathering:

H[armony] and I dined at M.T's with a company of our friends invited to meet Jefferson the actor....He is very simple and quiet in manner and talked agreeably. H. and several of the children went down to the Opera House to see him act "Rip Van Winkle" in the evening [Yale, copy at MTP].

Ross R. Winans wrote in answer to Sam's of Nov. 25. He wouldn't be in NY next week but would see him if he came to Baltimore and suggested Dec. 1 for luncheon [MTP].

November 28 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Orion, enclosing letters he had received from and for Mary Timberman, asking him to use his influence in gaining her a position with the Boston Museum Theatre or any other theatre, as she wanted to early a "livelihood" in the "dramatic profession."

I want to ask you or Mollie to take this matter off my hands...I knew her father & mother 30 years ago...a man of whose critical ability I haven't the slightest evidence, says she has dramatic talent...Another man says he has heard people say she has dramatic talent. Dam it, I should simply get myself laughed at—& so I decline [MTP].

Sam also wrote a note to William H. Knight, thanking him for:

"the pleasant things...said & the countenance which you & Mrs. Knight give to that sketch."

He enclosed a picture of Livy and the girls taken by H.L. Bundy of Hartford. Sam wrote that the picture:

“...does justice to Susy & the cat, & Jean & Clara...but slanders Mrs. Clemens” [MTP]. Note: This may have been the William H. Knight who rose to national recognition through the publication of such works as Hand-Book Almanac for the Pacific States (1862) and Bancroft's Maps of the Pacific States (1864). In 1879, he moved his family to Cincinnati where he joined the Fisher Carriage Building Company and he continued with his scientific and literary work.

Rollin M. Daggett wrote he'd rec'd Sams of the 19th and had just written to the Hawaiian King; he didn't doubt he'd be able to get the King's name on the title page of the proposed legends book [MTP].

November 29 Sunday – Sam wrote to Frank R. Stockton, thanking him for his good wishes [AMT 2: 576].

The Critic ran affectionate essays by Charles Dudley Warner, Oliver Wendell Holmes (a poem), Joel Chandler Harris, and Frank P. Stockton on the eve of Sam's 50th birthday. These were reprinted in many newspapers, even in the London Pall Mall Gazette of Dec. 12, 1885.

Warner: You may think it an easy thing to be fifty years old, but you will find it not so easy to stay there, and your next fifty years will slip away much faster than those just accomplished. After all, a century is not much, and I wouldn't throw it up to you now, only for the chance of saying that few living men have crowded so much into that space as you, and few have done so much for the entertainment and good fellowship of the world.

An excerpt of Holmes' verse:

So fifty years have fled, they say,
Since first you took to drinking,—
I mean in Nature's milky way,—
Of course no ill I'm thinking. [see AMT 2:263-4 for the entire text].

Harris: I saw Mr. Twain (says Mr. Harris) not so very long ago piloting a steamboat up and down the Mississippi river in front of New Orleans, and his hand was strong and his eye keen. Somewhat later I heard him discussing a tough German sentence with Little Jean—a discussion in which the toddling child probably had the best of it...I am glad he is fifty years old. He has earned the right to grow old and mellow. He has put his youth in his books, and there it is perennial.

Sam wrote a letter of thanks from Hartford to the four men, addressing it to “My dear Conspirators.” Their essays had reconciled him:

“...to being fifty years old....May you live to be fifty yourselves, & find a fellow-benefactor in that time of awful need” [MTP]. Note: see AMT 2: 258-60.

He then wrote individual letters of thanks, especially thanking Joel Chandler Harris for the “good word about Huck” he'd written.

November 30 Monday – Sam's 50th birthday. Two volumes of Francis Parkman's Montcalm and Wolfe (1885) were inscribed: “Saml. L. Clemens/ Hartford/ Conn./ Nov. 30th 1885” [Gribben 534].

Frederick D. Grant wrote that “two mistakes have been made in the placing of maps and notes in the II volume” [MTP].

E.J. Hamersley wrote birthday wishes [MTP].

Laurence Hutton wrote birthday wishes [MTP].

James B. Pond telegraphed birthday wishes [MTP].

George E. Waring wrote suggesting spending Thursday night with Sam [MTP].

December – Sam wrote from Hartford to an unidentified person:

“There is not a copy to be had. I bought the plates & stock 4 years ago & destroyed them” [MTP]. Note: Sam may have referred to The Jumping Frog book or Mark Twain’s Burlesque Autobiography.

Sam’s article, long delayed, “The Private History of a Campaign that Failed,” ran in the December issue of the Century Magazine. The series “Battles and Leaders of the Civil War” had been in the magazine for over a year, and was quite popular. Robert Underwood Johnson’s persistence resulted in Sam finishing the article. (See MTHL 2: 541n1.) Also in the magazine was “Wanted—A Universal Tinker,” signed by “X.Y.Z” [Camfield, bibliog.].

Sam’s notebook: “Valentino. Ch Scribner’s Sons,” evidently Sam’s intention to purchase William Waldorf Astor’s (1848-1919) Valentino. An Historical Romance of the Sixteenth Century in Italy (1885) [MTNJ 3: 216]. Astor was the son of John Jacob Astor, and this was his first literary work. In his planning for CY, there’s an entry: “remnants of monkish legends. Get them from Wm of Huntingdon” [Gribben 308]. (See Oct. 24 1877 entry for Sam’s purchase of this ancient history.)

December 1 Tuesday – Personal Memoirs of U.S. Grant, Vol. I was officially published [MTNJ 3: 210n81]. Note: Powers [504] and Perry [233] each give the publication date as Dec. 10. However, the Library of America edition of Grant’s Memoirs gives these statistics: “The first volume was published December 1, 1885, in five bindings: cloth at $7.00 a set; sheep, $9.00; half-morocco, $11.00; full-morocco, $18.00; and tree calf, $25.00.”

If the “official” date was Dec. 10, Sam jumped the gun on early copies out, for he inscribed a copy of volume 1 to A. Reasoner: “To Mr. A. Reasoner / with the kindest regards of / S.L. Clemens / New York, Dec. 1, 1885” [MTP]. Note: Howells also praised its success on Dec. 5 in a letter to Sam (see entry).

Along with a copy of Grant’s Memoirs given to Mr. A. Reasoner of the Delaware, Lackawana and Western R.R., Sam had also given “an order to send Gen Grant’s book to Griffith, ...and Billings” of the R.R. [Nov. 2 to Webster]. The inscription to Reasoner is listed herein. The inscription and two volume set to Mr. Griffith appeared for sale (Oct. 3, 2009) on AbeBooks.com by the bookseller, Somewhere In Time, inventory # 684F. The inscription reads, “To Mr. Griffith, with the kindest regards of S.L. Clemens, New York, Dec. 1, 1885.” The volumes sent Mr. Billings are not extant.

Note: [MTNJ 3:198n51] has Sam in Baltimore to see Ross Winans about the Paige typesetter, but several letters by Sam from New York City and no other reference to a Baltimore trip would suggest Sam either stopped there on his recent Washington, D.C trip to see President Cleveland, or Winans was in New York on Dec. 1.

John R. Young wrote birthday wishes [MTP].

Oliver W. Holmes wrote, “so glad” Sam was pleased with his “little vases” (Holmes to Gilder Nov. 23 enclosed [MTP].

December 2 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells, asking to be reminded should Webster forget to send the $2,000 that Howells had requested. Sam made reference to “these first days of publication” of Grant’s Memoirs, and gave specific shipping numbers—another argument for Dec. 1 being the correct publication date.

I've got the first volume launched safely; consequently half of the suspense is over, & I am that much nearer the goal. We've bound & shipped 200,000 books; & by the 10th shall finish & ship the remaining 125,000 of the first edition. I got nervous & came down to help hump-up the binderies; & I mean to stay here pretty much all the time till the first days of March, when the second volume will issue [MTP].

Note: See Dec. 5 for Howells' answer.

In the evening Sam "stopped at Laffan's a moment...where Osgood was dining; then went up to Mrs. Grant's." General Grant's sons were there admiring a stack of the volume 1 in various bindings [Dec. 3 to Livy, MTP].

MTP copy of stock certificate to Olivia L. Clemens for 813 shares of J. Langdon and Co., "organized in Pennsylvania" shares valued at $100 each (value $81,300) dated this day [MTP: 1885 financial file].

Henry Guy Carlton (not Cashton) wrote on Lotos Club notepaper asking if Sam had "time and inclination to tackle a play dealing with American life, not as Dickens assumed it to be, but as it is?" [MTP].

December 3 Thursday – Sam wrote from New York City to Livy. He had received Susy's letter telling of the death of Mary Burton. He related the night before at Laffan's, and Mrs. Grant's, and wrote of the Japanese Village in Madison Square Garden that he wanted to show Livy when she came down the following week [MTP].

Osman C. Hooper (1858-1941) of the Columbus Evening Dispatch wrote, enclosing a clipping from that paper of a poem he wrote celebrating Clemens' 50th birthday [MTP].

December 5 Saturday – In Boston, Howells answered that he'd received the check, but didn't think he could keep it. His dilemma was that Harpers, whom he'd recently contracted with, would not allow him to have his name on the title page of another publisher's work, and that if there was no definite plan to publish, he felt the money did not belong to him. Howells suggested Sam contract "for the other half of $5,000" with Harris or Warner or Aldrich to use their name on the title page [MTHL 2: 541].

Orion Clemens wrote (Pamela Moffett to Jane Clemens Nov. 24 enclosed). Check for $155 rec'd. They'd had a "dreadful time" with Ma the night before. "She is fairly reasonable during the day, and ripping and tearing at night. The doctor promises to make her sleep tonight. Her cough is still bad" [MTP].

December 6 Sunday – Brander Matthews wrote to Sam: "Bunner is to be married in Jan. So he comes here to breakfast, Thursday, Dec 17th at 1 P.M. Couldn't you find some imperative business which will demand your presence in this city on the 17th...The breakfast will be very informal—you may wear your slippers!" [MTP].

December 7 Monday – Back in Hartford, probably over the weekend, Sam wrote to Howells about the "Library of Humor" book. Sam suggested Howells write the preface now, and then:

"...we can put the Library away, with cheerful souls, knowing that at any time now or far away, there's nothing in the way of her coming out whenever we want her to."

Sam confided that he'd had "that $5,000 invested" for Howells and didn't tell him because he knew Howells wouldn't let him make it good should it go "to the devil."

"Well, at last when the Grant book actually emerged from the press, with all its immense sale laid bare to the public, I recognized the bald ridiculousness of trying any longer to keep up the pretense of being short of money—so I gave it up, & let my dream go."

Sam closed with a wish that Howells had been with him to relate the “14-months’ history” of “Gerhardt & the Nathan Hale statue,” one he called “the funniest in the whole history of art” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Laurence Hutton. After some teasing about being his son-in-law that-was-to-have-been (Hutton was fond of young Jean Clemens), Sam thanked him for his birthday congratulations. About being 50, Sam added,

“In public I say breezily that I don’t care a damn. This deceives. It is intended to deceive. But let it not deceive you” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a short note to John Russell Young, also thanking for birthday congratulations [MTP].

William Tecumseh Sherman wrote after reading Vol I of the Grant Memoirs: “On the whole the book is admirable” [MTP].

December 8 Tuesday – Sam wrote a short note from Hartford to Orion, sending $25 and a Christmas greeting, saying the money represented,

“...what they would buy & send you if they warn’t so dam busy” [MTP].

Sam also wrote, or allowed to be written in his behalf, from Hartford to the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, declining an invitation to some event [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Brander Matthews, declining an invitation to a wedding. Sam wrote they would have “company arriving the 16th, & we don’t know how long they will stay” [MTP]. Note: the wedding was for Alice Learned to Henry Cuyler Bunner.

Sam also wrote a 2-liner to James B. Pond, who had written asking for a picture of Sam. He was fresh out of pictures but suggested Pond get one of “those made by Sarony”—whoever Pond wanted it for, Sam had told them that Pond would get them one [MTP].

Ross R. Winans wrote, declining to invest in the Paige typesetter [MTP].

Boston Globe per Walter E. Decrow wrote wanting Sam to contribute a signed editorial [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Pleasantly proposed—but I could not accept”

December 9 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Walter E. Dacrow, who evidently had asked for a small article. Sam’s answer deserves space here:

If anything in the world could tempt me, this letter of yours could certainly do it. But I give myself only five years longer to live, and in that time I must furnish certain books for the betterment of the human race; if I should stop to peddle miscellaneous articles, it would leave the human race insecure [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Rollin M. Daggett, letter not extant but referred to in Daggett’s Dec. 19 reply. Evidently Sam was trying to locate John Mackay, along with any other rich men who might subscribe to Paige Co. stock.

Jeannette L. Gilder for The Critic wrote, sending Oliver Wendell Holme’s poem for Sam’s 50th [MTP].

William Howard (1834-1902), wrote from Bethlehem, Penn., referring to earlier correspondence, not extant. His wife had read “The Private History of a Campaign That Failed” to the family the night before, from the Century. Howard praised the article as well as IA, “the best abused of our books” [MTP].

December 10 Thursday – Karl Gerhardt wrote more about the death mask matter, Grant to Gerhardt Dec. 7 enclosed [MTP].

December 10-13? Sunday – Sam wrote from the Normandie Hotel in New York City, probably sometime in this period, to Charles Webster regarding the use of General Grant’s death mask, which Gerhardt had made. Controversy grew surrounding the possession of the mask.

I think I’ll insist on Gerhardt yielding up the mask unconditionally—then if you get Mrs. Grant to allow Gerhardt the first or exclusive use of it for a time, she can do that as a favor to you or me, & maybe it will come easier. However, I’ll see how Gerhardt feels about it—though I think that if he yields unconditionally it may really be the better for him [MTP].

From Perry, p.237:

“Karl Gerhardt reentered the life of the Grant family, casting the general’s death mask. But he refused to turn it over to the family until he was paid $17,000. Julia Grant was enraged by this demand and refused. Twain was embarrassed. To resolve the issue, he paid Gerhardt $10,000 from his own funds. The last Twain heard of Gerhardt, he was an itinerant minister, preaching fire and brimstone in revivals staged in rural Louisiana, where he died.”

December 11 Friday – From Sam’s notebook:

“Howells says [from his Dec. 11 letter to Sam]: I’m reading Grant’s book with a delight I’ve failed to find in novels.” And again: “I think he is one of the most natural—that is, best—writers I ever read. The book merits its enormous success, simply as literature” [MTNJ 3: 217].

Julian Hawthorne wrote from NYC about voting at the Authors Club for Will Carleton the poet, and the subsequent “mistake” some made after Carleton won, contesting the vote [MTP].

December 12 Saturday – The New York Critic printed an interview with Sam’s mother, Jane Clemens: Sam as a boy avoided school, though he enjoyed reading [Tenney 14].

December 13 Sunday – William M. Clemens for Chicago Literary Life Magazine wrote “sorry” Sam was 50 [MTP].

Prof. John Fiske wrote asking if he could “accept your kind invitation for the 23d instead of the 16th?” [MTP].

December 14 Monday – The Monday Evening Club met at the Clemens home with a discussion of “Eloquence.” Susy Clemens attended the meeting. “The essayist of the evening contended that the only form of eloquence was verbal. In the debate which followed the reading, Sam said that there were many kinds of eloquence: sunsets, music, the dumb appeal in frightened animals’ eyes, and even the army marching into the jaws of death” [Monday Evening Club 14 (privately printed)]. Note: Salsbury’s (p.256-7) juxtaposition of this event suggests 1891, but this is in error.

Orion Clemens wrote to Sam & Livy thanking for Christmas gifts rec’d [MTP].

December 15 Tuesday – Denis E. McCarthy died in Irvington, Alameda County, Calif. He was 55. The New York Times reported his death on Dec. 18, 1885, p.2. The article mentions his association with Sam, “then a young and comparatively unknown writer.” It also recounted the fake robbery on the “divide,” which may have caused a permanent breach with Sam. McCarthy died as editor and proprietor of the Virginia City Chronicle, which he ran from 1873. Too much demon rum killed him.

Sam returned to Hartford after a week in New York City. He wrote thanks to Jeannette L. Gilder, who with her brother, Joseph B. Gilder founded Critic, a New York literary magazine in 1881. She had sent Sam a poem, probably for his 50th birthday [MTP].

Sam also wrote to John C. Kinney, editor of the Hartford Courant, declining an invitation for an unspecified Jan. 6, 1886 event. Sam would be out of town then, he wrote, then added, “Private. / And for other reasons, which I’ll tell you some time” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to William Tecumseh Sherman, apologizing for the delayed shipment of a book [MTP].

W. Hastings Hughes wrote “to the author of ‘Wanted—a Universal Tinker’ recommending Mr. S. Sailer, whose letter he enclosed [MTP].

December 15 Tuesday ca. – William H. Knight wrote. “It was a wholly unexpected treat to get that charming group of wife and daughters—not forgetting the cat.” [MTP].

December 16 Wednesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells, again about the “Library of Humor” book.

No, don’t keep the check—collect the check & keep the money...you & I will probably be bald & toothless before the Library is published; for if I get the two books I am expecting to get, they will come in ahead & shove the Library along a couple of years; & by that time other books will intervene again & keep shoving it along.

Sam also announced that he and the children would act the P&P [again] “about the middle or the end of January,” and invited the Howellses to come [MTHL 2: 546]. Note: the two books Sam hoped for were General Grant’s letters to Julia, his wife; and an authorized biography of Pope Leo XIII [n2].

Sam also wrote two short notes to Charles Webster. The first announced he would reach Webster’s office about noon the following day (Dec. 17) and return home Friday (Dec. 18). He enclosed a letter (from Howells?) to be put with the “Library of Humor,” or where Webster could find it when it would be needed. Sam’s second note shows a change of mind. He wouldn’t come right away unless needed. He referred to a “new book”—the beginnings of Connecticut Yankee:

“I am plotting out a new book, & am full of it; so unless there is use for me down there, I shall not come yet awhile...”

Sam wanted Webster to telegraph him when the matter of Grant's death mask was settled:

"...for I am full of solicitude & shan't feel easy & comfortable till it is settled to Mrs. Grant's satisfaction"
[MTP].(See Perry's note, entry Dec. 10-13?.)

"Puckograph" of this day featured Mark Twain [Puck 18.458 back cover]. See insert.

John Fiske sent a telegram: "Cannot speak above a whisper. Too much New England climate have telegraphed Pond to postpone lecture one week. Perhaps somebody ought to explain to audience if assembled. Could you" [MTP].

Frederick D. Grant wrote "I find there is some difficulty about my mother's getting possession of the death mask...I write hoping that you will be able to influence Mr Gerhardt to deliver the mask to my mother, without a break in the friendly relations which have existed between him and us"[MTP].

Charles K. Tuckerman wrote from Paris, France for autograph [MTP].

Charles Webster wrote: "I can't do a thing with Col. Grant. He says if I do not deliver that mask by Monday he will get an order in court compelling me to do so. I told him I could not deliver it that I was not a competent court to decide whose property it was, that I could deliver it only to the person from whom I received it or upon his order. He then told me I must not deliver it to Gerhardt" [MTP].

December 17 Thursday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster about the death mask mess, which Sam feared was an impending scandal that would damage book sales "a hundred thousand dollars' worth." Gerhardt was "obdurate" about demanding $17,000 for the mask. Sam thought a quick lawsuit would settle things [MTP].

December 18 Friday – Sam wrote from Hartford to his mother, Jane Clemens, hoping she was healthier and telling of Livy's plans for the family to visit Keokuk in the spring, if possible [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Julian Hawthorne, responding to a Dec. 11 letter asking his advice on running the Author's Club. Sam recommended starting a new club, that "that sort of procedure has already ruined" the club.

"It is no more an Author's club than it is a horse-doctor's club. Its name is a sarcasm" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, strategizing about paying Gerhardt off in the death mask controversy, and gaining a contract from Julia Dent Grant for the volumes of letters from the General. Gerhardt owed Sam "nine or ten thousand dollars," and Sam suggested he'd forgive this debt and assume his outstanding obligations. The Grant letters volumes wouldn't be published for two years, but whoever bought them would also want the Memoirs. Above all, Sam wished to avoid scandal, and changed his mind about bringing or encouraging a lawsuit [MTP]. Sometime just after this date, Sam sent a clipping to Webster from the New York Evening Post, directing him to add the lines to the prospectus on the Grant book and put it first. The clipping read:

The general verdict upon General Grant's Memoirs is that THE BOOK AT ONCE TAKES ITS PLACE AMONG THE GREAT HISTORIES OF THE WORLD. The best Critics say that he has, without knowing it, Found a style which many famous historians have sought in vain. It is straightforward [MTP].

Willam T. Sherman wrote to Sam: "I was delighted as always to receive your most [illegible word] letter of Dec 15" [MTP]. Note. Sam wrote on the env., "General Sherman's opinion of Gen.Fry & his North American Review article / also his opinion of General Grant's admirable book"

December 19 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Edward House about Grant's Memoirs. "As I was expecting, the book has instantly taken literary rank at the summit of its class of literature" [MTP].

Alexander & Green per C.A. Seward sent a telegram: "Mrs G having made a formal demand upon the depository for the plaster cast to be followed by an action to obtain it unless the demand is complied with the matter has been adjourned to Tuesday noon / Counsel for the custodian have advised him to deliver the property at that date and he proposes to do so notify artist" [MTP].

Rollin M. Daggett wrote from San Diego: "In reply to your inquiry of the 9th instant, I have to say that I passed Mackay on the Yuma Desert. I had but a moment's time with him. Hhe was on his way to some mines in Arizona, and has since gone to Mexico" [MTP].

December 20 Sunday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Charles Webster, stressing the importance of securing a contract with Mrs. Grant for the publication, now planned a year ahead, of General Grant's letters to his wife. Sam was afraid there'd be a demand for an even higher royalty or an offer to take in Fred Grant as a partner. Did Webster want Sam "to come down & ask for the letters?" Or, simply to come and consult about a plan. Sam also wanted Webster to secure the Pope's book through Dana of the New York Sun [MTP].

In Auburndale, Mass., Howells wrote to Sam about bringing his daughter for a visit [MTHL 2: 548].

Charles Hopkins Clark wrote: "Your note is received and with photographic information is transmitted to Mr Osgood / Your kind and characteristic suggestion about the Library of Humor comes with a pleasant Christmas flavor and I appreciate and am much obliged for the offer" [MTP].

December 21 Monday – Sam wrote a short note from New York City to Charles Webster, directing him to re-ship a Memoirs, vol. 1 to Mrs. W. M. Laffan, as the first one was lost, and to send tree-calf books to Mrs. Grant for her autograph [MTP].

December 22 Tuesday – The N.Y. Times article of Dec. 5, 1886 recalls this previous New England Society Dinner and the "Trick" Sam played on William M. Evarts. This is in the 1886 entry, but should also be in the Dec. 22, 1885 entry. Sam was in New York on that day, though the 1885 Times article covering the dinner says nothing of Sam or Evarts.

James W. Riley for the Indianapolis Journal wrote "With this, I mail to you a Christmas book just printed here" [MTP].

December 23 Wednesday – Julian Hawthorne wrote, Hawthorne to Author's Club before Dec. 10 enclosed. He enclosed a notice that balloting on Will Carleton would be postponed until after Dec. 31. Hawthorne's tiny hand shows he agreed and thanked Sam for his proxy and letter [MTP].

C.A. Martin wrote to criticize Sam's Century article, "The Private History of a Campaign That Failed." "I am very sorry you published such a story....If you have a boy I hope he has not read this shameful story of cowardice & folly..." [MTP]. Note: luckily, Sam did not have a boy (editors need humor also).

William H. Sage wrote. The letter is torn away top & bottom leaving only a paragraph referring to Joe Twichell as a new member and something about $100 [MTP].

December 24 Thursday – From New York City, Sam sent best wishes to Joe and Harmony Twichell:

“Livy & I love you both, & fervently wish you a long & happy life, & eventually a sufficient family” [MTP].

Note: The Twichells had NINE children.

Sam also wrote to Francis Wayland, dean of Yale Law School, asking if he knew Warner T. McGuinn (1859-1937), a Negro student there:

Do you know him? And is he worthy? I do not believe I would very cheerfully help a white student who would ask a benevolence of a stranger, but I do not feel so about the other color. We have ground the manhood out of them, & the shame is ours, not theirs; & we should pay for it.

If this young man lives as economically as it is the duty & should be the pride of one to do who is straitened, I would like to know what the cost is, so that I may send 6, 12, or 24 months' board, as the size of the bill may determine.

You see he refers to you, or I would not venture to intrude.

Note: Sam met McGuinn briefly during a visit to Yale a few weeks before he wrote to Dean Wayland. I have not pinpointed the date of this meeting; Sam passed through New Haven many times on his trips back and forth to New York City. (See Fishkin 103-4; she gives 1862 as the year of McGuinn's birth, and states that Sam paid the year and a half remaining in McGuinn's studies at Yale.)

Also, on or about this day, Sam sent a one-liner to Howells and enclosed a note from Charles H. Clark, thanking him for the offer of final payment for his work on the “Library of Humor,” but was it finished?

“It is all finished, ain't it? Write & tell him so, Howells” [MTP].

Orion and Mollie Clemens wrote: Mollie: “Nothing but your being here, could give us more pleasure than the word that you expect to come.” Orion: “Bring all of the children and stay all summer. You all and Ma can have the second story” [MTP].

George P. Lathrop wrote enclosing the same notice that Julian Hawthorne sent (see Dec. 23 entry) [MTP].

Douglas Taylor wrote for The Typothetae, Annual Celebration of Franklin's Birthday. Although he'd rec'd Sam's decline to dine on Jan. 18, 1886, he still had hopes [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Typothetae – yes”

December 25 Friday – Christmas – Sam also inscribed six volumes (originally three but rebound) of Our Living World by Rev. John George Wood, adapted by Joseph B. Holder, M.D., to daughter Clara: In volumes 1, 2, and 4: “Clara Clemens / Christmas / 1885. / From Papa”; in volume 3: “Clara Ben Clemens / Christmas / 1885. / From Papa” [Slotta 46]. Note: see Twain's to the publisher of these books, Selmar Hess July 6, 1885.

Sam also inscribed Personal Memoirs of U.S. Grant, vol. 1 to Ward Foote: “To / Mr. Ward Foote / with the compliments of the publishers. / per / S. L. Clemens / of the firm. / Christmas, 1885” [MTP].

Sam also inscribed Poems of Oliver Wendell Holmes (1881) to Livy: “Livy L. Clemens / from S. L. C. / December, 1885” [MTP].

Julia Dent Grant (Mrs. Ulysses S. Grant) presented Sam with a set of Grant's Memoirs with a special binding of tree calf with morocco slipcase. It was also inscribed: “For / Mr. S.L. Clemens / with the compliments of / Julia D. Grant / New York / Dec. 25th 1885” [Christie's, Lot 103 Sale 1720 Nov. 26, 2006].

Charles Webster wrote about “a few galleys of proof” he'd taken which seemed “so changed and patched that it made” him “nervous.” He objected to changes and strike outs Col. Grant made [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote Christmas wishes [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env., “Mighty bright xmas ‘85”

Prof. Francis Wayland of Yale College wrote from N. Haven. “I think the colored youth is a promising case & deserving of help from someone. I will take the opinion of some of my associates & write you again very soon. I am glad you are interested in the matter & thank you for writing to me” [MTP].

December 26 Saturday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Howells, who wrote Dec. 20 that “Mrs. Howells doesn’t foresee her way” to come for the P&P play Sam and the children were re-staging in January, but that he would come and bring his daughter, Mildred (Pilla), a friend of Susy’s and Clara’s. Sam responded.

“Good—we claim you & Pilla, then, for Jan. 13, since we can’t get Mrs. Howells too. Everything is now planned, & the several guests’ beds appointed them, in Mrs. Clemens’s methodical fashion.”

To Howells’ idea of planting a humorous article in Life (then a humor magazine) or Puck on Aldrich not being 60, Livy suggested they wait a year, since “it would look like a burlesque & would pain Dr. Holmes” [MTP]. Note: Holmes had been one of four who wrote for the Nov. 28 Critic article on Sam’s 50th, supplying a witty verse.

Sam also wrote to an unidentified person on a matter of his “feeble little poverty-stricken joke,” the content of which is unclear.

“Whenever I have to explain a joke, I always charge the price of a thermometer for it. But in this instance, if you will send me one of those boxes, I will return you a thermometer” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles L. Tiffany & Co.

“The watch which Mrs. Clemens bought of you some days ago keeps too much time, sometimes, & the rest of the time it doesn’t keep any. Will you please take out its present works & put in some of a more orthodox character. It goes to you today” [MTP].

December 27 Sunday – Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam & Livy, “hard to sit down and write an acknowledgment of those xmas gifts you and the dear children sent me...I was deeply touched” [MTP].

December 28 Monday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Jervis II, Julia O., and Ida Langdon, his nephew and nieces, thanking them for the “Spain” book, which Sam,

“...more wanted than any other book that could be named. It gives me nightly peace, now, & I think of you when I read it. / We have all been skating on the river today; no, Susy hasn’t; she has a sore throat; but the other three of us had a good time” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to James B. Pond, who wrote earlier with another generous offer for Sam to give more readings.

“Goway!—you & his reverence. Tempt me not.

I have two engagements—one to a banquet, the other to read—and that’s all I’m going to do this winter” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster, about alterations in volume two of Grant’s Memoirs and “avoiding Badeau’s language.” Had Webster seen Charles A. Dana of the New York Sun yet? (It was through Dana that negotiations for the Pope’s book would be obtained.) “It’s a clear $100,000,” Sam wrote, meaning the profit from the Pope’s book.

“Strike—for that book, & also for the letters; for it is best that those be settled before I talk with the proprietors of the third book I spoke of—a book which we must have. With the priesthood to help, Dana’s book is immense.” Note: That “third book” was most likely Rollin Daggett’s book of Hawaiian myths and legends written with King Kamehameha V.

Charles Webster wrote that Goodwin had paid $730; the thousand dollar note was all paid [MTP].

December 29 Tuesday – Sam wrote from Hartford to Mr. Handy, declining an offer of some sort.

“What with business & idleness unsystematically mixed, I seem to have to keep humping myself all the time” [MTP]. Note: Handy is not further identified. The famous songwriter by that name would have only been 12 years old.

Sam also wrote to Charles Webster. He made a brief reference to some savings from their “terra cotta experiments” (Kaolatype); about putting extra cash into government bonds for a short time since the bankers and Samuel G. Dunham probably would not want to be paid early; and about seeing Dana on the Pope’s book, the percentages of profits to offer (50 percent to 67 ½, if necessary). If Webster wasn’t able to go immediately he was to telegraph Sam and he would go down and manage things through William Laffan [MTP].

December 30 Wednesday – In Auburndale, Mass., Howells wrote to Sam that the “Library of Humor” was complete “except about 10 or 20 short biographical notes that” he could “readily attend to; that Clark’s work was done, and well done....” Howells repeated that he and his daughter would be there on Jan. 13 for the P&P play [MTHL 2: 549]. Note: it’s likely this letter reached Sam on the last day of the year.

Orion Clemens wrote about writing Puss and Ma improving [MTP].

Francis Wayland of Yale College wrote “McGuinn can manage everything but his board, which he can secure for $3.50 per week—with an excellent colored man—the College Carpenter....McGuinn is very studiou & well behaved...”[MTP]. Warner T. McGuinn was a colored student whom Sam supported through law school.

December 31 Thursday – Sam noted:

I’m out of the woods. On the last day of the year I had paid out $182,000 on the Grant book and it was totally free from debt [Salsbury 216 from Harpers].

William C. Prime wrote from NYC. “I heartily appreciate your great kindness. I would much rather call on you at your convenienc, than to give you the trouble of fulfilling an appointment at meine [MTP].

December, late – Fishkin refers to Sam speaking for Yale’s Kent Club, Yale Law School, New Haven, Conn., but does not give a date or a topic. Warner T. McGuinn introduced Sam [103-4.]

During this period, Susy Clemens began a biography of her father. The unfinished work was later included as part of Twain’s Autobiography.

Sam wrote on back: “close of account up to beginning of Grant book. Dec. 31, ’85” [MTP 1885 financial file].

Editor's note: The close of 1885 is a propitious division for this work, both in number of pages and in the life of Samuel Clemens, who was at the highest point of his success, with several best selling books behind him, immense success with the release of Grant's Memoirs, and the future pregnant with possibilities as a publisher and writer. In February of 1886 Julia Grant received the largest royalty payment ever made in U.S publishing history. All told, some $450,000 would eventually be hers. Sam's reputation was never stronger. In the days ahead, he would face losses, bankruptcy, tragedy and bitterness; but as the sun set on 1885, Sam had obtained wealth, respectability, the love of a devoted family and close friends, plus the admiration of millions at home and abroad.

I am frightened at the proportions of my prosperity.

The index of the second edition, Vol. I is organized alphabetically, not chronologically, and follows the standards set in Vols 2-4, first edition. The following have not been indexed: fictional characters, most newspaper articles and subheadings (especially from the San Francisco Call), all subjects of all letters, whether paraphrased, summarized, or quoted, as well as persons and places within autobiographical dictation summaries See AMT I: for more on specifics. Not all subjects listed under Autobiographical Dictations have been indexed, but many have. These summaries were taken from AMT or Mark Twain in Eruption and are not comprehensive.

More recent updates may be found at MarkTwainDaybyDay.webs.com. This edition’s index now includes books, plays and other literary works, as well as the authors of those works. Readers may seek up to date bibliographies for Samuel Clemens’ vast array of writings, including the on-line site of Camfield’s Oxford Companion to Mark Twain. Also, Thomas Tenney’s Mark Twain, A Reference Guide (with many supplements) is still a central reference for works written about Clemens. Alan Gribben’s Mark Twain’s Library: A Reconstruction is an excellent source for Sam’s literary interests and ownership of a vast library of works; many literary works and literary criticisms are beyond the scope of this work.

This index focuses on persons and places, with lesser emphasis on events and subjects, such as baseball or International Copyright efforts. Those who corresponded with Sam are indexed; locations are limited to those Sam stayed or planned to visit. Whenever possible, surname, first name and middle initial or middle name are listed. In some cases these are unknown; some individuals may be double listed, when it was undetermined if they were different people, such as a “Mrs.” listing and a maiden name. If Sam referred to someone in a letter and only the last name is given, and no other reference was found, then the last name only is indexed, if it is all that’s known. Merchants and commercial firms, when named as “John B. Smith, Plumber,” are alphabetized and indexed in the same order as the literal company name, in this case under “John” not “Smith.” Likewise, “Wm. H. Jackson & Co.” as “Wm” not as “William” or “Jackson.”

Mark Twain’s major literary works, may be found directly by name of the work. His minor works, such as essays, sketches, poems, as well as a sprinkling of his interesting events, opinions and experiences may be found as sub headings under Clemens, Samuel L.: Sub headings are indented and underlined; sub-sub headings are doubly indented, etc. ALL SUB HEADINGS ARE SHADED. The principal subheadings for Clemens are:

Many listings are mere mentions; some significant, some trivial. In a day-by-day chronology, much of a trivial nature is included, which scholars and researchers may ultimately judge, in context, to be significant. Many speeches, readings and lectures are indexed, but these are not meant to be complete. Readers should seek individual entries in a given timeframe for more specifics. Many readings included several set pieces, and not all lectures were such in the common meaning of the term at that time.

The index of a book should always be written by the author, even though the book itself should be the work of another hand. — Attributed to M.T. by Robert Underwood Johnson, Remembered Yesterdays, p 190n1.
