Acknowledgments

This four volume work could not have been achieved if it wasn't for the assistance and encouragement of the following esteemed personages, some now departed:

Thomas A. Tenney
Louis J. Budd
Victor Fischer and Robert Hirst of the Mark Twain Project
Mark Woodhouse of Elmira College
JoDee Benussi
Holger Kersten
Kevin Mac Donnell
Robert Slotta

Many other friends, scholars, readers and family have encouraged me in countless ways. If I've forgotten any, it doesn't mean they are forgetful.

*Scholar, editor, friend who made this work possible.
This volume completes his vision.*

What a wee little part of a person's life are his acts and his words! His real life is led in his head, and is known to none but himself. All day long, and every day, the mill of his brain is grinding, and his thoughts, not those other things, are his history. His acts and his words are merely the visible, thin crust of his world, with its scattered snow summits and its vacant wastes of water — and they are so trifling a part of his bulk! a mere skin enveloping it. The mass of him is hidden — it and its volcanic fires that toss and boil, and never rest, night nor day. These are his life, and they are not written, and cannot be written. Every day would make a whole book of eighty thousand words — three hundred and sixty-five books a year. Biographies are but the clothes and buttons of the man — the biography of the man himself cannot be written.

Foreword/Testimonials

“David H. Fears’s log of Samuel Clemens’ life is often downright interesting in itself for Twainians. Furthermore, they will get a heightened sense of the whirligig he somehow shaped into an ongoing presence—his now well-known business activities, his tireless socializing, his dealings with plumbers, and his paying bills for groceries (including pilsener beer and cigars, of course). As for Mark Twain authors, Fears will help resolve some cruxes while setting up others unsuspected until now. I’m envious that my generation didn’t have this resource when we were starting out.” – LOUIS J. BUDD – Professor Emeritus at Duke University, author of Mark Twain: Social Philosopher

“More fascinating and far better documented than any existing biography of Mark Twain, this study provides a window into every waking—and for that matter, sleeping—moment of Twain’s hyperactive life. Many scholars before David Fears had contemplated undertaking this staggeringly daunting but incredibly useful project....All students of Mark Twain should give heartfelt thanks for this masterful accomplishment. Fears interweaves even Twain’s most quotidian activities into a textured fabric, threading helpful explanations where needed. This book now qualifies as the single most essential reference work in Mark Twain scholarship. We will be indebted to David Fears forever.” – ALAN GRIBBEN – Author of Mark Twain’s Library: A Reconstruction

“Mr. Fears must be fearless! To undertake such an immense project certainly requires courage. Going day-by-day in Twain’s life gives valuable information regarding Twain’s multi-faceted literary, business, and speculative career. Despite the short length of the quotations the flavor of Twain is there: his attention to household matters, his caring role as husband and father, his experience with publishers, the wide-ranging friendships and his biting wit. Fears’ volumes will be a major contribution to Mark Twain Studies.” – HOWARD G. BAETZOLD – Author of Mark Twain & John Bull

“In these pages there is a rich record of the life, works, and Twain’s family and friends.” – THOMAS A. TENNEY, author of Mark Twain A Reference Guide; editor of The Mark Twain Journal.

Introduction

When reaching the end of a long journey, there is opportunity to reflect upon the ground covered. I know the comprehensiveness and approach to this work has evolved since I began in 2005 (actually it began in 1971 with the discovery that Clemens came through my hometown, Portland, Oregon, in 1895). That's life—just when we get wise it's time to check out. When our great jobs are finished, we are the most capable of producing them.

This final volume is greatly informed by the generous use of Isabel V. Lyon's journal entries (variously called "journals," "daily reminders," and "datebooks" herein called simply "journal" entries), which have never been substantially published but which hold a wealth of detail and observation on Clemens' life. Hill used a few excerpts, as did Trombley and a few other historians, but nearly all of her entries from 1905-1908 are now in this volume. As a primary source Lyon's journals are rich in persons, places, episodes and details relating to Mark Twain, and they provide us with an indispensable peek into his daily life for these last years, years which were amazingly full. The MTP graciously allowed me copies of the newer transcriptions (page numbers are thus different than the excerpts which Gribben used in his seminal work), not to mention access to many letters, notes and sources. This volume alone should dispel the image of a bitter Twain sitting alone with little going on in his life during his last years. If anything, after the death of Livy, Twain's life became fuller, his circle of contacts broadened, and his interest in life expanded. Certainly his uncensored opinions flourished. Stormfield became his country sanctuary and also his "hotel" for numerous guests, gatherings ("Doe luncheons," etc.) and of course for his "Aquarium" of young ladies.

It should be noted that Lyon struck out many short passages and a few longer ones that now seem either excessive in their praise of Twain, or that reveal her personal struggles. There are also a few emendations with dates as late as 1938. These are the result of plans to publish some sort of work, plans that never reached fruition. When the strikeout reveals opinion or other important information, they are included; when a simple edit of word choice without connotation, they are omitted. It cannot be determined just when the edits were applied. She also wrote and later struck out passages such as that of June 28, 1906 about various persons (this referred to about Albert Bigelow Paine, which shows a definite change of opinion at a later time). Lyon also disposed of the 1909 journal, and may have also selectively removed others, clearly concerned about how she would be regarded. Today she remains a controversial figure in Clemens' life. The reader can find judgment coming down on either side of the saint/devil Lyon-Ashcroft-Clara Clemens-Twain dustups. In this regard, as in most others, it is not my purpose to take editorial position, but to present the primary and secondary opinions for researchers and others to use in formulating their understanding. In each case—Clemens included—we are dealing with human beings, fragile at times and strong at others. I will leave the judgments to biographers who glory in that sort of work. There is enough material for any biographer or scholar to pick and choose in arguing any case. Biographers, I might add, have the luxury of picking and choosing what material to include. This work has included the mundane, the trivial with the significant. Who knows, after all, just what details will prove significant to some researcher from the twenty-third century?

As this last volume goes to press, I am encouraged by the interest and purchase by top American Universities and scholars. I am content in knowing this reference work will stand at least as long as any other work on Twain, and hopefully, will be more helpful.

A second edition of Vol. I (1835-1885) is needed, since so much additional material has been found even beyond that of the addenda items online, and since the incoming letters were not examined for that volume. I quickly learned that incomings are critical to understanding Twain's replies (most of his letters are replies), and so did examine all available incomings for subsequent volumes. But if that edition is never completed then perhaps some young researcher will follow me and get the job done. I am young only in my driving habits and my smart mouth. The rest is eroding.

Much information lies beyond the scope of this work: most letters outside the immediate family, or further biographical information on hundreds of Twain's contacts. Each one has a story to tell, though many are hidden and defy research efforts. There are literally hundreds of these letters in the MTP files. For example, many survive from Pamela Moffett to her son Samuel E. Moffett. There are also other letters from and to persons outside the immediate Clemens family that might shed light on some aspects of Twain's life.

Inevitably there are errors in these volumes. How could there not be? But every effort was made to lay down an accurate historical daily record, something I've only seen done for one other famous American, Herman Melville, and that a bit cryptic.

I hope to continue putting items up in addenda for all four volumes online:

Conventions Used

‡ – The double dagger was used in reprints of vol. I and II to designate additions or corrections in later print runs. These now may now be accessed online:

<http://marktwaindaybyday.webs.com>

Dates: I have followed the conventions used by the University of California Press on the volumes of Mark Twain's Letters, except I offer the day of the week, which in some cases is helpful. To wit:

October 5 Thursday – Sources indicate this is a confirmed date, or a deduced date from events or other evidence. Firm dates come before conjectured or circa dates and date ranges.

October 3? Tuesday –

The question mark indicates a conjecture of October 3. Conjecture dates are listed separately following firm dates.

June 24–29 Saturday –

A span of dates joined by a dash indicates a less specific conjecture: the date or dates of composition are thought to fall within this span. Day of the week is ascribed to the last date in the span. The last date in a period is noted by its day of the week. Such entries are listed separately.

June 24 to 29 Saturday – Not a conjecture, but an assertion that some event ran from June 24 through June 29. Such date ranges are listed separately.

May 2 and 3 Friday –

Not a conjecture, but an assertion that the event or activity occurred at least in part on both days. Such inclusive dates are listed separately.

May 1 Friday ca. –

A conjecture of circa a date, month, year or season. Similar to May 1st? but with less specificity. May also be specified as “on or before,” or “on or after.” Circa dates are listed separately.

February –

Items for which only a month is known, or for magazine-type publications issued for a given month.

Items for which a year is known, but not a month or date.

Note: Dates are arranged in order; spans of dates and single dates are sorted by the first date in a span. Conjectured dates are usually separate from known or consensus dates. Thus there are separate entries for May 1 Friday, and May 1? Friday; May 17 Thursday would follow May 12–20 Sunday. Occasionally entries are labeled “Mid-month” or “End of Month” or “Early Spring,” etc. Confirmed dates are listed first.

Attribution/Names:

Where unsigned articles have been ascribed to Sam Clemens by major researchers, I have followed their lead but specified, “attributed.” “Sam” when shown without surname is used throughout to mean Mark Twain/ Samuel L. Clemens; likewise “Livy” designates Olivia Louise Clemens; “Susy” has been chosen for Olivia Susan Clemens over the spelling “Susie,” which is seen in earlier references to her. “Jane Clemens” is used for Sam’s mother, “Pamela” or “Pamela Moffett” for his sister, “Orion” for his brother. For certain dominant people in Sam’s life, or dominant within certain periods, last names only are given: Howells, Twichell, Cable, etc. Middle names are now given if known; if not, a middle initial; some middle initials are omitted, when reference is clearly to one person, such as Hjalmar Boyesen. “Frank” is often given for “Francis”; “Joe” for Joseph, when the person was a familiar figure in Sam’s life, such as Joe Twichell, Joe Goodman, Frank Bliss, etc. There are exceptions, as when H.H. Rogers is used for Henry Huttleston Rogers, etc.

Citations:

MLA formatting is followed for in-text and Works Cited, with exceptions made for MT “standard” abbreviations such as MTBus or MTLTP (see abbreviations), and follow the MT Project’s conventions when possible. Use of [brackets] for in-text citations, as well as editor’s inserts within quoted text. When the writer uses [brackets] these are replaced by parentheses or {curly brackets}.

Some exceptions are made to standard MT scholarly convention, such as MTL with volume numbers used for the MTP volumes, whereas this abbreviation in the past was used for Paine’s volumes of letters, which I cite as MTLP, if I use them at all. A few conventions are modified, such as LM instead of LoM for Life on the Mississippi. See Abbreviations for the full list.

Nearly every date given requires a citation, though some are calculated from sources. Because both primary and secondary sources are used, errors and omissions may have been introduced. Hopefully, more study of primary sources will amend such shortcomings.

Editor’s opinions:

The few opinions on events or interpretation of an entry follow all citation designators as well as extra information following “Note”; These remarks are offered as simply one man’s view, and every effort has been made to keep them short and pithy, without obstacle to the meaning of the listing. Of course, I hold title to many more opinions than the few exposed here. Admittedly, a work of this scope carries errors and inconsistencies. That’s what future appendixes, supplements and editions are for. Ultimately, online status for the whole work may happen.

Misc: Bold Entries, Italics, Strike-outs, Quotations, use of sic:

All references to dates are bold, save for those within quotes. Also bold are first mentions of persons and places (including lecture halls, etc.) within each date entry. Subjects and titles are not in bold. Indented are letter, newspaper excerpts (boxed) and longer commentaries from biographers and scholars. This aids ease of reading, finding one’s place and appearance. Italics are used when the primary source uses underlines, except for newspaper reports using underlines. They are also used for all inscriptions noted, especially those in books given as gifts. When Sam Clemens uses strikeouts to convey his real or additional meaning, those are usually retained — all other strikeouts, thought to be drafting strikeouts, are not included. Due to all the variant spellings of the day, use of vernacular, and the many misspellings by some writers, the use of sic has been limited to a few instances. Some surnames were spelled in more than one way. Choices were made to stick with one variant, trying to follow the MTP's examples, or sometimes to put the variant in parentheses.

Corrected sources and method used; the “not in” listings:

Inevitably, sources contain errors. When an error is perceived it is sometimes, but not always, reported. This is not to point any blame or to discredit any source or author, but merely to report findings. Prejudice is given to contemporary works, with Internet sources taking a much lower priority. Apologies to egos aside, the errors, omissions and oddities should be reported.

Also, some notable material is missing from standard works. Whenever possible these are pointed out, as in “Not in Gribben,” or “Not in Scharnhorst,” to save the reader/researcher effort in tracing back material. When errors were found in the MTP catalogue, such as letters to Livy or Whitmore that were catalogued as to SLC, these are left out or noted. The MTP catalogue misleads when it lists a letter from a person for a company — one particular listing found was a letter from a man FOR the U.S. Senate. Upon review it was discovered the man was a clerk in Washington using Senate letterhead to write asking for Sam's autograph — hardly a letter FOR the Senate. In every such case the language in this work has been changed to, for example, “John Doe wrote on US Senate letterhead asking for Sam's autograph for his daughter,” etc. Also, many listings from the Charles Webster & Co., which are nothing more than monthly financial reports of several types, often without corresponding letters, have been catalogued by the MTP under the month of the report. These have been placed in the following month here, as they could not have been sent until the month closed — thus, March 1889's monthly report is placed as being sent in April, 1889. In all such cases a strict chronology is attempted. Is this an error on the MTP's part? No, merely a different way to categorize these entries. Likewise, when a pack of Daily Reports was sent, the MTP dates these as a range of dates and places them at the first date. We place them at the last date and note the range within that entry, since they could not have been mailed earlier. Several such changes have been made. These do not reflect on the scholarship of the MTP or of any other source.

1905 – Editor’s note: 1905 proves to have the most pages in these volumes of any year to date; it is rich with activities, letters, writings, opinions, and Twain’s new status as American commentator, without the influence of his late wife, Olivia. Yet, if one surveys the major biographies, the singular event covered was the seventieth birthday gala. Paine does not include much for this year; nor does Kaplan. Powers seems to lose his enthusiasm for much of the last few years. Sheldon begins his work in 1906. Only Trombley offers much on 1905, and her study focuses on Isabel Lyon. Lystra writes a half-dozen or so pages with a similar focus. It is hoped that this treatment fills in many of the blanks ignored by biographers.

Sam wrote a sketch, “Jane Austen” that remained unpublished until 1999 [Who Is Mark Twain? xxvi, 47-50; Auerback 109-20].

Sam also wrote “A.B.C. Lesson,” a question-and-answer dialogue defending Standard Oil at the expense of the Republican party (not part of Clemens’s Autobiography) [Camfield’s Bibliog.]. Note: unpublished in Twain’s lifetime, the piece appeared first in Mark Twain in Eruption, 1940.

Budd puts as “probable,” Sam’s short allegory, “In the Animal’s Court” to this year [Collected 2: 1010]. Note: unpublished during Twain’s lifetime, it was collected in Letters From The Earth 1962.

Camfield’s Bibliography puts 1905 as the year Sam wrote “Eve Speaks.” Budd lists it with other 1905 items and writes “the date of composition has not been determined. It first appeared in 1923 in Europe and Elsewhere, Albert Bigelow Paine, ed.” [Collected 2: 1011].

Baender dates the composition, “The Intelligence of God,” to 1905. The essay restates ideas that appear in Twain’s later writings, some of which are collected in Letters From the Earth (1962) [What Is Man? and Other Philosophical Writings (1973)].

Sam’s essay, titled by Paine as “The Ten Commandments” was written in 1905 or 1906. The idea here is that man requires commandments in order to “have the pleasure of breaking them” [Fables of Man 121].

“Zola’s La Terre” was written in 1905 and is one of five brief essays that Bernard DeVoto grouped and titled “The Damned Human Race” (1962). Victor Doyno writes: “Twain’s book report proceeds in a concrete, sequential mental style, leading to a generalization that Americans can be despised as much as the French. Twain pretends a grudging respect for Emile Zola’s realistic talents, believing that Zola’s ability to awaken a sleeping disgust should merit a grudge. In this involuted way, Twain comments on human nature” [MT Encyc. 202].

Listed by the MTP as “after 1904” is a one-sentence note from Sam to C. & Co.: “I have no doubt that Mr. Bliss’s bill is all right and should be paid and his receipt taken [MTP].

Also listed as possible for this year is a poem written to Andrew Carnegie:

I saw Esau kissing Kate
 In fact we all 3 saw—
 I saw Esau, he saw Kate,

And she saw I saw Esau.

† Mark

Telephone

3907 Gramercy

(not in the book.) [MTP]. Note: see also Sam's Dec. 2, 1905 to Carnegie, in which he makes a similar remark about this phone number not being in the book.

Another listed as possible for 1905 is a short note (likely a telegram) to Harper & Brothers: "Please Correct bad errors in the last two paragraphs and go ahead. Collect / Clemens" [MTP].

Another possible 1905 (until July 1) is a letter by Sam (sent anonymously) to John M. Hay.

Sent to John Hay anonymously. / Dear & Honored Sir: / I never hear any one speak of you & your long role of illustrious services in other than terms of pride & praise—and out of the heart. I think I am right in believing you to be the only man in the civil service of the country the cleanness of whose motives is never questioned by any citizen, & whose acts proceed always upon a broad & high plane, never by accident or pressure of circumstance upon a narrow or low one. There are majorities that are proud of more than one of the nation's great servants; but I believe, & I think I know, that you are the only one of whom the entire nation is proud. Proud & thankful.

Name & address are lacking here, & for a purpose: to leave you no chance to make my words a burden to you and a reproach to me, who would lighten your burdens if I could, not add to them [MTP].

Note: John Hay had the good fortune to be personal secretary to Abraham Lincoln, and to serve as Secretary of State under Roosevelt. After a long disease, he died on July 1, 1905 with a high legacy of government service and influence. In 1904 he was voted to the American Academy of Arts and Letters. Sam was undoubtedly aware of Hay's illness and also his legacy, and this note was his tribute.

Another possible 1905: In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. Harry Rogers); only the envelope survives [MTP].

Isabel Lyon also wrote from Dublin, N.H. for Sam to Mrs. Sag:

Mr. Clemens wishes me to write for him explaining that he is so very very busy during these weeks that he does not write any letters himself. He wishes me to say that he will be very glad to see Dr. Henderson and Mr. Montgomery if they will call here. He is always at liberty by five o'clock, but if they come at half past four, he will see them with pleasure then. And will you kindly ask them to say that Mr. Clemens will see them, when they give their names to the maid. Sometimes if Mr. Clemens is tired he will say that he cannot see people—but he will see your friends—and if the maid says that Mr. Clemens is busy, then they are to say—"But he will see us."

Mr. Clemens wishes me to tell you that he does not go anywhere where there is jollity; he has no heart for it—and he is living very quietly here. You will be glad to know that Jean is very well, and enjoying this beautiful Dublin. And we have good news of Miss Clemens's continually improving condition [MTP]. Note: Professor Archibald Henderson (1877-1963) at this time studying at Cambridge; in 1908 became Professor of mathematics at the University of N. Carolina. Stuart Montgomery, Harvard student, cousin of Maria C. Gay (Mrs. Julius Gay), and traveling companion to Henderson; see ca. June 29, 1905 entry.

Sam also wrote to Sebastiano V. Cecchi, his business advisor in Florence.

In the bearer of this note I introduce to you my friend and legal advisor Mr. John Larkin. I know he will find my law-squabbles over there very interesting, & I hope you will tell him about them; & if it comes handy I would like him to know Senator Luchini & Signor Traverso. I am still waiting for Dr. Kirch to sue. He seems a mighty slow man,—except when he is committing depredations on customers [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Harper & Brothers [MTP].

Sam wrote to George B. Harvey: “If you & Howells cable Sir Henry’s friends, please include me” [MTP].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam no date except “Thursday”:

Dear old Man: / I’ve got two rooms and a bath for you and me at the Laurel House Lakewood for a week, leaving here at 3.30 Saturday—It’s only an hour and a half and we can be as quiet and peaceful-like as we please. The change will do you good. Do go if you possibly can. You only need a bag or small trunk & I will pick you up on my way to the station. / Faithfully ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Miss Emma C. Thursby.

“Of course you meant us a courtesy—of that there is no room for doubt—& for that impulse we sincerely thank you. We have nothing against Count Massiglia, whom we have never met; but a meeting with the Countess would be unpleasant to us & not gratifying to her” [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to an unidentified person seeking autographs.

Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him and say that he has received some sheets for auto-graphing from you. Mr. Clemens has been so often the victim of those who use other people’s letter heads that he has been obliged to ask for identification in the shape of a letter of introduction, when requests come to him from those who are unknown to him [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to an unidentified “Dear Madam” who sought “assistance...in the publication of Frau Hempel’s grammar...” Sam declined to write a word of appreciation [MTP].

Sam also inscribed his photograph to Joseph E. Hinds: “Sincerely Yours / Mark Twain / Mr. Jos. E. Hinds.” [MTP].

In late 1904 or 1905 Sam wrote, “The Fable of the Yellow Terror,” which was not published in his lifetime but included in Fables of Man p.426-9. Also in Fables is “Flies and Russians,” p. 421-4, written on the same type of paper as the former sketch and thought to have been written about the same time.

In 1905 or 1906 Alice Minnie Herts of The Educational Alliance wrote to Clemens. The letter is missing the first page. The second page: “...because I feel that Providence has given us your assistance and your interest, which we prize so highly” [MTP].

In 1905 or 1906 Miss Margaret Heller wrote asking help in her wager that Mark Twain was “the wittiest person of the age” [MTP].

Joseph Lindon Smith for the Dublin Lake Club wrote from “Loon Point,” Dublin, N.H. to invite Clemens to a 4 o’clock address by Mr. Morimoto of Boston, tea afterwards. He apologized for not sending the invite sooner [MTP].

Joseph Lindon Smith also sent Sam another invitation, dated only “Wednesday afternoon,” this to a play, Ceatro Bambino for Friday at 4:30. “If the players (mostly children) can tempt you to their little play house, you, and your daughter, they will be as pleased as we Smiths” [MTP].

Albert Bushnell Hart wrote for the Emanuel Church of Dublin to inform Sam that Henry Copley Greene (who rented Sam his Dublin house in 1905) was an “originator” of the church [MTP].

After Dinner Stories by E.C. Lewis was published. Tenney: “In some of the stories MT’s name is used, but this collection is quite worthless as a source. Equal weight is given old chestnuts, possibly correct, and the apocryphal, such as MT's giving a neighbor permission to use his lawnmower so long as he didn't take it out of the yard" [MTJ Bibliographic Issue Number Four 42:1 (Spring 2004) 9].

Sigmund Freud's Jokes and their Relation to the Unconscious, p.230-1. Tenney: "cites 'an economy of piety' as a familiar humorous mechanism in MT's works, as when characters [in RI] are blown up or have a cow fall through the canvas roof of a cabin; furthermore, there is 'an economy of the feelings of piety' when we begin reading Mark Twain's (Burlesque) Autobiography and the fictional ancestors turn out to be scoundrels" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide First Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1977 p. 333-4].

Mary Ellen Wood, compiled Laurence and Eleanor Hutton / Their Books of Association (1905) privately printed, included on p. 66-7 Sam's letter to Hutton from Vienna for May 13, 1898; Twain related materials will also be found on p. 29, and 129 [Tenney: "A Reference Guide First Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1977 p. 334]. See Gribben p.342.

Talks in a Library with Laurence Hutton by Laurence Hutton: Tenney: "Contains silhouette of MT by Alice I. Bunner (facing p.6); MT a dinner guest (pp.22, 326); MT and Helen Keller's first meeting: 'He was peculiarly tender and lovely with her—even for Mr. Clemens—and she kissed him when he said good-by' (pp.390-91). On the night when the death of Bret Harte became known, 'he was discussed in a most feeling way in a monologue talk of an hour or two by Mark Twain,' who referred to him as 'Frank' Harte, thereby losing his audience, who did not realize he was talking about Bret Harte (p.470; also, tells of Harte's hearing about the "Jumping Frog" story and urging MT to publish it (p. 409). MT's introduction of Cable to a Hartford audience, anecdotes about Jean Clemens and Harriet Beecher Stowe, and two MT notes (pp. 419-21)" [Tenney 41].

January – In N.Y.C. Sam spent the last part of December and all of January in bed, recovering from another case of bronchitis, followed by attacks of gout in his feet [Jan. 8 Lyon to Whitmore; Jan. 25 to Crane].

Sam wrote to the International Plasmon Co., London

The only needful thing is to get Plasmon into the stomach—dissolved, or in clods, or petrified or any way, so it gets there. I had an eight years' dispute with dyspepsia, but when visiting England years since my Doctor ordered Plasmon to be added to my other food, and the enemy has not troubled me since [MTP].

Sam's essay "Concerning Copyright" first ran in the North American Review, p. 1-8 [Budd, Collected 2: 1009].

The only Mark Twain notebook still in private hands was auctioned by Sotheby's from Nick Karanovich's collection on June 19, 2003. The description:

A pocket-size notebook for 1905 with Clemens's autograph manuscript notes, memos, appointments, addresses, etc., written in ink on some 14 pages; with many other pages containing notes and other items by Albert Bigelow Paine, the whole notebook ("The Excelsior Diary 1905") containing about 61 leaves (2 x 4? in.; 51 x 105 mm), original maroon leather, neatly rebaked, wear to covers, one leaf (for March 26-31) torn out. The only Mark Twain notebook still in private hands. On the first page (for January 1-2) Clemens has listed thoughts and things to do. All are crossed through except for a one-line memo and the thought "The lack of money is the root of all evil." On the third page (for January 7-9) Clemens has written: "60 years ago, optimist & fool were not synonymous terms. This is a greater change than that wrought by science & invention. It is the mightiest change that was ever wrought in the world in any 60 years since creation." [Note: MTP now refers to this "excelsior" NB from the Karanovich sale, as NB47A; See entries, Jan. 1, 2, and 7 to 9].

Sometime during January Joe and Harmony Twichell visited for one night [Feb. 6 Lyon to Whitmore].

Outing Magazine published Clifton Johnson's article, "Mark Twain's Country," p. 433-40. Tenney: "On a visit to Hannibal and Florida, Missouri; illustrated with several photographs, including one of the front of the home of Tom Blankenship ('when he left home, it was to go to the penitentiary'). One old acquaintance called MT 'the most overrated man in America.... As a boy, Sam was just like other boys, except he might have been a little slower. He was considered blamed dull, to tell you the truth.' Another acquaintance remembered him as solitary, not interested in hunting and fishing with the other boys, although fond of exploring the cave. Both remembered his slow, drawling speech" [41].

Laurence Hutton's "The Literary Life," part V ran in The Critic for January. Beginning on p. 43, and on p. 53 Hutton's ill-gotten story about "an especially bound copy of 'The Prince and the Pauper,' with a peculiarly affectionate Twain inscription. See also picture of Helen Keller and her dog, "Phiz" on p. 44 [Google books online]. See insert.

Clemens inscribed his photograph to Dr. Edward Quintard: "To Edward Quintard, greeting & all good wishes./ One of the most striking differences between a cat & a lie is, that a cat has only nine lives.—Pudd'nhead Wilson's Calendar / Truly yours, Mark Twain. Jan. 1905" [MTP; Frogtown Books # 43101, AbeBooks Oct. 11, 2008].

January 1905-December 1909 – Sam wrote two drafts to be used to unidentified persons, thanking for a letter rec'd. In the first draft he saw no objection to the translation of Sam's article on JA "for private circulation," but that permission would have to come from Chatto & Windus; in the second draft he did not mention a specific work of his but referred the writer to Harper & Brothers [MTP]. Note: these two notes were likely boiler-plate to be used to many requests for use of Sam's work.

January 1 Sunday – Sam's notebook: contains a list of things to do lined through as if completed:

~~Ask about Congo.~~

~~And X's book.~~

~~Lacks loud humor~~ [NB 47A TS 1].

Isabel Lyon's journal: At midnight the wonderful tones of the river ocean steamer and factory whistles sent their great sound through the air and I leaned out to welcome the new year with oh a grateful heart. This morning Mr. Clemens was nervous after a wretched night and his crying out against "God Almighty and every member of the Ferin" was tragic. He has no patience with doctors, nor with nurses—all, all are quacks. He said "We'll invent ways, offensive ways to break the sabbath." —and we played cards. But first I read him a letter from Don Raffaello—a letter full of messages. And then after the reading of the letter Mr. Clemens talked of the Swindle of life. He has not been able to smoke much and that is too great a trial for any degree of comfort. Mrs. Rogers sent him 2 boxes of cigars; and Mr. Robert J. Collier sent him a lavish supply of most costly cigars—"Fuel" he called them, "for the new year."

In the afternoon mother and I went up to see some mediocre pictures, but they were pictures, and after tea Mr. Gilder came in with his sweet greetings—and after dinner we (Mr. C. and I) played cards until 11 o'clock [MTP: TS 34]. Note: There are two "journals" or "daily reminders" TS for 1905. The "reminder" was on a preprinted date form, like a diary; the TS does not carry page #s as does the "journal" but are herein added for clarity—the "reminder" TS is referred to henceforth as Isabel Lyon's journal #2, first entry for Jan. 11, 1905. No further distinction is made between "reminders" and journal entries. Examination was limited to TS's. The originals were not studied.

January 2 Monday Sam's notebook: contains an aphorism circled, followed by a list of things to do lined through as if completed:

The lack of money is the root of all evil.

~~Satan article:~~

~~Speak of FLYNT~~ [NB 47A TS 1].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Much of today has been spent in trying to find places for the books that are scattered—piled—on the library floor. Mr. Rogers came in this afternoon; and after he left I played cards with Mr. Clemens. It was restful. Mr. Clemens is better; coughs less and his gout pains are diminishing. I flew over to see mother for a few moments this evening and on my return we played cards until 11.

When Jean is in Mr. Clemens's room and we play cards—or don't—he gives a freer vent to his words and is therefore a dear delight. Tonight he had nothing but little “spot” cards, and he called them a “perfect puke of spot cards”—Ah, his bubbling is of a strength—Jean remonstrated and in a chuckle of joy he told about a man—a good man—who many years ago was stranded somewhere in Mexico without a cent. He hunted everywhere for work, and finally they offered him a chance to personate Christ in one of the religious processions depicting Christ on his way to Calvary. The street was lined with godless folk who pelted him with rotten eggs, bad bananas and hideous other things. The man stood it with great dignity until the storm was too hot, then putting down his cross he said, “If I wasn't personating God Almighty, I'd show yer a thing or two.” I think it was apropos of the fact that a “perfect puke of spot cards” was nothing to what Mr. Clemens could say if he were not upholding his dignity as Jean's father. That's what I think [MTP: TS 34-35].

January 3 Tuesday – Charles Langdon wrote to Sam, enclosing a check for $120, payment of coupons on bonds (Park Co. Montana, and General Electric Co.) which had been owned by Susie Clemens [MTP].

Sam's notebook:

~~Reduce p.c. on Congo.~~

~~Do you want Jean's new article?~~

Palimistry article [with hand pointing up to next page] [NB 47A TS 1].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Busy a good part of the day with the books in the library, and with a foray at Wanamaker's to find house and desk supplies. The morning paper brought the news that Gen. Stoessel has sent in a flag of truce and will abandon Port Arthur to the Japanese. The weather has changed from mild to severe with sleet that has made 5th Avenue terrible for the horses. Mr. Clemens sat up by the window this afternoon and after commenting on the bad climate, he said he “could make a better climate if he was drunk.” He seems quite helpless from the gout and nearly fell in reaching his arm chair. I caught him as his ankles gave way—and it alarmed me [MTP: TS 36].

A.W. Shaw wrote from Chicago to Sam to ask where he might obtain an original blue cloth copy of TS, as he had lost his copy [MTP].

January 4 Wednesday – The Aberdeen (S.D.) Daily News, p. 2, “Mark Twain's Pranks” reported reminiscences by Captain H. Lacy, who was born in Hannibal in 1839. Lacy claims it was not Jim Wolfe who was the victim of the famous skeleton-in-bed prank (sometime in the 1840s), but “a tramp printer named Snell,” who “blew into Hannibal one day and was given work on the paper.” Lacy claimed to be along on the prank; his account offers not only a different victim than has been imagined (see MTL 1: 18n4; also Ch. 23 TA) but a different outcome:

He was an uncommunicative sort of fellow, but a good worker and obedient. Sam decided to bring him out of his reserve and to do it borrowed a skeleton from a doctor's office and slipped it into the printer's bed. Then we got around to a window about bedtime to see what was going to happen. The print pulled off his shoes, piled his clothes over on the floor and blew out the light. The next thing we supposed would be a yell and a printer shooting out of the window in his nightshirt. But there wasn't anything of the sort. There was a sleepy yawn and:

We heard the ghastly bedmate of Snell fall to the floor, and then everything was quiet except for the snoring of the sleeping printer. The joke had failed, and we went up to our rooms in disgust.

Next day Snell didn't show up, and we began to feel a little hopeful that maybe the trick had worked after all. But we were again disappointed. Snell was in a gin mill, boiling drunk and having the time of his life.

“Killed er man deader'n a red Injun,” he yelled, “an' shell corpus fer dollar an' sheventy-five! Wow!”

“He had rolled the skeleton up in a sheet and sold it to another doctor!”

Sam's notebook:

Mr. C. Lewinhaupt

Hotel Monticello

35 W. 64th st

1390 Columbus (tel) [NB 47A TS 2]. Note: Swedish Count C. Lewenhaupt gave Sam osteopathic treatments beginning Mar. 25, 1905 for $2 per treatment. Lewenhaupt had been Henrick Kellgren's assistant in Sanna, Sweden, and likely met Clemens while the two men were in Vienna [C. Anderson 85]. See Lyon's journal for that date. See also a letter Clemens wrote to Count Claes Lewenhaupt for a dinner invite on Oct. 21, 1887 (vol. II).

Isabel Lyon's journal: “Today Mr. Clemens has not felt so well. His wretched nights full of gout, make his days full of a dull misery. The weather has been very cold. Much snow has fallen and I have spent many hours among the books collected from many quarters of the world” [MTP: TS 36].

Frank David Woollen wrote from Dayton, Ohio to Sam, offering “a friendly word in passing from a stranger,” after losing his wife at a young age. He enclosed a verse he'd written, “Day's End” [MTP].

January 5 Thursday – Literally thousands of articles, reprints, and mentions of Mark Twain appeared in American newspapers from coast to coast during this period. This tidbit, from the Dallas Morning News, p. 6, borrowed from an unspecified issue of Harper's Weekly:

What Is In a Name.

Mark Twain once went into a restaurant and sat down at a table near a solitary man who had just arrived and was giving his order to the waiter.

“Bring me some of the best broiled lobster you have in the house,” said the man. “Er—just mention my name to the cook—Mr. Sobble.”

The waiter bowed obsequiously, and turned to Mark Twain's order. The incident had not been lost on Mr. Clemens.

“Bring me half a dozen oysters,” he said. “Oh—just mention my name to each one of them—Mark Twain.” — Harper's Weekly.

[Note: A similar anecdote was found in Current Literature (Magazine) for June 1904].

Sam's notebook:

354 Marlboro st [NB 47A TS 2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Another drowsing lifeless day for Mr. Clemens. He has no interest in life or things and his day sleeping does not refresh him. Mr. Dunne (Mr. Dooley) came in today and greeted me cordially from among the dusty books. He wanted to see Mr. Clemens and ask him to go to a banquet down in Washington; but since that is quite impossible he will some day come for a talk with Mr. Clemens. He is agreeable [MTP: TS 36].

January 6 Friday – In San Remo, Italy, William Dean Howells wrote to Sam.

I have always been afraid you didn't get a letter I wrote you at Florence last June trying to say the things it is never any use to say. Ever since I had hoped you would let me hear from you. I have heard about you and your family from John [Howells] and others, and I know how in a general way you are getting more than your share of sorrow still. But I wish I could have some word from you, and I know it would help you to unpack your heart to me as you used to do.

It seems a poor joke of fate that I should be in Italy the year after you, and only twelve hours from Florence. We came down from London early in October and have been here ever since, threatening to go home by every boat from Genoa, but now probably meaning to stay till spring. I dread the New York [winter] for my wife, if we were plunged back into it, and Pilla would simply have to sail for Bermuda as soon as she arrived.... San Remo is a pretty good place to work for there isn't anything else to do, and I'm working away at the English material I stored up in the summer, turning it mostly into beeswax, I'm afraid. I wish I could see you, and about three other people in America, where I hope to stay if I ever get back. We've laid the ghost of ever living in Italy; New York is bad enough for me. — Do let me hear from you. Elinor and Pilla join me in love to you all. I hope you have encouraging reports of Clara [MTHL 2: 795]. Note: Howells was writing two travel books, London Films and Certain Delightful English Towns, etc. which would be published in 1906.

Kate Rogers Nowell wrote from NYC to Sam, sorry to hear of his illness, and asking him not to “trouble to sign these accompanying proofs, until you feel quite like it.” Nowell discussed his portrait in the Outlook. She told a tale of a co-worker lady who had been introduced to Clemens, “and she told him how much he looked like ‘Mark Twain’!” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mrs. Whitmore has sent me Richard Le Gallienne's last book [Painted Shadows (1904)]. This morning I took it in to Mr. Clemens and he was glad to see it, saying “an able cuss and writes deliciously.” Busy all morning over the check book—and hunting for 2 books that Mr. Clemens wants—“Letters of Robert E. Lee”—and a book by Mr. Prior. I haven't seen either of them. Mr. Rogers came in this afternoon and later I played cards with Mr. Clemens. Also I have another book, “The Queen's Quair”. I am fond of Hewlett's books. I ran in to see mother who was surreptitiously ironing in her tiny room and very gleeful too [MTP: TS 36]. Note: Recollections and Letters of General Robert E. Lee, by His Son, Captain Robert E. Lee (1904). Since the move to 21 Fifth Ave. Lyon noted she had not seen this book. Also: “[Gribben 404]. See Gribben's entry on Le Gallienne for An Old Country House, which he inscribed “S.L. Clemens, 1905, to I.V. Lyon, 1908” [404]. See also 1908 year entry for this inscription and gift to Isabel Lyon. The Queen's Quair or the Six Years' Tragedy (1904) by Maurice Henry Hewlett (not in Gribben).

January 7 Saturday – Sam's notebook:

“60 years ago, optimist & fool were not synonymous terms. This is a greater change than that wrought by science & invention. It is the mightiest change that was ever wrought in the world in any 60 years since creation” [NB 47A TS 3].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Even though the days are full to over flowing, and perhaps because they are—life is so beautiful. Today Katie and I managed to get a temporary carpet into Mr. Clemens's new study with its gold life-giving paper. The room is at the front of the house and looks up 5th Avenue, having a charming view of the Church of the Ascension, and the Presbyterian Church beyond. Mr. Clemens gains a little each day—but his ankles are still swelled and quite painful. Quite an interesting man, Mr. Holland [Ellman written in margin, Holland lined out] came to see if Mr. Clemens had any manuscripts to sell. He has bought nearly all of Mr. John Fiske's, and others too of value. Some of Lowell's and N. Hawthorne [MTP: TS 36]. Note: John Fiske (1842-1901) American philosopher and historian. Ellman is unidentified.

January 8 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote to Harriet E. Whitmore (Mrs. Franklin G. Whitmore). Excerpted here only the passages dealing with the Clemens family:

Your sweet and most unexpected gift delights me much. I have not had a chance to read a word in it, for after cutting its pages, I took it in to Mr. Clemens who has been wretchedly ill for 3 weeks—He took the book from me—Saying of its author—“An able cuss who writes deliciously—” and today he remarked that the book is “ever so charming.” In the January number of the American Review of Reviews, there is an interesting portrait of le Fallienne, and if you haven't seen it, it is quite worth seeing—An exquisite face—the face of an artist—

Perhaps you may be interested to know how very entirely Mr. Clemens absorbs all my time—every minute of it—even my evenings. I attend to an infinite number of things for him, and when he is lonely and restless we play cards. Play cards? Why I play with him all day Sunday even. He is delicious; this morning he had a run of very bad luck and biting his cigar hard he said “Christ couldn't take tricks with the kind of cards you give me.”

He is still in bed, and we make a card table of a down pillow—He calls the King of Clubs—“that damned orphan.” because it is always appearing as a singleton in his hand. Oh darling Mrs. Whitmore you have given me all this joy, and truly I am the wealthiest woman ever. There is a side to the life here that is most exquisite and hallowed; and Mr. Clemens lives much in the past,—There are days when he restlessly paces the “lonely house,” and he has not yet begun any real work—beyond a short article on “Copyright” that appeared in N. American Review for January. The house is not yet entirely settled. Some of the wall papering must be done over, because the decorator employed is a woman of execrable taste,—and a great deal of the paper is an “offense” to Mr. Clemens, But the house is really charming—and living here with mother so close to me is a great delight to me. I have very little to do with Jean—never go out with her anymore; you see Mr. Clemens wants his secretary on deck—and where he can have her services when he needs them. Jean is pretty well, not entirely so; and we have encouraging news from Clara, if the nurses can be believed. Mr. Clemens has been ill enough to have a nurse who is still here. He had serious bronchitis with congestion—slight—of one lung—and then the worst of all finishing touches, the gout—that has inflamed and swollen his feet, and he has suffered very much [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today Mr. Clemens walked lamely into the next room, his study, but he could not stay long. First he shaved away his 3 weeks beard that made him look like Thomas Carlyle. We played cards later—and his hands were so bad that he remarked “Christ couldn't take tricks with the kind of cards I hold.” He is delicious. Mother came in and we had a dish of tea in my room, and Mother—saint Mother—mended a pair of stockings for me—on Sunday [MTP: TS 36]. Note: Lyon repeated things put in her above letter.

January 9 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

The days fly busily along. There seems no chance of ever settling the house. Mr. Clemens is still in his bed—and the best things in the day are the games of 500 beside his bed. We play on a big square cigar box. Today a long gaunt reporter from “The World” came to have Mr. Clemens comment upon an account of himself. He tried to extract information from me, but I am solemnly non-committal [MTP: TS 36-37].

Houghton Mifflin & Co. wrote to Sam, to set straight certain facts regarding royalties to Harriet Beecher Stowe on Uncle Tom's Cabin in her later years. They disputed Twain's article in the Jan. issue of the NAR, which claimed the publishers rec'd profits on the book starting from 7 years before her death. They corrected that to 3 years and wrote that Stowe's daughters had “elected to sell us the copyrights of all their mother's writings outright” [MTP].

January 10 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today busy with check book and uninteresting mail during the morning. Mr. Clemens is still in his bed, but looks very much better than he did, and today Dr. Quintard pronounced him nearly normal. I played over the Tchaikowsky Finale of the Sonata Pathetique today. It is very beautiful.

Today a reporter from “The Journal” came to say that he'd heard that Mr. Clemens had been ill and he wanted me to put Mr. Clemens's [sic] opinion of his illness into suitable words, and say that it came from Mr. Clemens [MTP: TS 37].

January 11 Wednesday – On or just after this day at 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam responded to a questionnaire (“Questions Pertaining to Medical Legislation”) sent by Andrew C. Biggs, a “non-Medical physician” sent this day, from Greensboro, N.C. To all but two of the questions Sam either answered “no” or left unanswered. To the other two:

4. In your opinion, are the medical practice laws now in force in some of the states, drawn solely in behalf of the general public? If not, what other purpose do they serve?

Clemens: "They serve to curtail the citizen's liberties: they serve to abolish the citizen's fair & legitimate right to do with his body as he does with his soul: choose healer & creed to suit himself."

7. Please express any other views you may hold on the subject of medical legislation.

Clemens: "The allopaths have elected themselves a public-health monopoly so long that they have come at last to believe it their actual right to say who may kill & who may not. The bravos of Venice took the same attitude in the thirteenth century: they held that a person was not properly killed unless the killer possessed an assassin's certificate" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today Mr. & Mrs. Twichell came to spend a night. It is a blessing for Mr. Clemens has been too much alone" [MTP: TS 37].

Isabel Lyon's journal #2: Letter & statement received from Mr. Cecchi. Today, wrote Miss Harrison asking her to place $800, in the Manhattan Bank for Mr. Clemens's credit with Haskard & Co. Answered Mr. Cecchi's letter & enclosed Bill to be paid. Mr. Stanchfield called [MTP TS 1].

January 12 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. Twichell has been very interesting in his description of the way that General Sickles lost his leg in the battle of Gettysburg. Mr. Twichell was chaplain in Gen. Sickles' regiment. / Today Mr. & Mrs. Twichell left" [MTP: TS 37]. Note: Daniel Edgar Sickles (1823-1914), General, NY Congressman, attorney. See AMT 1: 565-6 for more on Sickles.

Isabel Lyon's journal #2: Miss Harrison deposited $800 in the Manhattan bank credit of Haskard & Co. Horace

Mr. Mrs Twichell / Came today to stay over night.

Mr. Clemens is still in bed.

Ugo came back into Mr. Clemens service today [MTP TS 1]. Note: Ugo Piemontini, servant

Margaret Jenkins wrote from England to Sam, apologizing for being "a long time answering your letter of Dec. 16th" (not extant) and hoping he would write for the C.R.A. She hoped he would "help the cause by 'some occasional scribblings in the magazines.'" She had sent his letter on to Mr. Morel. She was posting him a copy of the East African Mail and articles related to "efforts to enlighten the public as to King Leopold's rule in the Congo" [MTP].

January 13 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "I have lost 2 days of real living owing to my strange headache. Mr. Clemens is still in bed. Gout again. We play cards every evening. Today Mother went to the Customs Office and found there Don Raffaello's gift to me. A book in a bottle, very realistic" [MTP: TS 37].

Josephine Daskam Bacon (Mrs. Selden Bacon) wrote from 110 Riverside Drive to Sam. "Many thanks for your autograph in the 'Jumping Frog'; when my daughter is six months old, I shall begin to read it to her." She sympathized with his illness as she also suffered from bronchitis [MTP].

January 14 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Trying to catch up the threads lost by that headache. It is David's [her nephew] birthday" [MTP: TS 37].

John Larkin, NYC attorney wrote to Sam and also wrote to Sam through Isabel Lyon. In the first letter he enclosed "a certified copy of an order fixing the transfer tax...on Mrs. Clemens' Estate at $841.21." In the letter to Lyon, Larkin confirmed he had her letter of Jan. 13 “enclosing notice of personal tax upon Mr. Clemens as Executor” of Livy’s estate. “When Mr. Clemens is able, if he will call some day at this office” (44 Wall St.) “I will attend with him before the tax commissioners and have the assessment reduced” [MTP].

January 15 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today has been very full of the joy of living. I wrote letters and read some in the morning. Looked out of my window just in time to see dear Mother look up at me on her way home from Church and in the afternoon she came over. Later I played cards with my chief. Some day the penalty for having such perfect living will come [MTP: TS 37]. Note: on Jan. 3, 1933 she added a note to this entry that “No penalty attaches itself to perfect living. No penalties ever attach themselves to joys.”

Theo Mead wrote from 55 Duane St., NYC, to Sam, inquiring about an episode where Clemens reportedly was sued by a Christian Science “charlatan” for $400. Was this correct? Mead wished to use the case to “warn possible victims” [MTP].

The National Institute of Arts and Letters chose eight more members to the Academy of Arts and Letters: Henry James, Charles Follen McKim, Henry Adams, Charles Eliot Norton, John Quincy Adams Ward, Thomas Raynesford Lounsbury, Theodore Roosevelt, Thomas Bailey Aldrich [MTP enclosed in 30 May 1905 to MT].

January 16 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Very busy with much writing to do. Mother came in the afternoon. I went this evening to a Beethoven concert with Francesca and Rosamond—such sweet children. There was a stupid lecture on Beethoven and then 3 beautiful numbers. I met Mrs. Nowell, the one who sketched Mr. Clemens for The Outlook—and some Tuesday I am going up for a dish of tea with her. I had a late game of cards with Mr. Clemens, on my return from the concert [MTP: TS 37]. Note: Kate Rogers Nowell.

Isabel Lyon’s journal 2: “Mr. Stanchfield had a long talk with Mr. Clemens” [MTP TS 2].

Margaret Lee wrote from Brooklyn to Sam, to “congratulate you and thank you for opening the Perpetual Copyright Campaign of 1905 in your own masterly manner” [MTP].

January 16? Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Harper’s Weekly, concerning the loss of copyright and royalties for Harriet Beecher Stowe before her death. In its Jan. 7 issue, the magazine had reprinted Sam’s quote from the Jan. issue of the North American Review. The quotation was printed within a Jan. 10 letter by Houghton Mifflin & Co. Sam argued he was not after publishers on the copyright issue, but was “hunting lawmakers, & lawmakers alone” [MTP].

January 17 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Busy every moment. / (Dublin note—July 7, 1905) Mr. Clemens takes up a novel and begins in the middle and swings along to the finish” [MTP: TS 38]. Note: just why she added this to Jan. 17 is not known. Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Today Mr. Clemens sat for several hours in the study. Gout Continues. Miss Harrison sent a check to Mr. Larkin for $841.21 for transfer tax to be paid on Mrs. Clemens’s estate” [MTP TS 2].

January 18 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Today Santissima’s beautiful black cat Bambino arrived. Katie brought it down in a cab. A patient in Santissima’s sanitarium cannot stand cats and she is to be there for a fortnight. It is Mr. Dana’s birthday” [MTP: TS 38]. Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Mr. Clemens took more cold when he sat in the Study yesterday, and today he is not so well” [MTP TS 2].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to John B. Stanchfield, with copy to Sam. Mr. Howard E. Wright was out of town until Monday and preferred an evening meeting. “I enclose carbon copy of a statement which I prepared last October for Mr. Clemens, about the Butters matter, which may be of some use to you” [MTP]. Note: Henry Butters.

Harveian Co., Samuel G. Tracy, M.D. medical director, wrote from NYC, wishing Clemens to become familiar with the NYC Nauheim Bath; he claimed success in treating many ailments [MTP].

John Larkin, attorney wrote to Sam, acknowledging receipt of Lyon's letter and check by Clemens for $841.21 (Livy's estate tax), also the certified order [MTP].

January 19 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave. Jean Clemens wrote for her father to Anne Sullivan.

My dear Miss Sullivan; / As Father is still ill in bed with gout he cannot write you himself and has therefor asked me to do so for him.

He was of course very much pleased to hear of your happy engagement, especially so as he once met Mr. Macy, at Mrs. Hutton's, I believe.

He sends you his most cordial congratulations and sincerest regards, together with the hope that your health is good. / Very truly yours / Jean L. Clemens [MTP]. Note: Anne Sullivan, Helen Keller's teacher, would marry John Albert Macy (1877-1932), Harvard instructor and literary critic, on May 2.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "To even up things a little—for one cannot have too much of beauty in life—there is Santissima away—and my eye continues its strange pains. But that would have to be to even up things a little. The solemn joy of living in the same house with Mr. Clemens who grows ever sweeter with the white, white years, is beyond all words of mine" [MTP: TS 38].

January 20 Friday – Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam, concerning ongoing disputes with Howard E. Wright and the American Plasmon Co. "The other day, I came across the card of admission issued by Hammond to Butters in connection with the 'freeze-out' game. I enclose it" [MTP].

Robert Underwood Johnson wrote for the National Institute of Arts and Letters to Sam. Thomas Bailey Aldrich had consented to be retained on the list of members, and therefore should be selected as the 15th member of the Academy. Johnson enclosed William Dean Howells' preferences for new membership, of which the following were designated as elected Jan. 7: Charles Eliot Norton, Henry James, Thomas R. Lounsbury, J.Q.A Ward. Also listed were Thomas Bailey Aldrich, William M. Sloane, Joseph Jefferson, and Carl Schurz [MTP].

January 21 Saturday

January 22 Sunday – "Bloody Sunday" (or "Red Sunday") in St. Petersburg, Russia was the impetus for Mark Twain's "The Czar's Soliloquy," written shortly after this day. (See Jan. 30, and Feb. entries.) Peaceful demonstrators petitioning Czar Nicholas II were gunned down by the Imperial guard. Budd writes:

"To Twain the riots...were both enraging and heartening. He rushed into print with 'The Czar's Soliloquy,' the vehement logic of which went back to 1889-1891 when he was listening raptly to [George] Kennan and Stepniak" [New England Quarterly 32.3 (Sept 1959) p.366].

Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Gilder came in as I was playing 500 with Mr. Clemens—later Mr. Clemens said he "did not like to be such an expense to a guest—there Carnegie sat with a stream of dollars pouring down his back"—and no one to collect them [MTP: TS 38].

January 23 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Sent card to Mrs Clander, for Mr. Clemens" [MTP TS 2].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam, soliciting him to attend the "little dinner to the Archbishop Thursday evening," urged by Mr. O'Day [MTP]. Note: this may be Daniel O'Day.

Charles Langdon wrote to Samuel L. Clemens, Executor, requesting one-third of the Erie County taxes on the Genessee property, Buffalo, or $46.20. "I may be in New York within a day or two with important papers in connection with the closing up of the affairs of J. Langdon & Company, Incorporated, to which I must have your signature" [MTP].

David A. Munro wrote to Sam: "I have been talking to Colonel Harvey about 'A Postscript,' and he seems to think that since the Review could not publish it for more than a month, it might lose some of its pertinence"—could Sam agree to have it published in Harper's Weekly? [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the top left corner, "Told him to publish it in the Weekly"; See Feb. 11, date first published in the Weekly.

John B. Stanchfield wrote to Sam, having received a "box of celluloid hairpins from Mr. Ashcroft." Mrs. Stanchfield and the maid-servants were "pronounced" in their opinions "that they are not practicable." He recommended it "might be well for us to dispose of a portion of our holdings" in the Koy-Lo Co. He would take up the Plasmon matter when he returned to NYC, "in a week or ten days" [MTP].

January 24 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to the American Academy of Arts and Letters, casting his vote for the election of Thomas Bailey Aldrich as the fifteenth member of that select group. On Dec. 2, 1904 Sam had been one of the original seven elected [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today mother and I did some shopping together. It was blustery, but fine. Ugo is going away tomorrow. / Mr. Clemens is still in his bed, though better" [MTP: TS 38]. Note: Ugo Piemontini, the Italian servant brought back from Florence.

Arthur Newall wrote from Wiltshire, England to Sam seeking a copy of 1601. Newall wrote that he had written to Sam in April 1901 (not extant) but had had no luck in obtaining a copy of the tale from Lords Wolseley and Houghton. After reading in the London Times that Sam had found a copy, Newall inquired again [MTP]. Note: the MTP puts Sam's response as "on or after 24 January 1905," but this is not a telegram, but a letter, which would have taken at least seven or eight days to arrive in N.Y. Therefore, Sam's response is here assigned a ca. Feb. 2 date. See entry.

Charles Langdon wrote to Sam, acknowledging receipt of Miss Lyon's letter and check for $66.80. He was delighted that Sam was better. He hoped to see him Thursday or Friday. He enclosed papers for Sam to sign and for Lyon to witness, having to do with Livy's estate [MTP].

January 25 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Susan Crane.

This is the first day in five & a half weeks that I have not spent in bed. I bundled myself up, this morning & hobbled downstairs. The sitting room & dining room looked just like the Hartford home, with the folding doors spread open. It broke my heart, for there was not a thing visible anywhere that had not been made holy by the touch of Livy's hand. Thousands of times her dear eyes had looked upon those things, & each & all of them spoke to me, & bore testimony to her unchallengeable taste & her love for the exquisite & the beautiful.

I sat & looked out at the storm & listened four hours while Miss Lyon played on the orchestrelle, I choosing the pieces—dirges, funeral marches, and—saddest of all—wedding marches. The wedding is never otherwise than a tragic event, and all present should be clothed in black, & upon the wedding-bell should be written "A day is coming when one of these hearts shall break."

I came up at mid-afternoon, & have been in bed ever since. I expect to be up a while to-morrow again.

Clara's splendid cat [Bambino] is on the bed by me. He has been telephoned for, & Katy will take him in a coupè to-morrow for an hour's visit with Clara. After this he is to go to her once a week for an indefinite period. He is the liveliest company & the best that ever was. Katy detests cats, but she is the bond slave of this one.

It was a pathetic tale—that one about God using a minister & a church as instruments to rob that poor old lady. But I am done wondering at the things He does.

Love & good night dear Sue. / Samuel / (Called by many The Holy.) / I hope Charley is not out in this storm, but I fear he is [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: This morning as I was telephoning to Santissima's nurse, Mr. Clemens appeared in the lower hall, and when we went into the library I played for him on the Aeolian—played 15 numbers. After lunch I played again. I was playing Bach when I turned to find him sitting near me. I had supposed he was in the dining room watching the fierce storm that is raging—but he wasn't. He sat there with a most beautiful look in his face. Rapt, satisfied, peaceful and beautiful. Today is the first day that I haven't seen Mother [MTP: TS 38]. Journal #2: "Blizzard. / Today Mr. Clemens came down stairs for first time in 5½ weeks. / Ugo left Mr. Clemens's service today [MTP TS 2-3]. Note: Ugo Piemontini

Sebastiano V. Cecchi wrote to Sam, having rec'd Miss Lyon's letter the day before. "The Manhattan people have also notified our payment of $800 which I have placed to your credit." He hoped Sam was not ailing any longer, and passed along some local happenings, including Sam's old landlady: "I suppose the Contessa [Countess Massiglia] never thought that she was riding for a fall, at the time: she seems now to realize her position fully, and fear has knocked her nervous system to pieces. / I haven't seen Luchini for some time but I expect he keeps you informed of how the case is going on" [MTP].

January 26 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "French butler Leon arrived today. / Sale of Tarry Town property closed today. Mr. Benjamin has had charge of the sale" [MTP TS 3]. Note: Leon not further identified.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to John B. Stanchfield, copy to Sam. "Mr. Clemens' story of the Plasmon matter will be ready for you on your arrival." He went on with details of the pin manufacturing and sent "a perfected blued wire pin; also one of the hat pins" for the "criticisms of your people," and sought "specific objections" to the celluloid pins as "General objections do not help" [MTP].

January 27 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "Mr. Langdon arrived this evening at 9:45" [MTP TS 3].

William Evarts Benjamin wrote to Sam concerning papers he'd handed him the day before on the Tarrytown property. Complexities regarding a Trolley Co. encroachment, ownership of half the adjoining streets and "other papers relating to the matter are in charge of" Mr. Andrew M. Clute, Sam's attorney on the matters [MTP].

January 28 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to William L. Alden.

I thank you heartily for giving me a chance to read it. Your article has given me great pleasure, special pleasure. It requires courage to say what you have said; few can run counter to an accepted & established popular notion & not lose nerve in the transit. We have all seen it, many times.

It is the end of the sixth week that I have passed in bed with gout and bronchitis. I should have written you a fortnight ago if I had been physically competent [MTP]. Note: possibly Alden's article, "Mark Twain; Samuel L. Clemens," which ran in the Nov. 1904 issue of English Illustrated Magazine, p. 182-4; see Vol. III for Nov. 1904. See also Gribben 14-15 for other books listed by Alden.

Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "Today proposition came thro Mr. Larkin to purchase Texas property for $950.00 Mr Clemens accepts Letter came from Mr. Norman Hapgood describing a nice house at Cornish, Vt." [MTP TS 3].

Note: Hapgood (1868-1937) had known the Clemenses since 1889 when he was on Thanksgiving vacation from Harvard, where he graduated the next year. When faced with making "a violent declaration of love to Susie" (Clemens) in a play at the Clemens' home, The Love Chase, Hapgood froze. It was his one stage "performance." [MFMT 57; The Changing Years – Reminiscences of Normal Hapgood (1930) p.205]. Before this Hapgood was the drama critic of the NY Commercial Advertiser and of the Bookman (1897-1902).

John Larkin, N.Y. attorney, wrote a short note enclosing a letter from Mr. W.E. Forgý, Texas lawyer, about the Texas property. Larkin wanted Sam "to kindly read & advise" as to what reply he should make.

On or just after Larkin's note with letter arrived, Isabel V. Lyon responded for Sam: "Mr. Clemens would like Mr. Larkin to accept the proposition" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Michael Monahan.

It is strong & eloquent & beautiful & I thank you very much for giving me an opportunity to read it. The inspiration which tipped your pen with fire is from the Maid. After all these centuries that force still lives—lives & grows. And it will never cease to live & grow, I think.

I was struck by a remark of yours (& I agree with it) that from the day of the martyrdom the Maid has been "the glory of the faith & the shame of the Church."

I was hoping she would never be canonized. One doesn't build monuments to Adam: he is a monument himself [MTP]. Note: Monahan's article, "Saint Mark" in the Dec. 1904 issue of The Papyrus was the target of Sam's praise. Monahan would later publish My Jeanne d'Arc: Her Wonderful Story in the Light of Recent Researches [Gribben 479, 525]. Note: The Society of the Papyrites (vol. 4, no. 3) published this letter in their March issue.

January 29 Sunday – Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam.

We have an inquiry for the following sketches: "The Grateful Poodle," "The Benevolent Author," "The Grateful Husband," which we are unable to indentify. Our correspondent states that all appeared in the Atlantic Monthly. It occurs to us that possibly these are not independent sketches or that the sketches were reproduced in book form under another title. Can you give us any information? [MTP].

On this day or just after Harper's above letter arrived, Sam answered:

Read proofs of the above on board ship, in N.Y. Harbor. Sailing for Germany April 10, 1878. Broke with Blisses in 1881. So the above sketch was published in the Atlantic Monthly probably during summer of 1878 [MTP]. Note: These are three parts to the sketch, "About Magnanimous-Incident Literature," each followed by a "sequel," first published in the May [1878] issue of Atlantic Monthly [Budd, Collected I: 703-09]. Sam actually sailed on Apr. 11, 1878.

Lucy McDowell Millburn wrote to Sam, complimenting him on JA and recalling she met him at Onteora when she was a guest of Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge. At the time Millburn was so frightened that she did not speak [MTP].

January 30 Monday – Robert Galbraith wrote from Tarrytown, NY to Sam, having rec'd his letter (not extant) and check on Monday. He'd been kept busy shoveling snow that blew back at night [MTP]. Note: Sam's letter had likely been sent on Saturday, Jan. 28.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon Mr. Clemens went down to the library where I was writing and asked for music. The Aeolian seems to satisfy him. I had noticed a roll of MS. in his band—and at tea time he read to us his latest article—the one on the Russians. I had never heard him read any of his writings before, and he is at his best then. Today he was wonderful. Thrilled with the tremendous interest of the naked Czar's soliloquy. His voice shook with emotion. It is the strongest thing he has ever written, and you reach the power of him only when you can hear him read into his mighty words the soul of the thing as it stands to him. He is too tremendous in soul and in intellect. He is tremendous in his simplicity. Tremendous in the way he can be touched by the tribute of a servant, and every servant worships him [MTP: TS 39; Hill 99 in part MTOW p. 47 includes a crossed out section that doesn't appear in the TS]. Isabel Lyon's journal #2: Today Mr. Clemens gave us a rare treat for he read the MS of the article he has just finished: A Soliloquy of the Czar. / Jean began the typing of it today [MTP TS 3].

January 31 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "Pay Rent, / Check for Mrs. Greening – 25.00" [MTP TS 3]. Note: Tabitha Quarles Greening ("Puss").

February – Clemens inscribed a copy of TS (1903 ed.) to an unidentified person: “One of the most striking and convincing differences between a lie & a cat is, that the cat has only nine lives. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / Feb. 1905” [MTP: listed in Profiles in History, Oct. 2005, no. 40, item 130].

Munsey's Magazine published Richard Le Gallienne's article, “American Authors of Today,” p. 641-50. Tenney: “Passing mention of MT as one of the major writers, along with discussion of some whose fame has faded; MT photograph, p. 644 [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 190].

Review of Reviews (NY) ran “Mark Twain on Copyright,” p. 213-14. A summary of the January article in the North American Review [Tenney 40]. Note: the same publication in London also ran the summary on p. 165.

February 1 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal #2:

Mr. Clemens's preferences for new members to the national Institute of Arts and Letters.
 Charles Francis Adams
 Horace Howard Furness
 Edward Everett Hale
 Joel Chandler Harris
 Henry Carey Lee
 Silas Weir Mitchell
 Ernest Thompson Seton [MTP TS 3-4].

Thorvald Solberg for the Library of Congress wrote to Sam and/or Samuel E. Moffett c/o Collier's Weekly, acknowledging Moffett's letter of Jan. 25, that the number of copyright entries between July 10, 1870 and Dec. 31, 1904 was 1,569,800 [MTP]. Note: Moffett was securing statistics for his uncle Sam.

February 2 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's Journal: “Colonel Harvey is here. Mr. Clemens creeps about the house a little, but mostly he stays in bed. Mother comes over every day to sit in my little warm room. Bambino Bronchitis Clemens grows ever better as a cat” [MTP: TS 39]. Note: “Bambino” for short.

Isabel Lyon's journal #2: “Miss Clemens is now well enough to read. I sent down for Plato and the Iliad & Byron. She has gained 5 ½ pounds, and is allowed to sit up a little while each day” [MTP TS 4].

William Evarts Benjamin wrote to Sam recommending that $75 be sent to H.C. Griffin of Tarrytown, the attorney who assisted in the encroachment matter of the Trolley Co. on Sam's property there [MTP].

Kate C. Lampton wrote to Clemens.

Dear Cousin Sam / I am so sorry to annoy you with another letter, but in the one I wrote New Years I enclosed my references. As they are all I have to help me get any kind of work I have to trouble you to return them. / Don't think I am too many kinds of a nuisance bothering you again. With best wishes for you and yours / Your Affectionate Cousin ...[MTP]. Note: Ella Lampton's daughter; see Vol I for a few entries.

Samuel E. Moffett wrote on Collier's Weekly letterhead to report a “snag” in his attempts for “information about copyrights,” as “no entries of any kind were made in his office before July 10 1870, and no statistics of original entries and renewals before June 1901.” He supposed the earlier ones were “scattered among the various district courts, and probably none of them are classified” [MTP]. Note: also see Feb. 1 from Solberg.

February 2, ca. – Isabel V. Lyon wrote responding for Sam to Arthur Newall's Jan. 24 inquiry about obtaining a copy of 1601, writing on the bottom of Newall's letter: “Mr. Clemens still has no copy & in every case where he thought he was on the track of one it failed—” [MTP].

February 3 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today we have the news that Santissima can sit up a little and she is beginning to read a little too. She sends down for Plato and Byon and the Iliad and dry essays. All the morning Mr. Clemens has been revising the Russian article and this afternoon he read me the revision. I was glad to hear that Col. Harvey said it was the strongest thing he had ever written. It is wonderful [MTP: TS 39]. Notes: The Czar’s Soliloquy ran in the Mar. issue of the NAR. Gribben (549) mistakes this journal entry for Feb. 2.

Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: “Col Harvey called this evening and Mr. Clemens read the “Czar’s Soliloquy” to him. Col. Harvey thinks it is the strongest thing Mr. Clmeens has ever written” [MTP TS 4].

February 4 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel Lyon Sam replied for to Elizabeth (Ann Chase) Akers Allen (Elizabeth C. Akers), whose incoming question about the source of the verse on Susy’s headstone is not extant.

Mrs. Clemens and I found the lines in a book of poems which we came across somewhere in our voyage around the world; either in Australasia or in India in the last quarter of ’95 or the first quarter of ’96. There is one detail which makes me think that the little poem must have been Australian, and that is that when Mrs. Clemens and I were preparing the lines for the gravestone we had to change a word to make the verses harmonize with the weather conditions north of the Equator—to wit—we had to change “warm northern wind” to “warm summer wind”.

I think the poem consisted of the one stanza, but of this I cannot be quite sure. I have the impression that the volume of poems was new, and that the poet was a young man.

Your own poem is very very beautiful, and I thank you for sending me a copy [MTP].

Note: the reference to “Southern wind” is the change in the verse engraved in Susy’s headstone, a verse at first attributed to Clemens. When Sam learned of this he ordered the poet’s name (Robert Richardson) be cut beneath the verse. “In the original the word southern read northern since in the poet’s native Australia the warm wind is from the north” [Jerome and Wisbey, MT in Elmira 165].

Sam also replied to Michael Monahan (incoming not extant), who evidently had asked about 1601, to which Clemens answered “That Elizabethan sketch was (very privately—as was best) printed ...yet every copy has disappeared” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mr. Clemens says that Bambino is religious but not moral” [MTP: TS 39]. Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: “Today sent MS of ‘Czar’s Soliloquy to Mr. Munro. Mr. Clemens dressed entirely today for the first time in 7 weeks. / Mr. Gilder called” [MTP TS 4].

According to Lyon’s journal # 2 entry above, Sam wrote to David A. Munro about editing “The Czar’s Soliloquy” which would run in the March issue of North American Review:

This is for the March number of the N.A.R....The Colonel was here the other night and inspected it. He has not seen pages 8 & 9; I have added them since. They discharge an impertinence at God. Are you a friend of His? Is the Colonel? I prize that impertinence. I hope it can get by the blue pencil. I thought of changing ‘approval’ to ‘indulgence,’ but I think that would be a shade too impertinent...[MTP: Anderson Auction Co. catalog, 23 Feb. 1928, No. 2236, Item 22]. Note: the piece was in reaction to “Bloody Sunday” massacre in St. Petersburg, Russia on Jan. 22. Lyon also recorded Harvey’s visit on Feb. 2. See entry.

February 5 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: “Mr. Johnson called this afternoon” [MTP TS 4]. Note: likely Robert Underwood Johnson.

February 6 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote to Harriet E. Whitmore (Mrs. Franklin G. Whitmore).

This is just a hasty little note to tell you that Katie is planning to run up to Hartford on Thursday of this week to look after and bring away the boxes in the Safety Deposit vaults. If you have the keys will you kindly give them to Mr. Whitmore so that Katie can get them from his office?

Saturday Mr. Clemens had on all his clothes—and a necktie—for the first time in 7 weeks. He has been busy—been writing a wonderfully strong article on the Russian Crisis. He is so much the most interesting man ever.

Jean is well—she is studying three languages—just ripping. We are a very peaceful household—Katie is good & valuable beyond words. It was a fearful wrench and re-adjustment for every one—and it is quite lovely to see how Katie does everything—“as Mrs. Clemens used to.”

Last month Mr. and Mrs. Twichell were here for a night, and it did Mr. Clemens a great deal of good for he had been depressed. He lives much in the past, speaking constantly of those who are gone.

Every moment I am busy—even all day Sunday—and life is grandly interesting [MTP].

Andrew M. Clute, Tarrytown attorney, sent Sam a bill for $75 for legal services in connection with the encroachment matter on Sam's Tarrytown property (enclosed in Benjamin's Feb. 7) [MTP].

John Y. MacAlister wrote to Sam. After asking after his health, Mac related telling Ashcroft all he could remember of his connection with the Henry Butters episode. He warned Sam not to sue unless he had a good attorney and was sure of winning, “Put him [atty] to the test by asking him to try the case on the ‘no-cure-no-pay’ principle.” He vilified Butters, being now convinced there was a hell and that Butters would be going there: “so leave Butters to go to hell, and save your money, unless...your chances of success are about ten to one” [MTP].

Raffaello Stiattesi wrote to advise Sam in his “action of this moment against the countess Massiglia,” pointing out that “no one can be happier or greater than when he pardons and forgets injuries” [MTP].].

February 7 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: “Mr. Reeves was here this morning to talk over the renting of the house in Vermont” [MTP TS 4].

William Evarts Benjamin wrote to Sam, enclosing a check for $1,000 from Title, Guarantee & Trust Co., on the Tarrytown property matters, and thought the prospects bright for getting back another $500 [MTP]. Note: monies were held in escrow to insure clear title; notably, removal of the Trolley Co.'s encroachment.

John H. Grafton wrote from Winona, Minn. to Sam, asking for the name of the first mate on the Hornet, when she was lost in 1866 [MTP]. Note: Grafton does not give the purpose of his interest.

John Y. MacAlister wrote Ralph W. Ashcroft, copy to Sam.

My recollection of the Butters episode is that he brought, or sent to me a letter of introduction from Mr. Clemens, and that thereafter I saw Butters either once or twice at his office, and went into the matter very carefully with him, that is to say I endeavored to get as much information from him as I could. Butters urged me to try to find a purchaser for Clemens' English shares in order to invest the money in the American company. I told him I would see what could be done, with a mental reservation that I would see him damned before I would help in what I considered a bad business for my friend [MTP].

February 8 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam replied to a not extant from David A. Munro, possibly the galley sheets mentioned below in Lyons journal #2 entry.

Thank you ever so much for your suggestions. I have never read Sartor Resartus, & so I did not know he had been handling the subject. I was minded to suppress my article; but reflected that in my unacquaintance with Carlyle's book I represent 299 out of every 300 readers—therefore I might as well go ahead & have my say. Particularly as all ideas are old & worn, yet are always legitimately usable because the phrasing will be new every time & may dress the old harlot up fine & smart & make her almost unrecognizably young & fresh to the near-sighted.

Please carefully examine my changes, & if they are not fortunate tell me so & let me try again [MTP]. Note: see Gribben p.130, which shows Sam had read Carlyle's Sartor Resartus. F. Kaplan points out Sam had added the book to his library and signed it in 1888 [619].

Isabel Lyon's journal #2: Mr. Munro sent the Galley sheets of the "Czar's Soliloquy"—Mr. Clemens revised & returned it.

~~Miss~~ Loomis lunched with Jean.

Bambino spent last night in the cellar [MTP TS 4].

February 9 Thursday – Lucy Page Whitehead wrote to Sam on a small black-bordered card. "Don't you think it would do you good to come to Washington for the Inauguration?" [MTP].

On or after this day at 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C., Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Lucy Page Whitehead. Sam declined to go to Washington for the inauguration, pleading slow recovery to his two-month long illness [MTP].

Isabel also wrote to Harriet E. Whitmore.

Thank you so much for your letter of explanation. Katie has had to change her plans about going to Hartford—and as Mr^s. Crane is expected next week for a visit, it may now be some time before she will go. Katie did not speak to Mr. Clemens about the keys, and perhaps he has them. If they cannot be found, then I will let you know some days in advance of Katie's trip to Hartford.

Mr. Clemens wished me to thank you for your lovely messages [MTP].

Eva C. Dix, Secretary for the New England Anti-Vivisection Society, wrote to Sam, informing him that on their annual meeting Sam had been "unanimously elected one of several Honorary Vice-Presidents." This meant no active participation on Clemens' part but only the assistance of his name [MTP]. Note: it was quite common for luminaries to be "elected" as figureheads for social movements.

February 10 Friday – Isabel Lyon's Journal: "...Mr. Clemens is writing another soliloquy, King Leopold's—who is gloating over and excusing to himself the Congo atrocities" [MTP: TS 39; Hill 100] Note: See Feb. 21 Lyon entry.

February 11 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Charles D. Burrage.

You wrote me a very kind letter eleven years ago (to Hartford.) It arrived here safe & sound last night. I have not been in Hartford for 14 years, but almost all the time in Europe. Your letter was inside a parcel of beautiful pictures; if it had been outside it would have been forwarded to Paris; but by my order all parcels were stopped in Hartford, & stored there. Yours was mislaid, along with a present of tea from India—I do not know how it happened—but both reached me last night. I thank you very much for the beautiful pictures, & I greatly regret my (enforced) tardiness in saying so [MTP].

John Larkin, attorney, wrote to Sam. "I enclose herewith letter received from Mr. Forgy in reference to the Texas property. I wrote him that you would accept the proposition of purchase, but I stated that you should not be under any expense connected therewith except the payment of commission..." [MTP]. Note: Archer County, Texas property owned by Livy; see entries Vol. I, II, III. Sanford Wilson was the purchaser [IVL journal #2 July 11, 1905].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight at dinner Mr. Clemens told us of how when he was 17 he ran away from home—came to New York, went to Philadelphia and Washington and was away a year. He came to New York to see the exposition that was at 42nd St. and 5th Ave, where the new library is now going up. He is a marvellous talker. Holding one spellbound by the flow of his narrative [MTP: TS 39-40].

Harper's Weekly ran an article, "Mark Twain on Copyright" p.214. Tenney: "A letter to the editor, supporting MT's article on copyright in the current North American Review" [41]. Also in this issue was Twain's "A Postscript by Mark Twain," p. 220-1. See 16? Jan. 1905 entry.

Sam contemplated a work to be called "Adam's Soliloquy," and would read parts of it (What Is Man?) to Isabel Lyon on Mar. 5 [Hill 100].

February 12 Sunday – Samuel E. Belt wrote from Greenwood B.C. to Sam.

"I am collecting facts about the blowing up of the 'Saluda' at Lexington, Mo, being a nephew of the ill-fated Captain," Francis Thomas Belt. He didn't simply want an autograph but asked Sam for anything he might be able to tell him about the case [MTP].

Note: the Saluda, a side-wheel, wooden hull packet, 223 tons, christened in 1846, it sank in 1850 but was raised and restored. On Apr. 9, 1852, Good Friday, with Mormon emigrants aboard, the boat was headed for Council Bluffs, Iowa. Upon arriving at Lexington, the current was swift. Pilot Charles S. LaBarge pushed her too hard and her boilers blew. Pilot and Master Belt and about 75 others died. It was the worst disaster to that time on the Missouri River. At that time, Sam was still in Hannibal, working on Orion's newspaper, the Journal.

Sam's notebook (NB 48) bears this date on page one, his address at 21 Fifth Ave, and list the following names: Charles Frederick Moberly Bell, Andrew Lang, Marjorie Bowen, Francis H. Skrine. The list, all persons in England, continues but a date of "June 19 or 20" is boxed to the left [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today Jean and I went to the Church of the Ascension. It is a beautiful church, and the service was so lovely. The music was as beautiful as the church, and it was good to be there. In the afternoon we had cards and again in the evening as usual" [MTP: TS 40].

Elias Cornelius Benedict wrote to Sam after searching for an article read years before he thought was titled "The Twins" [MTP].

Frances F. Cleveland (Mrs. Grover Cleveland) added a note to Benedict's above letter to Sam: "Mr Benedict has opened letter & let me add a line of ...good wishes. / Sincerely".. [MTP].

February 12 ca. – On or just after this day at 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C., Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to the Feb. 12 of Samuel E. Belt.

"Mr. Clemens wishes me to say that if he ever knew anything about the Saluda disaster it long ago went out of his memory" [MTP]. See notes after Belt's inquiry.

Isabel also replied for Sam to Elias Cornelius Benedict's Feb. 12 question. The sketch asked about "The Twins" was in the Century early in 1895 and was now collected in the Hillcrest Edition, in the PW volume [MTP].

February 13 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: This morning came a letter from Raffaello. He has been ill, he has lost money, and just now there is dearth of happiness in his life. / Every evening we have music. Jean plays her simple sweet music, and I play the wonderful Beethoven and Schubert. Mr. Clemens spends nearly all his day in bed, getting up only in time for dinner. Every afternoon he calls me for a game of cards [MTP: TS 40].

February 14 Tuesday – Harold J. Howland for The Outlook wrote to Sam, asking him to autograph one of the proofs of his photo [MTP]. Note: see also entries for Dec. 3, 1904, Feb. 21, and Feb. 26, 1905.

George H. Daniels for the Lotos Club sent a form letter invite to Sam for a club dinner on Feb. 25, 6:30 p.m. for Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, “who has recently been elected Director General of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.” The dinner was a pricey $4.50 (without wine) [MTP]. Note: Lyon’s journal of Feb. 26 disclosed that Clemens went to Mr. De Forest’s house to meet Clarke on Feb. 26, so evidently he did not attend this Lotos Club dinner of the 25th.

Odoardo Luchini wrote to Sam, reporting that “the trial goes on very well,” but was delayed due to the judge being able to give audience more than once a week. All of the witnesses for Countess Massiglia had been heard. He gave more details and put a PS that his daughter wanted Sam’s exact address to return his copy of Maeterlinck’s book Monna Vanna [MTP]. See Gribben 446.

J.H. Tobin for Austin Book & Publishing Co., Austin, Tex. wrote to Sam asking how to procure copies of his stories, “Nevada Funeral,” and “Jim Baker’s Jay Bird Story.” Sam wrote in pencil that the first was in RI, the second was “Beginning of a” TA [MTP].

February 15 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Madeleine Sinsheimer.

Dear Miss Madeleine: / Your good & admiring & affectionate brother has told me of your sorrowful share in the trolley disaster which brought unaccustomed tears to millions of eyes & fierce resentment against those whose criminal indifference to their responsibilities caused it; & the reminder has brought back to me a pang out of that bygone time. I wish I could take you sound & whole out of your bed & break the legs of those officials & put them in it—to stay there. For in my spirit I am merciful & would not break their necks & backs also, as some would who have no feeling.

It is your brother who permits me to write you this line—and so it is not an intrusion, you see.

May you get well—and soon! [MTP].

Note: the New York Times published this letter three months later, on May 15, 1905 (p.9 “Merciful Mark Twain Writes to Maimed Girl”) with a dateline of May 14. Miss Sinsheimer of Newark, N.J. had become an invalid as a result of a trolley accident in 1903. The article notes Sam also sent one of his books (unspecified) inscribed with his aphorism: “One of the most remarkable differences between a lie and a cat is that the cat has only nine lives.” See Jerome Sinsheimer’s Nov. 7, 1908 to Sam. Also on or after Nov. 30, 1905: Madelaine reported she had recovered.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: This afternoon a Mrs. Judd came to read the story of Joseph to Mr. Clemens. She plans to use it for public presentation. She has very intense admiration for Mr. Clemens, so intense that she bubbles with it. The reading was a failure, for she filled the simple Bible speech with elocutionary effects and blasted it. But she kissed Mr. Clemens’s hand at leaving and while I was showing her the Spiridon portrait she showered very sweet speech upon me and kissed my forehead in homage for the man who stands as my complete master. She said that I will not need a heaven when I die for I have it here. She doesn’t half suspect the truth of her words. She wondered how I “managed it” to become his secretary. Those things aren’t managed they just come to one and you mustn’t try to “manage” them into existence. / Tonight mother and I went to an organ recital over at the Ascension. The music was superb, satisfying and filling [MTP: TS 40]. Note: Mrs. Ida Benfey Judd, noted monologist, founder and president of the Mark Twain Association (1926), now called the Mark Twain Association of New York. Judd studied drama under Alexander Bell, inventor of the telephone. WNYC’s website claims her association with Twain was “brief but influential,” though it doesn’t explain which was influenced, presumably Judd “After seeking his advice on elocution she spent a half-hour in discussion with the great author. See also Feb. 10, 1906 entry. Hal Holbrook credits the Association as giving him his 1958 start in portraying Twain.

Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: “About this date we hear that Miss Clemens is well enough to go out to walk for a little while each day” [MTP TS 5]. Note: Clara Clemens was recovering.

Sydney J. Roy for the Hannibal Merchants Assoc. wrote to Sam, announcing the formation of a company to build a new hotel in Hannibal, to be named “The Mark Twain Hotel.” Would he approve, and could he be there about September 1905? [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the top in pencil, “No objection to the hotel but shall not be able to go there”

February 16 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Joe Twichell.

Dear Joe— / I knew I had in me somewhere a definite feeling about the President if I could only find the words to define it with. / Here they are, to a hair—from Leonard Jerome: “For twenty years I have loved Roosevelt the man & hated Roosevelt the statesman & politician.”

It’s mighty good. Every time, in 25 years, that I have met Roosevelt the man, a wave of welcome has streaked through me with the hand-grip; but whenever (as a rule) I meet Roosevelt the statesman & politician I find him destitute of morals & not respectable. It is plain that where his political self & his party self are concerned he has nothing resembling a conscience; that under those inspirations he is naively indifferent to the restraints of duty & even unaware of them; ready to kick the Constitution into the back yard whenever it gets in the way; & whenever he smells a vote, not only willing but eager to buy it, give extravagant rates for it & pay the bill—not out of his own pocket or the party’s, but out of the nation’s, by cold pillage. As per Order 78 & the stealing of the Indian trust funds. A man who will filch trust-money from a pauper Indian to buy votes with is pretty low down.

But Roosevelt is excusable—I recognize it & (ought to) concede it. We are all insane, each in his own way, & with insanity goes irresponsibility. Theodore the man is sane; in fairness one ought to keep in mind that Theodore, as statesman & politician, is insane & not responsible.

Do not throw these enlightenments aside, but study them, let them raise you to higher planes & make you better. You taught me in my callow days, let me pay back the debt now in my old age out of a thesaurus plethoric with wisdom smelted from the golden ores of experience.

Ever yours for sweetness & light, / Mark.

Love to Harmony, & don’t forget us when you come down. I am still in bed, but having good times writing diligently / Say, Joe—I am the first that noticed the parallel [MTP]. Note: see Jan 15, 1907 entry, Order 78.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “This afternoon Mr. Clemens took such grave offense at the cards that wishing the same was in hell he vowed he’d never play again. I’m sorry. / Tonight Mrs. Crane, sweet Mrs. Crane arrived from Elmira. / Today Santissima had hats rrive from Aitkins. To think of Santissima and hats” [MTP: TS 40].

C.H. Mooney for the New Dixie Lyceum Bureau wrote from Louisville, KY to Sam, asking if he could fill “about five dates for us in the South sometime during next season?” with pay of $500 to $750 each [MTP].

John B. Stanchfield wrote from Elmira, N.Y. to Sam. “I have your note at the hand of Miss Lyon, under the date of February 13, enclosing clipping in reference to the bankruptcy of the Plasmon Company of America.” He doubted the assets of the co. would even pay the expenses of the bankruptcy proceedings. Also, he was gathering “information by degrees, in reference to our claim against Mr. Butters. I will be in New York in the near future, and call and talk over matters with you” [MTP].

February 17 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal recorded a visit from Muriel Pears of Scotland:

For several years Mr. Clemens has been in correspondence with a young Scotch woman. Miss Muriel Pears—I think he never expected to see her but yesterday came a local word from her saying that she arrived here in America last Sunday [Feb. 12], and is staying at the Brevoort House. From Mr. Clemens I went to see her and tonight she dined here. I found her very attractive and refreshing and her regard for Mr. Clemens is very beautiful. Mr. Clemens enjoyed her. He enjoyed her so much that he wants her to come again. She has a fine (-mind the word, I’ve-) [Lyon was searching for the right word here] memory, remembering the things best worth remembering. She dwelt charmingly on things written by Mr. Clemens, and she drew him out so that he was a glory, and she’ll never forget that evening. Her eyes grew in beauty (those lovely English eyes) and she gave continued little murmurs of assent to his words—his anecdotes—to himself. She wore a very pretty black lace gown, very becoming and her neck was most lovely to look upon with a string of pearls about it. Oh, the comfort for even a woman to look at a pretty woman [MTP: TS 40].

Lucy J.M Taylor (Mrs. Knox Taylor) for Quarter Club (for consumptives) wrote from Plainfield, N.J. to Sam. She had written in the fall of 1904 asking for signatures on his books and could she “beg again for the ten minutes” it took for him to send more? They would buy the books [MTP].

February 18 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Muriel M. Pears.

It was delightful to have you here; even the idiot butler wasn't able to spoil it. (Wait—this doesn't mean that I am entirely placated yet, but only partly, only largely; I am not forgetting that you did not let me know at once when you arrived.) A week lost. I wouldn't have served you like that.

If I could venture out I would bring you this book. And the MS (if you want it.) I would bring the MS. very privately, because it will not appear in print (North American Review) until March 1. It has a new interest for me now, because the general public—who do not know that magazine articles are always several weeks old before they appear in print—will think that certain passages in it were suggested by yesterday's tragedy.

I was very glad to see the photographs, & I want to see them again.

There is something I wish to add, but Bronchitis [Bambino Bronchitis Clemens, Cat in residence] is romping over me & my bed & has driven it out of my head. It will come again, no doubt, then I will keep hold of it.

With cordial welcome & greetings [MTP]. Note: the MS referred to that ran in the Mar. issue of the N.A.R. was “The Czar's Soliloquy.” Muriel's stayed one night at the Brevoort House. Sam may have handed her the book before she left or sent it, though if the latter it certainly would have gained a mention in his letter. Even if she had been given the book and she left on this day, it was usual for Clemens to write guests or hosts very soon after the visits.

Sam also inscribed a copy of JA: “To / Miss Muriel Pears / with the warm regards / & best wishes of / her friend / The Author. / 21 Fifth avenue, Feb. 18/05. / P.S. Welcome to America!” [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Annie Moffett Webster.

Mr. Clemens has been ill for a long time and though he is now much better he has not yet resumed letter writing and so wishes me to write for him and thank you for the brooch which came to-day and which he is very glad to have.

He wishes me to tell you that he is very greatly pleased with what Gov. Falk [sic Folk] said, and that he has greater admiration for him than for any other statesman of our time.

Mr. Clemens also wishes me to say that he is so glad that Mr. Sam Moffett is on the staff of Colliers; he thinks that Mr. Moffett has the choicest berth under a salary in the literary world in America.

Mr. Clemens has not been out of the house for many weeks, and stays quietly in his own room the greater part of the time. We have good news from Miss Clemens who is really improving, and Jean is well [MTP].

Note: Governor of Missouri Joseph Wingate Folk (“Holy Joe”) elected in 1904 as a reformer; (1869-1923).

February 18 ca. – On or just after this day at 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C., Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Hannibal Merchants Assoc.: “no objection to the honor but shall not be able to go there” [MTP]. Note: date changed from MTP's Feb.15 ca. to allow time for mails.

February 19 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Father Raffaello Stiattesi.

Dear Padre: / It was most kind of you to remember me, & I thank you very much. From what you say I comprehend that the fragrant countess [Massiglia] from the divorce-courts of Philadelphia has been destroying my character. It is all right (as we say), it does not disturb me. The character that she could destroy is not worth saving.

Forgive her? Yes, I am quite able to do that, but it would do no good, she would not understand it. The insane seldom understand words or acts that proceed from a moral basis. Especially when they are old. Earlier she would have understood. At 45 she would have understood. But it is too late now.

We keep you in warm remembrance, dear Padre, we shall not forget you [MTP]. Note: Hill explains the last aspect of conflict with the Countess Massiglia: “The countess, on taking back the villa in 1904, had found eight hundred francs' damages, which, according to Cecchi, had outraged her; and Stiattesi wrote Clemens that the countess was slandering him all over Florence..." [107].

Victor H. Ross for Toronto Press Club wrote to invite Sam to lecture there [MTP].

Lucy Page Whitehead wrote from Wash. D.C. to Sam, disappointed he would be unable to attend the inauguration of Theodore Roosevelt [MTP].

February 20 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to John Y. MacAlister.

I wish I could see my way to allowing my Plasmon-testimony to be used & circulated by the English Co., but I cannot conscientiously do it. When I contributed it here, I limited its use to America where I had no pecuniary interest in the experimenting syndicate. When the American Co. was afterward formed & I became a stockholder, & the Co began to use my testimony, I stopped it. I am a stockholder in the English Co. To print that fact along with the testimony would neutralize the latter & make me feel uncomfortable besides, & to print the testimony without that addition would not be fair.

I am glad to have your Butters-remembrances. My lawyer is making his arrangements. We think we have a pretty strong case.

I'll write on those fly-sheets now, & my secretary will post them to you to-day.

I am still in bed, but could turn out if I wanted to. In bed, I can work; out of it I should be a prey to interruptions [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's Journal #2: "Mr. Clemens read King Leopold's Soliloquy to Mrs. Crane, Jean & me. / This evening Mr. Clemens began the reading of a Joan of Arc play by Mr. Geo. Porter," The Maid, A Drama in Five Acts (1904) [MTP TS 5; Gribben 554].

February 21 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam inscribed a portrait drawing of himself to Susan Crane: "Feb. 21/05 / To Susy Crane / the dearly beloved—from / 'The Holy Samuel.'" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's Journal (for Feb. 22): "It was yesterday that Mr. Clemens read King Leopold's Soliloquy to Mrs. Crane & me. Breathless we sat & were weak with emotion when he finished the bald, truthful statements that rolled from Leopold's vicious lips. Horribly, too horribly picturesque it is, and Mr. Clemens will cut out some of it. It's a pity too, but I suppose it would be too strong a diet for people & governments" [MTP: TS 41; Hawkins 155 with slight differences]. Note: the North American Review rejected the piece. See Apr. 11, 1905 to Morel.

Clemens signed a portrait print of himself by illustrator Kate Rogers Nowell to an unidentified person: "Sincerely yours, / Mark Twain / Feb. 21/'05" [MTP: Fraser's Autographs; printed in The Outlook # 78, 1904, p. 843]. See Dec. 3, 1904 entry. Insert Nowell's illustration.

Erving Winslow for the Anti-Imperialist League wrote to Sam, enclosing a flyer. "Will you permit us to use your name among our list of vice-presidents? [MTP]. Sam replied about Feb. 23.

Alice Hooker Day wrote from 28 Fifth Ave., N.Y. to Sam, asking him to come to luncheon with his family on the following day [MTP].

Ernest C. Hales wrote on The Portland (England) Pottery Co. letterhead to compliment Sam on the “many years” of enjoyment received through Mark Twain’s books [MTP]. Note: Sam answered on Mar. 6.

February 22 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: “Dr. Quintard called & talked with Mr. Clemens. Mrs. Crane & Jean lunched with Mrs. Day / After Mr. Clemens came home he finished reading the Joan of Arc play” [MTP TS 5-6]. Note: George Porter’s play, The Maid, A Drama in Five Acts (1904) [Gribben 554].

Frances E. Skinner wrote from New Haven, Conn. to Sam. “Knowing that while you were in Berlin you had some acquaintances with the late Frau Dr. Hempel, I am taking the liberty of writing to you in regard to a German Grammar which she had nearly completed before her sudden death which occurred last year. / Her intention was to publish the book in this country for the use of American students...” Would Sam write a “few words of appreciation of Frau Dr. Hempel” for use in the book? Ex-Ambassador White had sent a letter for such use [MTP]. Note: Skinner translated several books for G.P. Putnam’s.

An unidentified man wrote from Martinsville, KY to Sam, complimenting him on TA, which he and his wife were then reading. Only the first page of this note survives [MTP].

February 23 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Abbott Handerson Thayer:

“Dear Mr. Thayer— / If this should ever reach you, please let me know, for I want to ask about summer-house chances, in Dublin. / Sincerely Yours / SL. Clemens / It is Alice Day who tells me she thinks this may find you” [Archives of American Art, Thayer family papers online image 35456, accessed Mar. 2, 2010]. Note: Dublin, N.H.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tonight Mr. And Mrs. Loomis dined here. Mr. Clemens was delightful, of course. While we were at dinner Mrs. Mott called me up to ask Mr. Clemens and Jean to dine there tomorrow evening. She to read some of her Harvard son’s stories to him. Jean remonstrated when Mr. C. bade me tell Mrs. Mott he wasn’t going out for months, saying “If you’re going to lie, tell a good one”—“Little ones are no ‘count.’”

Mr. Clemens said he was now on “Adam’s Soliloquy”. He can make those old frauds say about themselves what no one would dare say of them [MTP: TS 41]. Note: Edward Loomis and Julia Langdon Loomis.

Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: “Tonight Mr. & Mrs Loomis dined here. Sent a check for $25 to Mrs. Tabitha Greening Palmyra, mo. / Mr. Edward Browning who attended to transferring Mr. Clemens’s pension to Mrs. Greening is dead ‘ [MTP TS 6]. Note: she meant Edward F. Brownell.

An unidentified person wrote on American Building & Engineering Reports stationery (Chicago and N.Y.) to ask if Sam planned to build a hotel in Hannibal, and enclosing a card for him to fill out. On or just after this date Isabel answered for Sam (draft in pencil): “Still in bed & hope to remain there for a few years yet. Read & smoke & write all he wants to & is having a good time” [MTP]. Note: on Feb. 15 Sydney J. Roy wrote announcing a company to build a hotel in Hannibal. This unidentified person likely saw such announcements by Roy.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam on the bottom of Stanchfield’s Feb. 16 letter: “Wright is to meet Mr. Stanchfield at the Hoffman House to-morrow evening. / Yours ...” [MTP].

Sam’s essay, “Adam’s Soliloquy” was written before Feb. 23, 1905 and remained unpublished during his lifetime. It was collected in Europe and Elsewhere (1923), edited by Albert Bigelow Paine [Budd, Collected 2: 1009].

February 23? – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C., Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Erving Winslow’s Feb. 21 that he was recovering from a long illness and had no objection to being named as vice president of the Anti-Imperialist League if it wouldn’t “entail active support on his part” [MTP].

February 24 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

This morning Mrs. Crane went home, leaving behind her a blank. Someone spoke of her sweet inward peace, and she radiates it. Mr. Clemens calls her “the well beloved”, and she is all of that.

Pity it is that Mr. Clemens cannot look down a flight of stairs and see the beauty of his head as he stands in a red hall with a searching incandescent light revealing and caressing the wondrous glow of his hair [MTP: TS 41].

February 25 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Abbott H. Thayer sent a telegram to Sam: “This very great joy to us plenty houses visit us immediately and choose one / A H Thayer.” On the backside of the telegram Sam wrote in pencil what appears to be a response telegram, “Too ill to travel will send representative Shall you be there to see her—Please wire” [MTP]. Note: Henry Copley Greene’s Dublin house, “Lone Tree Hill” on the slope of Mt. Monadnock was chosen. Greene (1871-1951) was an author from an old New England family.

Charles E. Dana wrote to Miss Lyon that he had heard Henry Copley Greene had a house in Dublin, N.H. to lease for the summer. He gave George W. Gleason as the agent for houses there—“he runs the town so your standing with him means life or death” [MTP].

February 26 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Kate Rogers Nowell.

“Dear Mrs Nowell: / Indeed the portrait is fine. I have said it before but the thought is brought up in my mind again by the Outlook’s reproductions—just received the other day—that they are fine also, one can see at a glance” [MTP]. Note: An artist from Mass. was employed, Kate Roger Nowell for The Outlook. No bio. information was found.

Sam also wrote a long letter to Dr. Moses Allen Starr on Dr. G.W. Kirch’s controversies, which included bill items and amounts, services not billed for but claimed later, and certificates needed for Livy’s transport. Sam closed the list of complaints with:

It is my belief, my conviction, that Dr. Kirch deliberately withheld the certificates, and that it was his intention to stop us in Naples by this means and add to our sorrows a deep humiliation. He is aware that through his conduct we came very near to being stopped there; and as he has never apologised nor offered to explain, I infer that his act was intentional.

This long chapter is my answer, Dr. Starr. I have not written it carelessly, but very carefully.

Of course I do not know that Dr. Kirch’s bills were gouges, but I do suspect it. N. B. He made out his first bill not in Lire but in dollars—$900. It made me suspicious. Why should he make it out in dollars? No one keeps his Florentine bank account in dollars. I told my secretary to ask him to make it out again, and put it in Lire. He did it; and made it 4,500 Lire. $900 isn’t 4,500 Lire, it is $25 or $30 more than that.

It is as I have said: I do not know that the repudiated bill of 2,200 Lire was a proposed gouge, I only think it. Only a court can settle my doubts. I am so anxious to have them settled that I make this offer: if Kirch will sue me I will pay the 2200 Lire whether he wins the suit or loses it. I do not see how he can object to this. Within the past 7 months he has twice, of his own motion, tacitly threatened a suit. This present offer of mine is to encourage him to go on and carry out the threat [MTP]. Note: two strikeouts for how many weeks he’d been down in bed (6–8, 10) reflect the likelihood that Sam worked on this letter for some time, probably a belated reply to Starr’s of Dec. 21, 1904. See also Starr’s reply of Mar. 9.

Sam also updated his prior inscription of Sketches New and Old (Hillcrest Ed.) to Clara Clemens: “Feb. 26, 1905. It was written a quarter of a century ago, but it sounds as if the excitement of today over the (alleged) newly-discovered Aphrodite by Praxiteles (as the ‘experts’ claim) had inspired it. M.T.” [Sotheby’s, Apr 13, 2004, lot 27] Note: Sotheby’s added this note: “About half of the volumes are sparingly marked with Clemens’s characteristic pencil and pen underlinings and marginal rules, and the conclusion of “The Capitoline Venus” in Sketches New and Old bears a 36-word autograph note.” See also Sam’s inscriptions to the Hillcrest Edition books for Clara and Jean of Nov. 27, 1904.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today I photoed John Joran and Drummond—2 policemen in Washington Square.

Today after Mr. Stanchfield left I went down to find Mr. Clemens lying in a youthful position over the big saddle bags in the drawing room, playing with Bambino. Then he went to lunch with Mrs. Laffan, and in the evening he and Jean went around to Mr. de Forest’s lovely house, to meet Sir Purdon Clarke [MTP: TS 41]. Note: Lockwood De Forest (1850-1932), architect, painter, designer, and importer of furnishings—a friend of Clarke’s—his house at 7 East 10th Street, was one of the most unusual in NYC. See insert, where Clemens met Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke.

Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: “Tonight Mr. Clemens & Jean dined with Mr & Mrs De Jones” [MTP TS 6].

February 27 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

“Mr. Clemens was very, very interesting for during and after dinner he discussed the famous Beecher trial. Mr. Clemens had said at the time, and he still says that guilty or not, Beecher should have publicly denied the charge the day after it appeared in the press, for the honor of the woman, he should have done it” [MTP: TS 41].

Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: “Telegraphed Mr. Thayer. Wrote to Mr. H.C. Greene about Dublin house mentioned by Mr. Dana” [MTP TS 6]. Note: Henry Copley Greene: Abbott H. Thayer.

At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Henry Copley Greene of Boston:

Mr. S. L. Clemens wishes me to say for him that through Mr. Charles G Dune of Philadelphia he learns that you have a house to let for the summer in Dublin. Mr. C. send[s] a representative to Dublin this week to look for a house for him, and he therefore wishes me to ask if you will kindly send an authorization to Mr. Abbot [sic] H. Thayer in Dublin, which will enable his representative to see your house [MTP].

Abbott H. Thayer sent a telegram from Dublin, N.H. to Sam. “Of course send her straight to us see our letter” [MTP]. Note: Katy Leary was investigating rental houses for Sam and family.

Isabel V. Lyon then replied for Sam to Abbott H. Thayer, referring to his telegram and correspondence with Greene:

Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him and thank you for your telegram with its most kind invitation; he is not well enough to accept it, and so expects to send his house keeper to Dublin this week to look for a house for him.

Mr. Clemens wishes me to say that he has heard that Mr. Henry Copley Greene of Boston has a house to let in Dublin, and that he has sent word to Mr. Greene asking him to send to you an authorization for his house-keeper to look at the house [MTP]. Note: Thayer’s telegram: Feb. 25.

Emma Beach Thayer wrote from Dublin, N.H. to Sam, telling him to get well and that they would be “most pleased to receive your deputy.” She advised that the “easier, though longer, way here is by way of Boston” and gave train times and directions [MTP]. Note: “deputy” would be Katy Leary. Evidently the Thayers had not been informed that Jean Clemens would accompany Katy.

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam conveying an advertising scheme by an advertising agent for Sam to promote typewriters and get a free Remington if he had need of one. The agent sent Duneka “an old, faded, circular of thirty years ago, in which you talk about the typewriter” [MTP].

Alice Hegan Rice wrote to Sam, sending “a recent copy of my favorite newspaper, which contains a review of remarkable quality” [MTP]. Note: Newspaper or review not specified and not in file.

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam.

Dear Mark: / It is highly probable that I (and maybe Harmony) shall go to New York next Monday (March 6th) for a day and possibly two days. In which case; of all the hotels public and private there to make choice of we prefer yours—for sentimental reasons chiefly.

Of course there may be, and are not unlikely to be, circumstances of one sort or another, to bar you from letting us in at that time. If it be so, it will not in the least embarrass you—we trust—to tell us of it. The hour of our arrival will be the latter part of the afternoon. Should we stay over Tuesday, we shall be off your hands from morning till evening. With care to Jean / Affectionately yours [MTP]. Note: evidently Joe’s plans to be in New York on March 6 for a few days changed, as no notes were made of such a visit and Sam wrote to Joe on Mar. 7.

February 28 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon replied to Odoardo Luchini ‘s Feb. 14.

Dear Senator Luchini: / Mr. Clemens wishes me to write for him and thank you for your very interesting letter. He is much pleased with it.

He wishes me to tell you that he is still in his bed and hopes to remain there for a few years yet; for, undisturbed, he can read and smoke and write all he wants to, and so he is having a good time.

Mr. Clemens has very good news from Miss Clara who is improving constantly under the rigid rules of the sanitarium. She can now walk out each fine day—and although she cannot see either family or friends we hear from her nurse by telephone every day and the reports are comforting.

Mr. Clemens wishes me to say that he hopes you will not trouble to return the “Monna Vanna”, for there are no associations connected with the book.

He wishes me to convey to Signora Luchini, your family, and to yourself his very warm regards. With great respect ... [MTP]. See Gribben 446.

Sam also wrote to Abbott Handerson Thayer.

I shall no doubt receive your letter before I put this in an envelop. Thank you ever so much for your telegrams.

The bearer of this, Miss Katy Leary, our housekeeper knows by old & seasoned experience just what we want in the way of a house; & so, if you will send her to Mr. [George W.] Gleason I shall be very greatly obliged ... [MTP].

On the above letter to Thayer Sam wrote to Emma Beach Thayer:

“Dear Mrs. Emma: / The letter has arrived & my daughter Jean is prodigiously delighted to go with Katy. Many thousands of thanks! / Yours, now, as long ago, / SL. Clemens” [MTP].

Note: See Volume I entries for Emeline (Emma) Beach, who had briefly been a love interest for Sam. In 1891 she became the second wife of Abbott Handerson Thayer, the distinguished artist. The Thayers moved in 1901 to Dublin, N.H. at the foot of Mt. Monadnock, where Thayer did his best work. Hearing from Alice Day that the Thayers lived near Dublin, he enlisted them in his search for a summer place.

Sam also wrote to the NYC Postmaster, his letter not extant, but referred to in the Mar. 2 reply [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today Herr Heinick called to see Jean. He was ever so interesting telling about the corpse that he’s at work on—medical student. That corpse has been on the ice for 1½ years, and he is going to work on it until May when it will be so soft that he can pick up the muscles and nerves, without cutting for them.

This morning, looking for a MS. for McClure’s among Mr. Clemens’ papers I found the notebook that he used on the Quaker City in 1867 [MTP: TS 41-42].

Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "Rent. Mr. Brownell—Check for Mrs. Greening, 25.00.
"Today I counted the words of the 'Czar's Soliloquy'—there are 1900" [MTP TS 6].

George W. Reeves wrote that he'd written to Mr. Thayer about a place at Dublin and expected to hear from him in a few days. He enclosed a Feb. 26 from Mrs. Amelia Edith Huttleston Barr (1813-1919) about a "very pretty cottage" in Dublin for rent; Sam could write Mrs. Dr. Sass, Cornwall-on-Hudson about it. Reeves wrote that Barr was an authoress who seemed to know Clemens [MTP]. Note: this is not Mrs. Robert Barr, known by Twain, but another Mrs. Robert Barr whose husband and children died in 1876.

March – Sam's essay, "The Czar's Soliloquy" first ran in the Mar. issue of North American Review. It was not collected in any publication during his lifetime [Budd, Collected 2: 1009].

Katy Leary and Jean Clemens set out to inspect the Henry Copley Greene house in Dublin N.H., still "in the dead of winter." With no hotel in Dublin the pair froze for a "nine or ten miles" to reach the Thayer's home, where they were thawed by a huge fire. The next day they discovered the only way to see the Copley house was to use skis over ten-foot snowdrifts. Jean, ever active, thought it no problem, while Katy accomplished the "terrible task." The house was suitable for summer [Lawton 248-50; Lystra 45-6].

Sam's Jan. 28, 1905 letter to Michael Monahan was published by The Society of Papyrites (vol. 4, no. 3) [Gribben 525].

Sometime in the first half of March, Sam wrote from 21 Fifth Ave., in N.Y.C. to Louise W. Carnegie.

Dear Mrs. Carnegie: / This which I enclose is from my Highland lassie (aged about 30 & highly educated & accomplished) who is the best letter-writer now alive, I think. I have corresponded with her for 3 years, but I never saw her till she arrived on her first visit to America 2 or 3 weeks ago. She was not a disappointment—just the reverse. She returns home soon—but it ought not to be allowed. She is not merely a lady by birth & breeding, she is a lady inside. Capable stock; the male part of her family are civil & military officers in India & South Africa. Two & a half years ago she wanted to be companion to Mrs. Clemens or governess to my daughters, or both. But we hadn't an extra room, nor a vacancy, except in the purse.

When she dined with us & spent the evening she said nothing about governessing, but I hope you need her, therefore I am writing this note privately on my own motion. There's no harm if nothing comes of it.

I am still in bed, & expect to stay there till the whisky runs out, for I read, smoke, write, & am very comfortable & seldom sober.

As soon as I get out I am coming up to call [MTP]. Note: the "lassie" was Muriel M. Pears who came to New York and stayed at the Brevoort House next door on Feb. 17 (see Lyon's journal that date); the enclosure is missing; this letter to Louise Carnegie, which refers to the Feb. 17 visit as "two or three weeks ago" places this letter to the first half of March, 1905.

March 1 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight Mr. Clemens talked about Mr. Howells. He doesn't know why he is so loyal to Howells (literarily) and he told me how only recently Mr. Howells has been free from financial worry. He has managed in the long years to tuck away $60,000 in good investments, but that's all. Then he talked about Bayard Taylor's wonderful memory. It was brought up by the sense of the words "remember" and "recollect". Mr. Clemens said that once many years ago he and Bayard Taylor were walking the deck of a steamer when Taylor said he had made a point of each day making a test of his memory. That many years before that time as a boy, he had taken a prize for reciting accurately a list of words which he had been allowed to read only once or twice. They were disconnected words, nothing in them to carry meaning from one to the other. Then Mr. Taylor said "let me walk the deck alone for 10 to 15 minutes and I'll remember them"—and he did it. "That is recollecting," Mr. Clemens said and he dropped his napkin and rose with his lovely strong sway from the dinner table to go into the living room and talk to Bambino.

Tonight as I was playing the Andante of Beethoven's 5th Symphony a reporter from the Journal came to say that Maxim Gorky had said that he'd heard that Mark Twain had signed a petition for his release. I carried the message to Mr. Clemens and his answer was "That he'd been too ill for weeks to sign petitions, if there had been petitions to sign. Although if one had come for Gorky's release he'd have signed it if he'd had to get out of his coffin to do it.” The reporter scratched down the words on a piece of yellow paper and he was glad in his heart and with his tongue to have so strong a message [MTP: TS 42].

Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: English Butler came today, George Buckridge.

Today Jean left for Dublin to stay overnight with Mrs Abbott Thayer, and look at houses for next summer. Katie is with her.

Mr. Duneka came to talk with Mr. Clemens about Remington Type-writer advertising [MTP TS 6]. Note: the advertising found its way into the Mar. 18 issue of Harper’s Weekly, p. 378 and 391.

March 2 Thursday – Jean Clemens and Katy Leary were in Dublin, N.H. where they previewed Henry Copley Greene’s house, approving it for the summer rental. Jean stayed one night with Mr. & Mrs. Abbott Thayer, likely this evening or the next, as Isabel Lyon met Jean on Mar. 4 in Hartford. See her journal entries for Mar. 2, 3 & 4.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: I’m on the train now going up to Hartford. I thought I was late coming through the subway tunnel with Mother, so we roared goodbye at each other savagely, but kept right on the same direction and I turned around just in time to see Saint Mother fall up the subway stairs in her dear haste to keep up with savage horrid me. Then we laughed. The country is snowy and beautiful. It’s so nice of the oaks to keep their pretty brown leaves on all winter. Jean is up at Dublin with Katie. Man behind me suggests to girl with him that she tie a string around her ankle to remind her of him. She giggles [MTP: TS 42].

The N.Y. City Post Office wrote to Sam. “Your kind letter of 28th ultimo [not extant], duly received and I have given special instructions that all mail matter directed to you at New York City without definite or local address shall hereafter be delivered at No. 21 Fifth Avenue, as you request” [MTP]. Note: signed “W.R.W” was William R. Willcox (b. 1863), appointed as NYC Postmaster (1905-1907). He was later Chairman of the Republican National Committee. Insert: NY Main P.O. ca. 1905; built in 1880 demolished in 1939; known as “Mullet’s Monstrosity.”

Sam’s essay “Dr. Loeb’s Incredible Discovery” was given this date. Budd writes it was written “sometime after the epigraph date of March 2, 1905, but was not published during Twain’s life. It first appeared in 1923 in Europe and Elsewhere, edited by Albert Bigelow Paine” [Budd, Collected 2: 1009].

March 3 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: I met her [Jean] today on the 12.19 train when Katie left it. But yesterday was high holiday of the year for me. David and Lou were out at the Whitings to meet me there. I saw dear Mr. Whiting as he lay in his sick bed, a noble wonderful face, 81 years. I went to Hattie’s reception and saw friends and friends and friends. I went to the Moores and saw Jesse there. I stayed the night with Leila and we sat in our wrappers in her room and talked over biscuit and beer until nearly 2 o’clock [MTP: TS 42]. Note: Miss Lyon was in Hartford.

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: Met Jean at 12.19. Katie got off the train & stayed over to attend to some business for Mr. Clemens. Got some boxes from the Trust Company.

Jean’s trip to Dublin was successful. She found a house that Mr. Clemens will take. In fact he telegraphed so today [not extant]—to the local agent—Henry D. Allison [MTP TS 7].

Sebastiano V. Cecchi wrote on Haskard & Co. Bankers, Florence, Italy to Sam. “I wrote you on the 25 January Awocato Traverso has asked me to send you the enclosed document,” which had to do with terms of the examination of witnesses in the trial of Countess Massigila. The document would have to be signed by Clemens before the Italian Consul in New York [MTP].

March 4 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: I saw Dr. John in the morning and he does not say that the eye will ever be much better, and then I met Jean who has had an equally successful trip in Dublin and found a very good house owned by Mr. Henry Copley Greene of Boston. She found a house too owned by a French Canadian. She stayed one night with Mr. and Mrs. Abbott A. Thayer. Today Herr Heinick came [MTP: TS 42].

John B. Stanchfield attorney in Elmira wrote to Sam that he had,

“this day forwarded to Messrs. Lane, Lederman, & Lane, of San Francisco, Cal., a letter of which the enclosed is a copy. It does not go into the detail of a settlement, because I wish first to find out what proposition if any will be made. I think it covers the ground from our point of view.” Note: see Feb. 16 from Stanchfield, Sam’s attorney on the Butters matter and the disposition of assets from the bankruptcy of Plasmon Co. of America.

Mail from Elmira to N.Y.C. would have taken at least a day or two, so that Sam’s response, written for him by Lyon should be catalogued as on or after March 6 [MTP].

Henry Darracott Allison sent a telegram from Keene, N.H. to Sam: “Your acceptance received leases will be forwarded you without delay” [MTP].

William Webster Ellsworth of the Century Co. wrote to Sam, enclosing a clipping from the NY Evening Post praising Charles David Stewart’s (1868-1960) first book, The Fugitive Blacksmith (1905). Ellsworth asked if Sam had read the book that they’d sent him a copy of “some time ago,” and noted the Post likened it to Sam’s work [MTP]. Note: see Gribben 665.

Emma Beach Thayer wrote from Dublin, N.H. to Sam. “Dear Mr. Clemens, / You were very good to spare your daughter [Jean] to us. / We wanted to keep her much longer. / It is a delightful thought that you will be so near us, and will perhaps often drop in on us. You are very much worshipped by this family—the young people have grown up looking up to you with utmost reverence” [MTP].

March 5 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Late this afternoon Mr. Clemens slipped away up to the Grosvenor and telephoned to say he was going to dine with the Misses McMahon. Francesca and Rosamond Gilder were here and stayed to supper. Today Mr. Clemens read me some bits of manuscript that he has been working on. He is so wonderful, so ennobling [MTP: TS 43] Hill adds a line not in the TS: “[Jean] hated it and refused to type any of it” [100]. Note: see Trombley p. 63.

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Telephoned asking Col. Harvey about his part of the “Hand” article, but Col. Harvey is in Wshington. / Mr. Clemens read some MS. to me. / The Poet & his friend & the Admiral [MTP TS 7]. Note: this article became “Refuge of the Derelicts.”

John F. Weir wrote from Yale University School of the Fine Arts to praise Sam’s JA and “especially the article in the Dec. ‘Harper’s’” [MTP].

March 6 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam replied to Ernest C. Hales’ Feb. 21:

I thank you very much for what you say. Just as I was about to comply with your request in the formal and customary fashion, this old letter fell out of an old book, and I thought you might prefer it.

It is the original—a typewritten copy went to the man on the other end—Dr. Sill (I think that is the name) inventor of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri [MTP: Cyril Clemens’ Mark Twain: The Letter Writer, 1932, p.104].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today Mother went up to see Poppy for a week. I took her up to the station" [MTP: TS 43]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Telephoned to Dr. Shaw's Secretary asking if Dr. Shaw can call in to see Mr. Clemens" [MTP TS 7].

Jean Clemens wrote to Patrick McAleer:

Dear Patrick; / I hadn't the faintest idea of your recent loss when I saw you, but although it is rather late Father & I wish to express our warm sympathy with all of you.

Katie, I believe, told you that I am going to buy a riding horse. Father wants me to ask you if you would be willing to come with us to Dublin, N.H. from May 1st to Nov. 1st at $60⁰⁰ a month & your board & lodging. There is a single room in the stable & you would eat with the other servants in their dining-room. There would, of course, be no room for Mary or any of the other members of the family, but if you would come we should be most glad. The work would consist of the care of my horse, managing the electric water-motor which supplies the house with water, the care of the furnace in case we use it, and the care of the garden. There is a small kitchen & flower garden.

Father wants you to go to the Hartford Hospital & get yourself in good condition. Either call on Dr. Root or Dr. Porter & have yourself examined and taken care of either at the hospital, or told how to care yourself at home. Father also says that he will be glad to pay you part of your wages in advance, say $30⁰⁰—beginning now (March) each month, between now & May 1st—

The list of the things to be done sounds rather large, but I do not believe that any of it will be very taxing, unless filling the refrigerator is. (I forgot to mention that)]—and that the ice-house is on the place near at hand. Please think this proposition over carefully, at the same time realizing how very glad we shall be to have you with us once more, if you decide to come. / Yours affect. / Jean L. Clemens [MTP]. Note: Patrick would die from cancer of the liver nearly a year later, Feb. 26, 1906. It's likely his hospital check up referred to here revealed the disease.

An unidentified man (W. Vernon?) wrote on W.F. McLaughlin & Co. (importers & roasters of coffee) letterhead to Sam.

"Unless you hear to the contrary I will call upon you at your residence at 9 o'clock on Friday morning, the 17th, as I wish to have a conversation with you before leaving for England. I should be glad if you would get your typewriter to write me a letter telling me what has transpired as the result of Mr. Ashcroft's visit to England. I concluded it better not to do anything in the matter till my return there, because, as Mr. Ashcroft has seen the other directors during my absence, a correspondence on the matter might have complicated things. The business [Plasmon] is going better daily in England" [MTP]. Note: Signature is not clear, but evidently the man was a director of the American Plasmon Co. W. In her Mar. 17 journal entry, Lyon noted that Mr. Vernon called to see Mr. Clemens this morning," the same 17th date as in the above letter. Ashcroft also wrote on Nov. 1 that he had "drafted a plan of reorganization of Plasmon that Vernon is 'fathering' and which will be satisfactory to all parties." W. Vernon wrote to Sam on Feb. 23, 1906. Taken together it seems probable that this letter was from W. Vernon. MTP advised of same.

March 6 ca. – On or just after this day, Isabel V. Lyon responded for Sam to John Stanchfield's Mar. 4 note: "Mr. Clemens does immensely approve the letter. It talks straight business without any mincing" [MTP]. Note: There was no mail delivery on Sunday, though letter carriers in N.Y.C. during 1905 made as many as nine trips a day from the main post office. Sam could not have received Stanchfield's note before March 6.

March 7 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Beatrice M. Benjamin.

Thank you for remembering to send me the questions. At first glance they look formidable, for young girls (& their elders); but upon examination one finds them to be simple, direct, distinctly outlined, & not formidable—in a word, well devised, a difficult job competently performed. A definite question is a suggestive & stimulating text to talk to, a vague & indefinite one is an invitation to you to make snowballs out of fog—an industry which has its embarrassments.

Do you know, I trained the Young Girls' Club, of Hartford (that is, the Monday Morning Club), in this very business 25 years ago—and I was a member, too. To this day I am the only young girl of my sex that has the privilege of belonging to that Club. You write & ask anybody there if it isn't so.

Your parents are well. I saw them at your granther's the other night. Good-bye, dear, it is time I was getting to work [MTP]. Note: Beatrice was the daughter of William Evarts Benjamin and Anne Engle Rogers Benjamin, H.H. Rogers' oldest daughter.

Sam also wrote to Joe Twichell:

By George! But Mr. Wheaton does shovel the sackcloth & ashes onto your head in a most gentle & blistering way! I have not seen it better done in my life-days, as the Germans say. I think I divine how you feel, & about how much boot you would give to change places with almost anybody who has been caught in a disreputable performance—for instance, with that young friend of yours, courting his girl in her log home, & excused himself to go outside & “look after his horse.”

You must bring Mr. Wheaton here, some time when you are down, so that we can find out why he wants to stop war, which, to my mind, is one of the very best methods known to us of diminishing the human race. (What a life it is?? this one! Everything we do, somebody intrudes & obstructs it. After years of thought & labor, I have arrived within one little bit of a step of perfecting my invention for exhausting the oxygen in the globe's air during a stretch of 22 minutes, & of course along comes an obstructor who is inventing something to protect life. Damn such a world, anyway.)

Send Dave bach!—that breeder of disappointments. / Lovingly, Mark [MTP: Cushman file]. Note: the Dave reference may be to Joe's son, David.

Isabel Lyon's journal: “Today Mrs. [Clara] Stanchfield dined here. She is ever so charming. We had interesting talk after dinner when it switched onto eternity, a thing that has been in my mind so much of late” [MTP: TS 43].

Philip Cabot (1872-1941) wrote for Henry Copley Greene to Sam. “As instructed by my clients, Mr. Henry Copley Greene and Miss Belle Greene, I enclose you herewith in duplicate leases of their house on Lone Tree Hill in the Town of Dublin, New Hampshire” Cabot invited Sam's response if the leases were not drawn to his understanding [MTP].

March 8 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today Mr. Coburn called and brought some very wonderful photographs. George Meredith, Andrew Lang, Mrs. Ward, Edmund Gosse and many others. He brought some landscapes too, and when I showed one of some mighty trees to Mr. Clemens, at first he couldn't make out the subject and when I told him what it was he said, “I thought it was the dinosaur coming down town.”

Friday he will come to photograph the Signior Padrone [MTP: TS 43]. Note: Alvin Langdon Coburn, photographer, did come on Mar. 10 [ibid.] and would also take pictures on Mar. 11 [#2 TS 7] and also at Stormfield. Dec. 21-22, 1908. No connection with the Langdon family was found.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: “Mr. Clemens signed lease for Dublin house” [MTP TS 7].

March 9 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight Mr. Gilder and Dorothea dined here. Dorothea looked very sweet in a little marquise bodice, brilliantly charmingly flowered. She left early to go to a concert but Mr. Gilder stayed on and was very interesting in his talk about Roosevelt as a reader, and as a man with a phenomenal [sic] memory. Only as a politician is he not admirable [MTP: TS 43].

Philip Cabot wrote for Henry Copley Greene to Miss Lyon, acknowledging the signed leases from Clemens, and returning one signed copy for Sam's files [MTP].

Margaret T. Chanler and Mrs. John Elliott sent an engraved invitation to a Shakespearean Recital by Mr. Samuel Arthur King on Thursday morning, March 11, at 11:30 [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote “ansd” on card.

Moses Allen Starr, M.D. wrote from NYC to Sam, responding to Sam's questions about Dr. Kirch's supposed overcharges. "I have received your letter and am only sorry that you have had the trouble of writing it." Starr explained that prevalent fees should proscribe what a "professional man of honesty" should charge. Starr had recommended Kirch, so felt some responsibility—he had done so from the word of Mr. W. D. Barbour of NYC, whose wife had been under Kirch's care for four months in 1902-3 [MTP]. Note: Clemens wrote on the env. "Dr. Starr's verdict against Kirch." See Sam's of Feb. 26.

March 10 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Elizabeth Garver Jordan (1867-1947) editor of Harper's Bazar.

Dear Miss Jordan: / Once I could have written about the special faults of women—playfully, flippantly, possibly even seriously; but that time has gone by, not to come again I believe. My model would have been my wife, who was the only woman I have ever thoroughly known; she would have edited my article when it was finished, for she edited all my manuscripts, beginning this labor of love a year before we were married, continuing it 36 years, & only relinquishing it on her death-bed, when her strength was all gone & she laid down a story of mine—the first chapter of it—knowing that her dear work was ended & that she should not help me any more. I think she had no faults; if she had, I do not now remember what they were. I cannot write upon that subject, the memory of what she was has disqualified me.

I will hope that another theme will suggest itself to you or to me & that it will turn out to be workable for the Bazar.

With my kindest regards & best wishes... [MTP]. Note: Miss Jordan would repeatedly try to get Sam to take part in a serial story to appear in Bazaar, at the urging of W.D. Howells. See Lyon's journal relating to this letter below; also see May 29, 1906.

Sam also wrote again to Joe Twichell enclosing an article not in the file:

Joe dear, read it! Isn't it a pathetic human race? And can there be anything more pathetic than the New England vote-peddling citizen's guileless admiration of his Puritan forefathers & Revolution-ancestors, & his conviction that they averaged higher, in virtue, than he does? Well—I believed as he does until Charley Clark & John Fiske debauched me with the truth. About '85 Charley Clark astounded me by saying that the farmer-vote of Connecticut was as purchasable as his potatoes, & at about the same price. I was an innocent person (then) & I was horrified. I had my opinion of the man who would buy a vote, or sell one, or would contribute money to be used in so degraded a commerce. Why, dang it, Joe, my own white soul surrendered, with hardly a pang, at the very first temptation! Yes sir, in our library one morning Charley Warner asked me for $25 to buy votes with, in Hawley's interest, & I fell, there & then, never to rise again.

Do you notice the last sentence of the printed slip? Isn't it good & sarcastic! They are going to lay Bulkeley's matter (no doubt without a smile) before the U.S. Senate, a body which has been helping to buy the Grand Army & bounty-jumper & Revolution-great-grandchild vote every year for a generation! / Love from / ...[MTP: Cushman file]. Note: Morgan Gardner Bulkeley (1837-1922), Republican Mayor of Hartford (1880-1888), Governor (1889-1893), US Senator 1905-1911. "Bulkeley's matter," seems here to have had some connection with the purchasing of votes, in prior days, a common occurrence in Connecticut.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today Mr. Clemens wrote a very beautiful letter in answer to Miss Elizabeth Jordan who wanted him to write on the "foibles of women"—to be answered by Henry James—but he said he couldn't do that now, once he might have, but the one who would have helped him to do it is gone.

Mr. Coburn came and photographed Mr. Clemens. He came down stairs in his old gray slippers and words can never say how charming he is. Mr. Coburn was made most happy by the interview and by the chance remarks that the Signior Padrone threw in.

Tonight Mr. Clemens read his "War Prayer" after dinner. It is wonderful and strong, finishing with his eternal slap at the human race—"all machines" we are—not responsible for any action of ours [MTP: TS 43]. Note:

Alvin Langdon Coburn, photographer.

Mrs. C. Griswold Bourne sent Sam an engraved invitation for tea at the Exhibition of the New York School of Applied Design for Women at 576 Fifth Ave. on Friday, March 10 at four o'clock [MTP]. Note: either the date sent is off, or Mrs. Bourne expected Sam to come on very short notice.

Sam wrote “The War Prayer” on or before this day. Budd: “Isabel Lyon recorded in her diary that Twain had read it to some friends. Hill also gives this date (p. 100). It was not published during Twain’s life, and it first appeared in 1923 in Europe and Elsewhere” [Collected 2: 1009-10]. Note: Rasmussen conjectures: “the story’s single incident may go back [to] a moment described in Life on the Mississippi, in which an apparently deranged man (Henry Clay Dean 1822-1887) delivers a speech that leaves his audience thinking that he is an archangel (chapter 57)” [A to Z 503]. Shelden writes that the piece was rejected by Harper’s Bazaar as “not quite suited to a woman’s magazine” [MTMW 60]. Perhaps Sam felt that it might only be published in such a magazine.

Jean Clemens wrote to the Harper’s Weekly editor, and her letter was published in the Apr. 1 issue:

A WORD FOR THE HORSES

NEW YORK, March 10, 1905.

To the Editor of Harper’s Weekly:

SIR,—Have you ever stood perfectly still for ten or fifteen minutes with your head held a little farther back than it is your custom to hold it? If not, try it once and see how you like it. Stand stiffly in one position, or walk up and down a long flight of stairs, with your head a trifle higher and farther back than you usually carry it, for, say, fifteen minutes, and I believe you will realize some of the torture most carriage-horses have to endure. The going up and down stairs will convey partially what they feel when they have to pull a vehicle up a hill, and in order to do so can only use their muscles and none of their weight, and their sensation in descending an incline with their heads held so that they haven’t the faintest idea where they are going to step next. It is no wonder horses with high check-reins frequently misstep. They are expected to depend entirely on their drivers’ guiding, but the best of coachmen cannot see all the stones and ruts, whereas both the horses’ and the coachmen’s eyes being used, many stones would be stepped over and strained ankles thereby avoided.

I was surprised not long ago to find an intelligent gentleman who hadn’t ever noticed that such a thing as a check-rein existed. When I showed him several horses with them he realized the pain that the unnatural position a check-rein enforces must cause. He is doubtless unused to horses, but I feel certain that many ladies enter their carriages with no more than a glance at the horses to see if they are in proper trim. They do not realize the torture caused by the high check-reins, they do not understand that the constant throwing of the heads means that the horses’ necks are aching intolerably from the strained position their heads are held in; they probably also do not know that very frequently when they are in a shop or paying a call their coachmen do not allow their slaves to bend their heads to one side occasionally to relieve a little of the pain,—they often give the wholly unoffending horse another pain by hitting him a sharp cut with the whip.

About the worst instrument of torture, aside from burred bits, is the combination of check-rein and martingale. The check obliges the horse to hold his head above a natural angle, and the martingale prevents his throwing it higher in order to relieve the horrible tension a little. If a person having horses harnessed in the above way had the patience to hold his head in a strained position until his neck ached and then continue to hold it there, moving it neither up nor down. I think that unless he were wilfully brutal and entirely without feeling, he would order at least the martingale to be removed, and possibly the check also.

Many well-bred horses hold their heads higher than their checkreins require when they are travelling, but as soon as they stand still they would naturally hold them lower, and then the pain and the restlessness caused by the check and possibly the sharp curb begin and do not end until the stable is reached and the check removed, because when once that kind of pain has started it cannot possibly stop until the horse has had the opportunity of putting his head away down as well as away up.

The chances are ten to one that when the owners of beautiful turnouts speak to their coachmen about the cruelty of checkreins, the coachmen laugh, believing that hostility to the checkreins is merely a fad, and that they do not at all strain or fatigue a horse. The coachmen are often more anxious to have the horses look as stylish as possible than the owners are, and as it is considered stylish to have horses’ heads reined up they will do their best to preserve the custom; but let the style change, and we shall see with what alacrity they will consider the employment of a cheek or a check and a martingale a useless cruelty.

I am, sir, JEAN L. CLEMENS.

March 11 Saturday – Sam wrote the following concerning his birthday. This piece was later found in an autograph album. Note Sam’s comparison of himself to George Washington:

Nov 30, 1835.

St. Andrew set, once for all, the standard of character proper to persons electing to be born on the 30th of November. None but the vain & self-complacent have taken the risk since. I chose the 31st, myself, not knowing there was no such day. I was so young, & so troubled with embarrassment on account of having to go among ladies the way I was—a trying ordeal I have always refused to do it again. The 30th of November is perhaps the most difficult & exacting of all the birth-days, except February 22, but I have done what I could to keep it up to standard; many think, with success.

Mark Twain

March 11, 1905 [Sotheby’s sale # NO 8698 June 17, 2010, Lot 538, from the James S. Copley Library].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tonight Mr. and Mrs. Stanchfield dined here. It was a very pretty dinner and a good one and the talk was principally about the great Russian-Japanese War, for at this time the Russians are suffering tremendous losses and the Japanese are lashing them with victory upon victory. They are capturing Mukden. Mr. Stanchfield is a very handsome man, and clever too.

Mr. Dan Beard called this afternoon, I didn’t see him [MTP: TS 43].

Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: “Mr. Coburn photographed Mr. Clemens. / Mr Dan Beard called” [MTP TS 7].

Muriel M. Pears wrote to Sam.

My Dear and Greatest Mr. Clemens, / Only this week and by special order have I been able to get a North American for this month, for as indeed I heard in Philadelphia before I left the demand for the copy with the Soliloquy was so great that every one was speaking of it and of the extraordinary interest it aroused.” Pears praised JA again. She guessed that Sam’s cat Bambino had by now forgotten her, but she hoped to see him again [MTP]. Note: Muriel visited Sam on Feb. 17.

March 12 Sunday – Sam inscribed in Clara Clemens’ copy of JA (volume 17, Hillcrest ed.): Every one is a moon, & has / a dark side which he / never shows to any body. / Mark Twain / March 12, 1905.” [Sotheby’s, Sept. 1962].

March 13 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Susan Crane. Only the bottom of the page survives: “Sue dear, beg for me with St. Peter if you get there first. He will remember me as the young fellow who tried for his place & couldn’t pass the examinations—at that time” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Muriel M. Pears, now in Washington, D.C.

This is indeed a joy! bless you I was beginning to believe you had gotten mislaid & maybe lost. I see it has not happened, for your letter is your own—the heart in it, & the talent, have to come from the one source, they could not be imitated by a counterfeiter. I am very glad you & are made at home & happy by our people. It cost me a pang to decline to spend Inauguration week in Washington with a family of friends, but it would have cost me a thousand pangs to go, for the welcome in every familiar face would be a reminder of other days, when so much more than half of it was for one who was at my side—& never elsewhere for half a lifetime. If Mrs. Clemens had been physically strong enough to live the social life she would have established our home there, she was so attached to the Washington people. She liked Southerners—partly because I was one, maybe.

I am grateful to the Forakers for taking care of you.

Be sure & tell me when you are coming. If you act as you did before I will expose you to your mother.

Jean is up town at the language-school but I will let her see your confirmations of her judgment when she returns. Bambino [Clara’s cat] will welcome you when you come. He has not sworn an oath since you left, even when his breakfast is 3 minutes late. No one else has had such an effect upon him as this. He thinks a great deal of you—like / SLC [MTP]. Note: Joseph Benson Foraker (1846-1917), Senator Ohio (1897-1909).

Sam also wrote to Clara Henderson (Mrs. J.M. Henderson) in Chicago:

It has greatly interested me. It is a good guess at an answer to the questions involved—a better one could not be evolved, I think. But we have to infer the seven or eight incarnations, we cannot trace them back & identify them & prove them: & so we have only the terminating link, not of a known chain but of a guessed one [MTP: Cushman file]. “See attached” not in file.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The greater part of the day I spent with Flo and Uncle Sam up at Macy’s” [MTP: TS 44].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam.

Dear Mark; / Here is the same thing done in slang. [MT wrote “Newspaper clipping”; not extant.]

Still I am so happy as not to be convinced. What Charley Clark told you twenty years ago of the Coofarmers may have been, I fear was, true of a good many of them, but I don’t believe it was true of the bulk of them, or is true now. Nor do I believe that the majority of the votes that elected Bulkeley were purchased, or a half, or a quarter, or a tenth of that majority. Nor, again, for all you and Charley Warner were drawn into the league of corruption in Hawley’s interest, do I believe that the General himself was a party to it; Nor, once more, do I believe that more than a small fraction in numbers in the U.S. Senate is venal, but that, on the contrary, as a body, it is honest. Hence I do not despair of the Republic, or of the Human Race, for that matter. Dig down in history anywhere you like five hundred years, and take a look around you there, and then go down on your knees and ask forgiveness for being such a dog-goned pessimist at the opening of the Twentieth Century. ...

Oh! There’s an eddy now and then, here and there, but the stream flows in that [positive] direction. Climb out of your hole, Mark; get up where you can see a distance drop your cussing and shout Glory—not, of course, without stopping once in a while to cry over the bloody fight the beaten and retreating Kuropatkin keeps up against the victor Oyama. The war isn’t ended yet... [MTP]. Note: Joe then sent family doings and a meeting upcoming that night of the Monday Evening Club.

March 14 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam replied to Joe Twichell’s Mar. 13.

Dear Joe,—I have a Puddn’head maxim:

“When a man is a pessimist before 48 he knows too much; if he is an optimist after it, he knows too little.”

It is with contentment, therefore, that I reflect that I am better & wiser than you. Joe, you seem to be dealing in “bulks,” now; the “bulk” of the farmers & U. S. Senators are “honest.” As regards purchase & sale with money? Who doubts it? Is that the only measure of honesty? Aren’t there a dozen kinds of honesty which can’t be measured by the money-standard? Treason is treason—and there’s more than one form of it; the money-form is but one of them. When a person is disloyal to any confessed duty, he is plainly & simply dishonest, & knows it; knows it, & is privately troubled by it & not proud of himself. Judged by this standard—and who will challenge the validity of it?—there isn’t an honest man in Connecticut, nor in the Senate, nor anywhere else. I do not even except myself this time.

Am I finding fault with you & the rest of the populace? No—I assure you I am not. For I know the human race’s limitations, & this makes it my duty—my pleasant duty—to be fair to it. Each person in it is honest in one or several ways, but no member of it is honest in all the ways required by—by what? By his own standard. Outside of that, as I look at it, there is no obligation upon him.

Am I honest? I give you my word of honor (private) I am not. For seven years I have suppressed a book which my conscience tells me I ought to publish. I hold it a duty to publish it. There are other difficult duties which I am equal too, but I am not equal to that one. Yes, even I am dishonest. Not in many ways, but in some. Forty-one, I think it is. We are certainly all honest in one or several ways—every man in the world—though I have reason to think I am the only one whose black-list runs so light. Sometimes I feel lonely enough in this lofty solitude.

Yes, oh, yes, I am not overlooking the “steady progress from age to age of the coming of the kingdom of God & righteousness.” “From age to age”—yes, it describes that giddy gait. I (& the rocks) will not live to see it arrive, but that is all right—it will arrive, it surely will. But you ought not to be always ironically apologizing for the Deity. If that thing is going to arrive, it is inferable that He wants it to arrive; & so it is not quite kind of you, & it hurts me, to see you flinging sarcasms at the gait of it. And yet it would not be fair in me not to admit that the sarcasms are deserved. When the Deity wants a thing, & after working at it for “ages & ages” can’t show even a shade of progress toward its accomplishment, we—well we don’t laugh, but it is only because we dasn’t. The source of the “righteousness”—is in the heart? Yes. And engineered & directed by the brain? Yes. Well, history & tradition testify that the heart is just about what it was in the beginning; it has undergone no shade of change. Its good & evil impulses & their consequences are the same to-day that they were in Old Bible times, in Egyptian times, in Greek times, in Middle Age times, in Twentieth Century times. There has been no change.

Meantime, the brain has undergone no change. It is what it always was. There are a few good brains in a multitude of poor ones. It was so in Old Bible times & in all other times—Greek, Roman, Middle Ages & Twentieth Century. Among the savages—the average brain is as competent as the average brain here or elsewhere. I will prove it to you, some time, if you like. And there are great brains among them, too. I will prove that also, if you like.

Well, the 19th century made progress—the first progress after “ages & ages”—colossal progress. In what? Materialities. Prodigious acquisitions were made in things which add to the comfort of many & make life harder for as many more. But the addition to righteousness? Is that discoverable? I think not. The materialities were not invented in the interest of righteousness; that there is more righteousness in the world because of them than there was before, is hardly demonstrable, I think. In Europe & America there is a vast change (due to them) in ideals—do you admire it? All Europe & all America are feverishly scrambling for money. Money is the supreme ideal—all others take tenth place with the great bulk of the nations named. Money-lust has always existed, but not in the history of the world was it ever a craze, a madness, until your time & mine. This lust has rotted these nations; it has made them hard, sordid, ungente, dishonest, oppressive.

Did England rise against the infamy of the Boer war? No—rose in favor of it. Did America rise against the infamy of the Phillipine war? No—rose in favor of it. Did Russia rise against the infamy of the present war? No—sat still & said nothing. Has the Kingdom of God advanced in Russia since the beginning of time?

Or in Europe & America, considering the vast backward step of the money-lust? Or anywhere else? If there has been any progress toward righteousness since the early days of Creation—which, in my ineradicable honesty, I am obliged to doubt—I think we must confine it to ten percent of the population of Christendom, (but leaving Russia, Spain & South America entirely out.) This gives us 320,000,000 to draw the ten per cent from. That is to say, 32,000,000 have advanced toward righteousness & the Kingdom of God since the “ages & ages” have been flying along, the Deity sitting up there admiring. Well, you see it leaves 1,200,000,000 out of the race. They stand just where they have always stood; there had been no change.

N. B. No charge for these informations. Do come down soon, Joe. / With love, / Mark

Oh, I would like to hear Charley Perkins uncork his tar-keg.

[MTP: Paine’s 1917 Mark Twain Letters, p.767-70 in part: MTP: Cummings file]. Note: Sam’s “&” signs replaced; Paine did not like these. Charles E. Perkins was Sam’s attorney in the 1870s. See Vol. I entries.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Never, never on sea or shore of spiritual or terrestrial being could there be a man to equal Mr. Clemens. The subtlty [sic] of his magic and he doesn’t know it. He can’t half enjoy himself and oh the pity of it, for he would so appreciate himself. It is cruel.

After dinner Jean and finally I gave him music until a late hour. I am stupified [sic] [MTP: TS 44].

Grace Gallatin Seton for Pen & Brush wrote to Sam, reminding him of two years before when he declined an invitation but promised a future date—had that date arrived? Could he manage Sunday, Apr. 2 from 4:30 to 6? [MTP]. Note: no further documentation for Seton and Apr. 2 was found; perhaps he couldn’t “manage.”

March 15 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to an unidentified woman (possibly Lucy J. Taylor, who wrote for the Quarter Club on Feb. 17 asking for signatures on Twain’s books) explaining Sam was not well enough to autograph “so many books,” but he would be glad to “autograph the ten extra volumes if that will do” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today Mr. Coburn came and photoed Jean and then he took six more of Mr. Clemens. Mr. Clemens was tired then and went wearily back to bed. This afternoon I went up to Mr. Coburn's studio. All in exquisite green it is, and the dear man sat near my feet talking, talking of my wondrous master, and his own art, and he drifted back and forth between the two subjects, showing me a great deal of his beautiful work, his wondrous photographs, and glowing with the love of the beautiful. He wore a charming green silk Chinaman's blouse, and there was no speck of white in the room, save some dull candles. Tonight as I sat playing Mr. and Mrs. Loomis walked in. After a little sporadic talk we gathered around Mr. Clemens who brought in a letter that he had written to Mr. Twichell—he hasn't quite dared send it yet—to read to the guests. It is apropos of President Roosevelt and the man's characteristics—it is such a remarkable letter that it ought to be scattered abroad—though the clergy would not stand it, and lots of their followers could not. It compares Roosevelt to God, for "God must be a Republican." Then Mr. Clemens, after the shouts of appreciation of all of us, warmed to the task of it and told us a story or two about Mr. Twichell as chaplain [MTP: TS 44-45]. Note: Lyon likely refers to Sam's Mar. 14 to Twichell, though no direct reference is made to Roosevelt in that letter as there is in the Feb. 16 to Twichell. Alvin Langdon Coburn was the photographer.

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to thank Sam for "the beautiful picture with the more beautiful autograph," which he would give to his baby boy to enjoy as a man some day [MTP].

March 15 ca. – In San Remo, Italy, William Dean Howells wrote to Sam on a letter from Edward Everett Hale to Howells dated Washington D.C., Mar. 1.

"Dear Clemens: I've offered to pay $100 in this cause. Wont you join? If yes, write to Hale. The publishers ought to be milked, too" [MTHL 2: 796].

Note: n2 of source: "Hale, with the cooperation of several literary men and lawyers, was seeking to establish 'a common law title in copyright existing wholly apart from the statute law.' The plan was to make the end of Hale's statutory copyright on The Man Without a Country the occasion for taking this issue to the courts. Hale believed that Wayne MacVeagh, former Attorney General of the United States and ambassador to Italy, would prepare and argue the case." See Mar. 28 to Hale. With this note, Howells enclosed a clipping without place or date headed, "Un Crapaud Géant/Le Plus Grand Crapaud du Monde." The clipping concerned an enormous frog which "M. Coleman...à Fredericton" had trained to respond to his name, Snag, and to leap a barrier while carrying an American flag in his mouth. Howells wrote on the edge of the clipping: "Digne Rivale du Frogue Jompeur. Ho! for home, April 5th! W. D. H." [MTP]. Note: Howells was headed for home.

March 16 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today Mr. [Moncure] D. Conway called to see Mr. Clemens. I was peeping for a sight of him through a crack in the big drawing room doors as he came down stairs to leave, when I heard his voice behind me in the dining room where he had gone for a glimpse of the Millet portrait of Mr. Clemens. He is 73, he looks all of it, and has a noble head, white hair and the wealth of years in his face. Tonight at dinner Mr. Clemens talked of him and told how Mr. Conway had gone to see Roosevelt in Washington, and he spoke of the beautiful Watt painting "Life and Love" which Watt gave to the United States. The President liked it and had it taken from the Corcoran Gallery to the White House. Some elderly women ("old hens", Mr. Clemens called them) saw it and condemned the picture from their moral point, upon which the political Roosevelt removed it and had it taken to a garret room in the White House, and there the beautiful gift to a nation lies. A moral coward [MTP: TS 44]. Note: in her Mar. 17 entry, Lyon wrote "Mrs. Day came in last evening."

Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "Mr. Moncure D. Conway called. He thought Prof Gelli's portrait of Mr. Clemens 'very strong'" [MTP TS 8]. Note: Edoardo Gelli (1852-1933), Italian genre and portrait painter, who did a portrait of Clemens in Florence in the spring of 1904.

Annie McAleer wrote from Hartford to Clemens. "Your letter inclosing check received and Papa wishes to thank you for same. / He feels very certain that he can manage the mater [sic] you spoke of having had quite a little experience with electric motors, when working at the Auditorium, the method of working the two kinds are some different, he realizes.... / Respectfully yours [MTP]. Note: Patrick McAleer's daughter.

March 17 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "Mr. Vernon called to see Mr. Clemens this morning" [MTP TS 8].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight after dinner Mr. Clemens read us a new story that he is writing. Two chapters he read. I don't know what he calls it, but "The Admiral's Cat" will do here. It is a story of the poet who had a marvelous idea of erecting a statue to Adam, and he tells a friend of his project. He had no money and so would have to interest other people in the idea. The first person he goes to is an old Admiral whose weak point in his beautiful black cat—and Mr. Clemens's description of the cat through the old Admiral's comments upon it is a master stroke. He calls it Bagheera and draws upon a word or more of Kipling's when he describes that glorious black panther of his. It is a beautiful story. The old Admiral is drawn from two old whaling captains—Capt. Ed Wakeman and Commodore Smith. The former was born on a whaler, and when he retired after 70 years of sea life he used to cruise as a passenger up and down the Pacific coast from San Francisco to Panama.

Mr. Clemens paced up and down the living room as he described the two old sailors—and he grew more and more interesting every moment. Then he missed Bambino and after a search through the house, even to the cellar—I found him shut out on the roof outside of Mr. Clemens's sleeping room. He really is the most beautiful creature ever—that cat [MTP: TS 44; also Gribbern 378 in part]. Note: the story became "The Refuge of the Derelicts," long unpublished, which borrows from Kipling to praise Kipling.

March 18 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Herr Heinick came for dinner tonight. The table talk wasn't very brilliant for Mr. Clemens was tired (?) or didn't like the man—(since, I've found that he didn't like the man, for he had expected to find an old and wise professor.)

Life in this way is so vitally interesting. The hours are like pearls in a string and I hope that the cord that holds them is a strong one [MTP: TS 46].

Harper's Weekly published Mark Twain's "The First Writing-Machines" (alternate title for "From My Unpublished Autobiography.") It was later collected in The $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories (1906). See the inside cover ad.

March 19 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Tonight Mr. Clemens and Jean went to dine with the Norman Hapgoods. Jean was really beautiful. The day was quiet. In the morning I played to Mr. Clemens—he paced the long rooms in his dressing gown, but he didn't hear anything I was playing for genius was pushing him hard and he had to go up to bed to write, write, write the thoughts that drowned all sound. Mother went to hear the Stabat Mater in the afternoon and she said it was lovely [MTP: TS 46]. Note: "Stabat Mater" is a 13th Century Roman Catholic hymn to Mary.

Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "Mr. Clemens & Jean dined with Mr. Hapgood, at 8" [MTP TS 8].

March 20 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today Jean and I went up to the little Carnegie Theatre to see Mary Lawton in a rehearsal of Magda. It was harrowing enough, for the director's criticism of the young actors was scathing and heart searching in sarcasms. It's the only way though to bring them into perfection, and when we came home after 4½ hours of it we were too exhausted to eat our dinner, too exhausted to hear intelligently Mr. Clemens reading of the Bagheera Story.

Mr. Clemens went down to the Italian Consul [MTP: TS 46].

Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "Mr. Clemens went to the Italian Consul & signed for a request to extend the time for the examination of witnesses in the Massiglia Case. Sig. Traverso will present it to the Law Courts of Florence" [MTP TS 8].

March 21 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Tonight Mr. Clemens read a very interesting unpublishable sketch. Unpublishable because it is what an old darkey says of the universal brotherhood of man—and how it couldn’t ever be, not even in heaven—for there are only white angels there and in the old darkey’s vision the niggers were all sent around to the back door. It’s a wonderful little sketch but it wouldn’t do for the clergy. They couldn’t stand it. It’s too true.

Mrs. Crane has given me some wonderful headache tablets—they stop the headaches!! [MTP: TS 46]. Note: see Tuckey’s Fables of Man p. 8-10 regarding this missing manuscript.

Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: Sent 2 Miss. To Harpers Bazar. (Miss Jordan)

“The War Prayer,” and

“A Hapless Situation.” [MTP TS 8].

March 22 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Tonight we didn’t have any MS. reading for Mr. Clemens had interruptions during the day—Andrew Carnegie came in and the nice young attorney, Mr. Hull. So he didn’t write so much as he might have. But we had music—and Bambino—and at dinner Mr. Clemens talked among other things of poor John Hay’s ill condition. He’s gone to Italy. His diplomatic career has been very fine. He’s a great statesman, and now this Santo Dominican blunder has made him all heart-ill and brain-ill. He never did the blundering. “It was probably Roosevelt, and Hay has to stand behind him.” M.T. [MTP: TS 46]. Note: see the 1905 opening section regarding John Hay.

Isabel Lyon’s journal #2: Today Mr. Clemens wrote [not extant] to Dr. Oppenheimer suggesting that he add to his advertisement which professes to cure alcoholism—the words—“We do not profess to cure Dipsomania which we regard as an incurable disease—” The treatment was a failure with Mr. Clemens’s butler, Fletcher.

Miss Jordan retained “A helpless Situation”—“The War Prayer” she liked but didn’t think it would do for a women magazine [MTP TS 8-9]. Note: Dr. Isaac Oppenheimer

Dodd, Mead & Co. wrote to Sam that since he had used the New International Encyclopedia he might be willing to express his opinion of it [MTP; Gribben 501].

Will you favor the Missouri Bankers Association with an address may twenty third or twenty fourth at their annual convention in Kansas city the invitation is most cordially urgently extended by the assertions & your many friends in your native state please wire [MTP].

Elizabeth Jordan wrote for Harper’s Bazar to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens / I accept with great pleasure your manuscript, “A Helpless Situation.” You have taken up a subject I have always desired to see discussed; its publication should greatly relieve the pressure on writers and publishers, made by our ambitious friends.

I return with regret “The War-Prayer”. It is admirable, but not quite suited to a woman’s magazine, in my opinion...[MTP].

March 23 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

This afternoon Mr. Clemens went for a walk in the lovely March sunshine. He went up to see the Doubledays—and when he was walking down 4th avenue a man came up to greet him. Mr. Clemens “let on” to know him, and when the man said he was “so glad to see that Mr. Clemens was well enough to be out”—Mr. Clemens replied—“Oh yes, I’ve been well enough for 6 weeks”—The man was Mr. Mott, and we have been hedging off his tiresome wife and her invitations for weeks and weeks saying that Mr. Clemens wasn't well enough to see people. The telephone groaned over the lies I've told it about Mr. Clemens's ill condition. I've told such a lot of them too to Mrs. Mott. Poor telephone [MTP: TS 46-47]. Note: likely Mr. and Mrs. Jordan L. Mott of NYC.

Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: "Mr Clemens sent to Signor Cecche [sic Cecchi] a copy of Dr. Kirch's letter & his reply to Dr. K's letter which was written to Dr. Starr—Dr. K's letter or statement was written to some one here in the city" [MTP TS 9]. Note: Dr. Moses Allen Starr; Dr. G.W. Kirch.

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam asking for a character sketch of H.H. Rogers. The World's Work, published by Doubleday, wanted to publish the proposed sketch. Would Sam help? Isaac Frederick Marcossin (pen name John S. Gregory), longtime journalist, had been in Kansas early in 1905 to write an account of the lawsuit between Standard Oil Co. and the State of Kansas. Rogers was nearly impossible to interview, being well aware that he could hardly get an objective view by the press. Marcossin applied to Doubleday for his assistance in gaining the interview and Doubleday then wrote Twain, who took on the role of middleman between Rogers and Marcossin. Boewe writes this letter of Doubleday's was likely hand delivered (to support this quick response, see Lyon's above entry that Sam took a stroll and called on the Doubledays). Lyon wrote on the bottom of the note, "Mr. D. things that Mr. R. does not understand the point they [World's Work] wish to make" [MTP]. For the full story see M. Boewe's excellent article, "Mark Twain Anonymous," The Kentucky Review (Spring 1989), p. 42-55. Also see Marcossin's article in the Mark Twain Quarterly (Winter 1937-38), p. 7, 24.

March 24 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today I telephoned to Mr. Bowen (he's Col. Harvey's secretary and has such a nice rich voice over the telephone), for Mr. Clemens. After Mr. C. had been closed with Mr. for some time and he'd gone, Mr. C. "gonged" for me and said "Telephone to Mr. Bowen and ask him to step into the Colonel's office and ask what has become of the Colonel's automobile. Just say I've been dressed and waiting for more than a week. If anything's the matter with the 'mobile I'd like to know so that I can undress and go to bed and have some sleep" [MTP: TS 47]. Note: the name omitted in the second line was likely because she wasn't sure if he'd been talking to Mr. Herbert E. Bowen.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Sent a little Satan MS. to Col. Harvey. / 'A Humane Word from Satan.' It's about the Rockefeller gift to the American Board" [of Missions] [MTP TS 9]. Note: "A Humane Word from Satan" ran in Harper's Weekly for Apr. 8, p. 496. The piece was signed "Satan."

Daniel Carter Beard wrote on Recreation Magazine (NY) letterhead to Sam.

I fear that in my visit to you I stayed too long and tried you; but when I get with a man of your stamp it is very difficult to decide upon the time to get away. My interest is so aroused and you have a way of so stirring up my feelings that if it were not for decency's sake, I would have stayed all day.

However, what I want to say is that I appreciate the compliment which you paid me by reading to me that delightful prayer...

I have in hand a letter from the secretary of the Society of Illustrators asking me if I can prevail upon you to accept a dinner given by them. I told them that you were ill and in mourning and I did not think that it would even be proper for me to ask you...[MTP]. Note: Beard's visit was on Mar. 11; also see Sam's reply of Mar. 30.

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam. "Mr. H.H. Lewis who was one time editor of Ainslee's wants an interview with you for the Woman's Home Companion, a periodical with a circulation of 400,000 among the ordinary women of America. What do you think?" Duneka had just read Sam's "letter from Hell," and thought it great [MTP].

March 25 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Duneka says of the Satan letter 'That it is great[?]. Boy come today with proof. / Count Lewenhaupt began treatment today for Mr. Clemens—$2.00 a treatment. / Mr. Clemens dined with Mr & Mrs. Rogers" [MTP TS 9]

Poultney Bigelow wrote on Boston University Law School letterhead to Sam. “This top line gives you a notion of where I am and what I am doing and that I’m thinking of you and wondering if you’re happy and well and if the KELGREN magic still works in your blood.” Bigelow planned to pass through NYC on Mar. 25 on his way to speak at West Point and if Sam would be in he would stop by. He wrote of his work in Boston and invited Sam there any time [MTP].

Thomas Wentworth Higginson wrote from Cambridge, Mass. to Clemens, happy at the news that Sam would be their neighbor in Dublin, N.H., and hoping to see a lot of him [MTP].

Robert Underwood Johnson for the National Institute of Arts wrote to Sam, announcing a meeting of the fifteen members for Saturday, April 22 at the Aldine Assoc. 111 Fifth Ave at 1:15 p.m. to elect the next five members [MTP].

Charles Maclevy for the Plasmon Company of America wrote to Sam, announcing a stockholder meeting Room 63, 111 Broad St., NYC at 2:30 p.m. on Apr. 27, 1905, the purpose to elect five directors and two Inspectors of Election [MTP].

Roland Phillips for Harper’s Weekly wrote to Sam, enclosing the proof of “A Humane Word from Satan”—could he look it over and return it with the messenger boy? [MTP].

March 26 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

Dear Col. Higginson,—I early learned that you would be my neighbor in the Summer & I rejoiced, recognizing in you & your family a large asset. I hope for frequent intercourse between the two households. I shall have my youngest daughter with me. The other one will go from the rest-cure in this city to the rest-cure in Norfolk Conn. & we shall not see her before autumn. We have not seen her since the middle of October.

Jean (the youngest daughter) went to Dublin & saw the house & came back charmed with it. I know the Thayers of old—manifestly there is no lack of attractions up there. Mrs. Thayer & I were shipmates in a wild excursion perilously near 40 years ago.

You say you “send with this” the story. Then it should be here but it isn’t, when I send a thing with another thing, the one thing goes but the thing doesn’t, I find it later—still on the premises. Will you look it up now & send it?

Aldrich was here half an hour ago, like a breeze from over the fields, with the fragrance still upon his spirit. I am tired of waiting for that man to get old [MTP: Paine’s 1917 Mark Twain’s Letters, p.771]. Note: of course, Mrs. Thayer was once Emiline Beach and shipmate on the Quaker City / Sincerely yours ...

Isabel Lyon’s journal: As I walked along the hall just now I heard Mr. Clemens’s dear voice call “Come up Aldrich!” and then I had a glimpse of Mr. Aldrich’s baldish head and stalwart shoulders as he came up the stairs. (He’d been waiting for Count Lewenhaupt the osteopath to go.) The good splendid laughing of the two men comes up to me here. If human beings could be “machines” what rarely fine machines they’d be—some. In today’s Sun there is an interview with Col. Harvey and he said a lot of worthwhile things—best to me was of course what he said about Mr. Clemens in his bed—“the biggest bed he ever saw.”

This morning when I went into Mr. Clemens’s room he asked me something about Moses and the 10 Commandments, and that led up to making Mr. Clemens say “If those ten Commandments had never been written, man would be making some for himself. He has to have a code—he’d be saying, Thou shalt not sit up all night. Thou shalt not drink coffee at midnight. Thou shalt not eat cabbage & beans. They would all be commandments that he is in need of and he wouldn’t be happy if he wasn’t making them to break”

A couple of nights ago Mr. Clemens was speaking of the way in which certain words always elude him. One of the words is “stimulate”—he said that he has not used that word 3 times in all his writings. Another word is the equivalent for reimburse i.e. “indemnify”. The word never reaches him when he is most in need of it and he cannot always have a thesaurus at his elbow [MTP: TS 47-48]. Also in part, Gribben 562, Fables of Man 121.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Today Mr. Clemens saw Mr. Aldrich, Mr. Poultney Bigelow, Mr. Moncure D. Conway, Mr. Gilder, & Prof. Sloane. / Mr. Clemens is writing an appreciation of Mr. Howells" [MTP TS 9].

March 26 – early April – In a supplement to a June, 1913 American Post review, the tale is told of Sam attending a performance of Benjamin Chapin playing Lincoln on stage. NY Times (Mar. 25, p. X1) gives the first week's performance began on Mar. 26. The article and a letter (uncollected) Sam sent to Chapin's secretary.

MARK TWAIN AND PARTY ATTEND "LINCOLN"
By One of the Party

August Belmont, Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), Clarence H. Mackay, Robert Collier and other members of the Executive Committee of the Lincoln Farm Association, were holding a session when the proposal was made that they attend Benjamin Chapin's four act character play, "Lincoln," then running for the first time in New York, at the Liberty Theatre.

This group of men dined together before the play. When it came time to attend the performance, Mark Twain refused to go. His friends urged, but he was obdurate. General Horace Porter, formerly ambassador to France, and a friend of Mr. Lincoln's, and Mr. William Dean Howells, the novelist joined the party, and Mark Twain finally went with the others, but went reluctantly, declaring that he did not want some young buck in stage costume and makeup to muss up his own mental picture and memory of Lincoln. When the curtain went up on the first act he sat far back in the box but in a few minutes he came forward and was soon lost in the play.

After the third act he asked to be taken back upon the stage that he might meet Mr. Chapin, and, behind the scenes, as if he could not shake off the illusion that it was the real living Lincoln, he addressed Mr. Chapin as Lincoln: "I am very glad to meet you again, Mr. President. You haven't changed much in all these years."

On leaving the theatre that evening he walked down the aisle (with the writer of this account, who had dined with the party and heard Mark Twain's opposition to going), and he made this comment: "I wanted to keep my memory and thought of Lincoln unmarred by any disappointment in seeing a make-up imitation. But I am glad that I came, very glad. I feel as though I had spent an evening with Lincoln at the White House. I think I know Lincoln a little more intimately now. Mr. Chapin certainly gave a remarkable performance—he got me over the footlights."

The next morning Mr. Chapin's secretary received the following letter from Mr. Clemens:

"In the beginning of the first act, while Mr. Chapin did seem to me to be a very close and happy imitation of Mr. Lincoln, it was only an imitation. But at that point the miracle began. Little by little, step by step, by an imperceptible evolution the artificial Lincoln dissolved away and the living and real Lincoln was before my eyes and remained real until the end. I apply to it, that strong word 'miracle' because I think it justified. I think that I have not before seen so interesting a spectacle as this steady growth and transformation of an unreality into a reality."

March 27 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

My head is full of obstetrical hooks and slants and jabs for today I began to study shorthand. I don't see how anyone can ever put soul into that sort of writing. It would seem wrong to put down Mr. Clemens's thoughts like that—but it's for Mr. Clemens's thoughts that I'm trying to learn it.

It is very lonely without Saint Mother, but who am I that I should be lonely in the presence of a loveliness like Mr. Clemens's [MTP: TS 47].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Telephoned asking Mr. Doubleday to call. He called [visited] & talked about Mr. Rogers. / Dr. Oppenheimer answered Mr. Clemens's note of Mar. 22 [not extant]. He is irritated" [MTP TS 9]

In Rochester, N.Y., a high school girl, Hilda Farrar, wrote to Sam asking his advice on what to read before writing an essay on Joan of Arc. She had read his article in Harper's "with great pleasure" [MTP].

Note: Sam's answer is catalogued "on or after Mar. 27," but it is highly unlikely a letter from Rochester would have reached N.Y.C the same day; Mar. 28 ca. is estimated.

H.H. Rogers wrote to Sam.

I have thought the matter over very carefully, and conclude that I do not want anything published. I don't see how I can get around to it. There does not seem to be any occasion for it in the first place, and then I don't see how I could quite talk to you as freely as you would want [MTHHR 582-3]. Note: Frank N. Doubleday had sought a biographical article on Rogers for the World's Work (see Doubleday to Sam, Mar. 23).

John Larkin wrote to Sam, enclosing his "bill for services rendered to you as Executor of this Estate" [Livy's] [MTP].

W. Robson for the Plasmon Company of America sent another stockholder meeting announcement for Apr. 27 at 2:30 p.m. [MTP].

March 28 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Seymour Eaton.

Dear Sir: May I ask you to tell me if there is any sale for my family's stock? I am advised to offer it at auction here, but would it not be better to auction it in Philadelphia where it is no doubt best known? Or, will the Company make me an offer? I think there is seven or eight thousand dollars' worth of the stock; I do not know the exact figure, because all of it but the first two hundred shares was bought by the family & servants & a visiting relative without consulting me, a thing which I regarded as most unfortunate.

May I ask the courtesy of a reply by an early mail? / Sincerely yours ... [MTP]. Note: Sam owned shares in Tabard Inn Co. See Apr. 1 for Eaton's reply.

Sam also wrote to Edward Everett Hale.

Dear Dr. Hale: / Howells has sent me your letter to him in which it is proposed that Wayne MacVeagh go into court & test common-law possibilities on The Man Without a Country. Howells offers me what I regard as a privilege: an opportunity to contribute to the expenses. I will send you a hundred dollars whenever—now, or when you give me notice.

It seems odd—but not surprising—that we must go back to the comparatively dark ages to get a breath of fresh morals. Twentieth Century Civilization—when we consider the innocent pride which we take in it—is surely the most sarcastic sarcasm which our race has put on the market for many centuries—perhaps a million.

If anybody can make that case succeed, it is Wayne MacVeagh—a straight man, & gifted. It is a grand idea, in any case, & we must go ahead with it, win or lose. I am older than you are, as I know by tallying-off my perished interests & counting up the several that are left alive, but I am not destitute of interest in this scheme—far from it. No, I am as young as you, in this matter.

I am going to hope that we can land a success, and empty all the puerile & mephitic copyright-laws down Congress's throat, or some other sewer. / Sincerely ... [MTP].

Notes: See Gribben p. 285 under Hale for MT's various references to The Man Without a Country, which Sam used as a phrase several times, including LM, FE, and to describe himself after Livy's death. Hale was third on Sam's nomination list for nominees to the American Academy of Arts and Letters (Apr. 28 to Johnson). Hale published the story in 1863. See also Mar. 15 ca. entry and then MTHL 2: 797n2: Wayne MacVeagh would refuse to argue the copyright issues on Hale's story because he was not persuaded there was a common-law right in literary ownership.

Isabel Lyon's journal: I came across the drawings by Dan Beard for "The Yankee at the Court of King Arthur"—and they are great.

Alfred F. Kreymborg, that's the name of the young man steeped in music and high ideals. He played through 15 rolls of music for me up at Aeolion Hall and he said that Beethoven and Emerson had been his greatest teachers. Beethoven he put first.

On top of a bus I rode up to 85th Street with Wallis. Oh, it was beautiful [MTP: TS 47].

Note: Alfred F. Kreymborg (1883-1966), noted American poet, playwright and novelist. He wrote a short piece "Chess Reclaims a Devotee," a memoir of time spent in 1910 and 1911 trying to make it as a chess professional in NYC. In chess literature he is most famous for two games that he lost: a classic rook and pawn endgame against Jose Raul Capablanca (1888-1942), world champion (1921-1927) and a horrendous loss to Oscar Chajes (1873-1928), Austrian chess player and the last person to defeat Capablanca.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens received a letter from Mr. Howells which Dr. Hale wrote to Mr. Howells, on a copy right subject, & Mr. Clemens replied to Dr. Hale. / Mr. Clemens & Jean dined with Dr & Mrs. Rice" [MTP TS 9-10] Note: in this journal #2 (Daily Reminder) Lyon often uses the "&" instead of "and," leading this editor to suspect that in the original MS of journal #1 she also observed that abbreviation, much as Clemens did in his letter writing. Also, she varied the convention for periods and commas to fall inside of quotation marks, following what today is the British convention. No "correction" of such inconsistency has been made in this volume.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens:

I managed to find [Charles S.] Fairchild in yesterday, after many calls. He said he had seen you on Sunday, and that there was nothing new about the cashier. He continues to expect an amicable settlement.

Please sign enclosed proxy covering the forthcoming annual meeting of the Plasmon Company [MTP].

F.W. Stone for Review of Reviews wrote on The American Monthly Review of Reviews letterhead, soliciting Sam to apply for a specimen copy of The Historians' History of the World, as the introductory offer "must be withdrawn immediately" [MTP].

March 28 ca. – On or just after this date Sam wrote an answer on the bottom of Farrar's Mar. 27: "Look at the bottom of the article entitled Joan of Arc in any Cyclopedia & you will find all the books that have been written about her" [MTP; amended date estimate].

March 29 Wednesday – Sam read his essay "William Dean Howells" to the household. In April he would send this piece and the final MS of Christian Science to Frederick A. Duneka at Harper's [Hill 101].

Sam wrote to William H. Pearson for the N.Y. Produce Exchange, Safe Deposit and Storage Co. His letter is not extant but is referred to in Pearson's reply of the following day, Mar. 30. See entry.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Tonight Mr. Clemens read us an appreciation that he has written of Mr. Howells. It is beautiful, the strength of his pen is marvelous" [MTP: TS 47].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: Mr. Twichell has grippe...

Today Mr. Clemens replied to Dr. Oppenheimer [not extant].

Mr. Clemens signed a paper making Mr. Ashcroft his proxy in the forth coming Plasmon Co. meeting.

Notice came today that various "Tabard Inn" Business houses have gone into the hands of a receiver.

Mr. Clemens read the MS. of his appreciation of Mr. Howells [MTP TS 10]. Note: see also Mar. 22, 27, 29 and November, 1905 for items related to Oppenheimer.

March 30 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Daniel Carter Beard.

Dear Dan Beard: / You did not stay too long. That is settled.

2. I don't think the [War] prayer will be published in my time. None but the dead are permitted to tell the truth. (I am offering a very small laugh at the Rockefeller-American-Board comedy. Now, slight as it is, I would not blame Harvey if he should say it isn't good policy to print it; for he is responsible to his Co & should not permit laughs which could injure its business.)

I am grateful to the Illustrators for that thought, & to you for explaining my situation. Yonder in the future somewhere I hope the thought will occur again [MTP]. Note: Beard had called on Clemens on Mar. 11. See also his Mar. 24 to Clemens.

Isabel Lyon's journal: A little change has taken place in the routine of my life, and it has unbalanced me. I cannot yet arrange my forces. Oh, Santissima [Clara], you who make a shrine of any house you inhabit, you who are a gift to every one who falls under your sweet thrall. Oh, Santissima—I bend my head in silent worship of your flower soul, and of the white, white soul—the rainbow soul backed by the black clouds of experience—of your father [MTP: TS 49]. Note: the change is not specified.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: “Mr. Doubleday said by telephone—in answer to inquiring from Mr. Clemens—that he had talked with Mr. Rogers by telephone, & that Mr. Rogers is going to make an appointment to talk with Mr. Doubleday for an article in the work[s]” [MTP TS 10].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam, having rec'd the proxy, and giving details for Plasmon Co. machinations, including Hammond reportedly willing to bid up to $25,000 for the company assets at auction. He also said “Pin affairs are all right,” and had arranged with Stanchfield that the three of them would each have one-third interest in an option on the new “locking” safety pin patents [MTP]. Note: Spiral Pin Co., another of Ashcroft's interests.

Edward Everett Hale wrote to Sam, thanking him for his promise of help on his copyright battle [MTP].

Elizabeth Jordan for Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam. “Your manuscript, ‘A Helpless Situation’ contains about 2,000 words. As it is not a story, I am a little at a loss to know what sum you have in mind as proper payment. Kindly write me...” [MTP].

John Larkin wrote to Sam. “I have your letter and check in payment of bill rendered in this Estate. / The bill will be receipted and filed in the Surrogate's office as a voucher / Yours truly” ...[MTP].

William H. Pearson for the N.Y. Produce Exchange, Safe Deposit and Storage Co. wrote to Sam. “In reply to your favor of the 29th inst [not extant] would say that we do not recognize an order, but that Miss Lyon can be admitted with Miss K.I. Harrison, who is a joint tenant with you, if they come together” [MTP].

Joseph J. Roche wrote on “CONSULAR SERVICE, U.S.A” note pad to Sam. “I trust the enclosed may be of sufficient interest to you to excuse this intrusion” [MTP]. Note: enclosed not in file.

Mrs. Frederick W. Russell sent Sam an engraved invitation to the marriage of her daughter Mary Wilcox to Mr. John Davenport Cheney at 4 p.m. Thursday, Mar. 30 at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Hartford [MTP].

March 31 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Tomorrow Mother is coming up.

The pot hooks do not stay in my brain for the brain is deranged.

“Passed Michael Kelly with a load of shlabs.” That's what the Irishman passed after he took a pill. It must be so for Katie said it [MTP: TS 49].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: Lewenhaupt [likely designating an osteopathic treatment for Clemens] Mr. Clemens received a reply to his letter to Dr. Hale, & he sent the reply with a letter note to Col. Harvey to interest him as a publisher—perhaps— Mr. Clemens signed a paper as a patron for a benefit to be given for madame Modjeska [sic Modjeska]—Mrs. Gilder and Paderewski are planning it [MTP TS 10]. Note: Helena Modjeska (1840-1909), famous actress who specialized in Shakespearean roles. Ignacy Jan Paderewski (1860-1941) Polish pianist, composer, diplomat, who became Prime Minister of Poland in 1919.

Florence J. Lewis wrote to Sam, enclosing a sheet of four questions from the Boston Herald. “Please don’t deprive me of your reply....for without it I shall feel dreadfully lopsided!”[MTP].

April – Review of Reviews (London) published an anonymous article, “If Emperors Were All Stripped Naked” p. 375. Tenney: “Summary of ‘The Czar’s Soliloquy,’ which appeared in North American Review in March [40].

Connecticut Magazine published “Mark Twain’s Autobiography, 1872” [Tenney 40]. Note: The actual title was “Mark Twain—His Autobiography” which ran in the magazine for April-May-June, 1905. It is a reprinting of “Mark Twain’s (Burlesque) Autobiography” (1871), later in The $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories (1906).

April 1 Saturday – Bambino, the cat which owned Mark Twain (no one owns a cat) was lost but later in the day came back. Sam had written an ad offering a reward, but canceled before it went into the paper. Still, the NY Herald ran this article on p.9 the following day, Apr. 2:

MARK TWAIN’S CAT CAME BACK.

Black Pet Mourned by the Humorist Again Brightens his Home.

Mark Twain lost his cat yesterday [Apr. 1]—a peculiar cat, which had to be seen in certain lights to have its beauties properly displayed. It was a cat even more to be admired than the jumping frog of Calaveras, for it was intensely black—Stygian, Egyptian, sable, even—but with a faint white line across its breast, discernible only under the most favorable conditions. Late last night the cat came back, and the advertisements sent to the morning papers offering alluring rewards for the return of Tom were hastily cancelled. This was the “ad”—from the pen of the great humorist himself:

A CAT LOST — FIVE DOLLARS REWARD for his restoration to Mark Twain, No. 21 Fifth avenue.: large and intensely black; thick, velvety fur; has a faint fringe of white hair across his chest; not easy to find in ordinary lights.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Bambino is gone.

Mr. and Mrs. Twichell came for over Sunday.

Mr. Clemens advertised Bambino in the Journal and The Tribune.

I went to the station to meet Mother. We had supper together and we found Bambino. We chased him back and forth across 9th street and finally I caught him in the yard of 25 5th Avenue. When I brought Bambino in this evening I gave him to Mr. Clemens’s care. He was pacing the library, smoking with his head held high. (He never paces the length of the room with his eyes on the floor—but always with his head thrown back, and usually with a clipping or sheaf of ms. or an open book in his hand). He took Bambino and held him on outstretched hands (cats like that position when Mr. Clemens holds them) and as he paced he talked to him in a low voice, guessing at his adventures and telling him he was quite right to take advantage of all his privileges and he wondered how many harlots he had enjoyed. It must have been more than one for he had been away a long time and seemed tired. Bambino blinked up at him with his great yellow eyes and replied in his tender purry notes.

Tonight Mr. Clemens read the Postman chapter of the Admiral story. Down into the deeps of the human heart he goes and he touches the tragedies of each one that he probes, with an unerring hand [MTP: TS 49].

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: Bambino wandered away at midnight.

Bambino advertised in “American” & “Tribune”.

Bambino found after a chase on 9th St. & Fifth Ave. 9:30 PM.

Mr. & Mrs. Twichell arrived for a day or so.

Mr. Clemens read the Postman chapter in the Admiral Story [MTP TS 10-11].

Seymour Eaton wrote on The Tabard Inn Corp. letterhead (Phila.) to Sam.

"I do not believe that under existing conditions it is either possible or wise to sell your shares but at the same time I wish to say that the circumstances of the last few days have cleared the air very much and I am sure that the outcome will be largely in the best interest of shareholders..." [MTP]. Note: this Company owned the Booklovers Magazine, in which Sam had invested. This may be the letter that Lyon refers to in her Apr. 3 journal #2 entry.

Luis Jackson wrote a fan letter on Hotel Carlton letterhead (NYC) to Sam, complimenting him on his NAR article on the Russian Czar, "The Czar's Soliloquy." Jackson recalled a conversation on the Boston train with Sam, "just before you left for Australia" [MTP].

Miss Marion Thurston Tibbits a high school girl in Denver, Colo. wrote an adoring fan letter [MTP].

Jean Clemens' letter dated Mar. 10 to Harper's Weekly editor ran in this day's edition. See Mar. 10 entry.

Saturday Review ran an anonymous review of A Dog's Tale p. 525. Tenney: "The 'very tedious and pointless jocularly at the outset' damages the book, and 'we get very tired of the canine autobiographer.' The 'illustrations show more understanding of dogs than is to be found in the text, which will appeal only to confirmed sentimentalists.'" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Second Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1978 p. 173].

April 2 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: This morning when I was searching through the multitudinous letters in the study, for the one that gives me the true history of "The Postman Who Stole from the Mails", and so furnish the material for the chapter in the Admiral's Story, the gong gonged and I went out in the hall to find Mr. Poultney Bigelow saying "Mr. Clemens is clamoring for Miss Lyon." I went in to answer the simple question "Had Count Lewenhaupt [the osteopath] a settled telephone address? Mr. Bigelow wants a treatment." "No Count Lewenhaupt is a bird of passage even yet, No telephone number." I have often wanted to see Mr. Bigelow—his breezy post cards with their big breezy signature from all quarters of the globe have interested me. His face doesn't make you see all the life he's lived [MTP: TS 49]. Note: "The Admiral's Cat" became "The Refuge of the Derelicts."

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Poultney Bigelow called this morning. / General Sickles called this afternoon, but Mr. Clemens & Mr. Twichell were out" [MTP TS 11].

April 3 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Mother and I went to a delicious little restaurant, Italian—around in 10th Street. There we met Lilian Griffin. We had a friendly chat and enjoyed the Chianti and the macaroni. The Griffins's have a studio here on 25th St. and Walter is painting portraits. Lilian is quite stout and looks matronly. The Aphrodite is going to be placed on exhibition again. I must manage a view of it, and the exhibition of pictures too, up on 57th Street [MTP TS 49-50]. Note: see also Sam's of Feb. 26.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Lewenhaupt / Mr. Clemens received a note from Slymond Galone [sic] saying that there is hope for the Tabard June [sic Tabard Inn] Corporation" [MTP TS 11]. Note: Seymour Eaton wrote Sam on Apr. 1 from Phila. on Tabard Inn Corp. Letterhead; this name likely was transcribed incorrectly. Clemens owned stock in the enterprise.

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam. "I have your note with the enclosure from Dr. Hale, but although I have read it through twice I cannot tell what it is about. Possibly you can inform me." Harvey reported that his auto was "running like a bird," and was at Sam's "disposal any day except" weekends, if he would let him know a day or two ahead [MTP].

April 4 Tuesday – Richard Watson Gilder for Century Magazine wrote to Sam.

I have read with great interest the offer of Leroy Bowman to you. It seems to me that this is the opportunity of your life—but why divide the profits with any one except Bowman? If he will appear on any platform in New York dressed as per, you introducing him, and in the course of fifteen or twenty minutes coming back to the stage in order to carry his remains into the wings, you will both of you reap a rich reward [MTP]. Note: Gilder may have referred to Leroy Edward Bowman (1887-1971), active in New York's Liberal Party and author of several books, but he would have been 18 at this time. Bowman's "offer" is not specified. A search of NY newspapers for 1905 did not turn up Bowman's name.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Dentist appointment, 12. M. / Mr. Rogers called this morning" [MTP TS 11].

April 5 Wednesday – Sam read the MS of an article by Isaac Frederick Marcossan about H.H. Rogers for the World's Work [Gribben 479: Lyon's Journal, no TS given; Bowe 42]. Note: Sam "conferred" with Rogers on the article the next day, Apr. 6. He had acted as a go between for Frank N. Doubleday, publisher of World's Work, and Rogers.

At 21 Fifth Ave. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Robbins Battell Stoeckel.

Dear Sir: / According to Dr. Quintard's advice Mr. Clemens directs me to send herewith his check for 200⁰⁰ as first payment for rent of Cottage in Norfolk, Conn.

Mr. Clemens wishes me to ask you to have the lease drawn from May 1st to Nov 1st if this is possible—

Dr. Quintard has said that you will take charge of Miss Clemens's accounts, therefore Mr. Clemens directs me to say that it will be best to have you ask Mrs. Braten Geier to send all bills to you direct [marked: "Approved by Mr. Clemens" with this date] [MTP].

Note: Dr. Edward Quintard (aka Ward Quintard) of N.Y.C. was a summer resident in Norfolk. Jean Clemens described Quintard as "having a woman's complexion; he is small, round, with laughing blue eyes and light auburn hair" [Hill 249].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: Treatment at 10.15, paid [Swedish Count C. Lewenhaupt gave Sam osteopathic treatments]

Mr. Ashcroft called at 11 –

Dr. Quintard came in to make arrangements for the first payment to be made to Judge Robbins Battel Staetel [sic Robbins Battell Stoeckel] of Norfolk—for rent of Cottage for Miss Clemens [Clara] to use during the coming summer. Rent $500—

First payment $200

Mr. Clemens read more of the Poorman MS. this evening.

This afternoon Mr. Clemens received MS of an article about Mr. Rogers, written by Mr. Mocasson for the World's Work [MTP TS 11].

Note: World's Work published the article in the May issue; see May entry. Robbins Battell Stoeckel (1872-1951), Yale graduate of 1889; NY Law School 1895; served as Judge of Probate, Norfolk District, until his retirement in 1942. He was active in community service. This from Yale's site on the family papers: "The Stoeckel and Battell families both played crucial roles in the development of music at Yale University. Gustave Jacob Stoeckel (1819-1907) [Robbins' father] was the first professor of music at Yale. Robbins Battell (1819-1895) was a generous Yale philanthropist as well as an amateur composer."

Sebastiano V. Cecchi wrote to Sam, enclosing a document that Senator Luchini wished Sam to sign before the Italian consul in NYC. Also, he added, "I received your telegram concerning the previous power of attorney" [MTP]. Note: Sam's telegram is not extant, but likely a day or two before this.

April 6 Thursday – Sam conferred with H.H. Rogers about the MS of an article by journalist Isaac Frederick Marcossan about Rogers [Gribben 479: Lyon's Journal, no TS given]. Note: Sam had read the MS on Apr. 5. He would discuss the article with Mocasson on Apr. 7. See Boewe.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Bambino spends the nights in my room. Saunters in, sits for an hour or so in the open window and jumps with his honey sweet speech upon my bed, nestles for a few minutes or for a longer time, and he's a sweet companion. So beautiful too. You can look at him and say, "You are beautiful, beautiful, beautiful," and it destroys nothing. But you can't look at a human being with the light of appreciation in your eyes, for they resent it, and you've been insolent, and it's none of your damn business if they are a feast for the eye [MTP: TS 50].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Dentist 11. oclock / Mr. Rogers called this morning to see MS. of article about himself. / Mr. Clemens saw Mr Macasson [sic] about the above article [MTP TS 11]. Note: World's Work ran the article "Henry H. Rogers—Monopolist" in the May issue, by John S. Gregory, which included anecdotes involving Mark Twain. Just who "Moccason" was is not clear, perhaps an editor for the publication or a pseudonym for Gregory. See May entry.

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to advise Sam that $1,000 had been transferred from Guaranty Trust to the Lincoln National Bank, and also deposited Harpers' check for $583.33 [MTHHR 583].

John Larkin, attorney, wrote to Sam. "I have communicated with Mr. Benjamin in reference to the trolley contract, and he advises me to hold the contract temporarily...as there are one or two matters yet to be adjusted in reference to the Casey place at Tarrytown" [MTP]. Note: a trolley company had placed tracks on part of Sam's Tarrytown property, thus creating a cloud on the title.

C.L. Stebbins for American Unitarian Assoc. (Boston) wrote to Sam, sending him the first volume in a series, "True American Types." Each volume was to be about 10,000 words, and he quoted from their catalog, reassuring these were not to be religious or denominational: "short sketches, of the sterling American manhood which travels along the by-paths of life rather than in the highways of fame." Of course he wanted Sam to contribute or send remarks [MTP].

J.L. Stern for Manhattan Single Tax Club wrote to Sam asking for "a few lines" to be read at a dinner honoring the 19th annual celebration of Jefferson's birthday [MTP].

April 6, ca. – On or after Apr. 6 at 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to C.L. Stebbins: "Impossible for Mr. Clemens to get away from his work at his time of life—" [MTP].

April 7 Friday – Sam discussed the MS of an article by journalist Isaac Frederick Marcossan about H.H. Rogers [IVL #2 TS 12; Gribben 479]. Note: Sam read the article on Apr. 5 and spoke with Rogers on Apr. 6. The article ran in the May issue of World's Work.

At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Robert Underwood Johnson.

"Mr. Clemens wishes me to say that he intends to be present at the conference which is called for Saturday April 22nd at the Aldine Association. Mr. Clemens has delayed notifying you of his intention, owing to necessity" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: Mr. Clemens went down town with Mr. Rogers. Took Ins. Policy to Safety Deposit Co. cut coupons—went to Harper, saw Mr. Duneka about Josiah Flynt [sic Flint]—& other things.

Mr. Smith—heating expert from Mr. John Howells's office looked over the house this morning, to make estimate for new furnace.

Mr. Mocasson [sic Marcossan] called with MS.—
Mr. Day & the Misses Day dined here.

Mr. Clemens sent MSS of C.S. Book, & Howells article to Mr. Duneka [MTP TS 12].

Note: "C.S. Book" was "Christian Science" MS, not published until 1907. Josiah Flynt (properly Josiah Flint Willard) (1869-1907) sociologist and author of several books, including Tramping with Tramps: Studies and Sketches of Vagabond Life (1901) which was inscribed by Flynt to Mark Twain [Gribben 777]. See Josiah Flint Willard to Sam Apr. 12, 1906; Sam to Willard Apr. 13, 1906.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to John T. Lewis, sending insoles. Ashcroft was trying to gain control of the rights to manufacture these [MTP]. Note: this is cataloged in error to Clemens.

Sidney C. Davidge wrote from NYC to Sam, announcing entertainment for the benefit of the families of Japanese soldiers and sailors killed in the present war. The meeting was to be at the house of Mrs. Mason C. Davidge, 62 South Washington Sq. at 11 a.m. on Apr. 14. Julia Ward Howe would preside. Clemens was urgently invited but not asked to speak [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote two letters to Sam. The first note, hand-written: “just a memorandum to call to mind your promise to let me have the ‘Christian Science Book’ and the article on Howells. He added a PS “It seemed mighty good to see you out again today.” The second note, typed: “This is just to acknowledge the receipt of the MS. Of the Christian Science Book,—of the article on William Dean Howells, and of the Italian book which is to be bound for Miss Jean” [MTP].

“Today I am sending you another volume and as I am anxious for you to get it as quickly as possible we will run the risk of sending it in the ordinary manner. So if we are lucky, you will get ‘Thoughts of a Fool’ by some mail.” Rosenthal wanted Sam’s thoughts—was this work funny? [MTP]. Note: Thoughts of a Fool (1905) by Herman Kuehn (1853-1918; pseud. Evelyn Gladys) [Gribben 389].

April 8 Saturday – Sam’s letter (unsigned) to the editor (as from Satan), “A Humane Word from Satan” first appeared in Harper’s Weekly for Apr. 8, 1905. It was collected in The $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories (1906) [Budd, Collected 2: 1010]. Note: the letter poked again at the American Board of Foreign Missions for not accepting donations from John D. Rockefeller.

Sam inscribed in TS (Vol. 20 of the Hillcrest ed., daughter Clara’s copy), a maxim and a dated sketch about the cat Bambino. From Sotheby’s write up:

Tom Sawyer Abroad (volume 20) is perhaps the crowning item in this most desirable of sets of Mark Twain’s works. Not only is there an autograph literary marginal comment identifying in the postmaster Nat Parsons the “quality of Snagsby in Bleak House,” but the blank leaf facing the maxim [the maxim in vol. 20 reads: “Often the surest way to convey misinformation is to tell the truth”—jd] has an autograph sketch by Clemens of a large cat sleeping in an easy chair, captioned “Resply yrs Bambino, Apl. 8/05.” [Sotheby’s sale Apr. 13, 2004, Lot 27]. Note: Sam gifted Hillcrest sets to Clara and Jean on Nov. 27, 1904, and more than once added new comments in Clara’s set.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mr. Clemens was talking of Jews this morning. He spoke of their high regard for the family. There is little or no divorce among them and their reverence for the aged is commendable” [MTP: TS 50]. Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Mr. Clemens will dine with Mr. & Mrs. Rogers” [MTP TS 12].

Edward Everett Hale wrote to Sam, thanking him for his “cordial assent” to his “proposal to Howells.” Wayne MacVeagh had decided against trying the case, as he did not believe in a perpetual right of copyright [MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote to Sam on Hale’s above letter: “Have you any ideas on the subject?” [MTP; not in MTHL].

Clesson S. Kinney, House of Representatives, Salt Lake City, Utah sent Sam a notice from Alfred Farlow titled “A Friendly Word” upon which Kinney wrote, “What do you think of this? I am in sympathy with your view of the subject. Are they getting so strong that they can dictate what an author may write?” The Farlow article stated that Christian Scientists should “assist publishers in determining the accuracy of matter relating to Christian Science” [MTP].

April 9 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam replied to Clesson S. Kenney’s Apr. 8.

I thank you very much for the Farlow circular.

The question you ask me is, “Are they getting so strong that they can dictate what an author may write?”

Change the word “write” to publish, and the proper answer is—Yes—However, this has been the case for two or three years. / Very Truly Yours [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tonight Mother and I went again to Cecchina’s [Italian restaurant on 10th Street]—it was crowded. In the afternoon we went to see some modern pictures, and then we went into the Griffin’s Studio and had some good talk there. As I entered 21 5th Avenue, I saw William Gillette’s beautiful face. He’d been dining here [MTP: TS 50].

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: Mr. Coburn will come about 5 o’clock with some photographs
Mr. Hapgood called
Mr. Gilett[e] dined here [MTP TS 12]. Note: Alvin Langdon Coburn.

The New York Times, p. SM5 ran a feature article, “A Talk with Mark Twain’s Cat, the Owner Being Invisible.” Bambino, Clara’s (eventually the family’s) cat, was the subject of this humorous article, told by a lady journalist who, unable to speak to Twain, resorted to interviewing his cat. Schmidt credits this unsigned article to Zoe Anderson Norris. Insert: Jean Clemens’s photo of Bambino.

April 10 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mr. Clemens reads to Jean and me in the evenings his ms. of the “Admiral Story.” It is interesting beyond words. Mr. Clemens does probe so into understandings of humanity. He appreciates the beauty of many lives, the fearful tragedies of them—but he won’t admit that they’re anything but machines.

I went down to see Miss Harrison this morning for Mr. Clemens. She is tall, severe, business-like and well worth the ten thousand that Mr. Rogers pays her [MTP: TS 50].

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: Treatment. [Swedish Count C. Lewenhaupt gave Sam osteopathic treatments]

Mr. Clemens sent down 8[?] Miss Harrison the following coupons.

1 Brooklyn Gas $30.

10 U.S. Steel. 25.

20 Internation Navigation 25.

due in Aug.

Mr. Clemens read more of the Admiral MS. The admiral explains Adams inexperience in punishment [MTP TS 12-13].

Olga Woodruff Campbell wrote from Kansas City, Mo. to thank Sam for his picture sent [MTP].

April 10 ca. – Now back in N.Y.C., William Dean Howells wrote a sentence to Sam on Edward Everett Hale’s note dated Hampton Institute, Va., Apr. 8: “Have you any ideas on this subject?” [MTHL 2: 797]. Note: see n1&2 of the source for more on the campaign for amendment to existing copyright law.

April 11 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Joseph J. Roche.

I am very much obliged to you for sending the Italian clipping to me.

We are all glad to know, by the cablegrams, that Genoa treated Mr. Hay well, and that he is improving in the mild climate of Italy. (It is a large 'we', there being eighty million of us.) [MTP]. Note: John Hay would die July 1, 1905. See also Roche's Mar. 30.

Sam also wrote to Edmund Dene Morel of the English Congo Reform Assoc. about the rejection of "King Leopold's Soliloquy" by Harpers for the North American Review. Hawkins describes: "Twain wrote Morel that 'the corporation' was 'doubtful about the commercial wisdom of dipping into Leopold's stinkpot.' He noted with disgust, 'They are so situated, by the contract between us, that I cannot make them do right'" [155-6]. Note: Harpers would release the "Soliloquy" to the American Congo Reform Assoc. at Twain's request. See June 16 to Duneka.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I bought a red collar for Bambino today. Frantic Bambino who runs away over fences to find his feline kind and exchange confidences [MTP: TS 50]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Representative of a Furnace maker came to examine & make estimate of cost of new furnacing" [MTP TS 13].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo letterhead to Sam, not having heard back from John T. Lewis. "Wouldn't it be a good plan to get Susie Crane to go and see him and 'take his measure'?...PS if we could get his 'shoes' we could fit him exactly" [MTP]. Note: with insoles.

April 12 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Wednesday 1/2 treatment Paid / Representative of another Furnace house came to make more estimates" [MTP TS 13]. Note: Swedish Count C. Lewenhaupt gave Sam osteopathic treatments.

April 13 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal # 2:

Mr. Clemens went to meeting of Council of American copyright league, at 4:30.
33 East 17th St.

Dentist 11 A.M.

Proof of Mr. Howells appreciation came today. [The article would be published in July's Harper's].

Mr. Clemens called at Mr. Coe's house—

Called also at Miss Clemens's sanitarium.

Mr. Rogers dined here—Mrs. Rogers is ill [MTP TS 13].

Frank Beardsley wrote from Nottingham, England to thank Sam. He had recently been laid up when a friend brought him a copy of IA, which made him forget about his illness [MTP].

William Evarts Benjamin wrote to Sam, enclosing $250 returned by the Title Guarantee & Trust Co., relating to the Tarrytown sale [MTP]. Note: some $1,500 was held in escrow, likely for clearing the cloud presented by the trolley company's offending tracks. These were released in segments.

April 14 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "At the meeting of the Copyright League yesterday [Apr. 13], Mr. Clemens stayed long enough to hear Mr. Solberg's suggestion for a mixed Copyright Commission of authors[,] artists, publishers etc. discussed & accepted. The Commission will recommend extension of Copyright limit" [MTP TS 13].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "The Publisher's League was to[o] much today"[ibid.].

At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Edward Everett Hale.

Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him thanking you for Mr. Spofford's letter, and returning it herewith.

He wishes me to say that the copyright matter is moving here; that yesterday he went to a meeting of the American Copyright League and stayed long enough to hear Mr. Solberg's suggestion for a mixed copyright commission of authors, artists, publishers etc discussed & accepted. The Commission will recommend extension of copyright-limits. The Publishers' League was to meet to-day, (to pass upon the same matter Mr. Clemens thinks)—he has no news yet. Mr. Clemens & his family leave for Dublin N.H. the first of May to remain until Nov., but he expects to keep in touch with the movement [MTP].

Notes: Ainsworth Rand Spofford (1825-1908), American journalist and publisher, sixth Librarian of Congress (1864-1897); Thorvald Solberg (1852-1949), first Register of Copyrights (1897-1930) in the US Copyright office. An authority on copyright, he played an instrumental role in the formulation of the Copyright Act of 1909. Based on Lyon's journal entries for Apr. 13 and 14, the Copyright League meeting was held on Apr. 13. Thus, this letter, which had been catalogued as "ca. Apr. 11" is now placed to Apr. 14.

John S. Phillips for American Magazine wrote to Sam: "We sent you a little while ago a copy of 'The Troll Garden' by Miss Willa Sibert Cather....We are venturing to call it to the attention of a few people, like yourself, of discernment and appreciation of the better sort of thing" [Gribben 133]. Note: Willa Cather (1873-1947) wrote of frontier life on the Great Plains. The Troll Garden (1905) was a collection of short stories.

April 15 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mother and I saw Lilian Griffin for a moment in at Cecchina's at 6:30. Walter has lost his position as instructor at the Art School in Hartford. Mother and I couldn't get seats at Cecchina's so we went around to the "Griffoni" and had such a bad dinner. Then we went up to Proctor's show house to see Henry Lee impersonate Mark Twain. Very bad it was [MTP: TS 51]. See insert for Henry Lee Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens wrote all day without interruptions. / Mr. & Mrs. Gilder & Miss Dorothea dined here" [MTP TS 13].

E.B. Prondfit for Aeolian Co. wrote to Sam, sending, as requested, costs for shipping the Orchestrelle to Keene Station, N.H., totaling $35.50 for boxing, shipping, sending a man to set it up, etc. [MTP]. Note: sometimes misspelled as "Proudfit."

April 16 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Miss Mary Foote lunched here" [MTP: TS 51]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Sent word to Postman in Dublin N.H. to keep mail for Mr. Clemens. / Mr. Clemens read 40 pages of the Admiral Story MS. this evening—" [MTP TS 14].

April 17 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight Col. Harvey dined here. To look at Col. Harvey you'd never think that he was a man with a literary appreciation or that he could talk—but he can and he gave us a very nice dinner party. Then Jean and I left Mr. Clemens and him while we came up to our rooms [MTP: TS 51].

Treatment. Paid. [Swedish Count C. Lewenhaupt gave Sam osteopathic treatments.]

Dental Appointment 11.30 A.M.

Mr. Clemens went to the Italian Consul to sign a paper enabling Ingegnere Zannoni to act as his representative in the Villa di Quarto case.

Col. Harvey dined here.

Mr. Howells arrived today from Italy [MTP TS 14]. Note: Howells had announced his departure date as Apr. 5—see ca. Mar. 15.

Norm G. Cooper, Insurance wrote from Brooklyn to Sam. "I send you a National Tribune—It may take your mind back to old times in Hannibal—I was there in 57-58-59 working for Mitchell the Jeweler. I remember the Helms, Dr. Duffield, Susan Norton, Theo Eddy—and Sister Eunice, and other[s]." Cooper wanted to "swap old time memories" and asked if Sam recalled a "Soldier paper Cooper's Coffee Cooler, now defunct" [MTP]. Note: Sam had already left Hannibal by 1857. See Vol. I.

April 18 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Santissima [Clara] is allowed to see her letters—I’ve sent them up to her” [MTP: TS 51]. Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Mr. Clemens lunched with Col. Harvey, and Mr. Howells, and others too. (4 ladies) / Miss Pears came up from Washington to dine with Mr. Clemens” [MTP TS 14].

Edward M.J. Laurence wrote from Perkasio, Penn. to Sam. He was too poor to buy his work on vivisection, but needing it in his work he asked for a gift of it. He informed Sam that he’d seen a recent article in the Churchman “shamefully criticizing your work” [MTP].

April 19 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Dinner with Mr. & Mrs. Loomis / Col Harvey took the Palmistry Article—[MTP TS 14]. Note: see Twain’s “Palm Readings” (1905) and the A.D. of Jan. 29, 1907. Playboy Magazine, Dec. 2010 issue gives a peek at Vol. 2 of Autobiography of Mark Twain, to be released in 2012 by the MTP. In this excerpt Twain responds to fortune tellers who were asked to read his handprints without knowing his identity.

William Dean Howells in NYC wrote a sentence to Sam: “At least 3 of us will come to dinner Sunday at 7. (or 7.30?)” [MTHL 2: 798].

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to Sam asking for a check payable to Chase & Barstow for $43,125 for the purchase of “Utah” stock, and please direct it to Miss A. Watson as she might not be in [MTHHR 583n1; MTP].

John S. Phillips for McClure, Phillips & Co. wrote to Sam: “If you don’t get your book won’t you please let me know, and I shall be glad to send you another copy” [MTP]. Note: Phillips had written on Apr. 14 in regards to sending a copy of The Troll Garden (1905) by Willa Cather; here he was following up to see if the book was rec’d. See Gribben 133.

April 20 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Mr. John Howells sent result of the estimates the furnace men made—$2000.00 for the lowest price. / Sent check to Miss Watson for Miss Harrison for $43,125.00 to pay for 1000 shares Utah” [MTP TS 14-15].

Jean Clemens wrote to the Editor of Harper’s Weekly; her letter was published on May 6, 1905 as “The Passing of the Egret,” available online via Google Books.

F.H. Hooper for Encyclopedia Britannica wrote to Sam seeking his testimony in lawsuits they had commenced against pirated “garbled Reprints of the Encyclopedia.” [MTP]. Note: see Hooper’s of Apr. 22, stating that Lyon had “telephoned in” a response on that day.

April 21 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Dear H. H. / I was going to wait, that day, but the sky, up the river, began to loom so black that I rushed away to escape the storm. It wasn’t much of a success. I got 40% of it.

Baker beats the band!—Thus far. Each of the band has inspected the case—and decided it—from one or another of 13 points of view, but Baker’s battery works the whole 13. It is my opinion that there is nothing quite so delightful elsewhere in all the literature of dialectics as his naïve picture of the repentant harlot cleansing the American Board’s unsanitary feet with Standard Oil & tears, & wiping them with the hair which he hasn’t got.

I believe it would not be improper for Mr. Rockefeller to kill Baker—certainly not immoral. In fact this is a corrective which ought always to be applied to one’s over-zealous friends, wherever caught. I think it is St. Paul who says, “Oh, damn the over-zealous friend.”

Presently I will send the Baker clipping to Joe, but not yet—I want to study it.

I am making note of the fact that the yacht goes into commission May 1. Also, that you will drop in, when well & strong, & assault 451. Good—then I will arrange so that you can get a box for $4—(a bottle of champagne goes with every box.)

I'm getting well & strong in my crippled back—my man can best all the osteopaths & all the masseurs, & give them odds in the game. Yours (not much tainted but not wholly disinfected) / SLC [MTHHR 584-5].

Note: Source notes add several important facts: "Evidence in MTP indicates that it is extremely unlikely the 'over-zealous friend' Clemens mentions was W.H. Baker of Fairhaven, but no relevant comment by anyone named Baker has been found in contemporary periodicals." A stronger contender was Ray Stannard Baker (1870-1946; pseud. David Grayson), muckraking journalist with Ida Tarbell and Lincoln Steffens at McClure's (from 1898) and in 1906 formed The American Magazine with the pair. Some Congregational Church ministers had denounced the American Board of Foreign Missions for taking a donation of $100,000 from John D. Rockefeller. Rogers had defended Rockefeller and how he had accumulated his wealth.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Treatment Paid. / Mr. Clemens worked all day— / Miss Nesmith arrived" [MTP TS 15]. Note: Miss Mabel Nesmith, a friend of Jean's. Swedish Count C. Lewenhaupt gave Sam osteopathic treatments.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam.

I enclose a literal copy of letter received this morning from [John T.] Lewis. He is evidently wearing the insoles upside down, If he cannot change the plates back again, I will have to get a new pair.

Mr. Stanchfield was in on Wednesday, and I will find out to-morrow on what terms, if any, we can get control of this insole. ...[he wrote an anecdote of a rheumatism sufferer helped by the insoles]

Mr. Stanchfield remarked that Butters was willing to make some sort of a settlement, but that Wheeler was preventing him from doing so until his (Wheeler's) return to New York. I suppose Wheeler has told Butters he can settle with you and Stanchfield much more cheaply than Butters can settle with a California law firm. I may be able to find out what is the maximum amount that Butters is willing to pay...then when Wheeler comes along and offers about half the amount, we will know how to handle him [MTP]. Note: John T. Lewis of Elmira suffered from arthritis; the insoles were sent to test their efficacy; Ashcroft was attempting to gain the rights to manufacture them, but was ultimately unsuccessful. Harold Wheeler.

April 22 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: The darling days go flying by and do no proper chronicling. Mr. Howells is down stairs—he dined here tonight and I had the pleasure of sitting opposite him and of hearing him and Mr. Clemens talk. How fine the appreciation of those two men—the one for the other—and the best of it is that they lay their homage at each others' feet—a noble gift—and are the more lovely for the giving. They look into each others eyes and their speech is, "Oh noble you"—and it is enough.

This morning I was hunting for some ms. in the study and Mr. Clemens came in to pace and give his instructions. Apropos of something, I don't remember what, he said that a few days ago Mr. Howells made the remark that Mr. Clemens possessed a great advantage over him, because he never had to put any love scenes in his book. Mr. Clemens said that he couldn't do it anyway—if he ever put a girl in a book he soon found that he had to make an excuse to drop her overboard. While poor Mr. Howells has to have love scenes and the task of having them to suit him is a terrible one. Tonight while Mr. Howells was here at dinner his talk was so charming, for he told of a dear old woman they had had at San Remo during the past winter who did their house work for them in their little apartment. Every evening she would appear at their salon door at about nine o'clock to say, "Buona Sera, Buona Notte, Buona Riposo, Gooda Naat"—and that would be the beginning of a long "discorso." She was very dramatic without being aware of it, of course, and gave them very delightful accounts of her home life away up in a mountain region near there.

Mr. Clemens told how when he went down to Mentone from Berlin in '92 after a very serious illness, he used to get up in the night and with a swift little fire he'd warm up and brew a little hot toddy for himself. It was living. George MacDonald was in Bordighera that same winter.

Today Miss Mabel Nesmith sailed away to England. She came from Florence two months ago—she and her tawny eyes, and she has been visiting around in Washington, Boston and Philadelphia, and she stayed a night with Jean [MTP: TS 51-53]. Note: see June relating to Sam's offer to Howells to take on his biography.

On Apr. 7, Miss Lyon notified Robert Underwood Johnson that Sam intended to attend the National Institute, American Academy of Arts & Letters conference at the Aldine Association on this day. Her journal # 2 confirms:

Encyclopedia Britannica people sent depositions of Pres. Hodly [sic Hadley] D. Can Dyke [sic. Van Dyke] Henry van Dyke?] etc. & asked Mr. Clemens to furnish his for suit of the above Co against publishers here of a garbled edition of the E.B.

Mr. Howells dined here [MTP TS 15]. Note: Arthur Twining Hadley (1856-1930), President of Yale (1899-1921); Henry Van Dyke (1852-1933), author, educator, clergyman. Britannica was involved with lawsuits over piracy. See Hooper's letter below:

F.H. Hooper for Encyclopedia Britannica wrote to Sam.

Your secretary telephoned us this morning stating that you would like to see a few of the depositions that have already been taken in our suit against the 'Pirates' We accordingly enclose herewith the depositions of Dr. Van Dyke, President Hadley, Mr. George Haven Putnam, and Dr. John P. Peters....We are very much pleased to learn that you are interested in this suit... [MTP].

The National Institute chose five more members to the Academy of Arts and Letters: Joseph Jefferson, John Singer Sargent, Richard Watson Gilder, Horace Howard Furness, and John Bigelow [MTP enclosed in 30 May 1905 to MT].

April 23 Sunday – Easter – Midnight at 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Joe Twichell.

Dear Joe— / I have just finished reading the history of Joe Hawley—a noble man, truly. I see that he was not the man to allow votes to be bought for him, & I do not believe he ever knew it. I thank you for sending me that paper.

I suppose the "Henry E. Burton" is the one who married Alice Day's sister. I did not know he was dead [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Now this has been a day all full of glories. I went to Church of Ascension with Mother, but we didn't sit together. The music was very beautiful...and the sermon, Mr. Percy Grant is quite unafraid, and speaks his thought. When we walked up 5th Avenue we saw Mr. Clemens on his way up to lunch with Mrs. Burden. He stepped like a dear spirit for lightness across the Avenue, and then was lost in the shifting crowd. In the afternoon Mother and I took bus and went up the surging Avenue as far as 59th Street. It was never so gay—never so full of lovely carriages and autos and sweet women in the most enchanting hats. And Oh, the frocks. I saw John Kendrick [Bangs] with his wife in a victoria. How I kept on a strange sympathy with that man when he lost his wife just before we went to Florence—but it didn't find a footing, he didn't need the sympathetic wave for he married his type-writer ever so soon. But that's no harm. I've known of several men who have married several times—they couldn't live without the companionship and sympathy of a woman, and I like the thought of it.

There's a comfort in sitting beside a man sometimes, for instance this morning in Church I sat beside a quiet man, he scarcely moved, and he had no silken [MTP: TS 51-52].

Joseph Jefferson (1829-1905), famous American actor, died from pneumonia in Palm Beach, Fla. Isabel Lyon mentioned him in her Apr. 30 journal entry.

William Dean Howells and two others (likely Elinor and daughter Pilla) were invited to Sam's for dinner [Apr. 19 from Howells].

April 24 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens went to see Mr. John Howells & Mr. Larkin about the furnace. Telephoned Mr. Renwick, making an appointment with him for Friday morning so that he can talk the matter over with Katie" [MTP TS 15].

Helena Gilder (Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder) wrote to Sam. "Mrs. Dunham asked me whether she might send you the invitation that goes with this. I said yes, indeed & that it would be a great pleasure to James if you would present at his lecture" [MTP].

April 25 Tuesday – Sam inscribed a copy of A Dog's Tale to Mrs. Bellows: "To / Mrs. Bellows / with greetings & salutations of / The Author. / Apl. 25/05." [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Oh Bambino lying here on my desk—crooning away your song of comfort, you are a sweet little friend. I've been playing much music tonight Bambino—playing until I am saddened by the beauty of the strains.

Mr. Percy Grant came in for a moment. Jean went up to Tyringham. Mother came in for all the afternoon. Oh sweet mother. And Mr. Clemens was away all day, coming home very tired. Mr. C. had me telephone Mr. Rogers that he wanted to make the trip to Dublin N.H. in the yacht—Mr. Rogers says the roads are rough, the yacht goes into commission next week.

Mr. Clemens sent a little MS. a Conclusion to the C.S. article, to Mr. Duneka for his approval

Mr. Clemens lunched with Mrs Sloane [MTP TS 15-16].

Jean Clemens in Lee, Mass. sent a telegram to Sam. "Arrived well. Have Lyon send seigel [sp?] package at once / J.L Clements" [sic] [MTP].

April 26 Wednesday – Clemens had a discussion with Louis E. Van Norman concerning his ideas for Postal Checks (money orders) [Apr. 27 from Van Norman].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The chronicling isn't gay. Bambino's doom in sealed. He must go—yesterday he was sweeter than usual, but that was only the beginning of his dear older ways. Oh, little cat—it's so very dreadful" [MTP TS 54].

April 28 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Andrew Carnegie.

Dear St. Andrew: / For thirty-eight years I have striven for the position of world's benefactor, but you have gotten the start of me, I am too old to struggle longer—take the place, you've won it fair! If you had told me of this great thing when you were at my bedside the other day I would have resigned without waiting till now; & you could have had my halo, too. It may be tin, but no matter, it's good tin, & paid the duty when it came down.

In a fine & appreciative editorial the Times of this morning speaks of you as the "insatiable benefactor." Isn't it good? If that doesn't please you you are a hard saint to satisfy. / Ys Ever / St. Mark II., (retired) [MTP].

Note: The N.Y. Times article, p.8 "Carnegie's Latest," dealing with his donations to educational pensions, begins with "Mr. Carnegies's latest discovery of an unoccupied field for his insatiable benevolence...", nearly the same as "insatiable benefactor." Sam's reference to being "retired" seems like a poke at Carnegie with a spoof request for his own pension.

Sam also wrote to Robert Underwood Johnson with his picks for nomination to the American Academy of Arts & Letters (Johnson was a secretary for the Academy at this time):

I shall be in New Hampshire for the summer, by the 6th of May.

I nominate—

[Francis] Marion Crawford / William Gillette / Edward Everett Hale / Joel Chandler Harris / Bronson Howard / Thos. Nelson Page / CARL SCHURZ / Augustus Thomas / and / A. T. James D. Campbell for the Plasmon Company of America wrote to Sam, notifying that the adjourned stockholders meeting of April 27 would reconvene on May 29 at 2:30 p.m. to elect five directors [MTP].

April 29 before – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Emily B. Hapgood : “Dear Mrs. Hapgood: / Mr. Clemens wishes me to write for him—and say that he will be very happy if you and Mr. Hapgood can dine with him and Miss Jean on Saturday evening Apr. 29th at half past seven” [MTP].

April 29 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Bambino must be keeping a heart-rending journal. He sat close to Katie when she telephoned to the tumbrel man to come carry him to a death—but he didn't sit by me when I countermanded that order, and so he ran away. How big and terrible and impossible Prosper [Jean's dog] must have seemed to him. What a change has come into his darling life loving life. Love lavished and then Oh so suddenly withdrawn, of course he couldn't quite comprehend. Still he knew there must be a good reason, and so in his pride he ran away. Oh, fine fine Bambino.

But Bambino came back, because Katie captured him. Hungry, tired, dusty, streety, but still Bambino. I came in about 7:20 after dinner at Cecchina's with Mother, and Mr. Clemens hearing my latch key, put his head out the library door saying “That black cat has come back and gone upstairs” and there he was waiting for me up a flight. I had him to love and love for a while and then put him and some milk down the cellar. Oh, he is so lovable, poor little cat.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Hapgood dined here tonight. I could hear their voices in happy laughter in echo to a remark of Mr. Clemens [MTP: TS 54]. Note: tumbrels were carts used to carry victims to the guillotine in the French revolution.

April 30 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to St. Clair McKelway.

Dear McKelway,—Your innumerable friends are grateful, most grateful.

As I understand the telegrams, the engineer of your train had never seen a locomotive before. Very well, then I am once more glad that there is an Ever-watchful Providence to foresee possible results and send Ogden and McIntyres along to save our friends.

The Government's Official report, showing that our railways killed twelve hundred persons last year and injured sixty thousand convinces me that under present conditions one Providence is not enough to properly and efficiently take care of our railroad business. But it is characteristically American—always trying to get along short-handed and save wages.

I am helping your family congratulate themselves, and am your friend as always. / S. L. Clemens [MTP: Paine's 1917 Mark Twain's Letters, p.771].

Note: Paine added: “St. Clair McKelway, of The Brooklyn Eagle, narrowly escaped injuries in a railway accident...” The New York Times, Apr. 30, p.1 reported on the high speed rail accident which claimed four dead and about sixteen injured, including McKelway, who suffered a bruised back and shoulder:

Greenville, S.C., Apr. 29.—The Robert C. Ogden special train, bearing Mr. Ogden and 100 members of the Southern Conference for Education on their return to New York, was wrecked at 7:55 o'clock this morning in the yard of the Southern Railroad here, by dashing at great speed into the rear end of a freight train. Four train hands were killed and several passengers and employes injured. ...

St. Clair McKelway was seated at breakfast with R.M. Ogden, secretary to Robert C. Ogden. Dr. McKelway was caught under a heavy beam. Mr. Ogden, who was badly cut about the face and hands, saw the flames curling toward the Brooklyn editor. Aided by a colored porter [John M. McIntyre], he managed after desperate struggles to release Mr. McKelway, the two men escaping through the broken flooring of the car.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens stayed out at the Benjamins' all night, at Ardsley and Katie forgot to pack his night things, his such necessary night things, so I went with them and I did an exhausting thing. I did 20 minutes running in 12 in order to get a train home, and it was bad. I saw Mr. Rogers in the station at Ardsley and as I got out the train he gave me his magnetic hand. The magnetism is so strong that you want to hold it to feel its beautiful strength. I came back to find Miss Mary Foote having tea with Jean. All my thoughts are dulled by my terrible run. I'll charge it to experience. Mother went to the Joseph Jefferson memorial service in the Church Around the Corner. David Bispham sang, and she said it was beautiful [MTP: TS 54].

Rogers—Monopolist: An Intimate Study of the Vice-President and Acting Executive of the Standard Oil Company," p. 6127-30. Tenney: "On p. 6129, tells of Rogers taking MT, Thomas B. Reed, and other friends to the West Indies on his yacht, the Kanawha. Returning Reed left at a port stop to catch a train, and the yacht hit a storm. In his thank-you note (New York, 17 Apr. 1902) Reed told Rogers he should carry 'on board persons of such weight with the community that they can keep the boat level. The Colonel, Hilton, Foote, Dr. Rice and Mr. Twain are all well enough in their way—quite interesting people, but—they lack gravity.' May 1 Monday – Katy Leary and Jean Clemens left for Dublin, N.H. to get the Greene house ready for Sam. Isabel Lyon would leave on May 5 to join the pair. The nearest railway station was an hour's drive; from that point it was three hours to Boston or six hours to New York [Lystra 46].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean taking Katie and Katie Laundress left today for Dublin. Mr. Clemens went out today and bought a pair of glasses for a dollar and a soft felt hat for $1.50. He loves a soft felt, but oh they aren't stylish hats and at dinner he was sweet and gay and went at once to bed after dinner and to sleep. Rodman Gilder came in this evening and we had a nice talk about Santissima [Clara]. Then he told me a dear little [Joseph] Jefferson anecdote. ... Rodman talked about the Kipling-Putnam lawsuit and how he told too how several years ago Will M. Clemens tried to publish a book on Mr. Clemens, a book something like the Ken of Kipling—all made of clippings and things, but Mrs. Clemens didn't wish it and so Rodman said that that book with its correspondence between Mrs. Clemens and Will M. Clemens's wife was probably lying festering waiting to be printed.

Teresa found a home for Bambino today, with an Italian woman on 11th St. [MTP: TS 55]. Note: the maid, Teresa Cherubini, who had returned from Florence with the Clemens family. Ken of Kipling (1899).

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote John B. Stanchfield, with possibly a copy to Sam. He had been unable to secure world rights to the insole due to "Lee's inflated idea as to the value of his four foreign patents." The three-page typed letter covers details of various propositions, royalties and payments to Lee [MTP]. Note: Frank B. Lee of Buffalo became assignor to the Lee Electric Insole Co., NY. The insoles were made from aluminum with a plate of copper in one and a zinc plate in the other, designed to produce an electric current that would immediately begin to relieve rheumatism.

New York Telephone Co. wrote to Sam, enclosing a memorandum showing rate changes in his contract for telephone service—for 1,000 local calls the rate would be lowered from $90 to $72 [MTP].

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to advise Sam that Mr. Chase, the stock broker in Boston (Chase & Barstow), had had to carry the $43,125 needed to purchase stock for a few days and requested $8.75 interest on that amount. (See Apr. 19 from Harrison). Would Sam send a check or should she draw it from his "book" there? [MTHHR 583n1].

May 2 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Duneka, Maj. Leigh and Mr. Larkin dined here with Mr. Clemens. Mr. Clemens had a splendid working day. Mother and I dined at Cecchina's and it was pleasant. The people were quite interesting.

Just before dinner this evening when I followed Mr. Clemens down the stairs, his head was more beautiful than ever, in its living luminous golden silver. It is a golden silver, for there is such a wondrous light in it, a light that white hair never has [MTP: TS 55].

She then married Count Karol Chlapowski, who may be the "Mr. Modjeska" referred to here.

Margaret Jenkins wrote from Cottingham, England to Sam—was there any hope he might be in England early in June? [MTP]. Note: Lyon answered for Sam on May 19.

May 3 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Robert Underwood Johnson about his nominee picks for the Academy of Arts and Letters.

No, I've named enough—I'll stand pat on those.

It ought to be a rule, & a rigid one, that whenever a man offers a name, he must get up & state his reasons for his choice. Without it, men vote their affections instead of their cold judgment. I wish you would propose it; if I were going to be there I would do it. Without this rule the Academy milk is bound to be watered. We all know this, by experience. Judas & Peter & some of the others would not have gotten in, if the Disciples had had the same ordinance [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Win and Amy Cattelle came in to see Mother and me yesterday. Mr. Collier and Mr. Moffett dined with Mr. Clemens and so Mother and I dined at Cecchina's [Italian restaurant]; such a rare time we had.

I was too tired to do anything but watch a long table full of dentist-like folk, and to be carried away by a party of 3 at the little round table. A tall beautiful young man, one who sat with his back to me, a charmingly voiced creature, and a woman with lovely grey hair, youngish face and a self contained manner. She ordered an omelette because she couldn't eat the Cecchina productions. Hopelessly they had me enthralled, soon a woman in a low cut gown entered and sat behind me. Mother didn't like her looks, I turned to look at her, when she put out her finger at me, saying "I know you"—but she didn't, though I knew her for the very disagreeable and malicious woman [reporter] who came to write up Bambino and Mr. Clemens. I hedged her off tantalizingly, and then the man who sat with his back to me turned and said, "Please tell us who you are, my friend opposite is longing to know too." I hesitated and when the woman finally left the room I told him, and he said my vis à vis was Mr. Binney of S.S. McClure and then Mr. Binney said "You wrote to me about 2 weeks ago" —"I?" and then came out about a book that the McClure Co. sent to Mr. Clemens to Elmira—but Mr. Clemens said that he didn't know Elmira—never heard of it—his address was Indianapolis—so of course he couldn't get the book, etc, etc., Mr. Binney looked his charming appreciation and they said (one of them), that the moment they looked at me they knew that I was "near some throne." The man with his back to me was Mr. Faulkner and he knows the Thayers of Dublin and visits them. How very lovely—and how good to be alive [MTP: TS 55]. Note: Mr. Binney was actually Witter Bynner (1881-1968), later became a famous poet, editor for McClure's Magazine; Mr. Faulkner was Barry Faulkner (1881-1966), artist and former classmate of Bynner's at Harvard, was a cousin and student of Abbott Thayer's. See AMT 1: 392, 606.

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to advise Sam that she had deposited to his account, $583.33 from Harper & Brothers and $500 from Guaranty Trust (as per tel. Message) [MTHHR 584n1].

May 4 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

This morning (May 4) I went into Mr. Clemens room and almost the first thing he said to me was "Have we ever received that McClure book?" Then in a burst of delight I told him the little story of last night and he liked it all too. Perfect man that he is. Oh, the misery of not seeing in print now the beautiful things that will be said of him when he's dead. Mr. Binney [sic Bynner] and Mr. Faulkner bowed their heads in sweet reverence when I told them who I was—after protesting that I was not professional. Oh, there is so much to say—so much to breathe, that wonderful man, so magnetic, so wonderful.

Teresa and I are on the train nearing Hartford—on our way up to Dublin [MTP: TS 55-56]. Note: it seems that the ladies spent the night in Hartford, then continued on May 5 to Dublin. "That McClure book" was Willa Cather's The Troll Garden (1905), as found in John S. Phillips' Apr. 14 and 19.

May 5 Friday – Sam left NYC with H.H. Rogers on the yacht Kanawha for Fairhaven, Mass. [Lyon's journal #2 TS 17; Lyon's journal May 7]. Note: Due to learning of Clara's impending appendectomy, Sam may have stayed in NYC. Lyon wrote that he was in Fairhaven. If he did not go with Rogers, it is then evident that Lyon did not know this.

Isabel Lyon's Journal: ...we reached first Keene. Then after a queer supper we trolleyed to Marlboro and then took a nice carriage and drove 9 miles over surrounding fine earth roads to Dublin. The drive was beautiful. Theresa and I chatted Italian, and she called the lovely singing tree toads.

There was a lovely strange moonlight light in the sky, but there wasn't any moon to make it—so the luminous white birch tree trunks were lovely in their mystery. We found the Dublin house perfectly lovely perched away up on a high hill and cozy fires blazing. Jean in spectacles sat reading Cooper.

The view is wonderful, wonderful. Far, far distant hills—hoary Monadnock to the South East—and forever the singing sighing breathing pines and hemlocks close to the very windows. And so silent—except for the songs of the pines and the birds. You see a glint of the Lake too. The restfulness of it is beautiful. The house is charming. I find it all in exquisite taste, because it has the lovely plasters and casts and books and colorings and pewters and things that I love.

Jean has been reading aloud to me. Heine's inimitable verse. Herr Heinick [sic] certainly has made many lovely blossoms bloom for that dear girl [MTP TS 56, 57; Hill 105, in part]. Note: Heinrich Heine (1797-1856); See Gribben 305.

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: not found at MTP; this may be a duplicate of May 3.

May 6 Saturday – Sam was enjoying the company of the H.H. Rogers family in Fairhaven, Mass.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Resting, resting these wonderful days. On Tuesday last Mr. Bliss came to the house to ask Mr. Clemens to dine with and to meet again Mr. Modjeska, Mr. Howells, and Mr. Gilder—but Mr. Clemens was going up to Fairhaven in the yacht with Mr. Rogers and so couldn't go—but I had a chance to look at Mr. Bliss, a tall man about 60—a very beautiful creature. Smooth faced, with a most lovely voice, and an exquisite manner. Mr. Clemens said that he had seen him at the Copyright meeting last week and found him beautiful indeed to look at [MTP TS 56].

Jean Clemens' Apr. 20 letter to the Editor of Harper's Weekly, "The Passing of the Egret" ran in the May 6, 1905 issue, p. 658.

May 7 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens left last Friday with Mr. Rogers and now he's in Fair Haven. Jean had a telegram that Mr. Clemens will not arrive as soon as expected. The house needs him so dreadfully. He is so much the master of us all.

Jean is reading now Wolf von Hierbrandt's [sic] book on the Kaiser, and we find it very interesting. I've began my pincushion work.

Such a beautiful place for peaceful resting [MTP TS 56]. Note: Due to Clara's impending appendectomy, Sam returned to NY sometime this day or the next—it is also possible that he did not go to Fairhaven at all. The Kaiser's Speeches, Forming a Character Portrait of Emperor William II (1903). Translated and edited by Wolf von Schierbrand (1851-1920) [Gribben 771].

May 8 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "The resting is so sweet. Perhaps the long flights of stairs at #21 [Fifth Ave.] began to shred my nerves and physical condition" [MTP TS 56]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens returned to town—is detained by business" [MTP TS 18].

George H. Warner wrote from Tryon, N.C. to Sam, enclosing a newspaper clipping about Canadian fishing, "Angling for Big Gray Trout."

Dear Mark Twain / I thought of you when I read the enclosed as the only one capable of doing it justice.

My vocabulary is limited and I was barely brought up—as to cusses.

What a lovely religion they have had in Europe. I have been re reading the Cloister and the Hearth—Europe had many cloisters and few hearths [MTP].

May 9 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Susan Crane.

Susy dear, there has not been a single week of the past 48 which has not brought me reason to say "how grateful I am that Livy is out of it!"

How did she ever live in this execrable world? & why did she love it & wish to stay in it?

Jean does not know why I do not go to Dublin, & I do not want her to find out. I am staying here because Clara is to be operated on for appendicitis to-morrow afternoon & 4 o'clock.

I was to leave for Dublin via Boston last Friday, but on Thursday I learned that Clara was threatened (I was out there) & that she wanted the operation. So did I. I talked with the doctor & the surgeon, & they decided to take 5 days to prepare her physically; since then they have added a day, and appointed to-morrow (Wednesday.) If poor Livy were here, & couldn't see Clara these 6 days of waiting, nor be present to-morrow! But she isn't here, she is at peace & knows nothing of these things, & is not troubled about anything, & will never be troubled any more forever. / With abundant love / SLC

Of course I can't make a guess as to how long I shall be here. It isn't worth while to guess.

Jean is delighted where she is. Patrick is there; & Miss Lyon, & Theresa & the laundress & Katy. I have the maid (Katherine) & the cook with me, & Katy will join my household to-day I suppose.

I will write or telegraph you to-morrow evening or next day [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens is writing his signature a thousand times for a new edition de Suite [MTP TS 18].

May 10 Wednesday – The New York Times, May 11, p. 1 ran a squib that Clara Clemens was operated on in the afternoon by Dr. Hartley (likely Dr. Frank Hartley 1856-1913).

At 8 p.m. at 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Susan Crane.

Susy dear, it's over, & Clara is doing well. She had a famous surgeon—Dr. Hartley. It was a bad appendix—long & slim & with crooks in it; it was getting ready to be a dangerous case.

Good-night dear Sue—I am very tired, on account of the solicitude. / Holy Saml [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today at 4 o'clock Santissima was operated upon for appendicitis. / Mother writes me every day—noble beautiful home letters, so full of her sweet saint self without knowing it at all [MTP TS 56]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "...Mr. Clemens stayed there for 2 hours—& at 8 o'clock Miss Clemens was still under the influence of the ether. Mr. Clemens has seen & talked with C.C. & found her plump & Oh so pretty [MTP TS 18].

May 11 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Today after a long walk Jean received the telegrams telling of Santissima's illness, then she telephoned to N.Y. and Katie said that she is doing well. We took a four hour tramp finishing up at Mrs. Abbot [sic] Thayer's place. She was in the garden and she greeted us very sweetly and then took us into the studio where we saw some of Mr. Thayer's unfinished and also finished work. In the outer studio we saw some very charming flower studies done by Gladys Thayer, really they are very charming. They are such genuine folk like the Mr. Binney and the Mr. Faulkner kind. The people who do things and are so superior to trifles [MTP TS 57]. Note: Binney was Witter Bynner.

John Larkin, attorney, wrote to Sam.

I saw Mr. Mirant yesterday who referred me to Mr. Renwick. I saw the latter today & he explained his delay in the premises as being due to ill health. He has promised to take the matter up with experts & get a report to learn whether the uncomfortable condition of the house was due to insufficient heating arrangements or to unskillful handling of the furnaces [MTP].

May 12 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Isabel V. Lyon in Dublin N.H. (only the envelope survives) [MTP]. Note: judging from Lyon's journal entry below, this likely was a telegram with news of Clara's condition, and news that he was not ready to come to Dublin quite yet.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Santissima's temperature is normal. There are no complications, but Mr. Clemens won't come yet" [MTP TS 57]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Telegram this morning. / Pulse 80. Temperature 99. / Everything satisfactory [MTP TS 18].

Robert L. Fulton wrote from Reno, Nev. to Sam. Fulton wanted Sam to "deliver the oration" during a weeklong program to "celebrate the glorious Fourth of July" and the building of the Overland railroad.

"I have a delicate yet pleasing task; the attempt to do honor to one of American's foremost citizens, whom I have never seen and who had never heard of me.

"Your recollections doubtless turn to Nevada..." [MTP]. Note: see Sam's fascinating reply of May 24.

May 13 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: We walked around the Lake, Jean and I—a beautiful walk. The native people are so gentle and sweet-eyed, with soft lazy speech. We met a couple of men who had a setter with them. The owner eyed Prosper and said “I reckon my dawg won’t hurt him.” We found a glorious bank of violets, painted trillium, and trailing “Hobble bush.” You don’t always find it trailing. “Nature’s Garden” makes the country so enjoyable and it is so interesting to hear from Mr. Clemens and Jean how sweet and lovely Neltje Blanchan is [MTP TS 57]. Note: Neltje Doubleday’s pseudonym. She was a writer of nature books, three of which are in Gribben, p. 200; Lyon adds (1865-1918) for Neltje. Editorial emphasis.

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “C.C. progressing finely” [MTP TS 18].

May 14 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Evening now, and the voices of Jean and Italian Teresa come to me as Jean is having her usual confab with Teresa. How their voices rise and fall in the sweet Italian cadences. The summer, the months and weeks and days and hours must count for many things done when they are ended. I mustn’t write down what I want to do for then they won’t be done. Only everyday I must think toward their completion [MTP TS 57].

Louise Brownell Saunders (Susy Clemens’ old heart throb) wrote from Clinton, NY to ask a favor of Sam for her invalid friend, Miss Annie Wood of Utica. Wood was collecting books autographed by authors [MTP].

May 15 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “I’m anxious about the Aeolion. It doesn’t come and there is no word from it. Every day Mr. Clemens sends telegrams telling of C.C.’s condition. Every day it has improved” [MTP TS 57]. Note: the referred to telegrams are not extant, but when Lyon gives specifics of Clara’s condition it is clear she has rec’d word from Clemens.

The New York Times, p. 9, “Merciful Mark Twain Writes to Maimed Girl” article printed Sam’s Feb. 15 letter to Miss Madeline Sinsheimer, invalid as a result of a 1903 Clifton grade crossing accident. “Miss Sinsheimer will never fully recover from the effects of her injuries, and was removed Thursday from her home...to the Orthopedic Hospital in Philadelphia.” Note: the MTP/O seems to prefer the spelling “Madeleine.”

May 16 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote an introductory letter for his nephew Samuel Moffett to Bellamy Storer, American ambassador to Vienna, Austria.

I beg that you will allow me the privilege of introducing to your favor my nephew S. E. Moffett, one of the editors of “Collier’s Weekly” who is sent to Europe to gather some facts from governmental sources, & if you can send him to the officials he needs to see, I shall be very grateful. I vouch for his honorable character, his discretion & his honesty. He will do your kindness no discredit.

With great respect I am ... [MTP].

In Dublin, N.H., Isabel Lyon wrote in her journal:

Clouds and Mist and Rain. Every evening Jean reads aloud to me. Now it is a book by Madame Laschowska, a Viennese friend of the Clemenses, on Transylvania—and now it will be a little French History—and now it is Heine—Dear Child that she is—Such a complex nature and yet so entirely simple—Consistent—yet so inconsistent. There is a power in that young nature [MTP TS 58]. Note: Heinrich Heine (1797-1856); see Gribben p. 305. Emily Laszowska-Gerard (1849-1905) inscribed a copy of The Land Beyond the Forest: Facts, Figures, and Fancies from Transylvania (1888) on 19 Dec. 1897. The spelling of Eastern European names is often varied. Also seen as Emily Gerard, Mrs de Laszowska, Emily Laszowska, or Emily de Laszowska Gerard.

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Mr. Clemens sees Miss Clemens [Clara] everyday” [MTP TS 18-19].

Dr. Frederick Gaertner wrote from Pittsburg, Pa. to Sam,

Hoping you can remember me from Vienna, Wien, & Italy. The enclosed letter self explanatory. I don't intend to answer it. I am an editor of several scientific & surgical journals & could do you a lot of good as my testimonial knowing you personally, etc. would be worth a great deal to read all over the World [MTP]. Note: The enclosed letter was May 16 from Harper's to Gaertner, declining his offer of a testimonial of Mark Twain in exchange for a discount from the published price of his works.

Harold Milbank wrote from Vanderbilt Hall, Yale University inquiring after the author of the poem, "Jim Bludsol" which appeared last spring in the NY Times [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the letter "Mr. John Hay wrote it."

John L. RoBards, Sam's old friend from Hannibal, Mo., wrote and enclosed a leaflet about lecturing (not in file). "Neither money nor endorsement is herein solicited, but an earnest friendly consideration of each excerpt..." If Sam didn't care to comment that would be fine with RoBards [MTP]. Note: no reply from Clemens.

Philip Sawyer of York & Sawyer Architects, NYC wrote to Sam, sending a bill for $250 he considered late, for "professional services rendered," in regard to 21 Fifth Ave [MTP]. Note: on May 23, Sawyer wrote he had rec'd Miss Lyon's note and check dated May 20.

May 17 Wednesday – With Clara Clemens out of danger from her appendectomy, Sam left N.Y.C. and traveled to Boston, Mass., where he took rooms at the Hotel Touraine. There he wrote on hotel stationery to Thomas Bailey Aldrich and Lilian W. Aldrich.

I came from New York, arriving in time to dine with you, but I couldn't raise you on the telephone, so I am turning in, disappointed. You are out dissipating, I suppose.

I am leaving early in the morning for Dublin, N. H., for the summer. Jean is already there keeping house these 2 weeks & more. I was to follow her the 2^d of May, but Clara caught an appendicitis in her rest-cure in New York & I was detained. The operation (8 days ago) was successful & she is flourishing, now. Great love to you both ... [MTP].

In Dublin, N.H. Isabel Lyon's journal: "Rain and Clouds and Mist to shut out the peaceful view. Only the shrouded evergreens are mysteriously mistily pictured against the fog, but oh the peace of it. It comes from Heaven or from the depths of our hearts, but perhaps they are the same" [MTP TS 58].

Robert Underwood Johnson for the National Institute of Arts wrote to Sam, notifying him of ten more gentlemen elected to the Academy of Arts and Letters. These were: Winslow Homer, Carl Schurz, Alfred Thayer Mahan, Joel Chandler Harris, William James, Daniel Chester French, John Burroughs, James Ford Rhodes, Edwin Austin Abbey, and Horatio William Parker. The typed notice bore Johnson's signature and "(Confidential)" at the top [MTP].

May 18 Thursday – Sam left Boston early in the morning and traveled 64 miles to Dublin, N.H., where Katy Leary, Patrick McAleer, daughter Jean and Isabel Lyon were waiting to spend the summer with him [May 17 to Aldriches].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today Mr. Clemens arrived.

Today the sun burst through the clouds just after the telegram came saying that he would arrive in Harrisville at 11:35.

Today the Aeolion came. Seven New England men unpacked it—such nice soft speeched gentle New England men. Something sweet about them. I like them. It was dear to see Mr. Clemens arrive today with a furtive, searching glance at things and people as he drove up to the house [MTP TS 57].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Today Mr. Clemens arrived. Jean & Patrick rode over to Harrisville to meet him. The orchestrelle came too" [MTP TS 19].

A form letter was sent from the Simplified Spelling group, Brander Matthews (Chairman) asking support for twelve simplifications suggested by Andrew Carnegie at their N.Y. conference on May 3, 1905. Though not listed in the MTP's catalog, Sam surely received this letter. The word changes proposed: program, catalog, decalog, prolog, demagog, pedagog, tho, altho, thoro, thorofare, thru, thruout. See Brander Matthews letter of May 21.

May 19 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to the May 2 from Lady Margaret Jenkins in England.

Dear Madam: / Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him explaining that he is not feeling well enough to do so himself, owing to the results of his great anxiety caused by the recent critical illness of his eldest daughter.

Mr. Clemens is not going to England this year; but he wishes me to thank you very much for your kind letter, and to convey to you his sincere regards [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Chiefs can read everybody—but who can rightly read chiefs. ... Elsewhere I've said something of the treat Mr. Clemens gave us in commenting upon the dinner given to Whitelaw Reid and then commenting upon Reid. Reid wouldn't be quite so self-satisfied if he knew that a man like Mark Twain had been stripping him and his actions bare, with caustic slash and precision [MTP TS 59]. Note: the Lotos Club gave Reid a dinner the night before, May 18; Sam did not go but left for Boston early on May 18.

Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote to Sam.

It was like my luck to move into the country just in time to miss having you come and spend the night with me at 59 Mt. Vernon street. I haven't recently wanted anything more than to have a smoke and a night-long talk with you. I am glad that I did not hear of Clara's trouble until it was over. What takes you—excepting the train—to Dublin? I hear good accounts of the place, but why didn't it manage to call itself by some good old Anglo-Saxon name, like Coss Cobb or Ponkapog? [MTP]. Note: Aldrich wrote of his plans for the summer on a steam yacht with his son Talbot and wished Dublin was a port. He asked after Howells, did he enjoy England?

Sheldon S. Cline, manager of The Washington News Assoc. wrote to Sam. "Will you consider a proposition to write a series of letters from Washington this winter, for publication in the leading newspapers of the country, dealing humorously with public men and measures?" [MTP].

A.I. Hall wrote from Rochester, N.H. to Sam, promoting a country residence for sale with 200 acres of "fine farm land" there for $125,000 [MTP].

Abbott Handerson Thayer wrote to Sam.

"I trust what Emma answered to Miss Jean satisfied you about her going alone with that terrible dog! / Dublin has as yet no first record of any highway rudeness to ladies. But we certainly have a plenty of foreign layovers about and a poor enough kind of [illegible word] trash..." [MTP]. Note: Jean's dog, Prosper le Gai, a Saint Bernard, is pictured in MTOW p. 212.

May 20 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara, still in N.Y.C. recovering from an appendectomy.

Clarchen dear, to get a letter from you was a happy surprise; I was not expecting so dear & rich a benefaction.

I recognize with the deepest satisfaction that you are safe in the spiritual shelter & refuge which all women & most men need, & I hope I shall be spared the crime of violating its sanctities & impairing its solaces & comforts as I did in your mother's case—almost the only crime of my life which causes me bitterness now. (I must not dwell upon this subject.)

There is a letter from the lovely countess. There is only one. She opens the gates of her heart & lets her affection & her sympathies come flooding out in her same old quaint & charming & eloquent German English. I must not venture to quote the most moving things, but there are two or three messages that you are entitled to hear:

“Miss [Ethel] Newcomb told me that my sweet beloved Clara is ill & that she is not staying with you! It really is too dreadful! x x x Please, dear Mr. Clemens, be so very, very kind as to let me have soon some news about yourself & about your daughters, especially about my beloved Clara. I long with all my soul to have news from you. If it is possible, please tell Clara that I love her as I ever did before, & that mein ganzes, ganzes Herz voll Theilnahme bei ihr ist! x x x God bless you, dear, dear Mr. Clemens and believe me x x x

I shall write her to-day.

This house & this view—well, dear, I am as bewitched with them as Jean is.

And Patrick! [McAleer] He is a vision out of a time when your mother was a girl & I a lad! And what a pleasure he is to my eye, & how the view of him fits in with the rest of the scenery! The same, same Patrick—trim, shapely, alert, competent for all things, taking two steps to any other man's one, not a gray hair nor any other sign of age about him, & his voice that same old pleasant sound! He served us twenty-two years & is a youth yet.

Dr. Quintard's idea is an excellent one, & we have discussed it pretty thoroughly & mapped out the scheme cleverly & intelligently. It is to be a club, & yet not a club. It will gather together at intervals, men of capacity, known or unknown, & of any trade—artist, doctor, blacksmith, author, scientist, merchant—and we shall feed economically & unostentatiously, & talk & smoke, & get acquainted & intimate. We shall carry out this scheme. It is better & more flexible & more catholic than the one I proposed to Howells before we left for Italy. For particulars see Quintard.

You are to sit up Saturday—that is, to-day. That is good news. Yes, you will miss Miss Gordon when you go away—I can understand that. She has ministered to your heart; it is not given to many to do that for us. To none, almost, beyond the frontiers of the family hearthstone. (And sometimes not even within those frontiers.) I wish she were going to Norfolk.

Jean will be very glad indeed to write you—she has been wanting to, these many ages.

Good-bye, dear, we are all loving you & thinking about you in this house—including him whom Jean calls

Note: Sam wrote on the envelope: “This can be read first by your physician there being no secrets in it.” Miss Ethel Newcomb (1877-1959), pupil and assistant (1904-1908) of Theodor Leschetizky. Patrick McAleer, the family's coachman in Hartford for two decades, had been hired in March to be groom for Jean's horses.

Lystra writes of McAleer:

A skilled rider and her [Jean's] constant companion on horseback, Patrick had one drawback—he spit constantly. “It is too unpleasant to put up with,” Jean confessed to her diary, “& yet he is such a dear that I hate to say anything which could hurt his feelings.” Early that summer Patrick helped her buy a horse, a Kentucky bay she named Scott—“sweet and friendly in the stable, so obedient & willing on the road & such a beauty” [Lystra 47].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Yesterday when the sunset was glorious and my love of it made me say a word about its beauty, Mr. Clemens said “Yes that sore spot was fine” (pointing to an angry streak) “There was a lot of inflammation up there.” He watched Patrick (aged 60) stepping briskly toward the stable and said, “If Patrick were going to his own funeral, he'd step lively—” [MTP TS 59].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: “An expert came up from Worcester to set up the orchestrelle” [MTP TS 19].

Sam also wrote to Countess Misa Wydenbruck-Esterházy, letter not extant but referred to in the above to Clara. The Countess was the Clemens family's cicerone in Viennese society and their closest friend outside musical and literary circles. See Nov. 29, 1897 entry.

Sam also wrote to Hamlin Garland.

"The book has come, & I thank you & am glad. For I can now start over again. I know the first chapters—by grace of the [?]Weekly—then the interruptions came, & broke up the march. I thank you again for remembering me" [MTP]. Note: See June 30 to Garland: The Tyranny of the Dark (1905) [Gribben 252].

Starrett gives this as the day Sam began "Three Thousand Years Among the Microbes," which would be 40,000 words and unpublished in his lifetime. It first appeared in Which Was the Dream, etc. Ed. Tuckey (1967). Starrett writes that Sam undertook the story "as a kind of therapeutic distraction from the sorrow and loneliness that followed the death of his wife in Florence, Italy, the previous spring. The long but unfinished fantasy, based on an idea for a satire Twain had been pondering for more than twenty years.... [was] admired by Paine as superb Swiftian satire" [MT Encyc. 735-6].

May 21 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens spends too much time over his work. Hours & hours & hours he sits writing with a wonderful light in his eyes. The flush of a girl in his cheeks and oh the lustre of his hair. It is too terribly perishably beautiful. It is no wonder that his tread is light as a spirit's, for the great power of his brain seems to draw him up and to give him his delicacy of step [MTP TS 59].

Hubert Howe Bancroft (1832-1918), historian and ethnologist, (Bancroft Library at UC Berkeley was named in his honor) wrote from San Francisco to Sam, having seen his name in connection with the Fourth of July celebration at Elko, Nevada. If Sam planned to be in attendance there would it be possible for him to come to S.F. as his guest at St. Dunstan's? He told of the place and mentioned that Henry James had spent a week with him [MTP].

Brander Matthews wrote from NY to Sam on the back of a flyer dated May 18, 1905 in the cause of Carnegie's Simplified Spelling. Matthews was named at the top as chairman of the group. Matthews related sickness and death in his family with the recent burial of his sister. "...and if I haven't seen you this winter, I've the same feeling for you. / The letter on the other side explains itself. Howells and Garland have adhered. Will you take my pledge I enclose?" [MTP].

St. Clair McKelway wrote from Brooklyn Heights to Sam. He hadn't answered Sam's letter due to being under a doctor's care in Boston, and only returned the night before.

"I found great comfort in your letter and heartily agree with its remarks about railway officials to whose criminal ignorance and recklessness so-called accidents are due. I have the worst shake up and jar and the least external injury of any one of the passengers in the car. Four Negro wailers were killed." He learned of Clara's operation and hoped she recovered fully [MTP].

May 22 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

We're up in the hills now. All of us but Santissima. A little note this morning from Miss Gordon says that she [Clara Clemens] is improving wonderfully after her operation.

Fighting a headache, I am too dull to write what was in my mind.

This evening after dinner Mr. Clemens read the ms. he worked on all day. A cholera microbe's own story of microbe life in a human being. It is a marvellous imaginative scientific little story. With his acute eye that little microbe sees undreamed of wonders and kingdoms in the body of the dirty Russian Tramp that he inhabits. I asked Mr. Clemens how long he'd been turning those marvellous imaginings over in his mind, and he said that the idea had been there for many years—he tried to work it up from a drop of water and a scientist with a powerful microscope; but it wasn't right. He had to become the microbe, and see and think and act and appreciate as a microbe. He truly said to Jean that it isn't a story for babes. But it will delight physicians and bacteriologists. Oh he is such a marvel, such a marvel [MTP TS 59-60].

William Evarts Benjamin wrote to Sam, enclosing another $250 check released by the Title, Guarantee & Trust Co. relating to the quitclaim deed on the Tarrytown property. The trolley co. was to have removed the offending tracks by May 1 [MTP].

Miss Edith Hulbert wrote from NYC to Sam, requesting an interview for the purpose of arranging a play for his JA. She was writing at the request of Mrs. Dunlap Hopkins [MTP].

C. Brereton Sharpe wrote to Sam for the Plasmon Syndicate, Ltd., London, sending the latest report issued by the Company as Ashcroft had requested. Dividends were to be reinvested in the operation [MTP].

Roy W. Van Hoesen wrote on The Office letterhead (Franklinville, N.Y.) to Sam. "We have a half-tone engraving of a little hut in which it is reputed you wrote 'Roughing It,' at Aurora, Nevada. / Should you favor us with a little comment in reference to it I am sure it would be appreciated by the readers..." [MTP]. Note: the magazine advertised, "Published to the advantage of progressive office men." Also seen as Van Haesen.

May 23 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Brander Matthews. "You have my deepest sympathy. These are black days. There are now but 13 days between me & the anniversary of anniversaries" [MTP]. Note: Matthews' loss was not determined.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

We've been shifting. Sunday we did most of it. Mr. Clemens went up to our quarters and liking them so much better than his own he has taken Jean's room for his study and my room for his bedroom, while Jean and I have come down to the lower bed rooms. These rooms are not plastered and the little searching drafts troubled Mr. Clemens. Then up stairs he had a wonderfuller view. I have the room I wanted, close to the pines, the singing, sighing pines. Tonight Mr. Clemens did not read any. Jean and Patrick rode around Monadnock and were out very late. Jean is beginning to ride astride [MTP TS 60].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens revised his MS. & worked until 6:30" [MTP TS 19].

Dear Mr. Fulton— / I remember, as if it were yesterday, that when I disembarked from the overland stage in front of the Ormsby in Carson City in August, 1861, I was not expecting to be asked to come again. I was tired, discouraged, white with alkali dust, & did not know anybody; & if you had said, "Cheer up, desolate stranger, don't be down-hearted—pass on, & come again in 1905," you cannot think how grateful I would have been & how gladly I would have closed the contract. Although I was not expecting to be invited, I was watching out for it, & was hurt & disappointed when you started to ask me & changed it to "How soon—are you going away?" for I was an orphan at that time, & had been one so many years that I was getting sensitive about it.

But you have made it all right, now, & the wound is closed. And so I thank you sincerely for the invitation; & with you, all Reno, & if I were a few years younger I would accept it, & promptly. I would go. I would let somebody else do the oration, but as for me, I would talk—just talk. I would renew my youth; & talk—& talk—& talk—& have the time of my life! I would march the unforgotten & unforgettable antiques by, & name their names, & give them reverent Hail-&-farewell as they passed: Goodman, McCarthy, Sillis, Curry, Baldwin, Winters, Howard, Nye, Stewart, Neely Johnson, Hal Clayton, Jones, North, Rost, &—& my brother, upon whom be peace!—& then the desperadoes, who made life a joy & the "slaughter-house" a precious possession: Sam Brown, Farmer Pete, Bill Mayfield Six-fingered-Jake, Jack Williams, & the rest of the crimson discipleship—& so on & so on. Believe me, I would start a resurrection it would do you more good to look at than the next one will, if you go on the way you are doing now.

Those were the days!—Those old ones. They will come no more. Youth will come no more. They were full to the brim with the wine of life; there have been no others like them. It chokes me up to think of them. Would you like me to come out there & cry? It would not beseem my white head.

Good-bye. I drink to you all. Have a good time—& take an old man's blessing [MTP]. Note: many of those mentioned from Sam's Nevada days may be identified in Vol. 1, MTL 1, Mack or others.

Isabel Lyon's journal: That microbe story grows and grows in depth and wonder. It has grown into the thought that perhaps we too are microbes chasing around in a globule that is only a molecule of the universe. Every morning I play to Mr. Clemens until he is ready to go to work. It gives him his inspiration for the day—takes the fog out of his brain and then he goes up to his "dissipation". Then we have music again, and after dinner when he has read his ms., then we play Hearts [MTP TS 60].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens worked all day without interruption, and read the continuation of the Microbe autobiography after dinner. It is tremendous" [MTP TS 19].

Charles Henry Webb (1834-1905) died in N.Y.C. Webb was Sam's first publisher (The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County and Other Sketches), founded The Californian in 1864, and wrote under the pen name "John Paul." See Vol. I entries. The New York Times, May 25, p. 9 reviewed Webb's publications and accomplishments.

May 25 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal: The microbe has fixed it—we won't ever die, but live forever and ever as disintegrated oxygen and hydrogen and gases and acids and things. It's quite dreadful and very fascinating. The mystery and workings of that brain. I'm reading away back in his first book and just loving that "Innocents Abroad", with its choice way of looking at places and things and people and events centuries old. Today the music was very beautiful. Like a sweet spirit [MTP TS 60].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "The wonderful microbe MS. grows. Mr. Clemens read more of it tonight" [MTP TS 19].

H. Roswell Bates wrote on Spring Street Presbyterian Church letterhead to Sam, enclosed in Ebenezer Hayes' note below. Bates had met Sam at tea at William E. Dodge's house in Riverdale and since had wished Sam might speak "before one of our clubs here," then mentioned the Philia Club of "ambitious young men" which met every Thursday at 8 p.m.[MTP].

Ebenezer Hayes for the Philia Club wrote to Sam that he'd been instructed to write and invite Sam to speak to the Club of "young men for intellectual and social benefit." He enclosed the above note from H. Roswell Bates [MTP].

May 26 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon Mr. Thayer called, after he left Mr. Clemens said nice things about him, and then said he had seen him a quarter of a century ago when he went up to Hartford to make a black and white sketch of Mr. Clemens for the Century. Mr. Clemens was fighting the beginning of a cold so he took his whiskey bottle, and he said that in an hour he was very happily and comfortably drunk, but the black and white sketch wasn't an entire success.

Tonight Mr. Clemens read more of the microbe story. What an imagination! [MTP TS 61]. Note: see Feb. 24, 1882 for Thayer's sketch which was to go with an article in the Century by William Dean Howells.

Harper & Brothers replied to Sam's request, handed to them by Major Leigh, for books "in popular language on microbes, bacilli, etc., one that brings all science up to date and that can be understood by ordinary people." They referred him to William Wood & Co., NYC medical book publishers, or Lea Brothers, Phila. [MTP].

May 27 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to Hubert H. Bancroft of San Francisco, who had written on May 21 inviting Sam to visit.

I thank you sincerely for the tempting hospitalities which you offer me, but I have to deny myself, for my wandering days are over, & it is my desire & purpose to sit by the fire the rest of my remnant of life & indulge myself with the pleasure & repose of work—work uninterrupted and unmarred by duties or excursions.

A man who like me is going to strike 70 on the 30th, of next November has no business to be flitting around the way Howells does—that shameless old fictitious butterfly. (But if he comes, don't tell him I said it, for it would hurt him & I wouldn't brush a flake of powder from his wing for anything. I only say it in envy of his indestructable youth, anyway. Howells will be 88 in October.) [MTP]. Note: boxed in the left corner of the letter: "In ans. to an invitation from Mr. H.H. Bancroft to visit him in San Francisco. Mr. Henry James had just been there for a week." Howells was born in 1837, two years after Sam.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. Clemens doesn't like June bugs. When one was butting and banging around the card table tonight he wanted "to butter and swallow it" [MTP TS 61].

Dr. John Allen Wyeth, NYC wrote to Sam. "In writing a sketch which deals in a measure with my native section, Northern Alabama, in speaking of the Hon. Jeremiah Clemens, am I correct in referring to him as your uncle?" [MTP]. Note: Someone, likely Miss Lyon, wrote on the note, "Cousin of Mr. Clemens's father." There were several Jeremiah Clemenses, including Jeremiah Clemens (1732-1811) Sam's great grandfather. None found could be traced to Ala.

The New York Times, p. BR 347 ran a squib announcing Harpers would reissue Mark Twain's Sketches, New and Old in the middle of June.

May 28 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: All day Mr. Clemens has been working too hard revising his microbe manuscript. This afternoon he was limp—exhausted—and tonight he went early to bed. Jean read aloud to me in Madame Laschovska's book on Transylvania and I did not play the Beethoven today that I had planned to. / Mollie Ingalls writes many things among them that Walter Griffin has gone to Holland [MTP TS 61]. Emily Laszowska-Gerard. See May 16 entry.

Manning & Brown Co., NYC, manufacturers of "The Celebrated Red Cross Cigars," wrote to Sam. Planning to make a cigar by the name of "Mark Twain," the company discovered that another firm in Milwaukee was already making one by that name and claimed the exclusive right to do so. Did Sam have any control over the issue? [MTP].

May 29 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: There is tremendous news from the Japanese Russian War. Togo has beaten Rojesvesky, and taken ships and many prisoners, among them poor Rojesvesky—yes "poor"—for his joy is gone—he has failed utterly. 7,000 Russians gone. Oh, the terror of it, a rough sea and tremendous shelling, and sinking vessels. Oh, terrible beyond words [MTP TS 61].

Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "Mr. Clemens has been working too hard, he is tired" [MTP: TS 20].

Charles C. Bombaugh, M.D. wrote from Baltimore to Sam. The Lippincott Co. was to publish a former compilation of his, "Gleanings for the Curious," and he requested permission to include Sam's "delightful after-dinner joke at the Weather Bureau" [MTP].

Renee Inbraly wrote from Brunn, Austria to Sam. Only the small envelope survives [MTP]. Note: MTP notes "name is doubtful."

John Larkin, attorney, wrote to Sam that he'd phoned and written to James A. Renwick trying to make an appointment about the heating of 21 Fifth Ave. and would write again this day. He suggested holding up the check for next month's rent to "get him to notice" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the top of the letter, "The check was withheld / May 30. SLC"; this having to do with repairs to the heating system at 21 Fifth.

May 30 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Ah, it was splendid to see Mr. Clemens stand with his back to the open fire, and hear him sum up the way in which the Almighty has been personally conducting this Russian campaign against the Japanese. As many as 8 terrible defeats, but the Russian Church say that it is ordained of God and they rushed into battle headed by the cross. Yes, you find yourself thinking, thinking—after Mr. Clemens gets through a talk of that kind [MTP TS 61].

“Mr. Clemens received a letter from Mr. Larkin suggesting that the Renwick check for the June rent be withheld—that might be a way of bringing Mr. Renwick around to attending to the furnace. The check was stopped” [MTP TS 20].

Hamilton Wright Mabie for the National Institute of Arts sent Sam a form stating his dues for $5 were “now payable” [MTP].

May 31 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to John Larkin.

Mr. Clemens directs me to say that he has stopped the check that is due Mr. Renwick on June 1st, as you suggest in your letter of May 29th

In his note of August 17th Mr. Renwick speaks of putting the house in repair; and as he did not fulfil his promise, Mr Clemens directs me to ask if it would not be well to declare war by suing for damages incurred by the severe bronchitis that Mr. Clemens had in the last winter, and by his being obliged to stay in his bed for many weeks owing to that illness.

In a note of Dec. 7th Mr. Renwick writes—“The work delayed your occupation of the house, but you must remember you were kind enough to tell me to take my time & your reward, if any, has been in having the house thoroughly done—I hope & believe. My only wish now is that you will enjoy residing there and will do so for many years to come with health & happiness to you & your family.”

Mr. Clemens directs me to say that he must have no heating in the house less perfect than Mr. John Howells’s best system, for he is expecting to have Miss Clemens at home during the coming winter, and that there is no room heated so that it would be safe for her to occupy it.

If testimony is needed Mr. Clemens can bring into court the testimony of a great surgeon—Dr. Hartley, a great physician—Dr. Quintard, another physician, Miss Gordon, and a trained nurse, that it would be entirely unsafe to take Miss Clemens into the house.

Mr. Clemens directs me to suggest suit could be brought for failure to keep this contract, if that would be better than to sue for damages [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: In their reports the Russians have lied so dreadfully, so baldly, so stupidly, that commenting upon it Mr. Clemens said it was “a pity, for it brings the art into disrepute”—ah, he is so interesting and so full of the power to make you long to do and be things just to satisfy his mighty intellect. The music is wonderful. The Largo is like a caress [MTP TS 62].

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “This evening Mr. Clemens read more of the wonderful microbe satire. Tonight it was the scientific investigation of the Fossil Flea” [MTP TS 20].

June – Century Magazine published Willis Gibson’s article, “Arkansas Fashion,” p. 276-92. Tenney: “A work of fiction which pleased MT with its many favorable references to him. The hero enjoys reading HF and has a cat named Tom Sawyer. For details see Gribben (1980), I, 257” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Fourth Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1980 p. 174].

Sam wrote an essay, “As Concerns Interpreting the Deity,” which was not published in his lifetime. It was later collected in What Is Man? And Other Essays (1917) [Camfield’s Bibliog.]. Gribbens notes: “Mark Twain repeatedly quoted from Lives of the Twelve Caesars [by Suetonius]” in this essay.

June ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to an unidentified man.

Thank Mr. Ashcroft— / Mr. Clemens says Oh please dont get the impression that C. C. knew that I was speaking of him in this matter. C. C. being rich & lazy & a very large gun, would not thank me for interesting myself in his affairs if he knew it—& possibly it might not even win his grace to know that I wasn't thinking of his interests at all but only of the public's & my own. We are very sorry to hear that Mrs. H is ill—and I am sorry for Conish, which must lose the family's society for the summer. We are well here, & comfortable & satisfied. Clara is in Norfolk Ct. & comf. & satisfied—her natural sleep is restored to her after being absent & mislaid for more than a year. She drives about with the horse she got from Italy. She has her piano & is allowed to work a little, & her voice is stronger than it was before she was stricken down. With love to you both [MTP].

June 1 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to William Evarts Benjamin.

I am very glad indeed that the Gardiner spirit is laid to rest at last; & largely because you can get a rest yourself, now; you deserve it, for you have heroically earned it, & may you get it in full measure & enjoy it. Miss Lyon brought your letter to me yesterday afternoon, & was so bursting with laughter that she couldn't control her jaws long enough to get out an explanation. I joined in, when I struck your next-to-last sentence.

I owe you many many thanks for pulling me out of the Tarrytown hole—I wish I may get out of my Fifth avenue tangle half as successfully.

We are prodigiously enjoying this place! I have written a third of a book here in 10 or 12 days.

With my kindest regards to you all, I am [MTP]. Note: Hill notes that Charles A. Gardiner, who had exercised his option to purchase the Tarrytown house “complained about some adjacent trolley tracks, and Clemens was required to put up $1,500 with a title company to clear the obstruction and to guarantee several quit claims” [106].

Sam also began a letter to Joe Twichell that he finished on June 2.

Dear Old Joe: / Certainly, give Osborn a letter. It will compromise me, but that is nothing, I don't write any other kind except to strangers. I had a long talk with Wood when I was in Portland in '95. He was a lawyer for a railroad—salary, $35,000 a year. He has written some poetry, and it is good and on a high plane.

I have read a little of his article which you sent. If I have not misunderstood him, he stands for morals without any qualifying adjective in front of the word. Just morals, I like it. It makes me cuss to see people talking about “public” morals and “private” morals and “legal” ones. There aren't any. There's merely just morals.

The legalizing of an immorality doesn't purify it, it only whitewashes it. I could mention a few existing samples—but never mind. Joe, I don't know how I would vote on the Rockefeller donation as a congregational minister but speaking for my own unsanctified self I would say like this, if it is tainted money take it, by all means and ship it to China—no other kind can legitimately be used in the missionary business there, when the Aments are sent to dance to the Golden Rule and bully better man into adopting a civilization which is inferior to our own. We do enjoy having Patrick with us again—the best man that ever wore clothes. And our old Katy is his match. Livy raised that pair.

Good bye and love to you all. / Mark.

Togo forever! I wish somebody would assassinate the Russian Family. So does every sane person in the world—but who has the grit to say so? Nobody. Try for Clara when you get to Norfolk. Jean and I are to see her before—before—well, we haven't any idea when, yet [MTP]. Note: Sam's old friend from West Point days, now an attorney and poet in Portland, Ore. was Charles Erskine Scott Wood. Gribben misidentifies this Wood as unidentified [782].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Richard Watson Gilder.

Mr. Clemens wishes me to ask you if you will be good enough to send him the address of the author of the delightful story “Arkansas Fashion,” if you have it.

Mr. Clemens is well, and very busy these days; and Jean is very well and enjoying this beautiful wild country.

Mr. Clemens wishes me to convey to you and to Mrs. Gilder his very warm regards [MTP].

Note: Willis Gibson wrote the story that ran in the June 1905 Century Magazine. Gribben writes: “Clemens’ pleasure in the short story is easily explained: not only does it employ regional dialects and feature a hero from the state of Arkansas, familiar to Clemens from his years as a river pilot, but Gibson repeatedly alludes to the works of Mark Twain in the most flattering manner possible” [257].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: All day Mr. Clemens has been in his bed for this morning at 5 he slipped downstairs to get his ms. My instinct had been to take it up last evening, but I shut off the impulse and so he became chilled and fearing that he had taken cold Jean bade him stay in his bed—but at 5:20 he started to join Mr. Thayer on the path, and together they walked a bit and came back to the house to sit on the porch. There was no reading tonight for all day Mr. Clemens revised. It is a pity for us that as it drops from his pen it isn’t put right into print for there is so much of it that you want to dwell on and reread [MTP TS 62].

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Wrote for some little books on Microbes” [MTP TS 20].

Harper & Brothers wrote to Lyon c/o Sam that Baker & Taylor Co. had answered their request for a book on microbes with Story of Germ Life, by H.W. Conn, and The Story of Bacteria, by Prudden. Both were elementary books on the subject, and they assumed these would meet Sam’s needs [MTP].

Elmer B. Harris wrote from the Hotel Brevoort, NYC to Sam, sending a play The Love of Life, which had been given to him in Germany. “The translator says that you once admired it.” Lyon wrote for him to see Elisabeth Marbury, dramatic agent. She added had he phoned the Harpers instead of mailing the package, he would have learned first that her house adjoined the hotel and second “that she was far away from the city for the summer” [MTP].

June 1 after – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Elmer B. Harris.

Dear Sir: / It was very kind & thoughtful. I beg to recommend Miss Marbury, dramatic agent, Paris, & New York (Empire Theatre). / Very Truly Yours. / per / L.

If you had telephoned the Harpers instead of sending your pkg by mail to them to them you would have learned first that my house adjoins your hotel, & 2nd that I am far away from the city for the summer [MTP].

Note: the Brevoort Hotel adjoined Sam’s house at 21 Fifth Ave.

P.S. / June 2/05

Joe, although you are a congregational minister, you know there are proprieties that must be observed. You know quite well that if the chair of Applied Chastity at Vassar should accept a donation from a reputed whore house, just that notorious repute, unconfirmed by any court, would settle it. Don’t you know that? Withdraw your mind from the wordy confusion and hair splitting “reasonings” of the day, and rest it and tranquillize it with contemplation of a simple and easy object-lesson, like this.

Let us imagine that the American Board is the trustee of Vassar, and responsible: that Granny Judson occupies the chair of Applied Chastity, a chair supported wholly by the donations of kindly people who, having been brought to practice a little chastity now and then and enjoy it, desire to extend its sweet restraints to the gentle Vasserlings sitting in innocent darkness and unaware. Now then let Granny take that money: those contributions are not public: for all Granny knows, they are pure: So far as she knows, their money is clean. Let her take it, and boom chastity with it: she is justified. But when America’s boss whore—by rumor mind you, mere universal and unchallenged rumor, and nothing more—sends a contribution wherewith to stimulate the spread of practical chastity in the college right at that point Granny must call a halt. Common propriety, elementary propriety requires it, Joe. / Mark [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Tonight Mr. Clemens read 20 pages of the microbe story” [MTP TS 62].

Elizabeth Nolde wrote from Florence, Italy to Sam. She had met him in Florence and he had advised her to publish the letters from Miss de Hail to Benjamin Constant in America first. She had found a translator but was afraid the American public would not be interested in the letters. Would Sam “give one superficial glance” and offer “words of introduction”? [MTP]. Note: Miss Lyon wrote on the letter that Sam was not allowed to write for anyone save his publisher.

E.B. Prondfit for Aeolian Co. wrote to Lyon c/o Sam with a notice that they had made a credit in their account of $8.25 [MTP].

June 3 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: These days I am carried away by Margaret Oglevie [sic Ogilvy]. Barrie will never approach that book again. Late evenings after Mr. Clemens and Jean have gone to their rooms I sit before the open fire and read in the room steeped in tobacco smoke, such good contenting smoke. You want to cry in pain over the beauty of this living [MTP TS 62]. Note: Margaret Ogilvy (1896) by Sir James M. Barrie, was a rather maudlin tribute to his mother, Margaret Ogilvy.

Inez H. Gillmore wrote from Scituate Mass. to Sam. She had just rec’d a letter from Samuel S. McClure quoting Sam about one of her first attempts at fiction, “The Story that Took” in June’s issue of McClure’s. “He did not send me the letter [Sam’s] (the pig!) and so I must forego the joy of seeing such words in our very hand-writing.” Sam had made her “very happy” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Norman Hapgood of Collier’s.

Mr. Clemens has recd a letter from Twichell in which he says that Charley Clarke [sic] of Courant is going with Taft to the Phillippines [sic]. Makes this suggestion to you that you get Mr. Clarke to do your Phillippine writing for Collier’s. It would be a pity to enter it in the Courant—that he is an abandoned & incurable administration Republican & Jingo—but no matter, he’ll sparkle & whatever he says will be worth reading [MTP: Cushman file].

Elisabeth Marbury sent a statement to Sam with a balance due him of $18.40 [MTP].

June 4 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today Jean and I drove along a lot of lovely highways and byways. Patrick’s horse is so nice to drive behind, and gives you only pleasurable emotions, doesn’t drive your heart into your throat by shying at nothing. We found lots of flowers and saw many birds too, and when we came home at 5 we found Mr. Clemens lying on the long couch, all cuddled up in his dressing gown for there wasn’t any fire in the room. Then after tea we had music. It is so good to be alive, and so alive [MTP TS 63].

June 5 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today is the anniversary of the great tragedy of this family. Sunday evening after that long day with Mother in Florence and after a sweet chat with Santissima [Clara], Mrs. Clemens’s light went out—now I can see Mr. Clemens’s face when I flew into his room and told him to go to Mrs. Clemens’s room. “Is it an alarm?” he said—but I didn’t know, they only told me to run and get him [MTP TS 63].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam, enclosing the letter from London about the Plasmon dividend being reinvested in the Company. He also quoted three paragraphs from John Simeon Bergheim, written after his brother’s death, about Plasmon operations there. Bergheim regretted the conflicts on the American side and added they were now getting Plasmon from France as well as from Germany at a “price much lower than it used to be” [MTP].

Norman Hapgood for Collier’s Weekly replied to Sam’s June 3. “There ought to be something for us in what Mr. Clark writes about the Phillipines, although we could not go into it in a series of articles. If Mr. Clark would let us see something that he thinks specially fitted for our paper we could in all probability get together.” He sent regards to Jean. Sam wrote from the word “article” above up to the right, “as a daily paper like the Courant can” [MTP].

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to advise Sam that $1,000 had been deposited in the Lincoln National Bank and also Harpers' check for $583.33. She added "I hope you keep well these days" [MTHHR 584n1].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam enclosing his check for $25 in payment of coupons of the Atlanta Gas Co. due June 1, belonging to Livy's estate; He also sent a similar note with $50 check to Clara Clemens for the same co. coupons [MTP].

Kate McGillicuddy wrote from Bradford, Pa. to Sam. She had sold many copies and sets of his books over the years, though she was not acquainted by him any closer than he was to Queen Victoria. Would he assist her in publishing a book of anecdotes of his? [MTP]. Note: on the back of page 3, IVL wrote, "Much too busy—but that is not the main reason—/ Shrink from assisting in any thing of so public a nature"

June 6 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Wrote Mr. Duneka not to trouble Mr. Howells about the book or Mark Twain letters. C.C. & J.L.C. want to collect & compile the letters" [MTP TS 20].

Trombley writes of Clemens' attempt to persuade Howells to take on his biography:

...Howells ultimately declined the biography project. In early June [June 6], after discussing the matter with his daughters, Twain had Isabel write to Duneka, asking him not to bother Howells about editing his letters as now Clara and Jean had expressed interest in the project (even though in January he had suggested that Isabel should edit them). Two weeks later, he wrote Clara at her Norfolk, Connecticut, sanitarium saying he had appointed "you and Jean to arrange and publish my 'Letters' some day—I don't want it done by any outsider. Miss Lyon can do the work, and do it well...and take a tenth of the royalty resulting." Just three months later Twain changed his mind again, telling Isabel that Clara would be the principal editor and she could assist in the project. Jean was out. Visions of royalties danced in Isabel's head...[MTOW 59]. Note: we cannot know for sure what danced in the head of Miss Lyon, but such assumptions may make for good book selling.

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to apologize to Sam for "an oversight of one of our staff," who was to send Sam's Congo article to Dr. Parke. They could not find an address for Parke, but only the Liverpool address of The Congo Newspaper; but there was no Parke there. This matter had not been reported to Clemens, so Duneka apologized, then added he hoped Sam liked his country place [MTP]. Note: Dr. Robert E. Park, not Parke.

Sam answered Duneka's of this day:

Don't trouble Howells about the matter of preparing a book of Mark Twain letters. My daughters want to undertake it. This pleases me more than I can tell. It would have been their mother's work; they recognize that it is theirs now for her sake.

Shall be more than glad to have those little microbe books. The book I am writing has to have a large display of scientific learning in it in order to compel the gratitude of common schools and the public, and the burden of manufacturing it is beginning to tell on me. Help from other competent sources will be a relief to me, and I shall get it out of those little books. / Sincerely yours, ...[MTP: Cushman file].

John R. Gow for the Congo Reform Assoc., Tremont Temple, wrote to Sam, quoting an Apr. 25 letter from Edmund Dene Morel of the English Congo Reform Assoc. to Dr. Park: "Mr. Clemens tells me that he has sent on to the American Congo Reform Association an article of about 10000 words entitled "King Leopold's Soliloquy", for you to use as you see fit." Gow had not rec'd the article, and would appreciate having use of it [MTP]. Note: Miss Lyon answered for Sam on June 9.

John Larkin wrote to Sam enclosing a deed from Sam to Sandford Wilson for the Texas property that Sam needed to sign and swear before a notary, then return [MTP]. Note: Archer Co. Texas land of Livy's.

June 7 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to J. Henry Harper: “Please hand to bearer & charge to me, paper copy of your ‘Rudiments of Manners,’ also paper copy of your ‘How to Conceal Mental Vacancy & Seem Intelligent’” [MTP]. Note: Hill points out this sarcasm as one of Sam’s “savage moods” and “disbelief in the Harper integrity” [112].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today came a letter to me from Santissima [Clara]. A letter clamouring for news and talking of the concert tours she wants to make next winter. A great faith has come to Santissima. She had to reach out to something in her grief—a woman has to. She can comfort others perhaps, but she cannot comfort herself and she has to reach out for the help that is in the eternal. Perhaps a man doesn’t need it—I don’t know—he can shield and comfort and protect a woman, he’s shelter and comforter and protector by his right and instinct—the woman who hasn’t that human protector has got to turn to the spiritual one—and Santissima turned. She has such a pure beautiful flame burning out of her soul, and so much soul and intellect. I am allowed now to write to her.

This afternoon at five o’clock as I sat in front of the fire with a big book, Mr. Thayer arrived and I flew to let him in through the big window and then when he had commented quasi apologetically, and utterly lovingly upon his queer Canadian boots—I went to tell Mr. Clemens that he was here and soon the talk began. Mr. Clemens truly says of him that “he is a gem and included in the rent”. He is a delight, full of soul, intellect, great humanness, magnetism and great loveliness too. Jean started him on his bird subject, and he talked about birds and skunks and deer, etc. Saying a heap of rememberable things, and then regretting that he’d been started, for he really came to hear Mr. Clemens talk. But do we ever do what we think we’ve come to do? [MTP TS 63-64].

Ralph P. Buell wrote from NYC to thank Sam for “the many pleasant hours” spent reading his books. His query had to do with Sam’s remark of the brothers and sisters of Christ—what was his source? [MTP].

June 8 Thursday – Clara Clemens’ 31st birthday. Clara was in Norfolk, Conn. In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to her in care of Mrs. Bratenglier.

Ah, you dear little dear Clärchen! it is a lovely letter, and has made us all clamorously happy. I am going to send it to Aunt Sue.

You have gotten back your sleep. It is great—there’s nothing greater I reckon, among the blessings. It is a pity you must do some of your faithfully-done work over anew, but I hope it will turn out as it does with half-forgotten languages—come back easier than one is expecting. That your voice is stronger than it was, is most gratifying news. It means what the natural sleep does—that you are climbing handsomely health-ward. I’ll claim The Grenadiers for sure, dear heart! Thank you for remembering.

I think a very great deal of Miss Lyon.

Good place to work? this? I should say so! My! to think that I’ve written 30,000 words here! That used to take a kind of a forever. “Adventures of a Microbe.” I read a chapter aloud every night. It’s like Paris in Joan-of-Arc days.

Oh, lots and lots of love, dear little Blackspider blatherskite. /Father [MTP]. Note: “The Two Grenadiers,” German song; see Gribben p. 305.

Sam also wrote to Mr. Gibson.

If you should see the admirable Mr. Harbin soon, won’t you please praise, for me, his literary taste? I cannot very well do it myself, it might seem an intrusion, because although I know him I have not had the pleasure of meeting him [MTP]. Note: this was possibly to Willis Gibson, who wrote the story “Arkansas Fashion” in the June Century that Sam had inquired of Gilder about, asking for the address of the author.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: After I sent off only a postal to mother this morning I had my inspiration for the day. It had been a most busy 90-minutes, between breakfast and the coming and going of the mail man and after he went, Mr. Clemens sauntered downstairs with a little half smile that was a treasure. Speaking of the microbe book he is writing, he said “Well this morning I’ve given it its title and written the introduction and that’s always a hard thing to do.” That led me to say something about something he had written yesterday, and it started the flood of his wondrous speech. Up and down he paced, flinging his thoughts out of him, and I gave one of them a little bat, and he caught it and tossed it higher, with a voice deeply moved by the power of what was born within his brain, and finding life in speech of liquid gold. Do you wonder if I find myself, sitting and gazing off at the distant mountains, or into the near-at-hand woods—just steeped with the magnetism of his brain? Do you wonder? But suddenly, he stopped and said—“By gosh, I’ll go to work” and off he flew [MTP TS 64].

Samuel S. McClure wrote a short note to Sam, “glad to have taken a story told so as to give you a good time, and grateful to you for having taken time to tell us it was good story. I have proudly told the author that you liked it” [MTP].
Note: Story not specified.

June 9 Friday – Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Robert E. Park, Secretary of the Congo Reform Association of America, in reference to John R. Gow’s June 6 inquiry. Some time ago Sam had instructed Harpers to forward “King Leopold’s Soliloquy” to them; he inquired on June 8 about the matter and they apologized that they’d been unable to find their address.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: This was the swamp day—Jean and I drove over to it and even our rubber boots didn’t keep us dry. I went over mine getting wild callas and Jean went over hers trying to find a red-winged black bird’s nest. It was so enchanting. When we came home we found Mr. Clemens curled up in the long wicker couch, with newspapers scattered over him and around him on the floor. Later we had music. It comes by inspiration, some days ever so much better than others. This evening more of the microbe story [MTP TS 64].

F.M. McIntire wrote from Vandergrift, Pa. to Sam, asking to use his name in selling a quilt for the purpose of raising $2,000 to finish and furnish the basement of the First Presbyterian Church there [MTP].

June 10 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mr. Clemens has introduced a delightful character into the microbe book—“Katherine of Arragon”—She is so sweet and so foolish and so innocent, and so profane and so sympathetic that she’s exactly right. Mr. Clemens is enjoying the writing of the book so much too. He doesn’t know that Katherine is anywhere around when in she pipes with a remark that staggers that dear cholera germ. Oh, it is so interesting, and its positively holy to hear Mr. Clemens read it [MTP TS 64-65].

June 11 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara in Norfolk, Conn. in care of Mrs. Bratenglier.

Clärchen dear, I’ve written 16 pages—12 is a day’s work—& it’s only 2.45 p.m. Yesterday I stopped at 3.15, with 14 pages scored—no, it was 15. On all previous days I have had myself called from work at 5 o’clock, but you see I’m getting through long before 5 now. I know when the day’s work is done, by the feel—then I stop, let the product be big or little. I am at page 240, now—all written here (since May 20, I suppose.) It beats the record. The best record before was in Florence—5 weeks, ending about the end of January—31,000 words. This is the same output (31,500 words) but the time is considerably shorter.

Dear heart, I am gladder of the spiritual peace which has come to you than I can ever tell you. I was a criminal towards your mother in that matter, & can never forgive myself, but for her sake—& yours & mine—I shall try to my very best never to treat you so.

Maybe we would go to bed with the chickens, too, if there were any; but there is not a domestic animal near this perfectly still place. There’s not a sound of any kind after the wild birds go to bed—oh, it is the divinest place!

Now I’ll go below.

Goodbye, you dear rascal, & be happy! / Father [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s Journal: “Mr. Clemens is reading Suetonius on the Caesars, finding it very interesting too. Today he said that he’d just been reading how Caesar’s mother came into possession of a serpent-like scar at the time of Caesar’s birth—“and after that she wouldn’t bathe in public—she was so darnn particular.” Oh, his comments! The poverty of me—not to remember them all [MTP TS 65; also Gribben 252 in part]. Note: Suetonius Tranquillus C. The Lives of the Twelve Caesars. Trans. In 1796 by Alexander Thomson; 1876 ed.

June 12 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: After dinner tonight I spoke of one or two things mentioned in his brother’s manuscript, about how he, Mr. C., had shocked his mother by dancing the Schottisch until a late hour on board the boat of which he was pilot. He was taking his mother on a trip down to New Orleans. Then Mr. Clemens paced up and down the porch and told us how he had slept at the wheel that night, and waking suddenly he found himself in a part of the river that he didn’t know—and he was in a shute that was full of snags and he’d have a struggle to pull that boat out and not kill her. But he did it, and didn’t ring a bell, either [MTP TS 65]. Note: see Mar. 18, 1861 entry; Sam took his mother and sister Pamela on the Alongo Child to St. Louis and then on to New Orleans on Mar. 26, leaving there on Mar. 28, 1861.

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Mr. Clemens is revising the microbe MS” [MTP TS 21].

Samuel J. Elder of Elder & Whitman, Attorneys, Boston, wrote to Sam. “I have taken the liberty to have the publishers send you a copy of the Yale Law Journal containing my article on ‘Duration of Copyright’” [MTP].

Robert L. Fulton wrote to Sam, disappointed he wouldn’t be coming to Nevada but Sam’s letter had given his people pleasure. “I have taken the liberty of sending you a small book in which I spoke of the Nevada Pioneers and pioneer conditions” [MTP]. Note: the book is not specified; not in Gribben.

Willis F. Johnson for Men of Mark wrote to Sam, enclosing an eight-page questionnaire from which they wished to publish an article in Men of Mark in New York. The material was not used [MTP].

June 13 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Katharine I. Harrison, asking her to transfer $2,000 from the Guaranty Trust to the Lincoln National Bank. She added, “Mr. Clemens is well” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Jean wasn’t well today. She went down to her study, but came back so weary and dazed. Today the Thayers lunched here and Mr. Clemens and Mrs. Thayer talked of the “Quaker City” for a long time. Did Mrs. Thayer know anything about Mrs. Fairbanks?” [MTP TS 65].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam, enclosing a check for $11.01 “being half of a payment by John K. Ford on account of the sale of some land in Steuben County owned jointly by aunt Livy and myself” [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote from Hartford to Sam, announcing he was “going to Seattle in September to preach the sermon at the Anniversary Meeting there of the American Board” of Foreign Missions. He might mention the Rockefeller gift and would cite Sam’s views on it. He related having a dog nose him during a sermon, which prompted laughter by the children and then by himself. He was to perform a wedding in Norfolk on June 22 and could he stop and see Clara? And where? He also told of Col. Cheney undergoing an operation in San Francisco, and closed with: “I love you, old fellow, in spite of all your bad behavior, very, very dearly” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env: “Can he call & see Clara? This question must be answered. / This letter to be preserved & put on [illegible word] with Auto.”

June 14 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The microbe revision goes on and Mr. Clemens gives the sapient results to us” [MTP TS 65].

F.P. Keppel for Columbia University sent Sam a printed invitation to be a guest at the 151st Commencement, Wednesday June 14, 11 a.m. A place would be reserved for him in the Academic Procession [MTP].

June 15 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Headache (?) not sure.
It is summer, supreme summer with heat that glows and glorifies.

Today Mr. Clemens couldn't write. He's been tiring himself, and indigestion follows with a brain fog—so he spent most of the day loafing on the porch, reading and smoking [MTP TS 65-66].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Today Mr. Clemens began to read the Revision of the microbe Story" [MTP TS 21].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam, having rec'd a letter from Thomas S. Barbour of the Congo Reform Assoc., Boston, about their receipt of "King Leopold's Soliloquy." Could they use it without restriction? Was it to be published in any magazine? [MTP].

Esther Singleton wrote from NYC to Sam. She was collecting short stories for a book to be published by Collier & Son. Would he allow her to use "Tom Quartz" and the story of the Old Ram? [MTP].

June 16 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to the June 15 from Frederick A. Duneka.

I think your briefest & compactest reply to the Congo Reform Assn. will be something like this—"Harper and Brothers have no property in 'King Leopold's Soliloquy.' Mr. Clemens asked us to give it back to him because he wished to give it to you, and we did so. However, to be strict to the letter it is necessary for us to go through with the formality of granting you the right to use the article in a magazine, publish it as a pamphlet & sell it at a price, and this we do with all good will. By this you will understand that we relinquish our right to ever use it in print in any way without your free & unembarrassed consent."

They are evidently afraid of future trouble, Duneka, but if my suggestion as above is satisfactory to you, no doubt it will be to them. If it isn't please amend it. I hope they will get it out soon and force it to a wide circulation. I shall feel sweeter inside after I have spewed out my opinion of Leopold.

I am deep in a new book which I enjoy more than I have enjoyed any other for twenty years and I hope it will take me the entire summer to write it; in which case it will be a giant for size judging by the stack of manuscript I have ground out on it since I arrived here. / Sincerely Yours [MTP]. Note: Harpers had rejected King Leopold's Soliloquy, but agreed to release rights to it for the American Congo Reform Assoc. See Apr. 11, 1905 to Morel.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Quite sure—medicine helps.

Today Dr. Stowe and Mrs. Dr. Stowe [sic Stowell] called but Mr. Clemens didn't see them, and then Mr. Thayer came and they had a long chat, Mr. Clemens and he, on the porch.

I am slowly reading the "Innocents Abroad," and it is so delightful [MTP TS 66].

H.H. Rogers wrote to Sam with a number of miscellaneous thoughts and happenings. He couldn't understand why Sam had not answered his May 26 letter. He was going to Fairhaven this night "for a few days"; he didn't feel the time was right to sell Amalgamated stock and so was putting it off; Urban H. Broughton was recovering from an operation; Clarence C. Rice "comes around and sees us occasionally"; he hoped to hear from Sam soon [MTHHR 586].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam. "If you have any stock in any telephone company, sell it—quick! The German Baptist Conference in Indianapolis has formally denounced the telephone as an invention of the devil" [MTP].

Louis S. Beckwith wrote on The Sessions Clock Co., letterhead, Forestville, Conn. to ask Sam for a copy of the epitaph he'd placed on Livy's headstone, as his wife had died a few weeks earlier and he wanted to use the sentiment [MTP].

June 17 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to his attorney, John Larkin.

Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him and say that if this month ends without any permission from Mr. Renwick for work to be begun on the furnaces, why shouldn't John Howells be put to work on July first on the $2250⁰⁰ hot water heating equipment.

Mr. Clemens suggests that Mr. H. should take reputable experts with him to the house, to first examine & set down the condition of things there, so that he will have proof when the work is finished, that the home has not been damaged.

Mr. Clemens directs me to ask if it would be a good idea to bring suit against Mr. Renwick at the same time for from ten to twenty thousand dollars damages for last winter.

Mr. Weinant & clerk—and Mr. Renwick were present at the time that Mr. Renwick promised to do all that was necessary to make the house so comfortable that Mr. Clemens would wish to occupy it indefinitely. The understanding was that Mr. Weinant's clerk was to put down in writing all the various improvements that Mr. Renwick had promised to make in the house. When Mr. Clemens went for the written statement, he found only the little slip of paper that he showed to you. Mr. Weinant's clerk was an intelligent looking young man, & would be a good witness [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Oh, the purity of these days. Mr. Clemens read a long time this afternoon in the microbe revision. He has cleared away one or two little fogs and it reads very smoothly and connectedly and with ever growing interest. Tonight Mrs. Thayer and Gerald dined here. Mr. Thayer wasn't well enough to come. We had a nice little dinner and afterward they told anecdotes, but mostly Mr. Clemens did. I had a letter from Santissima too.

Mr. Clemens talked to me this afternoon about the way to train people, men in colleges, to think. Citing the for-and-against the reconstructing of Rome into an empire by Caesar. It is so delightful to hear and to watch him talk [MTP TS 66].

June 18 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara in Norfolk, Conn.

It's raining, dearheart, been raining several hours. The horse is at the door, so I judge Jean is going out driving. Patrick is standing by, superintending. It's good to look at him—he's just a dear!

Shoves back his cap & scratches his head, just as he used to do ages ago—his way of acknowledging the presence of his superiors.

Those are very cunning portraits in "Life." It is hard to say which is best, Petrarch, Dante, Emerson or Shakespeare. I'm not quoted, dear—beyond the mute portrait—only the departed supremacies speak there. but didn't catch her at home.

Milly Cheney Larned is a neighbor of ours. We drove over, yesterday, but didn't catch her at home.

Ben dear, I don't like that bronchial weakness; you must get rid of it. Mine is permanent, you mustn't let yours get so.

I'm appointing you & Jean to arrange & publish my "Letters" some day—I don't want it done by any outsider. Miss Lyon can do the work, & do it well. There's plenty Letters here & there & yonder to select from; Twichell has 250, Howells used to have a bushel, Mr. Rogers has some, & so on. Miss Lyon can do the actual work, & take a tenth of the royalty resulting.

I'm reading Suetonius again, oh, good land! This country is not Rome-in-the-days-of-the-early Caesars, but—there are resemblances. And they are increasing. In a hundred years there'll be a king roosting here. His grandfather is among us now; I'd like to know his name. I already know the monarchy's ancestor, the same being the Republican Party; after which comes the Labor Party, & after it the Monarchy.

Good-bye you dear ashcat, & love & kisses from / Father [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Splendid heat, but rheumatism for me. Teresa rubbed the skin off my back. Mr. Clemens is reading the revision to us as we sit on the piazza. It is so very delightful. This afternoon Mr. Clemens went with Jean to call on Mrs. Larned, but she wasn't at home.

This is mother's birthday, 67, and she doesn't look it, she doesn't feel it, she doesn't act it. She said 68, but she's 67, born in 1838.

This afternoon, late, we had music. I wasn't feeling very well, but the music was a benediction [MTP TS 66].

June 19 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to H.H. Rogers' June 16:

Why, I must have answered it. [Rogers' May 26 letter] It may be that I merely worded the answer in my mind & then thought I had written & sent it, I am aware that that does happen to me sometimes. It's like intending to wind a watch; the intention gets registered as an act, & the watch runs down.

No, indeedy, I'm not sick—I'm trying to work myself to death—& not succeeding, but I keep up the rush just the same. I am enjoying it.

We were fortunate to find this place. It is perfectly satisfactory. Jean is outdoors all the time; I am indoors all the time, & both of us are content. Clara has lost some of her voice again—thinks the cause is bronchial. But she says she is having delightful times, & drives out every day, over very pretty country roads.

We are hoping & expecting that before very long we shall be allowed to go to Norfolk & see Clara. Twichell is to see her soon. His duties will carry him to Norfolk to disseminate some of his trade-superstitions.

I am exceedingly glad to hear that Broughton is all right again, & this time I hope it is a permanency.

If you can make Rice believe he owes me money, collect it & we will divide. Don't strike him high—it would start his suspicions—hit him moderate, & get what you can.

You might try it with Mrs. Rogers, too. You can hit her harder, she has confidence in good people & is not suspicious [MTHHR 586-7].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Oceans of rain and fog and penetrating dampness. Mr. Clemens writes busily, busily all the day. If by chance you ever have to go into his room where he is working he never sees you, and his face is wonderful to look upon. His life within is a tremendous one. It is no wonder that he can read through and through the fool tricks of the human race. The things that are so real to them are flimsy nothings to him. My strength is returning and the music was a delight [MTP TS 66-7].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam unable to get any information from Col. Fairchild about the Cashier investment, but he had learned from Fairchild's lawyer, who was also the Spiral Pin Co.'s lawyer "that things are much brighter." A conflict between the Cashier Co. and the Pope Co. was to be resolved shortly [MTP].

John Larkin wrote to Sam that unless Renwick "undertook the heating" of 21 Fifth Ave., that Larkin would "be compelled to have the work done and the expense" charged against rent [MTP].

Edmund Dene Morel wrote to Sam, sending the address of Dr. Robert E. Park as Tremont Temple, Boston [MTP].

Charles T. Scott wrote from Litchfield, Maine to Sam, asking for "a few words" for his article "Are a Man's Chances of Winning Success Better Before or After Forty," for the Boston Sunday Herald [MTP].

June 20 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight after dinner as Jean and I sat in the glow of the fire burning on the good big hearth in the living room, Mr. Clemens paced the room and told Jean the story of Japan and her change of government, about the Daimios and the Shogun and the almost spiritual power of the Mikado. The talk was brought about by Mr. Clemens speaking of the Chinese and Japanese working for such low wages that they cannot be admitted to this country for they would underwork and starve out Americans. It's powerfully good talk. He described the daimios and their princely retinues and the big "swells" of Japan [MTP TS 67]. Note: daimios were feudal lords who owned large amounts of land.

Ralph P. Buell wrote on Graham & L'Amoreaux Law Offices letterhead, NYC, to Sam. Upon his return to the city, Buell found Sam's "very courteous note & enclosure" and thanked him "most earnestly for our kindness & to crave your pardon again for putting you to so much trouble" [MTP].

John Larkin wrote to report a meeting with Renwick. The work had been delayed due to Renwick's need to consult with other parties who owned an interest and secure estimates. Renwick presented specifications for the work which were satisfactory [MTP].

Walter Pulitzer wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: not found at MTP.

June 21 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Samuel J. Elder.

I have read your article with great interest—and also with great profit. I am glad to have it, & I thank you.

I was at the meeting you speak of, & offered & explained the two motions I went there to make—then hurried away. But they passed. One of them was the “life & 50 years” proposition.

Your letter has put a motion into my head: have some of the literary guild go to Washington in the fall, get the help of the President & John Hay, & ask Congress to pass a special act extending Mr. Hale’s copyrights to life & 50 years after?

The thing once done & concreted—with the sure applause of press & nation—it would come easy to Congress (finding the water not so cold as expected) to go ahead & make the plunge for all American authorship.

The log-rolling for Mr. Hale’s bill would be unlaborious. I stayed on the floor of the House (without having received the thanks of Congress), 3 hours once & polled both parties for the existing international law, and even that was no very hard work.

And then I got the thanks of Congress, besides—for going away. / Very Truly Yours [MTP]. Note: boxed in the right corner of the letter: “The above alludes to an article on copyright pub. In the Yale Law Mag.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tonight Mr. Clemens read on in the microbe satire. It is strong, fearfully strong, touching on all the great events of the day and telling the truth about them too. It is so clever—and so scathing. After the reading when Mr. Clemens explained to Jean what a “Tiger” is in a cheer he went on to tell how 40 years ago the Chinamen in San Francisco (perhaps they do it now too) applauded by imitating a sky rocket and Mr. Clemens did it, he imitated with voice and upward sweep of his arm, the soaring flight—the vanishing and the bursting of the rocket. Because there is so much soul in him, perhaps, he puts it into what he does [MTP TS 67].

Poultney Bigelow wrote from Munich, Germany to Sam, “back at my Munich workshop pegging away at some more lectures for the winter of 1905/06.” He sent a picture of the Thistle “having had a most delightful spattering of salt water on board.” He gave travel plans for Panama, Porto Rico, and Boston by January for his lectures. He asked for Sam’s acceptance “on paper for the next ANNUAL DINNER of the ENDS of the EARTH on February 2 in New York” [MTP]. I: next to this last item, Sam wrote “as my guest” in pencil.

June 22 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Jean and I drove over to Marlboro and then trolleyed to Keene in the rain today. It was a nice trip—moist.

Mr. Clemens read more of that satire dwelling on the currency and he made a beautiful allusion to Katherine of Aragon. Dear, foolish, gentle, loving Katherine. Today Mr. Clemens talked about the Japanese battle front being 400 miles long. Grant’s was 1200 miles and Grant was the only General ever, who didn’t hold councils of war.

Mr. Clemens found a little notice in the English Review of Reviews that said Togo was graduated from Indianapolis. He sent the cutting to Norman Hapgood asking him if he had over looked that fact. Mention had been made of it at the St. Louis Exposition, in a speech, but the speech didn’t weigh so much then for Togo wasn’t the victor of the Battle of the Sea of Japan [MTP TS 67-68].

Henry J. Shields wrote on City of New York Law Dept. letterhead to ask Sam the date of his article in the NY Times, which exposed “the scandal connected with the office of The Seaman’s Exchange in New York City. Wm. R. Duncan was Shipping Commissioner at the time” [MTP].

June 22 ca. (on or after) – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote a short note for Sam to Henry J. Shields: “article was written after moving into the Home in Hfd in 1874—but how long after Mr. Clemens cannot remember” [MTP].

June 23 Friday – Tuckey puts this day as the last work Sam did on “Three Thousand Years Among the Microbes” [135]. Note: also, Starrett, MT Encyc. 736.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon Mrs. Dwight called, we were having tea on the porch. Mr. Clemens had just joined us, so Jean told him he mustn't escape, he must stay and be good. Prosper [Jean's dog] appeared just then, and that threw the talk into the lovely story of Mr. Clemens's trip to New York to keep an appointment with Mr. Daly, and how Mr. Daly's big Irishman wouldn't admit Mr. Clemens. He hadn't admitted anyone to that sanctum for 25 years without instructions from Mr. Daly to do so. This day there hadn't been any instructions. Mr. Clemens had been told how to find the sanctum, go into a court, from a street and go to the first door that you see. There was the door but behind it was the big Irishman. No, Mr. Clemens couldn't see Mr. Daly, and no one was allowed to smoke there either. So Mr. Clemens put his cigar down. But that morning the New Haven news dealer who boarded the train had only New Haven papers, they were better than nothing, so Mr. Clemens bought one and read it all, advertisements even,—one whole page was given up to a Bench Show, and the only illustration was that of a big prize $10,000 St. Bernard. Mr. Clemens read it all, read the dimensions and weight and name of that dog, go the name of the head man of the Bench Show too. As he stood trying to convince the big Irishman that Mr. Daly wanted to see him, that his business was of interest to Mr. Daly, the Irishman blandly said, "Yes, they all say that"—a big St. Bernard entered the little room. The Irishman's face changed as the splendid creature walked in. He had just asked Mr. Clemens the nature of that business and Mr. Clemens told us that he couldn't say he was a lecturer, he wouldn't stand any show with the Irishman—but he did say he was the bench show man from New Haven. The Irishman flew around, pulled off his vest, hadn't any coat on, and dusted the only chair for Mr. Clemens, and Mr. Clemens did it all for us, he dusted off the chair, he was the happy worshipful Irishman to a dot, and he told us how he guessed the length and weight of that dog so captivating the Irishman that he showed Mr. Clemens the way up to Mr. Daly's sanctum to the utter amazement of Mr. Daly [MTP TS 68-69]. Note: Sam shared this same story in a dinner speech on Apr. 13, 1887; see entry, Vol II.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam, enclosing a letter from John T. Lewis, of Elmira. "Shall I tell him to apply direct to the Insole Company for his next pair of Insoles?" [MTP]. Note: written by Miss Lyon on the bottom: "Send bill to Mr. Clemens"

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam, having sent the letter Sam suggested to the Congo Reform Assoc. in Boston. He considered it "good news about the pile of [Sam's] manuscript growing so rapidly." He advised that Col. Harvey would sail for home on July 5 [MTP].

Edward Lauterbach wrote a short thank-you note to Sam for his congratulations upon Lauterbach's elevation to Doctor of Laws [MTP].

June 24 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Joe Twichell. After several pages of bile dumped about Theodore Roosevelt, though he believed "praise & blame" were "unwarrantable terms when applied to coffee-mills"—in other words, man has no more control over his acts than a coffee-mill—Sam wrote of his work and daughters:

I began a new book here in this enchanting solitude 35 days ago. I have done 33 full days' work on it. To-day I have not worked. There was another day in this present month wherein I did not work—you will know that date without my telling you.

I have written you to-day, not to do you a service, but to do myself one. There was bile in me. I had to empty it, or lose my day to-morrow. If I tried to empty it into the North American Review—oh, well, I couldn't afford the risk. No, the certainty! The certainty that I wouldn't be satisfied with the result; so I would burn it, & try again to-morrow; burn that, & try again next day. It happens so, nearly every time. I have a family to support, & I can't afford this kind of dissipation. Last winter when I was sick I wrote a magazine article three times before I got it to suit me. I put $500 worth of work on it every day for ten days; & at last, when I got it to suit me it contained but 3,000 words—$900. I burned it, & said I would reform.

And I have reformed. I have to work my bile off, whenever it gets to where I can't stand it, but I can work it off on you economically, because I don't have to make it suit me. It may not suit you, but that isn't any matter, I'm not writing it for that. I have used you as an equilibrium-restorer more than once in my time, & shall continue, I guess. I would like to use Mr. Rogers, & he is plenty good-natured enough, but it wouldn't be fair to keep him busy rescuing me from my leather-headed business-snarls & make him read interminable bile-irruptions besides; I can't use Howells, he is busy & old & lazy, & won't stand it; I dasn't use Clara, there's things I have to say which she wouldn't put up with—a very dear little ashcat, but has claws.

And so—you're It.

I suppose you saw Clara day before yesterday. She wrote that she was going to ask you to stay over night in her house. I judge by that that Dr. Quintard is beginning to be less exacting with her, less strenuous. It's a happy sign. Jean is in fine strength, & does a deal of wholesome driving & horsebacking. There is nothing like the open air; I often look out of the window myself. Love to you all. / Mark [MTP]. Note: the book Sam began 35 days prior (May 20) and abandoned on June 23 was the unfinished “3,000 Years Among the Microbes,” as told from the point of view of a cholera microbe. In Isabel's journal for June 26, she states this letter had been “sent on Saturday and stopped,” indicating he may have delayed it or not sent it.

Isabel Lyon's Journal: This afternoon Jean went off on Scott [horse] for the first time in a long, long time. His back has been so sore. Mr. Clemens came down saying that he was going to see Mr. Thayer, and he started with a step as light as a boy's. As Jean and I sat discussing Scott's rather frolicsome behavior, Mr. Clemens returned utterly exhausted. It had been a steep scramble, he had slipped and fallen, for he wore his thin house shoes and the soles are as smooth as satin. He didn't get any farther than the Pembertons, just below here, and after he had rested a bit down stairs, he took his Suetonius and went up stairs to sleep a little. Mr. Clemens told us that some of the Pemberton's were coming to call—so we frocked us, and they came. After dinner we hadn't any ms. reading, for Mr. Clemens had put all his morning into a long letter to Mr. Twichell, but he talked. Oh, how he talked—until nearly ten o'clock. We were talking of mistakes people make. Ugo in particular, this time—and Teresa said “Ah, who is there that does not make mistakes—only in Paradise, Signorina, are those who make no mistakes.” When I told Mr. Clemens he said, “She hasn't got the latest returns from there, or she'd know differently.” Teresa is desperate because she does not learn English rapidly. She knows that what Mr. Clemens writes is diverting and when I told her encouragingly that some day she would read his books, she said, “Ah, Signorina, when I can read English I shall have been dead twenty years.” [MTP TS 69]. Note: Suetonius Tranquillus C. The Lives of the Twelve Caesars. Trans. In 1796 by Alexander Thomson; 1876 ed. Ugo and Teresa Cherubini were servants who returned with the Clemens family from Florence.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: “Miss Clemens [Clara] was in N.Y. on this date & the throat specialist that she consulted has said that she must not sing a note for four months. The vocal chords are affected by the appendical operation” MTP TS 21].

Frank J. Firth wrote from Phila. to Sam, sending blank sheets for Sam's autograph and “a few lines” to be used in Twain books for the benefit of the Germantown Hospital [MTP]. Note: Miss Lyon wrote on the bottom: “Mr. Clemens prepared / the sheets & ‘then got afraid’—/ and wrote for his indentification”

Norman Hapgood for Collier's Weekly wrote to thank Sam “for helping to keep me up with all the work the Creator of our blessings is doing for his unworthy subjects.” He hoped to see Sam soon and sent regards to Jean Clemens [MTP].

June 25 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka.

I hear & comply. The easiest way for me to furnish the details you ask for, was to answer your letter with another one, & I have done that. It is handy for you, too; for you can at your pleasure talk the details to any journalists that come to you, or print my letter on slips & hand them to as many of the boys as will accept, informing them that you asked me about my summer & my industries & if I have acquired a house here for next summer, & so on, & this letter is my reply—and as it covers everything it will save both you & them time & labor if they will take it & print part of it or the whole of it, just as they please. Maybe Melville Stone might get something out of it for the A.P.

If I can further help the boom in any way, command me freely.

Sincerely Yours / SLC

I tell you, a jury to read to is a good scheme. In two places I felt a wince—I didn't see it, I wasn't looking. I struck those two places out. But for the wince I should not have discovered that the emendations were needed [MTP]. Note: MTP dates “ca. June 25” but the letter is headed “Sunday”.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Half my life ago, I read the Cenci. I wonder who reads it now? And how terrible, how very terrible it is.

Jean goes up stairs here at 7:20 and finds her father lying on the bed with his shoes and stockings off and a jager blanket over his stomach. She scolds, and he chuckles. Oh, his chuckles. Tonight he talked again, for he had started Jean at dinner when he said Patriotism is a Passion, not a Principle. Religion is a Principle—(but I've made notes elsewhere). He went up stairs at 9:30. But he had lost his pen, so I flew up with a full one; he sat up in his bed like the white, white king that he always looks, he hadn't any idea of his beauty, for he cannot see himself—and if he could, I wonder if he'd suspect the beauty [MTP TS 69-70]. Note: The Cenci, A Tragedy in Five Acts (1819) a verse drama by Percy Bysshe Shelley, inspired by an Italian family

June 26 Monday – Sam wrote the poem “Apostrophe to Death,” not published in his lifetime:

O Death, O sweet & gracious friend,
I bare my smitten head to Thee, & at thy sacred feet
I set my life's extinguished lamp & lay my bruised heart

[Tuckey, “The ‘Me’ and the Machine” 135; Scott, Poetry MT 126-7]. Note: Hill gives the title as “An Invocation to Death” (as does Miss Lyon in the entry below) and notes that Sam read the poem to the “cozy group around the fire, and the next day Miss Lyon was ‘weak with the wonder of that poem’ all day long” [110].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight Mr. Clemens read his poem “An Invocation to Death”, and oh the terrible strength of it. Today the barber came from Peterboro to cut Mr. Clemens's hair. Today Mr. Faulkner called. Tonight Mr. Clemens read the 13 page letter to Mr. Twichell that had been sent on Saturday and stopped. Full of politics and splendid things. He lays Roosevelt bare. Yes, I am near a throne [MTP TS 70]. Note: This is likely Barry Faulkner (mentioned in the June 28 entry), the same gentleman Miss Lyons met with Witter Bynner (and called him Binny) at Cecchina's Restaurant in NYC on May 3, as that Mr. Faulkner knew the Thayers in Dublin.

Frederick B. Bess wrote from Peoria, Ill. to Sam, asking if he might use pictures on p. 24, 34 & 36 from LM in his popular history of Peoria [MTP]. Note: Sam's answer, which Lyon wrote, is cataloged as “On or after June 26”—“on” is not possible due to mail time. Sam's answer is therefore estimated as ca. July 1.

M. Worth Colwell wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam, proposing “the possibilities of constructing a splendid Comic Opera,” using part of CY, the score being written by Walter Pulitzer who had done two operas which would run next season in New York. He then recalled a meeting with Twain “about seventeen years ago” when he was a little boy, at O.W. Palmer's house and at Mr. Schumacher's house in Elmira. He recalled Sam calling him “fillybuster” [MTP]. Note: the 1877 Elmira City Directory lists Peter Schumacher, but no O.W. Palmer. Within a day or two Sam responded (likely an instruction to Isabel Lyon) on the bottom left corner of Cowell's letter: “refer to Miss Marbury—any arrangement she makes will be satisfactory to Mr. Clemens.”

Louis S. Beckwith wrote to Isabel Lyon. “Your favor of June 22nd with the epitaph...has been received. May I trouble you to extend to Mr. Clemens the assurance of my profound appreciation” [MTP]. Note: see June 16.

M. Worth Colwell wrote to Sam enclosing a letter of introduction from Mr. Walter Pulitzer. Colwell inquired about staging a comic opera from CY [MTP]. Note: he was referred to Marbury.

June 27 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: All day I've been weak with the wonder of that poem [See June 26 journal]. Mr. Clemens made some corrections in it and then let me take it—to read and read this morning. Later he came down stairs and talked about the kind of woman Mrs. Howells is. I'd just been saying that according to the way that Mr. Howells has depicted womankind in “Miss Billard's Inspiration” [sic] he must have either an enchanting wife, or an utterly inconsequential one, and I think it is probably the latter, but there is that inconsequential side to every woman anyway. It wouldn't be at all worth while for one woman to try to conceal anything from Mr. Howells anyway—for he knows everything about every woman [MTP TS 70]. Note: Miss Bellard's Inspiration; A Novel (1905) by Howells.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Today word came from Mr. Stoeckel that Miss Clemens's horse ran away. She was not driving it" MTP TS 21-22]. Note: Robbins Battell Stoeckel.

June 28 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

This is a line to say there's a report in Norfolk, Conn. (which we are doing what we can to keep out of the papers) that Clara's horse has been running away with her. It isn't so. It was her horse, but she wasn't in the carriage.

Jean & I expect to go see Clara in a few days—as soon as we get a permit from the doctor, which may come any day now. It is pretty cold weather here, but we don't mind it.

With warm regards to both of you [MTHHR 587-8].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today Jean and I lunched with Mrs. Thayer and Mary and Gladys and Barry Faulkner. It was a delight, especially as Mr. Faulkner and I talked a monstrous much, there was ever so much to say about Mr. Binner [sic Bynner]. Some enemy has called him "Two yards of Ribbon" and Mrs. Zoe Norris—I cannot find the literary flavor that she thinks she has, in what she writes. Mary Thayer and I walked around to the Monadnock P.O. and she told me a little of her life and also of her enthusiasm for Tolstoi and Turgenieff's. Again I saw Gladys's lovely flower studies, Oh, they are such a rare family—splendid! [MTP TS 70].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens sent word. Today that he would await Mr. Larkin's decision about sending the rent check to Mr. Renwick" [MTP TS 22].

J.W.P. Bunning of Hewes & Potter Co., mfrs. Of suspenders, belts and novelties in Men's wear, Boston wrote to Sam, thanking him for his recent order, and advising that the two pair of Bull Dog suspenders were sent under separate cover [MTP].

June 29 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara in Norfolk, Conn.

Ah dear heart, I am very sorry you are not going to be able to sing the Two Grenadiers BUT I shan't be sorry if you are with us instead of out on the concert stage singing for strangers.

Yes, my bronchial affection is in a sense permanent: my port lung got a permanent damage in Berlin, & if I should catch 500 colds they would all be followed by bronchitis.

I shall be glad to see Togo & Bro. & the sorrowful hound when I come. We have no live stock here except Jean's blind brontosaurus & her beautiful horse.

I have been in bed all day, because I got back my back last night. I thought it was going to be bad, but it seems to have disappeared. I have spent the day reading the book I wrote in Florence. I destroyed 125 pages of it, & expect to go over it again to-morrow & destroy 25 more. Then I think I will take hold of it & finish it, dropping the microbe book meantime.

Col. Higginson sat by my bed an hour to-day, looking like the grandfather of himself as I used to know him 25 or 30 years ago. He is a sterling man, & I am glad he's a neighbor. We've got a number of very choice neighbors. Col. H. said it was Mr. Darwin who first introduced him to the Jumping Frog & made him read it.

Jean has just paid me a visit, & has ordered me to eat some breakfast in the morning, but I probably shant. I have been fasting 26 hours now. It is good for me. No, it isn't fasting—I take a little plasmon every 3 hours. That is very different from fasting.

With best love, dear Ashcat [MTP]. Note: Clara was in seclusion for her health. She stayed at Mrs. Bratenglier's in Norfolk, Conn.; As Hill points out, in the fourth paragraph Sam discusses his switch from Three Thousand Years Among the Microbes to The Mysterious Stranger [111]. "The Two Grenadiers," German song; see Gribben p. 305. Togo & Bro. & the sorrowful hound was likely noted in a not-extant letter from Clara. Jean carved wooden creatures and the "blind brontosaurus" was likely one; her horse was "Scott."

Sam also wrote to Samuel J. Elder of Elder & Whitman Attorneys, the letter not extant but referred to in Elder's July 3 reply.

Isabel Lyon's journal: All day Mr. Clemens has been in his bed, and fasting—a wretched indigestion has been troubling him for several days now. This afternoon as Jean and I were having tea on the porch, Col Higginson came. He joined us out there and had some tea and things and then went up to see Mr. Clemens. He is older than I expected to find him and fondly full of his daughter who is to be married in September. He said that this morning he received a notice from some Italian that the Barberini palace in Rome is for sale at a million dollars. He spoke of Moncure D. Conway's wife as being a most remarkably fine woman, her great gift of common sense never deserting her. When he came down from Mr. Clemens's room I led him out to the path through the woods—but first we stopped to talk of the very charming little story that his daughter wrote some time since. I had to tell him how lovely it is, and he said that there was no surer way to reach his heart than in a word of praise of his daughter [MTP TS 71].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "John Lewis's pension is and now. / This afternoon Col. Higginson called" [MTP TS 22].

Dr. Thomas S. Barbour for the Congo Reform Assoc. wrote to Sam. "We are in consultation with Harper & Brothers and the American News Company as to plans of publication. Our debt to you is very great" [MTP].

Maria C. Gay (Mrs. Julius Gay) wrote from Farmington, Conn. to Sam, asking for an introduction to her cousin and his professor friend, who were nearby Dublin:

I have been asked to give Dr Henderson and Stuart Montgomery a card of introduction to you, which of course I do not wish to do without first explaining them to you and asking your permission—Dr Henderson has written several delightful books; one a story, and two volumes of essays, all published by Houghton and Mifflin—He is a Harvard graduate, has lived abroad, and travelled much—Last year Stuart Montgomery (my cousin) went around the world with him, in fact has been much of the time with him during the last four years—Now he is a student at Harvard, but is with Dr Henderson this summer at a camp near Dublin that the Dr. has had five or six years for boys, mostly Philadelphia boys, and some Harvard students— . . .

My cousin and the doctor have just learned that you and your family are lodged for the summer at Dublin, hence their letter of request to me, knowing that I had the pleasure of an acquaintance with you—I really delighted my heart last spring at Mrs Day's to see you and Jean looking and seeming so well; I had a lovely talk too and visit with Mrs Crane— . . . [MTP]. Notes: See Isabel V. Lyon's answer for Sam ca. July 1. See Vol. II for entries on Gay. Charles Hanford Henderson (1861-1941), educator and writer, had been headmaster at the private school for boys, Chestnut Hill Academy near Philadelphia.

Robert W. Jones for Housekeeper Magazine wrote apologies to Sam for including a "little story" related by Dr. C.W. Brown of Wash. D.C., formerly of Elmira. The story proved false. "The wisdom of Mr. Boswell, who reserved his anecdotes until after his victim's death, is now apparent to me. I promise never again to indulge in biography" [MTP].

June 29 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon responded for Sam to M. Worth Colwell's June 26 letter from New York [MTP]. Note: MTP has this as "on or after June 26." Here time is allowed for Colwell's letter to travel from N.Y. to N.H. and be answered.

June 30 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Hamlin Garland.

Yesterday I took a day off from work—the first in 39 consecutive days—& burned 30,000 words, & am now taking a fresh start for another long siege (with 4,000 words to my credit to-day); but I put in yesterday's holiday & up to 2 this morning reading your book—criminal dissipation for a laboring man & slow reader, & I knew I ought to follow my rule & go to sleep at 11, but I was caught with the last third unread, & had to go on to the end, it was so enthralling. I like that book exceedingly, & some day when I get another holiday I will write another word about it, but not now. I must save fuel for to morrow [MTP]. Note: Sam was working on the unfinished "3,000 Years Among the Microbes." Gribben identifies Garland's book as The Tyranny of the Dark (1905) [252].

Sam also wrote to Frank J. Firth, the letter not extant but referred to in Firth's reply to Isabel Lyon of July 6.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Oh, I have been steeped and steeped and steeped with joy over a manuscript that Mr. Clemens brought down stairs for me to read, "when I had leisure." Leisure? You'd boil it out of midnight if you couldn't find it anywhere else. It's "The Mysterious Stranger," and oh the mystery and charm of him, and the beauty and humor and impossibility, and English of the rest of it. All unequalled. Too much delight for one week. The Apostrophe to Death. Seeing Mr. Faulkner. Mr. Howell's last book. Seeing Colonel Higginson. And now this crown of crowns, this wonderful unfinished story [MTP TS 71].

Tuckey notes Clemens put this date on the margin of the "Print Shop" holograph, and writes:

...June 30, 1905, he had reread his unfinished "Print Shop" story, for which he had already written the chapter that would immortalize the conscious 'I' of the narrator, and was carrying it forward toward that planned conclusion. He did not quite bring the story through to that point, however, for he put it aside about July 12, after Frederick A. Duneka of Harper & Brothers had visited him to see whether he could provide something for next winter's book trade ["The 'Me' and the Machine" 136]. Note: Hill gives Duneka's arrival as July 10 [111].

Hill gives this date for Isabel Lyon (who was becoming his testing reader) reading what Sam had completed on The Mysterious Stranger. He would continue working on it as No. 44, The Mysterious Stranger into July [111].

July – Harper's Monthly published Sam's article "William Dean Howells" p. 803-6. Clemens chose an excerpt from Howells' "Easy Chair" column, a paragraph concerned with Louis Dyer's Machiavelli and the Modern State (1904) to show "how clear, how limpid, how understandable" is Howells' prose [Gribben 331]. Note: see Lyon's journal entries for Mar. 26, 29, Apr. 5 on the writing of this article.

July 1 Saturday – John Milton Hay (1838-1905) died this day. In Dublin, N.H. Sam sent a telegram to the N.Y. American:

I am deeply grieved & I mourn with the nation—this loss is irreparable. My friendship with Mr. Hay & my admiration of him endured 38 years without impairment. / Mark Twain [MTP: Cummings file]. Note: See Sam's note sent anonymously under 1905 entries.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This evening a telegram came from the N.Y. American asking Mr. Clemens to telegraph them something on the death of Mr. Hay.

Mr. Clemens is going on with "The Mysterious Stranger", and it is magic. He wrote it in Florence, and when Jean asked him how he could drop one story and work on another, he said it had always been his habit to write that way. While he was working on one story the "tank is filling up for the one just stopped". And he told of 2 days work he did on "Joan of Arc" in Florence—Villa Viviani—he wrote 13 hours for 2 days running and the work stood. It was true inspiration, for he got up at 2 in the morning and worked until 8, then he breakfasted and then began again at 11 [MTP TS 71-72].

Augustus P. Chamberlaine wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: This may be 1906, as it was not found at MTP.

July 1 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Frederick B. Bess's June 26 from Peoria, Ill.: "If Mr. Clemens were in authority you would be quite welcome to the use of the sketches—but he is not—and so must defer you to his publishers who can give all information" [MTP].

Lyon also replied for Sam to the ca. June 29 from Maria C. Gay in Farmington, Conn., that Clemens would be glad to see Dr. Henderson and her cousin if they would call at 4:30 p.m. or 5 p.m. and give their names, but he "had no heart for going where there is jollity—& has lived very quietly" [MTP].

July 2 Sunday – Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers) wrote from New Bedford, MASS. to Sam, having rec'd his note on July 1. They had just come from Boston the day before and would return this afternoon, as Mr. Rogers had to take the stand in a lawsuit; they might have to stay all week, and were at the Hotel Lorraine if Sam stopped on his way to Norfolk, Conn. to see Clara [MTHHR 588].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Reading Hamlin Garland's "Tyranny of the Dark". Mr. Clemens has just finished it. Yesterday he said it was "good done". This afternoon a batch of folks came in and when Mr. Clemens came down he sat in a low black wicker chair and talked, you don't have to say anything but that.

Jean went off with Miss Dwight for dinner, and at dinner Mr. Clemens talked of the spirit things, brought up by Hamlin Garland's book, and by his own wonderful "44" story. He talked about John Hay's characteristics and told how one day, long ago, they and David Gray, they two were 33, and he S.L.C. were 35, were talking together in the broadest of free thinking terms, and later when calamity came to Gray, he changed from his free thinking and became a staunch, narrow, scorching Presbyterian, and he wouldn't vote for Cleveland because many, many years before, he had been guilty of a peccadillo, a social one, the sort of thing we'd all do if we had the chance. He told me about Mrs. Hay, how narrow she was, how terribly Presbyterian, and in the afternoon he said that he felt quite sure that she was instrumental in Mr. Hay's withdrawal from publication of the Pike Co. verses, after he became Lincoln's biographer.

Something started him into saying that things or ideas begin as principles, but end as policies. "Once Honesty was a principle, but now it is the best policy". Or Dishonesty is the best policy—or Decency is the best policy—or Free-trade is the best policy—or Protection is the best policy—[MTP TS 72; also in part Gribben 252].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "This morning at 10:15 Mr. Clemens had a telepathic message—It was a conversation held with Mrs. Hay. Mr. & Mrs. Learned came in for Tea" [MTP TS 22].

July 3 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean and Teresa started for Norfolk early this morning. Dear Col. Higginson has sent me a copy of the beautiful little sketch that his daughter wrote—"The Drum Beat". I cannot read it without a gush of grieving tears. Mr. Clemens came down at 3:00 o'clock today with the day's work finished. In 3 days he has done the work of 5 days—and it is so delicious. He read it to me as we sat in the living room. The appeal of the "duplicate" to be freed from his coating of flesh, so that his spirit can roam, is so beautiful and so moving, and fills you crashing full of the drive to go and go just as that spirit wishes to do. Mr. Clemens has given me the manuscript of the whole story again—to read and love again and again. He's going to make that book with just flavoring enough to suit the palate of the ordinary family, and when I said the ordinary family ought to have seasoning, he said they'd got to have it to make things really go. He's got some kittens in the manuscript that I was afraid he'd allow to be edited out [MTP TS 72-73].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Jean & Teresa left this morning at seven o'clock for Norfolk, going by way of Hartford. / Wrote the British Pharmacy in Florence for the address to the Sir Thomas Wardle / Whiskey" [MTP TS 22].

Samuel J. Elder of Elder & Whitman Attorneys wrote to Sam about extension of copyright matters. "Your favor of the 29 instant came duly to hand. / I am very hopeful that before long, certainly before the 'fatal forty-second year' of your copyright, that the copyright term will be much increased." He then quoted from a couple of letters from Edward Everett Hale, who had been fighting for extensions of his copyrights [MTP]. Note: Elder meant June 29, not "29 inst." Sam's of June 29 to Elder is not extant.

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam, with Jervis Langdon II adding a handwritten note. Charles enclosed a check for $120 for payment of two coupons each from the Park Co. Montana bonds and the Minneapolis General Electric Co. Jervis added: "The letter for Clara sent today in your care contains a similar check for coupons from bonds of hers..." [MTP].

John Larkin, attorney, wrote to Sam with the news that Gillis & Geoghegan contractors would "commence work immediately" on 21 Fifth Ave "and finish by August 1st". He had not heard from Katy Leary but assumed they'd already begun work [MTP].

John G. North, attorney, wrote from Riverside, Calif. to Sam. He noticed Sam's letter to J.M. Fulton about not being able to visit Reno for July 4, and that Sam had mentioned "unforgotten and unforgettable antiques" which included North's father, John W. North, "whom you first knew as United States Surveyor General, and afterward as Judge of the Territorial Court." North noted that his father retained a "most agreeable" memory of Clemens, up until his death in 1890 [MTP]. John W. North (1815-1890), appointed Surveyor General of Nevada Territory by Lincoln in June 1861. From 1862 to 1864 was an assoc. justice of the territorial supreme court [MTL 1: 189n12].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam. He related an account of a woman with a huge stomach tumor that the surgeons first had to drain, then related that to Sam's letters: "All right, Mark; go ahead. I give you free leave to syphon out to me all such recreations whenever they accumulate to the pitch of discomfort," and Joe thought it better that he caught them in "his pail" than in the NAR or at Rogers or Howells. Joe was, however, quite of Sam's mind in opinion about Grover Cleveland. "As to Theodore – he has yet three years left in which to get a smile on your face, and I guess he will do it." He had seen Clara last week and she looked and felt well. He declined to stay the night but said he would return sometime [MTP].

July 4 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Painted Shadows", I'm reading. Mr. Binner [sic Bynner] sat in front of me on the porch this afternoon. Mr. Binner— and..... He came with Mr. Faulkner. The same lovely eyes that I had been remembering. His talk is very, very good, and he called me "The Lion of St. Mark". I told Mr. Clemens of it when he came in from a Fourth of July punch with Mr. Pearmain, down the trail, and he laughed with a beautiful joy. You remember that singing laugh for days. Mr. Clemens had a pleasant time, and found Col. Higginson's daughter beautiful. He chatted during dinner and then afterward read more of that lovely story. The fading away of the Duplicate is beautiful. He walked the room, smoking his pipe and remembering back to his early literary days. It was brought up by his saying that Mr. Binner is living in such a good time, for the world is full now of young writers who admire each other just as the young writers admired each other in those early days, when they used to meet in Pfaff's cellar and have such good fun. Dr. Holmes and Emerson and those fine Boston men were a generation ahead of Mr. Clemens and he didn't see more of them than just to go up to Boston for their "seventy" birthdays. For himself there are only Mr. Howells and Mr. Aldrich, and he surprised me into recognizing the truth by telling me that he hasn't had much of a literary friendship with men, and he hasn't. Hartford is presumably between New York and Boston, but it isn't. After dinner we stood on the porch and looked off at the glowing west with such a slender girlish slip of a moon hung in it, and suddenly you remembered it was the Fourth of July, for a beautiful, graceful rocket soared with Monadnock for a background toward a heaven it couldn't reach—and burst in piteous despair to fall to earth again. Today down at Mr. Pearmain's Mr. Clemens was talking with a Harvard Professor who said that not long since a Yale graduate asked him what a "fortnight" was—and he knew of another graduate who didn't know who Jehovah was—knew he was mentioned in the Bible but didn't know what prophet he was. [MTP TS 73-74]. Note: Sumner Bass Pearmain (1859-1946), stock broker.

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam, that in writing his letter of July 3 he'd forgotten to tell about his visit to Pittsburg, where he lunched at the Dusquene Club with a "party of gentlemen," one of whom was the Hon. Judge Shiras of the US Supreme Court. The judge swore Joe had a striking resemblance to Twain, especially his profile. "Now put that in your pipe and smoke it." Joe thought that "blackwashing" should be a word, and the opposite of whitewashing, and that it could be applied to Twain's "discourse on Theodore" Roosevelt. He closed with the news he'd been trying a bit of Plasmon lately—"Is that a fact of any interest to you now?" [MTP]. Note: Judge George Shiras, Jr. (1832-1924); at press time for this volume, Shiras is the only Supreme Ct. Justice (1892-1903) to have no record of public service.

July 5 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight Mr. Clemens read the work of the day. It is strong, I wonder if it is too strong? But oh the interest of it. He could satisfy those who must be satisfied by only the most highly seasoned, stinging, racy, delicious, unforbidden literature. He could do it. When I think of what must be the thoughts boiling in that marvel of a brain, I'm sick to think that he cannot feed them out to strong men of the earth. The most remarkable things issue from the innocent lips of characters that he draws, and your eyes are opened. The world doesn't know what he is. It doesn't even suspect it [MTP TS 74].

Eugen Isolani wrote (in German) from Berlin, Germany to Clemens:

Berlin, July 8, 1905

Sehr geehrter Herr!

Ihr siebzigster Geburtstag soll von mir in verschiedenen deutschen Blättern durch einige Artikel gefeiert werden. Der Verleger der deutschen Ausgabe Ihrer Schriften, Herr Robert Lutz in Stuttgart, hat mich mit mancherlei biographischem Material über Sie ausgestattet, doch reicht das etwa bis zu Ihrem 60. Lebensjahr nur. Sollten Sie über das letzte Jahrzehnt Ihres Lebens [Erfreu?]-liches zu berichten haben, so würden Sie mich durch Mitteilung [?]erbind[ung?].

Vielleicht erinnern Sie sich noch flüchtig meiner, als eines Schriftstellers, und dem Sie nach einem Vortrage in Dresden, – es war wohl im Jahre 1892, – den Sie daselbst im Gewerbehaus hielten, eine kurze Unterredung hatten. Wir sprachen damals über das von Ihnen gewählte Thema über die deutsche Sprache, das leider bei den [??] Chauvinisten Mißfallen erregte.

Ich habe mir erlaubt, Ihnen in deutscher Sprache zu schreiben, da mein Englisch Ihnen vielleicht unverständlich sein würde. Sollte es Ihnen Mühe machen, in deutscher Sprache zu antworten, so bitte ich sich ungeniert des Englischen zu bedienen, da ich das Englische besser lese + verstehe als schreibe.

Recht baldiger Antwort entgegensehend

Eugen Isolani

Very esteemed Sir!

I intend to celebrate your seventieth birthday in a number of articles to be published in various German newspapers. The editor of the German edition of your writings, Herr Robert Lutz from Stuttgart, has made available to me a certain amount of biographical material which, however, ends with your sixtieth birthday. If you have anything [pleasant ?] to report about the final decade of your life, [I would be grateful if you would] communicate it to me.

Similarly, I ask you most politely to send me two portraits, preferably of a recent date, with your autograph, to be used in illustrated magazines.

Perhaps you remember me vaguely as a writer with whom you had a brief conversation after your lecture in the "Gewerbehaus" in Dresden – it was probably in 1892. At the time, we spoke about the topic you had chosen, the German language, which, unfortunately, caused displeasure to the [??] chauvinists.

I have taken the liberty to write to you in German because my English would be incomprehensible to you. If you find it difficult to respond in German, please do not hesitate to use English since I read + understand English better than I write it.

I look forward to hear from you soon and sign with respect

Eugen Isolani

July 6 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Adair Wilson, an old Virginia City acquaintance now in Durango, Colo. Adair had been on the staff of the Va. City Nevada Union.

Forty-two years—why, so it is! A long time, indeed. You & I have no business lingering here, the others are moving on, we are belated. My wife died 13 months ago, after a most dear comradeship of more than a generation; two very very old friends have followed her, & now John Hay, whom I had known longest of my eastern friends; of the early eastern comradeship he leaves behind only Howells & Aldrich. It is time for us to go, Adair, lest we have to travel that long road with strangers.

Last summer I was in a Fifth avenue bus, & opposite me sat a stately & most beautiful young woman, & she said we might quite properly chat together, as her father had known me very well a good many years ago. She was the daughter of the "Unreliable!" Think of it! It made me feel pretty old, you may be sure. / Goodby, & much love [MTP]. Note: See Aug. 11, 1863, Mar. 21, 1888 entries for more on Adair (1841-1912), whom Sam dubbed "The Unimportant." Clement T. Rice, reporter for the Virginia Daily Union, was "The Unreliable." See Vol. I entries.

Isabel Lyon's journal: There wasn't any manuscript to read this evening, for Mr. Clemens took a novel to bed with him last night. It was "The Accomplice by Frederic Trevor Hill, and he didn't go to sleep until past 2 o'clock. This morning he came down in a fine mood, and after looking at the pictures in the Boston Journal, out on the porch, he came into the dining room where I sat at the writing table, and as he swung up and down the room right under a plaster medallion of the Virgin, he let out what you ought to call a blasphemous blast that I mustn't write here. You'd call it a blasphemy, but it isn't, and it just shows that we're just the same as the old Greeks who believed in Jupiter and the schemes he invented to accomplish his ends. We're nothing more. Mrs. Thayer came in about half past five. Mr. Clemens was in Jean's room and I was playing "Oh du mein holder abendstern". After dinner, I played for a long time [MTP TS 74; Gribben 314 in part]. Note: she played this from Wagner's Tannhauser. Frederic Trevor Hill (1866-1930).

Frank J. Firth, president of the Erie & Western Transportation Co., Philadelphia, replied to Isabel Lyon:

I find your note of June 30th awaiting me on returning to my office this morning after several days absence.

I will be very glad, of course, to furnish Mr. Clemens with any identification satisfactory to himself and appreciate what you say about the trouble he has. I thought perhaps he might recall the fact that I addressed a similar communication to him in London several years ago, accompanied I think by a line of introduction from his friend and mine, the late Mr. Lawrence [sic Laurence] Hutton, and Mr. Clemens then kindly sent me a number of book plates with some of his autograph work that were useful in disposing of the books we subsequently offered at our Hospital sale.

If any further identification is needed after you communicate these facts to Mr. Clemens please let me know in what form you would like to have it [MTP]. See July 9 ca. for Sam's response.

July 7 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to William Winter.

We are too old, now, dear Winter, to rise out of our griefs; we must live with them the little time that is left us; the time when we could live separately from them is gone by; we laid our dead in tombs then, in the common graveyard, & lamented, & came away; but we bury them in our hearts, now, & remain & worship. / Have patience—it is not long, now [MTP]. Note: this seems a reply, but no recent from Winter is extant. Winter had lost a daughter and would dedicate a library to her, much as did H.H. Rogers to his daughter, Millicent.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Telegram [not extant] from Jean saying that she will stay in Norfolk until next week. Mr. Clemens had me telegraph [also not extant] Maj. Leigh to come up on Monday with Mr. Duneka. Mr. Clemens came down at 3 o'clock today, glad, and through with the day's work. He rested, smoking and reading until 4:30 when he went out to make calls. Called on Col. Higginson, Dr. Stowell, Mr. Dwight, Mrs. Learned and the Catlins. After dinner Mr. Clemens read. It was a good day's work, a noble day's work, and then somehow in the course of the talk that followed when Mr. Clemens spoke of Mr. Duneka being a Catholic, he mentioned that as a possible reason for the Harpers not wanting King Leopold's Soliloquy, but he went on to say that it is much more likely that Leopold has bought up the Harper silence, along with that of hundreds of other papers. It seems incredible. While Mr. Clemens was at Col. Higginson's this afternoon, Col. Higginson told him a delightful little tale about a burglary here in Dublin some time since. The two men who made the raid selected a good many valuable things but among the things were a book and a pipe. Mr. [George W.] Gleason went on their track and traced their wagon wheels to away over the other side of the village, 3 miles beyond. There the tracks stopped and breaking through the woods they found and seized the thieves in the cellar of an old house, that had burned some time ago. Their booty was hidden there and the two chaps were having a good time just then. One was smoking the pipe, the other reading the stolen book, and the book was "Innocents Abroad."

Today Col. Higginson told Mr. Clemens that a cultured woman here asked him if the "Recollections of Joan of Arc" was really intended as a burlesque [MTP TS 74-75].

Hamlin Garland wrote from West Salem, Wisc. to Sam, thanking him for his letter and praise on his recent book [MTP].

Henry Pemberton wrote from Dublin, N.H. wrote to Sam. "After my conversation with you about 'Simplissimus', I wrote to Schaefer & Koradi enquiring about it...Today I have received the accompanying letter from them, and a lot of sample copies..." Schaeffer & Koradi, Publishers & Booksellers, Phila. had written to Pemberton: "In answer to your favor of yesterday we send you to-day by mail a Catalogue of German Periodicals and sample numbers." [MTP].

July 8 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to an unidentified person in which he requested the addressee to contradict the report that Clemens was getting up an organization bearing the name "The American League of Honest Men." He wrote: "was trying to get it up, but circumstances interfered. It was my ambition to have it consist of two members, but was obliged to give it up" [MTP: Am. Art Assoc. catalog, Feb. 28, 1927, Item 110].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Headache. Mr. Clemens didn't do any writing today. Nearly all his time he spent on the porch, reading and smoking. Later he went down to call on Mr. Pemberton, and Mr. Thayer came back with him bearing a little wooden snipe so colored that he proved to a certain extent—something—the protective coloration theory. (Headache makes you not care about theories, and also makes you forget the things you want to remember.) Mr. Clemens is wearing the white suit that I sent to Katie for and it is very, very becoming to him. I had a letter from Jean today, and a note from C.C. [MTP TS 75].

An unidentified person wrote from Elmira, NY to Sam c/o Sue Crane, Quarry Farm. Only the env. survives, and it's in bad shape. Sam wrote on one end (part of the corner torn off): "Miss Louise Pratt [illegible/missing] / 30/Robinson Bldg / Her Co's "Benevolence" [MTP].

July 9 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

If the news is correct, things have turned the other way in Kansas, by direction of Providence, & I wish to congratulate upon this evidence of your continued popularity in that quarter. I wish I had your secret. It isn't righteousness, for I've tried that myself, & there's nothing in it.

It is warm weather at last, & it weakens me. I lose no day, but my output grows smaller daily. It has dwindled from high-water mark—32 pages a fortnight ago, one day—to 12 day before yesterday, 10 yesterday, & 8 to-day.

Clara & Jean are having delightful times in Norfolk, & I've told Jean to take her time & not hurry [MTHHR 588-9]. Note: Kansas had passed laws to restrict Standard Oil operations there, including construction of a state-owned refinery. On July 8, 1905 the state supreme court struck down the idea as unconstitutional [n1]. Among other things, Sam was working on the unfinished "3,000 Years Among the Microbes."

Isabel Lyon's journal: Heavy, weary brain. Mr. Clemens worked all the morning but he didn't read the ms. for he went down to Mr. Pearmain's house and they induced him to stay to supper with them. The young Robert Pearmain came home with him, lighting his way up the steep little trail with a lantern, and Mr. Clemens came in limp from the climb. I read ms., reread "The Mysterious Stranger." It is delightful. And this morning I sat in the beautiful heat reading to its finish that enchanting book, "Painted Shadows." It is exquisite.

The Saint so truly said of Le Gallienne as he lay in his bed in New York and I carried my new "Painted Shadows" in to him—"an able cuss who writes deliciously" [MTP TS 76]. Note: Painted Shadows (1904), by Richard Le Gallienne (1866-1947) [MTP TS 77; Gribben 405].

July 9 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon responded for Sam to Frank J. Firth's July 6 letter.

Mr. Clemens directs me to say that no further identification is necessary now that he remembers you—& that your letter head seemed respectable enough but he didn't know but you had borrowed it from somebody else, prepared them first & then got afraid—and now he sends them with great pleasure [MTP]. Note: MTP puts this "on or after July 6," this estimate allows time for the letter to arrive in N.H. from Philadelphia.

July 10 Monday – Sam wrote to G.E. Stechert & Co., New York, ordering a subscription to the German periodical, Simplicissimus; Illustrierte Wochenschrift. Sam's letter is not extant but referred to in the company's reply of July 12.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon Mr. Clemens came down with the day's ms. –"44" turns time backward in order to accommodate the ghosts who've been invited to the ghost dance.—He was so handsome as he sat reading with lovely color in his cheeks, and his eyes flashing. Such a delight.

Mr. Duneka arrive at 8:30. He is very, very nice, a Southerner. Mr. Clemens called me from my room after a while and I played until the electric lights went out—midnight—and I had to scurry for candles. At dinner Mr. Duneka said that Mr. Howells, Col. Higginson and Mr. Clemens had stood for such strength to him in his early days. Mr. Howells as the finality of fiction, Mr. Clemens as literature, and Col. Higginson as a great moral force [MTP TS 76].

Frederick A. Duneka visited Clemens to see if he had anything for the next winter's book trade. At this point Sam had once again put aside work on The Mysterious Stranger (he had taken it up again only on June 29) and turned to "Eve's Diary" [Tuckey, "The 'Me' and the Machine" 136; Hill 111]. Note: on July 16 to Clara, Sam referred to Duneka's visit of "the other day" Duneka, a devout Catholic, "shriveled up over the first part of Forty-Four because there is that evil priest Father Adolph in it" [111].

John Larkin wrote to Sam. "I enclose herewith my check to your order for $50. sent to me by Mr. Forgy as per his enclosed letter which kindly read and return. I also enclose herewith eight notes for $100. each, payable $100 per annum" [MTP]. Note: Sanford Wilson was the purchaser of the Archer Co. Texas property acquired by Livy.

John A. Scott wrote from Tyngham, Mass. on New Public Library letterhead, urging Clemens to return for "Old Home Week," Aug. 7-13 [MTP].

July 11 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote a squib to Harper's Weekly Editor, which ran in the Aug. 12 issue.

"DIOGENES AND HIS LANTERN"

NEW YORK, July 11 1905.

To the Editor of Harper's Weekly:

SIR,—I was not surprised to observe in your last issue an advertisement from old man Diogenes, offering his lantern for sale, cheap. Don't imagine he has given up the hunt he has prosecuted for so many years. Not on your life, as boys say. He has merely waked up to the fact that the times are more strenuous, and his lantern is behind the times, and it takes more than a mere light of that sort to find the kind of man he wants nowadays. I happen to know that he placed an order with a certain large firm last week for a search-light of a good many horse-power, to be operated by the latest electrical devices.

I am, sir, OBSERVING PHILOSOPHER [Harper's Weekly Aug. 12, 1905].

H.H. Rogers wrote to Sam from N.Y.C. acknowledging his letter of July 9. He encouraged Sam to "sail down to Fairhaven and build yourself up."

I am very sorry that you are not able to do more work than you state, but the truth is you are like Lawson, — you are played out; he has lost his voice because he has nothing further to say. You need inspiration. Come down to the factory and get it.

I send you herewith a check for $4731.25. I think you ought to give about a quarter of it to the man whom I am reminded of when I think of that old Negro song: "Ole Joe kickin up ahind and afore; Yaller Gal kickin' up ahind Ole Joe," etc., etc.

Rice was with us last night, as cheerful and as disagreeable as ever. He has an opinion of you which I would not dare to express in a letter. ...[MTHHR 589-90].

Notes: Thomas W. Lawson (1857-1924), muckraker journalist, wrote articles running serially in Everybody's Magazine since July 1904 denouncing Rogers. Lawson followed the articles with a speaking tour, but lost his voice after two stops. See n1 source. The check was profit from Wall Street investments, sent so that Sam could take credit for a $1,500 contribution to Joe Twichell, who was having financial problems. See July 13 to Twichell.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "All day Mr. Clemens and Mr. Duneka have talked. After lunch Mr. Clemens spoke of the nice example of protective coloration that came into his own experience this morning" [MTP TS 76].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens received notes for $100 each sent by W.E. Forgy, Texas lawyer, for Sanford Wilson who has bought the Texas property" [MTP TS 23].

John Larkin, attorney, wrote to Sam, enclosing a letter from Howells & Stokes about the heating system at 21 Fifth Ave. [MTP].

Marshall Pinckney Wilder (1859-1915) wrote a small card to Sam that does not appear to have been mailed, perhaps delivered: "I am just mailing you my book. I know just how busy you are but you have always been such a good friend to me I wanted you to know I did not forget you" [Gribben 770; MTP]. Note: Gribben identifies the book as The Sunny Side of the Street (1905).

July 12 Wednesday – Clemens began Eve's Diary for the Christmas issue of Harper's [Hill 112; also IVL Journal entry below].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today Mr. Clemens began "Eve's Diary." He read what he wrote this morning, and it is so darling. Mr. Duneka suggested that he write it to be published at Christmas time with the "Adam's Diary." Mr. Clemens has tried the Eve's Diary several times, but it never went right and now Mr. Clemens says he's got the right swing—Mr. Duneka shriveled up over the first part of "Forty Four" because there is that evil priest Father Adolph in it [MTP TS 76]. Note: Trombley claims he wrote Eve's Diary in just six days, July 12-18 [MTOW 69].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Dunek left today at 6:15 A.M. Mr. Clemens returns the Texas notes to Mr. Larkin..." [MTP TS 23].

In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Katharine I. Harrison, requesting she transfer $1,500 from the Guaranty Trust Co. to Lincoln National Bank, and adding a PS that he was well [MTP].

G.E. Stechert & Co., New York importer and book dealer, wrote to Sam acknowledging his July 10 order for subscription to Simplicissimus; Illustrierte Wochenschrift, a Munich, Germany periodical [MTP].

July 13 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

That check comes mighty handy, & I am exceedingly obliged, I do assure you. I am communicating with that ole Joe who is given to kickin' up behine & befo.'

Don't you tempt me! You make me want to come to Fairhaven, "the factory," in spite of the fact that I am very busy writing two books & a booklet—"Eve's Diary." When the weather gets cooler, I'm coming. Jean is with Clara at Norfolk; her account of the best of the journey fairly exhausts me. I was to have gone with her, but the thermometer appalled me & I dropped out of the game at the last moment. This is an easy summer for me but a tough one for you, & I haven't a doubt that you are "but a shadow" of what you were. Well, we must go to Nantucket—maybe that would help Mrs. Rogers as much as Europe.

Jesus! but I had a narrow escape. Suppose you had gone into humor instead of oil—where would I be? [MTHHR 591].

Sam also wrote to Joe Twichell.

I want you to accept this $1500 conscience-money if you will, as it marks the turning of a reform-corner for me: I've been into Wall street again in a small way & am out again with a profit of $4,700 & am not going in any more. This profit is tainted money; & lies heavy on my conscience; but I remember with a spiritual uplift that other new convert who found that her jewelry was dragging her down to hell, so she gave it to her sister Mary [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The "Eve's Diary" is beautiful. Mr. Clemens has made her such a lovable creature and so innocent and so human. "The same old sex" he said, when I said "Oh, but she's a woman."

Tonight as I finished playing the Cavatina Roff Mr. Clemens said "Patrick must take one or more of the girls to church every Sunday. He must see to it or this house will be damned or struck by lightning, and we haven't any insurance on it."

Tonight Mr. Clemens was talking of Mr. Rockefeller, and said that at a meeting of a board of Directors, Mr. Rockefeller would sit stolidly when the other directors would talk and shout themselves hoarse, and pull hairs out of his beard and lay them along on his knee. When the men had stopped their haranging, Mr. Rockefeller would brush the bristles off his knee and in a few words, a very few, settle the whole affair [MTP TS 77-79].

July 14 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "After the Fall"—Mr. Clemens read tonight and Eve sums up all the reasons why she could love Adam, but doesn't. It's something else. It's because he's hers, dear little Eve. Tonight at dinner Mr. Clemens talked about Mahommed [sic] and the wonder of him [MTP TS 78].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Wrote Mr. Duneka, suggesting that the word 'Damn' be struck from the title of You're a Damnfool Mary, you always was" [MTP TS 23].

Harmony Twichell (Mrs. Joseph H. Twichell) wrote to Sam. "Dear Mark—/ My deepest thought or desire is to be silent, for what can I say! / From being under a burden—which we could carry—we are free!" [MTP].

July 15 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Clemens heard a “bright little Japanese gentleman” give a talk in the nearby club house, among 50 or 60 ladies. Sam was asked to give a talk [July 16 to Clara; IVL Journal entry below].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tonight Jean came home. I drove over to Harrisville for her. Tired and big eyed and pale and hungry and full of C.C. and doings. Ugo is back again in the employ of Casa Clemens. This afternoon Mr. Clemens went down to a little Japanese lecture given at the Club house, and afterward he held a reception and had such a beautiful time. He came back radiant and enthusiastic and beautiful. Just the kind of audience that he loves and he did wish that Jap lecturer would be suddenly a little ill so that he could get up and talk, and he promised Mrs. McKittrick that he would get up and talk another time, but he cancelled it when he got him, for he’d have to consult the children first [MTP TS 78]. Note: Mrs. Margaret McKittrick.

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: Letter from Gen [Geo] Grantham Bain, 15 Park Row, Asking for a recent portrait & a picture of Mr. Clemens at Various Ages to be sent to the Strand Magazine—Sent him a Rockwood photo, and referred him to Harper for the others. Sent his letter & Mr Duneka Jean arrived today [MTP TS 23]. Note: George Grantham Bain (1865-1944), NY photographer, known as “the father of foreign photographic news,” founded the first news photography service Bain News Service in 1898.

Joe Twichell wrote from Hartford to Sam, still stunned by the check and acknowledging Sam’s benefaction. Harmony was even more joyous as Joe confessed financial pressures affected her more [MTP].

July 16 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Virginia Frazer Boyle in Memphis, Tenn.

We are here for 6 months, & shall go home when the cold drives us. I shall find your book there if it doesn’t come here—& there is the right place, for I do not read anything that is interesting when I am at work, because it breaks my thread, & summer is my work-time. I have lost only one day of the 60-odd that I have had here. The resulting stack of manuscript is pretty high.

When shall I arrive down there? I am very close to 70, now, & I don’t suppose I shall ever make another journey. I beg you to give my cordial regards to your husband, & thank him for thinking so well of my work. Sometimes I don’t admire it myself after it gets into print, but I like others to admire it.

Jean is here with me, but Clara is spending a year & a half in a rest-cure in Connecticut. Jean came yesterday from a visit there, & brings a good report from specialist & nurse.

Jean & I wish to remember ourselves most kindly to you [MTP]. Note: Boyle’s 1905 book, Serena, A Novel is the likely book referred to [Gribben 80].

Sam also wrote to daughter Clara.

Clärchen dear, Jean arrived yesterday afternoon per a succession of belated trains & was tired out and famished. But she is up & entirely restored & satisfactory to-day. She doesn’t bring as good a report of you as I would like, but she thinks you will improve—so mote it be!

At the nice little club house in the woods by the lake they had a talk yesterday afternoon by a bright Japanese gentleman & I went & heard it. It was an exceedingly nice & attractive audience of 50 or 60—chiefly ladies—and I held the usual reception. They asked me if I wouldn’t do a talk presently, & I said I would if all mention of it could be kept out of print—but I took that back & said I must have your consent & Jean’s first.

My idea is a talk, from a page of skeleton notes, upon the construction of the human mind & its methods of procedure—a subject that is full of meat, & surpassingly interesting. What do you think of the project, dear?

When Duneka was here the other day [July 12] he wanted me to write Eve’s Diary for the Xmas Harper, & I said I would think about it & let him know. I wrote upon it 3 days—6,500 or 7,000 words, (Adam’s is only 4,500.)

I like it. But it makes Adam's Diary seem coarse & poor. Eve has no unrefinements, either of conduct or speech, & I think she's charming. Miss Lyon says she reminds her of you all the time. I suppose certain qualities of her nature & character, she means—and what you would be in Eve's place: immature, & very ignorant.

I think the Diary is finished, Miss Lyon thinks not. I will wait a day or two or a week or two & see. Meantime I will go back to "The Mysterious Stranger" or to the "Adventures of a Microbe"—the former, I think.

I made the notes for that (possible) talk to-day, but I did no work yesterday, for I waited for Eve to speak & she didn't; I thought she might speak to-day, but she didn't. If she doesn't speak tomorrow I will go at those other books.

Jean & I are going calling, now. / Love to you, dear ashcat. / Father [MTP].

Note: Sam did give a talk, likely for this group. A. Hoffman writes of it but gives no date nor citation for the quote used, though he contends it was Sam's first public comments in a year. It would have been sometime after this letter and before his trip to Norfolk, Conn. Aug. 9.

"Agreeing to speak at a benefit for a cause that interested his Monadnock neighbors, Mark Twain's first public appearance in over a year, he rolled halfway through an anecdote until the clicking of knitting needles arrested Sam mid-thought. He declared, 'I have never had the pleasure of playing second fiddle to a sock, so I'll stop speaking! I suggest that you all knit more socks and sell them for your charity.'" [465]. Hill also cites this event but gives it as 1906, which would negate Hoffman's contention that it was his first appearance in a year; Hill also fingers the knitter as the daughter of Thomas Wentworth Higginson [117].

Sam also wrote to Frederick A. Duneka.

Dear Mr. Duneka,—I wrote Eve's Diary, she using Adam's Diary as her (unwitting and unconscious) text, of course, since to use any other text would have been an imbecility—then I took Adam's Diary and read it. It turned my stomach. It was not literature; yet it had been literature once—before I sold it to be degraded to an advertisement of the Buffalo Fair. I was going to write and ask you to melt the plates and put it out of print.

But this morning I examined it without temper, and saw that if I abolished the advertisement it would be literature again.

So I have done it. I have struck out 700 words and inserted 5 MS pages of new matter (650 words), and now Adam's Diary is dam good—sixty times as good as it ever was before.

I believe it is as good as Eve's Diary now—no, it's not quite that good, I guess, but it is good enough to go in the same cover with Eve's. I'm sure of that.

I hate to have the old Adam go out any more—don't put it on the presses again, let's put the new one in place of it; and next Xmas, let us bind Adam and Eve in one cover. They score points against each other—so, if not bound together, some of the points would not be perceived. . . .

P. S. Please send another Adam's Diary, so that I can make 2 revised copies. Eve's Diary is Eve's love-Story, but we will not name it that. / Yrs ever, ... [MTP]. Note: Sam took up Eve's Diary on July 12.

Sam also wrote to John Y. MacAlister in London. He began by expressing sympathy for both Mr. and Mrs. MacAlister's health. Then reflected on their tough year:

So it has been a long year for us, & not without anxiety. Clara's horse ran away the other day, & that gave me a scare, but it turned out that Clara was not along at the time—it was only strangers that were endangered, & I don't so much mind strangers.

We like it here in the mountains in the shadow of Monadnock. It is a woodsy solitude. We have no near neighbors. I arrived May 20, & have turned out considerably more than 100,000 words & the mill is still grinding cheerfully.

We have neighbors, & I can see their houses scattered in the far distance, for we live /on a hill. I am astonished to find that I have known 8 of these 14 neighbors a long long time—10 years, is the shortest; then seven beginning with 25 years & running up to 37 years' friendship. It is the most remarkable thing I ever heard of.

With great love to you & to Mrs. Mac Alister— [MTP]. Note: Paine mistook the second and third paragraphs above as to Twichell [MTB 1238].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean told me much about C.C. [Clara]. There seems to be a tragic something hanging near. Some fate that is coursing along in their blood, and waiting to drop with a clutch at their hearts. Today Mr. Clemens wrote Mr. Duneka about correcting on Adam's Diary and the eventual joint publication of Adam's & Eve's Diaries [MTP TS 78].

From 5 to 8 p.m. Sam and daughter Jean called on neighbors [July 17 to Clara].

July 17 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara.

You dear, read these & return them.

No, there is no need of "private"—no one will open your letter. Do not write about the letters—it is a secret of mine—just return them without comment.

Jean & I were out from 5 yesterday until 8, calling, & had a good time. We sup with Raphael Pumpelly this evening.

This morning I gutted the old "Adam's Diary" & removed every blemish from it, & now it is clean & refined & good, & will offend no one. Miss Lyon voted against the revision, but she wouldn't vote against it now. I've read it to her. / I love you, dear! [MTP].

Note: Raphael Pumpelly (1837-1923), American geologist, anthropologist and explorer, was influenced by Louis Agassiz. He was Professor of Mining Science at Harvard, and resident of Newport, R.I. for 44 years; he spent his summers in the Dublin area near Mt. Monadnock (3,165 ft), which Jean Clemens climbed. Pumpelly blazed a trail from his house to the summit that still bears his name.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon Mr. Clemens came downstairs with the news that he has revised the "Adam's Diary." He read it to me as we sat on the porch, and it is very lovely. He has eliminated the harshnesses. He told me that when he wrote it in Florence years ago that it was literature then, but he was requested to change it, and so he put in things about Niagara Falls and Buffalo to make it an advertisement, and satisfy some man. Adam's recognition of Eve's beauty is very lovely. I think Mr. Clemens grows fuller of poetry all the time, certainly there is no greater man than he. He says terrible, terrible things of the human race—but in the next breath, he melts with sweetness over some human deed. He makes your heart stand still with terror, over the things he can say [MTP TS 78-80].

S. Smallwood wrote a postcard from Moss Fields, England to ask Sam about his description of the Sphinx in IA, where he had described it as having "the tail of a fish in the lower part, the body with wings, & a human head." No other description she'd found painted it this way, but with the figure of a lion and a human head. Did he still feel he was correct? [MTP].

Sam and daughter Jean dined with Mr. and Mrs. Raphael Pumpelly [Gribben 562: IVL Journal entry July 18]. See Oct. 9 for info. on Pumpelly.

July 18 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Yesterday Mr. Pumpelly called because Mr. Clemens and Jean dined there last night, and he paid such interesting respects to "Casa Clemens," and I was the only one to hear them. He is tall and white bearded with a fine blue eye, and he's handsome to look upon. He has been every where too. Mr. Clemens says that Mr. P. is two years younger than he. Today Mr. Clemens walked up and down the porch—looking off at those hills and all that wondrous sky—such a glory of a sky, and he said, "Eve's Diary is finished. I've been waiting for her to speak, but she doesn't say anything more." How beautiful, beautiful that is, and oh, the harmony of it [MTP TS 80].

July 19 before – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to George Porter. "Mr. Clemens has read the play & is greatly interested. He would like to talk with you. Name your day & hour" [MTP]. See July 23 entry.

July 19 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: I left at 6:40 this morning to drive to Marlboro, and go thence by trolley and train to New York, to buy clothes for Jean. Mother got on the train at Hartford and went as far as New Haven with me, and we had such a dear good talk.

The heat is terrible. It was 94 in the shade when I reached N.Y. and the heat of the pavements blistered my feet.

I went down to the house to find Katie and her niece, Marguerite. The house all torn up, they’re putting in furnaces [MTP TS 80].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam. “Mr. Baldwin told me yesterday that the Plasmon case will come up before Judge Holt, in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York, next week, and will be finally decided...some time this month either for or against us.” Ashcroft wrote that Baldwin wanted to appeal if it went against them. Ashcroft also enclosed a statement of his expenditures re; the Plasmon controversy, totaling $1,269.18 [MTP]. Note: William Woodward Baldwin, Plasmon attorney.

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam, thinking it “great news and splendid” that Eve would tell her story in the fashion of Adam’s Diary. The Niagara Falls references would be “melted away” as Sam suggested. He hoped to see it soon to arrange an artist for the magazine and book pictures [MTP].

George Murray for The Standard, a Montreal paper, wrote to Sam. He was going to make the paper a weekly and asked for “a few lines, in prose or verse, over your own name or for anonymous publication, on any subject,” etc. He left payment amount up to Sam [MTP].

George Porter wrote to Sam asking to call next Saturday a.m. to see him about his play on JA [MTP]. Sam wrote on the note, “Told him to come Sunday or after, & give me notice”

J.R. Van Wormer for Lincoln Safe Deposit Co. sent a receipt certificate to Sam for depositing for Jean Clemens, “One chest and two tin boxes of valuables” valued at “Two thousand dollars,” for the rent of $2.50 per month [MTP].

July 20 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Ralph W. Ashcroft.

Appeal the case, as Mr. Baldwin advises, if it goes against us. I suggest that you do write Mr. Broughton & ask him to keep fresh in his memory the substance of Wheeler & Hammond’s remarks about your capacity as a liar, etc., that day at the luncheon at the Midday Club. It was most unfair treatment of an absent man before strangers; Broughton is a gentleman by birth, breeding, & nature & cannot have sympathy with that kind of conduct. You are free to say I strongly advised you to write him, if you like... [MTP: Christie’s East catalogs, Nov. 12, 1997 Item 24]. Note: See entries: Dec. 1901, Mar. 17, 1902, May 1903, Aug. 1904 regarding warring factions within the American side of the Plasmon Co.

Sam also wrote two letters to Frederick A. Duneka. The first:

Good. Adam’s Diary, revised, corrected and improved, is ready to go to you & the artist. Miss Lyon will start it along when she returns. I have been waiting several days to see if Eve wishes to add anything to her Diary, but thus far she is silent. If she doesn’t speak between now & Sunday, I shall consider that she isn’t going to say anything more—then Miss Lyon will mail her Diary to you along with Adam revised.

Ever so many thanks for the razors, which are fine [MTP].

The second:

Miss Lyon sent the enclosed crossed-out plagiarism to you, I think or to the Weekly, —but she is out of reach, in New York & won’t be back before to-morrow night.

But never mind, all I want is, that you shall burn it & print the enclosed “Lantern for Sale” in the Weekly instead.

I mean to STOP rushing things off before they've had a chance to get to the wastebasket where they belong [MTP]. Note: See July 11 and Aug 5 entries.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Last evening Wallis and I dined at Cecchina's in her nice little garden restaurant, and Wallis made some faces at the sour wine. Then we had our usual stroll up 5th Avenue.

I just had to have a hansom to do all the shopping that was on my list, and all day I went steadily. The heat is exhausting [MTP TS 81]. Note: Wallis is unidentified.

George B. Harvey, just back from England wrote to Sam that the Harpers shop was "somewhat of a hospital," with Leigh down with fever and Duneka "pretty well fagged out." He was happy about the forthcoming Eve's Diary [MTP].

July 21 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Today I set out for Dublin again, achieving all I planned to do. I reached the house at 8:30 to find Mr. Clemens and Jean having supper with Mr. and Mrs. Learned. Oh, the peace of the hills, the purity of the air, only I am too exhausted to know [MTP TS 81].

July 22 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon [4 p.m.] Mr. Clemens spoke before the members of the Dublin Lake Club. It was all a surprise to them. They had imagined Mr. Thayer would speak. He was such a delight. I had never heard him before in public—so didn't know that side of the magic of him. He touched on "Eve's Diary," and Eve's characteristics, and then he spoke of the caprices of memory, introducing one delightful anecdote after another. I didn't want to know what subject he was going to speak on, so I didn't ask. He is so wonderful. I turned and looked toward the back of the house when we first went in, and he stood with Mr. Pumpelly. They were wonderful to look at—both of them. The embodiment of white—pure, strong, masterful years. Both of them wore pure soft white to enhance their physical whiteness. All these days Mr. Clemens is wearing white, and it's the best ever. Both of them pure, but one of them purest—because the flame of life burns so strongly in men with their brain force, and their magnetism, and so I was uplifted and borne away up over all the others and just didn't care about anything—only to see how people appreciated him, and a lot of them did. Col. Higginson made a charming and graceful introductory speech. A speech full of the homage that Mr. Clemens so justly deserves [MTP TS 81].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam, concerned about a squib Sam wrote for publication called "The American League of Honest Men," and forwarding a proof of same. The scrap was to be used in a forthcoming Harper's Weekly "Correspondence" column, but Sam withdrew it before publication, substituting for it his burlesque advertisement "Lantern for Sale" (published anonymously in the "Correspondence" column for 5 August 1905) [MTP]. Note: withdrawn squib, under the first aforementioned title:

Sir,—It will be a great favor to me if you will contradict the report that I am getting up an organization to bear the above title. It is true that until recently I was trying to get it up, but circumstances interfered. It was my ambition to have it consist of two members, but was obliged to give it up. / Very truly yours, MARK TWAIN.

July 23 Sunday – George Porter, playwright who had written a play on Joan of Arc, The Maid, A Drama in Five Acts (1904), visited Sam in Dublin, N.H. [Gribben 554: Note on July 19 from Porter]. On the inside of Porter's July 19 letter Miss Lyon wrote, "He came—Sunday-July 23rd and brought the play of Joan of Arc—and some sweet peas. He was chilled to the bones & shivering, so Mr. Clemens put his own cape about his shoulders, & gave him whiskey... / But oh dear— / He didn't come to any point. He wanted to produce the play in Paris, and kept on saying that he wanted it—However [her note ends here] then on another page, "man walked with a movement like a Te Deum."

Isabel Lyon's journal (from July 24): "Last night Mr. Clemens had supper down with Mr. and Mrs. Pearmain, I had music. It was good, too" [MTP TS 81]

July 24 Monday – On or after this day in Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote a short note for Sam to reply to George B. Harvey's July 22 (below). "Mr. Clemens has already stopped this & has sent something. Very sorry to hear that Maj. Leigh is ill, & that Col H is well If Mr. Duneka cannot stand the Hell—then compromise on Sheol" [MTP]. Note: MTP places this as "on or after July 22" the date of Harvey's incoming. Same day delivery from NYC to Dublin, N.H. was unlikely, so it is estimated on or after this day.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today Mr. Clemens hasn't worked at all. He came down stairs, and talked with me for a long time about the wonders of Darwin, and he strikes so into the heart of things. He went off to call on Col. Higginson this afternoon and came back to find the Misses Hardy here. It has been a memorable day because he has talked so much and he makes you to see visions. Oh such visions when the silver flow of his speech starts. Oh, but he lives a strong inner life [MTP TS 82].

July 25 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: He spoke yesterday morning of the gradual shifting of portions of the earth's surface. The infinitesimal disintegration of a mountain heavy as the Himalayas, and he made you see the thousands and thousands of years it would take, and the time—Oh, you didn't see years, you just saw the solemn embodiment of time. Oh, so majestic, and you were down on your spirit knees worshipping. Oh, the divine flame, that blows here now—now there. It isn't a spark, it's a flame of wondrous beauty and you are warmed into worship by it [MTP TS 82].

July 26 Wednesday – Jean Clemens' 25th birthday.

In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Muriel M. Pears.

With great pleasure I inclose letter to Mr. Carnegie, & shall hope it will accomplish my desire.

I was very glad to see your hand, for I was afraid you had got lost on your way home.

We like it here beyond measure, & shall be sorry to go back to New York in November. That home there is all torn up again, from roof to cellar & from front to rear, to put in new heating-arrangements, & poor old Katy is staying there superintending—and roasting. Miss Lyon went down last week to drive her up here, but she wouldn't come. You won't freeze, next time, when you come—which we hope will be soon.

It is not so well with Clara. We get no letters any more, except from the trained nurse. It is one of those intervals that come in nervous prostration when a whole year's progress vanishes in a week & the patient work must all be done over again.

Jean is prospering & sends you her best love. She spends half of her day in the saddle, the other half at my type-writing, & drives me about the country to suppers in the evenings—there are no dinners, & I don't go to lunches, because I don't eat in the daytime.

Come back soon! [MTP].

Sam also began a letter to H.H. Rogers that he added a PS to on July 27.

I ought to be clear our of patience with Clara, but I'm not, for I find she is sick & cannot attend to things. I sent her the letters which came from Joe & Harmony Twichell, telling her to return them immediately—oh, many days ago! I wanted her to see what a generous father she's got, & what grateful praises people whom he has saved from dire distress can pour out on him. I didn't tell her it was you, but by & by I want to tell her, when I have your consent, then I shall want her to remember the letters. I want a record there, as she is to prepare my Life & Letters when I am dead, & must be able to furnish the facts about the Relief-of-Lucknow-Twichell, in case I fall suddenly, before I get those facts with your consent before the Twichells themselves.

I read those letters with immense pride! I recognized that I had scored one good deed for sure on my halo-account. I hope the letters will come very soon, for I want to send them to you. I haven't had anything that tasted so good, since stolen water melon [MTHHR 591-2]. Note: Sam had sent Clara the thank you letters from the Twichells for the $1,500 contribution that Rogers made secretly through Sam.

Twichell, through his own prodigal charities, had fallen into debt, a fact which Rogers knew. Rogers was a man who concealed his philanthropies when he could, and he performed many of them of which the world will never know. In this case he said:

"Clemens, I want to help Twichell out of his financial difficulty. I will supply the money and you will do the giving. Twichell must think it comes from you.

Clemens agreed to this on the condition that he be permitted to leave a record of the matter for his children, so that he would not appear in a false light to them, and that Twichell should learn the truth of the gift, sooner or later. So the deed was done, and Twichell and his wife lavished their thanks upon Clemens, who, with his wife, had more than once been their benefactors, making the deception easy enough now. Clemens writhed under these letters of gratitude, and forwarded them to Clara in Norfolk, and later to Rogers himself [MTB 1241].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens isn't working these days. He's tired. He's lying fallow. He has found the secret upon which to hang a lecture, and make everything he wants to say bear a relation to the anecdote just given—and that is the memory caprice, all the kinds of memory that there are—memory of touch, sight, sound, taste or smell and it makes a fine theme upon which to work [MTP TS 82].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Sent check today to Mrs. J.S. Copley Green, for rent of Dublin house for May, June, & July—$600" [MTP TS 24].

Thomas Nelson Page wrote from York Harbor, Maine to Sam that an old friend of his, Jeffrey Parsons, was one of Sam's Dublin neighbors and "naturally he and I want him to know you." Parson's "foible" was prints and old books [MTP].

July 27 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam added a PS to his July 26 to H.H. Rogers.

P. S. July 27'05

Here the letters are, at last! Clara thought she had sent them to me. I am hurrying them off to you, because I dasn't read them again, I would blush to my heels to fill up with this unearned gratitude again, pouring out of the thankful hearts of these poor swindled people, who do not suspect you, but honestly believe I gave that money! [MTHHR 592]. Note: see July 26 to Rogers note.

In N.Y.C. H.H. Rogers replied to Sam's July 13 (with "Jesus! but I had a narrow escape").

I wish you would improve your spelling or get other people to. Either you are right and everybody else wrong, or everybody else is right in the present case and you are wrong.

The offensive remarks about being in the oil business and my changing places with you will be kept in mind until we meet.

If you do not want to come to Fairhaven, why don't you say so? Why this indefinite talk? Why this feigned sickness? Rice has been to Fairhaven with Calomel and leeches for two weeks, hoping to get relief himself by experimenting on you.

.... You need not waste any sympathy on Rice any more. He has graduated as a professional at poker.

The weather is hot and everybody is cross and I think that if you were here your amiability would be drawn on.

I cannot imagine what you are writing unless it is that you are apologizing for what you have done all these years. I knew your conscience would be touched up some time but hardly felt that you would do yourself justice. When the watermelons are ripe send us some. We are saving some cantaloups for you... [MTHHR 593-4].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Santissima has given me a creed. No—a watchword, "Never take anything for granted." Kipling has given me another in his story "An Habitation Enforced", or rather he has forcibly put into two words what I say often to myself in many words—"Wayte A. Whyte". It's the only true way to live. When you're lying at night with weary wakeful eyes waiting for the dawn, just say "Wayte A. Whyte" [MTP TS 82]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Little Play in Mr. J.L. Smith's Little Playhouse" [MTP TS 24].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to thank Sam for his corrections of "Adam's Diary," and for the new MS of "Eve's Diary," which he felt was "fresh as the dawn, a very sweet and beautiful idyl." He thought Harvey might be in Sam's neighborhood in about ten days [MTP].

July 28 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Helena Gilder (Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder).

Dear Mrs. Gilder—I can see by Clara’s letter that she was standing in deep need of mothering, & that in the nick of time you fulfilled that gracious & beautiful office & tided her over the hard place—& by her words I see that she is very grateful, & I hope that you will see by mine that I am, also. She feels the weight of an anniversary just as her mother did before her, & she “had been really ill with depression for some time, & was reaching a point of desperation” when you called her.

That was a good thought, & I am glad it came to you.

I have been here 59 days, & can show 70 full days’ work for it—which shows that I have hardly been outside the house [That is, in working hours.] I do really go out feeding, very often, evenings, & once I came near going to church. I think it was in May, but it might have been June. They took up a collection [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: This afternoon we went down to a delightful little play, given in Mr. Joe Smith’s “Teatro Bambino”. It was just Mr. Smith and children—3 pairs of dear boy twins and little Margaret Pearmain. After the pretty little play the guests wandered to the garden, such a pretty garden with real Italian trimmings. Lucca Della Robbia copies, and a font and a shrine to the virgin. All very lovely. At the play Mr. Clemens sat in a tiny box next to Mrs. Jack Gardiner. Later I talked with Col. Higginson and Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart. Col. Higginson is a stately figure—with the calmness of memory you have of Emerson. He’s of that school, and 83 years old [MTP TS 82-83]. Note: Lucca della Robbia (1399/1400- 1482), Italian sculptor from Florence. Albert Bushnell Hart (1854-1943), historian, prolific writer, educator. He became known as the “Grand Old Man” of American History, and a devoted friend of Theodore Roosevelt. See one book listed in Gribben, p. 297.

Henry Copley Greene wrote from Sanderstown, R.I. to Miss Lyon, thanking for the $600 check for rent of his Dublin house for May through July. Did she know if Sam wanted to return to the house for the next summer? [MTP].

On or after this date in Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon responded for Sam to Greene, on his July 28 letter.

Mr. Clemens wishes me to thank you for your very kind note, & to tell you how glad he is to know that there is a possibility of his having your house another summer.

Of course he cannot tell what his plans may have to be by that time, but he hopes that you will give him the refusal of the house if you decide not to come here yourselves [MTP].

July 29 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Tonight Mr. Clemens and Jean dined at the Leightons” [MTP TS 83].

July 30 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote a note to George B. Harvey and attached it to a typed Installment of Mark Twain’s Autobiography.

Dear Harvey: I have corrected this September instalment. Please transfer the corrections to your duplicate, then send this one to “Miss Clara Clemens, Norfolk, Conn.” I think she will add no corrections, but it is best to send it anyway; for she is naturally violent, & if you ever print one of these without letting her give it the seal of her final supervision & authority, somebody’s scalp will disappear—probably yours. Do this, & oblige / Your uncle [MTP]. Note: that Sam would allow Clara to edit any of his writing for publication bespeaks of his estimate of her improvement.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today Mr. Clemens and Jean lunched with Mrs. P.[aul] L. Ford and tonight they dined with the Franklin MacVeaghs. Mr. Clemens is exhausted by these social functions. He came home from Mrs. Ford’s weak and almost discouraged, and went right up to bed to rest for the evening. It was raining hard, and in the midst of the pour Mr. Thayer came tiptoeing in with a book for Mr. Clemens. At the MacVeagh’s tonight they trapped Mr. Clemens into telling stories. It wasn’t a kind thing to do.

Later—Aug. 6. We have since heard that whoever has a song and dance must perform it for the MacVeaghs, and that explains [MTP TS 83]. Franklin MacVeagh (1837-1934), banker; brother to Wayne MacVeagh, became Secretary of Treasury in 1909 under Taft.

Augustus P. Chamberlaine wrote to Sam. The Chamberlaines had been using the Dublin area for their summer home for 25 years—"We are glad that you have chosen this good, solitary, old mountain for your summer rest"[MTP].

On or after this date in Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Augustus P. Chamberlaine.

"Perhaps Jean will ride over with Patrick within a day or so, & ask them to drive over for luncheon here. Any day Mr. Chamberlaine may suggest. Mr. Clemens would go to Fitzwilliam, but he is not equal to a long drive, and he wants to see the Chamberlaine's" [MTP].

Frank H. Mason wrote from Berlin, Germany to Sam. Samuel Moffett had been there "a few days before" with a letter of introduction from Clemens—"a most interesting and valuable jar" to him. Though Mason had not seen Clemens for a long time he had heard of his triumphs and sorrows and they'd kept him in a warm corner of their hearts. He told of sharing "two priceless weeks" with John Hay before he "sailed away on his last voyage home" [MTP].

July 31 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to M.H. Crandall.

"Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him and say that he has so many calls upon his purse, for one cause or another, that he must decline your invitation to endow a scholarship in your university" [MTP]. Note: the university in question was Alfred University. See below entry from Crandall.

M.H. Crandall wrote on Alfred University, Alfred, NY to ask Sam to endow a "Mark Twain Scholarship" for $1,000 [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. Clemens is writing maxims. / Mr. Clemens and Jean dined with Mrs. And the Misses Stickney and came home early" [MTP TS 83]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Wrote Mr. Greene that Mr. Clemens will be glad to have the refusal of this house for another Summer" [MTP TS 25].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam, having just paid taxes on the Genesee Street property, Buffalo; Sam's third owing was $271.06. He had just returned from a trip up the Great Lakes [MTP].

R.W. Mastick, of Mastick-Morrison Co. Leather, San Francisco, wrote to ask Sam if he could send the "Christmas Greeting" given to the press during the war with Spain. He'd been unable to find it [MTP].

Cuyler Reynolds wrote on The Albany Institute and Historical and Art Society letterhead to Sam, seeking another copy of TS, as his dog had taken "a decided fancy" to his old copy and "did his best to 'read, Mark, learn and inwardly digest' it." Reynolds wrote after his signature, "Author of Rosamond Tales, which never overtook Tom Sawyer in its sale" [MTP]. Note:, Rosamond Tales (1901) bedtime stories for children by Cuyler Reynolds (1866-1934) is not in Gribben. Reynolds was a journalist and historian for Albany, NY.

August 1 Tuesday – H.H. Rogers wrote to Sam about the thankful letters from Joe and Harmony Twichell: "The letters are lovely. Don't breathe. They are so happy! It would be a crime to let them think that you have in any-way deceived them. I can keep still. You must" [MTHHR 594-5].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens is writing more maxims. Some of them are strong—almost too strong. This one: (I only quote—)
) "You can't reach old age by another man's road. My habits protect me, but they would assassinate you."
 Shows the strength and depth of his character. His rocklike rectitude.
 Mrs. Learned dined here. She was pretty in a black evening gown [MTP TS 83].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam.

“Your letter of July 29 [not extant] reached me yesterday.

The Koy-Lo Company has not yet started in a large way, as we are still waiting for those hair pin manufacturers, Smith & Son’s Company, to finish all the machinery....We have a demonstration on the Boardwalk at Atlantic City, and are selling goods there every day....The enclosed advertisements [not in file] are to appear in the September and October “Designer.” He was sending Sam some more samples [MTP].

August 2 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “I walked with Miss Greene up to the top of Oak Hill” [MTP TS 83].

Helena Gilder wrote from “Four Brooks Farm,” Tyringham, Mass. to Sam, expressing it “a great pleasure to have Clara and find her like her old sweet self.” She was glad Sam and Jean liked Dublin. Her handwriting is somewhat inscrutable [MTP].

August 3 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Hock! Hock! dear Abott H. Thayer! Jean asked him to dine here tomorrow night with Mr. and Mrs. Pumpelly, but he said he couldn’t! He said it was so lovely to see Mr. Clemens all alone, and to hear him talk when there weren’t others around, that—Oh, he couldn’t—And that is only the borderland of it all, for if it is better to hear Mr. Clemens without an audience, then how best it is to just be near him in his beautiful silences [MTP TS 84].

F.R. Hantz for the Contemporary Club, Indianapolis, Ind. wrote to invite Sam to visit their club “sometime during the winter of ’05 and ’06.” Hantz listed recent guests, including Henry James, Edward Everett Hale, Owen Wister, Woodroe [sic] Wilson and Norman Hapgood [MTP].

In Dublin, N.H Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to decline an invitation from F.R. Hantz; Mark Twain “has retired permanently from the platform” [MTP]. Note: Hantz’s note was dated Aug. 3. Sam’s response is cataloged as “on or after 3 August”—allowing mail to reach Dublin puts this at ca. Aug 7.

Sam also wrote to daughter Clara in Norfolk, Conn.

Ben dear, do not fail to carry out your project—even the healthiest of us cannot afford a depressing influence that is abolishable. Relieved of that; your food & drink restored; pleasant comradeship; & your voice on its way back: all this is first-rate, & is very good news to hear; & best of all: that you expect to be at 21 with us in the Fall, moccasined, feathered, & in your war paint. (But I have broken my bow & burned my arrows.)

Jean thinks I could pay you a visit of a day or two without harm to you or inconvenience, & so I am planning to go to Boston next Monday, (Hotel Touraine) to Hartford next morning, making close connection there with the Norfolk train—but I am giving you time to defeat this scheme if it would be best for me to wait a while. Telegraph yes or no, as soon as you get this letter.

It is clear again. From my window I can see our most distant mountain-range swelling along in purple billows under the horizon. I kiss you, dear ashcat. / Father

P.S. We can have this delightful house again next year, if you & your health approve. So I am securing the refusal of it against all comers. I am broken down with this past few-days’ explosion of social dissipation, & have retired. I shall go out, hereafter, on Tuesdays & Saturdays only—& on the following days I shall rest & attempt no work [MTP]. Note: the Hotel Touraine in Boston was where the Rogers family stayed during the lawsuit against Standard Oil there. Sam delayed going to Boston until the following Wed., Aug. 9.

Roi Cooper Megrue (assistant to Elisabeth Marbury, Sam’s dramatic agent) wrote to Sam from N.Y.C.

I have a letter from Miss Marbury asking me to take up with you the possibility of your giving Mr. Timmory an extension on his contracts with you,—one year if possible; also will you grant Mr. Timmory free choice of theatre, as, of course, he will only act in the best interest of the play. It is quite possible the pieces could be produced first in some other French theatres, and then afterwards in Paris [MTP]. Note: Sam answered on Aug. 5.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam.

“A week or two ago the Special Commissioner in our case against the Butters-Hammond crowd decided against us....To-day the Judge has handed down a decision completely reversing the decision of the Special Commissioner, and holding that the Board which we elected September 1st is the legal Board of the Plasmon Company....It is a great victory for us. I feel rather chesty” [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam. “That is a fine idea about the postal cards and ought to prove attractive to the public and profitable to author and publisher. I am taking it up with a big manufacturer and distributor of post-cards and will let you know, of course, of the progress of matters / Yours” [MTP].

August 4 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Mr. & Mrs. Pumpelly dined here. It was a delight to hear Mr. Pumpelly talk, for his is a man of most gentle, strong birth, and has had experiences in many lands, and his reminiscences were charming. He and Mr. Clemens have known many of the same people, in this country and in Europe. Mr. Clemens was speaking of Canon Kingsley and said that one day when Kingsley was going to lecture in Boston and Mr. Clemens was going to introduce him, they were walking up crowded School St. together, and Kingsley quoted some sonorous lines from the Greek. Mr. Clemens said it sounded fine and probably was, but he didn’t know the Greek—he never could get it through his head. Kingsley answered, “That isn’t the end to put it in—a good strap in your schoolmaster’s hand is the thing” [MTP TS 84]. Note: Charles Kingsley (1819-1875), Canon of Westminster.

August 5 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam responded to Roi Cooper Megrue’s request of Aug. 3.

I have your favor of Aug. the 3rd in which I understand Miss Marbury to suggest that I give Mr. Timmory an extension of one year on his contracts with me; also that I grant Mr. Timmory free choice of theatre. I beg you to say to Miss Marbury I am quite willing that she shall make these concessions for me [MTP]. Note: Gabriel Timmory, French playwright.

Harper’s Weekly ran Sam’s “Lantern for Sale,” a burlesque advertisement. A follow up piece in the Aug. 12 issue is also Sam’s [Camfield’s Bibliog.]. Note: see July 11 entry; also Aug.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

This afternoon Mr. Clemens and I went down to the Club to hear Miss Jane Addams speak on Hull House, certain aspects of it. She is so different from the Jane Addams of my imagination—but looks like the one who would accomplish just the sort of thing that she has accomplished. She speaks readily, pleasantly and has the happy faculty of making good word pictures. (Elsewhere I’ve written more.)

The walk down was through the rocky trail and to a beautiful little wood road, grassy shaded and lovely. Mr. Clemens talked about Mr. Pumpelly’s book and about his account of the Japanese. Mr. Pumpelly was young in those days, and regretted that the Portuguese missionaries who were then trying to get a foot hold in Japan, were bundled out and all Christianity with them. He regretted it then but I don’t think he’d regret it now. As we reached the high road we were joined by Mr. and Mrs. Henderson and walked along in the dust with them. Mr. Clemens sat where he couldn’t hear very well for Miss Addams speaks very rapidly and the walk in the heat made him tired, and so we left soon after the talk was ended. As we walked slowly home—all up hill—Mr. Clemens spoke of the wonderful statue of Buddha in Japan and of how it inspired his reverence always. It’s the only religious symbol that ever does inspire it [MTP TS 85-86].

Note: Jane Addams (1860-1935), founder of the Hull House in Chicago, a settlement house, was a prominent reformer of the Progressive Era, and the first American woman to be a public philosopher. See Oct. 9 for info. on Pumpelly, who had published Notes of a Five Years' Journey Around the World, etc. (1870). Also, Gribben p.562. Sam generally had frowned on women lecturers, which may have had something to do with his leaving right after Addams' talk.

August 6 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Frederick A. Duneka.

Mr. Clemens directs me to say that upon thinking over the matter of auto-graphing any of the maxim postcards he has decided that to auto-graph any of them would be a distinct mistake.

He is inclined to be afraid of the post card scheme even without the auto-graph, and wishes me to ask what you think of it. But don't throw the scheme away, for Mr. Clemens thinks it may be a good one after he's dead. That is Mr. Clemens's language not mine [MTP].

Sam also wrote per Isabel Lyon to an unidentified person: "There are two kinds of lyres. One kind is thinning out, lately, the other is thickening up" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. and Mrs. Pearmain, Mrs. Kendall, who has travelled in India, dined here. We dined in the little room, all windows, and a terrible, beautiful thunderstorm flashed and dashed itself around us. The great evergreen trees almost screamed at you when the floods of lightning behind them made them stand out in their wonderful blackness...

[in her Aug. 7 entry about this evening:]

Mr. Clemens talked last night about Captain Ned Wakeman and his courting. A passenger, a girl, had been placed in his care. He didn't think much about her, until he saw her lying asleep in the cabin, found her lovely and said, "When she opens her eyes, if they're blue, I'll marry her!" and they were blue, and he was ever a man of his word [MTP TS 84].

August 7 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today Mrs. Thayer sent up some very beautiful pink poppies. Delicate, exquisite, each one a darling delight" [MTP TS 84].

Winifred Holt wrote from NYC to Sam. "Helen Keller has written an interesting article which may show you more clearly why I am brave enough to write to you again—I forward under separate cover what she has just written in the "World's Work" [MTP].

In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Winifred Holt [MTP]. Note: Isabel Lyon noted the answer she'd written to Holt from "the King" (her nickname for Sam): "Wrote her a very definite No—from the King, & embellished the No with an explanation that he cannot take on any outside interests. / But as the King says—she will come back at him in some other way, for she is unshelchable"

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

I am keeping the secret & collecting the revenue all right. [about the Twichell's $1500 gift]

I hope you are noticing that it is Lawson's turn, now—a thing which was sure to happen. If he likes skimming, there's good times ahead. I've knocked off work & Clara's doctor has given me permission to go & see her. I start day after tomorrow & hope to stay a week or ten days. Then I am coming back to Boston & get aboard the yacht & run over to Nantucket; if you would like to go; or down to Fairhaven & play billiards.

I am having a time. Nothing agrees with me. If I drink coffee it gives me dyspepsia; if I drink wine it gives me the gout; if I go to church it gives me dysentery. A vacation seems necessary [MTHHR 595]. Note: Thomas W. Lawson, muckraking journalist: see July 11 from Rogers. Clemens did not leave Dublin for Norfolk until Aug. 10 [IVL Journal TS 87].

August 8 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The fallow days are still with Mr. Clemens. All day he has been very, very tired and resting. At dinner tonight the talk was of Babylon and its great, great glories” [MTP TS 84].

Frederick T. Leigh wrote to Sam that Duneka was on vacation and Sam’s post-card scheme, according to Sam’s wishes, would be “dropped for the present” [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam, acknowledging receipt of Sam’s letter about Mr. Timmory. “I do not quite understand your other letter. Did we send you a manuscript. Could you let me know by whom it was?” [MTP].

August 9 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Frederick A. Duneka.

Mr. Clemens directs me to write and say that his idea of publishing the Adam’s and Eve’s Diaries, is to have them go into one volume—using the corrected form of the Adam’s Diary .

Mr. Clemens would like to have the present edition of the Adam’s diary suppressed, (if that is also your judgement) & the revised one issued in its place, either independently or in a volume with Eve’s.

The latter would be best, he thinks, because a person who has not read Adam’s Diary would miss half the points in Eve’s [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Tonight when we were at dinner and Mr. and Mrs. Henderson were here, Col. Higginson telephoned up to me to ask if I would write a little article on the literary people who have been in Dublin. Could I? I wonder and wonder.

Mrs. Henderson is a very interesting woman. She is the daughter of Chevalier Bunson [sic Bunsen] and Mr. and Mrs. Clemens knew her in Berlin years ago. Mr. Clemens and Mr. Henderson stayed out on the porch in the moonlight, so we didn’t hear the good talk. It was bound to be good for Mr. Clemens said afterward that Mr. H. Was interesting. He has written a comprehensive History of Germany and at dinner he mentioned some of the very interesting letters of Frederic the Great that he had access to. One of them written during the Revolutionary War, said not to extend a commercial treaty to the Colonies in a hurry, but to wait and see which would win; whether it would be English or the Americans would make a difference [MTP TS 87]. Note:

Ernest Flagg Henderson (1861-1928) author and historian. Christian Karl Josias Chevalier Bunsen (1791-1860) was a Prussian ambassador, and a Biblical scholar.

Albert Brandt, publisher, Trenton, N.J. wrote to Sam: “It affords me great pleasure to be able to unite with our mutual friend, Mr. Daniel Carter Beard, in sending you by to-day’s mail, a special autographed copy of the new edition of ‘Moonblight and Six Feet of Romance.’” Note: the book was published in 1904 [Gribben 53-54].

Andrew Carnegie wrote from Skibo Castle, Scotland to Sam, “Ah. My friend you hit it that awful procession. Why? / Those you have lost & mourn I also knew & grieve over. One by one they fall, Dan. Lament the latest. / Every year I return to New York I am mourning the absence of one or more...now Hay... / Why? Why! the everlasting Why.” Carnegie added he did not dread death or the future [MTP].

An unidentified person wrote from England to “Mr. Clements” [sic]. Only the envelope survives [MTP].

August 10 Thursday – Sam left Dublin for Boston and Norfolk, Conn. to visit daughter Clara. F. Kaplan adds he stopped over in Hartford. No further record of the stop was found [622].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Mr. Clemens went away today. Norfolk, Conn, to see Clara. It is hot and I have just discovered that the train between here and Boston stops at ever so many stations, or I’m afraid it does, and Mr. Clemens dreads, hates and remembers with horror a railway journey.

I went down to Col. Higginson's this afternoon and he gave me a long and delightful talk. Miss Bright of the Wanamaker Book News, in her letter to Col. Higginson wants particularly sketches of Mr. Churchill and Mr. Norman Hapgood and they are Cornish people. Mr. Hapgood isn't there this season. Col. Higginson called my attention to some lovely glass and a beautiful Chinese vase. They are wedding gifts for his daughter who is to be married to Dr. Barney on the 2nd of September. ... [MTP TS 84]. Note: James Dellinger Barney.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam.

I think you had better send me a check for $634.59 on account of Plasmon expenditures to date, and I will then pay Baldwin the $202.76 that we still owe him. It may be three or four months before we can get hold of the $2700. of Plasmon money that is tied up in the bank, but just as soon as we do, I will refund you the money you are contributing.

As things stand now, the Plasmon Company is not bankrupt, and we are the legal officers of the Company, despite the fact that Hammond actually owns a majority of the stock. It is very funny. The tail of the Plasmon dog seems to be in a more healthy and satisfactory condition than the dog itself [MTP].

August 11 Friday

August 12 Saturday – In Norfolk, Conn. Sam was ailing from gout [NY Times, Aug. 20, p.7, "Mark Twain Ill of Gout"] Note: Source puts onset of attack to this day.

Harper's Weekly ran Sam's "DIOGENES AND HIS LANTERN" p.1166. It was dated July 11, 1905—see entry.

Roi Cooper Megrue wrote to Sam.

A young man by the name of M. Worth Colwell is very anxious to make a musical comedy out of certain incidents from "A Yankee in King Arthur's Court". I think it will be all right to give him the rights for a year, on the understanding that if the play is not sold within that time his rights cease. If the play is sold I think a division of royalties between you and him would be fair. Will you please let me know if this is agreeable to you [MTP]. Note: Sam was in Norfolk; Lyon answered for him on Aug. 14.

Isabel V. Lyon wrote a letter to Father Raffaello Stiattei in Florence. Sam had written a lot and was well; he now was visiting Clara in Norfolk, who was improving. Early in July Jean had gone with Teresa Cherubini, the maid, to visit Clara. The stay in Dublin would end in November [MTP]. Note: Trombley makes much of Lyon's relationship with the priest with whom she'd had Italian lessons and shared outings with, suggesting her fondness "had a bit of the character of forbidden fruit" [MTOW 38]. There is nothing untoward in this letter, however, though she does sign it "Yours affectionately," possible just good Victorian "embroidery." Lyon easily felt close to many males once exposed to them and often wrote with florid prose and praise of each.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean not well—3 attacks, at 11:30, 1:20 and 5:30. Very droopy all day. Teresa is sleeping in the living room.

Tonight I wrote to Mr. Walter Rodway of Brisbane, Queensland, Australia, to see if he has any photographs of Mr. Clemens.

The book of personal sketch that Col. Higginson let me take is vastly interesting, and the privilege of reading them is a great one.

Letters from Prof. Heller and W.R.C. [MTP TS 88].

Note: Walter Rodway was an artist on the Brisbane Courier. No record of photographs of Clemens made in Brisbane is extant; Sam did have photographs made by Falk Photographers of Melbourne. On Oct. 3, 1895 he wrote to H. Walter Barnett of the Melbourne Co. Miss Lyon may have meant drawings.

August 13 Sunday – Sam was in Norfolk, Conn. ailing from gout [Aug. 14 to Rogers].

In Dublin, N.H. Isabel Lyon's Journal: "Jean has been droopy and sad all day. We took a rug and some books and went up into the woods, and I read a delightful article on Carlyle and Newman. Tonight Jean is dining with Mr. and Mrs. Sumner" [MTP TS 88].

Albert R. Halley wrote from Nashville, Tenn. to ask Sam if he would write an introduction for Halley's book A History of the Divine Comedy [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben.

John Hays Hammond sent a telegram from Gloucester, Mass. to Sam: "Allow Butters to participate in loan as suggested your letter eighth / John Hays Hamnond" [MTP]. Ashcroft circled "loan" and drew a line in pencil down where he wrote "freeze-out" and put his initials under it. Next to "freeze-out" was "?" circled, whether by Ashcroft or another is unclear.

August 14 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Roi Cooper Megrue. Lyon noted that Sam was out of town but that in June he wrote M. Worth Colwell, referring him to Elisabeth Marbury—whatever arrangements she made would satisfy him [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Choisey [her home in Conn.] is rented to Mr. Bushnell, $20 a month. There seems a chance for me to begin to get financially square with the world. Oh, world" [MTP TS 88]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Today word came that Mr. Clemens has gout" [MTP TS 25].

In Norfolk, Conn. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers: "I am stranded here with gout. Pray for me. / Yours ever/ SLC / P.S. No—never mind, never mind. Get somebody who knows the game" [MTP].

Dudley P. Lewis wrote to Sam, recalling "with the greatest pleasure" a visit with Sam at his NY home "a few months ago when" he was there studying law. "Miss Stebbins...encouraged him" to invite Clemens to a meeting of his law fraternity [MTP]. Note: On or after this day Isabel Lyon answered for Sam: "Hope that some time or other he may be able to be at one of the meetings, but is not expecting now to attend such meeting" [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote a second letter of gratitude to Sam for the $1,500 (which had secretly come from H.H. Rogers). In part:

"You have commanded Harmony and me to spare you any further expression of our feelings about the great thing you did for us last month—it is just a month to-day since the convoy arrived—but really, old fellow, we can't quite make up our minds to let you off so easily" [MTHHR 598n1-top]. Note: see July 26 entry: "philanthropic ruse".

August 15 Tuesday – In Norfolk, Conn. Sam wrote to Richard Watson Gilder.

I can say only a word. You & Johnson are the only organizers I am acquainted with: won't you get up a Jerome petition & have all our fellow craftsmen sign it, & add "Mark Twain" to the list—in a large & legible hand?

Love to you all.

In haste (to put the pen down), for I am in hell with the gout./ Clemens [MTP].

Note: William Travers Jerome (1859-1934), a prominent reformer who served on the Lexow Commission investigating political corruption. In 1898 he managed the mayoral campaign of reformer William L. Strong. At this time district attorney for New York County (1901-1909) was encouraged to run for NYC mayor, but took himself out of the race in Sept. Jerome led a continuous and independent campaign against crime and political corruption. He often led surprise raids, the most notorious against the gambling house of Richard Canfield. Jerome was the prosecutor in the sensational trial of Harry K. Thaw for the 1906 murder of architect Stanford White, fictionalized in the novel and film Ragtime (1975 / 1981), Jimmy Cagney's final feature film.

Sam also wrote to the editor of *Harper's Weekly.

SIR,—I wish to register as a Jerome petitioner, for, although I have never seen him, I believe in him, and am grateful to him for proving that honesty in politics and office is still possible in New York, though not epidemic. Out of respect for him, his morals, and his principles, I mean to vote for him only once on election-day, but if I were free from this restraint I would make it a hundred [MTP].

Sam, still suffering from gout, also wrote to Isabel V. Lyon in Dublin, N.H.

Next week or the week after, watch Harper's Weekly & register the words—78, by my count. I guess they will print it. Gout pretty sharp to-day; I can't get out of bed, but do not need to, for Clara has provided every convenience I had at 21" [Fifth Ave.] [MTP]. Note: Sam stayed at the same facility (cottage) where Clara was housed. The Boston Evening Transcript, Aug. 21, 1905, p.11, "Personal" reported Sam was at the cottage "Edgewood" rented by Clara Clemens for the season.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today comes word that Mr. Clemens is confined to his room with gout. / Jean lunched with Mrs. Durfee today" [MTP TS 88].

In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Katharine I. Harrison asking her to transfer $1,500 from the Guaranty Trust Co. to the Lincoln National Bank, and that Sam was well in Norfolk [MTP].

August 16 Wednesday – In Norfolk, Conn. Sam wrote to Isabel V. Lyon.

I go to Fairhaven to-morrow for a day or two.

Please look at Kipling's account of his visit to me at Susy Crane's farm, & see if Mrs. Clemens as well as Susy Clemens was present.

Mrs. Laura M. Dake has not yet written. Suppose you telephone the bank & ask if that check has been collected.

My mind is dreadfully sluggish this last two days & dictating goes hard. I'm glad to knock off & have a holiday.

With lots of love to Clärchen, ... [MTP]. Note: Laura Wright Dake, Sam's old sweetheart from 1858 would write several times in 1906 and 1907. It appears Sam did not go to Fairhaven the next day.

Isabel Lyon's journal: I received a little note from Mr. Clemens [written Aug. 15]. His gout was sharp when he wrote, and he's in his bed.

Evenings Jena is reading aloud "La Jeunesse de l' Imperatrice Josephine." Jean reads very well. Her talent for languages is remarkable, and her accent is sweet and satisfying. It transports you to France, if she is reading French, to Italy if she is reading Italian, and to Germany if she is reading German [MTP TS 89].

August 17 Thursday – In Norfolk, Conn. Sam started a letter marked Private to Joe Twichell that he finished on Feb. 19:

Dear Joe: / Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker is fully as remarkable to-day as ever she was in her life. She dragged her 83 years up those steep stairs this morning –with a mission, need I say?— & sat by my bed an hour, & talked with all her old brightness, & deep earnestness, & passion for easing the sorrows & enlarging the happiness of the children of men. Her mission was to put me in the way of learning what spiritualism really is, in the hope that I might come to believe in it & then use my reputation in its service. Joe (this is the privacy) she has for 15 years had spiritual communication with a miscarriage in heaven! (I have never come nearer to smiling in my life & escaped.) The miscarriage has a name—the name its parents had intended to call it by had not miscarried. In heaven it has borne that name for 30 years. It knows English & talks it fluently, & takes as much interest in Nook Farm affairs as any miscarriage that ever lived. I wish I could see it with its halo on.

Do you remember that astonishing remark she made to you in 1873 in possible extenuation & abridgement & modification of Henry Ward's alleged commerce with Mrs. Tilton? Well, this new outbreak is a close second to that one, it seems to me.

I am not a spiritualist yet. Still, she isn't done with me—other evidences are to follow [MTP: Cushman file].

John Larkin, attorney, wrote to Sam that James Renwick had telephoned and the heating system for 21 Fifth Avenue had been completed. Larkin directed Sam to send Renwick (the owner) a check for the rent due [MTP]. Note: on Aug. 20 and 21 Sam gave instructions to Isabel Lyon about the payment due.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "To be thinking of people is really to be associating with them. Thinking and thinking of the hours that I shall perhaps spend with Santissima [Clara] next winter, I have the thought of her, revived, and ready for other people less beautiful" [MTP TS 89].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam: "I have given Mr. [M. Worth] Colwell permission to dramatize" CY "on the understanding that if he does not sell the play within a year the rights revert to Mr. Clemens" [MTP].

August 18 Friday – Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam, giving him an update on the lawsuit involving the Plasmon Co. of America, and asking for an additional $150 to pay attorney Baldwin for increased legal fees to contest an appeal by their opponents [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft was Secretary and Treasurer of the Co. at this time, which is how he met Sam. He would later become Sam's secretary and accompany him to London in 1907. Sam was still in Norfolk, Conn. On or about Aug. 31 he would direct Isabel Lyon to send the $150. See entries: Dec. 1901, Mar. 17, 1902, May 1903, Aug. 1904 regarding warring factions within the American Plasmon Co, and Ashcroft's lawsuit for libel against John Hays Hammond, which was dismissed in 1910.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean and I went over to a fete at the Leightons. It was delightful, and the most delightful part of it was the Indian scene in which many children took part. They were very well made-up and the stage setting was very good, for the background was Monadnock. Mr. Brush in full Indian costume danced the snake dance. Oh, a most beautiful and artistic and touching act he made of it [MTP TS 89]. Note: George de Forest Brush

August 19 Saturday – In Norfolk, Conn. Sam finished his Aug. 17 to Joe Twichell:

P.S. 19th. Your letter arrived from Dublin yesterday evening. It gave me great pleasure, although it was a breach of the prohibition.

I am still in bed—it is the sixth day, but seems the 40th—& there is no immediate prospect of my getting on my feet. However, "prospects" go for nothing in gout, I may be on my feet in three days.

Clara brought in various reverberations of your thunders at that luncheon—no, I mean cordial compliments evoked by those thunders. I am dreadfully obliged to you for filling that breach so compactly & effectively; it leaves me barren of any sense of guilt or shame—& I should certainly have felt both guilt & shame, otherwise, as knowing that those people would blame me. Other things are forgiven, but the failure of chief guest is never forgiven, except he be dead. With lots of love to both...[MTP: Cummings file].

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean, the letter not extant but mentioned in Miss Lyon's journal below:

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens writing to Jean says that he has "everything necessary for a prolonged stay—including the gout." Jean and I went to hear Mr. Franklin MacVeagh speak on Labor Unions. It was very interesting to watch Mr. Brush's face as he listened with avid intentness to Mr. MacVeagh. It is a face so living, so keen, so sensitive, quivering with intelligence and artistic feeling [MTP TS 88].

Trombley writes of a conversation Isabel Lyon had with Thomas Wentworth Higginson about her working on a biography of Mark Twain:

Clearly Twain's own story was a highly marketable commodity, and Isabel recognized its value when she repeated a comment that the author and abolitionist Thomas Wentworth Higginson made to her in August 1905, "that really if publishers had any sense they would be approaching me on the subject of 'writing up' Mr. Clemens." Isabel had modestly declined. "How terrible. And just because I know Mr. Clemens in his strongest best silent beautiful self. That is the very reason why it would be an impossible thing for me to do. It wouldn't be possible for me to do him justice in any one of his characteristics" [MTOW 61].

Note: Trombley had access to many uncataloged items of diary, journal, workbook, etc. of Miss Lyon. Trombley puts this excerpt to: "Aug. 19, 1905, loose page, 1903-05, Box, VC [Vassar College]."

The New York Times, Aug. 20, p.7 ran a special datelined Aug. 19:

MARK TWAIN ILL OF GOUT.

Humorist Now Is Recovering Rapidly at Norfolk, Conn.

Special to The New York Times.

WINSTED, Conn., Aug. 19.—Samuel Clemens, known throughout the world as Mark Twain, humorist and novelist, is recovering from a severe attack of gout at Edgewood, a cottage in Norfolk, rented for the season by Miss Clara Clemens, daughter of Mr. Clemens.

Mr. Clemens was attacked one week ago today. He is still confined to his bed, but his speedy recovery is anticipated. Dr. Ward Quintard of New York, a Summer resident of Norfolk, is attending Mr. Clemens, who hoped to be able to leave Norfolk next week. Mr. Clemens was obliged to send his regrets on Tuesday to Mr. and Mrs. Bridgeman, who had arranged a dinner at their home, Foxhill, in his honor. Mr. Clemens is past seventy years of age.

William Hill in London wrote to Sam with the news that he was starting a new paper, the London Tribune, on January 15, 1906, "intended to be a Liberal Organ of the highest class." Would he write "a series of articles"? [MTP]. Note: Hill signed he was a member of the Whitefriar's Club.

August 20 Sunday – In Norfolk, Conn. Sam began a letter to Isabel V. Lyon that he added a PS to on Aug. 21, this about the rent payment needed by Renwick on 21 Fifth Ave., since a new heating system had been installed. "If you need money, get it of Miss Harrison. Send Renwick the money, & a word hoping he is well" [MTP].

August 21 Monday – In Norfolk, Conn. Sam added a PS to his Aug. 20 to Isabel V. Lyon. They must have mailed it back and forth between Norfolk and Dublin:

Monday, Aug. 21. / P.S. I expect to be able to leave for New York next Thursday or Friday; thence to Fairhaven for a day or two. But I am still in bed.

[in IVL's hand:] The amount of the check to Mr. Renwick is $875⁰¹. Rent for June, July & August.

[in SLC's hand:] Yes, that is my idea of it [MTP].

Sam also wrote to George B. Harvey.

"DEAR COLONEL: / I am publishing anonymously an article in an outside paper, in the hope that the authorship will not be detected. I think it is sufficiently disguised. Don't you speak of this to any one, but if you should detect it, I should like to know" [MTP].

Before Aug. 21 John Marr (1832-1921), sculptor in Milwaukee, Wisc wrote to Sam, that he had taken the last number of Harper's Monthly with Sam's portrait, and made a clay cast (see insert). Could Sam sit for a lifesize bust? [MTP].

Sam replied to John Marr: "Aug. 21. Acknowledged the receipt of the cast" [MTP]. Note: Marr did a bust of Mark Twain. Insert: Washington Times, Sept. 7, 1907.

At noon Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

I am going to venture the trip to Boston to-day & the trip to Dublin tomorrow morning. I am still crippled, but I believe I am competent—competent to start, anyway. But I've had so many backsets, & had my plans smashed so often in the last week or ten days that I've stopped betting on any plan.

For a little while I thought the gout had retired; so I wrote Dublin & said I was expecting to start for Fairhaven in a day or two—but next day I was bedridden again. That was days ago; since then, no letters have come here—is it possible that Miss Lyon has sent them to Fairhaven? What the nation could I do with them there? Answer them myself? Not by an Amster-damn sight! Here Clara was answering them for me.

Clara is surprisingly well, & has been able to take first-rate care of me & not over hear me when I was blaspheming [MTHHR 596-7].

Sam then traveled to Boston where he spent the night.

Edith L. Harter wrote from NYC what appears to be a simple fan letter of appreciation [MTP].

Ellen Martin (North) wrote from Parkersburg, W.Va. to Sam. Martin enclosed a paragraph (not in file) with him mentioning the name “North”—a man he met in Reno. Was that Edward North, an Englishman? She would be grateful for any information he might give [MTP]. Note: likely it was John W. North see July 3 entry responding to North's son.

August 22 Tuesday – Sam left Boston and returned to Dublin, N.H. [Aug. 21 to Rogers].

Isabel Lyon's journal: “The children had a frantic game of ‘Wooly, Wooly Wolf,’ and stayed for dinner” [MTP TS 89]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: “Today Dr. Henderson & Mr. Stewart [Stuart] Montgomery rode over from Chesham to call on Mr. Clemens” [MTP TS 26]. Note: Ernest Flagg Henderson (1860-1928), historian.

Richard Watson Gilder wrote from NYC to Sam. He had hoped to see William Travers Jerome and tell him of Sam's good wishes but he left early last week and this week was taken up with the sad duties in connection with Willam E. Dodge's death. “Old Home Week was great! As Clara must have told you” He now had a telephone in his house at Tyringham [MTP].

William Travers Jerome wrote to Sam. “I beg to acknowledge receipt of your kind note of August 15th. I thank you for your offer of assistance, which I shall not hesitate to avail myself of. / It is extremely grateful ot me to find the course I have taken approved of by so many people, whose good opinion I value highly. / Very sincerely yours ...” [MTP].

August 23 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Headache. This day I went to Boston on the early train. Left the house at 6:15. Miss Greene went to Boston too, and she extended the courtesies of the Mayflower Club to me, and there I sat by the window, up 3 flights or more, looking out over the Common, up to the statehouse, and drinking in the stately sense of Boston. I went to get a wedding gift for Mr. Clemens to give to Miss Higginson and at Koopmans found a lovely Dutch tea caddy, like a little chest on feet. It is a copy of an old model, very pretty it is and has the distinction too of Mr. Clemens.

While I was in Boston Jean had a smash-up down in the village. The “Shindy” horse became frightened at an automobile and a man rescued Jean before Shindy had a chance to dash her brains out. I'm not supposed to know anything about it—but I do [MTP TS 90].

E.D. at Knickerbocker Publishing Co. of N.Y.C. wrote to Sam asking for “sufficient original data” to prepare a sketch of his life for their forthcoming National American Biography [MTP]. Note: Sam usually turned down such requests or pointed the inquirer to printed material. See ca. Aug. 25

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam, enclosing a pack of letters. “If the enclosed letters do not cause Hammond to capitulate, they will at least add zest to the fight. I hope too that they will do your gout good” [MTP].

John P. Pemberton wrote from NYC to Sam, asking if he might pay his respects personally before leaving for New Orleans [MTP]. Note: Clara wrote to Miss Lyon on the letter, “Please tell this man with polite graces that my father will not be in N.Y. before November”

August 24 Thursday – Richard McCloud, attorney in Durango, Colo. wrote to Sam about a pamphlet never published which was to have contained a letter by Sam published in the Mar. 18, 1876 Hartford Courant and later in one of Sam’s books—could he say where he might find it? [MTP]. Note: written by ? in pencil at the top “Vol. 20 of Hillcrest Edition p.438”

August 25 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Dear Col. Higginson walked up this afternoon and had a cup of tea with me. He really came to inquire about Jean’s accident. So that is how I’ve learned about it. He talked of Mr. Clemens of course, and said that the description of the feud in Huckleberry Finn is one of the finest things in literature. He always feels that he has known those people. ...I sat in my own room over my tea when I saw him coming slowly up the road. I was reading his essay on Bronson Alcott, as he came into view. ... [MTP TS 90].

Louis F. Post, editor of The Public in Chicago, wrote to Sam, enclosing the Aug. 19 issue of The Public, which contained Tolstoy’s letter on the Russian land question. Post solicited Sam’s opinion of the article [MTP]. Note: allowing three business days for mail from Chicago to Dublin, N.H. Sam’s answer (tagged only as “on or after 25 Aug” by MTP) is estimated to be ca. Aug. 29.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam: “I have turned into a poet, / And thought I would let you know it.” He enclosed a poem and letter he’d sent with which to needle John Hays Hammond [MTP].

Daniel Carter Beard wrote on Recreation Magazine letterhead to Sam.

My Dear Mark Twain:—

I am rejoiced to see, by the morning papers that you have really made up your mind not to have your feet amputated. I thought some of telegraphing to you to save your shoes for me as I, with thousands of others would enjoy the privilege of standing in your shoes. But, nevertheless, I am rejoiced beyond measure to find that you have decided to keep them for yourself for there is no doubt in my mind that they would fit no one else.

Thank you very much for your kind note in reference to “Moonblight” and trusting that you may sometime have leisure to read the thing even if it is for no other purpose than to jump on me for writing it, an thing which you could not have done had you really had those feet amputated and with love and sincere regards to you and yours...[MTP].

Isabella Beecher Hooker wrote from Norfolk, Va. to Sam. “Dear Friend Clemens. I find I must recall my invitation to you to meet my friend Mrs Luggaro in my cottage for friendly converse on the great questions of life & immortality.” In a rather rambling letter she noted that her idea that Sam was also a psychic was wrong, and that he was “still in the attitude of most so called “investigators,” so she saw he was “not ready for such humble entrance,” and withdrew her invitation [MTP].

Dear Mr. Clemens / Mrs. Hooker has just this P.M. read me a copy of a note she sent you to meet Mrs. [illegible] her medium friend from Hfd. In it she has made it appear that something I said caused her to send this note. The fact is I fully expected you and Dr Quintard would come. I am very free to say I had no idea you would be satisfied with what you would get. You will doubtless remember I said nothing in regard to this woman's gifts [MTP].

August 25 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam answered the Aug. 23 from Knickerbocker Publishing Co. directing Lyon to send them the Moffett sketch of Sam's life [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this answer as "on or after Aug. 23." Two days estimated postal time is allowed here. Knickerbocker Publishing wrote again on Sept. 20 thanking him for receipt of the biographical sketch, and referred to a Sept. 19 letter (not extant) enclosing the sketch.

August 26 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

A letter from Charlotte Porter. Yesterday Col. Higginson asked me what news of the Dublin article and when I told him how I had heard from Miss Norma K. Bright who hopes I'll write the article, I had to tell him that I feel my limitations so keenly and he said "Overcome them, your opportunity is here." He is strong and the truth is in him. His book "Contemporaries" is delightful. Oh, such English, and appreciation of it in others [MTP TS 91]. Note: Norma Kathryn Bright (b. 1883), writer and poet for Book News.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam. "It is now up to Hammond to kick Wheeler out, or join with me in putting him behind bars. If he doesn't do either, just watch me!" [MTP].

Bailey Millard for Cosmopolitan Magazine wrote to Sam, noting he had once been a contributor and seeking "something for us on a topic of your own choosing" in time for Christmas [MTP].

Harper's Weekly ran "Mark Twain For Jerome," p. 1238. Tenney: "A brief letter to the editor, concluding: 'Out of respect for him, his morals, and his principles, I mean to vote for him only once on election-day, but if I were free from this restraint I would make it a hundred'" [41].

August 27 Sunday

August 28 Monday – At Boston, Mass. Sam wrote to daughter Clara still recovering in Norfolk, Conn.

I arrived unfatigued, and with my lameness almost gone. I have had my hair cut, have sent a telegram to Jean; shall take a bath, now, and be in bed in a few minutes or more.

In spite of the gout I had a most delightful visit with you—entirely delightful.

You look extravagantly pretty and sweet to-day—you were the decoration of that lunch table.

With lots of love, ... [MTP]. Note: telegram not extant.

Isabel Lyon's Journal:

The children, Raffael Pumpelly, (Raffael is a child, age 24), Jerry and Nancy Brush, Gerald and Gladys Thayer were here for supper and a dance. This afternoon I went down and sat with Miss Greene, sewed frills in her pretty blue French frock, for she was going to the pony show that I wouldn't go to. (Give up 5 hours to a pony show?) [MTP TS 91]. Note: Raphael Pumpelly Sr. (1837-1923), Geologist and explorer.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam from offices of the Plasmon Co. of America, N.Y.C. suggesting a letter be sent out by the Plasmon Co. using his and Sam's name with a picture of a crowing rooster [MTP]. Note: Sam's replied no earlier than Aug. 29. The Appeals Division had reversed Ashcroft's lawsuit dismissal against Hammond and ordered a new trial. See entries: Dec. 1901, Mar. 17, 1902, May 1903, Aug. 1904 regarding warring factions within the American side of the Plasmon Co.

On the courthouse steps in Hodgenville, Ky, L.B. Handley, Special Commissioner of the LaRue Circuit Court, auctioned off the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln. There were only three bidders; Robert Collier, publisher Collier's Weekly, won the bid for $3,600. In 1906, Collier, William Jennings Bryan, and Mark Twain would form the Lincoln Farm Association to preserve Lincoln's birthplace and establish a memorial [Printed broadside from Cowan's auction, June 24, 2009, Lot 456]. Note: sometime after the formation, membership certificates were issued bearing the signature of Mark Twain and 21 others.

August 29 Tuesday – Sam left Boston on an early train to Dublin, N.H., about a three-hour trip.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens arrived today, from Norfolk, quite white and showing the traces of his suffering. After his lunch he went wearily, wearily to his bed, and he slept. He is so good. This evening a telegram [not extant] came from Mr. Tayler of the Boston Globe officially announcing "Peace" and asking for a word from Mr. Clemens. He sat up in bed and wrote the word, such a strong word—and at 10 o'clock I telephoned it to Boston [see below] ... Jean was off on a hayride and so I played over to Mr. Clemens his favorite pieces when he came down stairs at about 8 o'clock [MTP TS 92]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens telephoned his opinion [on the peace]. 199 words" [MTP TS 26].

Sam's note on the Russo-Japanese Treaty, telephoned by Isabel Lyon to the Boston Globe, reprinted here from the Wilkes-Barre (Penn.) Times, p.1:

MARK TWAIN SAYS PEACE WILL RE-RIVET POLITICAL CHAINS ON MILLIONS OF RUSSIAN PEOPLE

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 30.—In a dispatch to the Globe from Durham, N.H., Mark Twain has this to say about the Russo-Japanese peace settlement: "Russia was on the high road to emancipation from an insane and intolerable slavery; I was hoping there would be no peace until Russian liberty was safe. I think that this was a holy war in the best and noblest sense of that abused term and no war was ever charged with a higher mission. I think there can be no doubt that that mission is now defeated and Russian's chains revived, this time to stay.

"I think the Czar will now withdraw the small humanities that have been forced from him and resume his medieval barbarisms with a relieved spirit and an immeasurable joy. I think Russian liberty has had its last chance and has lost it. I think nothing has been gained by the peace that is remotely comparable to what has been sacrificed by it. One more battle would have abolished the waiting chains of billions upon billions of unborn Russians and I wish it could have been fought.

"I hope I am mistaken, yet in all sincerity I believe that this peace is entitled to rank as the most conspicuous disaster in political history."

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam, enclosing a copy of a letter rec'd that morning from Lauterbach, and a quotation he forwarded to Hammond. "I don't know the author, but thought it was worthy of Socrates, so gave him the credit for it" [MTP].

Jesse Bryan wrote from St. Louis, Mo. to Sam asking if he was related to his family as he was collecting genealogy [MTP]. Note: on the env. "Referred him to Bryan Clemens, St. Louis"

August 30 Wednesday – Sam was back in Dublin, N.H.

Isabel Lyon's journal: There's a copy of the Boston Globe here—and each man's opinion of peace hops gleefully along on the heels of the last speaker. Same thought, same Hurrah! Mr. Clemens's words alone stand as the words of a man thinking out the problem for himself and daring to speak his thought. In fact he couldn't not speak his thought, for his thoughts are like great blazing torches, bursting into flame by force of the life within them and unextinguishable [MTP TS 92].

Jesse J. Goldberg, attorney, wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam. Goldberg had been approached by “a persistent book agent one of the banes of civilization” to buy Mark Twain’s set of books. The agent didn’t know if Twain would write more volumes. Goldberg wanted the answer directly [MTP]. Note: Sam’s reply could not have come earlier than ca. Sept. 1.

Sam’s essay, “The Treaty of Portsmouth” ran in the Boston Globe [Camfield’s Bibliog.]. Schmidt calls this a “faked interview” based on Sam’s statement about the treaty, which may be why Scharnhorst did not include it.

Dr. G.W. Kirch wrote to Sam trying to justify his fees. He explained the time it took to make daily visits (requested by Sam) on Livy in Florence, it never taking less than 2 & 3/4 hours to make. He was also asked to inspect drainage and sewers and report their condition to the board of health [MTP].

Moses Allen Starr wrote to Sam: “I have received the enclosed through Mr Wm Barbour of 25 Broad St. and send them on to you. If you do not care to read them then just return them to me.” The letter, dated July 19, 1905 is from G.W. French to William Barbour. French had spent some $440. The letter seems to be an indirect support of Dr. Kirch [MTP].

August 30 ca. – Sam gave instructions to Isabel V. Lyon to thank Louis F. Post, editor of The Public (Chicago) for his Aug. 25, enclosing an Aug. 19 issue with Tolstoy’s article [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as “on or after Aug. 25.” Five days estimated postal time is allowed here.

Isabel also answered, for Sam, Ralph W. Ashcroft’s Aug. 28 letter. Isabel Lyon replied for Sam to Ashcroft’s Aug. 28: “Mr. Clemens advice is distinctly to do nothing of the kind. But if you do it then leave him out entirely” [MTP]. Note: MTP assigns this as “on or after Aug. 28.” Two days postal time is allowed here for an estimated Aug. 30 response.

August 31 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Katharine B. Clemens (Mrs. James Ross Clemens) now in Cobourg, Canada.

I am just back from a gout-smitten 3-weeks’ visit to Clara in her rest-cure in Norfolk, Conn; & short as the distance is, I find the travel worse than the gout. I shan’t take any more journeys. St. Louisians do not seem to mind railroading at all—they come here every summer, & they have houses of their own here. I suppose Miss Tracy saw Jean, not Clara, but Jean is absent & I can’t find out.

Clara has made a large progress in these 12 months of resting. She discharged her trained nurse 3 weeks ago, & has no one with her now but an old friend of our family. She will give up her house & return to New York in October & we shall follow early in November. Then we hope she can come & live with us.

Jean & I have been keeping house here since the first of May & having a pleasant time. We are offered this house from April to November of next year, & are expecting to take it. Then I shall probably have to run down to New York for a day or two during the summer, in which case I shall hope to see you & Dr. Jim and your posterity at Jamestown, R.I. I shall count upon it. It was a great pleasure to hear from you.

I am enclosing my kindest regards to you & the excellent surgeon, & am / Sincerely.... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to George B. Harvey.

Dear Colonel: / Wait a while, & see! It is a good sign—your not detecting me in that article. If it really passes through undiscovered, it will show that I can disguise myself. In which case—good! for I have a book which I want to publish anonymously if I can work it off without getting discovered.

Also, I can then contribute malicious things to your page of The Weekly, & get you the obloquy & the abuse.

A Milwaukee sculptor has sent me a plaster cast from a bas-relief of me which he made from a portrait in Harpers, & I think it is very good indeed—plenty good enough to print, some time, in the Monthly or the Weekly.

But he wants to make a new one, from new photos, & that's the idea I like, if he can pull it off before the end of November & represent me at the grand age of 70, which is a birthday to be really proud of, for it puts me distinctly ahead of Pierpont Morgan, Carnegie, Rogers, Rockefeller, Howells, Burroughs, Wayne MacVeagh, Grover Cleveland, & every other celebrated old person in the whole country except the Brontosaur & Chauncey Depew.

Oh, I've been having it!—the gout. Two solid weeks of it. But I am limping around, now, & progressing [MTP]. Note: the Milwaukee sculptor was John Marr. See Aug. 21.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This morning I played for Mr. Clemens and then he said "Now come up stairs." We went up to the study and he read aloud to me a part of his Gospel, his unpublishable Gospel. But oh it is wonderful, always I've been afraid of it, but that was because my only knowledge of it was through Jean who hates it, and if you hate a thing you can't see any of its good. This is full of wonderful thoughts—beautiful thoughts, terrible truths, oh such a summing up of human motives and if it belittles—does it belittle?—every human effort, it also has the power to lift you above that effort, and make you fierce in your wish to better your own conduct, such poor stuff your conduct is.

The talk at dinner tonight. Mr. Clemens started by saying that last year he read it at Tyringham and again now and it always interested him to think of the little monarchy that had existed for 60 years here in America, a real little monarchy. It was made by the grant of Charles I of the tract of land which is now Maryland to Calvert, Lord Baltimore. All authority had been vested in him. He could coin money, make laws, do anything that a king could do.

And then he talked about his favorite subject, microbes. He was in Agra two days after the discovery was made that the Cholera germ couldn't live in the water of the Ganges, and it can't, although that river is a sewer, a mighty sewer. It purifies every unclean rotting thing that is emptied into it. Even the dead bodies of the poor natives whose relatives haven't money enough to buy the fuel to burn away their dead, are scorched over with the small amount of fuel that they can buy and then into the river, the mighty sacred river after they are thrown and no devastating disease comes of it [MTP TS 92-93].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam. "The enclosed is what Hammond will get on Saturday next, unless, before then, he swims ashore from the rotten, badly-peppered hulk on which he has been flying his Plasmon flag" [MTP].

Margaret Higginson Barney wrote (likely from Dublin, N.H.) to Sam thanking him and his daughter for the little trunk [MTP]. Note: Margaret had recently married Dr. Barney.

Arthur J. Roberts wrote from Gilead, Maine to thank Sam for his "brave utterance in reference to the Peace of Oyster Bay... The only real significance this war ever had lay in the possibility of its bringing liberty to the Russian people" [MTP]. Note: on the env Miss Lyon wrote: "Letters of appreciation of Mr. Clemens's Peace Telegram to the Boston Globe. Aug. 30, 1905"

August 31 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote a note to Isabel V. Lyon on Ralph W. Ashcroft's Aug. 18 letter, directing her to send Ashcroft the $150 needed by attorney Baldwin to contest the appeal by Henry A. Butters, et al, to the US Circuit Court of Appeals [MTP].

September – Miss Carrie Rosenheim of Baltimore, Md. wrote to Sam, calling him a "dear" and asking for an autograph [eBay item 230470822748, May 5, 2010]. Note: not extant but referred to in sale of Sam's Oct. 9 reply.

Joseph Gilder's article, "Glimpses of John Hay," ran in Critic p, 248-52. Tenney: "Briefly tells of an evening with MT, Hay, James Russell Lowell, and Henry Adams, in Washington, January 1886" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide First Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1977 p. 331].

Sam signed his copy of The Adventures of Buffalo Bill, by Col. William F. Cody, etc. (1905): “SL. Clemens / Sept. 1905” [Gribben 149]. Note: William Frederick Cody (1846-1917).

September ca – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Norman Hapgood.

The more I think of it the more it pleases me. There certainly is a chance to start that new platform, & McClure, with his earnestness & energy & staying power is the man to drive it home to success if any one can.

I want to thank you for the interest you have taken in it [MTP]. Note: for some time Sam McClure had wanted to start a new magazine. Sam declined to be editor for it; Hapgood was editor of Collier's (since 1903). He may have commented on McClure's proposed venture.

September 1 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to the Aug. 19 of William Hill. Sam was not well enough to write letters, she wrote, and he was seldom moved to write anything, and what he did write belonged to Harper & Brothers as he had a “very rigid contract” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's Journal: “I have written to Miss Bright that I cannot, cannot, cannot write that article. Every bit of me rebels, every bit of my mind and body” [MTP TS 92]. Note: see Aug. 26 entry.

Cale C. Eyre wrote to Sam enclosing an Aug. 30 newspaper clipping from the Philadelphia Record, and “please allow me to say I am fully in accord with the sentiments...” [MTP]. Note: see clipping below:

MARK TWAIN'S DISCORDANT NOTE.

Durham, [Dublin?] N.H., August 30.—Samuel W. Clemens [sic] (Mark Twain) has this to say regarding peace:

“Russia was on the high road to emancipation from an insane and intolerable slavery. I was hoping there would be no peace until Russian liberty was safe. I think that this was a holy war in the best and noblest sense of that abused term, and that no war was ever charged with a higher mission. I think there can be no doubt that that mission is now defeated, and Russia's chains riveted this time to stay.

“I think the Czar will now withdraw the small humanities that have been forced from him, and resume his medieval barbarisms with a relieved spirit and an immeasurable joy. I think Russian liberty has had its last chance and has lost it.

“I think nothing has been gained by the peace that is remotely comparable to what has been sacrificed by it. One more battle would have abolished the awaiting chains of billions upon billions of unborn Russians, and I wish it could have been fought.

“I hope I am mistaken, yet, in all sincerity, I believe that this peace is entitled to rank as the greatest disaster in political history.”

John E. Milholland wrote from Phila. in support of Sam's position on Russia, enclosing the same words as in the above Record, but in the Sept. 1 issue of The North American (Phila), which carried an oval picture of Twain [MTP].

George May Powell of Powell Publishing Co., Phila. wrote to Sam in support of Sam's position on Russia. Powell had met some of Livy's family before the Civil War. He enclosed two printed articles of his, one a reprint from The Baptist Commonwealth of Oct. 22, 1903 [MTP].

September 1 ca. – Isabel V. Lyon answered for Sam the Aug. 30 from Jesse J. Goldberg, that if the agent was selling the Hillcrest Edition then it would be possible for Goldberg to purchase whatever volumes Twain would publish in the future; probably another volume would issue within the next year [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as “on or after Aug. 30.” Two days estimated postal time is allowed here.

September 2 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote per Lyon to Ralph W. Ashcroft, again warning him not to put Clemens' name in any letters; he advised him again not to send any letters without submitting them to William Woodward Baldwin, the American Plasmon Co.'s attorney. "They are awful letters & will do you great harm" [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft had wanted to send a letter out to interested parties including Sam's name and pasting a picture of a crowing rooster after announcing initial victories in court over John Hays Hammond and his allies in the company. Sam was not one to crow publicly.

Sam also wrote to daughter Clara in Norfolk, Conn.

Dear Ashcat, I must enclose Mr. Whiting's confidential letter; also Jean's letter of explanation. Jean has since elaborated the explanation, & I think she has made out a good case for herself. But I hope she will remember her promise & not take any more chances of the kind. She is daily having immensely good times here.

Miss Lyon & I are persuading her to look out for and report the attractive points of the people she meets, & ignore the others. She can learn to be uncensorious; I could have learned it myself if I had begun young, the year before I was born.

Jean has invited 5 dinner parties (return-obligations,) but I am reserving a week, after Sept. 18 & before the 26th—without explaining why, except that I may run to New York or Boston for a day.

Katy's room is next to my study. Yesterday afternoon I said, down-stairs, "Katy, you have given me a most uncomfortable day." "Why, how?" "Every time I have exploded in profanity I have immediately been hit with a cold shock, because I recognized that I was shocking you." "Oh, no, Mr. Clemens, I like to hear it. It was so still & lonesome before you came home."

So it is all right, & I must try & remove the lonesomeness altogether. I owe this effort to Katy, she is so good & has been with us so long.

Gracious, but Miss Lawton is in for some prodigious work! I wish she might enthuse the whole world, same like the President is doing with that foolish brief truce which they call by the large name of a "peace."

I'm ready to start to the Higginson wedding, now.

More and more I realize how very much I enjoyed the visit with you, dear dear Ben.

With kindest regards to Miss Alling— / Father / I kept Ugo well reminded about his hands, & I think he is reformed & that it may stick [MTP]. Note: Ugo Piemontini, the Italian servant brought back from Florence.

Charles B. Whiting, President Orient Ins. Co. of Hartford had written Sam on Aug. 25.

Sam attended the wedding of Miss Margaret Higginson, to Dr. James Dellinger Barney, with some 60 guests. Thomas Wentworth Higginson, author and Sam's longtime friend was in the Dublin area [Sept. 3 to Clara; Oct. 9 to Duneka (2nd); IVL journal entry below].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today, this morning Miss Margaret Higginson was married and we all went to the wedding in the Unitarian Church where Dr. Collier performed the ceremony. It was touching to see the old quiver in Col. Higginson as he walked up to the altar with that dear and only daughter on his arm. Such a pretty wedding it was, and everyone was so prettily dressed. Mr. Clemens was a guest of honor, of course, and he sat in pew 16—in the middle aisle. But Jean and I were only "Common or Garden" folk and sat on the side. We left Mr. Clemens at the house for the reception and we came home. But later—contrary to expectation, Mr. Clemens came home, driven up in a tiny yellow cart, by two children.

Mr. Clemens and I drove down to the Club to hear Mr. [Ernest Flagg] Henderson talk of Versailles and Louis Juatorze. He had some very beautiful pictured post cards with him and the talk was a nice one. Jean rode down on Scott [MTP TS 92-94]. Note: Louis Quatorze, Louis XIV of France.

Ralph W. Ashcroft sent a telegram and a letter to Sam. The telegram from NY:

"All right I will not use your name in any way or take the case to Jerome [.] I am quite willing to suffer if necessary for the freedom of speech I appreciated in denouncing a knave my letters do not in any way effect the legal status of the Plasmon case. Ashcroft" [MTP].

The letter, in part, in which Ashcroft admitted knowing that his letters to Hammond had not been "politic," and that he had considered the possible harm they might bring him for criminal libel, but he claimed to be “quite willing to spend a few years in Sing Sing in exchange for the opportunity of telling Hammond and Wheeler” what he thought of them. Sam evidently tried to act as a buffer to Ashcroft’s enmity in the Plasmon debacle. Ashcroft here reassured Sam:

“I have your telegram and the letters. I will, of course, respect your wishes. I will not take the case to Jerome, even on my own hook, as this would involve you as a witness, etc.” [MTP].

Collier’s Weekly ran anonymously an article by Mark Twain, “Christian Citizenship”:

Is there such a thing as Christian citizenship? No, but it could be created. The process would be quite simple, and not productive of hardship to any one. It will be conceded that every man’s first duty is to God; it will also be conceded, and with strong emphasis, that a Christian’s first duty is to God. It then follows, as a matter of course, that it is his duty to carry his Christian code of morals to the polls and vote them. Whenever he shall do that, he will not find himself voting for an unclean man, a dishonest man. Whenever a Christian votes, he votes against God or for Him, and he knows this quite well. God is an issue in every election; He is a candidate in the person of every clean nominee on every ticket; His purity and His approval are there, to be voted for or voted against, and no fealty to party can absolve His servant from his higher and more exacting fealty to Him; He takes precedence of party, duty to Him is above every claim of party.

If Christians should vote their duty to God at the polls, they would carry every election, and do it with ease. They would elect every clean candidate in the United States, and defeat every soiled one. Their prodigious power would be quickly realized and recognized, and afterward there would be no unclean candidates upon any ticket, and graft would cease. No church organization can be found in the country that would elect men of foul character to be its shepherd, its treasurer, and superintendent of its Sunday-school. It would be revolted at the idea; it would consider such an election an insult to God. Yet every Christian congregation in the country elects foul men to public office, while quite aware that this also is an open and deliberate insult to God, who can not approve and does not approve the placing of the liberties and the well-being of His children in the hands of infamous men. It is the Christian congregations that are responsible for the filling of our public offices with criminals, for the reason that they could prevent it if they chose to do it. They could prevent it without organizing a league, without framing a platform, without making any speeches or passing any resolutions—in a word, without concert of any kind. They could accomplish it by each individual resolving to vote for God at the polls—that is to say, vote for the candidate whom God would approve. Can a man imagine such a thing as God being a Republican or a Democrat, and voting for a criminal or a blackguard merely because party loyalty required it? Then can we imagine that a man can improve upon God’s attitude in this matter, and by help of professional politicians invent a better policy? God has no politics but cleanliness and honesty, and it is good enough for men.

A man’s second duty is to his family. There was a time when a clergyman’s duty to his family required him to be his congregation’s political slave, and vote his congregation’s ticket in order to safeguard the food and shelter of his wife and children. But that time has gone by. We have the secret ballot now, and a clergyman can vote for God. He can also plead with his congregation to do the like.

Perhaps. We can not be sure. The congregation would probably inquire whom he was going to vote for; and if he stood upon his manhood and answered that they had no Christian right (which is the same as saying no moral right, and, of course, no legal right) to ask the question, it is conceivable—not to say certain—that they would dismiss him, and be much offended at his proposing to be a man as well as a clergyman.

Still, there are clergymen who are so situated as to be able to make the experiment. It would be worth while to try it. If the Christians of America could be persuaded to vote God and a clean ticket, it would bring about a moral revolution that would be incalculably beneficent. It would save the country—a country whose Christians have betrayed it and are destroying it.

The Christians of Connecticut sent Bulkeley to the Senate. They sent to the Legislature the men who elected him. These two crimes they could have prevented; they did not do it, and upon them rest the shame and the responsibility. Only one clergyman remembered his Christian morals and his duty to God, and stood bravely by both. Mr. Smythe is probably an outcast now, but such a man as that can endure ostracism; and such a man as that is likely to possess the treasure of a family that can endure it with him, and be proud to do it. I kiss the hem of his garment.

Four years ago Greater New York had two tickets in the field: one clean, the other dirty, with a single exception; an unspeakable ticket with that lonely exception. One-half of the Christians voted for that foul ticket and against God and the Christian code of morals, putting loyalty to party above loyalty to God and honorable citizenship, and they came within a fraction of electing it; whereas if they had stood by their professed morals they would have buried it out of sight. Christianity was on trial then, it is on trial now. And nothing important is on trial except Christianity.

It was on trial in Philadelphia, and failed; in Pennsylvania, and failed; in Rhode Island, and failed; in Connecticut, and failed; in New York, and failed; in Delaware, and failed; in every town and county and State, and was recreant to its trust; it has effusively busied itself with the small matters of charity and benevolence, and has looked on, indifferent while its country was sinking lower and lower in repute and drifting further and further toward moral destruction. It is the one force that can save, and it sits with folded hands. In Greater New York it will presently have an opportunity to elect or defeat some straight, clean, honest men, of the sterling Jerome stamp, and some of the Tammany kind. The Christian vote—and the Christian vote alone—will decide the contest. It, and it alone, is master of the situation, and lord of the result.

September 3 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara in Norfolk, Conn. mentioning the $2,600 Orchestrelle, which had been disassembled in New York and shipped to Dublin some time before.

Clärchen dear, in my rush for the wedding yesterday I was estopped from congratulating you upon the restoration of your great privilege; so I do it now, & out of my heart. I can guess at the joy it must give you to get back the right to resume the training of your noble voice, & I join my joy to yours, child. You will not be depressed & lonesome any more, now, with such a comrade as that for your cheer.

I think Jean plays some of her pieces with good taste & expression. I find myself moved to ask her to play her favorites, the Wedding March & the Lorelei, over & over & over again—but I don't because she doesn't like to. But Miss Lyon doesn't mind. Sometimes she repeats the Largo, The Intermezzo, & long batches from Tchaikowski, Mendelsohn & those others three times running for me. And certainly she knows the subtle art of getting at the expression. I was always ashamed of having a hand-organ in the house, & loath to have you find it out, but now that you know it I am reconciled. My musical taste is vulgar & untrained, & is about up to the level of machine-music & ballads & Jubilee hymns—and to confess the truth I always had a passion for the common street-hurdygurdy. Without a doubt this machine has raised my level a little. It hasn't raised it to where I can like the vacuous plunkety-plunk of the piano-pianola, but I shall not grieve about that. I am satisfied that the machine & the sixty pieces of music which we bought with it are worth the twenty-six hundred dollars they cost. That is, if Miss Lyon survives. She plays for me every night—sometimes two & three hours on a stretch. However, as she would do as much anyway if she were alone, my conscience remains atrophied.

I've really got something to write you about, but I cannot find it. It was in my mind 5 minutes ago, but escaped again.

Yesterday when the new pair were being photographed on the parental lawn in presence of 60 guests, I came running (not perceiving what was going on) & the new wife threw up her hand in welcome—an eloquent attitude, I hope the camera caught it.

...dear Margaret" again. It is a desolation to have this inbornly good & bright & beautiful creature go away. I recognize it; & yet I have seen her only two or three times—mere casual glimpses & chats. Her poor old father—well, he was a pathetic figure to see, after that star had sunk below his horizon. A wedding is an awful disaster to a family. Good-bye, you dear thing, I can not think what it was I began this letter to say to you.

The last fad is "ghost-autographs." You write your name down the crease, then fold & press the paper while the ink is still wet & will blot. It generally makes something resembling a skeleton. [below, Clemens made his own ghost autograph] [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: I feel so mentally ill over the harsh statement, the false statement that Dr. [G.W.] Kirch [Florence] has sent to a Mr. [William] Barbour who has sent it to Dr. [Moses Allen] Starr. Mr. Clemens told me to read it. Oh, he mustn't be troubled by the hideousness of it.

How the pulpits are roaring and crackling today with the hot words of praise for President Roosevelt and the peace... [MTP TS 92].

A.W. Carson wrote from Joplin, Mo. to ask for Sam's definition of a gentleman. "You may remember me by the shocking letter that my friend Capt C.J. Lewis slipped into your pocket at Hannibal, a few years ago" [MTP]. Note: possibly in 1902—Sam could not recall it.

Anna G. de Mille, daughter of Henry George, wrote from NYC to Sam. She asked for a copy of his signature she might paste in a copy of CY which Sam had given her father [MTP]. Note: see Sept. 25.

September 4 Monday – Len G. Westland wrote from London, Ontario Canada to offer Sam his "sincere admiration" and "best wishes for a long life...I raise my hat to you sir" [MTP]. Note: a day or two later? Sam replied: "And, I, also, take off my hat to you; and with many thanks to you for what you have said"

Isabel Lyon's journal: This morning Mr. Clemens sent for me to talk over the arrangements for a talk before some Boston Club—a woman's club, and he spoke of all that femaleness as a "Bull fight!" Of course his hair is wonderful and white and beautiful and scintillating, for his brain is all of an exquisite quiver and a piercing look out of his mysterious eyes will sometimes carry such a vital flash with it that you can't get away from the steady memory of it for hours and hours. You just see it right along and feel the force of that marvelous mind behind it [MTP TS 94].

Paul Kester wrote from London to ask Sam to notify Elisabeth Marbury or her assistant Megrue to secure permission for another Tom Sawyer play. Marbury was also Kester's dramatic agent, and a Mr. J. Fred Zimmerman wished to produce the play [MTP].

September 5 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied by telegram to one from George B. Harvey that he was unable to come the Metropolitan Club dinner on Sept. 7 for the Russian envoys who negotiated a favorable treaty for Russia in the Russo-Japanese war. Sam would follow an explanation by letter [MTP]. Note: see Harvey's original telegram and Lyon's entry below.

George B. Harvey sent a telegram to Sam:

Mr. George Harvey requests the pleasure of your company to meet m. Sergius Witte and baron Rosen at dinner at the metropolitan club new york on Thursday September seventh at eight oclock. Owing to the unavoidable lateness of this invitation a reply by telegraph to franklin square new york would be appreciated [MTP]. Note: Sergei, Yulyevich Witte; Sam drafted for a reply telegram: "I cannot come, am explaining by letter. / Mark." He then had Lyon send a fuller note as below:

Isabel Lyon wrote the explanation to Harvey for Sam:

I am still a cripple, otherwise I should be more than glad of this opportunity to meet those illustrious magicians who came here equipped with nothing but a pen & with it have divided the honors of the war with the sword. It is fair to presume that in thirty centuries, history will not get done admiring these men, who attempted what the world regarded as the impossible & achieved it [MTP]. Note: this note was published in the N.Y. Times on Sept. 10.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today Mr. Clemens received a telegram from Colonel Harvey [see below] asking him to dine in New York on Thursday [Sept. 7] and meet M. Sergius Witte and Baron Rosen. At first Mr. Clemens thought he would go, but he decided that it wouldn't do at all—for he doesn't approve of the peace and he'd have to say so. He couldn't listen to all those tautological speeches and say Amen to even one of them—He'd spoil it all and so he telegraphed no to the Colonel [MTP TS 94].

Note: Count Sergei Yulyevich Witte (1849-1915), headed the Russian delegation which negotiated the Treaty of Portsmouth (N.H.) which ended the 1904-05 Russo-Japanese war. Despite losing on the battlefield, Russia came out well in negotiations and credit was given to Witte, as well as the title of Count.

Trombley gives us another peek into Isabel Lyon's notes for this date:

Tonight as Mr. Clemens lay on the wicker couch reading Macaulay's Life & Letters edited by his nephew Sir Trevelyan & I was playing [the Orchestrelle] to him; he...said—"There's one Thing I wanted to say to Clara. IN fact I have said it—& that is that she is to edit my letters when I'm dead. You can do the drudgery but she can do the editing, & it will be principally striking out" [MTOW 59]. Note: Trombley puts this excerpt to: "Aug. 19, 1905, loose page, 1903-05, Box, VC [Vassar College]."

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam. In part:

"Dear Mr. Clemens: / I thank you very, very much for your letter, and for the praise and censure it contains. I know I deserve the latter; but I was good for nearly a whole year, wasn't I?" [MTP].

September 6 Wednesday – Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam, enclosing a letter from attorney Edward Lauterbach, who did not think Ashcroft had jeopardized himself in writing to Hammond. Ashcroft also enclosed a cartoon and a "want ad" from the NY Herald which he swore he had not placed [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. and Mrs. Pumpelly and Mrs. McKittrick dined here tonight. How beautiful Mrs. Pumpelly is. Mrs. McKittrick asked Mr. Clemens how he became interested in Joan of Arc and Mr. Clemens told how when he was a boy he was running along in the street and the wind blew a piece of newspaper across his path; he picked it up and found that it contained a short account of Joan's imprisonment and of her treatment by the English soldiers and then his interest flashed into being and never died.

Today Prof. Alwood H. Hart and his wife called. [MTP TS 95]. Note: Mrs. Margaret McKittrick. Hart is not further identified.

Frederick A. Duneka, "just back from ... vacation" wrote to Sam: "We are keeping a sharp lookout for copyright renewals and have a regular system for doing that. / The biographical sketch you ask for will be sent at once. I will write you more fully in a few days about other matters" [MTP].

Rodman Gilder wrote to Isabel Lyon for Sam, explaining the content and length of the NY Sun interview with Sam on Russia (see article earlier in Phila. papers) [MTP].

Knickerbocker Publishing, NYC wrote to Sam, acknowledging the Aug. 29 from Lyon, "stating that you would send us the only sketch of your life that you have ever edited within the course of a few days" [MTP].

September 7 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

I want to send you Twichell's letter, but it is lost—not permanently, I merely can't find it. I was going to carry it to you when I thought I was going to Fairhaven from Norfolk, & so I must have put it away too carefully. I will find it between now & next time I see you.

I do not get entirely over my lameness, & the gout has never kept up its threatenings so long before. Certainly the righteous do have a rough time of it in this world, I wish I was like Rice.

I haven't any news: this letter hasn't any office to perform except to let you know I am still existent, so that you can sleep easy. / Ys Ever [MTHHR 597]. Note: source identifies Twichell's letter as "another letter of gratitude" Aug. 14, for the $1,500, which Sam pretended was his largesse.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens's grand niece was born today. I went to Keene.

Mr. Clemens has had indigestion again. Tonight he was very interesting, as always, in his talk of Rajah Brook [sic] and his Borneo Colony.

This morning Mrs. [Henry Copley] Greene came up to talk over the misunderstanding about the house, for Mr. Clemens can't have it next year and he thought he could [MTP TS 95].

Note: the grand niece was daughter to Julia Langdon Loomis and husband. James Brooke (1803-1868) granted the title of Rajah of Sarawak in 1841; he was accused of excessive force against the natives of Sarawak.

C. Diamond, Editor for Catholic Press wrote to ask Sam for a copy of his pamphlet “King Leopold’s Soliloquy.” Diamond wondered why, “atrocities on negroes in the United States which are being constantly perpetrated and for which hardly ever any punishment is inflicted and which atrocities are supported by public opinion, should be passed over as of no consequence, while unsupported allegations of wrong-doing in the Congo State are made the subject of eloquent denunciation...” [MTP].

Daniel De Leon’s article, “An Irrepressible Humorist” ran in Daily People (NY) about Mark Twain [Tenney 41].

September 7 ca. – Sam answered Len G. Westland’s Sept. 4 letter of praise. “And I, also, take off my hat to you; and with many thanks to you for what you have said” [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as “on or after 4 Sept.” Three days estimated postal time is allowed here.

September 8 Friday – E. Hampden-Cook, Congregational Minister in Sandbach, Cheshire, England wrote to Sam, upset that many in England were turning away from traditional churches to Christian Science. He’d contacted Chatto & Windus hoping to print Sam’s Christian Science article from the Oct. 1899 Cosmopolitan in a cheap brochure, which he could distribute to the masses. Sam’s English publishers had replied to him that their arrangements would not allow them to give their permission [MTP]. Note: Sam’s response is estimated to be ca. Sept. 18, allowing ten days for Hampden-Cook’s letter to cross the Atlantic.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Such a lot of children were here, and oh, I felt so ill. Headache. They sat down 16 strong—near Mr. Clemens were Raphael Pumpelly, Jerome [sic Gerome] Brush, Fanny Dwight, Miss Sawyer and Gladys Thayer. He could have held all the table and they tucked out their dear young heads like so many turtles all up the line, to catch his words and watch his beloved face and those who were so far away sighed and wished they were near him, and one of them said it, to Jean’s discomfort. They danced after dinner to music from the Aeolion. Jerome [sic Gerome] Brush is quite remarkable in his Tuscan dialect—Italian; he can imitate the contadini very well [MTP TS 95].

Norman Hapgood wrote from Windsor, Vt. to ask Sam to come with Jean for a few days to admire the beauty of their place there [MTP].

Mrs. Edson Moore wrote from Peterboro, N.H. to ask Sam if he might speak before the Epworth League of the M.E. church [MTP].

September 9 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Col. Higginson came up this morning to see Mr. Clemens about making some talk for the Author’s Club and the Round Table. He seems quite feeble, stepping so slowly and gently and his voice and dear chin seem so, so old. I made some photographs of him and Mr. Clemens. Mr. Barbour came up from Boston to see Mr. Clemens about Congo Reform. This afternoon Mr. Clemens and I went down to the Club to see some very interesting photographs made in Labrador by Mr. Wm. Cabot, who had just returned from there. They were the thrown-upon-a-sheet kind, and those of the great ice bound rivers which Mr. Cabot and his Indian guides followed with their sledges, were impressive.

Mr. and Mrs. Franklin MacVeagh, Secretary Hitchcock and his daughter Miss Margaret Hitchcock dined here. Mrs. Learned and her mother Mrs. Cheney dropped in this morning, and we sat on the porch and talked about literary effort and the value of keeping a journal—especially to a literary man. Mr. Clemens cited Macaulay’s journal and Mrs. Learned spoke of the voluminous journal that John Quincy Adams kept with all else that he had to do. That drifted the talk along to “whatever anybody writes so that it is an honest diary, it would be interesting” and Mr. Clemens spoke of the splendid Robinson Crusoe narrative and how interested you are in everything he took away from the ship.

Tonight after dinner when Mr. and Mrs. MacVeagh and Secretary Hitchcock were here, when the gentlemen joined us after dinner and this peace was mentioned, Secretary Hitchcock spoke enthusiastically of the Czar and his good works and good intentions and he thinks the Grand Dukes aren’t such a bad lot; but of the welfare of the 140,000,000 common souls and the terrible poverty and the ignorance and the suffering, we hadn’t much knowledge of or much sympathy for. There isn’t much reason for him to have, for he was in St. Petersburg to represent his country and not to investigate the miseries of Russia and the Grand Dukes naturally enough put all their best feet forward, as it was in their interests to do.

This morning Mr. Clemens in speaking of Secretary Hitchcock told of his great ability in his position as Secretary of the Interior and how but for the fool juries, many more scamps would be hunted down to their just punishments [MTP TS 96]. Note: The Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay, etc. by George Otto Trevelyan (1876). Ethan Allen Hitchcock (1835-1909), served as Secretary of Interior under McKinley and Roosevelt. William Brooks Cabot (1858-1949), Boston civil engineer and close friend of Abbott Thayer.

September 10 Sunday – Sam’s Sept. 5 note to George B. Harvey, explaining why he could not meet the Russian envoys (who had negotiated the Portsmouth Treaty) at a dinner at the Metropolitan Club last Thursday, Sept. 7 was published in the New York Times, p. 2, “Twain’s Tribute to Envoys.” See Sept. 5.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: His morning Mr. Clemens read aloud to me some more of the [his] Gospel.

This morning I went down and took a lot of photographs of Col. Higginson. I couldn’t get very good ones of the house, being too close to it. Col. Higginson took me into the house to show me a beautiful photograph of Carlyle, made years ago by Mrs. Cameron in London. It is wonderful and its companion was a head of Darwin so posed that the mighty brow stands out in majesty and the “simian look” of the man is not visible anywhere. Then he took me down the trail to show me his beautiful wood puckered logs [MTP TS 96].

Edith Comstock, daughter of Israel Comstock (who died in her infancy) wrote from S.F. to Sam. Her father had been with Clemens at the opening of the Cosmopolitan Hotel in S.F., and “some jest” of Israel’s was turned into a newspaper article by Sam. Could he recall in detail the incident? Also, she had a first edition of Jumping Frog though not inscribed. Could he send her an autographed photo? [MTP].

September 11 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mr. and Mrs. Sumner, Mrs. Greene and Miss Greene dined here. Mr. Clemens wasn’t well. He is suffering from indigestion and he wasn’t himself and everything went wrong.

Jean went to look at the Upton house for another year.

I went with Miss Greene for a little drive up to Mr. Pumpelly’s wonderful height [MTP TS 96]. Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Jean went to look at the Upton house with a view to taking it for next summer & she likes it” [MTP TS 27].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam, “greatly interested in the plaster cast” (by Marr?) and had asked Duneka to “look after it.” He added that he had given Sam’s “letter regarding the Russian dinner” to Mr. [Sergei Yulyevich] Witte, who wanted to show it to the Czar and publish it. Harvey gave permission. He closed with “I don’t feel quite sure of the cartoon idea and fear that by the time we should get around to it people would be beginning to get bored by talk of Russians and Japanese” [MTP].

September 12 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Jean—Bathroom, 10 AM. Mr. Clemens has been in bed all day living on toasts and gruels and he is nervous. The indigestion seems better but its traces remain. A letter came today from Col. Harvey in which he said that he showed the letter Mr. Clemens wrote, in response to the invitation to the banquet to the Russians, to Mr. Witte. He couldn’t read it—so it was translated for him and he asked for it to take it back to Russia to his Czar [MTP TS 96].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam—more on Plasmon matters, his talk with Edward Lauterbach, Hammond's handing Ashcroft's letters unread to Harold Wheeler, and John Stanchfield's desire to see Clemens before doing anything on the Henry Butters case [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's Journal noted another attack: "Jean, Bathroom, 10 A.M." [Hill 116].

September 13 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "A wooly game! Today Mrs. Henderson came with two of her delightful children. Mr. Clemens isn't very well—he is on a strict diet of plasmon and broths and he looks white and badly" [MTP TS 96, 98].

Albert Lee for Collier's Weekly wrote to Sam, enclosing a check for $150 for payment of his article on Christian Citizenship. "We have received a number of letters concerning it, among others one from a gentleman who sends you a ticket to Heaven, which I submit herewith" [MTP].

September 14 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today I'm regretting the hours that have to go into the fashioning of costumes. This afternoon Mr. Sterling called and Secretary Hancock [sic Hitchcock], he went up to see Mr. Clemens and later Mr. Thayer came in, to be followed by Mrs. [Alice] Pearmain and Mr. Montague. The three men went up to talk with Mr. Clemens and in his whiteness he held an audience there. I think it was good for him for he had been saying that he feels as if he had sawdust in his brain.

After Secretary [of Interior] Hitchcock paid his respects to Mr. Clemens, having had a splendid talk with him about spiritualism, he joined us at tea. When Jean asked him about the condition of the Indians, he told of the improving conditions. Also he said that the tribes are to be disbanded in March and that the Indians are to be taken into the citizenship of the U.S. He was telling us about the flourishing conditions of one tribe which has divided itself into sections—the Astors and the Vanderbilts, and not long since the Vanderbilts bought up all the horses and carriages to be had on their reservation; there was nothing left but an old hearse, but Chief Astor bought that, put his family in it and drove around the town [MTP TS 98-99]. Note: Gilbert Holland Montague (1880-1961) young attorney, who would become an instructor of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. See Miss Lyon's Sept. 16 entry and letters from Montague.

Hawkins paraphrases and cites Isabel Lyon's journal #2: "About the time the Soliloquy was published, Twain concocted a Tom Sawyerish scheme to make the Congo a religious issue in the United States. He ordered copies sent to one hundred prominent Protestant clergymen and offered to pay the costs himself. His note [to Barbour] specified, 'Let all the copies go as if they did not come from me'" [160].

Hawkins also writes of a fragment [DV 370-370A] in which Sam planned to send the pamphlet to "every Catholic priest in the country [p.6]...Therefore: make this a religious issue between our 68,000,000 Protestants & our 12,000,000 Roman Catholics, & carry it to the polls....The Catholics can be depended on to cast a solid vote for Leopold [Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore had defended Leopold], slavery, robbery, mutilation, starvation, murder & American dishonor, & the Protestants can be depended upon to line up & snow the whole thing under & out of sight (p. 4)" [160].

Insert: Masonic Hall and Touraine Hotel, Boston, Mass. 1904

September 15 Friday – Dublin, N.H.: Sam wrote to Clara Clemens.

Clärchen dear, I have just written the [Hotel] Touraine that you & Miss Alling may possibly arrive Tuesday the 19th; & to take care of you.

I have told Katy you are going to New York the 20th; you will see her there.

I don't suppose I can go to Boston, because the dyspepsia has me in its grip & I am spending my days in bed & feeding exclusively on gruel & plasmon in an effort to get rid of it. I am dreadfully sorry, if it will be any disappointment to you, dear child. I would get up & go to Boston anyway, but that you've got Miss Alling to look out for you. Still, dear heart, if I can be of real service, telegraph me & I will be on hand if I am no worse than I am to-day.

Collier has sent me $150 for that little article—which is very liberal of him considering that I did not sign it.

I have had no sleep to speak of for 3 nights running, yet I am not a bit sleepy in the daytime. That's dyspepsia of the first quality, you see!

Good night, you dear thing, I kiss you / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Norman Hapgood:

Dear Hapgood: / I am very glad McClure is to print it. I hope to remain undiscovered; in which case it will be pretty sure to do some good.

I believe Denil things you have injured his character. There is something impressively humorous about the idea of damaging the character of that abscess, that chancre.

If you have to go to jail for lancing it, it's an honro & I am ready to go shares; I'll stand watch & watch with you. / Sincerely Yours / SL. Clemens [MTP: rrauction, catalog no. 326, 17 October 2007, item 438].

Isabel Lyon's journal: All day a whirlwind, getting ready for Jean's masked dance. Raphael Pumpelly dined here in a regal raw silk costume that had been given him by the viceroy of one of the Bokhara provinces and with it he wore a white turban round that princely young head of his. I've had such a good little sewing girl here—Edith Mason, born and brought up here, rarely leaving the town. She is a conscientious little creature. She led the conversation around to Miss Higginson's wedding, and said that the best part of it all was to be sitting up over Mr. Allison's story from which place she saw Mr. Clemens and she said "he stepped so light, so light" and he's what she calls real, real handsome. Didn't I think so too? [MTP TS 98].

Thomas Bailey Aldrich and Lilian W. Aldrich wrote to Sam. Lillian asked for the name of H.H. Rogers' "confidential advisor in money matters" so she might contact Rogers directly about enlarging a hospital, and not have her letter abstracted to him [MTP].

Thomas S. Barbour replied to Sam's suggestion that copies of the Soliloquy pamphlet would be sent to the 100 prominent Protestant clergymen at the expense of the Congo Reform Assoc. [MTP]. Note: Lyon's Journal for Sept. 14 included Sam's suggestion from a letter (not extant) to Barbour.

Norman Hapgood for Collier's Weekly wrote to Sam.

"My Dear Mr. Clemens: / I lunched with McClure today. 'Christian Citizenship' is in the November number, & he expects to reprint it frequently in the future. He says it is the greatest article written in years, the platform of the new politics. / Hoping you are by this time playing leap-frog. / Yours..." [MTP].

Pierre Lafitte wrote a short letter in French to Sam.

Monsieur MARC TWAINÉ
Homme de Lettres
NEW YORK.

Chère Maître,

Nous publions dans le No de Noel de notre revue Je Sais Tout une série d'articles sur

Mr. Marc Twain
Man of Letters
New York.

Dear Sir,

In the Christmas issue of our magazine Je Sais
Tout we will publish a series of articles devoted to

Le Noel dans les différents pays du monde. Nous vous serions très reconnaissants si vous vouliez bien nous donner une quarantaine de lignes sur Le Noel en Amerique.

Je vous prie, cher Maitre, de vouloir bien nous faire savoir si nous pouvons compter sur vous , et croire à mon plus profond respect,

[Pierre Lafitte]

Christmas in the different countries of the world. We would appreciate it very much if you would be so kind to give us about forty lines of text on Christmas in America.

Please, dear Sir, let us know if we can count on you, and accept the expression of my deepest respect,

[MTP: Translation and the following notes by Holger Kersten, 2012] Notes:

Pierre Lafitte (1872-1938), was the editor of a number of French magazines. He has been credited with inventing the modern illustrated magazine [1]. The letterhead identifies several of the titles he published: Je sais tout, monthly illustrated magazine; Femina, bi-monthly illustrated publication; La Vie au Grand Air, weekly illustrated publication; Musica, monthly illustrated publication; Fermes et Chateaux, monthly illustrated publication; Le Petit Magazine de la Jeunesse, bi-monthly illustrated publication.

Je sais tout: magazine encyclopédique illustré was an illustrated monthly magazine published from 1905 to 1939. Apparently Twain did not submit a Christmas story to Lafitte. The magazine available has been digitized by the Bibliothèque Nationale de France (www.gallica.bnf.fr). An online search revealed that the publication has online two references to "Twain," one to "the last photo of Mark Twain" and a few lines on his death in 1910, the other one to an explanatory note : In 1906, the journal published a section from the two-act play "Le Cultivateur de Chicago" by Gabriel Timmory which was based on Twain's "How I Edited an Agricultural Newspaper." A digital copy of the pla is available at archive.org (<http://archive.org/details/lecultivateurdec00wahluoft>). The play premiered at the Théâtre du Grand-Guignol, Paris, on 6 May 1906.

September 15 ca. – Minnie Maddern Fiske wrote to Sam.

I have lain awake nights very often wondering if I dare ask you to write a story of an old horse that is finally given over to the bull-ring. The story you would write would do more good than all the laws we are trying to hve made and enforced for the prevention of cruelty to animals in Spain. We would translate and circulate the story in that country. I have wondered if you would ever write it [MTP; MTB 1245-6]. Note: Paine puts this to the Summer of 1905 but Sam replied on Sept. 18.

September 16 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to Lilian W. Aldrich's Sept. 15:

Dear Mrs. T.B.: / You don't need the secretary. Mr. Rogers does not see very many of the business letters that go to 26 Broadway, but he sees & reads all the personal letters that go there addressed to him.

I am going to hope with all my might that I can go from another friend's house in Boston about the 27th or the 28th of October & have a day with you; but I'll have to excuse Jean—she would be too much responsibility for me.

I hope you & Tom are well, & I wish I were, also; I spend my time in bed, mostly. At first it was gout, but now it's other things—dyspepsia & one thing & another. But I can work, in bed, as well as elsewhere, so it is no great matter.

As soon as I reach Boston I will telephone you [MTP]. Note: See Lillian's Sept. 15 and Sam's this date to Rogers, Lillian's enclosed.

Sam also wrote to Frederick A. Duneka asking about Editorial Wild Oats. Evidently, Sam had seen the newspaper notices and was unaware of its publication:

Dear Mr. Duneka: / What's the new book? I hope it isn't old sketches that I've tried to keep out of print, for they could damage me, I suppose. In England I am under contract to add to the Collected Works every book I publish. Will this one be added here? for I am under the same engagement here, by the contract which Bliss made with that Reade-street man. / Sincerely yours [MTP]. Note: See Sept. 24 entry for titles in the book

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Read & destroy the enclosed, & don't blame me, I'm not doing anything. It is from Mrs. Tom Bailey Aldrich, & I had to give her an answer, of course. I have told her your private mail goes to you, not to an intermediary.

I am still doing the rest-cure in bed—nearly ever since the journey to Clara in the hot weather broke me down. The worst of it was, that I was not obliged to go at that time—as I supposed, by grace of misinformation—Clara was not expecting until October. The journey from here to Boston in hot weather is murderous, & I expected it to knock me out, & it did.

I've got dyspepsia [indigestion], now, & have had a disagreeable time with it—& gruel, all by itself—but I am getting over it.

I have lost a straight two months from my work; but I did 4 months' work in the preceding 2, so I am not behind [MTHHR 598].

Isabel Lyon's journal: I went down to see Robert Pearmain's beautiful mounted butterflies and while there I had a chat with Mr. Montague the young lawyer who was here on Wednesday. He is full of appreciation of Mr. Clemens, enjoying to the full the talk he had with him in the twilight of his room when he sat up in his white bed, and the tobacco smoke caressing his wonderful, beautiful head. Last night at the dance I told Mr. Montague he had seen Mr. Clemens in one of his bests [MTP TS 98]. Note: Gilbert Holland Montague. See earlier.

H.E. Heller wrote from Salamanca, N.Y. to Sam, trying to interest him on a musical production for people who took tours “down the St. Lawrence, through the Great Lakes and to many other points,” incorporating “scenes so vividly portrayed in” LM. What was Sam's opinion of the possibilities? [MTP]. Note: Sam's response through Lyon is estimated at ca. Sept. 18.

September 17 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

This afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Learned came in for a dish of tea, and then Mr. Pearmain and Mr. Montague came in too later—and the 3 of them sat and talked in front of the open fire, and they smoked. Jean went off to the Henderson's and Mr. Clemens read an article to me that he has been working on lately. Oh its about the Interpretation of the Deity, so wonderful and strong, and true like every bit of that wonderful brain of his [MTP TS 98, 100].

September 18 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote a sketch unpublished until 2009: “The Privilege of the Grave” [Who Is Mark Twain? xxvi, 55-60].

In Dublin, N.H. Sam also replied to the ca. Sept. 15 from Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske (1865-1932), born Marie Augusta Davey in New Orleans, leading actress from childhood on, and also a playwright and activist for artistic freedom.

I shall certainly write the story. But I may not get to it to suit me, in which case it will go in the fire. Later I will try it again—& yet again—& again. I am used to this. It has taken me twelve years to write a short story (“The Death-Wafer”)—the shortest one I ever wrote, I think. So, do not be discouraged; I will stick to this one in the same way [MTP].

Note: aka “The Death Disk” appeared in the 1901 Harper’s; a one-act play of it was performed at the Children’s Theatre, Carnegie Hall on Feb. 8, 1902; In 1909 D.W. Griffith directed it as a silent film.

Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Paul Kester in Westmorland, England Sam was not well enough to answer any letters, but Lyon acknowledged receipt of Kester’s Sept. 5 regarding the Tom Sawyer play. Sam had written to Mr. Megrue as suggested and whatever Megrue does would “probably be satisfactory” [MTP]. Note: Roi Cooper Megrue, was assistant to Elisabeth Marbury, Sam’s agent for all things dramatic.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mrs. Fiske’s letter about a story to be written—subject—bull fights in Spain.

We drove over to see the Upton house this afternoon. It’s a good house, in some respects better than this one—but very inartistic. Later Jean came home with 10 children, and that made us sit 13. I don’t like 13 at table. I can’t like it either. We played Boston later—all of us and Mr. Clemens got caught and had to be blind-folded too. Down at his end of the table Mr. Clemens talked about Kipling, and the journey he made to Elmira to see Mr. Clemens, sending up a card “Rudyard Kipling who has come 16,000 miles to see Mark Twain from Alahabad, India.” Kipling, looking about Mr. Langdon’s library and knowing everything about every book—finally asked Mr. Clemens what he thought of “Pendennis,” and Mr. Clemens replied “Oh I don’t know—what’s his other name?” (He can’t abide Thackeray) He didn’t know who Kipling was then, hadn’t every heard of him (see Frankfort book—)

Writing more about that evening with the children and how Mr. Clemens talked about Kipling, he went on to say that his daughter Susie kept Kipling’s card because of the inscription on it. Some time later when he had returned to Hartford, Mr. George Warner sauntered in one morning with a book in his hand and said to Mr. Clemens “Did you ever hear of Rudyard Kipling?” “No, I never did,” Mr. Clemens replied. “Well you will—Did you ever hear of “Plain Tales from the Hills?” “No never.”

“Well then, just read it and see how wonderful it is.” And Mr. Clemens took it and read it and found the tale of its wonder a true one. Vaguely the name began to seem familiar to him and asking for the card with the Indian inscription, his daughter brought it and it was the same as the name of the writer of that book [MTP TS 100]. Note: see the first meeting between Kipling and Twain in Vol. II, Aug. 15, 1889. William Makepeace Thackeray’s History of Pendennis, etc. (1848-50).

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Miss Clemens went to Boston today to see Mary Lawton act in “Tess of the d’Urbervilles”” [MTP TS 28].

H.H. Rogers wrote to Sam, the letter not extant but referred to in Sam’s ca. Sept. 22 [MTP].

Alice M. Ditson (Mrs. Charles H. Ditson) wrote from Jackson, N.H. to Sam. They had enjoyed his remarks on the Russo-Japanese situation and sent her love to Clara and Jean [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam, reporting on several matters: the biographical sketch sent to Sam had not arrived so he sent another; the postal card scheme would be a hit without Sam’s signature—to sign them would be to “cheapen” his signature; “Eve’s Diary” was going into the Xmas issue, and both diaries would later be published together; He was looking into the Swedish translation of CY about which Mr. Lindberg had inquired; he requested a photograph of the “new bust” (Marr’s?); last he asked about “this new volume written by ‘Anon.’ of which you wrote the Colonel” [MTP].

September 18 ca. – Isabel V. Lyon for Sam answered E. Hampden-Cook’s Sept. 8 letter: “Messrs. C & W. must have the copyright of the C.S. article—Mr. Clemens is too busy now to write on the subject” (Christian Science) [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as “on or after 8 Sept.” Ten days estimated postal time from England is allowed here.

Lyon also replied for Sam to H.E. Heller, who on Sept. 16 wrote suggesting a musical production: “Idea is very good—but Mr. Clemens feels that he is now too busy & too old to be able to interest himself in it” [MTP]. Note: two days mail time allowed for this reply, marked “on or after Sept. 16” by MTP.

September 19 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Lyon sent Sam's biographical sketch by Moffett to the Knickerbocker Publishing Co. Sam's letter with enclosure is not extant but referred to in the Publisher's Sept. 20 letter [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Gerald Thayer dined here. Wrote a lot of letters this morning, and then because Mr. Clemens didn't sleep he couldn't work today. He came down stairs early and after he'd taken a little walk I played to him for a long time. I have the Chopin Funeral March so that he likes it now. You can't play such a composition even on a machine without practice and thought about what you're going to practice [MTP TS 100].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Miss Clemens went to N.Y. & Katie joined her there" [MTP TS 29].

Frederick A. Duneka of Harper & Brothers replied to Sam's Sept. 16, answering what the "new book" was—it was "made up of extracts from your various works relating to newspaper experiences...under the title of 'Editorial Wild Oats'." Duneka listed the sketches used, and then observed:

The articles lend themselves naturally to a little book of this character and lend themselves also to general advertising. They are in your best little vein, I think, and form a permanent contribution to American literature relating to the humorous side of journalism.

Perhaps I have not answered the inquiry you really made, and if this is not a reply, may I in turn ask you what is the new book you suggested doing anonymously [MTP]. Note: Sam's response to this is estimated to be ca. Sept 20.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam, enclosing a letter from John Simeon Bergheim. He would ask Bergheim to pay one-third of the expense on the Plasmon case to date, then reported the following:

Just after the Court decided in our favor, [Harold] Wheeler got an injunction out restraining us and them and everybody else from doing ANYTHING in connection with the Plasmon matter until after the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals had adjudicated the case. To-day Wheeler violated this injunction himself by serving us with papers in a proceeding which he has started in the New York State Supreme Court covering the same point that is to be decided by the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. All the lawyers connected with the affair, except Wheeler's pal Byrne, are splitting their sides over the thing [MTP].

Thomas S. Barbour wrote two to Sam, the first "a hasty note from the station this morning":

"I assure you your letter of Saturday is appreciated, difficult as it is to think of it as fair to yourself. We shall like to distribute the pamphlet widely in addition to sales, and shall appreciate much suggestion of names by you."

The second from Barbour's Boston office:

It occurs to me to add the names of G. Stanley Hall and William F. McDowell to the names of petitioners I noted. The suggestion, as to an annex to the footnote, should have read more as follows:

"Sic transit the ingenuous king's investigating of himself, that pleasing substitute for the crude scheme advocated by such emotional impracticables as John W. Foster, Lyman Abbott, Henry Van Dyke and other deluded petitioners of the American President and Congress—an inquiry into conditions in the Congo State by the States responsible for its creation."

You will know that the paragraph is but a suggestion, to be made characteristically telling by yourself. / Very sincerely yours ... [MTP]. Note: for "King Leopold's Soliloquy."

C.H. Chalmers wrote on Electric Machinery letterhead, Minneapolis, MN to ask if Sam had published his articles on Mary Baker Eddy in book form [MTP].

William Webster Ellsworth for the Century Co. wrote to Sam “making my annual call on the people who have been good enough to subscribe to the Pond fund. You offered $50 a year for five years from September 1903, and I shall be glad to have a check at your convenience.” Son of Major Pond, James. B. Pond, Jr. (“Bim”) had one more year in school and then Ellsworth hoped the fund could send him to college [MTP].

George Iles wrote on Park Avenue Hotel stationery to Sam. He had just returned to New York for the winter and wished to pay respects [MTP].

September 19 ca. – Isabel V. Lyon for Sam also answered H.E. Heller’s Sept. 16 letter [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as “on or after 16 Sept.” Three days estimated postal time from Salamanca, N.Y. is allowed here.

September 20 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

I’m a little disappointed in the photographs made of Col. Higginson. The day was too far spent for the light to be right enough.

Santissima is in Boston or New York. She went to the former city to see Mary Lawton play Tess. I must believe that she would be stronger in the role of a pure woman like Tess for she isn’t enough of an artist yet to play a Magda without making you feel that she’s playing it, or so I think. Then Santissima went to N.Y. to see a throat specialist. Miss Alling is still with her [MTP TS 100-101].

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2:

sent to Mr. Bartons / copy of note added to Congo pamphlet:

[“Very well, then, the King has investigated himself. One stage is achieved. The next one in order is the investigation of conditions in the Congo State by the Powers responsible for the creation of the Congo State. The United States is one of them. Such an investigation is advocated by Lyman, Abbot, Henry Van Dyke, David Starr Jordan, & other prominent citizens, in a petition to the President & Congress”][MTP TS 29]. Note: the note added is from Clemens.

E.D. of the Knickerbocker Publishing Co. in N.Y.C. wrote to Sam, acknowledging his of Sept. 19 which included Moffet’s sketch of Mark Twain’s life. Was the sketch copyrighted? Would they need permission to put it in their National American Biography? [MTP]. Note: Clemens answered (estimated as ca. Sept 22) that they should ask Harpers and thought they wouldn’t object and hoped they wouldn’t.

Minnie Maddern Fiske wrote from NYC to Sam: “A heartful of gratitude & appreciation / Sincerely...” [MTP]. Note: Paine gives claim that Fiske asked Sam to help in her campaign against bullfighting in Spain, and hoped he might write a similar tale to “A Dog’s Tale”; Sam began and wrote “A Horse’s Tale” which he began on Sept. 23 and finished on Sept. 30, an “eight-day drive & rush” [Oct. 1 to Clara].

September 20 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Frederick A. Duneka, responding on Duneka’s answer and question of Sept. 19. “Mr. Clemens will have to think about the anonymous book for a good while, & will not want to publish it without conversing with Mr. Duneka about it” [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as “on or after 19 Sept.” One day estimated postal time is allowed here.

September 21 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to George B. Harvey

“Dear Colonel— / All right, bang away, go ahead. Yes it will be a ‘red-letter day,’ & a red-headed day, too, for Old Age will take the scalp of Belated Youth that day—mine, to-wit” [MTP]. Note: likely a go-ahead for Harvey’s plans to honor Mark Twain’s 70th birthday.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: All the days are sprinkled with pin cushions. They’re pretty little creatures, and best of all they sell. Teresa calls them my boys.

George MacDonald is dead at 83

Mr. Clemens worked for several hours on the new "Horse's Tale" [MTP TS 101].

Robert Underwood Johnson for the National Institute of Arts wrote to advise and ask Sam to answer in an enclosed envelope "what time between October 15 and November 1" would be convenient for a meeting of the American Academy of Arts & Letters [MTP]. Note: Lyon answered for Clemens on Sept. 29.

September 21 ca. – Sam also wrote to George Iles, responding to his Sept. 19 letter.

My dear Mr. Iles. / We return to New York about the 7th of November & shall be glad to see you at my house 21 Fifth Avenue corner of 9th St. as soon thereafter as you can give me the pleasure of looking in on me.

But George Stephenson will not have to take a back seat; he will always sit in the front place earned by right [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as "on or after 19 Sept." Two days estimated postal time is allowed here.

September 22 Friday – At 9 a.m. in Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Thomas S. Barbour of the Congo Reform Assoc., Boston, that he was "sending something which you should stop the press & add if humanly possible." Mounted on another page was the following:

KING LEOPOLD'S SOLILOQUY

THE PUBLISHERS DESIRE TO STATE THAT MR. CLEMENS DECLINES TO ACCEPT ANY PECUNIARY RETURN FROM THIS BOOKLET, AS IT IS HIS WISH THAT ALL PROCEEDS OF SALES ABOVE THE COST OF PUBLICATION SHALL BE USED IN FURTHERING THE EFFORT FOR RELIEF OF THE PEOPLE OF THE CONGO STATE.

THE P. R. WARREN COMPANY

BOSTON, MASS., JANUARY 1, 1906.

[MTP]. Note: After permission and release by Harper and Brothers, King Leopold's Soliloquy: A Defense of His Congo Rule, was published by the Congo Reform Assoc. on Sept. 28, 1905. See entry.

Isabel Lyon wrote to Chatto & Windus requesting Esperanto books—Complete Text book by John Charles O'Connor (1904), and dictionaries to translate Esperanto to English [Gribben 514: IVL Journal, no TS # given: MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "That he may sleep better, Mr. Clemens takes a little walk every day. It's only a duty walk for he has never enjoyed exercise and never has taken much—though in the old Hartford days he used to tramp out Talcott mountain way with Mr. Twichell" [MTP TS 101].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2:

wrote to Chatto & Windus, for Esperanto Books.

Complete text book by J.C. O'Conner & Eng. Esp. & Esp. Eng. Dictionaries

Sent to Congo Reform Asso. the article taken from the English Review of Reviews for Oct. 1905 "Should King Leopold be Hanged?" by a Congo Missionary [MTP TS 29].

Thomas S. Barbour for the Congo Reform Assoc., Boston, wrote to Sam, acknowledging his letter of Sept. 20. "The additional lines for the footnote meet our desire exactly. They are now incorporated in the pamphlet, the single word 'President' being omitted." He returned the letter from the Editor of The Catholic Herald and thanked him for sending it.

"Your telegram arrived this morning and we called a halt upon the printers. I am sending you a copy of the pamphlet as, but for the telegram, it would have gone to the newspapers to-night." The price of the pamphlet would be 25 cents [MTP].

Richard Watson Gilder wrote to advise Sam that he'd authorized this day "the signing of your name to a letter endorsing Jerome. ... It looks now as if Jerome was going to be nominated by hell and heaven alike, and therefore he will probably be elected" [MTP]. Note: William Travers Jerome.

September 22 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to the Knickerbocker Publishing Co. “If you ask the Harpers, Mr. Clemens thinks they will not object & he hopes they won’t” [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as “on or after 20 Sept.” Two days estimated postal time is allowed here.

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers about this day.

I have just received yours of the 18th [not extant]—which is several days ago, I suppose, but I am in bed & don’t know either the day of the week or the day of the month.

I have made an improvement—I have slept 3 nights out of 4, counting last night. I have hardly any dyspepsia left. I am safest in bed, for the present, but I am at work again this last 2 days.

My plan is, to return to New York in the first week of November, arriving last of my tribe. Clara was to be in Boston yesterday, & I was to meet her there, but I was not able to go. She returns to-day. I am hoping to find her installed at 21 Fifth Avenue when I arrive in November, but it isn’t sure yet.

I didn’t suppose you ever stayed at Fairhaven after August. You were not there when you had the attack; but you ought to have been; then you would have escaped it.

I am glad Mr. Rogers has had such good fortune. I missed my good fortune by that injudicious trip to Norfolk. I was in great form, until then; I have been in bad form ever since.

I tried to go to Boston on the enclosed ticket, to hear you testify, but they said it went the other way [MTHHR 599-600].

Note: though plans may have shifted, Sam wrote to Clara on Sept. 15 that he knew she would possibly be in Boston on Sept. 19. Though he claims here not to know the day of the month, clearly he knew Clara was to be in Boston the day before, which, if it was Sept. 19, would put this letter at Sept. 20.

September 23 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Thomas S. Barbour of the Congo Reform Assoc. in Boston.

Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him saying that he has been considering whether he could be made an honorary president, or a second president, so that he could be connected with the Congo Reform Association without doing any work, but could be of service by giving the use of his name.

Will you kindly tell Mr. Clemens what you think of it? [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: This morning brought a letter from Mr. Duneka in which he wrote with a happy word of appreciation of “Eve’s Diary.” He finds it beautiful. This evening Mr. Clemens said he thought the corrections for “Adam’s Diary” ought to be published in the same issue of Harpers mag. as the Eve’s. Tonight at twilight when I spoke of a clipping from the N.Y. Times about an Englishwoman, Miss Allonby, who wrote a book “The Fulfillment”, but couldn’t publish it while she lived because people couldn’t stand the truth of it, and she recently committed suicide in order that the book might be given to the world, Mr. Clemens got up from the couch, saying that only from the grave can one have freedom of speech, or thinks one can. Miss Allonby won’t have it, for her relatives are to edit the book “very carefully” and then he read me an article on that very subject—Freedom of Speech, a wonderful, beautifully written little essay. It forms an explanation for not being able to publish the Deity article. It’s because it’s too full of the great things that men know to be true, but can’t say they know it. What cowards we are. “Civilization is Repression” you have to jam down and out of sight the action of the strongest laws of your being and the great cry of truth [MTP TS 101-102]. Note: “The Fulfillment” (1905) by Edith Allonby (1875-1905); not in Gribben. The Times article ran on Sept. 21, 1905 under the heading, “An Author’s Suicide.” Allonby was a schoolteacher in Lancaster, England.

A. Cooper wrote to Sam on or after this day, sending letters written to the assistant district attorney NYC, together with “Dates of Incidents” from 1887 to Sept. 1905 in the “Lexow” inquiry. No note to Clemens was given, so it may be that Cooper thought this case of alleged police corruption should be read by Clemens [MTP].

Sam began the 17,000+ word “A Horse’s Tale” after receiving Minnie Maddern Fiske’s Sept. 20 letter asking for such a story that she might use in her campaign against bullfighting in Spain. He completed it on Sept. 30, after “an eight-day drive & rush” [Oct. 1 to Clara].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: notes she spoke to Clemens about a New York Times article, unspecified [Gribben 505: Lyon’s journal TS 101: MTP].

DUBLIN, Sept. 24, '05.

Susy dear, I have had a lovely dream. Livy, dressed in black, was sitting up in my bed (here) at my right & looking as young & sweet as she used to do when she was in health. She said: “what is the name of your sweet sister?” I said, “Pamela.” “Oh yes, that is it, I thought it was—(naming a name which has escaped me) “Won’t you write it down for me?” I reached eagerly for a pen & pad—laid my hands upon both—then said to myself, “It is only a dream,” & turned back sorrowfully & there she was, still. The conviction flamed through me that our lamented disaster was a dream, & this a reality. I said, “How blessed it is, how blessed it is, it was all a dream, only a dream!” She only smiled & did not ask what dream I meant, which surprised me. She leaned her head against mine & I kept saying, “I was perfectly sure it was a dream, I never would have believed it wasn’t.”

I think she said several things, but if so they are gone from my memory. I woke & did not know I had been dreaming. She was gone. I wondered how she could go without my knowing it, but I did not spend any thought upon that, I was too busy thinking of how vivid & real was the dream that we had lost her & how unspeakably blessed it was to find that it was not true & that she was still ours & with us. / S. L. C. [MTP: Paine’s 1917 Mark Twain’s Letters, p.777].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “I made 6 photos of the plaster cast sent to Mr. Clemens by Mr. [John] Marr, and then I read, sewed and wrote” [MTP TS 102].

A.T. Richardson wrote from North Yakima, Wash. to Sam, enclosing a six-page story he’d written, borrowing from characters in CY, for Sam to comment on. The return stamped env. provided is still in the file, unused, and no comments were written by Sam, who invariably ignored such requests [MTP].

The New York Times, p. SM3 ran an excerpt from Mark Twain’s new volume Editorial Wild Oats and announced that Harper & Brothers would issue the book sometime this week. (The Times had reported on Sept. 9, 1905, p. BR591, that the volume would be issued on Sept. 14—There may have been a mixup in the newspaper or a delay in issuing the book). This little volume contained the following sketches, some new, some reprints: “My First Literary Venture,” “Journalism in Tennessee,” “Nicodemus Dodge, Printer,” “Mr. Bloke’s Item,” “How I Edited an Agricultural Paper,” and “The Killing of Julius Caesar ‘Localized’.” Note: See Sept. 16 to Duneka and Sept. 19 from Duneka.

September 25 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka (letter not extant but referred to in Duneka’s Sept. 26) [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Some youngsters here for dinner and a romp. Jean in a turmoil and a nest of tempers because those young guests didn’t assemble in invited sequence. The two Henderson children, Gerald and Hildegard, didn’t talk a bit—but listened spellbound to every word that fell from Mr. Clemens’s lips” [MTP TS 102].

Anna G. de Mille wrote from NYC to Sam. Her baby girl was a week old (Agnes George de Mille) and “one of the prettiest little babies that ever was.... But my reason for writing is to tell you how grateful I am for your little note to me. I prize it very highly” [MTP]. Note: daughter of Henry George; see Sept. 3

September 26 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Tonight Mr. Clemens read 70 pages of the new story he has been working upon for the last 4 or 5 days. ("A Horse's Tale")

A letter from Santa C. [Clara] tells that she had a nasal operation last week, and is weak and tired and discouraged, but she's better now than she was [MTP TS 102].

Frederick A. Duneka of Harper & Bros. wrote responding to Sam's letter of "yesterday," (not extant), in which Clemens suggested supplementing "Eve's Diary" with a new chapter from "Adam's Diary." Duneka was sorry but the Christmas Magazine was already made up; he suggested any new material from "Adam's Diary" might be an independent feature in a future issue [MTP]. Note: Sam answered ca. Sept. 28 through Lyon that he didn't think the material would be "very effective published by itself."

H.H. Rogers wrote from New York to Sam. He planned to go to Fairhaven on Thursday afternoon and then head to Nantucket and wished Sam could go along. He asked him to telegraph the next day. (If Sam replied, it is not extant). "We baptized Harry Rogers, Jr. a week ago last Sunday [Sept. 17] at the Church in Fairhaven. Millicent (Harry's little girl) ran through the house before the occasion, and told the people that the baby was to be atomized on Sunday" [MTHHR 600].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam.

It seems that some one (I'm not admitting I know who it is) has sent a lampoonic pasquinade to Wheeler's attorneys, which may cause the author, if they can find him, a lot of trouble.

Baldwin tells me that Judge Hornblower has 'phoned him about it, and that James Byrne (Wheeler's attorney in that firm) has been to see him about it. Baldwin assured Byrne that he didn't know anything about it.... [MTP].

Thomas S. Barbour wrote to Sam:

Pardon my failure to acknowledge your favors yesterday. I assure you our Committee would be glad indeed to use your name in connection with the Reform Association in any way approved by you. I judge by your telegram that you think your aid would be even more effective if not formally identified with the society. Perhaps on further consideration, or in the light of further developments, you may be brought to modify this conviction. If so, we will appreciate it greatly if you will let us know [MTP]. Note: he added he was sending a copy of the pamphlet with Sam's addition.

Thomas S. Barbour also wrote to Sam sometime between Sept. 26 and Jan. 1, 1906. Only the last page survives. He refers to a second edition of 30,000 of the pamphlet, with a changed intro statement

September 27 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens worked all day on "The Horse's Tale," until at a little after 4 o'clock I went up to tell him that Mr. Joe Smith and Mr. Harry Greene were down stairs. When I poked my head in at the door he was flushed with the interest and excitement of this work and one excited bare foot peeked out from under the sheet. It was just as inspired as all the rest of him. He came down and after Jean went off to the Brushes he talked delightfully about the Japanese and the Tricky Peace and about the Equitable scandal and he made Joe Smith curl up with laughter, and his nice droopy left eye was eloquent with his appreciation of Mr. Clemens the rare [MTP TS 102].

Byron Williams of the Chicago Press Club wrote to ask Sam to "make a short address at the banquet tendered the Chicago Press Club by the New York Press Club in New York on the evening of October 12th" [MTP]. Note: Sam's response is estimated to be ca. Sept. 30.

H.H. Rogers wrote from New York to Sam, that he was returning Lilian Aldrich's Sept. 15 letter; he could not undertake support for the hospital she'd asked about "because of my obligations in other directions. We are waiting to hear from you about going to Fairhaven" [MTHHR 601]. Note: See Sept. 26 from Rogers.

William Travers Jerome wrote two letters to Sam. The first mentions Sam's willingness to sign a petition for Jerome's nomination, so a blank petition was enclosed. The second was sent with a printed copy of "The Jerome Nominators," with Clemens and 40 other gentlemen listed. This letter of nominators was sent to "35,000 merchants and professional men in the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx, together with copies of the petition" [MTP].

Vivian Burnett for McClure, Phillips & Co. wrote to ask Sam if he had "any time to read books nowadays?" and that they were sending him Back Home by Eugene Wood (1860-1923) for his comment [MTP]. Note: See Gribben p.782.

September 28 Thursday – Sam's essay: King Leopold's Soliloquy: A Defense of His Congo Rule, was published as a pamphlet for the American branch of the Congo Reform Assoc. by The P.R. Warren Co., Boston. Budd: "At least three further printings followed soon afterward, and a 'Second Edition,' with additional supplementary material, was issued late in 1905 or early in 1906" [Collected 2: 1010].

Note: Hawkins points out that the pamphlet, by Twain's suggestion, "contained several photographs of mutilated Congolese. The pamphlet sold for twenty-five cents, and Twain donated all proceeds to the C.R.A." He also notes that in having Leopold blame "America and thirteen great European states" for the Congo's fate, "Twain mistakenly assumed that the United States had officially signed the [Berlin] Act [of 1885 governing rule of Africa]; actually President Cleveland had withheld it from Senate ratification" [156-7].

Gen. Grant
 Commandant at Fort Hamilton (?)
 Bugle Calls, military tactics
 Sale to Ladies' Home Journal at 15 cents word. Their big circulation would be an advertisement.
 Frederic Remington as an illustrator for the Indians.
 Dan Beard is good for allegorical pictures.
 Kemble. Good for "Shackles"
 Frost. "can draw so well" [MTP TS 30].

Augustus P. Chamberlaine wrote from Concord, Mass. to Sam.

My dear Clemens: / I've had hoped to see you again, either at our NH Mountain cottage or at your own Dublin villa, and greatly regret that Fate has otherwise ruled. We are now at home, having barely survived the four weeks of continuous fog, rain and burial cold, and are trying to nurse our infirmities. Lorie bids me give you her warmest regards and good wishes, in the hope that you have not forgotten her. Let us cherish the hope of meeting you somewhere, / Sincerely yrs [MTP]. Note: Sam's response through Lyon is estimated as ca. Sept. 29.

Marlen E. Pew of the Newspaper Enterprise Assoc., Cleveland, Ohio, wrote to Sam, noting his upcoming 70th and asking if he might submit to an interview by "our Mr. Fireman" [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Sam's response as "on or after 28 Sept.."

September 28 Thursday ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Frederick A. Duneka, and his suggestion to use the new material for "Adam's Diary" as an independent feature: "Mr. Clemens only thought the new Chap. of Adam's Diary would be a good addition to Eve's D. in the mag, but I don't think it would be very effective published by itself in the mag." [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as "on or after 26 Sept." Though one-day mail from N.Y.C. to Dublin was possible, two days was more usual and allowed here.

Lyon also replied for Sam to Marlen E. Pew (incoming Sept. 28): “Mr. Clemens will be home about Nov 15. Will he kindly telephone Mr. Clemens. Will see if the matter can be arranged. Please keep Tel. number confidential” [MTP].

September 29 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Harper & Brothers, asking them to send the magazine to 21 Fifth Avenue in N.Y.C. instead of to Dublin, beginning with the Nov. issue [MTP].

Lyon also replied to Robert Underwood Johnson (incoming Sept. 21) that Sam would be unable to make a meeting of the Academy of Arts & Letters as he would not be in the city until about Nov. 7 [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: A lot of people, Mr. and Mrs. Henderson; Mrs. Stickney and Miss Stickney and Monsieur Umbert here for lunch and then Bill Green and her brother and their architect Mr. Savalliere we saw afterward. The talk was pretty good and except for old Mrs. Stickney, who is unattractive, with queer tiny eye teeth and hair that grows badly in the nape of her neck, they were an agreeable tableful.

Mr. Clemens had to stop his work at 1:15 when he was so unwilling to call a halt. Jean rode over to the Brushes’ and stayed to supper, so Mr. Clemens read me yesterday’s work and today’s in the beautiful Bullfight story. After he reads the manuscript, then he walks up and down the room and talks about it. The talk always goes on to other things. He has stretched the rugs along in a straight line, so that he can pace clear into the dining room on them, and not break the line of his thought by stepping on the bare floor [MTP TS 102-103].

W.F. Cook wrote from San Francisco enclosing a poem, “Tainted Gold.” [MTP].

A.M. Hopkins wrote on The Newspaper Enterprise Assoc. letterhead (Cleveland) to note Sam’s upcoming 70th, and to ask Sam “how a man feels when he looks back over that long journey, and if he still believes in laughter, humanity and holds his love for children” [MTP].

Charles H. Taylor for the Boston Globe sent a telegram to Sam, which noted the official peace announcement in the Russo-Japanese war, and solicited a sentiment on the subject [MTP].

September 29 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Augustus P. Chamberlaine, answering his Sept. 28 note: “Mr. Clemens is not well enough or he would have gone, sends his warmest regards & the hope that he will see you yet” [MTP]. Note: MTP catalogs this as “on or after Sept. 28,” which is possible. One day estimated postal time is allowed here, however.

September 30 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka of Harper & Bros.

I have written “A Horse’s Tale”. It is just finished—15,000 or 16,000 words, I should say at a rough guess.

It has several characters and is pretty lively—Miss Lyon likes it nearly as much as I do.

Can you illustrate it and get it into Harper’s for Jan. and Feb—and issue the booklet in Feb?

And can’t you sell simultaneous rights to the Ladies’ Home Journal & split your expense? Or to Colliers?—Or to both? [MTP].

Note: “A Horse’s Tale,” some 17,530 words first appeared in Harper’s Magazine in two installments for Aug.-Sept. 1906 and with five illustrations by Lucius Wolcott Hitchcock. Harper’s published it as a book, A Horse’s Tale in Oct. 1907 [Rasmussen A-Z 210]. In his Oct. 1 to Clara, Sam revealed he’d written the story “with an eight-day drive & rush—a dangerous process.” Sam would have begun the tale on Sept. 23, only

Sam also wrote to Minnie Maddern Fiske about “A Horse’s Tale”: “I have just finished the story, & I guess it will do. / I am asking the Harpers to try to get it into the Jan. & Feb. numbers, though it is pretty short notice” [MTP]. Note: Fiske had inquired about such a story on Sept. 20.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. Clemens worked at revising until 7 o'clock. Too many hours for the revising of a manuscript is a prodigious piece of work" [MTP TS 103].

September 30 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Byron Williams of the Chicago Press Club declining his invitation of Sept. 27 to a press club banquet in N.Y.C. [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this reply as "on or after 27 Sept." Three days estimated postal time from Chicago to Dublin is allowed here.

September 30 after – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote a reply to Frank H. Mason, American Consul in Paris, France. "Couldn't get the letter of credit into this envelop—so I have sent it by itself in another. Let me know if you receive it" [MTP]. Note: Mason's letter is not extant. Did Sam make a loan to Mason or was he repaying a debt?

October – Sam sent an aphorism to an unknown person: "Taking the pledge will not make bad liquor good, but it will improve it." [MTP].

Sam inscribed his copy of Roman Society from Nero to Marcus Aurelius, by Sir Samuel Dill (1844-1924): "SL. Clemens / October 1905" [Gribben 193].

Sam signed the autobiography of Moncure Conway (1904) and wrote on the front pastedown endpaper: "imitator of Harte's condensed novels—perished in a canoe (Now I recal his name—Prentice Mulford" [Gribben 490].

Possibly this month, Lucy J.M. Taylor (Mrs. Knox Taylor) wrote from Plainfield, N.J. to thank Sam for the many times he had consented to sign books for the benefit of the Maryland Sanatorium for Consumptives.

October 1 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam began a letter (that he finished Oct. 3) to daughter Clara, in care of Katy Leary in N.Y.C..

Oh, you poor dear child! how the fiendish maladies do hunt you down & persecute you. But I am lavishing maledictions upon them & doing everything I can to help. I was very uneasy about you last night, & wanted to telegraph Miss Gordon for news, but the others desuaded me & said the news was that you are getting along. Well, continue, dear!

Jean has gone climbing Monadnock for all day; I finished "A Horse's Tale" yesterday evening & am satisfied with it, though it was not manufactured calmly but with an eight-day drive & rush—a dangerous process; it is noon, now, warm, brilliant, profoundly still & reposeful, the valley & the retreating hills are a bewildering intoxication of color—why, it is a joy to be alive! There is no place like Dublin.

I will get up, now, & Miss Lyon & I will call a livery carriage & go look at the house—I have never seen it. / Love & progress to you, dear! Don't write. Rest! / Father [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: This morning Mr. Clemens called me upstairs and read the last, the end of the beautiful story "The Horse's Tale." It is so lovely and so touching.

Mr. Clemens's output this summer has been a remarkable one. The Microbe Story—the Wonderful Poem to Death—adding to the "Mysterious Stranger" some fine imaginative chapters—The beautiful Eve's Diary—Revising the Gospel—The Deity Article—The Freedom of Speech article and now this exquisite story.

Mr. Clemens and I went over to the Upton house—we looked it all over, and he likes it. Lovely drive. Franklin MacVeagh, Ex. Gov. Smith of Vt., brother of Greg Smith, was here. Then Mrs. Learned came in. Jean climbed Monadnock with Nancy Brush [MTP TS 103].

October 2 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka of Harper's.

I have just finished a short story which I “greatly admire,” & so will you—“A Horse’s Tale”—about 15,000 words, at a rough guess. It has good fun in it, & several characters, & is lively. I shall finish revising & re-revising it & re-revising it in a few days or more, then Jean will type it.

Don’t you think you can get it into the Jan. & Feb. numbers & issue it as a dollar booklet just after the middle of Jan when you issue the Feb. number?

It ought to be ably illustrated.

Why not sell simultaneous rights, for this once, to the Ladies’ Home Journal or Collier’s, or both, & recoup yourself?—for I would like to get it to classes that can’t afford Harper’s. Although it doesn’t preach, there’s a sermon concealed in it [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Katharine I. Harrison, asking for a transfer of $1,000 from the Guaranty Trust Co. to the Lincoln National Bank, and adding Sam was better now than he had been [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mr. Clemens likes the idea of playing the war songs and bugle calls on the aeolion to accompany a part of the Horse’s Tale, and we have practiced it until it is a ‘stirring show’ as Mr. Clemens calls it” [MTP TS 103]. Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “ ‘A Horse’s Tale’ finished and Mr. Clemens had the Bugle Calls practiced on the orchestrelle. / Telephoned Mr. Allison about electric lighting for the Upton house which is wired for it [MTP TS 30].

Daniel Edwards Kennedy wrote from Chestnut Hill, Mass. to ask Sam where he might find “the seven original jokes, on which all are founded?” [MTP]. Note: see Sam’s reply through Miss Lyon in Oct. 9 entry.

George H. Daniels for Lotos Club wrote to announce a dinner for Joseph Hodges Choate, former ambassador to the Court of St. James, on Saturday night, Oct. 21 at 6.30 p.m. [MTP].

October 3 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam finished his Oct. 1 to daughter Clara.

Clara dear, you think you have seen autumn foliage, but it is not so; you have seen only attempts, partial successes, & failures. And you have not had these attempts properly grouped, properly neared & distanced, properly leveled for vivid display in the foreground, properly retreating & softening away through a spacious gate in the gorgeous hills & dimming to smouldering embers under the hazy mountains on the verge of the world. I have to shut my eyes, to shave, this painted dream distracts my hand & threatens my throat.

And I have to stop & write this postscript to quiet my mind & lower my temperature, so that I can go & stand between the windows again & without peril resume. / Father.

There is to be a reading of the horse-story in this house, Thursday, [Oct. 5] with 4 invited guests: a man, a woman, & 2 girls of 15. In the last chapter there are bugle-calls & war-music, & Miss Lyon will break in at the precise places & play this, as I read. We practiced it last night & got the cues right, & it was dramatic & stirring [MTP].

Sam also wrote to the editor of Harper’s Weekly.

John Hay & The Ballads.

Sir: In his article in the North American Review Mr. Howells expresses uncertainty in a matter concerning the Ballads in the following remark:

“It was contemporaneously supposed that the Pike County Ballads were inspired or provoked by the Pike County Balladry of Bret Harte, & they were first accepted as imitations or parodies. I believe they were actually written earlier, but if they were written later,” etc.

They were not written later, they were written (& printed in newspapers) earlier. Mr. Hay told me this himself—in 1870—or ’71, I should say. I believe—indeed I am quite sure—that he added that the newspapers referred to were obscure Western backwoods journals & that the Ballads were not widely copied. Also, he said this: that by & by, when Harte’s ballads began to sweep the country the noise woke his (Hay’s) buried waifs & they rose & walked. I think that that detail is interesting, now. It compels one to realize to oneself the difficult fact that there was a time when another person could advertise John Hay into notice better than he could do it himself. Hay made mention of the current notion that he was an imitator; he did not enlarge upon it, but he was not better pleased by it than you or I would be.

He was aware that I had been a Mississippi pilot, & he asked me if he had made any technical errors in the “Prairie Bell” ballad, & said he wanted to correct them if any existed. There was one very slight one, but it could not have been corrected without dividing the heroism between two persons, & that would have spoiled the poem; so Hay left it as it was.

It is true that “in later life he wished people would forget the Ballads, for he said the equivalent of that to a friend of mine before 1880; but at the time of which I have been speaking they had not yet become an inconvenience to him by obstructing his road to a graver fame. It was another case of “Heathen Chinees.” When Harte was editing the “Overland,” & moving gradually & confidently along toward a coveted place in high-grade literature, an accident happened, one day, which blocked his progress for a time: the office-boy brought an urgent call for “copy” to fill a vacancy on the eve of going to press, & Harte, for lack of anything more to his taste, fished his H. C. Ballad out of the waste-basket where he had thrown it, & gave it to the boy. Harte’s reputation had been local, before; in a single day the Heathen Chinees made it universal. Then the eastern world called for more Chinees, & was frantic to get it. Harte tried to appease it with higher literature, & got only censure in return; & reminders that he was wasting his time upon a sort of work which was out of his line & above his ability. He told me these things long afterward, & still showed a bitter & hostile feeling against that ballad, because it had stopped his lofty march when he was making such good progress, & had remained stubbornly in his road so long that he had begun to fear that he would never get a start again. Then relief & rescue came at last, & the “Luck of Roaring Camp” blasted the Heathen Chinees out of the way & opened the road.

I always recal that talk with Hay with pleasure, not only for its own sake, but because it was incidentally the occasion of my getting acquainted with Horace Greeley, a man whom I greatly admired & longed to see, & whose memory I still revere. It was difficult to get an interview with him, for he was a busy man, he was irascible, & he had an aversion to strangers; but I not only had the good fortune to meet him, but also had the great privilege of hearing him talk. The Tribune was in its early home, at that time, & Hay was a leader-writer on its staff. I had an appointment with him, & went there to look him up. I did not know my way, & entered Mr. Greeley’s room by mistake. I recognized his back, & stood mute & rejoicing. After a little, he swung slowly around in his chair, with his head slightly tilted backward, & the great moons of his spectacles glaring with intercepted light; after about a year—though it may have been less, perhaps—he arranged his firm mouth with care & said with virile interest—

So I think it must have been in 1870 or ’71 that I had the talk with Hay about the ballads, because both he & Mr. Greeley were doing editorial duty on the Tribune in those years. / Mark Twain [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to E.B. Prondfit of the Aeolian Co., makers of his Orchestrelle. Sam asked for the notes to the bugle calls on Roll # 40038, so he might use them for “A Horse’s Tale,” which he hoped to have issued as a book in the early spring of 1906 [MTP]. Note: The tale as a book would not issue until Oct. 1907.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “We’re practicing the war songs and bugle calls in with the reading of the “Horse’s Tale,” and it is good” [MTP TS 104]. Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Sent to ‘The Weekly’ / John Hay & the Ballads’ / wrote to Aeolion Co. for bugle call- & war song music” [MTP TS 30].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam, “eager to see ‘A Horse’s Tale,’” though it was “late for the January number—unless it comes at once.” The book could then be issued after serial publication in the magazine. He mentioned “many newspapers” were eager to print anything about Twain as his 70th approached, and that they had let “a number of important newspapers reprint parts of your ‘Editorial Wild Oats’ thus insuring very wide publicity” [MTP].

October 4 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara, c/o Miss Gordon, 117 W. 69th NYC. Only the envelope survives [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: All day Mr. Clemens has been hard at work re-vising “A Horse’s Tale”. “It’s a prodigious piece of work” he truly says. And he didn’t eat any dinner tonight because of indigestion this morning. Yet after dinner (Jean and I had dined) when he came into the living room and I was playing the “Stabat Mater”, he was as light on his feet as a soft feather and made little dance steps to the music—as gaily as if he’d feasted well, yet there he was, foodless—and looking as well as he acted. Sometimes I think he must draw nourishment from his smoking, for he smokes so much and he doesn’t seem to get anything but good out of it, for himself and for others of us, too [MTP TS 104]. Note: “Stabat Mater” (Mother is standing) is a thirteenth Century Roman Catholic hymn to Mary.

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “sent for sheets of ‘My Watch.’ / Print article in Vol. 19” [MTP TS 30].

Irvin Butterworth wrote on Grand Rapids Gas Light Co. letterhead (Mich.) to ask Sam how he might obtain two copies of “Traveling with a Reformer.” Miss Lyon wrote on the page that the sketch was in Cosmopolitan for Dec. 1903 [MTP].

Henry W. Primer for Aeolian Co. wrote to Sam, in receipt of his request that they notify him what date they can send men to ship his Orchestrelle. Primer had written the factory at Worcester, Mass. and would let him know [MTP].

E.B. Prondfit for Aeolian Co., NYC replied to Sam’s Oct. 3 request. He had written to their factory at Meriden, Conn. to find out if they had scores of the roll containing the bugle calls and war songs he was interested in [MTP].

October 5 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

At 3 p.m. to-day I finished the fifth & last revising of “A Horse’s Tale” & am going to bed & stay there 2 weeks, for I am a free person once more. I have worked like a slave, from morning till—well, all day,—for I don’t know how many consecutive days [He began Sept. 23], & have enjoyed it ever so much—thoroughly, in fact—but I’m as tired as a dog.

I believe I’ve got through in time to crowd it into the Jan & Feb numbers of the Harper, & that is what I have been rushing to accomplish. (Don’t pray for me, I can get along without that—I only want congratulations/ I’m not begging for influence.)

Clara & Katy are keeping house at 21-5th Avenue, I think—and I woke up scared, last night, & wondering if the place is warm enough with its new furnaces to be safe. I do hope so. Last year I sent to hell for an expert, but he was defeated, & went away ashamed [MTHHR 601-2]. Note: “A Horse’s Tale” first ran in the Aug. and Sept. 1906 issues of Harper’s; in 1907 it was issued as a 153 page book.

Sam also replied to Miss Carrie Rosenheim of Baltimore, who had written in September sometime asking for his autograph: “Dear Miss Carrie / I am a dear, & so I send you two. / Sincerely Yours / Mark Twain” [eBay item 230470822748, May 5, 2010]. Note: [MTP: Cummings file lists this as Oct. 9].

Sam also sent a telegram to Frederick A. Duneka. The message is not extant but referred to in Duneka’s reply below.

In the evening Sam entertained seven people with a reading of “A Horse’s Tale,” with Isabel Lyon accompanying in parts on the Orchestrelle. He wrote of the good time in his Oct. 6 to daughter Clara:

I think we had a very nice time last night. We assembled a jury of 7 & I read the “Horse’s Tale” an hour & a half; then dinner; then finished it in another hour & a half. When we came to the bugle-calls & the War-songs, Miss Lyon broke in at the appropriate places & played them.

The jury approved the tale. I endorse the jury’s verdict. For an 8-day job it isn’t a bad tale. Profitable, too—an average of $700 a day—for it is to go into the magazine—Jan. & Feb. numbers of Harper’s [MTP]. Note: it ran Aug.-Sept. 1906. Though the guests are not named, in his Oct. 3 to Clara he identified them only as: “a man, a woman, & 2 girls of 15.”

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2:

"Mr. & Mrs. Henderson, Hildegard Henderson, Nancy & Jerome [sic Gerome] Brush came at five o'clock to hear the reading of 'A Horse's Tale.' Mr. Clemens read an hour & a half before dinner & an hour & a half afterward and his listeners were delighted" [MTP TS 30].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam. "Thank you for your telegram [not extant] of to-day, and your promise to secure photographs of the house you now occupy and the one you propose to occupy next year." He wished Sam would trust the MS of "A Horse's Tail" to registered mail, because they were too busy to send a man for it [MTP].

October 6 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara, soon to be at 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y., where Sam addressed the letter:

Why, you little rat, somebody had to be blamed, so I selected [Dr. Edward] Quintard in place of myself. I was thinking of having him hanged, but for your sake I will let him off, for the present.

So you have got at the "real cause" of your ill turn, & it was a doctor. I could have told you that much. It's an awful trade for a Christian.

But I am very glad your voice is back. I believe it will stay, if the doctors will let it alone.

Oh, Clara dear, I am sorry I meddled with the paper on your room, & am the cause of keeping you away from 21 & Katy's ministrations—I won't do such a thing again.

I didn't know Josef Hoffman has been marrying a divorcée—it escaped me, yet I read the paper daily.

At 3, an hour ago, I got up, & the western landscape was such a miracle of varied loveliness that I said I would try to photograph it with a pen at that same hour to-morrow; for I remembered that the Harpers want some account of this house & of the house we have secured for next year.

The Selfish article? I have so changed it that I believe it could be published now without offending any one. After a few months I will examine it & see how it looks then [MTP]. Note: Sam then described the prior evening's reading performance; see in Oct. 5 entry.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon Mr. Clemens read "A Horse's Tale" aloud to Mr. and Mrs. Henderson and Hildegard and Nancy and Gerome Brush. He began at 5:15 read until within a few minutes of 7 and dinner and then finished it up in an hour and a half leaving us all moved and speechless. We had the music, Soldier Boys Call and The Bugle Calls [MTP TS 104]. Note: This somewhat duplicates what she wrote in journal # 2 for Oct. 5. Gerome Brush (1888-1954), 18 at this time, son of George de Forest Brush.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Wrote to Colonel Harvey asking him to grant Collier permission to use a short story in a Short Story Classic book which wouldn't, couldn't be complete without one by Mark Twain in it" [MTP TS 31].

Nelly Goyder of Lancetown Tasmania, Australia wrote asking for a photograph of Sam, being unable to "procure a likeness" there. She wrote his books were a "perpetual delight & the memory of your lectures in Australia is with me still" [MTP]. Note: After receiving Goyer's note, likely some weeks later (ca. Oct. 20), Sam wrote on the letter to Lyon: "Stir Mr. Champlaine (Boston) up—we want the 12 photos. / SLC" [MTP]. Note: MTP catalogs Sam's directive to Isabel Lyon as "on or after 6 October," but of course it would have taken about two weeks for a letter to arrive in N.H. from down under. Estimated here as ca. Oct. 20.

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to thank Sam for his appreciation of "Editorial Wild Oats," as he had "fussed a long time before I got that title and was rather pleased with it..." He informed of a "matter of business of some importance"—an obscure publisher in the West was hinting at bringing out a "Mark Twain Library of Wit and Humor"—they could likely stop them or maybe it was only a threat. The plates had been destroyed on Mark Twain's Library of Humor, but Harpers wanted to "revive and reprint this with the possible addition of a few more sketches, bringing it down to date" [MTP].

Roland Phillips for Harper's Weekly wrote enclosing proofs on Sam's story of John Hay [MTP].

October 7 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote a long letter to Frederick A. Duneka about “A Horse’s Tale.”

Proofs sent to me here before October 17 or to 21 Fifth Avenue, after November 3, will get immediate attention...I’ve made a poor guess as to the number of words. I think there must be 20,000. My usual page of MS. Contains about 130 words; but when I am deeply interested in my work and dead to everything else, my hand-write shrinks and shrinks until there’s a great deal more than 130 on a page...this tale is written in that small hand.

This strong interest is natural, for the heroine is my small daughter Susy, whom we lost. It was not intentional—it was a good while before I found it out [MTP: Cushman file]. Note: Sam also said he wanted it illustrated “considerably. Not humorous pictures.”

Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to George B. Harvey, to ask a favor of allowing Robert J. Collier to use one of Sam’s short stories in his Short Story Classics, preferably a best one. “He has telegraphed & asked me to make this appeal to you & I am doing it not reluctantly but heartily.”

Yesterday afternoon—

You know there is only one trustworthy test of a book: will it read aloud? Jane Eyre would have read aloud; so I judge that the test was not applied, otherwise the first publisher would have accepted it instead of the last one.” [Sam encouraged Harper’s to try the test with “about 6 persons present.”]

Yesterday afternoon we gathered our jury at 5: a historian; his German-English wife, daughter of the house of Von Bunsen; their daughter, aged 15; Nancy, Daughter of Brush the artist; her brother, 18 by the almanac [Gerome Brush], but 30 in mental growth; Jean; Miss Lyon.

The candidate was “A Horse’s Tale.” One-half was read before dinner, & occupied an hour & a half (I am—intentionally—a slow reader); the second half occupied from 8 until 9:30—so the reading was 3 hours altogether.

The verdict was to my taste.

[Sam wrote he felt “an unusual interest in it almost a mother’s interest in twins”. He also shared plans for his 70th birthday bash and urged Harvey to: “get to work & meditate beer & sandwiches & good friends & a good time in a smug place, & late hours there to.” He wanted Rogers, Twichell, Rice, Quintard, and Augustus Thomas there. He also wished he could be at the Choate dinner, Lotos club on Oct. 21 but had to be in Boston on that date “to do things (privately, in a drawing-room...proper things)” [MTP: Cushman file].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Gerome Brush stayed all night. He is quite remarkable and reminds one of Shelly in Mr. Clemens’s article on the “Defense of Harriet Shelly,” but only in his intellectual qualities which showed themselves at a very early age, just as Gerome’s do. He has made Jean feel the uselessness of the days she is living, doing nothing of value. Everything to be called a “whim”. It’s written on all her doors. So she has decided to at least carve and try to finish up the box for Mrs. Loomis and I gave her some Emerson to read too, for Raphael and Gerome both quote from Emerson [MTP TS 104].

Thomas S. Barbour for the Congo Reform Assoc. wrote to Sam: “I think there is no question that an adverse influence is holding back editorial comment [on the King Leopold Soliloquy pamphlet] in some quarters, but it will have much to do to keep the work from the public” [MTP].

October 8 Sunday – R.H. Wilson wrote from Brooklyn, NY to Sam, asking about JA—was it “true history,” and if so, why was it written under the name Luis DeConte? [MTP].

October 9 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote two letters to Frederick A. Duneka of Harper’s.

The easiest way for me to furnish the details you ask for . . . is handy for you too; for you can at your pleasure talk the details to any journalist that come to you or print my letter on slips & hand them to as many of the boys as will accept . . .

...As to other matters here are the details.

Yes, I have tried a number of summer homes, here & in Europe together.

Each of these homes had charms of its own; charms & delights of its own, & some of them—even in Europe—had comforts. Several of them had conveniences, too. They all had a “view.”

It is my conviction that there should always be some water in a view—a lake or a river, but not the ocean, if you are down on its level. I think that when you are down on its level it seldom inflames you with an ecstasy which you could not get out of a sand-flat. It is like being on board ship, over again; indeed it is worse than that, for there's three months of it. On board ship one tires of the aspects in a couple days, & quits looking. The same vast circle of heaving humps is spread around you all the time, with you in the centre of it & never for variety, a flight of flying-fish, mornings; a flock of porpoises throwing summersaults afternoons; a remote whale spouting, Sundays; occasional phosphorescent effects, nights; every other day a streak of black smoke trailing along under the horizon; on the one single red letter day, the illustrious iceberg. I have seen that iceberg thirty-four times in thirty-seven voyages; it is always the same shape, it is always the same size, it always throws up the same old flash when the sun strikes it; you may set it on any New York door-step of a June morning & light it up with a mirror-flash; & I will engage to recognize it. It is artificial, & it is provided & anchored out by the steamer companies. I used to like the sea, but I was young then, & could easily get excited over any kind of monotony, & keep it up till the monotonies ran out, if it was a fortnight.

Last January, when we were beginning to inquire about a home for this summer, I remembered that Abbott Thayer had said, three years before, that the New Hampshire highlands was a good place. He was right—it was a good place. Any place that is good for an artist in paint is good for an artist in morals & ink. [George de Forest] Brush is here, too; so is Col. T. W. Higginson; so is Raphael Pumpelly; so is Mr. Secretary [Ethan Allen] Hitchcock; so is [Ernest Flagg] Henderson; so is [Josephus N.] Larned; so is Sumner; so is Franklin MacVeigh [sic MacVeagh] ; so is Joseph L. Smith; so is Henry Copley Greene, when I am not occupying his house, which I am doing this season. Paint, literature, science, statesmanship, history, professorship, law, morals—these are all represented here, yet crime is substantially unknown. [editorial emphasis]

The summer homes of these refugees are sprinkled, a mile apart, among the forest-clad hills, with access to each other by firm smooth country roads which are so embowered in dense foliage that it is always twilight in there, & comfortable. The forests are spider-webbed with these good roads, they go everywhere; but for the help of the guide-boards, the stranger would not arrive anywhere.

The village—Dublin—is bunched together in its own place, but a good telephone service makes its markets handy to all those outliars. I have spelt it that way to be witty. The village executes orders on the Boston plan—promptness & courtesy.

The summer homes are high-perched, as a rule, & have contenting outlooks. The house we occupy has one. Monadnock, a soaring double hump, rises into the sky at its left elbow—that is to say, it is close at hand.

From the base of the long slant of the mountain the valley spreads away to the circling frame of the hills, ranges rises to view & flows, fold upon fold, wave upon wave, soft & blue & unworldly, to the horizon fifty miles away. In these October days Monadnock & the valley & its framing hills make an inspiring picture to look at, for they are sumptuously splashed & mottled & be-torched from sky-line to sky-line with the richest dyes the autumn can furnish; & when they lie flaming in the full drench of the mid-afternoon sun, the sight affects the spectator physically, it stirs his blood like military music.

These summer homes are commodious, well built,—& well furnished—facts which sufficiently indicate that the owners built them to live in themselves. They have furnaces & wood fireplaces, & the rest of the comforts & conveniences of a city home, & can be comfortably occupied all the year round.

We cannot have this house next season, but I have secured Mrs. Upton's house which is over in the law & science quarter, two or three miles from here, & about the same distance from the art, literary, & scholastic groups. The science & law quarter has needed improving, this good while.

The nearest railway-station is distant something like an hour's drive; it is three hours from there to Boston, over a branch line. You can go to New York in six hours per branch lines if you change cars every time you think of it, but it is better to go to Boston & stop over & take the trunk line next day, then you do not get lost.

It is claimed that the atmosphere of the New Hampshire highlands is exceptionally bracing & stimulating, & a find aid to hard & continuous work. It is a just claim, I think. I came in May, & wrought 35 successive days without a break. It is possible that I could not have done it elsewhere. I do not know; I have not hand any disposition to try it, before. I think I got the disposition out of the atmosphere, this time. I feel quite sure, in fact, that that is where it came from.

I am ashamed to confess what an intolerable pile of manuscript I ground out in the 35 days, therefore I will keep the number of words to myself. I wrote the first half of a long tale—"The Adventures of a Microbe"—& put it away for a finish next summer, & started another long tale—"The Mysterious Stranger;" I wrote the first half of it & put it with the other for a finish next summer. I stopped, then. I was not tired, but I had no books on hand that needed finishing this year except one that was seven years old. After a little I took that one up & finished it. Not for publication, but to have it ready for revision next summer.

Since I stopped work I have had a two months' holiday. The summer has been my working time for 35 years; to have a holiday in it (in America) is new for me. I have not broken it, except to write "Eve's Diary" & "A Horse's Tale"—short things occupying the mill 12 days.

This year our summer is 6 months long & ends with November & the flight home to New York, but next year we hope & expect to stretch it out another month & end it the first of December [Paine's 1917 Mark Twain's Letters p.781-4].

Note: This letter appeared within an interview in "Mark Twain at 70" Hartford Courant Nov. 25, 1905 p.16. (Replaced "and's" with &'s as Sam wrote them.) Persons mentioned: Abott Handerson Thayer (1849-1921), prominent artist and teacher; George de Forest Brush (1855-1941) painter; Thomas Wentworth Higginson (see earlier listing); Ethan Allen Hitchcock (1835-1909) Secretary of Interior under McKinley and Roosevelt (1898-1907); Ernest Flagg Henderson (1861-1928) author and historian; Josephus N. Learned (1836-1913) former owner/editor of the Buffalo Express with Sam; Sumner B. Pearmain (1859-1946), stock broker; Alice Whittemore Upton Pearmain (1863-1941), magazine and newspaper contributor was Sumner B. Pearmain's wife. Mrs. Upton was likely Alice's mother Sarah Miller (Duncan) Upton; Franklin MacVeagh (1837-1934) banker and Treasury Sec. under Taft (1909-1913), brother to Wayne MacVeagh; Joseph Linden Smith (1863-1950), painter, noted authority on Egyptian art; Raphael Pumpelly (1837-1923) geologist and explorer, director of the U.S. Geological Survey.

Isabel Lyon replied for Clemens to the Oct. 2 from Daniel Edwards Kennedy:

"Dear Sir: / Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him, as he is far too busy to answer letters, saying that he has heard people talk about the seven jokes, but he has never heard what they are. / Yours ..." [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Miss Carrie Rosenheim, who evidently had requested an autograph: "Dear Miss Carrie: / I am a dear, & so I send you two. / Sincerely yours, Mark Twain" [MTP: Cushman file]. Note: misplaced as Oct. 5 but file copy says Oct. 9.

Sam also wrote a short note addressed to Harper & Brothers. "Dear Sirs: It is probably merely a rumor. My Library of Humor is protected by copyright, & an infringement of it is not at all likely. Please keep a lookout, & let me know of any one attempts an infringement" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "A Horse's Tale sent to Harpers today" [MTP TS 104].

Hartford attorney Edward J. Garvan wrote asking Sam for the address of Karl Gerhardt [MTP]. Note: the MTP gives Sam's answer as "on or after 9 Oct," which is entirely possible for Oct. 9.

Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Edward J. Garvan that Sam had not seen Gerhardt for twelve years, and he was then in Hartford [MTP].

David C. Grant for Lincoln National Bank wrote to Sam having rec'd Harper's check for $2,083.33, and asked that he confirm the check as endorsed by Miss A. Watson (Katherine Harrison's asst.) [MTP]. On or after Oct. 9 Sam wrote to David C. Grant "I ratify & confirm your action regarding the endorsed check by Miss Watson Thanking you for your courtesy" [MTP].

Thomas S. Barbour for the Congo Reform Assoc. wrote to Sam enclosing a copy of Boston American which contained extracts from the Leopold Soliloquy pamphlet. He was sending 30 free copies of the pamphlet itself [MTP].

Edward T. Heyn wrote from Berlin, Germany to Sam, sending under separate cover Sam's photo to be signed for an artist friend of Heyn's, M. Wolff [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam, sending a NY draft for $110.84, a "one-third share of the rent paid to Oct. 1 by Leslie, the tenant on the Eire Basin property at Buffalo, N.Y." [MTP].

October 10 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today Mr. Clemens and Jean lunched with the Catlins—but before Mr. Clemens went away I played all his favorites on the Aeolion, and the Largo I played four times. The Aeolion is going away today and the voice—one of the voices of Dublin will go too. This wonderful summer is sighing so gently away. It has been the Queen of all my summers.

Today Mr. Clemens said that as a masseur refreshes the body, so the Aeolion is his spiritual massage—it soothes and rests him.

A lot of children; among the group came Barry Faulkner too—were here for dinner. Barry told me that not long since Mr. Bynner met Hall Caine and the most noticeable things about him were the spots where he hadn't washed [MTP TS 105, 106]. Note: Hall Caine (1853-1931), English novelist; see Gribben p. 125.

Witter Harold Bynner (1881-1968), poet, and writer; see Gribben p.120.

Gilbert Holland Montague wrote from NYC to thank Sam "for the kind note you caused Miss Lyon to send..." He planned to call on Sam this winter, and envied him autumn in N.H. [MTP].

George W. Reeves wrote to Sam. This could not be located at the MTP.

October 11 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara in N.Y.C.

Clara, you little rascal, sometimes I have regretted that we took a house so far down, but how lucky it was! It would too bad for you to have to travel from the Central Park region clear down to 12th street. I am very glad we have the Musical Institute at our elbow. I hope you are at home by this time, snug & comfortable & happy./ With great love & a kiss / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Muriel M. Pears in Scotland.

When my letter came back here from Scotland I was ashamed, since apparently my failure to add "Nairn" to the address was the reason it did not reach you. I re-posted it at once, without waiting to apologise for my heedlessness, but I suppose it was too late then to do any good. I apologise now, & add yet another apology for being so long about it; I meant to do it the very next day, but was called away suddenly, & by the time I was back home again it had been driven out of my mind, which is a most leaky one, by an accumulation of other things to be done or apologies made for having neglected to do. And so it did not occur to me until I was in bed & ready for sleep, a minute ago, that I had never yet expressed to you my vexation & regret for that long-ago piece of heedlessness of mine. Forgive me if you can, for I am entering old age 7 weeks hence, & I seem to have all the infirmities that belong to that condition.

Our long & pleasant vacation is closing—and this is the pleasantest summer home we have ever had, on either side of the ocean. It is a lovely October, & from every window of the house is visible a tumbled wide ocean of foliage ablaze with color. Clara has gone home from her Connecticut rest-cure—scared by the autumn chill—and is keeping house at No. 21. I go visiting to Boston ten days hence; Jean & the rest go home to No. 21 the first of November, & I follow as soon thereafter as they are done fussing & settling & arranging. I have secured a house here for next year, & we mean to spend 7 months in it we like this region so well. I wish we may see you at 21 again. / Repentantly, ever yours [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon Mr. Clemens called me up stairs and put into my hands a beautiful memoriam that he has written, and the Apostrophe to Death forms a part of it.

Jean came home from the Brushes' with a following for supper, but all the time my thoughts were with the dead and the majesty of the grief that walks ever silently with that wonderful man and I was weak with the effort to pull my self into the sweet childishness of the following when I wanted to be alone [MTP TS 105].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "The aeolion [orchestrelle] was taken away today" [MTP TS 31].

Thomas S. Barbour for the Congo Reform Assoc. wrote to Sam, asking him to return the 30 pamphlets at Barbour's cost, since the printer "made a serious mistake in several thousand pamphlets." He offered other details on the sale of the pamphlets [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to thank Sam for the account of his summer place and reminding him they still would like photos. If he had no objection they would use what Sam wrote about the book, The Line of Love. They still wanted to keep Mark Twain's Library of Humor alive and offered him 3% royalty, since they had to reset plates for it. He also told of a NY World reporter who wanted to interview Sam about gout. "I think he is the same man who went to a hanging in a little town up the State and asked the hangee to be hanged twenty minutes earlier than the time set so he could catch the 12:36 train back" [MTP].

Miller Reese Hutchinson wrote from NYC to Sam, enclosing a sketch for which he asked Sam to write "a very bright and witty dialogue" [MTP]. Sam wrote at the top, "Not answered / Finally answered Oct 26, 1905." Sam's answer is not extant.

Miss A. Watson wrote on H.H. Rogers' letterhead that she had deposited the Harper's check for $2083.33 in Sam's Lincoln National account [MTP].

October 12 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to George B. Harvey.

Dear Uncle George: / Yes, I see the situation now, & recognise that it is unassailably right.

The dinner scheme is unique & just a jewel; & if you don't say anything about king-pin they'll come, & maybe forget & talk king-pin themselves; but they used to be mighty human, & maybe they are yet. When Howells was on the Atlantic I mapped out a blamed good thing: a skeleton for a short story, 12 men to invent the story & fill up the skeleton, each in his own way. He got only 3 recruits—himself, one other, & myself. Howells said that if he had suppressed my name, he could have secured the list, but that the boys frankly said they could do music of their own & they should have to decline to dance to mine.

But never mind: whatever way you put up the scheme it is a safe gamble it will go gaily & surely to a success.

I've got a subject for a speech: I wish Tom Reed was here to abuse it & scoff at it & carry on! [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Headache. I think it's all, all a dream. Even as I sat in the fireplace niche after dinner and Mr. Clemens walked up and down the room with hands behind him, the pink pretty palms turned out, a dear fashion of his, even then I didn't find any reality to it—only a spirit living, only an exquisite dream.

Santa [Clara] writes such good things about the house at 21 Fifth Avenue. She's there now and finds it beautiful. It always has the feeling that it ought to be, or has been, a Bishop's residence. It's ecclesiastical [MTP TS 105].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Wrote Miss Sherry, sending the letter to Katie to supply to address, asking what amount of money she put into the Book Lovers Stock in 1903" [MTP TS 30]. Note: Miss Margaret F. Sherry was a much loved nurse of Livy's; Clemens had touted Book Lovers Stock, which evidently failed.

Margaret Higginson Barney wrote from Boston to Sam, having heard he would be in Beantown. Mrs. Pearmain had asked her to come and see him on Sunday Oct. 22. Her handwriting is atrocious [MTP].

October 13 Friday – United Cigar Stores Co. in the Flatiron building, N.Y.C. wrote asking for permission to use Sam's letter endorsing the La Tunita cigars. On or just after this day Isabel V. Lyon responded for Sam: "Mr. Clemens would like to do so—but the request comes so frequently that he has had to decline them all" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens had lunch down at the Joe Smith's today. He came down stairs ready to go with his hair all damp. The wind was blowing a cold blast and terror went into my soul, for he helped to start his long siege of bronchitis last winter by going out with damp hair. But he was good and let me run for Teresa to rub it dry with warm towels as he sat and read to me a little article on the just punishment for automobile breakers of the speed law. When Teresa was through with her task his hair was like living silver. Oh, so beautiful [MTP TS 105, 107 (no p. 106)].

Ambrose Lee, supervising inspector in the N.Y.C. Tenement Housing Dept., wrote from NYC to ask Sam for an interview to suggest as subject for his consideration for an article [MTP].

Sir Henry Irving, born John Henry Brodribb, died of a stroke during a performance while on tour in Bradford. He had just uttered Becket's dying words "Into thy hands, O Lord, into thy hands." He died an hour later and spoke no more. He was 67. See Sam's Oct. 17 and Oct. 19 to MacAlister, with Clara's enclosed in the latter about Irving. Sam first saw Irving on Sept. 28, 1872 in a performance of Charles I and wrote it was "a curious literary absurdity." See also other entries on Irving, volumes I & II.

October 14 Saturday – Thomas S. Barbour, of the Congo Reform Assoc., Boston, wrote to Sam, asking for a "few minutes at your place of entertainment" the following week when Sam planned to be in Boston [MTP]. Notes: MTP gives "on or after 14 October" for Lyon's response for Sam. Oct. 14 is reasonable for a post to reach Dublin from Boston. The response: "Perhaps it would be better to call up Mr. Clemens at Pearmain's address private". Sumner Bass Pearmain and Alice Whittemore Upton Pearmain were active in Boston society, educational and social work. Sumner was a stock broker. Alice's parents, Peter and Sarah Miller (Duncan) Upton had a place near Dublin, N.H.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean, Study, 9:30.

I went down to the Thayer's about 5 o'clock to carry the volume containing "The Defense of Harriet Shelly" to Miss Fuertes and Gerald, and in the lovely living room I found such a dear group of young souls. Jerome [Brush] and Gladys [Thayer], and Barry Faulkner with his sister at the piano and in the twilight we had a very nice talk. They are a dear and noble grouping. Each one so keen with a sense of the bigness of life and the great wish to make a good thing out of any ability he may have within himself.

Oh the dear voice that went with the Aeolion. I've had big catches in my throat for the past days, for my prayer has gone in the uplifting Largo.

Sir Henry Irving is dead [MTP TS 107]. Note: Hill and others point out that Miss Lyon indicated epileptic attacks of Jean's by merely time and place.

William Travers Jerome from N.Y.C. wrote on District Attorney letterhead to Sam asking for a contribution for "the campaign." On or about this day Sam wrote on the letter to Lyon, "Send $25" [MTP].

October 15 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara at 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

Dublin, Sunday, 9.30 & 10.30 a.m.

In my bedroom, dear heart, in my bedroom, & drunk again with the autumn foliage. The fact is, I am drunk with it all the time; it began weeks ago, & I have never drawn a sober breath since. The colors that wash the Wide sweep are infinitely tender & subdued & delicate, now. Down the slope of Monadnock there's a rippled & ruffled landslide of hellfire toned down for Sunday consumption, the aforetime flames all there but the fierce anger all gone—softened down to mottled yellows, every ruffle smitten through with a jet of sunlight, the whole avalanche daintily luminous, exquisitely luminous. The people are lamenting; they say the forest has faded; but it is a mistake to think damage has happened: Nature, that old harlot, has put off her orgy-finery till she falls again next year, that is all; she is as well dressed as ever she was. I called Miss Lyon up stairs to look—the view is not so extensive down stairs.

I am going to drive over to the Upton place this afternoon to look closely into the aspects there & see what we are to expect next autumn. You will be right in the musical atmosphere, now—submerged in it, beatified with it, & I am very glad. You will see Mr. Henschel. He must come & see us.

Dear heart, I think there is a framed poem hanging in what is to be my bedroom; it is MS—Oliver Wendell Holmes's hand; he sent it to me or to your mother when I was 50. If you find it, telephone Mr. Duneka to send up & copy it if he wants to; I think it has never been in print.

I go to Boston next Saturday, 21st, to remain 12 or 14 days, & talk several times to invited gangs—once to women, several times to men—no gate-money permitted, & no newspaper-mention.

There's to be a birthday-dinner in New York, & I sent down word to invite Quintard, but it can't be, & I am sorry. Guests all specialists, but not medical. Unless this idea shall be abandoned. This is private to you.

Good-bye, dear, dear, most dear little ashcat. / Father / I have signed the Upton-house lease [MTP]. Note: Sir George Henschel (Isidor Georg Henschel; 1850-1934), composer, conductor, pianist; Dr. Edward Quintard. Peter and Sarah Miller (Duncan) Upton; the Upton house was "two-or three miles" from where Sam had been staying [Oct. 9 to Duneka].

Isabel Lyon's journal: A little while ago Mr. Clemens rapped on the floor for me and I went up to find him in his dressing gown at the window full of the wonders of the great western view. Bit by bit he described it, appreciated it with his inimitable powers and spoke of the "big land slide of hell fire on Monadnock—toned down for Sunday" for a soft mist is beautifying things today. When I said that the coloring was too strong for me 2 weeks ago, and made me feel as Victor Gillon felt about the autumn colors of the Adirondacks, that it was a case of "Dame Nature over-dressed", Mr. Clemens said it wasn't ever too strong for him, he "likes to see the old harlot blaze out in her gaudiest".

Mr. Pearmain is up stairs now, and its 10:45 a.m. Such a glorious day [MTP TS 107]. Note: Sumner Bass Pearmain; Victor Gillon is not further identified.

Sam dined with Mr. and Mrs. Abbott Thayer and enjoyed pumpkin pie, which gave him indigestion the following day [IVL Journal Oct. 16].

Mary Thacher Higginson (Mrs. Thomas Wentworth Higginson) wrote from Cambridge, Mass. to invite Sam to their home and spend a night after his talk to the Author's Club at Mrs. J.H. Wright's in Quincy. "Mrs. Pearmain consents, but we agreed that if you thought it would be easier and more comfortable to return to your quarters at her house on Beacon St., we should understand..." [MTP].

October 16 Monday – Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Ambrose Lee, acknowledging his letter of Oct. 13. Lyon's response is not extant but is referred to in Lee's Oct. 18 to Sam [MTP].

Clemens also wrote to the Congo Reform Assoc. in Boston, the letter not extant but referred to in Tyler's Oct. 17 reply.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Last week the Danish sculptor Borgeum [sic Borglum] broke into splinters 2 angels he had been at work upon for the Cathedral (St. John the Divine) because the clergy didn't like the idea of having them represented as female figures, angels haven't sex—but one was the angel of the Aunnunciation and commenting upon the necessity of sex in this case Mr. Clemens observed as per this slip of pinned on paper—as he lay curled up on the couch. "The angel of annunciation came on rather delicate business when he had to announce to a young lady that she was going to have trouble. Why should such a commission be put into the hands of a Buck angel?"

Mr. [Henry] Allison came up to photograph Mr. Clemens, who didn't feel well enough to have more than one or 2 taken. He dined with the Thayers yesterday, ate pumpkin pie which gave him wretched indigestion [MTP TS 107-108]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr Allison...has arranged with Mrs. Upton about the electric lighting on the house" [MTP TS 31]. Note: (John) Gutzon de la Mothe Borglum (1867-1941), Danish-American artist and sculptor, famous for creating the heads at Mt. Rushmore and Stone Mountain near Atlanta.

October 17 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to John Y. MacAlister in London about the passing of Henry Irving: “All our people mourn him. He earned their love & esteem at his first coming & never lost it. He was endeared to me by a warm friendship of thirty-three years” [MTP]. Note: Sam also ordered a wreath sent to Irving’s funeral [Clara’s enclosure in Oct. 19 to MacAlister].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Never take anything for granted—” A pretty good watch word, and when C.C. reminded me that it was a good one, she didn’t know that I’d learned it when I was a pretty young “Freshman”. Oh, a very young one, that was nearly twenty five years ago, and I’m nothing but a rusty “Soph” now [MTP TS 108].

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “ Sent back to the Library—/ Carlyle’s letters 1 vol / Huxley’s letters 1 vol / Darwin’s letters 2 vol” [MTP TS 31; Gribben 129, 176, 343].

Margaret E. Tyler for the Congo Reform Assoc. wrote to Sam. “Dr. Barbour desires me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th inst., [not extant] with the clippings you returned, and to send you the enclosed [not extant] from the Norfolk Landmark” [MTP].

October 18 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara at 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

It shall be just as you prefer, dear heart. If she is in the house from 9 a.m. till 6 p.m., I think that that will answer my needs. It will be best to tell her when you see her, no doubt.

Clara dear, assume full and sole authority in the house. Require that all complaints be brought to you—none to anyone else. Allow no one but yourself to scold or correct a servant. All of this is for Jean’s sake, and to keep her out of trouble—particularly with Ugo. I do not think she has trouble, now, with the others.

It delights me to know you are so happy and contented, and able to work, and I hope there will be no bar to your going to Hackensack.

I said a cordial yes to MacAlister, but I added no condolences, because I had already telegraphed Col. Harvey to attend to that for me.

A kiss and a hug and a good-bye, dear, it is dinner time. / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Harper’s Weekly Editor, a letter which ran Nov. 4:

DUBLIN, N.H., October 18, 1905.

To the Editor of Harper’s Weekly:

SIR,—Equal Laws for all. It is good in theory, and I believe it would prove good in practice, if fairly and dispassionately tried. The law dresses a convict in a garb which makes him easily distinguishable from any moving thing in the world at a hundred and twenty-five yards, except a zebra. If he escapes in these clothes, he cannot get far. Could not this principle be extended to include his brother criminal the Overspeeder, thus making the pair fairly and righteously equal before the law? Every day, throughout America, the Overspeeder runs over somebody and “escapes.” That is the way it reads. At present the ‘mobile numbers are so small that ordinary eyes cannot read them, upon a swiftly receding machine, at a distance of a hundred feet—a distance which the machine has covered before the spectator can adjust his focus. I think I would amend the law. I would enlarge the figures, and make them readable at a hundred yards. For overspeeding—first offence—I would enlarge the figures again, and make them readable at three hundred yards—this in place of a fine, and as a warning to pedestrians to climb a tree. This enlargement to continue two months, with privilege of resuming the smaller figures after the first thirty days upon payment of $500. For each subsequent offence, reenlargement for six months, with privilege of resuming the smaller figures upon payment of $1000 at the end of three. With auto numbers readable as far as one could tell a convict from a barber-pole none of these criminals could run over a person and “escape.”

Two months ago a touring mobile came within an indeterminable fraction of killing a member of my family; and its member was out of sight-range before the sharpest eyes present could make it out, it was so small and the spectators so dazed by momentary fright. I have had two narrow escapes in New York, and so has everybody else. None of us has succeeded in capturing the auto number. I feel a sort of personal interest in this suggested reform.

I am, sir,
M. T. [MTP].

Sam also sent a telegram to Miss A. Watson in care of H.H. Rogers, 26 Broadway, N.Y.: “Please don’t draw the check at all find I shall not need it. S L Clemens” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: This wonderful month is drawing ever nearer its end.

Mr. McAllister [sic] has cabled from London asking the right to represent Mr. Clemens at Henry Irving’s funeral and present a wreath, and he is to do it.

I piled up 172 little pincushions on the bed today. 172 [MTP TS 108]. Note: John Y.W. MacAlister.

Katy Leary wrote to Sam from 21 Fifth Ave. N.Y.

My dear Mr Clemens

Your rooms will be all ready for you on the 25th; the rooms are papered; we have only to lay the carpet in your bedroom and put the things to rights; the down stairs is all ready; you can come any time after Wednesday next[.] We shall be ready and glad to have you here[.] Miss Clara seemes like her old self she is happy in her work and the fixing up of the house [.]

I think it will be lovely this winter [MTP]. Note: Sam enclosed this letter in his Oct. 19 to MacAlister.

Ambrose Lee wrote again to Sam, explaining his reason for desiring an interview—that was to “suggesting to you a subject for an article...relates to the dwellers in the N.Y. City Tenement Houses, & is full of pathos, humor & philosophical & sociological interest...” Lee wanted no consideration for providing the information he’d obtained as a supervising inspector of the tenements. On or just after this day Isabel V. Lyon responded to Lee’s Oct. 18 note: “Mr. Clemens thanks you very much, but he doesn’t get half time enough to write the things he wants to & so mustn’t add anything” [MTP].

Sylvia Platt wrote from NYC to thank Sam for writing in and sending a book (unspecified) [MTP].

William Wilson wrote from Boston to ask Sam if “a little corner” might be kept for them in his plans for next week, though they were liable to be introduced to him at the College Club on Tuesday. “...a good deal has transpired since we saw you eight years ago!” He wished to spend an hour “sharing an evening meal, smoking and talking of Mrs. Clemens & Clara and many things where sympathy is strong” [MTP].

October 19 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to John Y. MacAlister. Sam enclosed two letters, he’d received from Katy Leary (Oct. 18) and a partial letter from daughter Clara.

It was most kind & thoughtful of you, & if Clara were here she would thank you, as I do—as you will see by the scrap from her letter enclosed. When your first telegram came I had already telegraphed Col. Harvey & Howells to send cables & include me. That is why I did not send a sentiment until you asked for it.

I profoundly grieve over Irving’s death. It is another reminder. My section of the procession has but a little way to go. I could not be very sorry, if I tried.

Clara finished her 12-month rest-cure ten days ago & left Norfolk for New York. She & 3 servants are keeping house (21 Fifth avenue) & slicking up things. I leave day after to-morrow to visit in Boston; Jean & Miss Lyon & the servants join Clara Nov. 1; when the home is perfectly settled, I follow—about Nov. 3, I guess.

Clara’s health is almost entirely restored. /With love to you all, ...[MTP].

From Clara’s enclosure:

... immediately pay one or two debts—one was 66 dollars for the term of three months at one conservatory & the others were for my piano and pew rent.

At last I am able to work steadily and so find a quiet contentment that I have not had for years. A nice room with pretty furniture, good light, many books a sweet piano and a key in the door is an inspiring place to be in & I believe it has clarified my brain at least in the matter of harmony, this very day.

Well Pappy dear I'll give you a good big hug when you come walking into this house but before that we must make your rooms look prettier than they do now.

Isn't it nice of Mr. McAllister to think to give you the chance to send a wreath to Irving?

I hope you sent a message of condolence along with his wreath. It is terrible that he has died—there is no great English speaking actor left now.

Goodnight Grenouille, I kiss your little white head / Very lovingly / Ashcat [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens is a wonderful instructor in History. Happily he loves it and even more happily he enjoys talking about it. Today he was eloquent when he spoke of the strict examination for civil service that Macaulay instituted in England; when remonstrated with a little he said that if England couldn't get men who could pass those examinations, then the government heads could be modester in their demands, but there hasn't ever been any need of modification, for England has got her men, and on those terms. So her government clerks are well educated.

Barry Faulkner and Gerome [Brush] came in for tea [MTP TS 108].

Sumner Bass Pearmain for the Animal Rescue League wrote to ask Sam if Miss Lyon would let them know which train he would be on Saturday. He had tickets for the "College Widow" for Tues. evening and expected "Alfred Hemenway, Winslow Haven, Professors Paine & Smith & some 8 others to dine with us Monday" [MTP].

Margaret F. Sherry wrote to Sam. "It is very kind of you indeed to offer to give me the money for the stock on the Book Lovers, but as you are in no way responsible, I do not feel justified in accepting your generosity. / Respectfully" [MTP].

October 20 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara.

Clarchen dear, I wish to learn to make the right & just allowance for Jean, & to try to keep constantly in mind that she is heavily afflicted by that unearned, undeserved & hellish disease, & is not strictly responsible for her disposition & her acts when she is under its influence (if there is ever a time when she is really free from its influence—which is doubtful). She has had 2 attacks to-day.

She drives herself to death, with a continuous carnival of riding, driving, walking, climbing, romping—I don't know how she has survived it. I don't mind the physical fatigue—that cannot harm her—but I think the persistent excitement must be hurtful.

Poor child, she is turning her hopes again toward a surgical examination and possible operation. She wants an X ray examination, & we must see Dr. Hartley about it when I come.

The forenoon attack was incomplete—so there was another, this afternoon. That cleared her head & she is all right, now.

I go to Boston tomorrow. I shall see the Hopekirk-Wilsons. Ever so much love, dear ashcat [MTP]. Note: Helen Hopekirk-Wilson (1856-1945), composer, pianist, subject of famous painting, "At the Piano."

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Dear Uncle Henry: / I suppose you are about arriving back from raiding the South by this time, & I hope you have had a good time & that there are some survivors down there—some for Roosevelt to finish up. I am leaving for Boston, to fill various social engagements (with my jaw) & I will finish up that end of the country—if the weapon holds out; she used to be pretty effective when Samson had her. I shall be there a week; possibly a couple, though I hope not, for Clara will have the house ready for me the 25th, & I certainly would like to get home as soon as possible.

Sam added he'd done much writing in Dublin. His trip to Norfolk, Conn. in hot weather to see Clara, one that laid him up with gout for weeks, hadn't been needed since she'd expected him in October. He'd tied up the Upton house near Dublin for the next year with an option for two more. He liked the atmosphere of Dublin: "Physically regarded, I mean. The moral atmosphere wasn't much to speak of, before I came" [MTHHR 602-3].

George W. Reeves, real estate agent, wrote to Sam. “Yours just recd I would very much like to have you perfectly satisfied before you leave I thought I had explained to your satisfaction. Am very sorry that you have any doubts after looking after your interests all this time. / Sincerely...” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Jean, 10:30 bed; 5 p.m. bed—unusually long and severe.

Jean is in bad shape. Her malady seems to be increasing in violence.

“Miss Lillian Russell looks so well in vaudeville encased in Queen Wilhelmina’s $2,000 gown that Peter Dunn would never think of asking pensively, ‘Why do people marry Lillian Russell?’”

Mr. Clemens sat in the big window and commented on that Peter Dunne sentence as being so strong because one or two non-essential words are left out. Most writers, or folks, would have said: “Why do so many people marry L.R.?” [MTP TS 109]. Note: Finley Peter Dunne (1867-1936), pseud. “Mr. Dooley” in Dissertations by Mr. Dooley (1906). See also Hill p. 116.

October 20 ca. – Sam directed Isabel V. Lyon to “Stir Mr. Champlaine (Boston) up—we want the 12 photos,” in response to Nelly Goyder’s Oct. 6 request for a likeness [MTP]. Note: Two weeks allowed for mail from Tasmania.

October 21 Saturday – As planned (see Oct. 15 and Oct. 20 to Clara; Oct. 19 to MacAlister), Sam went to stay with the Pearmain’s Back Bay, 388 Bacon St., Boston. He was telegraphed there on Oct. 25 by Miller Reese Hutchinson [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mr. Clemens is going today. He is sitting in the living room now reading John Hay’s “Castillian Days”, and his trunk key is hung over his left thumb. There is a sad sense of departure everywhere, and a beginning of a desert. He will go to the Pearmain’s and tonight he’s going to a Symphony Concert. A line from Charlotte Porter says “it’s too good to be true” that he is going to speak a word for the Author’s Club.

When Mr. Clemens left today I drove over to Harrisville with him and got his ticket and things. It was a cold drive and Mr. Clemens made a muff of his black cape. At the station a man of a very good sort spoke to Mr. Clemens about the weather, and then said something [two pages torn out] [MTP TS 109]. Note: see also Gribben p.302.

Isabel Lyon’s Journal # 2: “Mr. Clemens went to Boston / Sent Adam’s Diary to C. Braton [sic] Sharpe Esq / London” [MTP TS 32].

October 22 Sunday – Sometime during Sam’s stay in Boston, he conferred with Dr. Haley; Thomas S. Barbour of the Congo Reform Assoc. (Sam was an “honorary” Vice President) wrote on Nov. 23 that he hoped Sam had a good talk with Dr. Haley, and was sorry he could not join them.

October 23 Monday – During his stay at Pearmain’s Boston home, Sam met a young Liberian, Dihdwo Twe, a sophomore at Cushing Academy in Ashburnham, Mass. Twe had been in the Congo before coming to the U.S. He would correspond with Twain into 1906 [Hawkins 170].

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Sent MS of ‘Eve’s Diary’ to Mr. Clemens in Boston” [MTP TS 32].

October 24 Tuesday – Miller Reese Hutchinson sent a telegram to Sam, now at the Pearmain’s house, 388 Beacon Street, Boston : “When can you supply theatrical sketch as per letter of eleventh please answer my expense” [MTP]. Note: this Back Bay address was recently listed for sale as a multi-family house with twelve bedrooms and nine baths with nearly 11,000 square feet, built in 1900.

Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: "Guest of College Club in Boston, 4. P.M." [MTP TS 32].

Louis E. Van Norman for Review of Reviews wrote to Sam, recalling their conversation on postal checks some months before. He asked Sam to write a character sketch of Benjamin Franklin, since the 200th anniversary of his birth was to be celebrated in January, and who better to write it than Twain? [MTP].

Wentworth Higginson's Boston house. See insert.

October 25 Wednesday – In Boston, Mass. Sam wrote and directed Isabel V. Lyon to answer Miller Reese Hutchison's Oct. 24 telegram: "Dear Miss Lyon— / Please write him I am not able to undertake it." [MTP].

Sam also wrote Miss Lyon to deposit $200 for daughter Clara, and that he would return to N.Y.C. the next day, expecting to be there "only a few days" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: Speaks at the Author's Club at the house of Mrs. J.H. Wright
28 Quincy St. / Cambridge / in the afternoon. / will spend the night with Col & Mrs. Higginson / 29 Buckingham St. [MTP TS 32]. Note: Thomas

Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote on Editorial Office of the Atlantic Monthly, Boston: "At South Station take the 12.15 train for Green Lodge (first station after Reedsville) where we shall be mighty glad to meet you. / That King Leopold Soliloquy is a noble piece of work! / Remember that it is Friday the 27 that you are to come to us" [MTP; Hawkins 159].

Thomas S. Barbour wrote from Quincy, Mass. to advise Sam that the President would be in Washington Tuesday of next week, and that "should it prove practicable to arrange to see him next week, I can be at your call any day but Thursday. Friday or Saturday would be particularly favorable..." [MTP].

Julia Ward Howe wrote a poem to Sam.

Mark the gracious, welcome guest,
Master of the heroic jest;
He who cheers men's dull abodes
With the laughter of the gods,
For the joyless ones of Earth
Sounds the reveille of mirth.
Well we meet, to part with pain,
But ne'er shall he or we be Twain [MTP].

Note: Miss Lyon wrote out the poem a bit more legibly and headed it: "Written on the occasion of a visit of Mr. Clemens to a meeting held in a favorite house in Boston"

October 26 Thursday – The New York Times, p.1 "These are for Ivins" reported Mark Twain and 26 other notable gentlemen who had "signified their intention of working for the election of Mr. Ivins"—William M. Ivins, Sr. (1851-1915), Republican candidate for mayor. Ivins ran third in the mayoral election of 1905, behind George B. McClellan, Jr. and William Randolph Hearst. Note: the Times of Oct. 22, 1905 ran a feature article on Ivins, "A Man of Many Facets." George B. McClellan, Jr. (1865-1940), NYC Mayor (1904-1909).

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Guest at the Round Table at 8 o'clock. / D.H. Bapst Blake / 178 Beacon Str." [MTP TS 32].

Note: Dr. John Bapst Blake (1943) and Anne (Hasting) Blake (d. 1910). Dr. Blake, a surgeon and professor of surgery at Harvard Medical School, and is listed in the Boston Blue Book for 1904, p. 664, as a director of the Tavern Club. Blake wrote a chapter in Athletics and out-door Sports for Women (1903) titled, "Cross-Country Walking," extolling the virtues of walking. He also wrote several books on surgery. Likely Clemens and Blake shared this in common and may have had a discussion on walking or "tramping."

Jerome K. Jerome wrote pretty illegibly on Hotel Touraine stationery, Boston to Sam about Sam's talk at the Author's Club on this day. Jerome's train was an hour and $\frac{3}{4}$ late so failed to meet Clemens and was "so terribly disappointed" [MTP].

George B. Lauder, a fan of Mark Twain's, wrote to Sam.

DEAR SIR,—I have had more or less of your works on my shelves for years, and believe I have practically a complete set now. This is nothing unusual, of course, but I presume it will seem to you unusual for any one to keep books constantly in sight which the owner regrets ever having read. Every time my glance rests on the books I do regret having read them, and do not hesitate to tell you so to your face, and care not who may know my feelings. You, who must be kept busy attending to your correspondence, will probably pay little or no attention to this small fraction of it, yet my reasons, I believe, are sound and are probably shared by more people than you are aware of.

Probably you will not read far enough through this to see who has signed it, but if you do, and care to know why I wish I had left your work unread, I will tell you as briefly as possible if you will ask me. / GEORGE B. LAUDER [MTB 1423]. Note: Paine writes of this letter:

Clemens did not answer the letter, but put it in his pocket, perhaps intending to do so, and a few days later, in Boston, when a reporter called, he happened to remember it. The reporter asked permission to print the queer document, and it appeared in his Mark Twain interview next morning. A few days later [Nov. 6] the writer of it sent a second time... [ibid]. Note: See Nov. 8 for Sam's reply.

An unidentified person who signed only "One of your innumerable unknown friends" wrote a fan letter to Sam with a story about coming to America from France more than 12 years before with an Italian boy of sixteen, who had walked from Rome to Paris. They were both much influenced by HF [MTP].

October 27 Friday – At 388 Beacon St., Boston, Mass., Sam inscribed his portrait to Thomas Bailey Aldrich: "Tom Bailey Aldrich, / with the love of / Mark Twain" [MTP]. Note: Aldrich had written on the portrait, "The whole quire hold their hips, and laffe." / A Midsummer Night's Dream. / The whole quire means all the world. / T.B. Aldrich."

Sam also wrote to Thomas S. Barbour, of the American branch of the Congo Reform Assoc.

"Dear Dr. Barbour: / I shall go to Ponkapog at noon, & return here in one or 2 or 3 days, then go home to New York about the middle or end of next week (21 Fifth ave).

I shall be there 2 or 3 days before I find out when I can start for Washington" [MTP].

Since Sam wrote from Thomas Bailey Aldrich's summer home, Redman Farm, Ponkapog the following day, it is assumed he went there (as written above) at noon.

Little, Brown & Co. wrote to Sam that they were "taking the liberty" of sending a copy of The Ballingtons, by Frances Squire, which they had mistakenly sent to Riverside [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben.

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam, confirming his “recent letter” about Paul Kester and the Tom Sawyer play paying a royalty of 3% of the gross receipts. “These are the same terms that Klaw and Erlanger agreed to pay and to me they seem perfectly fair” [MTP].

October 28 Saturday – At Redman Farm, the summer home of Thomas Bailey Aldrich, in Ponkapog, Mass. Sam wrote to Alfred T. Waite.

Aldrich has given me that editorial, & I thank you cordially for preserving it for me all these years. As you know, there are qualities in it of heart & expression that lift it far & away above the customary realm of compliment & approval—and that I shall treasure it as something which you would know without my saying it [MTP]. Note: At this time Waite was the Assistant Managing Editor for the Boston Herald.

October 29 Sunday – Sam likely returned to the Pearmain’s Back Bay Boston house either this day or the next. He would write Duneka from there on Oct. 31.

October 30 Monday

October 31 Tuesday – At the Pearmain’s house, 388 Beacon St., Boston, Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka: “I was interrupted, & didn’t half read the proof of the Horse’s Tale. Will you have it done carefully? Jean goes to New York to-morrow from Dublin—I follow in a few days” [MTP]

Milton Spinney wrote from Popham Beach, Maine to Sam. Spinney had been a Maine pilot. Another pilot had told Spinney he had taken the Kanawha up the Kennebec river as far as Bath, Maine and shook hands with Clemens without realizing who he was. Spinney’s letter was a fan letter, appreciative of the way Sam’s writings had lifted the world [MTP].

Sam inscribed his copy of Sea and Shore: A Collection of Poems by Mrs. Martha Le Baron Goddard (1829-1888): “SL. Clemens / from / Thomas Bailey Aldrich. / Oct. 31, 1905” [Gribben 262].

November – A formal invitation was sent out to be George B. Harvey’s guest at the celebration of Mr. Clemens’ Seventieth Birthday, Delmonico’s on Tuesday, Dec. 5 at 7:30 p.m. One such letter went to Louise C. Moulton [MTP].

Sam also wrote to the Oppenheimer Institute.

Reverend & Dear Sirs: / Institute a question of & fair dealing, in which the Institute is interested. Herewith I enclose (1) copy of a letter from me to Dr. Oppenheimer; (2) his reply; (3) my rejoinder. He has not answered the rejoinder.

Indeed, there are two questions: one of fair dealing toward dipsomaniacs, the other of expediency.

In No. 1 I suggested that Dr. Oppenheimer’s remark to me should be added to the advertisements.

If I had thought of it I could have suggested, in place of that, that the Institute’s present procedure be changed in one or two details, in such a way as to make the conditions fair & right as between the Institute & the dipsomaniac, without changing the advertisement at all. That is to say, I could have suggested that the Institute tell the dipsomaniac in advance, that his case is incurable. If the patient should then decide to pay his money & try the treatment, it would be his own affair.

It is not my interest, nor any one’s, to discredit or diminish the great & useful work which the Institute is doing, & it may well be that the suggestion I made was not a good one, & that it would be unwise to act upon it.

My experience is limited to the case of my butler—I have no knowledge of others. Two years ago I sent him there on the 16th of February & he began the treatment. A week or two later he brought me the bill for the cure, & he was drunk at the time. I mentioned this to Dr. Oppenheimer expecting him to smile, for I thought there was a touch of humor in the situation; but he merely said, “Oh, yes, that happens,” which I interpreted to mean that it was a not unusual incident & therefore,—through wear—not humorous; but he followed it by the remark that the butler was a dipsomaniac & that he regarded that disease as incurable—"I quoted his words in my second letter. Then he told me the man's history, as acquired from the man himself: that he was English: 43 years old; had been a drinker 17 years; & a hard drinker of late years. He could have gotten that history before undertaking the case; he could have pronounced the case incurable & left the man to decide whether he would pay and try, or not. Or he could have sent me word (I being responsible for the money) & allowed me to do the deciding. I must assume that the proceeding in the cited case is the usual one. In my belief it is unfair.

In the last paragraph of No. 3 Dr. Oppenheimer confuses me a little. He says he can cure dipsomania, & in the same breath explains that he can't. Apparently he can cure a dipsomaniac if the dipsomaniac will furnish the necessary auxiliary "brains"/—(resistance-power). That is, the doctor will load the gun if the gun will do the firing. He knows that a dipsomaniac is no such gun, & that the offer is an offer of nothing at all [MTP]. Note: see Feb. 16 and 23, 1903 entries. The letter was headed "Precede it with list of Clergymen"—31 names were attached.

Sam also wrote an aphorism to an unidentified person. "There is no sadder sight than a young pessimist or an old optimist. / Mark Twain / Nov/05" [MTP].

Sam inscribed an aphorism in a copy of TS to an unidentified person: "Consider well the proportion of things: it is better to be a young June-bug than an old bird of paradise. Truly yours, Mark Twain Nov./05" [MTP: The 19th Century Shop catalog, No. 45, Item 161].

Sam sent a note of thanks written sometime between Nov. 1905 and May 1906 to an unidentified man.

My dear Sir: / Of the multitude of books which have been given me in these latter days, none has given me more pleasure & satisfaction than yours. If the compilation had been made for me alone it could not have suited me better. I am always at home at ten in the morning & I wish you would drop in [MTP: Becky Thatcher Book Shop].

Sam's essay with letters and dialogue, "A Helpless Situation" first appeared in Harper's Bazaar for Nov. It was collected in The $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories (1906) [Budd, Collected 2: 1010]. Note: this had been titled "A Hapless Situation," and accompanied "The War Prayer" to the Bazaar, both sent on Mar. 21. See Lyon's entry for Mar. 22.

Sam inscribed a copy of Fables by G. Washington Aesop, etc. (1878): "SL. Clemens's book. / Nov. '05." [Gribben 396]. Note: "G. Washington Aesop," the pseudonym for George Thomas Lanigan (1846-1886).

Sam signed his copy of The Works of Tacitus. The Oxford Translation, Revised. With Notes (2 vols.): "SL. Clemens / November, 1905. / 21—5th ave." Sam twice underscored the word "Revised" on the title page and wrote under it, "What the English of it? If so, in the name of God what was it like before it was 'revised'?" [Gribben 682]. Note: Sam signed the second vol. the same but without the note on "revised."

November 1 Wednesday – Back at the Pearmain's house, 388 Beacon Street in Boston, Mass., Sam wrote to daughters Clara and Jean.

Dear Children, No, it's for Jean to do, because she knows the Pearmain's, & Clara doesn't. Write Mrs. Pearmain a letter, Jean, & thank her for this house's hospitalities to me. I have known many hosts in my time, but the Pearmain's are the only perfect hosts I have known.

Dear heart, I couldn't be any more at home at home, nor be any more master of my desires, not any more or better watched over & cared for or every wish anticipated than has been the case in this house. I can't find words to express to this pair of Pearmain's the comfort & peace & pleasure they have given me under their roof. So you must do it for me.

The last vestige of my dyspepsia has disappeared. I drink strong coffee with plenty of tea; I mix all deadly things together & devour them, & nothing happens. I was expecting to leave for New York right on your heels, but I am full of Miss Lawton's case now, so I can't quite tell when I am coming. With lots of love to the both of you, / Father [Skinner Auctioneers, Sale 2167, Lot 17 May 20, 2009]. Note: Sumner B. Pearmain and Alice Whittemore (Upton) Pearman. See prior entries.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

"Today we left for New York and arrived at 9:30. As we drove up to the house—Jean and the servants and I—the light in Santa C.'s room went down. In a minute her sweet black figure appeared in the doorway. I had not seen her for more than a year" [MTP TS 109]. Note: Trombley writes of Clara and Lyon butting heads over Lyon's living arrangements:

The Friction between Clara and Isabel that had been simmering over the course of the summer now reached a slow boil with the two of them living in the same space. When Isabel arrived at 21 Fifth Avenue in the fall of 1905 [Nov. 1 to be exact], five days before Twain, Clara immediately told her that she could no longer live with the family. Most likely the two argued, with Clara insisting upon the living-out arrangement that her mother had enforced and Isabel countering that Twain always wanted her instantly available. In a victory for Clara, Isabel began looking for accommodations the next day [Nov. 2]. Isabel chose not to write about their exchange and the next six days in her daily reminder were left uncharacteristically blank. Isabel's search for housing was immediately terminated upon Twain's arrival. This contesting between father and daughter over where Isabel would live was a difficult situation for Isabel, of course [MTOW 84]. Note: there is no direct evidence of an argument. It's also possible that Clara simply made a request and Lyon attempted to accommodate her. Biographers often make such assumptions or conclusions, however reasonable this one might be, it cannot be proven. Clara often exhibited a desire to be free from her father's control and influence, but often showed she felt obligations to serve him—a seeming conflict of sorts.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Miss Lyon that he'd sent the Plasmon and cocoa to the house, and to tell Sam when he returned that Vernon was in town.

...I have drafted a plan of reorganization of Plasmon that Vernon is 'fathering' and which will be satisfactory to all parties. I am remaining 'modestly' in the background, as I am to Hammond what a red rag is to a bull. Mr. Lauterbach phoned me to see him to-day, which I did, and he approved the plan. So does Baldwin, Davis, and others. The only bitter part of the pill, to Wheeler and Hammond, is that they must recognize as legal the election of Sept. 1st, 1904, which the U.S. District Court has decided was legal. That is the only thing we've been fighting about, all along. I will tell Mr. Clemens all about it when I see him [MTP].

George W. Lyon, in Lidgerwood, N.D., wrote on colorful Fred Raymond's Successful Theatrical Enterprises letterhead (Sycamore, Ill.) to ask Sam if he would "let out on royalty, the right to the name of Tom Sawyer" [MTP]. Note: written on the note: "Write to agent" – meaning Elisabeth Marbury.

James A. Renwick wrote from NYC to acknowledge Sam's payment of $291.64 for Nov. rent on 21 Fifth Ave [MTP].

Frederic E. Sondern billed Sam $5 for Oct. 4 "Blood examination" for "Miss Clemens" rendered to Dr. Quintard [MTP].

November 2 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. Clemens is staying on at the Pearmain's and he is going to visit the Aldriches too. / I'm beginning my search for rooms" [MTP TS 109]. Note: Trombley points out that Clara insisted Miss Lyon live out of the house, as had been the arrangement when Livy was alive, so that this search for rooms was Lyon's attempt to find herself housing [MTOW 84]. See excerpt from this source under Nov. 1.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam. Hammond had conveyed willingness to instruct Wheeler to withdraw his two lawsuits and to recognize their board, if they allowed the company to go through bankruptcy and allow Hammond's agents and other shareholders to engage as purchasers in the sale of assets. "Vernon, Baldwin, Lauterbach, Davis and Hammond O.K. this plan; so do I" [MTP]. Note: W. Vernon from London Plasmon Co.

November 3 Friday – In Boston, Mass. Sam sent a telegram to Richard Watson Gilder of Century Magazine, N.Y. "Your question just received I believe in Ivens [sic Ivins] and Jerome and hope to be allowed to vote my whole strength for them that is to say once as clemens and twice as twain" [MTP]. Note: William M. Ivins, Sr. and William Travers Jerome were running for mayor of N.Y.C. and attorney general of N.Y. County respectively. Ivins was defeated but Jerome was reelected, serving in the post from 1902 to 1909.

Frederic Chapin (1873-1947), later a silent screen writer, wrote interested in writing a musical extravaganza for P&P [MTP]. Note: Sam's response is dated "on or after Nov. 3" but likely after. Back in N.Y.C. Sam replied on or after this date : "Your favor of Nov 3rd has reached me, & in answer I beg to refer you to Miss Marbury my agent in dramatic matters. She possesses full powers to act for me, & I shall be glad if you arrive at a satisfactory arrangement with her" [MTP].

November 4 Saturday – In Boston, Mass. Sam attended and spoke at the afternoon debate at the Twentieth Century Club. His speech was published by the Chicago Daily Tribune, Nov. 5, 1905, p. 1.

MARK TWAIN TALKS PEACE

Boston. Nov. 4.—Mark Twain was the star attraction to-day at the Twentieth Century Club's weekly debate. Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood, secretary of the American Peace Society, and Mr. and Mrs. Edwin D. Mead, famous peace advocates, who had just returned from Europe, were the other guests of the club. Mrs. Mead and Dr. Trueblood spoke first.

Mark Twain's introduction was greeted with a great chorus of applause, in which he heartily joined, and when quiet was restored Mr. Clemens said:

"I thank you for this applause. It is the more welcome because I suppose it is a token of forgiveness for what I did some thirty feet back there, when I was applauding myself. Your president, it seems, spoke my name, and I didn't hear it. Everybody else seemed to be clapping their hands, and as I thought it was the right thing, I joined in. Of course, that was a wrong thing, but I am always committing some such mistake. But the only thing I'm sorry for is that I got caught. I have got over all those feelings of delicacy which are supposed to belong to good society, and now I don't care for anything so long as I keep out of jail.

"Most everybody gets into the habit of applauding when they see others at it, and, for one, I can't resist. Besides, I get so used to compliments that I can't sleep nights unless I get about so much butter every day.

"I am different from those other people who have been speaking. This problem of universal peace used to be one of the uppermost things in my mind. I used to study over it. No, I will not say that I really studied; I thought about it—how to get universal peace. It bothered me, but I kept growing nearer and nearer to a solution, and at last I came to it.

"But the very day I thought I had solved it I was summoned to the presence of an emperor. The first thing he asked me was what I was doing nowadays. I told him I had been working out a problem—the problem of universal peace—and that I had solved it, that I had found the only way—there was no other.

"Then he wanted to know how I was going to bring it about, and I told him: 'I am going to get a chemist—a real genius—and get him to extract all the oxygen out of the atmosphere for eight minutes. Then we will have universal peace, and it will be permanent.'

"I took my goods to the wrong market. Emperors don't want peace, permanent or temporary, on any such basis. They don't want any race suicide. What they want is people, and then more people. I was pretty coolly received by this emperor, and so was my proposition. And so I let it go. Every time I think I have found a solution of the difficulties some one comes along and upsets it.

"And that reminds me: Four years ago China bought two German missionaries. She paid $100,000 apiece for them, although they were not very active at the time. But there are several hundred missionaries in China, and I'd be glad to sell 'em all at the same price. I don't believe we have got down to where we want to thrust our civilization on innocent people.

"In 1892 there were eleven missionaries in China, and in that year they had a catch of 3,200 converts. Judson Smith called it 'a harvest. There were 82,000 pagans being born every day in China, and we were converting them at the rate of 2 ½ a day. So it would take quite a while to get everybody converted.

“These young people who have been talking before I began still have an interest in the human race. But in my case the clock may strike seventy years any minute. I am so near it that I don’t feel that kind of interest.

“Let’s see about this interest in the human race. Every one who has it wants to know how anything done will affect ‘me.’ The human race exists in his own person. He is wise, while no others are wise, and therefore are of no use on this globe.

“But I have got where I can look upon the human race from a dispassionate attitude. I am so near out of it that there is no use in my trying to solve its problems.

“Nothing can be accomplished except through statesmanship! Great and noble profession! A mass of foolishness! The statesmanship of now is to build ships—ship for ship for each and every nation, until we have 250,000 warships for each nation. Then we must still go on until finally we will be all ships.

“No, I am not able to find a solution of this problem. But I hope these young people—with nothing else to do—will keep on, for it will never be done by anybody who has anything else to do.”

Sam returned to N.Y.C. His letter of Oct. 18 to Harper’s Weekly arguing for stricter laws for automobile “over-speeders” appeared in that publication on this day, entitled “Overspeeding” [Budd, Collected 2: 1010]. See Oct. 18.

Also, his sentiment sent to Richard Watson Gilder on Nov. 3 ran in the N.Y. Tribune, the N.Y. Herald, and the N.Y. Times:

I expect to vote my whole strength for Iwins and Jerome—that is to say, once as Clemens & twice as Twain [Note: see Nov. 3 entry]

George W. Anderson, Boston attorney, wrote to Sam. “Herewith I enclose copy of letter which I am writing to Miss Lawton, which embodies the substance of my advice to her in the Castle Square Theatre matter. / I regret that I have not been able to achieve results more in accordance with your desires...” [MTP].

November 5 Sunday – Ruth McCall for Phi Kappa Psi, Smith College wrote to ask Sam to be their peaker at their annual open meeting [MTP].

Mary Boyle O’Reilly (1873-1939), philanthropist and WWI correspondent, wrote on The Guild of St. Elizabeth (Boston) letterhead to ask Sam for an autographed book for their Nov. 21 fair, as he had done the year before [MTP]. Note: Clemens wrote at top: “Send 2 or 3 / Autographed / Joan of Arc / Dog’s Tale”; see also IVL journal #2 entry for Nov. 9.

November 6 Monday – Samuel W. McCall wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: MTP dates Sam’s reply as “on or after 6 November.” Sam responded: “If I would go any where on a platform & break my pledge to myself I would go there—but I mustn’t break that pledge” [MTP]. Note: Samuel Walker McCall (1851-1923), past editor of the Boston Daily Advertiser; at this time congressman from Mass. 8th congressional district; later Gov. of Mass. (1916-1919).

Andrew Carnegie wrote from NYC to ask Sam to be their guest as soon after Jan. 1 as possible—he could name the day—“at the annual dinner to the Prince in the Republic of letters” [MTP].

Mrs. Ezra Estep wrote from Sandwich, Illinois to Sam, sharing the same birthday, and asking if he was really as “homely” as they say. A photo from him would prove otherwise. She had read so many of his books and quoted him so often that her neighbors called her “Innocence Abroad” [MTP].

George B. Lauder wrote again to Sam, after seeing his Oct. 26 letter to Sam in a Boston newspaper:

MY DEAR SIR,—I saw in to-day’s paper a copy of the letter which I wrote you October 26th.

I have read and re-read your works until I can almost recall some of them word for word. My familiarity with them is a constant source of pleasure which I would not have missed, and therefore the regret which I have expressed is more than offset by thankfulness.

Believe me, the regret which I feel for having read your works is entirely due to the unalterable fact that I can never again have the pleasure of reading them for the first time.

Your sincere admirer, / GEORGE B. LAUDER [MTB 1423-4].

Samuel W. McCall wrote to ask Sam if he would speak at his college in Northampton, Mass [MTP].

J.H. Todd wrote from San Francisco to comment on Sam's idea of extracting all the oxygen from the air as means of ending the human race, and enclosed a printed article on "T. Duffy's Solution, The Elixir of Life."

Dear Sir.

Allow me to call your special attention to matter in the enclosed circular relating to Health & Life and how to retain them in the body as long as you want & wish without Disease—Death, and always in youthful feeling.

When each has become cognizant of the above fact and put it in operation on themselves—then & not until then will we have Universal Peace—but if the knowledge which these circulars places before the people is ignored then I agree with you on your proposition of extracting the Oxygen from the air and allow them to enjoy eternal peace. Where there is no Reason (Natural) there is no Sense or knowledge, all is a Blank, and what the people assume is Sense, is only Belief and Assumption—thus where there is no Sense or Reason, War must always prevail for it is their only power. But Pure Natural Reason has now been obtained and the wielder of it is more powerful than Armies, Dynamite or Gunpowder as Reason must and will control all, & none can resist it.

The Age of Reason is now begun & will never end again.

Will be pleased to answer any questions regarding the Truth of Natural Life,

I am yours truly

J.H. Todd [MTP]. I: Todd had likely seen the report on Sam's Nov. 4 Boston speech at the Twentieth Century Club (see entry)

November 7 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Alice Whittemore Pearmain

I attended to the regime yesterday evening: a substantial dinner at 7. 30, with some deadlies (sweet things; milk & crackers when I went to bed at 10; milk when I woke at 2 a. m; milk & crackers when I woke at 5 a. m; corn bread & 3 cups of unmodified coffee at 8 a. m., (after stealing Clara's bath, which I found prepared at 7. 30. [])

It is now 11; Jean has looked in, with your letter, & was followed by Therèse with milk & crackers, according to your plan. Jean will see to it that the rest of the plan is adhered to.

My health-aspects are so showy & decided that they attracted the family's immediate attention & applause when I arrived yesterday evening. The regime will do wonders in the next 3 months; then I shall be ready to go on exhibition. You will get half of the gate-money.

Miss Lyon remains in the house, we are all happy to say, but we still have a spare room, & we mean to have it always occupied. We beg that whenever you & Mr. Pearmain are so situated that you can come down you will let us know, so that we can arrange to have that room vacant & ready for you. How welcome you will be!

I am very grateful Yours [MTP].

November 8 Wednesday – William Ten Eyck Hardenbrook wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam asking for a photograph of him for a "reference collection of portraits, with biographical data...of one hundred of the most eminent living Americans." He supplied a list of photographers who would do a sitting at no cost to Sam should he lack a photograph. On or just after this date Miss Lyon replied for Sam that he did not keep photos on hand but "9—made a good one a year ago," probably referring to number nine on the list of photographers [MTP].

At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y.C. Sam also replied per Lyon to George B. Lauder's Oct. 26 and Nov. 6 (see entries): "Dear Sir / You fooled me completely. I didn't divine what the [Oct. 26] letter was concealing, neither did the newspaper men; so you are a very competent deceiver. / Truly Yours" [MTB 1424].

Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: "Telephone cigar people to send a Humidor for Mr. Clemens's inspection" [MTP TS 33].

Sam also instructed Isabel V. Lyon to thank Joseph O. Thompson, who wrote to inquire about Sam giving a reading. Sam instructed Lyon, who noted: "Thank him very much indeed—but it wouldn't be possible for he never goes on the platform any more" [MTP].

In the evening Sam and only eight other members attended the first annual dinner of the American Academy of Arts and Letters. John Burroughs, voted into the academy this year, noted: "Dinner was not a success—only nine members present. Mark Twain very diverting, as he always is" [Barrus 2: 87].

From the Minutes of the American Academy of Arts and Letters:

The first meeting of the American Academy of Arts and Letters was held at the Aldine Association, 111 Fifth Avenue, New York, at seven o'clock, November 8, 1905. After dinner had been served organization was effected by the election of Mr. John Bigelow as presiding member of the evening. The other members present were Messrs. [John] Burroughs, [Samuel Langhorne] Clemens, [Daniel Chester] French, [Richard Watson] Gilder, [Thomas R.] Lounsbury, [Horatio William] Parker, [James Ford] Rhodes and [Edmund Clarence] Stedman [Thanks to Kathy Kienholz Archivist, American Academy of Arts and Letters].

Anna Harris Smith for the Animal Rescue League, Boston, thinking Sam was still in Boston, wrote to ask Sam to visit "this Home for homeless, suffering and undesired dogs and cats which I established nearly seven years ago." She praised "A Dog's Tale," and denied she wanted any money [MTP].

November 8, after – In N.Y.C. Sam wrote to an unidentified woman in Boston.

Dear Madam / Your letter of Nov 8th has overtaken me in New York. I am exceedingly sorry I did not get it in Boston; in which case I would have found time for a visit to your home for the homeless animals even if I had been obliged to break engagements to accomplish it. Thanking you for your kind words & wishing you every prosperity / I am Sincerely Yours [MTP]. Note: this might very well be a response to the Nov. 8 from Anna Harris Smith.

November 9 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to L.M. Powers in Haverhill Mass.

I should accept your hospitable offer at once but for the fact that I couldn't do it and remain honest. That is to say if I allowed you to send me what you believe to be good cigars it could distinctly mean that I meant to smoke them, whereas I should do nothing of the kind. I know a good cigar better than you do for I have had sixty years experience. No, that is not what I mean; I mean I know a bad cigar better better than anybody else; I judge by the price only; if it costs above five cents I know it is either foreign or half foreign, and unsmokeable. By me. I have many boxes of Havana cigars, of all prices from twenty cents apiece up to $1.66 apiece; I bought none of them, they were all presents, they are an accumulation of several years, I have never smoked one of them and never shall, I work them off on the visitor. You shall have a chance when you come.

Pessimists are born not made; optimists are born not made; but no man is born either pessimist wholly or optimist wholly; he is pessimistic along certain lines and optimistic along certain others. That is my case [MTP].

Note: Powers was a collector of autographs and first editions (see prior entries), who sent books by Twain to him with questions written on the fly leaves or inside the book.. Sam would then sign them, answer the question, and return them, creating what is now a far more valuable inscribed book than a mere signature. The New York Times printed the above letter on Mar. 26, 1911, "Queries Put to Authors," along with these interesting questions and answers from Powers and Twain:

On the fly leaf of a first edition of "The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" is Mr. Powers written query: "Did John Paul discover you, or did you know you were a good thing yourself?" Mark Twain's reply is: "John Paul never discovered anything or anybody. He was not even a very good liar. S.L.C. Mark Twain."

In a copy of "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," Mr. Powers asks: "Did you remember or imagine this perfect picture of a natural boy?" The inscribed answer is: "Partially I was It. S.L.C." The following query is on the fly leaf of the "History of the Big Bonanza," by Dan de Quille (William Wright): "Is there any truth in the newspaper story that you planned this book for the author before you knew he had written it?" The answer is: "Yes; it is true. Mark Twain." [Note: John Paul was pseud. for Charles Henry Webb; see May 11, 1867 entry].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: Mr Clemens sent / Joah of Arc / Dog's Tale / Huckleberry Finn to Miss Mary Boyle O'Reilly for her Guild of St. Elizabeth in Boston [MTP TS 33]. Note: see Nov. 5 request from O'Reilly.

Joseph Dick wrote from Toledo, Ohion to thank Sam for "the inexhaustible pleasure...from the reading of your works" [MTP].

Robert Underwood Johnson wrote to inform Sam that at the Nov. 8 meeting the declination of William James was accepted and it was unanimously voted that the vacancy be filled by William Milligan Sloane [MTP]. Note: evidently James didn't wish to be in any club that would have him as a member. William Milligan Sloane was a professor at Columbia University.

Mrs. Alice G. Teele wrote from Boston to ask Sam for more of his books for their Franklin Square House bazaar on Dec. 4 [MTP]. Note: written on the env.: "Yes"

November 10 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to the American Academy of Arts & Letters.

"I desire to vote yea upon the question of electing Mr. William Milligan Slone [sic Sloane] as a member of the Academy, to fill the vacancy caused by the declination of Mr. William James" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Clemens went to see Mr. Charles Frohman this morning about Miss Mary Lawton's theatrical affairs" [MTP TS 33].

Frederic Chapin wrote from Chicago to Sam, still interested in writing a musical piece for P&P—what were Clemens' dramatic rights? [MTP].

November 11 Saturday – Miss Nellie Covert wrote from Peabody, Kansas, asking if Clemens had known Captain Henry Switzer while piloting on the Mississippi, or had he ever met any of his family? The lady did not disclose the reason for her question or her possible relationship with Switzer [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Sam's response as "on or after 11 November." Five days estimated postal time is allowed here, with Sam's response being ca. Nov. 16.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Boeddeker sent half quantity of medicine" [MTP TS 33].

Grace E.J. Parker, field secretary for the George Junior Republic Assoc. wrote from N.Y.C. to ask Sam for a donation. On or just after this day Sam directed Miss Lyon to "Send $5" [MTP].

Jeannette L. Gilder for The Critic wrote to Sam to ask that he be represented in an upcoming anthology [MTP].

Dr. Frank Hartley wrote from NYC to arrange an examination for Sam [MTP]. Note: as with most doctors, the handwriting is nearly illegible, a skill taught in medical school.

November 12 Sunday – The New York Herald ran an interview of Mark Twain, “Mark Twain Would Kill Bosses by Third Party,” by Willis C. Pratt, p. 3-4. The interview is in Scharnhorst, p.507-11, though credit not given to Pratt there. It may also be seen on Twainquotes.com, if that website is still extant. What is not easily found is Pratt’s story of obtaining the interview, published some 50 years ago in the Mark Twain Journal.

The Last Time I Saw Mark Twain
Willis C. Pratt, as told to Gertrude Valliere King

It was during one of Mark Twain’s frequent bouts with bronchitis that I went to interview him. There had been a dearth of live news for several days. That happens sometimes in newspaper offices. It was two o’clock in the afternoon, and more than half the members of the Herald’s news staff were sitting around waiting for possible assignments. Paul Drane, who ran the “day desk,” was searching through a pile of clippings taken from his “future book” in the hope that he might find something worth following up....Then, as I was passing his decks:

“How long since you have seen an interview with Mark Twain?”

“Don’t remember any; at least, not for several years.”

“Do you suppose you could get him to talk about anything?”

“Maybe, for about a dollar a word. Otherwise, the betting is a hundred to one he won’t stand for an interview.”

Let’s try, anyway. How bout a subject? Got an idea?

“Fine. See if he will discuss the possibility of the elimination of the boss in politics.”

....

I rang the bell of Mr. Clemens’s house, the one with the diamond-paned windows, at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Eighth Street. The door was opened by the author’s eldest daughter. Yes...Mr. Clemens was at home, but had been quite ill. She would see whether he would receive me....

Miss Clemens led me up the stairs to the door of a room on the second floor, on the Eighth Street side. She knocked, and discreetly retired. A voice, with the familiar drawl which had fascinated Mark Twain audiences all over the world, bid me enter.

The room was very large, high ceilinged, and not too well lighted by narrow windows with diamond panes. The author was in bed. He lay, bolstered up by two great pillows against the mahogany head board. He wore a night shirt, and only a sheet covered his slender legs. A bedside table, within easy reach, bore a tobacco jar, two pipes, one larger than the other, matches, a bottle of Scotch whiskey, a siphon of carbonated water, and a tall glass.

“Well, what entitles me to the honor of a visit from the Herald?” The greeting was hearty and encouraging. “Sit down and tell me all about it.”

I thought it best to plump it right at him: “The Herald wants to know if you believe it possible to stop political bossism, and if so, how can it be done?”

The bright eyes, under the great bushy brows, glanced at me keenly for a moment, and then turned their gaze to the ceiling. It was a full minute before the humorist looked at me again, and then his only reply was:

“Umph.”

Just then my chances for getting an interview didn’t look good. I waited. Mr. Clemens drew up his knees, tucked the sheet under them, and reached for the biggest pipe. He jammed it full of tobacco, lighted it, and blew several clouds of smoke, into which he gazed thoughtfully.

“It could be done, but it would be a mighty hard job.”

(The odds were better now. Even money I would get a story.)

[Twain discussed the issue while Pratt refrained from taking notes after receiving a frown when he pulled out a pad and pencil. Afterward:]

“Did you take notes while I was talking?” he asked.

“You know that I did not. I was afraid you would quit on me.”

He chuckled at that.

“There, show ‘em that.” And then, giving me an affectionate pat on the shoulder: “Do you know, my boy, I think we’d get along first rate together.”

The little man with the bushy white hair, the broad, high forehead, and shaggy brows stood in his dinner coat on the steps of his home and waved me a good-bye. I never saw him again.

It may be unnecessary to add that my story, watermelon cure and all [for dysentery], went upstairs early that evening, marked:

[Mark Twain Journal 11.2 (Summer 1960): 6-8, 23].

William N. Hill, M.D., in Baltimore, “an allaround mugwump” who had “no idea of running for office,” wrote a rather strange letter of his political views to Sam. On the other side of his letter was a typed note on Twentieth Century Club letterhead, soliciting views to be sent to Hill, on a proposed “amendment to the State Constitution curtailing the suffrage and commonly known as the Poe Amendment” [MTP]. Note: see also Wm. Hill in London.

Miss Barbara Mullen wrote from Hannibal, Mo. to Sam. “Perhaps you have not forgotten the little woman who teaches in the High School at Hannibal, and who is such an enthusiastic admirer of your works.” Mullen sent him “lines” of tribute in view of his approaching 70th [MTP].

Mary Boyle O'Reilly wrote on The Guild of St. Elizabeth letterhead, Boston, to thank Sam for his “generous gift to the Guild Fair” [MTP].

H. R. (not further identified), “traveling through the US” wrote Sam from Chicago. He was “seeking correspondents and establishing literary connections” for the new London newspaper, a “penny Liberal Morning paper,” and wanted to see Clemens [MTP].

Rev. M.J. Riordan, Rector Saint Charles' Catholic Church wrote from Pikesville, Md. to Sam, enclosing an Oct. 30, 1905 clipping from the Baltimore Evening News, with his sermon. “Your new party idea is a good one. Thousands of our best citizens approve it, Talk it up and call a convention. Meantime preach independent voting” [MTP].

November 13 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to the Nov. 11 from Jeannette L. Gilder.

Dear Miss Gilder.

Two months ago I would gladly have undertaken to persuade the Harpers in this matter, but I am aware that it would not be worth while to repeat the effort which I made at that time (unsuccessfully) in the interest of a very particular friend of mine who wanted me represented in his anthology. The Harper consent has been necessary since the signing of the contract in October two years ago; and as far as my knowledge goes has been refused in all cases. It is true that I am in many anthologies, but it is only fair to say that these instances antedate that contract and did not require their consent.

I am very sorry I cannot help you, dear Miss Gilder, but I exhausted my influence two months ago, as I have just remarked, without success ...[MTP].

Sam also wrote to William Ten Eyck Hardenbrook, letter not extant but referred to in Hardenbrook's Nov. 16 note [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: “Mr. Wm. O. Ingles / will call at 10—from Sunday World Magazine. / Mr. Clemens will lunch with Mr. Robert Collier 20 Gramscy Park at one o'clock” [MTP TS 34].

John W. Cann wrote from NYC to Sam with some remedy for dyspepsia (indigestion) [MTP]. Note: just after Nov. 13 Sam gave Lyon instructions: “Thank him very heartily. Keep the remedy in mind for other people, doesn't need it just now—actually cured his dyspepsia he thinks.”

Robert Fulton Cutting for Citizens Union of the City of New York sent Sam a political letter supporting William Travers Jerome's victory and continued fight against the system of bossism [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam, enclosing check on Knickerbocker Trust Co. for $137.50 for payment of coupons on the Duval Co. Fla. Bonds due Nov. 1. He hoped to be in NY soon and felt Sam was gratified by the election results [MTP].

A. MacHugh and Y. MacLoughlan, “two Irish mugs” wrote from London, England to show appreciative sentiments to Sam for his writings. They also questioned his contrary voice on the peace of the Russo-Japanese War [MTP]. Note: Clemens wrote at top: “The two Irishmen / answered Dec. 13, 1905.” This letter would have arrived in late November. No outgoing from Clemens is catalogued for Dec. 13, but this is likely that presently catalogued as sometime during November. The envelope note thus puts the November date to Dec. 13. See entry.

November 14 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Samuel H. Row, of Lansing, Michigan, who evidently recalled Sam’s “Roughing It” lecture (incoming not extant) in Lansing, Dec. 20, 1871, “when you were young and handsome I had the pleasure of introducing you to a Lansing audience” [Scharnhorst 527]. Evidently Row asked about Sarony’s ubiquitous photograph of Mark Twain (he sat for at least two portraits, in Nov. 1884 and ca.1894). Note: Sam did not lecture in Lansing on that date, but was in Sandwich, Illinois. His last Lansing lecture was on Dec. 14, 1871. Sam’s reply:

That alleged portrait has a private history. Sarony was as much of an enthusiast about wild animals as he was about photography; and when Du Chailles brought the first gorilla to this country in 1819 he came to me in a fever of excitement and asked me if my father was of record and authentic. I said he was; then Sarony, without any abatement of his excitement asked me if my grandfather also was of record and authentic. I said he was. Then Sarony, with still rising excitement and with joy added to it, said he had found my great grandfather in the person of the gorilla and had recognized him at once by his resemblance to me. I was deeply hurt but did not reveal this, because I knew Sarony meant no offense for the gorilla had not done him any harm, and he was not a man who would say an unkind thing about a gorilla wantonly. I went with him to inspect the ancestor, and examined him from several points of view, without being able to detect anything more than a passing resemblance. “Wait,” said Sarony with strong confidence, “let me show you.” He borrowed my overcoat and put it on the gorilla. The result was surprising. I saw that the gorilla while not looking distinctly like me was exactly what my great grandfather would have looked like if I had had one. Sarony photographed the creature in that overcoat, and spread the picture about the world. It has remained spread about the world ever since. It turns up every week in some newspaper some where or other. It is not my favorite, but to my exasperation it is everybody else’s. Do you think you could get it suppressed for me? I will pay the limit. / Sincerely....[MTP]. Note: this letter was included in the syndicated interview for 62 Western newspapers on Sam’s 70th birthday: see Scharnhorst p. 525-8 for the rest, chosen from the Seattle Star, p.8. The interview took place on Nov. 16 [Nov. 16 to Frohman].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Jean, 9:30” [MTP TS 109; Hill 116].

Gertrude M. Adams wrote from Swarthmore College, Swarthmore Pa. to thank Sam “very very much” for all he had done—a fan letter [MTP].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to inform Sam that N.W. Halsey, Bankers, would send to him for the $40,000 check.

They told me that these call loans are usually repaid the day after they are made, so they have to keep on replacing the money. They charge a nominal commission for doing this—I didn’t inquire how much. If the money is idle for a few days, they should allow you 2% or 3% interest on it, but I didn’t inquire about that either [MTP].

N.W. Halsey & Co. Bankers wrote to Sam, having rec’d his check for $40,000. “We placed it at 6% on call, and will renew it in the morning at the opening rate” [MTP].

Frederick S. Bigelow wrote from Phila. to ask Sam to contribute “a few sentences” for a maxim book he was compiling for the Henry Altamus Co., a large publishing house in Phila. [MTP].

November 15 Wednesday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to John Larkin to complain about the new steam heating system installed in the house. The five men who had investigated the problem had not solved it; the main problem being a “constant singing” in the front bedroom radiators, even when cold, which forced his daughters to put beds in their sitting rooms. He requested the matter be brought before the contractor, James A. Renwick, as soon as possible [MTP].

In the evening Sam (and likely his daughters) attended Daniel Frohman’s dramatization of James M. Barrie’s Peter Pan at the Empire Theatre, starring Maude Adams (1872-1953). Sam praised the play in his note to Nov. 16 to Frohman, and also at the end of the Nov. 16 interview with the newspaper syndicate, making this evaluation:

I saw a play last night [Nov. 15] in which you will find this seeming paradox. In that play all the implacable rules of the drama are violated, yet the result is a play which is without defect. I refer to Peter Pan. It is a fairy play. There isn't a thing in it which could ever happen in real life. That is as it should be. It is consistently beautiful, sweet, clean, fascinating, satisfying, charming, and impossible from beginning to end. It breaks all the rules of real life drama, but preserves intact all the rules of fairyland, and the result is altogether contenting to the spirit.

The longing of my heart is a fairy portrait of myself: I want to be pretty; I want to eliminate facts and fill up the gaps with charms [Scharnhorst 528].

Note: along with Ethel Barrymore (1879-1959) and Billie Burke (1884-1970), Adams was one of several young actresses that sparked Sam's interest, and with whom he became friends.

Sam inscribed his photo to an unidentified person: “Very Truly Yours, / Mark Twain / Nov. 15/05” [MTP: R&R Enterprises, 18 June 2003, no. 274, lot 607].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Jean and I went up to hear Mr. Thayer demonstrate his protective coloration theory” [MTP TS 110]. Isabel Lyon’s Journal # 2: “Mr. Doubleday” [MTP TS 34].

N.W. Halsey & Co. Bankers wrote to Sam, enclosing a “check for $6.67 for one day’s interest at 6% on his $40,000, loaned for your account yesterday. We called this loan this morning and put it out at 10%. We shall remit you for the interest each time the loan is paid” [MTP].

C.M. Lincoln for the N.Y. Herald wrote to thank Sam for giving his views to Mr. Pratt “concerning the result of the municipal election” [MTP].

Alice Whittemore Upton Pearmain wrote to thank Sam for “his kind letter of Nov. 7th,” and for a hat pin that arrived from NY “with word that you had requested to have me try it.” She was grateful for his offer to spend a night at his house in NY, but was afraid it would be some time before she might go. She thanked him for the “beautiful photographs” of him that came all framed the prior week, and asked him to keep her informed about Miss Lawton [MTP].

November 16 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Chauncey M. Depew.

Having had some experience with the methods of the Oppenheimer Institute, through the case of a dependent whom I sent to take the cure, I am interested in knowing what results others have found in the Oppenheimer treatment. As your name is given as one of the advisory directors of the Institute I infer that you have personal knowledge of beneficial results to patients. Will you kindly inform me of any cases within your own knowledge, and oblige [MTP].

Sam was interviewed by Marlen E. Pew for a newspaper syndicate of 62 Western newspapers, accompanied by an artist, named only as “Fireman,” a friend of Pew’s, who was to sketch Twain while the interview proceeded. Sam suggested they try an experiment of him interviewing himself while they took down his words verbatim. He also submitted the Nov. 14 letter to Samuel H. Row for use in the interview [Scharnhorst 525-8; Nov. 16 to Frohman].

Later, he also wrote to Daniel Frohman of the interview and other things.

Thank you very much for the appointment—I shall instruct Miss Lawton to arrive there on time.

I have already attended to Peter Pan. I have been interviewed this morning for a syndicate of 62 Western papers, & for the first time in my life I tried the experiment of dictating, so that the language might be my own & not the interviewer’s. I closed the interview with the most outspoken praises of the play, & said among other strong expression, that it hadn’t a defect. With lots of thanks to you for the privilege of seeing it I am sincerely yours

P.S.

This is the newspaper Syndicate that I referred to. The interview is to be published on the 30th of this month which will be my 70th birthday [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Mr. Pew 10— / Marlin [sic] E. Pew / 310 Park Row Building” [MTP TS 34].

Note: Marlen E. Pew would be Editor of the Philadelphia News-Post (1912-1914) and in charge of War News during WWI.

William Ten Eyck Hardenbrook wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam, thanking him for his letter of Nov. 13 (not extant) and a photograph of Sam he’d obtained from Joseph G. Gessford. Hardenbrook asked for Sam’s biography in 500 words—would Sam write it? [MTP]. Note: On or after this day Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam: “Mr. Clemens never furnished one to anyone. Cyclo.”

C.F. Bertholf, a newsdealer and stationer in Los Banos, Calif. wrote to Sam. Bertholf was unable to find two sketches, “White Elephant,” and “a story of a bad boy and a good boy” [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Sam’s reply as “on or after 16 November.” Six days estimated postal time is allowed here, making an estimate of ca. Nov. 22.

Myrtle Reed wrote to Sam that she’d been invited to his birthday party but couldn’t come. She added she thought the whole thing was fake and that he wasn’t a day over 20 [MTP].

November 16 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam responded to Nellie Covert’s Nov. 11 query of whether or not he had known a “well-known” Captain Henry Switzer while a pilot on the Mississippi: “I knew of him. It would not have been etiquette for a captain to know me, for I was only an apprentice-pilot” [MTP].

November 17 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam responded to Barbara Mullen’s Nov. 12 note from Hannibal, Mo. “I have not had, in all my life before, so many generous letters & so many generous poems as this past fortnight has brought me; my thanks go out to all these friends, but I wish to thank you particularly” [MTP]. Note: postmarks show Sam’s letter arrived in Hannibal on Nov. 19, only two days. Delivery to Mullen’s home likely took another day.

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Frederick A. Duneka:

“Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him and say that he has been so troubled by having people write to him for sketches & articles, that he submits the enclosed notice to you and would like to have you print a hundred for him as soon as you can, and send them to him / Yours very Truly...”

Herman Black advertising mgr. for the Milwaukee Journal wrote to Sam, seeking “sentiments” from famous people, Clemens included, for their New Year calendar [MTP].

Herbert E. Bowen of Harper’s wrote to Sam, acknowledging the wish to include Jerome K. Jerome in the birthday party; the invitation had already been sent to Jerome [MTP].

N.W. Halsey & Co. Bankers wrote to advise Sam they had delivered a check to the order of the Knickerbocker Trust Co. in care of Ashcroft for $40,019.44 [MTP].

Marguerite Merington, Elizabeth Ward, and Eliza D. White wrote to George B. Harvey; the latter two were unable to attend Twain’s 70th birthday party; the first lady accepted [MTP]. Note: from about this day and for several weeks Harvey received many such responses to invitations.

November 18 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Mr. Halsey—S. Phi.” [MTP TS 34].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam that he’d responded to Stanchfield’s Nov. 17. Ashcroft asked Stanchfield if he wanted to sell more Spiral Pin Co. shares [MTP].

Robert Collyer wrote from NYC to Sam, saying he’d asked the “managers to drop my name from the list of advisory directors some months ago and this was done.” If he’d been put back on he hadn’t known about it, but saw “they were printing vulgar and base advertisement” He added, “I really believe they are doing some good but think the whole thing is on the get rich quick basis and suspect / there are jews ‘pushing behind’.” He wanted the letter kept confidential [MTP]. Note: Clemens wrote at the top: “This is private / Preserve it.”

November 19 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Times Reporter. 10—” [MTP TS 34].

Marjorie V.d.W. Brooke wrote to Sam, evidently enclosing a photo of her grandfather, who many said looked like Mark Twain—didn’t Sam think him a handsome man? [MTP].

Asa Don Dickinson wrote to Sam.

I happened to be present the other day at a meeting of the children’s librarians of the Brooklyn Public Library. In the course of the meeting it was stated that copies of “Tom Sawyer” and “Huckleberry Finn” were to be found in some of the children’s rooms of the system. The Sup’t of the Children’s Dep’t—a conscientious and enthusiastic young woman—was greatly shocked to hear this, and at once ordered that they be transferred to the adults’ department. Upon this I shamefacedly confessed to having read “Huckleberry Finn” aloud to my defenseless blind people, without regard to their age, color, or previous condition of servitude. I also reminded them of Brander Matthews’s opinion of the book, and stated the fact that I knew it almost at heart, having got more pleasure from it than from any book I have ever read, and reading is the greatest pleasure I have in my life. My warm defense elicited some further discussion and criticism, from which I gathered what the prevailing opinion of Huck was and that he was a deceitful boy who said “sweat” when he should have said “perspiration.” The upshot of this matter was that there is to be further consideration of these books at a meeting early in January which I am especially invited to attend. Seeing you the other night at the performance of “Peter Pan” the thought came to me that you (you knows Huck as well as I—you can’t know him better or love him more—) might be willing to give me a word or two to say in witness of his good character though he “warn’t no more quality than a mud cat.”

I would ask as a favor that you regard this communication as confidential, whether you find time to reply to it or not; for I am loath for obvious reasons to bring the institution from which I draw my salary into ridicule, contempt or reproach [MTP]. Note: see Nov. 21 for Sam’s reply.

James Ford Rhodes wrote from 392 Beacon St., Boston, to Sam, remembering “our pleasant talk at the Academy ten days ago...” and asking if he might get a copy of a letter Sam wrote during the Hayes-Tilden campaign of 1876 favoring Hayes; the Hartford Courant had been unable to find it [MTP]. Note: Sam replied on Nov. 21.

Alice Von Versen (née Clemens) wrote from Germany to Sam, sending birthday regards [MTP].

November 20 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to J.H. Todd of San Francisco, who wrote on Nov. 6. Sam's letter designated as "not sent":

Your letter is an insoluble puzzle to me. The handwriting is good & exhibits considerable character, & there are even traces of intelligence in what you say, yet the letter & the accompanying advertisements profess to be the work of the same hand. The person who wrote the advertisements is without doubt the most ignorant person now alive on the planet; also without doubt he is an idiot, an idiot of the 33rd degree, & scion of an ancestral procession of idiots stretching back to the Missing Link. It puzzles me to make out how the same hand could have constructed your letter & your advertisements. Puzzles fret me, puzzles annoy me, puzzles exasperate me; & always, for a moment, they arouse in me an unkind state of mind toward the person who has puzzled me. A few moments from now my resentment will have faded & passed, & I shall probably even be praying for you; but while there is yet time I hasten to wish that you may take a dose of your own poison by mistake, & enter swiftly into the damnation which you & all other patent medicine assassins have so remorselessly earned & do so richly deserve. / Adieu, adieu, adieu! / Mark Twain [MTP]. Note: see Sam's Boston speech of Nov. 4, and also Todd's letter of Nov. 6.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Jean, 9:30 — 3 times" [MTP TS 110; Hill 116]. Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: "Phonograph Record. 2" [MTP TS 34].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote two letters to Sam, more about the Plasmon and Spiral Pin goings on [MTP].

Walter Barton wrote from Chattanooga, Tenn. to wish Sam a happy birthday—and oh, yes, to ask for an autograph [MTP].

S.H. Friedlander wrote from Portland, Ore. to ask if Sam would consider delivering "ten or twenty lectures on the Coast" [MTP].

Wilhelm Lang for the English Club (Nuremberg) wrote birthday wishes to Sam [MTP].

November 21 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to Asa Don Dickinson, who wrote Nov. 19.

Dear Sir / I am greatly troubled by what you say. I wrote Tom Sawyer & Huck Finn for adults exclusively, & it always distresses me when I find that boys & girls have been allowed access to them. The mind that becomes soiled in youth can never again be washed clean; I know this by my own experience, & to this day I cherish an unappeasable bitterness against the unfaithful guardians of my young life, who not only permitted but compelled me to read an unexpurgated Bible through before I was 15 years old. None can do that & ever draw a clean sweet breath again this side of the grave. Ask that young lady—she will tell you so.

Most honestly do I wish I could say a softening word or two in defence of Huck's character, since you wish it, but really in my opinion it is no better than God's (in the Ahab chapter & 97 others,) & those of Solomon, David, Satan, & the rest of the sacred brotherhood.

If there is an Unexpurgated in the Children's Department, won't you please help that young woman remove Huck & Tom from that questionable companionship? [MTP: Wilson Bulletin for Librarians, Nov. 1935]. Note: after his signature : "I shall not show your letter to any one—it is safe with me."

Sam also replied per Lyon to Herbert Putnam (1861-1955), eighth Librarian of Congress (1899-1939) (incoming not extant).

I shall be very glad indeed to partake of that luncheon and its spiritual seasoning.

I go to Washington Friday and shall reach the New Willard in the evening. I have asked Colonel Harvey of the N. A. Review to go with me and be my guest on this outing, and he has accepted. I did this because he is good company and is not expensive because he always pays all the bills himself. Harvey is arranging various engagements, and I will ask him to see that this one shall get a date [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Nov. 19 from James Ford Rhodes:

I have no recollection of that letter. It must have been a private letter, since, if it had been a public one it would not have been sent otherwhither (fresh word—you can use it if you want to but only week days) than in the two papers which you have mentioned, the Tribune & the Courant; if it was a private letter, there was only one person for it to go to—Howells. Howells is till at Kittery Point, but is expected here about this time. I am leaving for Washington for a week but when I get back I will ask him about this.

I was most glad to meet you, and I hope it will happen again & often. You seem to live next to my friends the Pearmains' therefore you are very fortunately situated in this world. / Sincerely ...[MTP: Cushman file].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "3.30 Mr. Thomas of the Times" [MTP TS 35].

Lucia Cabaniss, Mary F. Long, and Edith A. MacDougal wrote from Chihuahua, Mexico to send birthday wishes Sam, including a long discussion of his many books [MTP].

Ella McMahon and Miss McMahon wrote on their calling card ("The Misses McMahon") "Many happy returns" to Sam [MTP].

Charles E. Potts wrote from Troy, N.Y. on a long, narrow paper birthday wishes and a poem to Sam [MTP].

November 22 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Ray. 3.15" [MTP TS 32].

George Dewey wrote to Sam, advising receipt of "your recent letter, I have to state that I resigned several months ago from the Advisory Directorate of the Oppenheimer Institute, but that while I was a director I had no personal knowledge of the workings of the cure" [MTP].

Max Lowenthal wrote a postcard from Vienna, Austria to send birthday wishes [MTP].

November 22 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam responded to C.F. Bertholf's Nov. 16 question: Stories he refers to is in one of the volumes of sketches published by the Harpers" [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as "on or after 16 November." Six days estimated postal time is allowed here.

November 23 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Miss Lawton to interview Mr. Charles Frohman at 10:30. / Mr. Clemens will go with Mr. Thuthong / Mr. Clemens will dine with Dr. Quintard, perhaps" [MTP TS 35].

Thomas S. Barbour for Congo Reform Assoc., Boston wrote to Sam on their new letterhead, which listed Samuel L. Clemens as a vice president. Barbour sought Sam's approval to leave a footnote in place in the "King Leopold" pamphlet. He hoped Sam had had a good talk with Dr. Haley during Sam's Boston stay; Barbour was sorry he could not see Sam then [MTP].

Note: On or after this day Sam instructed Lyon: "Put it right in as it is—doesn't care." As with the Anti-Imperialist League, the group used Sam's name to gather support; he did little or no work for the group, other than his writing. Hawkins gives G. Stanley Hall, psychologist and president of Clark University as president; other vice presidents Lyman Abbott, Congregational minister and author; David Starr Jordan, president of Stanford University; Henry Van Dyke, Presbyterian minister and professor of English at Princeton; and Booker T. Washington, founder of Tuskegee Institute [161].

Asa Don Dickinson wrote from Sheepshead Bay Branch, Brooklyn Library to Sam.

“Your letter rec’d. I am surprised to hear that you think Huck & Tom would have an unwholesome effect on boys and girls. But relieved to hear that you would not place them in the same category with many of the scriptural reprobates” [MTP].

November 24 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y., Sam spoke into a graphophone, dictating a letter that Isabel Lyon later wrote to Dr. Osgood:

Dear Dr. Osgood:

Your letter gives me very great pleasure. I believe there is no greater pleasure than that which one gets out of a compliment heartily expressed. Your warm words have gone to my heart and I am grateful for them.

Yes, I have been in your house, and shall expect to be in it again next year and often. I paid a long visit to those dear and delightful Pearmain in Boston and I am sure I could not have felt more entirely at home if I had been under my own roof. Moreover I got my health restored there. For many months I had been fighting a losing fight with dyspepsia—at least I supposed it was dyspepsia—and Mrs. Pearmain cured me by a very simple and rational process. I had given up eating almost altogether, because everything I ate seemed to disagree with me; but she required me to begin eating again; not only eating, but eating very frequently and not much at a time; and she required me to keep up this system in the night as well as in the day. I made the experiment and I am still carrying on the process according to her directions, and I have no further trouble about dyspepsia.

I can eat all sorts of sweet things; I can eat gum, shoes, nails, anything. I can digest anything that goes into my stomach, without any trouble, therefore I am under a debt of gratitude to Mrs. Pearmain which I suppose I shall never be able to pay.

Hoping to see you in Dublin next summer,

I am, dear Doctor,

yours very Sincerely,

P.S. This is my first experiment in dictating a letter to a graphophone, and I am thoroughly delighted with it. I shall never use the slow & tedious pen again [Robert Slotta sale on eBay, item 1804024039 Aug. 31, 2009].

Note: regrettably all recordings of Sam’s voice have been lost.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mr. Clemens left for Washington this morning. He went off with Col. Harvey, on copyright” [MTP TS 110].

Sam and his publisher, Col. George B. Harvey, went to Washington, D.C. and took rooms in the New Willard Hotel. In September, he had agreed to be an officer in the American Congo Reform Association, that published his King Leopold’s Soliloquy at the end of September. This trip was a four-day lobbying trip in the Association’s behalf, culminating by a luncheon with President Theodore Roosevelt. Sam would return to New York on Nov. 27. See Nov. 28 apology to Mrs. Roosevelt for unloading the “burden” on the President.

Sam inscribed a copy of TS with his “June-bug” aphorism to Everett J. Brett [Nov. 21 to Putnam; MTP].

Richard R. Bowker (1848-1933), journalist, editor, and founder of R.R. Bowker & Co., wrote birthday wishes to Sam, liking the idea of the President inviting a general thanksgiving on that day [MTP].

A.R. Cross wrote to Sam, asking if he remembered meeting him at Laurence Hutton’s Princeton house, and asking him to dine with them on Wednesday, Dec. 20 at 8 p.m. to meet Miss May Sinclair (1862-1946) author of The Divine Fire (1904), who hoped to meet him [MTP]. Note: see Gribben p. 644.

James F. Mallinckrodt wrote from St. Louis to Sam, signing the letter “John Think.” He liked the Diary of Eve, saying “that is just the way Lady Eve probably talked and wrote,” and added “I first knew you about 35 years ago, floating Galaxies every month. Now you are floating—or it, she, or he is floating you—the great Harper’s Christmas Magazine” [MTP].

Michael Monahan wrote birthday wishes to Sam [MTP].

C. Brereton Sharpe for the Plasmon Syndicate wrote to Sam.

“We are in receipt of your cablegram [not extant] reading as follows: ‘Power of Attorney too limited Meeting will not be held General Power of Attorney required to negotiate settlement with Hammond’ / In accordance therewith we now enclose a fresh Power of Attorney which was executed at a Special Board Meeting of the Company held yesterday.” They hoped an agreement might be reached with Hammond for the reorganization of the American Plasmon Co. [MTP].

November 24 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Thomas S. Barbour [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Sam’s reply as “on or after 23 November.” One additional day estimated postal time is allowed here.

November 25 Saturday – The Hartford Courant ran an interview, “Mark Twain at 70” p.16. Scharnhorst (p. 511-16 & n.1) explains it was attributed to Samuel E. Moffett but actually written by Clemens.

Louise Forsslund wrote Sam from Sayville, L.I., N.Y. to confirm a story her father told of traveling with a young man named Clemens in 1849 in Sacramento [MTP]. Note: Sam’s reply ca. Nov. 28.

The New York Times, p. BR812 ran a squib on the coming birthday celebration, “Mark Twain’s Banquet.”

Invitations to the Mark Twain banquet Mr. George Harvey is giving at Delmonico’s, Dec. 5, to celebrate the great humorist’s 70th birthday, are naturally confined to writers of imaginative literature. There will be 150 persons present, as it is, including some of Mr. Clemens’s personal friends, and a few men of distinction in other walks of life. “Imaginative literature,” as it exists to-day, will be largely and brilliantly represented.

Carl H. Fowler for the Oppenheimer Institute wrote noting Sam’s one-time interest and “enclosing a booklet just published showing results obtained at one of our free clinics in this city” [MTP].

Elizabeth Porter Gould wrote from Boston to Sam, thanking him for “your kind suspense, as to the origin of the lines” (unspecified) and wishing she’d had the “pleasure of taking you by the hand when you were in Boston” [MTP].

J. Nelson Parker for the Beacon Society wrote to Sam, most anxious for Clemens to be their guest for their Annual Meeting in Dec. [MTP]. Note: this enclosed in Pearmain to Clemens Nov. 26

November 26 Sunday – In Washington, D.C. Sam wrote to Brian Ború Dunne (1878-1962), journalist for the Washington Times: “I lack time for an interview, but if we can compromise on a Thanksgiving Sentiment, take your pencil & I will dictate it. Thus:” [MTP]. Note: Sam followed this note, crammed at the top of the page, with what is a self-interview that ran in the front page of the Nov. 27 issue of the Washington D.C. Times. Sam wrote the following on a small sheet, cut from the above paragraph.

“A few days ago one of the interviewers [Dunne] offered to let me do a Thanksgiving Sentiment. I was not able to take advantage of the opportunity, for I had already declined two chances & it would not be fair to be inconsistent & unreliable unless I could do good by it or there was graft in it somewhere, for the family.”

Note: this paragraph was the first in the Nov. 27 article in the Times. The remaining “interview,” was published in With Gissing in Italy: The Memoirs of Brian Ború Dunne, 1999, p.190-199, and may be seen at twainquotes.com. Appendix 4 in the source, “An Interview with Mark Twain?” traces the history of this piece, ignored by scholars until publication; the editors consulted Robert H. Hirst, General Editor, MTP, who confirmed the handwriting of Twain, but pointed out the rest of the “interview” was in the hand of Isabel Lyon, who was not in Washington at the time. On the back a typed description: “Part of MS. written by Mark Twain for Brian Ború Dunne, Sunday afternoon, November 26, 1905, at the New Willard Hotel, Washington, D.C.”

The New York Times, p. SM1 ran a long, illustrated feature article: “Mark Twain: A Humorist’s Confession,” including an interview by A.E. Thomas.

MARK TWAIN: A HUMORIST’S CONFESSION

On the Eve of His 70th Birth Anniversary He Admits He Never Did a Day’s Work in His Life.

[three photographs of Twain by Marceau, Boston]

Whatever He Has Done, He Says, He Has Done Because It Was Play—Sage Advice to Fellow Humorists and Others—A Word in Defense of the English—As to Summer Homes.

Mark Twain will be 70 years old on Thanksgiving Day, and he has never done a day’s work in his life. He told me so himself, sitting in one of the cheerful, spacious rooms of the old-fashioned stately New York house which he will probably call his city home as long as he lives. I probably started upon hearing this unlooked-for statement from the lips of the good, gray humorist, for he repeated emphatically:

“No, Sir, not a day’s work in all my life. What I have done I have done, because it has been play. If it had been work I shouldn’t have done it.

“Who was it who said, “Blessed is the man who has found his work”? Whoever it was he had the right idea in his mind. Mark you, he says his work—not somebody else’s work. The work that is really a man’s own work is play and not work at all. Cursed is the man who has found some other man’s work and cannot lose it. When we talk about the great workers of the world we really mean the great players of the world. The fellows who groan and sweat under the weary load of toil that they bear never can hope to do anything great. How can they when their souls are in a ferment of revolt against the employment of their hands and brains? The product of slavery, intellectual or physical, can never be great.

To me who saw him standing there, straight and virile, in the clear, uncompromising light of the early Winter afternoon, it seemed that there must be years of good, hard, joyous play left yet in the Prince of American Humorists. Nor can be bring ourselves to dub him the Dean of American Humorists, either, because that has about it a certain suggestion of decrepit age, and nothing is less suggestive of the Mark Twain of today than decrepitude

Straight and spare as a New England pine, his great mane of thick white hair falling shaggily back from his brow, his thin, mobile upper lip covered with a heavy drooping mustache that is yet only shading toward grayness, his eyes always clear, now reflective and now flashing with the fire of the thoughts that leap like lightning behind them, though the words fall from the lips in that deliberate drawl which tens of thousands will never be able to forget so long as memory has ears, his face unlined and his cheeks touched with a ruddy glow, and only about he corners of his eyes the little tell-tale crow’s feet that seventy years have scratched there—nobody who saw him thus could ever possibly think of Mark Twain as old. No, there is nothing of the “last leaf” effect about Samuel L. Clemens.

“I’m glad you came to see me today, as I’m up and about, which I shouldn’t have been if I had been doing anything of consequence. You’re surprised at that, are you?”

I admitted that I didn’t understand.

“Well,” he went on slowly, “I’ve found that whenever I’ve got some work to do- “

“You mean play, of course,” I ventured.

“Of course, of course; but we’re all slaves to the use of conventional terms and I’ll stick to them to avoid confusing you. Whenever I’ve got some work to do I go to bed. I got into that habit some time ago when I had an attack of bronchitis. Suppose your bronchitis lasts six weeks. The first two you can’t do much but attend to the barking and so on, but the last four I found I could work if I stayed in bed and when you can work you don’t mind staying in bed.

“I liked it so well that I kept it up after I got well. There are a lot of advantages about it. If you’re sitting at a desk you get excited about what you are doing, and the first thing you know the steam heat or the furnace has raised the temperature until you've almost got a fever, or the fire in the grate goes out and you get a chill, or if somebody comes in to attend to the fire he interrupts you and gets you off the trail of that idea you are pursuing.

"So I go to bed. I can keep an equable temperature there without trying and go on about my work without being bothered. Work in bed is a pretty good gospel—at least for a man who's come, like me, to the time of life when his blood is easily frosted."

This was queer talk from those virile lips. The only frost you can perceive about Mark Twain is in his hair, and that is a crisp, invigorating frost, like that of a sparkling November morning.

"Well, Mr. Clemens," I said, "what you say about work and play may be true, but a good many people would think that the immense amount of labor you went through to pay the debts of the publishing house of C. L. Webster & Co. after that firm went to smash was entitled to be called by the name of hard work."

"Not at all," retorted Mr. Clemens, very seriously. "All I had to do was write a certain number of books and deliver a few hundred lectures. As for traveling about the country from one place to another for years—the nuisances of getting about and bad hotels and so on—those things are merely the incidents that every one expects to meet in life. The people who had to publish my books, the agents who had to arrange my lecture tours, the lawyers who had to draw up the contracts and other legal documents—they were the men who did the real work. My part was merely play. If it had been work I shouldn't have done it. I was never intended for work—never could do it—can't do it now—don't see any use in it."

It occurred to me to ask Mr. Clemens to tell the secret of the vital hold he has had for years upon the most intelligent people of the English-speaking world—a grip upon the public mind such as no mere humorist has ever held or ever could hold.

"Well," he answered, "I know it is a difficult thing for a man who has acquired a reputation as a funny man to have a serious thought and put it into words and be listened to respect fully, but I thoroughly believe that any man who's got anything worth while to say will be heard if he only says it often enough. Of course, what I have to say may not be worth saying. I can't tell about that, but if I honestly believe I have an idea worth the attention of thinking people it's my business to say it with all the sincerity I can muster. They'll listen to it if it really is worth while and I say it often enough. If it isn't worth while it doesn't matter whether I'm heard or not.

"Suppose a man makes a name as a humorist—he may make it at a stroke, as Bret Harte did, when he wrote those verses about the "Heathen Chinee." That may not be the expression of the real genius of the man at all. He may have a genuine message for the world. Then let him say it and say it again and then repeat it and let him soak it in sincerity. People will warn him at first that he's getting a bit out of his line, but they'll listen to him at last, if he's really got a message—just as they finally listened to Bret Harte.

"Dickens had his troubles when he tried to stop jesting. The "Sketches by Boz" introduced him as a funny man, but when Boz began to take him seriously people began to shake their heads and say: "That fellow Boz isn't as funny as he was, is he?" But Boz and his creator kept right on being in earnest, and they listened after a time, just as they always will listen to anybody worth hearing.

"I tell you, life is a serious thing, and, try as a man may, he can't make a joke of it. People forget that no man is all humor, just as they fail to remember that every man is a humorist. We hear that marvelous voice of Sembrich—a wonderful thing—a thing never to be forgotten—but nobody makes the mistake of thinking of Sembrich as merely a great, unmixed body of song. We know that she can think and feel and suffer like the rest of us. Why should we forget that the humorist has his solemn moments? Why should we expect nothing but humor of the humorist?

"My advice to the humorist who has been a slave to his reputation is never to be discouraged. I know it is painful to make an earnest statement of a heartfelt conviction and then observe the puzzled expression of the fatuous soul who is conscientiously searching his brain to see how he can possibly have failed to get the point of the joke. But say it again and maybe he'll understand you. No man need be a humorist all his life. As the patent medicine man says, there is hope for all."

"You are far from being a bad man: go and reform," thought I reminiscently of "The Man That Corrupted Hadleyburg."

"The quality of humor," Mr. Clemens went on hurriedly—for him—"is the commonest thing in the world. I mean the perceptive quality of humor. In this sense every man in the world is a humorist. The creative quality of humor—the ability to throw a humorous cast over a set of circumstances that before had seemed colorless is, of course, a different thing. But every man in the world is a perceptive humorist. Everybody lives in a glass house. Why should anybody shy bricks at a poor humorist or advise him to stick to his trade when he tries to say a sensible thing?"

"Even the English?" I suggested.

"The English don't deserve their reputation," insisted Mr. Clemens. "They are as humorous a nation as any in the world. Only humor, to be comprehensible to anybody, must be built upon a foundation with which he is familiar. If he can't see the foundation the superstructure is to him merely a freak—like the Flatiron building without any visible means of support—something that ought to be arrested.

"You couldn't, for example, understand an English joke, yet they have their jokes—plenty of them. There's a passage in Parkman that tells of the home life of the Indian—describes him sitting at home in his wigwam with his squaw and papooses—not the stoical, toy Indian with whom we are familiar, who wouldn't make a jest for his life or notice one that anybody else made, but the real Indian that few white men ever saw—simply rocking with mirth at some tribal witticism that probably wouldn't have commended itself in the least to Parkman.

"And, so you see, the quality of humor is not a personal or a national monopoly. It's as free as salvation, and, I am afraid, far more widely distributed. But it has its value, I think. The hard and sordid things of life are too hard and too sordid and too cruel for us to know and touch them year after year without some mitigating influence, some kindly veil to draw over them, from time to time, to blur the craggy outlines, and make the thorns less sharp and the cruelties less malignant."

Mr. Clemens doesn't mind being seventy years old, but he isn't especially gay about it.

"When our anniversaries roll up too high a total," he said, "we don't feel in a particularly celebratory mood. We often celebrate the wrong anniversaries and lament the ones we ought to celebrate."

This particular anniversary finds him domiciled within sight of the Washington Arch in one of those dignified old mansions of lower Fifth Avenue that have set their kindly, patrician old faces sternly against the marauding march of skyscrapers and business loft and hotel. Everybody knows that Hartford was for many years his home, though in the Summer intervals various mountain or seaside cottages got in some of their dread work, while so recently as a Summer or two ago an Italian villa added strange new items to the sum total of his domiciliary experiences.

His latest solution to the Summer question is Dublin, New Hampshire. There he was last Summer, and there he hopes to be again. His own account of how he reached so satisfactory a solution is entertaining, and may be instructive.

"Yes," he said, "I have tried a number of summer homes, here and in Europe together.

"Each of these homes had charms of its own; charms and delights of its own, and some of them—even in Europe—had comforts. Several of them had conveniences, too. They all had a "view."

"It is my conviction that there should always be some water in a view—a lake or a river, but not the ocean, if you are down on its level. I think that when you are down on its level it seldom inflames you with an ecstasy which you could not get out of a sand flat. It is like being on board ship over again; indeed it is worse than that, for there's three months of it. On board ship one tires of the aspects in a couple of days and quits looking. The same vast circle of heaving humps is spread around you all the time, with you in the center of it and never gaining an inch on the horizon, as far as you can see one; for variety, a flight of flying fish, a flock of porpoises throwing summersaults afternoons, a remote whale spouting Sundays, occasional phosphorescent effects nights, every other day a streak of black smoke trailing along under the horizon; on the single red-letter day, the illustrious iceberg. I have seen that iceberg thirty four times in thirty-seven voyages; it is always that same shape, it is always the same size, it always throws up the same old flash when the sun strikes it; you may set it on any New York doorstep of a June morning and light it up with a mirror flash and I will engage to recognize it. It is artificial, and is provided and anchored out by the steamer companies. I used to like the sea, but I was young then, and could easily get excited over any kind of monotony, and keep it up till the monotonicities ran out.

"Last January, when we were beginning to inquire about a home for this summer, I remembered that Abbott Thayer had said, three years before, that the New Hampshire highlands was a good place. He was right—it is a good place. Any place that is good for an artist in paint is good for an artist in morals and ink. Brush is here, too; so is Col. T. W. Higginson; so is Raphael Pumpelly; so is Mr. Secretary Hitchcock; so is Henderson; so is Learned so is Sumner; so is Franklin MacVeagh so is Joseph L. Smith; so is Henry Copley Greene, when I am not occupying his house, which I am doing this season. Paint, literature, science, statesmanship, history, professorship, law, morals—these are all represented here, yet crime is substantially unknown.

"The summer homes of these refugees are sprinkled, a mile apart, among the forest-clad hills, with access to each other by firm and smooth country roads which are so embowered in dense foliage that it is always twilight in there and comfortable. The forests are spider-webbed with these good roads, they go everywhere; but for the help of the guideboards the stranger would not arrive anywhere.

"The village—Dublin—is bunched together in its own place, but a good telephone service makes its markets handy to all those outliars. If you spell it right it's witty. The village executes orders on the Boston plan—promptness and courtesy.

"The summer homes are high perched, as a rule, and have contenting outlooks. The house we occupy has one. Monadnock, a soaring double hump, rises into the sky at its left elbow—that is to say, it is close at hand. From the base of the long slant of the mountain, the valley spreads away to the circling frame of hills, and beyond the frame the billowy sweep of remote great ranges rise to view and flow, fold upon fold, wave upon wave, soft and blue and unworldly, to the horizon fifty miles away. In these October days Monadnock and the valley and its framing hills make an inspiring picture to look at, for they are sumptuously splashed and mottled and betorched from sky line to sky line with the richest dyes the autumn can furnish; and when they lie flaming in the full drench of the mid-afternoon sun, the sight affects the spectator physically, it stirs his blood like military music.

"These summer houses are commodious, well built, and well furnished—facts which sufficiently indicate that the owners built them to live in themselves. They have furnaces and wood fireplaces, and the rest of the comforts and conveniences of a city home, and can be comfortably occupied all the year round.

"We cannot have this house next season, but I have secured Mrs. Upton's house, which is over in the law and science quarter, two or three miles from here, and about the same distance from the art, literary, and scholastic groups. The science and law quarter has needed improving this good while.

"The nearest railway station is distant something like an hour's drive; it is three hours from there to Boston, over a branch line. You can go to New York in six hours per branch line if you change every time you think of it, but it is better to go to Boston and stop over and take the trunk line next day; then you do not get lost.

"It is claimed that the atmosphere of the New Hampshire highlands is exceptionally bracing and stimulating, and a fine aid to hard and continuous work. It is a just claim, I think. I came in May, and wrought thirty-five successive days without a break. It is possible that I could not have done it elsewhere. I do not know; I have not had any disposition to try it before. I think I got the disposition out of the atmosphere this time. I feel quite sure, in fact, that that is where it came from.

"I am ashamed to confess what an intolerable pile of manuscript I ground out in the thirty-five days; therefore I will keep the number of words to myself. I wrote the first half of a long tale—"The Adventures of a Microbe"—and put it away for a finish next summer, and started another long tale—"The Mysterious Stranger"; I wrote the first half of it and put it with the other for a finish next summer. I stopped then. I was not tired, but I had no books on hand that needed finishing this year except one that was seven years old. After a little I took that one up and finished it. Not for publication, but to have it ready for revision next summer.

"Since I stopped work I have had a two months' holiday. The summer has been my working time for thirty-five years, to have a holiday in it (in America) is new to me. I have not broken it, except to write "Eve's Diary" and "A Horse's Tale"—short things occupying the mill twelve days.

"This year our summer was six months long and ended with November and the flight home to New York, but next year we hope and expect to stretch it another month and end it the first of December."

Isabel Lyon's Journal: "Jean, 3 P.M. 8 P.M. Katie / Then am I / A happy fly. / If I live / Or if I die" MTP 110; Hill 116]. Note: Trombley identifies this latter verse as William Blake's poem, and waxes eloquent in her interpretation of it's inclusion in Miss Lyon's diary:

In her cryptic fashion, Isabel's quoting "The Fly" deftly defines the temporality of her and Jean's peculiar existences; they were both caught in a place on the margins of life as they dreamed of living it. Both women were frustrated in their attempts to create futures for themselves and both were subjected to circumstances they were powerless to control.: Isabel was ensnared in a trap created by circumstance and dependent upon an elderly man's whims, and Jean was mired in a downwardly spiraling illness [MTOW 82-3].

Note: Hill sees quite a lot in the underline of "Katie": "very probably referred to the first of Jean's homicidal attacks on the housekeeper" [Ibid.]. Trombley argues that Jean attacked Katy because her epilepsy put her in a "postictal psychotic state" and offers up modern neurologists' opinions [MT Other Woman 81-2]. Lystra, on the other hand, sought medical opinions and poured over the same documents as other biographers, and doubts the attacks occurred: "Scientific opinion is firm: there is absolutely no physiological connection between epilepsy and violence directed against another person." Lystra puts the story to the superstition of the 19th century which died hard in the 20th, and to Lyon's manipulation of Jean and the family's affairs [x-xv]. Sheldon argues that Lyon convinced herself that Jean was subject to violent and even homicidal outbursts: "...with the exception of Lyon's words, there is no evidence that [Dr. Frederick] Peterson accepted that Jean's disease made her dangerous to others. At Katonah, his favorite therapy for Jean involved intense work in the crafts shop....If Peterson had really shared Lyon's prejudice, it would have been dangerous therapy indeed to leave Jean in possession of sharp carving tools and mallets for hours at a time" [176]. It wasn't until Feb. 5, 1906 that Sam took Jean to See Dr. Peterson. Nevertheless, it seems likely that grand mal seizures, especially coming in clusters, would have frightened a sensitive and melodramatic woman like Isabel Lyon. If her fears were real, homicidal acts by Jean may not have been. Did Lyon's conclusion that Jean was insane and her fears of Jean's possible violence motivate her actions or did she have ulterior motives and simply use such fears to further her own agenda? Notes of Samuel Charles and Doris Webster made from interviews with Lyon in the 1940s may be suspect by the passage of several decades. On Lyon's Journal page 110 ½ (to be inserted in page 110, referring to "Jean, 3 p.m. 8 p.m. Katie") Webster wrote: "This seems to refer to an attack on the maid, Katie Leary that Miss Lyon told me about. Jean was getting dangerous, and the doctor told Miss Lyon never to let Jean get between her and the door, and never to close the door. S.C.W." Why would the entry "seem" to refer to an attack on Katie is not clear. Did Webster doubt the long-after memory of Isabel Lyon, who was likely embittered by the treatment she received in 1909? Webster himself later wrote Mark Twain Businessman, in an attempt to ameliorate his late father's reputation in the face of Clemens' accusations over the failure of Charles L. Webster & Co. One might conclude that neither Lyon or Webster were impartial here. It would also seem that one might choose sides on these and other issues involving the melodramatic and hypersensitive Isabel Lyon. All of this begs the question as to why there isn't a more explicit exposition of an attack against Leary—there is none by Katie herself, nor by Clemens, nor in Jean's papers.

Digna Bieszk and Agathe Bieszk sent birthday wishes from Frieberg in Breisgau, Germany [MTP].

Isabella S. Bohan wrote congratulations and birthday wishes to Sam, and asking where she might get the "little volume, 'Editorial Wild Oats'" [MTP].

Edmund Vance Cooke (1866-1932) wrote from Cleveland, Ohio to Sam: "Under another cover I send you a memento, with inscription," which was a copy of his book Chronicles of the Little Tot (1905) [Gribben 158]. Note: See Nov. 30 for the book with inscription.

Gilbert Holland Montague wrote from Old Point Comfort, Va. to offer congratulations and birthday wishes [MTP].

J.F. Moreno wrote a postcard from Deming, N.M. to Sam. "Your books have long been one of the few pleasures in the life of a poor devil who, lacking health, wishes it to you as the greatest good conceivable" [MTP].

Sumner Bass Pearmain wrote to Sam, passing on and vouching for, the invitation from the Beacon Society of Boston that invited Sam [MTP].

November 27 Monday – Sam was in Washington, D.C. and was a guest of President Theodore Roosevelt. Later in the day he returned to New York. The New York Times reported the event on page 1.

Mark Twain the President's Guest

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) was a guest of President and Mrs. Roosevelt at luncheon to-day. Invited to meet Mr. Clemens were Secretary Bonaparte, Attorney General Moody, and John Temple Graves. The call of Mr. Clemens upon the President was purely social.

[Note: not purely social—Sam took the opportunity to discuss the Congo situation, then wrote to Mrs. Roosevelt his thanks and apologies for unloading his "burden" on the President. See also Dec. 3 article]

Note: Charles Joseph Bonaparte (1851-1921) at this time Secretary of the Navy (1905-1906); also Attorney General (1906-1909). William H. Moody (1853-1917), Attorney General (1904-1906). John Temple Graves, (1856-1925) editor of the Atlanta Georgian, and in 1908 was the People's candidate for Vice President.

Hawkins writes: "the president showed interest in the Congo and said he would ask Bacon to make a thorough report. Twain apparently inferred that Roosevelt would act against Leopold if he were first sure England would also act" [163]. Robert Bacon (1860-1919) was Assistant Secretary of State under Elihu Root (1845-1937), who was named to the post after the death of John Hay.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The mails are full of letters from people who are sending loving messages to Mr. Clemens on the approach of his 70th birthday. These letters come from the old, and from the children, from the celebrated and learned and mighty, and from the uncultured and humble—but they all bear the heartfelt message of homage and love and appreciation of the writer, and the man, and the King whose crowning has not been placed by any hands, but has grown with a steady spiritual growth out of the genius and the life of the man who sits enthroned in the hearts of the people who offer their sweet tribute. It is touching. He came home today from Washington [MTP TS 110].

Edmund D. Morel wrote to Sam about The Report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Belgian Congo: “The Report... is a curious document. I sent you a copy of my presentation of it. I trust you received it, but I fear it will have been too long to wade through” [Gribben 574].

H.W. Palmer wrote compliments of his books read for years and birthday wishes to Sam [MTP].

Hélène Elisabeth Picard wrote to Sam asking if he would look at a letter from the President and verify if it was his handwriting. She had written the President congratulating him on the peace reached in the Russo-Japanese War, but a friend claimed it wasn't his handwriting on a reply. No mention was made of Sam's 70th [MTP].

Samuel Pollock wrote from Willards Hotel, Wash. D.C. to offer birthday wishes Sam, asked whether he was on the Mississippi in Mar. and Apr. 1862 with the gunboat flotilla, “and if so whether for a short time you were a pilot on the ‘DeSoto’ with Capt. Montgomery” [MTP].

T.G. Sawkins wrote from NYC to Sam recalling it had been 13 years since they'd met at the Players Club in NYC. He enclosed a poem for which he was trying to find a publisher, and asked for “a candid opinion” [MTP]. Note: Miss Lyon wrote at the top in pencil: “The man who claims to have been the first one to advise Mr. Clemens to go to Australia on a lecturing tour—& now he asks a favor”

Will Larrymore Smedley wrote from Chautauqua, NY to offer birthday wishes [MTP].

Eleven year old Paul Thorne wrote from Youngstown, Ohio to Sam, having the same birthday. He and his friends had read Huck and Tom and he “played the games” from them but got licked and sent to bed. He asked if Tom and Huck and Aunt Polly were still alive. He wished Sam “lots more birthdays” [MTP].

Anne Warner wrote from Hildesheim, Germany to offer birthday wishes to Sam [MTP].

November 28 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. where he wrote to Robert Bacon, Asst. Secretary of State, who was seeking more information about England's willingness to act against Leopold.

For lack of time I was not able to send you those Congo documents yesterday, but I shall have them forwarded to-day. In England the matter is in the hands of John Morley & some strong peers and bishops, & I feel pretty sure that they will push it along to a point where America can drop in & take a hand without much embarrassment [MTP]. Note: see Nov. 27 (Hawkins), and Dec. 4 from Bacon.

Sam also wrote to Robert Reid.

I am just home from a trip; & I am sorry it isn't a dinner to the brush instead of the pen; or a dinner to both brush and pen, for it is the only 70th I shall ever celebrate, & I wish the Colonel could let me have them all, for this once, with you where of right you belong, at the head of the brushes. Robert, will you think of me at your 70th, and be sorry in your turn? You must [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Edith Kermit Carow Roosevelt (1861-1948), second wife of Theodore Roosevelt, thanking her for hosting the luncheon he shared on Nov. 27 with them.

I did not half thank you for your charming hospitality, but I assure you I was sincerely grateful, nevertheless. I was troubled in my mind, all the time, because I was afraid the President did not know I had come to Washington to ask for a private word with him on a public matter—yet I had to intrude it, for I am a citizen, & the matter was on my citizen-conscience & must be unloaded, so that I might get personal relief. That is why we unload our consciences. We shift the burden. Whither? Mainly—in these days—to the President's shoulders. Everybody does it: all the nations do it. It is not fair, it is most unfair; yet our consciences are so constructed that they will spare no one when they need relief from a burden, not even an already vastly overburdened President; particularly a President whose heart is always & promptly generous, & likely to be open to appeals which are not made in a personal & sordid interest but in behalf of a matter clothed in the dignity of an honorable & national importance. It distressed me to have to add myself to his long list of burden-shifting benevolent persecutors; it touched my hardened conscience that he bore it so patiently. And certainly it is a hardened conscience, & a persistently increasing puzzle to the pathologist. It is now 5 times that I have been operated on for appendicitis, at perilous risk of my life, only to find that it was not my appendix that was inflamed, but only my conscience. We hope to get it, next time, & sequester it in a bottle.

I beg to be mentioned to Miss Roosevelt, whom I have met, & to the boys, whom I would so like to meet. To you, dear Mrs. Roosevelt, & to his Excellency I offer my homage & high regard; & him I would have thanked for remembering me in the midst of his heavy duties when the irremediable disaster of my life fell upon me, but there are things which we cannot say, for the voice breaks [MTP]. Note: the burden Sam unloaded to the President was the Congo situation. See Dec. 3 article.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Yesterday Mr. Clemens lunched at the White House. His description of Mrs. Roosevelt would be gratifying to her, and to the President too, for Mr. Clemens found her charming, simple and without any shred of self consciousness, a lovely woman. Mr. Clemens liked the President as much as he always does—"you can't help liking him for he is a magnetic creature, and he shows his teeth in a forceful smile, just as much as ever," and he unconsciously says that he is "De-lighted" to see you, just as the caricaturists have it on the record [MTP TS 110].

Mona E. Brookman wrote to to offer birthday wishes Sam, and to ask for a photograph [MTP].

Twelve year old Noel E. Evans wrote from Des Moines, Iowa to offer birthday wishes, as it would also be his birthday and Thanksgiving Day [MTP].

Joe Goodman wrote from Alameda, Calif. to Sam, typed on a stiff paper board:

The bearer of these credentials is a fast friend of mine, and was of all our old Comstock comrades, and would have been of yours but for the misjoinder of a few years. He is about the only man on the Slope to whom I would give a passport.

In official circles he is Hon. S.P. Davis, Controller of the State of Nevada; but to the world at large he is Sam Davis, the representative humorist of the Pacific Coast.

He is an ardent admirer of yours—so much so, that he has been lecturing about you. But, though his appreciation of your work is the best I have ever seen in print, he is so off on his reckoning as to facts that I want him to hail you and lay a true course.

The Mark Twain cult is having a boom here, just now—running neck-and-neck with Christian Science, and being played for a winner. There have been two full pages of it in the Sunday supplements within a month. One of the devotees—James Tufts, a veteran editor of the San Francisco "Examiner"—has the rarest collection of your works in existence, probably. It comprises not only first editions of all your books—including the Canadian and English ones—but he has ransacked the magazines back to the '60's, and has all your scattered writings, magnificently bound and illustrated by every picture of you obtainable. It follows necessarily that he is a good fellow. Davis can tell you about him.

Should you and Sam happen to meet in New York, I would like you to go to the Regal (corner of Seventh avenue and 17th street, I think, as you will see by reference to your note-book) and take a beer and sandwich, in memory of old times. / Yours as always, ... [MTP].

Winifred Meyer in Cambridge, Mass. wrote congratulations and birthday wishes [MTP].

Alex Montgomery in St. Louis wrote congratulations and birthday wishes [MTP].

Ewald Plaminschetz sent a panoramic picture postcard of Vienna, Austria with congratulations and birthday wishes (in German) [MTP].

Mary Reynolds in Cape Girardeau, Mo. wrote congratulations and birthday wishes; she knew Clemens when he was a river pilot [MTP].

George W. Smith wrote from the Hotel Wendell, Pittsfield, Mass. to send congratulastions on a “long, brilliant and sustained career in letters” with birthday wishes [MTP].

An unidentified person wrote Sam “Best wishes from (One of your admirers)” on a picture postcard of Idora Falls, Youngstown, Ohio [MTP].

William S. Wallace wrote from Chicago offering congratulations and birthday wishes [MTP].

Josephine Curtis Woodbury in Greenwich, Conn. sent two poems about death to Sam [MTP].

November 28 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Sumner Bass Pearmain.

Mr Clemens has just returned from Washington very tired—& so directs me to write for him in answer to your letter of Nov. 26th He wishes me to thank you very much for your offer of hospitality, if he were to accept Mr. Parker’s invitation to be a guest of the Beacon Society—but to say that naturally he is declining because he accepts no invitations that he is not obliged to. Then to use Mr. Clemens’s own words: “I want to authorize Mr. Pearmain now to decline for me all invitations, before they get a chance to reach me, for it will relieve us both of embarrassments.” and this he feels, that as his friend, you will be glad to do. Mr. Clemens is tired, but very well—and he wishes me to convey to you & to Mr^s. Pearmain, his very warm regards [MTP].

Note: J. Nelson Parker.

Isabel Lyon also wrote for Sam to decline J. Nelson Parker’s invitation; “he could not accept invitations that take him so far from his home” [MTP].

Sam also replied to Louise Forsslund’s Nov. 25 query that it “Must have been some other Clemens—never W. of Miss. until middle of 1861” [MTP].

November 29 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to John P. Cowan.

Dear Mr. Cowan: / Health to you! Sometimes, in the past two years, I have asked the Harpers’ permission to say a word outside—for print—but I don’t now, for the applications these past two days amount to a sort of flood. Privately, between you and me, I did not suppose there was any Clemens blood in the world, outside of my family and J. Ross Clemens of St. Louis. Adam was the only ancestor I had ever heard of. / Sincerely yours ... [MTP].

Sam gave an interview to a New York World reporter. The interview ran as “Twain calls Leopold Slayer of 15,000,000” in the paper on Sunday, Dec. 3. Section 3, p. 6. See Dec. 3 entry.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon at 3:30 Signor Traverso came in to tell Mr. Clemens about the Massiglia law suit. All the misery that Mr. Clemens ever hoped the Countess would get out of this suit she has got, for she has spent a lot of money, lawyers have taken their time about getting evidence (or taking testimony) and long ago Count Massiglia went to Signor Traverso begging him to ask Mr. Clemens to drop the suit, for it was killing his wife, and life at the villa was made impossible for them, for every hand was against them, and life had become a Hell. Mr. Clemens listened to Traverso's story, with a keen satisfaction, for the Countess has garnered what she sowed [MTP TS 111].

L. Fosdick wrote from Pittsburg, Penn. to Sam, asking for "a line that shall help clinch the verdict" in a church debate on Mark Twain. He drew a cartoon of a prison inmate and wrote "this is not a 'hold up'." On or just after this date Sam replied: "Before you engage in debates you should see to it that you get on the strong side, then you wont have to ask any body's help" [MTP].

Anna E. Berry wrote from Garden City, L.I. to Sam. "As one of the oldest members of the dear Langdon family circle, I want to tell you that I am glad you are alive, and are going to have a birthday....I love to think of you in Elmira when you carried Pussy Cats, in your white linen coat- pockets..." [MTP].

The following persons also wrote various birthday congratulations to Clemens on Nov. 29:

John Clarke from Arlington, Md. to congratulate Sam on his 70th.
Cecile Freese from NYC as an "old friend" to congratulate Sam on his 70th and with love to Clara and Jean.
Sophia de Genhaim from Vienna, Austria
E.W. Hatch.
Eleanor V. Hutton (Mrs. Laurence Hutton).
Issac F. Marcossou.
D.W. Morrill.
Paul Muller.

Maud Muratt.
Georgiana Sanborn.
J.H.K. Shannahan.
J.H. Todd.
Annie Trumbull sent a poem.
Marshall P. Wilder telegraphed congratulations from Indianapolis, Ind..

November 30 Thursday – Thanksgiving Day - Sam's 70th Birthday.

Several newspapers across the country reported Sam's "Thanksgiving sentiment," including this quote taken from the Nov. 28 issue of the Grand Forks Daily Herald (N. Dakota), p.1:

"Every year every person in America concentrates all his thoughts on one thing—cataloguing his reasons for being thankful to the Deity for the blessings conferred on him and on the human race during the expiring twelve months.

"This is well and as it should be; but it is too one-sided. No one ever seems to think of the Deity's side of it; apparently no one concerns himself to inquire how much or how little he has had to be thankful for during the same period.

"We may be unstintedly thankful, but can that really be the same with Him? If He had a voice how would he regard this year's results in Russia? Doubtless the most that He can be thankful for is that the carnage and suffering are not as bad as they might be.

"He will have noticed that life insurance in New York has gone tolerably rotten, and the widow and orphan have a sorrowful time of it at the hands of their chosen protectors. Doubtless the most He is thankful for is that the rottenness and robberies have not been absolutely complete.

"He has noticed the political smell ascending from New York, Philadelphia and sixty or seventy other municipalities has been modified a little temporarily and, doubtless, is thankful for that transient reprieve.

"He has observed that King Leopold's destruction of innocent life on the Congo is not as great this year as it was last by as much as 100,000 victims, because of the diminishing material. Without doubt He himself is thankful that matters in the Congo are not as irretrievably bad as they might be, and that some natives still are left alive.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mr. Clemens’s 70th birthday. But he is only a young and beautiful 50, and this afternoon as I sat up in Dr. Quintard’s office, we talked about him and his greatness for a long time. His greatness and his goodness too—for there are few men, no men, as famous as he, and as good.

All day there have been telegrams and letters and flowers and homage of one kind and another, but you cannot spoil him. He lunched with Mr. and Mr. Rogers and when he reached home at 5 o’clock Jean and I sat in the living room with young Michael Stillman, 6 feet 4 inches of young ardent life loving, Thayer loving manhood, but Mr. Clemens only saluted and then went up to his bed. Tired he was. It was good for him to go where people love him as the Rogerses do.

Mr. Gilder came in after dinner. Santa C. who was to have sung tomorrow is ill with a sore throat [MTP TS 111]. Isabel Lyon’s Journal # 2: “Mr. Clemesn will lunch with Mr. & Mrs. Rogers. / 8 East 78th [MTP TS 35].

Madeleine Sinsheimer wrote to Sam from Newark, N.J. that thanks to God she was perfectly well again. On or just after this day Sam directed Isabel Lyon to “Thank her for remembering me on my birthday” [MTP]. See Feb. 15 entry.

Sam also inscribed a copy of Editorial Wild Oats (1905) for an unidentified person [MTP]. Note: This book by Harpers was a reissue of some of Sam’s older sketches. The New York Times ran some of it on Sept. 24, 1905.

Sam also inscribed a copy of TS with his signature and this date to an unidentified person [MTP: Anderson Auction Co. catalogs, Mar. 8, 1909 Item 253].

Edmund Vance Cooke inscribed a copy of his book of verses on children, Chronicles of the Little Tot (1905): “To Samuel Langhorne Clemens at Seventy / To Mark Twain at the same age / Cleveland, Nov. 30th, 1905” [Gribben 158].

Thomas Bailey Aldrich and Lilian W. Aldrich telegrammed “Long life, love & congratulations” [MTP].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam.(before Nov. 30) “Nov. 30 will be a red-letter day. I shall expect you to give me that evening for something real good. Let me know if I an begin to arrange. Harvey” [MTP].

The following persons also sent various birthday congratulations to Clemens on Nov. 30:

John F. McCabe wrote to Sam, asking for the lines on Susy's headstone [MTP]. Note: Sam replied through Lyon on Dec. 1.

November 30 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam sent a telegram to Henry Campbell Bannerman.

Dear Primey— / Just a line to say that I've never cherished hard feeling towards you or felt the least bit envious of your [one word illegible] position in society—to be obliged to lug around the title of Minister. even though it is of the premier class would have taken the heart clear out of me, & life would have lost it's savour—You've earned a just reward & a crown in a happier land. May you find them soon / Mark Twain [MTP].

November 30, after – Shortly after turning 70, Sam wrote "Old Age." The piece was included in Mark Twain's Fables of Man p.440, (1972), Tuckey ed., based on the surviving MS [Budd, Collected 2: 1011].

December – "Eve's Diary" was first published in Harper's Monthly. In June 1906 it was published in book form as Eve's Diary Translated from the Original MS; also included in The $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories (1906) [Budd, Collected 2: 1010-11].

Sam also inscribed a copy of HF to Charles Aubrey Slosson (1875-1965): "Mr. Charles Aubrey Slosson his book." Sam followed this with his "June-bug" aphorism [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of The Man that Corrupted Hadleyburg to an unidentified person: "Necessity is the mother of taking chances. Truly yours Mark Twain. Dec./05" [MTP: American Art Assoc.—Anderson Galleries catalogs Jan. 29, 1936, Item 104].

Sam also inscribed a copy of A Dog's Tale to an unidentified person: "You may straighten the worm, but the crook is in him & only waiting. Mark Twain. Dec./05." [MTP: Parke-Bernet catalogs June 17, 1964, Item 14].

Sam signed his copy of Voices of Doubt and Trust (1897) by Volney Streamer (1850-1915): "S.L. Clemens / Dec. 1905. / 21—5th ave" [Gribben 674].

Sam also wrote an aphorism to an unidentified person: "Taking the pledge will not make bad liquor good, but it will improve it./ Truly yours / Mark Twain./ Dec./05" [MTP: Swann Galleries Inc catalog, May 3, 1990 Item 315].

Sam also wrote an aphorism to an unidentified person: "Never put off till tomorrow what can be put off till day after tomorrow just as well. / Truly yours / Mark Twain./ Dec./05" [MTP: Kenneth W. Rendell catalog, No. 258].

The following persons wrote various birthday congratulations to Clemens sometime during December:

Daniel Carter Beard wrote to Sam sometime during the month.

Mary S. Coristine.

William Hock.

Louis E. Michael.

Eliza Morton.

Robert D. Work [Note: all above names and letters courtesy MTP].

Strand Magazine ran “Portraits of Celebrities at Different Ages—New Series. ‘Mark Twain’” p. 667-8, picturing Samuel Clemens at ages 18, 27, 33, 48, and 62. They ran the identical article again for Jan. 1906.

December 1 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote a short note to Marcella Sembrich, opera star. “Dear Madame Sembrich— / It was lovely of you to send me so eloquent & so beautiful aremembrance, & I thank you out of my heart” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Will Larrymore Smedley in Chataqua-on-Chataqua, N.Y.: “To you, & to all my other known & unknown friends who have lightened the weight of my seventieth birthday with kind words & good wishes I offer my most grateful thanks, & beg leave to sign myself” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon replied to John F. McCabe’s Nov. 30 request for the lines on Susy’s headstone, which were often mistakenly ascribed to Sam: “Mr. Clemens is glad to send you the lines you have asked for. He directs me to tell you that they were written by a young Australian poet, Robert Richardson, and Mr. Clemens made an adaptation of them for the grave of his daughter” [New York Times, Apr. 30, 1910, “Views of Readers”].

Isabel Lyon’s Journal # 2: “Miss Clemens sings. 4:30 / Mr. Barbour. 9:30” [MTP TS 35].

Edward Everett Hale in Wash. D.C. on copyright matters wrote that he would be unable to attend the Dec. 5 dinner celebration of Sam’s 70th [MTP].

Paul S. Godbey in Jacksonville, Fla. sent a wooden! Florida Souvenir Post Card to Sam with congratulations [MTP].

Karl Peutl wrote congrats to Sam [MTP].

James A. Renwick wrote to receipt Sam for his check of $297.61 for Dec. rent [MTP].

Louise M. Sill for Harper & Brothers wrote to thank Sam for sending the story, “Eve’s Diary” [MTP].

W.H. Winsor sent a telegram from South Framingham, Mass. to congratulate Sam [MTP].

December 1 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to L. Fosdick’s Nov. 29 query [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as “on or after 29 November.” Two days estimated postal time is allowed here.

December 2 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Andrew Carnegie.

Dear St. Andrew: / What is your telephone number? I have been trying to get to your house, & look at the family, but it is so far & I rise so late—however, I shall succeed, yet. My telephone address is “3907 Gramercy”—it isn’t in the book.

With warmest regards to you all, ... [MTP].

Henry S. Fleming wrote from N.Y. to Sam in behalf of the Society of Illustrators and on the urging of Daniel Carter Beard, Fleming was “anxious” to have Mark Twain at their Dec. 21 dinner [MTP]. Note: On or just after this day Isabel Lyon answered for Sam: “Should like it very much on Mr. Beard’s account as well as his own, but it is his purpose this winter as last to avoid going out at night, because he is too apt to catch cold & that always means 6 wks in bed with bronchitis”

Edward L. Adams wrote congratulations to Sam [MTP].

John C. Bostlemann (who had been the Clemens girls' music teacher) wrote on Ashlar Club stationery, Corning, NY to Sam, enclosing a printed copy of Sam's unsolicited Sept. 13, 1889 letter (see Vol II). There was a vacancy in the NY State Library and he asked Sam if he might "kindly write me a few lines of endorsement for one of the vacancies" [MTP: Cushman].

Rabie Hart wrote congratulations to Sam [MTP].

John Y.W. MacAlister wrote to Sam with congratulations [MTP].

Abbott Handerson Thayer wrote to Sam with a "yarn about how the Boston Tavern Club has just treated me. I need to know whether I am crazy or whether they are the Bostonest, effetest, driest little set of relics that ever were trundled nightly to a sheep-headed assemblage ..." [MTP]. Note: the Tavern Club of young men had been started by William Dean Howells.

Alicia K. Van Buren wrote from Orange Park, Fla. To compliment Sam on "Eve's Diary" and to ask if he was coming to Florida [MTP].

Outlook ran an anonymous article, "Mark Twain at Seventy," p. 808. Tenney: "A conventional tribute, noting his wide popularity and his originality, an unevenness in his work, but a closeness to life in primary rather than secondary terms; praises him (by implication) for his courage and honor in paying his debts after his business failure" [Tenney 40; Tenney "A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 189-90].

December 3 Sunday – Gribben cites the New York World's article "Twain Calls Leopold Slayer of 15,000,000," and speculates: "Twain probably drew on Suetonius when he mentioned Nero as a killer" [677]. Note: the interview is in Scharnhorst, p.528-31, and also online at the Univ. Washington site:

Twain Calls Leopold Slayer of 15,000,000

Besides Leopold, Nero, Caligula, Attila, Torquemada, Genghis Khan, and such killers of men are mere amateurs.

My interest in the Congo and the Belgian King's connection with that State is not personal further than that I am a citizen of the United States and am pledged, like every other citizen of the United States to superintend that King as foreman and superintendent of that property. Thirteen Christian nations stand pledged like our own. The thirteen are responsible for that King's good conduct, for his humane conduct; we are all officially committed to see that King Leopold does his righteous duty in the Congo State, or, if he falls short of his duty, to call him to strict account.

By the arrangement in 1884 at Berlin the Christian powers gave the well-being of the Congo State into the hands of the International Association and charged that association with a couple of very important responsibilities. The association was required to protect the natives from harm and to advance their well-being in various ways; also it was charged with the duty of seeing that the several Christian states have freedom of trade in the Congo State.

The King of the Belgians has taken over the whole property; he is acting as an absolute sovereign in that State. He has over-ridden all the restrictions put upon at Berlin in 1884, and by the conference of Brussels in 1890. He has thus, in taking over this vast State, which is twice as large as the German Empire, very rich and very populous before he began his devastation, robberies and massacres of the natives, taken upon himself all the responsibilities which were placed upon the International Association. By the terms of the two conventions it is not only the privilege of those Christian powers to call him to account, but it is their duty to do this—a duty which they solemnly assumed, and which they are neglecting.

The responsibility of the United States may be said to take first place, because we were the first of the nations to recognize the Congo flag, which was done by a Presidential order in 1884. We occupied the office of midwife to the Congo State and brought it into the world.

But we are not any more responsible than are the other powers. There should be a concert of action between them. That concert will be brought about in due time; the movement is on foot on the other side of the water and is making progress, particularly in England, where the Government is becoming more and more interested in the matter, and where the people are strongly stirred and are giving voice to their outraged feelings.

The outlook is that England will presently invite the other powers to join her in demanding a searching inquiry into Leopold's performance, this inquiry to be conducted by a commission, not appointed by him as was the late one, but by themselves. We shall need to take a hand in this righteous proceeding, and it is not likely that we shall be backward about it.

The packed commission appointed by Leopold finished its work and prepared its report many months ago. It was made as mild as possible, but it was nevertheless not the sort of report which the King wanted to spread before the civilized nations. He kept it back several months and issued it lately, and with very proper reluctance.

There is a matter connected with that report history which had a good deal of significance at the time. I speak of the suicide of the chief Congo official, a governor-general or something like that. That man had been representing the King a good many years; his treatment of the natives had been merciless; he harried them with the torch and the sword; he robbed and burned right and left; he was bitterly hated, not by the natives only but by the whites. He read the report of the commission in its original shape there on the Congo before Leopold had had an opportunity to blue-pencil it.

Late that night two white men, one of whom was an Englishman of high character and position, occupied a room next to the Governor-General's. They heard a peculiar noise, and one of them said to the other: "Something is happening in that room."

They went in there and found the Governor-General gasping out his life with his throat cut. The noise they had heard was the streaming of his blood upon the floor. His last act had been the writing of a note of a rather impressive character. I cannot quote its language, but in substance it was to this effect:

"I cannot stand up against that report, yet I can only say in all sincerity that everything I have done was by command of the King himself."

That note was brought away, and is now in the possession of that Englishman. I have these facts from an American missionary who was on the spot at the time, and who vouches for their authenticity.

The King has not mended the condition of things in the Congo since he blue-pencilled that report and issued it. The atrocities go on just as before, and the world must expect them to continue until the Christian powers shall exercise the right which they have reserved to themselves at Berlin and Brussels to put an end to them.

The pamphlet which I lately issued contains a small part of the twenty-year accumulation of evidence against King Leopold, and this evidence is of an authority which cannot be disputed. It comes from English officials, Belgian officials, and from American missionaries of unimpeachable character. I intend that the pamphlet shall go into the hands of every clergyman in America, and this purpose will be carried out. We have eighty millions of people who will speak, and speak audibly, when they find out the infamies that are being perpetrated in the Congo, and that our whole nation has a personal interest in the matter and is under written engagement to look after it.

Note: Hawkins again points out that Sam once more mistakenly assumed the U.S. had ratified the Berlin Act of 1885, which he put forth as America's supposed legal obligation. Sam was optimistic about action against King Leopold, and believed the U.S. would "take a hand" [162-3].

Fanny Hallock Carpenter (Mrs. Philip Carpenter) wrote from NYC to Sam, enclosing her 1901 "translation" of "Extracts from Eve's Diary"—some 24 half-pages typed.

Elizabeth Jenks Comfort wrote from Monte Carlo to ask Sam for his autograph for her "very clever little Anglo-American grandson" [MTP].

F.P. Jones wrote birthday congratulations to Sam [MTP].

W. Gillison and Theo Williams (two undergraduates at Cambridge, England) wrote to Sam with "how delighted" they were by "Eve's Diary" [MTP].

Merrill Tiliston wrote from the Hotel Newberry, Chicago to ask Sam's "sanction in the use of the words / 'By permission Mark Twain' painted upon the coffin box of that Buffalo Express graveyard skit..." [MTP]. Note: on the bottom: "Mr. Clemens would rather he would not use it—makes him a party & he would rather word it." See ca. Dec. 6 for Sam's reply, which allows three days postal time Chicago to N.Y.

December 3 or 10 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Andrew Carnegie.

"Dear St. Andrew: / I don't know for sure that you got my telephone message the other day, but it doesn't matter—I'm coming, the 18th anyway, with a nightshirt / Ys Ever / Mark †" [MTP]. Note: this letter # 08592 was found in the Fragments file and determined to be on a Sunday before Monday, Dec. 18, 1905, when Sam spoke for Russian Jews in NYC. No other year fits. Also, Carnegie inscribed his book for Clemens on Dec. 16. See entries.

December 4 Monday – Mrs. L.C.U. Bramhall wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam, noting they shared the same birthday, and asking about Susan Crane and "all the familiar faces of old" that she knew in Elmira some 30 years before. On or just after this day Sam replied, "Not seen Mrs. Crane lately, but a letter addressed to her at Q.F. will find her" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. Clemens went down to the Harpers today and came home with the news that Col. Harvey would be glad if I would go to Delmonico's tomorrow evening in time for the speeches, and I'm afraid to breathe lest I find the permission be nothing more than a thistle-down of a thought to float way into air" [MTP TS 111]. Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: "Dr. Parkhurst—4.45 / Miss Clemens/Charlton 3:54" [MTP TS 36]. Note: Loudon Charlton, concert manager Carnegie Hall.

Anne Ashley, "a little girl that called on you last summer at Norfolk, Conn." wrote birthday wishes [MTP].

Robert Bacon wrote seeking more information on the Congo situation from England: "If you could tell us some time just what has been done in times past by England, and how, it would help us a great deal in deciding what we might to most effectively" [Hawkins 163; MTP]. See Nov. 27 (Hawkins), Nov. 28, Dec. 6 to Bacon.

Maurice Ernst wrote from Vienna. Congratulations and how did Sam get his nom de plume? [MTP]. Note: on Dec. 15 Sam replied; MTP had his reply to "an unnamed correspondent," who now is likely named.

Seth Low wrote birthday congrats to Sam and offered a humorous story about Daniel Webster in England—A man thought Webster was the jumping frog, not the famous Mass. senator! [MTP].

Coggeshall Macy wrote from Vienna to praise "Eve's Diary" in the Christmas Harper's [MTP].

Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart wrote from NYC to Sam, that tomorrow evening she was gathering with friends to "do you honor" [MTP].

Sam wrote a paragraph in the front pastedown endpaper of A Humble Romance, and Other Stories (1887), by Mary Eleanor Freeman (1852-1930). Livy had crudely signed the book and the ink did not stick to the paper, so was barely legible.

Dec. 4, 1905. She has been in her grave a year & a half to-morrow. She probably made that attempt with that annoying pen eighteen years ago when she was 42 & looked ten years younger. I know she did not lose her temper, but kept it & her sweet dignity unimpaired. If I was present I probably laughed, for we had no cares then—I could cry easier now. It is many years since I have seen this book. Susy was 15 then; she is gone, these nine years & more. I have just closed my seventieth year [Gribben 245].

December 5 Tuesday – In New York City Sam wrote a short note to Helen Keller:

It is a lovely letter, dear Helen, & I thank you from my heart for it Remain an optimist just as long as you can, dear! I would not abridge the term by a single day. But as for me—ah, that is different!

Do please give my love to Mr. & Mrs. Macy. / Always affectionately...[MTP: Cushman file]. Note: John Albert Macy (1877-1932), author, critic, poet.

Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: "Call up Mrs. Loomis / Birthday Dinner [MTP TS 36].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens's seventieth celebration today, tonight at Delmonico's. The preparations have been colossal, but Colonel Harvey has proved himself the man of parts that he is. Mr. Twichell arrived and he and Mr. Clemens and Clara Cl. started off at seven o'clock. Mr. Clemens thought I was going too, to sit in the reception room and "enjoy the solitude" until speech time. That was the reason why he called out to me as he passed my door—"Clara's just about ready!" [MTP TS 111-112].

Note: Trombley writes of this as a perceived slight to Isabel Lyon and calls this entry "bitter": At what point Isabel would be allowed to arrive during the festivities was apparently a very sensitive point of etiquette for Clara, who was opposed to her coming at all. Isabel hoped to be allowed to sit quietly in the public reception room until "speech time"; however, it was deemed socially inappropriate for Isabel to enter Delmonico's with the Clemenses. She could only arrive later, alone, when the ceremonial part of the evening was about to commence. Isabel was furious at Clara over the slight, and she despaired that her time at such a socially prestigious event would be so limited. She bitterly noted in her journal that Twain thought she would be accompanying him to make an entrance: "That was the reason ... " [see rest in IVL journal above].

CELEBRATE MARK TWAIN'S SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY

Fellow-Workers in Fiction Dine with Him at Delmonico's.

HEAR WHY HE LIVED SO LONG

And How They, if They Resemble Him,
May Reach Seventy, Too—Roosevelt Sends Congratulations.

Mark Twain, the greatest of living humorists and the uncrowned king of American letters, whose standing joke among his intimate friends is the pretension that his real name is Samuel Langhorne Clemens, celebrated his seventieth birthday last night. Or perhaps it would be more proper to say that others did it for him, Mark Twain himself being too busy making a speech.

There were 170 of his friends and fellow-craftsmen in literature gathered in the Red Room at Delmonico's for the celebration. Barring a half dozen or so, all were guaranteed to be genuine creators of imaginative writings—or illustrators of such writings. The guarantee was furnished by Col. George Harvey, editor of The North American Review, who was the host of the evening as well as the Chairman.

Even the presence as the guest of honor of the world's foremost fun maker could not drive away the serious reflection that never before in the annals of this country had such a representative gathering of literary men and women been seen under one roof. There were representative in every conceivable respect—even geographically. There was no corner of this country with a literary crop of its own that did not have at least one favorite son—or daughter—present. The Far North and the extreme South, the New England States, and the Pacific slope—all sent delegates.

Many Women There.

A particular feature of the dinner was the strength of the feminine contingent. There were fully as many women there as men, and they were no present as mere appendages of their husbands, but as individuals representing the art of imaginative writing no less than the men. An observer looking over the host of diners, after having scanned the list of guests and noticed that every feminine name in it was familiar to all readers, could not but wonder that the women he found corresponding to those names were all young and pretty. The whole gathering did not seem to include half a dozen women with streaks of gray in their hair.

All—men as well as women—showed by word and manner and act that they looked upon the chief guest as the master. The greeting when he rose to speak was one which might have tickled the vanity of the vainest of political adventurers. No one thought of measuring the duration of the applause and cheering, however, because everybody, including the reporters, were too busy swelling the volume of that ovation.

Unintroduced, as it seemed most befitting, Mr. Clemens rose to respond to the toast proposed to him by his fellow veteran in the literary service, William Dean Howells. It would be difficult to pick a more critical audience—and yet as the great humorist talked on in his characteristic, inimitable drawl, the men and women present laughed until their laughter turned into groans. Yet a strain of melancholy ran perceptibly through the speaker's sentences. Toward the end it gained predominance, and the last words were spoken with a voice quivering with emotion.

To those who listened, the man appeared younger than ever, and when he pretended to look down upon really old men with scorn, his attitude was thought more than a clever conceit. The character of the occasion caused Mr. Clemens to hark back to other birthdays, of which he admitted having had a great many. And his reminiscences concerned, in particular, the first of them all. Between this and the last one, so far he drew an inferred comparison, the comparison was entirely in favor of the seventieth.

His First Birthday.

"I remember that first birthday well," he began. "Whenever I think of it, it is with indignation. Everything was so crude, so unaesthetic. Nothing was really ready. I was born, you know, with a high and delicate aesthetic taste. And then think of—I had no hair, no teeth, no clothes. And I had to go to my first banquet like that.

"And everybody came swarming in. It was the merest little hamlet in the backwoods of Missouri, where never anything happened at all. All interest centered on me that day. They came with that peculiar provincial curiosity to look me over and to see if I had brought anything fresh in my particular line. Why, I was the only thing that had happened in the last three months—and I came very near being the only thing that happened there in two whole years.

"They gave their opinions. No one had asked them, but they gave them, and they were all just green with prejudice. I stood it as long as—well, you know, I was born courteous. I stood it for about an hour. Then the worm turned. I was the worm. It was my turn to turn, and I did turn. I knew the strength of my position. I knew that I was the only spotlessly pure person in that camp, and I just came out and told them so.

"It was so true that they could make no answer at all. They merely blushed and went away. Well, that was my cradle song, and now I am singing my swan song. It is a far stretch from that first birthday to this, the seventieth. Just think of it!

Twain Recipe for Long Life.

"The seventieth birthday! It is the time of life when you arrive at a new and awful dignity; when you may throw aside the decent reserves which have oppressed you for a generation, and stand unafraid and unabashed upon your seven-terraced summit and look down and teach—unrebuked. You can tell the world how you got there. It is what they all do. I have been anxious to explain my own system this long time, and now at last I have the right.

"I have achieved my seventy years in the usual way: by sticking strictly to a scheme of life which would kill anybody else. It sounds like an exaggeration, but that is really the common rule for attaining old age. When we examine the programme of any of these garrulous old people we always find that the habits which have preserved them would have decayed us. I will offer here, as a sound maxim this: that we can't reach old age by another man's road.

"I will now teach, offering my way of life to whomsoever desires to commit suicide by scheme which has enabled me to beat the doctor and the hangman for seventy years. Some of the details may sound untrue, but they are not. I am not here to deceive. I am here to teach.

He Goes to Bed Sometimes.

"We have no permanent habits until we are 40. Then they begin to harden, presently they petrify, then business begins. Since 40 I have been regular about going to bed and getting up—and that is one of the main things. I have made it a rule to go to bed when there wasn't anybody left to sit up with; and I have made it a rule to get up when I had to. This has resulted in an unswerving regularity of irregularity.

"In the matter of diet—which is another main thing—I have been persistently strict in sticking to the things which didn't agree with me until one or the other got the best of it myself. But last Spring I stopped frolicking with mince pie after midnight; up to then I had always believed it wasn't loaded. For thirty years I have taken coffee and bread at 8 in the morning, and no bite nor sup till 7:30 in the evening. Eleven hours. That is all right for me. Headachy people would not reach 70 comfortably by that road. And I wish to urge upon you this—which I think is wisdom—that if you find you can't make 70 by any but an uncomfortable road, don't you go. When they take off the Pullman and retire you to the rancid smoker, put on your things, count your checks, and get out at the first way station where there's a cemetery.

And Smokes in Bed.

"I have made it a rule never to smoke more than one cigar at a time. I have no other restriction as regards smoking. I do not know just when I began to smoke, I only know that it was in my father's lifetime, and that I was discreet. He passed from this life early in 1847, when I was a shade past 11; ever since then I have smoked publicly. As an example to others, and not that I care for moderation myself, it has always been my rule never to smoke when asleep and never to refrain when awake.

"I smoke in bed until I have to go to sleep; I wake up in the night, sometimes once, sometimes twice, sometimes three times, and I never waste any of these opportunities to smoke. This habit is so old and dear and precious to me that if I should break it I should feel as you, Sir, would feel if you should lose the only moral you've got. Meaning the Chairman. If you've got one; I am making no charge. I will grant, here, that I have stopped smoking, now and then, for a few months at a time, but it was not on principle—it was only to show off; it was to pulverize those critics who said I was a slave to my habits and couldn't break my bonds.

"Today it is all of sixty years since I began to smoke the limit. I have never bought cigars with life belts around them. I early found that those were too expensive for me. I have always bought cheap cigars—reasonably cheap, at any rate. Sixty years ago they cost me $4 a barrel, but my taste has improved laterly, and I pay $7 now. Six or seven. Seven, I think. Yes; it's seven. But that includes the barrel. I often have smoking parties at my house, but the people that come have always just taken the pledge. I wonder why that is?

Raised on 9 Barrels of Cod Liver Oil.

"As for drinking, I have no rule about that. When the others drink I like to help; otherwise I remain dry, by habit and preference. This dryness does not hurt me, but it could easily hurt you, because you are different. You let it alone.

"Since I was 7 years old I have seldom taken a dose of medicine, and have still seldomer needed one. But up to 7 I have lived exclusively on allopathic medicines. Not that I needed them, for I don't think I did; it was for economy. My father took a drug store for a debt, and it made cod liver oil cheaper than other breakfast foods. We had nine barrels of it, and it lasted me seven years. Then I was weaned. The rest of the family had to get along with rhubarb and ipecac and such things, because I was the pet. I was the first Standard Oil Trust. I had it all. By the time the drug store was exhausted my health was established, and there has never been much the matter with me since.

Never Exercised.

"I have never taken any exercise, except sleeping and resting, and I never intend to take any. Exercise is loathsome. And it cannot be any benefit when you are tired; I was always tired.

"I desire now to repeat and emphasize that maxim: We can't reach old age by another man's road. My habits protect my life, but they would assassinate you.

"I have lived a severely moral life. But it would be a mistake for other people to try that, or for me to recommend it. Very few would succeed: you have to have a perfectly colossal stock of morals; and you can't get them on a margin. Morals are an acquirement—like music, like a foreign language, like piety, poker, paralysis—no man is born with them. I wasn't myself. I started poor. I hadn't a single moral. There is hardly a man in this house that is poorer than I was then. Yes, I started like that—the world before me, not a moral in the slot. Not even an insurance moral.

His First Moral.

"I can remember the first one I ever got. I can remember the landscape, the weather, the—I can remember how everything looked. It was an old moral, an old second-hand moral, all out of repair, and didn't fit, anyway. But if you are careful with a thing like that, and keep it in a dry place, and save it for processions, and Chautauquas, and World's Fairs and so on, and disinfect it now and then, and give it a fresh coat of whitewash once in a while, you will be surprised to see how well she will last and how long she will keep sweet, or at least inoffensive. When I got that moldy old moral she had stopped growing, because she hadn't any exercise, but I worked her hard, I worked her Sundays and all. Under this cultivation she waxed in might and stature beyond belief, and served me well and was my pride and joy for sixty-three years; then she got to associating with insurance Presidents, and lost flesh and character, and was a sorrow to look at and no longer competent for business. She was a great loss to me.

"Yet not all loss. I sold her—ah, pathetic skeleton, as she was!—I sold her to Leopold, the pirate King of Belgium; he sold her to our Metropolitan Museum, and it was very glad to get her, for without a rag on, she stands fifty-seven feet long and sixteen feet high, and they think she's a brontosaur. Well, she looks it. They believe it will take nineteen geological periods to breed her match.

Joys of Being Moral.

"Morals are of inestimable value, for every man is born crammed with sin microbes, and the only thing that can extirpate these sin microbes is morals. Now you take a sterilized Christian—I mean, you take the sterilized Christian, for there's only one—Dear Sir, I wish you wouldn't look at me like that.

"Threescore years and ten!

"It is the Scriptural statute of limitations. After that you owe no active duties; for you the strenuous life is over. You are a time-expired man, to use Kipling's military phrase. You have served your term, well or less well, and you are mustered out.

"The Previous Engagement plea, which in forty years has cost you so many twinges, you can lay aside forever; on this side of the grave you will never need it again. If you shrink at thought of night, and winter, and the late homecoming from the banquet and the lights and the laughter, through the deserted streets—a desolation which would not remind you now, as for a generation it did, that your friends are sleeping, and you must creep in a-tiptoe and not disturb them, but would only remind you that you need not tiptoe, you can never disturb them more—if you shrink at thought of these things, you need only reply:

"Your invitation honors me, and pleases me because you still keep me in your remembrance, but I am seventy; seventy, and would nestle in the chimney corner, and smoke my pipe, and read my book, and take my rest, wishing you well in all affection, and that when you in your turn shall arrive at pier No. 70 you may step aboard your waiting ship with a reconciled spirit, and lay your course toward the sinking sun with a contented heart."

Guest of Honor Led to Dinner.

The dinner began at 8 o'clock. Soon before that hour the guests began to gather in the parlor adjoining the Red Room. In the corridor outside, place had been prepared for an orchestra of forty directed by Nahan Franko. When the march, serving as a signal for the procession to the dining room, was played, Mr. Clemens led the way, with Mrs. Mary E. Wilkins Freeman on his arm.

The couples that followed would have attracted attention wherever they were seen and recognized. Col. Harvey led Princess Troubetzkoy, who once was Amelia Rives and still writes under that name. Andrew Carnegie and Agnes Repplier, the essayist, followed side by side.

After them came John Burroughs and Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, who was the first author from whom Henry Mills Alden received a contribution after becoming editor of Harper's Monthly, more than forty years ago. The Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke escorted Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, while Bliss Carman, the poet, led Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart.

While the dinner was in progress the guests—one table at a time—went out into another room and had their pictures taken in groups. The pictures will form the most conspicuous feature of an album which is to be given to Mr. Clemens as a souvenir of the occasion.

Souvenirs Plaster Busts.

The menu was printed with a circle of pen-and-ink sketches by Leon Barritt, showing the guest of honor at the successive stages of his long and varied career—as a printer, as Mississippi pilot, as gold miner in the far West, as editor in the same adventurous region, as world traveler, and, finally, as a lecturer pronouncing to empty benches the maxim: "Be good and you will be lonesome."

Toward the end of the dinner the souvenirs were brought in. They were plaster of paris busts about a foot high and excellently modeled. When the distribution had been completed, there were just 171 Mark Twains in the room, including the original.

Col. Harvey's first act as toastmaster of the evening was to call on Miss Cutting, President of Vassar College Alumni Association to read this letter which had been received from President Roosevelt:

The President's Letter.

Nov. 28, 1905

My Dear Col. Harvey: I wish it were in my power to be at the dinner held to celebrate the seventieth birthday of Mark Twain—it is difficult to write of him by his real name instead of by that name which has become a household word wherever the English language is spoken. He is one of the citizens whom all Americans should delight to honor, for he has rendered a great and peculiar service to America, and his writings, though such as no one but an American could have written, yet emphatically come within that small list which are written for no particular country, but for all countries, and which are not merely written for the time being, but have an abiding and permanent value. May he live long, and year by year may he add to the sum of admirable work that he has done. Sincerely yours, THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The reading of the letter was the cause of prolonged applause.

Howells Toasts Twain.

Col. Harvey called next on William Dean Howells as "the person in all the world best fitted to propose the health of the guest of the evening." Previously Col. Harvey had referred to Mr. Clemens as a man "who first of all had the friendship of the whole world, and thin in a peculiar degree the friendship of the few." He made special mention of Henry H. Rogers and the Rev. Joseph H. Twitchell as two of Mr. Clemens's most intimate friends, who although not men of letters were present and occupied seats at the table with the principal guest.

Mr. Howells declared that the thought of Mark Twain always threw him into poetic ecstasy, and whenever he had to make a speech in honor of the humorist it seemed to shape itself naturally in to meter and rhyme. This was the case three years ago, he said, when Mr. Clemens was a comparatively young man of 67.

"Then I composed what I called a 'double-barreled sonnet,' " Mr. Howells explained. "This time, thinking of the Psalmist's age limit, I wanted to try a Psalm, but this time, too, I had to fall back on the Shakespearean sonnet. But please notice that the sonnet is twice as long as Shakespeare used to make them, and for good reason.

"Shakespeare, you know, has been improved upon since he died. Nowadays Shaw is writing plays that are twice as good as those of Shakespeare, and I am writing sonnets twice as long as his."

Mr. Howells then read his sonnet, which after comparing the effect of the American joke on a traveler from the Old World with that made by a skyscraper, ended with this sextet:

The lame dance with delight in me; my mirth
Reaches the deaf untrumpeted; the blind
My point can see. I jolly the whole earth,
But most I love to jolly my own kind.
Joke of a people great, gay, bold, and free,
I type their master-mood. Mark Twain made me.

England Sends Greetings.

After the uproar which followed the completion of Mark Twain's reply to the toast given by Mr. Howells had died out, Col. Harvey read this cablegram, received from London:

The undersigned send Mark Twain heartiest greetings on his seventieth birthday and cordially wish him long life and prosperity:

Sir William Anson, T. Anstey Guthrie, (F. Anstey,) Alfred Austin, Poet Laureate; the Right Hon. Arthur Balfour, J. M. Barrie, Augustine Birrell, K. T.; the Right Hon. James Bryce, Sir Francis Burnand, editor of Punch; Gilbert Chesterton, Churton Collins, W. L. Courteney, Austin Dobson, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, W. S. Gilbert, Edmund Gosse, Francis Carruthers Gould, Thomas Hardy, Anthony Hope, W. W. Jacobs, Rudyard Kipling, Ian Maclaren, (the Rev. John Watson,) W. H. Mallock, George Meredith, Henry Norman, M. P.; Sir Gilbert Parker, Sir John Tenniel, the illustrator; Sir George Otto Trevelyan, historian; Mrs. Humphry Ward, William Watson, Theodore Watts Dunton, Israel Zangwill, Tauchnitz.

More Poetic Tributes.

Letters of regret were read from Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and Joel Chandler Harris, both of whom had planned to be present. Dr. Mitchell ended his message of felicitation with the quatrain in honor of the chief guest:

So large the joy your pen has given,
To match it one might try in vain,
But what one man could never do
Is easily done by Twain.

[Insert by Carlo de Fornaro (1871-1949) Italian caricaturist, and guest.]

Among others who read or sent greetings in rhyme were Amelia E. Barr, Wilbur D. Nesbit, Virginia Frazer Boyle, John Kendrick Bangs, and Henry van Dyke.

Tale the Others Told.

Prof. Brander Matthews, Andrew Carnegie, George W. Cable, Richard Watson Gilder, Rex E. Beach, and Irving Bacheller were among the other speakers. Mr. Carnegie won great applause with his Scotch drolleries. He extolled Mr. Clemens for his sincerity, and said he was a lion of his day.

George W. Cable recalled days more than twenty years ago when he and Mark Twain were on the Mississippi together. He told many anecdotes that were new and interesting. He told of a mutual friend who, on meeting Mark Twain for the first time, had prepared something "nice and appropriate" to say when he shook hands with the humorist. This friend had read all his works, but the only one he could recall, when it came to shaking hands, was his "heathen Chinee," so he quoted it at length.

Hamilton W. Mabie said that Mark Twain had written a biography, or an autobiography, of Adam and Eve and every other person of Scriptural or historic fame. Mr. Mabie thought his masterpiece was yet to come and it should be called "The Diary of the Devil." At this, Mark Twain doubled up over the nearest bust of himself.

Here is the list of guests in full:

Joseph Altsheiler, George Ade, Henry M. Alden, Mrs. Henry M. Alden, Frances H. Burnett, T. Buchanan, Nancy H. Banks, Margaret P. Black, Josephine D. Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to advise Sam that Justice Stover of the NY Supreme Court had decided this day to uphold the Plasmon Co. of America's election held Sept. 1, 1904, but that the Butters contingent, as holding the majority of stock, should have been allowed to take charge on Apr. 27, 1905 at that meeting.

Everything we did from Sept. 1, 1904, to April 27, 1905, is again declared legal this time by the State Court, as it was last August by the U.S. Court....This last decision strengthens our position VERY MATERIALLY...that anything that the Butters crowd did from Sept. 1 st to April 27th, (such as the burgarlizing of the Company's offices and the wrecking of its business by illegitimate bankruptcy proceedings) is illegal, and therefore actionable [MTP].

Amelia Edith Huttleston Barr wrote Sam birthday wishes. This note dated Dec. 5 and enclosed in Barr to Harvey of Nov. 17 [MTP].

Mrs. Cornelia V. Blackman wrote from Galena, Kans. to relate how funny an interview of Sam was [MTP].

James Bertram for Andrew Carnegie wrote to advise Sam that Carnegie was “just off to Boston...his telephone number is 1601—79th Street. He notes yours” [MTP].

Oscar W. Krecher wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: the letter could not be found at the MTP but is in their catalog.

The following persons also sent various birthday congratulations to Clemens on Dec. 5:

Charles W. Baker, Jr. a young boy, wrote.

The Bohemian Club sent a telegram

Oscar W. Brecher, same birthday as Clemens, wrote from Chicago.

Milt Goodkind wrote on Leslie’s Weekly and Judge letterhead, NY to offer congratulations.

Francis P. Kinnicutt, NYC wrote.

Caroline B. Le Row wrote.

Philip Verrill Mighels, NYC wrote & sent a sagebrush sprig.

Mr. & Mrs. Jordan Mott and Mr. & Mrs.

Youle sent a telegram.

William Murray wrote to Sam pasting a clipping on his 70th.

Howard Pyle though having never met Sam, wrote from Wilmington, Del. in praise of “Eve’s Diary” and 70th wishes to Sam.

Gus Solomon wrote.

George Standring wrote.

Theodore Weld Stanton wrote.

Louis Tracy sent a telegram and also wrote.

Henry Van Dyke wrote.

December 6 Wednesday – Sam attended “a part of Hansel and Gretel,” a play based on Grimm’s fairy tale, performed at the Metropolitan Opera House, Alfred Hertz conducting the performance of the opera written by Engelbert Humperdinck (1854-1921). Isabel Lyon recorded that he enjoyed the opera, but at George Harvey’s insistence left early so as not to become overtired [Gribben 341: Lyon’s journal TS 112: MTP]. Note: the N.Y. Times, Dec. 7, p.9 “Haensel Und Gretel Again” noted that “Among conspicuous figures in the audience last evening was Mark Twain.”

At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to Robert Bacon (Dec. 4), Asst. Secretary of State, who had been seeking information on England’s actions on the Congo situation:

I am very glad. I shall take measures at once to get that information. It is my impression that England asked our Government some time ago to join her in a move, but I will inquire, & find out what this impression is based upon.

When I returned from Washington I set on foot (privately) an inquiry into the present English attitude. Answers will come in due time. I hope it is true that John Morley is of the new cabinet; he is a Congo-Reformer. I imagine it goes without saying that Bryce is one, also. These are friends of mine—so also is Campbell-Bannerman [MTP].

Hawkins writes that the above letter shows that Sam “faltered” when pressed for English information on the Congo situation, and “fell back on name-dropping and inappropriate humor....He signed the letter, “S.L. Clemens (oldest person in America)” [163-4].

Sam also wrote to Andrew Carnegie.

Dear St. Andrew: / Any one of those dates will do for me. Will you name it.

Your speech strongly moved me last night. They were welcome words to me.

By the way—an incident. Harvey's remarks set you to guessing as to whom he was referring to, and it turned out to be you. Then right away you set 3 of us to guessing (my daughter and my secretary and me), as to whom my "lion" would turn out to be. The fact secretaries bristle up and have the road against strangers, after the matter of lions, and my secretary being Miss Lyon—do you see? She was there, by kindness of the Colonel, to watch over my daughter, who is not very well.

Oh, it was a grand night, Saint Andrew, and I was glad I was invited. / Yours ever, / Mark [MTP: Cyril Clemens, Mark Twain: The Letter Writer, 1932 p.107].

A form letter was sent to various people who had honored Sam on his birthday:

To you, & to all my other known & unknown friends who have lightened the weight of my seventieth birthday with kind words & good wishes I offer my most grateful thanks, & beg leave to sign myself

Your & their obliged friend
Mark Twain

New York, Dec. 6, 1905

Sam added sentiments to many. The following for this Dec. 6 form letter survive, along with Sam's added notes:

Moncure D. Conway: "You, 'worthy to be there? Certainly there could not be any worthier; but Harvey said he would invite no writers but fiction-writers. SLC"

Edwin T. Evans and Josephine Evans: "It was dear & good of you to remember Eve, & I send you my love."

Mr. [Milton] Goodkind: "It is sound advice, Mr. Goodkind, & I will follow it."

Miss Rabie Hart in London, England: "Indeed I am very proud of that compliment: 'The Gospel according to St. Mark'"

Mr. Ingram: "Oh no, bless you, I love them well, but I am very old & twice as lazy, & shall never do any work again except under compulsion of hunger & cold."

Helen Keller: "It is a lovely letter, dear Helen & I thank you from my heart for it. / Remain an optimist just as long as you can, dear! I would not abridge the term by a single day. But as for me—ah, that is different! / Do please give my love to Mr. & Mrs. Macy."

Seth Low: "Dear Mr. Low, that situation was just too delicious! I wish I could have been there."

John Y. MacAlister:

But dear Mac Alister you did not enclose that quaint letter.

Indeed I wish Clara could go over there, but I don't think I could spare her—there's but a few of us now, & we have to stick close together.

No, you come to us at the end of May (Dublin, N.H.). There's a spare room & it is charming there in the woods & the hills. Say you will!

The cheque for £700 Plasmon came—thanks.

Dublin will set you up!

Hélène Elisabeth Picard: "For many days I have put in my whole time signing 'Mark Twain' to these cards...With my warmest regards, S.L.C., C.S."

Mrs. Morison: "And may I find you next time I arrive Dear Mrs. Morison. S L C"

Two to unidentified persons, no added comment [all MTP]. Note: Sam's note to Picard reveals that these were not all signed and sent on the printed date of Dec. 6.

Sam also wrote to Miss Emma C. Thursby, also likely an added note to the Dec. 6 form letter: "To you, & to all my other known & unknown friends who have lightened the weight of my seventieth birthday with kind words & good wishes I offer my most grateful thanks, & beg leave to sign myself / Your & their obliged friend / Mark Twain / New York, Dec. 6, 1905" [MTP].

Sam wrote to the Lyric Theatre, NYC, enclosing a card marked "Two for Fedora"—ordering seats [MTP: NY Times, Dec. 8, 1905, p.11].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens has just come in at 10:15 after dining with Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont and going to the opera to see a part of Hansel and Gretel. On coming up to find Jean, who had gone to bed, he stopped on the stairs to say that he had had a beautiful time. Mr. Belmont he likes ever so much, he finds him a man of fine principles and the table talk was good, very good. "Mrs. Belmont is something of a fool, but she has her good parts." And the opera was lovely. Col. Harvey made him leave before he wanted to, made him come home to rest after the fatigues of wonderful last night, and as he stood on the stairs in the soft half light, he looked the beautiful "Hero-Saint" that Mr. Carnegie claimed him to be in a letter today [MTP TS 112]. Note: Perry Belmont (1851-1947), American attorney, politician and diplomat, Democrat congressman (1881-1889), U.S. Ambassador to Spain (1889). In 1899, after 17 years of marriage, Jessie Ann Robbins divorced Henry T. Sloane to marry Perry Belmont. The marriage occurred 5 hours after the divorce was decreed—at that time considered scandalous. Perhaps at any time. See Insert for Metropolitan Opera House Ad.

Lucy Page Whitehead wrote from Washington, D.C. to Sam adding her congratulations on his 70th and asking if she might "not hope for the pleasure of entertaining" him next spring [MTP]. Note: allowing a day for mail to N.Y., Sam's reply through Lyon would have been on or after Dec. 7

Albert L. Wilson wrote from Kansas City, Kans. to offer congratulations [MTP].

Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote from Boston "sorry not to hear your blithe speech last night" [MTP].

B. (no further identification) wrote a rather strange letter about some pharmaceutical he claimed "unique" that he had sent samples to clergy, including Twichell. He does not ask anything specific [MTP].

Moncure D. Conway wrote "good wishes" to Sam [MTP].

Elizabeth B. Custer wrote congratulations to Sam [MTP].

W.A. Darrow wrote congratulations from Phila. [MTP].

Paris R. Forman wrote congratulations, Merry Xmas, Happy New Year [MTP].

Sarah G.H. (K?) Goetchius wrote to Sam, hardly believing he was 70; she knew him when he was 40 [MTP].

John Y.W. MacAlister wrote to Sam. "I find I overlooked the enclosed enclosure; evidently the more hastie the less speed; but I forgot you detest puns, and will go slow in the future" [MTP]. Note: an enclosure by Mrs. R.L. Hastie, makes the pun.

W.S. Morrow wrote congratulations to Sam [MTP].

William Golden Mortimer, M.D. wrote to Sam sending a copy of his book: Pem: History of Coca, etc. (1901). He mentioned old times in Calif. and the Jumping Frog book. He praised "Eve's Diary" [MTP]. See Gribben p.488 for more on Mortimer's book.

George H. Picard wrote to Sam, regretting he was unable to attend the party [MTP].

Robert Reid wrote congratulations to "Dear St. Mark", drawing a nice picture of sam with a halo, and declining the invitation:

"Thank you just the same—but I'd rather a thousand times have that little letter of yours than be 'amongst those present' at the Col's dinner—& this isn't sour grapes either. Though I do wish it had been a [illegible word] opene cat-fight. / Yours forever with everything" [MTP]. Note: Reid was not invited to Sam's birthday banquet; see IVL journal entry of Dec. 7. Insert of Reid's sketch below.

Johnson Stewart wrote from Toronto, Canada to Sam, reacting with tongue-in-cheek to the account of his 70th party that ran in the Mail and Empire that morning. He recalled seeing Twain in the "company of a disreputable party named Toole in London" a few years before. Stewart hoped Sam lived to be 165 [MTP].

E. Thorne wrote congratulations to Sam [MTP].

Louise Waring wrote "Belated congratulations" to Sam [MTP].

Frederick W. Webber wrote from NYC to congratulate Sam [MTP].

Lucy Page Whitehead wrote from Wash, D.C. to congratulate Sam [MTP].

Albert L. Wilson wrote from Kansas City, Mo. to congratulate Sam on his 70th. He wrote that on Feb. 18, 1888 they named their only son "Mark Twain" in his honor [MTP]. Note: allowing 2-3 days mail to N.Y., Sam's reply through Lyon is given as ca. Mon. Dec. 11.

December 6 ca. – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to the Dec. 3 request from Merrill Tilston. [MTP]. Note: MTP catalogs Sam's reply as "on or after 3 Dec." Three days estimated postal time is allowed here, giving ca. Dec. 6.

December 7 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

Dear Mrs. Rogers: / I walked out to your home this afternoon, hoping & expecting to see you, & was sorry to learn that you were not feeling well, & not seeing people. The footman offered to report my name & see if you would make an exception in my favor, but I was afraid your goodheartedness might overreach your judgment, so I wouldn't let him do it.

My walk extended to the Broughtons & the Coes, but the day was so fine that they were all out. I meant to call on the Benjamins, but was interrupted by a friend, and before I could extricate myself from him I was clear down to 12th street again.

I met H. H. below the Park, flying toward 78th street, but he wouldn't halt. B'goshalmighty, I walked 74 blocks, twice over, & caught nobody. / With love, ... [MTP].

On or after Dec. 7 Lyon replied to Lucy Page Whitehead's Dec. 6 from Washington: "Be glad if he ever goes to Washington again to be entertained under her roof. Did not have time to hunt her up this last visit there only a short time & was overcrowded with the business he went to attend to" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today, this morning Mr. Clemens read me a very great poem by Mr. Gilder in the Times. It is a poem on this terrible massacring of Jews and peasants in Russia. Mr. Clemens said it was difficult to decide—you couldn't decide—if it was satire or not, unless you know your man. But, I think Mr. Gilder is in earnest. (Poem is a clipping in folder.) This afternoon Robert Reid came in to see Mr. Clemens. Oh, he is a large man. Stiff, in inflammatory rheumatism. As I entered the drawing room, he was preening before the long mirror. Later, Norman Hapgood came in. Both R.R. and Norman Hapgood were sore about not being invited to the banquet and Moncure D. Conway put his soreness into a pathetic, abused note. But Mr. Clemens said that "Conway has been dead for 5 years" [MTP TS 112].

E. Armstrong wrote from Chicago to Sam, a friendly letter of congratulations [MTP].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Miss Lyon. “Mr. Henry C. Davis would like to see Mr. Clemens sometime for a few minutes. I believe he wants to express his appreciation at being selected as Plasmon Chairman—or something of that sort” [MTP].

E.T. Bloxham wrote from Boonton, N.J. after reading “Eve’s Diary” in the current Harper’s. Did Sam simply mean to give “Eve’s Estimate of things general as she perceived them in the Garden”? or did he mean to “portray in a subtle and humorous manner the conception of the world as to the attitude of man towards woman, and vice versa”? On or just after this day In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam: “Mr Clemens wishes to say he thinks an examination of Eve’s character as set forth in the article will answer the question” [MTP].

Coincidentally, also from Boonton, N.J., H.W. Chetterling wrote to Sam discussing in their family the Dec. Harper’s article “Eve’s Diary.” They framed a question about Eve’s “understanding of inanimate things,” which, on or just after this day Isabel V. Lyon again replied for Sam: “Would answer the question with pleasure but does not understand it” [MTP].

Rebecca W.M. Colfelt wrote from Glen Loch, Pa. to congratulate Sam [MTP].

Joseph Esler wrote from Quincy, Ill. to Sam. “As an old time resident of your native city, Hannibal, Mo, and as a near neighbor at the present time, allow the writer, to heartily congratulate you on your passage of your 70th mile-stone” [MTP].

Mary E. Freeman wrote to apologize to Sam for leaving his birthday dinner “so abruptly, with only a hasty hand-shake, and not a word about my liking your brilliant speech” [MTP].

Joseph Homber wrote congratulations to Sam and sent a box of “Rutherford” Havana cigars [MTP].

W.B. Hosford, after reading an account of Sam’s 70th celebration, wrote from Mishikawa, Ind. to ask Sam if he’d known a “Bob” Clemens, an engineer on the Mississippi in 1860’s steamboating days [MTP]. Note: allowing 3 days mail delivery and a Sunday, Sam’s reply is put to ca. Dec. 11.

C. Milde wrote congratulations (in German) to Sam [MTP].

Wilbur F. Mills wrote from Pittsburg, Pa. to Sam after reading of the “Jollification Meeting” of his 70th [MTP].

F.W. Sedgwick wrote from Parma, Mich. to congratulate Sam [MTP].

Dihdwo Twe wrote to Sam, mistakenly addressing it to “Edward H. Clement”:

I was greatly disappointed that we did not get chance to talk over the Congo question when we met at Mr. Pearmain’s home last month. However I am preparing an article on the subject that I want to be published in the Harper Magazine. I shall send you the article when it is finished to have you look it over and push it through if it meet with your appreciation [MTP].

Henry Watterson wrote to Sam, wanting to see him before he left NYC. Could Sam see him for lunch this Sat or Sun at 1 p.m.? [MTP]. Note: at top in pencil “ansd by telephone”; on the left empty side, “Sunday”

On the Congo situation, Thomas Barbour wrote Edmund Morel about the Nov. 27 Twain-Roosevelt luncheon meeting. Twain believed if Roosevelt could have “quietly trustworthy assurance” that the British government was ready to act, that America would “follow suit.” Could Morel get such assurance? If so, Twain would see Roosevelt again [Hawkins 164].

December 8 Friday – Louise A. Howland (Robert Howland’s widow) wrote from Sausalito, Calif. to Sam, congratulating him on his 70th, asking for an “up to date photograph” and recalling the old says when she “knew and claimed Mark Twain—as one of her best friends” [MTP]. Note: estimated here one week, or ca. Dec. 15 for Sam’s reply.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Today Mr. Clemens took me down to the Produce Exchange Safety Vaults and made me his deputy there” [MTP TS 112].

Benjamin Arthur wrote to congratulate Sam [MTP].

Mrs. M.G. Cooney wrote from Rochester, NY to congratulate Sam [MTP].

Helen Keller wrote to Sam. “Your birthday will always be a Thanksgiving Day to me” [MTP].

Henry Moffat, M.D. wrote from NYC to congratulate Sam [MTP].

Abe Newburger wrote from Chicago to congratulate Sam [MTP].

William Winter wrote to congratulate Sam [MTP].

December 8 ca. – Lyon replied for Sam to Lucy Page Whitehead [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Sam’s reply as “on or after 6 Dec.” Two days estimated postal time is allowed here, giving ca. Dec. 8.

December 9 Saturday – More Dec. 6 form letters for the occasion of Sam’s 70th to the following:

Kate Douglas Wiggin: “I didn’t know until last night (Dec. 8) that you had sent me a book & a letter, dear Mrs. Riggs. I am enjoying them this afternoon, in place of working, (for I am tired again,—always tired since I struck 70). I do so thank you for your hearty words” [MTP]

Annie E. Trumbull: I thank you most cordially for that fine & strong poem now—I was so irretrievably dull & weary & muddy-headed the other night that I couldn’t, then. I got up some time or other next day & went to your hotel, but you had flown—just that moment! [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s Journal # 2: “Lunch with Mr. Davis” [MTP TS 36].

Andrew Carnegie wrote to Sam.

Wednesday 30 is the night fixed. Gilder comes tomorrow to ‘boss’ the affair as usual—
Pray give me names of any you should like present. Perhaps you can suggest a Prince or two in the Republic of letters, or a special friend you should like present [MTP].

John F. Tremain wrote on Publishers’ Press Assoc. letterhead announcing the formation of a Chemung County Society for Elmirans in NYC. A meeting was called for Dec. 12 at 8 p.m. and they would be “glad to have you attend” [MTP]. Note: IVL answered for Sam on Dec. 11. See entry.

December 10 Sunday – Another Dec. 6 form letter for the occasion of Sam’s 70th to Howard Pyle. Sam added this comment: “It is a most dear & sweet little Eve, & looks just as she did in those first days, when there wasn’t any night because that radiant creature still remained smiling around after the sun went down” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Tonight while we were at dinner, Mary Lawton as a guest, Mr. Gilder came in and speaking of profanity in the great or literary people, he told how years ago when George MacDonald was over here, he asked MacDonald "if he were to know anything derogatory to Shakespeare, would he give it out to the world?" and MacDonald replied, "I'd be damned if I would!" Another case of the loyalty of writers to each other. They are a lovable and beloved clan [MTP TS 113]. Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: "Lunch with Mr. Watterson at 1. Manhattan Club" [MTP TS 36].

Stealla Weiler-Taylor wrote from Hamilton, Ohio to congratulate Sam [MTP].

December 11 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Marjorie V.d.W. Brooke. "I am quite sure, Miss Brooke, that if I had seen that photograph in a shop window I should have supposed it was a picture of myself, so marked is the resemblance" [MTP: eBay item #30366463].

Sam sent another Dec. 6 form letter for the occasion of his 70th to Will Larrymore Smedley. Sam added no comment [MTP].

In N.Y.C. Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Dihdwo Twe.

Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him & say that he is planning to give a talk on the Congo question on Thursday evening Dec. 21. in a church near at hand, and as you say you can come to New York at any time he hopes you will be able to be here on that date and talk for 20 minutes in the Church; after which Mr. Clemens will say what he wishes to have reach the Associated Press.

The Rev. Percy Grant, rector of the Church of the Ascension, expects to write to you soon—but if he does not, Mr. Clemens wishes me to say that you are to come any way, and on the next day he can see you and talk about your article.

Mr. Clemens directs me to say that he would rather you wouldn't say anything about this plan, for he doesn't wish to get into the papers as a lecturer, and therefore there is to be no advertising of the talk. [on verso:] giving details of the horrors that have been perpetrated in Africa [MTP].

Isabel Lyon also began a letter to Raffaello Stiattesi that she finished on Dec. 14. Her perspective on the 70th birthday celebration, the servant Ugo, and the Clemens girls may be instructive to researchers.

Carissimo Toscano Mio: / Two weeks ago I received your dear welcome letter, and I am slow in answering it, because I have been very busy indeed, and not very well—not very strong;—but I have a good Doctor—the one who took care of Miss Clara during all her long illness—and he will bring back my strength again I know.

You will probably not hear that a great banquet was given to Mr. Clemens on his 70th birthday—only writers of fiction were invited, but Col. Harvey who gave the banquet invited me, and I went to sit near my wonderful chief (Mr. Clemens) who made a beautiful and humorous speech; there were many other celebrated men who made speeches also—and it was a beautiful evening for me. But you would never think that Mr. Clemens is seventy years old, he looks far better than he did when he was in beloved Quarto, and he is well and quite contented I think, for now Miss Clara is at home here, well and beautiful & sweet, as you know she cannot help but be. She is singing again—not very much yet, but she is studying and her voice is charming.

Yes. You write English very fluently now, and I am delighted to have so great a benefit come to you in your new neighbor—I think I remember that she was always an interesting woman. You are fortunate.

But Carissimo, you do not tell about "Nina"—& "Sirio" & "Peg." & the dear Panhard—and I love them all. but best I love to remember the sound of your feet on your gravel walk. Oh how sweet it was. Do you think, really, that I shall ever be in the Canonica again? I promise myself that dear pleasure, but who can tell? Does any one sleep in my tiny bed?

Today I have received the pamphlet you so kindly sent, and I thank you very much for it. I am so happy that your favorite work has made you famous.

I very much hope that you will not be tempted to show my letters to anyone, for I wish to write you freely, dear Don Raffaello—and the letters are only for your eyes—are they not?

About two weeks ago Siquor Ubaldo Traverso was here, and called upon Mr. Clemens. We had a very nice talk with him, and he made me long to see you, & the via Strozzi—and all Florence.

Ugo who re-entered Mr. Clemens's service in the summer is now back in Italy. Mr. Clemens had to send him home, for he could not learn English, nor our customs, and it made much trouble—All your words came true once more you see [MTP].

Sam also instructed Lyon to reply “Thanks for the honor” to Albert L. Wilson's Dec. 6 of Kansas City, Mo. for naming their only son, now seventeen, “Mark Twain” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon replied for SLC to the Dec. 9 of John F. Tremain:

At bottom of Tremain's Dec. 9 in pencil Miss Lyon wrote: “Sorry he cannot come or join, but that he accepts no invitations now, which I can with propriety decline. She quoted him: “Realize that I am old & am staggering along under a heavy burden of duties & industries.” This letter ran in the Elmira Morning Telegram for 17 Dec. 1905.

Isabel Lyon's journal: “Oh, Mr. Clemens is so interested in the Congo question, the terrible, terrible Congo suffering” [MTP TS 113]. Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: “Lunch with Mr. Melville Stone” [MTP TS 36]. Note: Stone ran the Associated Press.

A. Rosenthal, editor of The Modern View Publishing Co., St. Louis, wrote to Sam. They were sending a copy of The Modern View magazine which contained a poem by Henry Tudor written in Sam's honor. The publication catered to “the representative Jewish element of the country”; they lauded Sam's “noble stand ... in denouncing Russian atrocities against an innocent people” [MTP]. Note: Sam's one-word directive to Lyon “Answer” is estimated at five days, or ca. Dec. 16.

Daniel Carter Beard wrote from Flushing, L.I. to thank Sam for accepting our invitations and how excited they were at the prospect [MTP].

Marion von Kendler wrote on a picture postcard (of Franz Joseph of Austria), her wish of happiness to Sam “on your natal and all other days” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote above Franz's head; “No address?”

James F. Mallinckrodt wrote from St. Louis to praise Sam's birthday speech [MTP].

Annie H. Martin wrote from Carson City, Nev. For the Nevada Press Co. to ask Sam for an article for their Christmas edition [MTP].

George W. Spencer wrote congratulations from Boston, and asked Sam if he would sign the enclosed photo, one he got as a boy at Lee & Shepard's 35 years before: “I had the pleasure of meeting you three gentlemen, and became somewhat familiar with Billings and Nasby and so much so that I was able to procure their autographs but did not get yours” [MTP].

December 11 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to Albert L. Wilson's Dec. 6 [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Sam's reply as “on or after 6 Dec.” Five days estimated postal time is allowed here, giving ca. Dec. 11.

Sam also replied to W.B. Hosford's Dec. 7 query: “left the River for good in June '61” [MTP]. Note: three days allowed for mail time and a Sunday for the reply.

December 12 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Louis Windmüller, treasurer Legal Aid Society.

I have known about The Legal Aid Society for some years, but it conducts its affairs so quietly and so unostentatiously that I did not know, until the other day, how extensive is the work it is doing. It stirs one's blood and compels one's deep homage to read the great figures! If New York could read them, do you think it could ever be said again that "the contributions fail to cover the ever-growing expenses"? I think not—I am sure not.

I found the figures in The Outlook; please let me quote the whole article: [article enclosed/quoted]

It will surprise no one that the President and Mrs. Roosevelt are interested in the Society's work and are willing to make a long journey to help it along. Indeed, there is something so eloquent about those plain, unadorned statistics and the quoted incidents that it would not be in human nature for either the highest or the lowest in the land to read them and not be strongly moved to desire the privilege of sharing in the Society's generous crusade in the behalf of the oppressed and the friendless. The Society will not need advertise "Haensel und Gretel"—at least to the people who have seen it; for so deep and satisfying is the chorus of that lovely masterpiece that whoso has been under its spell once will come again. There are enough of those to fill the house. I know this, for when I was there, there was but one vacant seat, and I was in it [MTP]. Note: enclosed, a cover and announcement for a "Special Performance" of Hansel and Gretel by the Conreid Metropolitan Opera Company for the benefit of the Legal Aid Society at the Metropolitan Opera House on Thursday evening, Mar. 15, 1906.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Neighborhood Club, 9 Plu. / Mr. Eno. / Ives photographer at 1:30 will call here" [MTP TS 36].

M. Fairchild, age 80, wrote from St. Louis to Sam, congratulating him on reaching his 70th and giving his secrets for a long life [MTP]. Note: allow five days plus Sunday for delivery; see ca. Dec. 18 for Sam's reply.

Paula Lorch (Mrs. Emil Lorch) wrote from Nurnberg, Bavaria asking if it were true that Sam was writing another book [MTP]. Note: Sam's answer is cataloged as Dec. 29 to 31.

December 13 Wednesday – According to the notation on the envelope of A. MacHugh's and Y. MacLoghlan's Nov. 13, Sam answered the "two Irish mugs" on this day.

Yes, both publicly & privately I have praised the astonishing triumph achieved by Witte at Portsmouth with deuces and against a Japanese flush; also both publicly & privately I have said unchristian things about the Peace which resulted. This kind of discrimination is not a new thing with me. It is a custom of mine to frankly & cordially admire the Deity's astonishing cleverness in making his Masterwork out of dirt & leavings, but it is also a custom of mine to as frankly & cordially deride the result.

Keep your promise, MacHugh—come & see me. And bring MacLoghlan if he exists—which I am doubting. His signature is too careful [MTP].

Note: Count Sergei Yulyevich Witte headed the Russian delegation which negotiated the Treaty of Portsmouth (N.H.) which ended the 1904-05 Russo-Japanese war.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Booker T. Washington called today. He has a monstrous handgrip.

At luncheon today Mr. Clemens told how in all the previous banquets at which Mr. Howells has spoken, the guests were ordinary men, or commercial men, pretty unimaginative, so that he was not looking for any enthusiastic reception when he rose to his feet, after a few very lovely words from Col. Harvey, to toast his friend, Mr. Clemens. He was greeted by a burst of applause and homage and was so overcome by it that he did not know whether he could pay his tribute and make his toast. Mr. Clemens was deeply moved himself when he told us. Today, he wrote to Mr. Windmuller and finished the letter with what he called "such a cunning remark". He said that in the performance of Hansel and Gretel last Wednesday evening, "there was only one vacant seat, and I was in it." Oh, it is a darling [MTP TS 113].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Robt Reid came to talk about the 'Players,' & later Mr. David Munro telephoned, wishing to tell his delight into Mr. Clemens's own ear" [MTP TS 36].

Sam S. Shubert and Lee Shubert sent a telegram from N.Y.C. to Sam noting Sarah Bernhardt's appearance on Monday, Dec. 18 at the Casino Theatre for the "benefit of Jewish sufferers in Russia." They would be "sincerely grateful" if Mark Twain could "be present and make a short address." On or just after this day Sam replied by writing on the bottom of the letter, "Send some one down. How many speakers" [MTP]. Note: see insert ad for Dec. 14, which also advertised the event. Sam agreed to offer a few words.

Herbert E. Bowen wrote from NYC to send "more flotsam & jetsam, which Col. Harvey directs me to send to you." He also asked Sam to autograph on a slip of paper to go with Bowen's statuette [MTP].

Julia Brodie wrote from Novato, Calif. to send best wishes for the new year [MTP].

Dihdwo Twe wrote to Sam having rec'd his letter. "...unfortunately the 21st conflicts with our new change of time. Our final examination comes on the 21st and lasts through the 22nd...I can come down on the 23rd and spend a week in the City to see certain persons concerning the Congo question" [MTP].

December 14 Thursday – Sam sent another Dec. 6 form letter for the occasion of Sam's 70th to Thomas Bailey Aldrich and Lilian W. Aldrich, now at their summer home, "Redfarm," in Ponkapog, Mass. Sam added: "Apparently I am never going to get a chance to add a line, so I will just give it up till a later day &—God Almighty bless you both! / SLC / Dec. 14." [MTP].

In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon finished her Dec. 11 to Raffaello Stiattesi.

Today Teresa [Cherubini] had a post card from Ugo, and he was in Paris at the time he sent it. He went home by way of Cherbourg.

Last evening Santa Clara, Jean, & I went to see Madame Sara Bernhardt in "Angelo." She was very wonderful, as she always is—and her speech is very beautiful.

Miss Clara sends you her love, and Mr. Clemens wishes me to give you his very warm regards. He often speaks of you very affectionately. My dear, sweet mother sends you her love also—and I am so happy to have you—il Toscano mio—for my friend [MTP]. Note: the NY Times, Dec. 14, p.9, gives the Dec. 13 performance as the first of the play Angelo, a lesser-known work of Victor Hugo, though popular on the French stage.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Jean, 9:30. Santissima, Jean and I went to see Bernhardt last night in 'Angelo'. She is a most finished actress, for she can be the tigress, or the woman, and the note of restraint in this play was so satisfying. But, it was all good, her support was fine as it always is" [MTP TS 113].

Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: "Mr. [Channing] Pollock came to talk with Mr. Clemens about his making a little speech next Monday afternoon in the Casino Theatre for the Bernhardt[t] Benefit for the Jews. Wrote Mr. Larkin about the unsatisfactory condition of the heating. Radiators make such a noise in the front part of the house that one cannot sleep" [MTP TS 37].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Miss Lyon: "Please tell Mr. Clemens that I have secured an amendment of the royalty arrangement on hat pins so that, instead of our sending to the Antipodes $5.00 out of the $7.50 (on each $100 of sales) ...we are now only to send $3.75" [MTP].

Thomas S. Barbour wrote to Sam with plans to go to Washington to perhaps see Elihu Root on the Congo question. What did Sam think of the idea? He asked Sam to telegraph collect if he did not think such a visit was wise at this time [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam about a little book of poetry by Mrs. Margaret Potter Black of Chicago, that she brought to Sam's birthday dinner. Duneka dissuaded her from giving it to Clemens then, and then forgot about it. "Would it be asking too much to have a line of acknowledgment go to her in some way, either through your secretary, through me or by your own fair hand?" He closed by saying that "Praises of your speech keep pouring upon us" [MTP].

John R. Marks wrote from Prince Edward Island after reading an account of Sam's 70th celebration, hoping that Sam would give him a reply to this letter, which was appreciative of Twain's humor [MTP].

John D. Rhodes wrote a fan letter to Sam, wishing him "a happy return of your birthday" [MTP].

Booker T. Washington wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr Clemens:—

Merely to let you have this as a reminder, I am writing to say that the meeting for Tuskegee will be held in Carnegie Hall, Monday evening January 22nd, at eight fifteen.

All of my friends are most grateful to you.

Later on I shall send you some printed matter from Tuskegee which will give you full information regarding the school. / Very truly yours...[MTP].

S. Burns Weston, Secretary for The Contemporary Club of Philadelphia wrote to Sam requesting he give a reading at their next reading on Jan. 8, 1906. Weston wrote that Miss Agnes Repplier had spoken to Sam about the possibility at his 70th birthday celebration. Sam, shortly after receipt, wrote "Decline it" on the letter for Isabel Lyon [MTP].

Lamont Hammond's article "Mark Twain at Seventy" ran in Nation (NY) p. 478-9. Tenney: "MT has won respect as a writer, here and in England, although he does not belong to the coteries of Boston and New York. 'He knows America and knows it whole,' writing with power rather than fine academic distinctions. He is a 'humorist of the first rank,' to be sure, but also a humanist" [41].

December 15 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote a short note to Robert Bacon. "Dear Mr. Bacon: / I am expecting to send you the full report (in French) & an elaborate digest of it (English). By mail or by the hand of a delegation of our Association" [MTP].

Sam also sent a Dec. 6 form letter for the occasion of his 70th birthday to John D. Rhodes, US Court of Claims, Washington, D.C. Sam added: "Alas, they have shut Huck & Tom out from the youth's department of the Brooklyn Blind Asylum library!" [MTP]. Note: postmarked this date.

Sam also wrote a two-page letter to an unnamed correspondent (now identified below) in Vienna. Sam recalled the "many pleasant months" spent in Vienna and the "many delightful people" there. He also gave the old leadman's story once again to explain his nom de plume [MTP: Sotheby's catalog Dec. 15, 1987, Item 56]. Note: this is likely a reply to Maurice Ernst, who wrote from Vienna on Dec. 4 [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Santa C. is ill—and must stay in her bed for days to come. 42 today.

Mr. Clemens is going to speak at a Benefit in which Sara Bernhardt is to play a tiny play—for the Russian Jews. Mr. Pollock came down to talk with Mr. Clemens about it, and they had a delightful chat. He told Mr. Clemens that his father, a learned man, had said that the legend runs in Germany that only 2 people of great prominence have "Herr" before their name: "God Almighty and Mark Twain." [MTP TS 113-114]. Note: Channing Pollock (1880-1946), playwright and critic, then with the Lyric Theatre.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Radiators noisy in Jean's room, & in Miss Clemens's little room" [MTP TS 37].

N.J. Bacheleur for N.H. Board of Agriculture wrote to Sam. "I have before me a Brooklyn Eagle interview with you in which, I am pleased to see, you say many kind things about New Hampshire. May I have your kind permission to use some parts of this interview in publications of this board?/ Yours... [MTP]. Note: Miss Lyon wrote in pencil: "Can use whatever he pleases. It was not an interview for any particular paper, but was delivered by the Harpers to a great many papers."

William C. Dornin wrote from NYC to ask if it was too late to offer congratulations [MTP].

Eden E. Greville wrote from NYC to Sam, enclosing a card for the first meeting of the American Playgivers; he hoped to see Sam there. No card is in the file [MTP].

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to Sam: "I deposited this morning for your account in the Guaranty Trust Company check for $150.00, being dividend on Borden's Condensed Milk Company Preferred stock [MTHHR 605n1].

John Horner wrote from Belfast, Ireland enclosing a copy of Irene Iddeleigh (1897) by Mrs. Emanda M'Kittrick Ros [Gribben 589; MTP].

F.P. McNutt for the NY Telephone Co. wrote enclosing "a contract for additional telephone equipment recently requested" [MTP].

Abbott Handerson Thayer wrote to Sam.

"Have I embarrassed you by forcing you to share my first hour of frothing at the mouth after a contact with Bostonians. I should greatly regret that. I merely became wildly communicative and my heart looked round for some mother's-arms.... As William James wrote me, it was their preoccupations leaving me out." He also asked after Jean [MTP].

Dihdwo Twe wrote from Cushing Academy, Ashburnham, Mass. to Sam.

I have been planning for sometime to come to New York to see you and Dr. Lyman Abbott personally and privately about the condition in Congo today. I have visited Congo before coming to this country; and I have, after nearly twelve years' effort, worked out a scheme which seems practical to me, and which, I believe, if taken up will create more public sentiment than anything that could be done. I think it is a good chance to come down this month because our vacation is unusually longer this year. I will, therefore, come down to talk the subject over with you and to see Dr. Abbott and others if possible.

You will hear from me as soon as I arrive [MTP]. Note: Sam's reply is estimated at Dec. 18 to allow postal time plus Sunday.

December 15 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to Louise A. Howland's Dec. 8 letter and request for "an up to date photograph" [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Sam's reply as "on or after 8 Dec." Seven days estimated postal time is allowed here, giving ca. Dec. 15. "We will sign a photo & send it." Sam wrote her a paragraph on Dec. 19. See entry.

December 16 Saturday – Sam conferred sometime this day with actress Sarah Bernhardt, who was scheduled to appear at the Casino Theatre on Dec. 18 in a benefit for Jewish victims in Russia (see Dec. 14 insert advertisement) [Dec. 17 inscription in JA]. Sam showed initial interest in offering a few words for the event in his Dec. 13 response to the Shuberts. His meeting with Bernhardt likely involved his attendance and address for the following afternoon's benefit. It was a cause that found Clemens' sympathies.

Relations with Sam's old friend, now Senator from New York, Chauncey M. Depew, had become somewhat strained by Depew's support for Theodore Roosevelt; Depew had bolstered Roosevelt in a New York Mayoral race, and in 1900 was a Roosevelt delegate at the Republican National Convention.

PLATT AND DEPEW SHOULD RESIGN

NEW YORK, N.Y., Dec. 16.—The New York Post published this day...a number of letters from prominent persons relating to the fitness of Senators Platt and Depew to represent New York State in the United States senate, and the question of both men resigning. The letters are replies to these three questions...

1. Do you believe that Thomas C. Platt and Chauncey M. Depew are fit representatives...?

2. Do you think they should immediately resign their seats

3. In case they do not retire voluntarily should the legislature pass a resolution asking them to r

Mark Twain thinks the senators unfit, believes they should resign and answers the third question by saying: "If I were a legislator I would offer the resolution but 'not' hopefully." [Reprinted in: Ft. Worth Star-Telegram, Dec. 17, 1905, p.1].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today over the telephone Mr. Pollock told me that Mr. Clemens is the first great man—hero—he has ever met, whose feet were not made of clay. Here are all the others: Marion Crawford, Hall Caine, Israel Zangwell [sic Zangwill] among them, but he left them all with a sense of disappointment. Not so with Mr. Clemens. Mr. Pollock has been uplifted by his talk.

This afternoon Mr. Clemens and Mr. Gilder drove up to call on Mr. Carnegie and Carl Schurz and others, but they didn't accomplish the others for Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Schurz kept them. Mr. Clemens said at dinner that he had forgotten to tell Carl Schurz about the great value of his German newspaper that used to reach him away back in 1847, or 48. The paper was Die Anzeiger des Westens, and the little boy Clemens used to take it over to the German baker who lived near them, and he's sell it to him for a big slab of gingerbread [MTP TS 114].

Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: "Miss Clara to sing at 2:30 to Mr. Charlton. / She was too ill to sing. / Radiator kept Jean awake, also kept Katie awake" [MTP TS 37]. Note: Loudon Charlton, concert manager.

Thomas S. Barbour of the Congo Reform Assoc., Boston, wrote to Sam.

"Your telegram reached me yesterday and I at once telephoned Dr. Hall who has now written to Mr. Root, suggesting an interview for Thursday. In case this date is chosen I shall hope to see you Wednesday morning." He enclosed a document they printed, and confided they'd invited Grover Cleveland to accept a position as Vice President [MTP].

Ellen Bowith wrote from St. Albans (Queens) NY to Sam being "the bearer of a letter of introduction" from John Y.W. MacAlister of London. When he had time she wanted to present it to him, and would be honored if he would come to her recital on Tuesday. She enclosed tickets [MTP].

Boyd Crumrine wrote from Washington, Penn. to Sam, enclosing a clipping from the Washington Observer of Nov. 27, 1905. Could he "go over the paper carefully and send us a statement of what you believe to be the facts concerning your ancestry...for the archives of our Society." The Washington County Historical Society was the group in question [MTP]. Note: Sam's reply is estimated to be ca. Dec. 18, allowing two days postal service.

Newspaper articles across the country on Sam's 70th birthday celebration at Delmonico's on Dec. 5 evoked responses from some old friends and sidekicks. Among these was William S. Grieg an old friend and typesetting partner for the St. Louis Evening News in the 1850s, who wrote to Sam and noted several persons Sam recalled and one he did not.

My dear friend, I have waited until the cyclone of congratulations good wishes and adulation from all the world (enough to turn the brain of any ordinary man) should have subsided a little before tendering you my hearty congratulations on your 70th birthday and my earnest wish that you may maintain your health and spirits enjoy many more birthdays.

I don't suppose you remember me but you may remember, in 1856 I think [1853 or 4], working on the St Louis Evening News, of which Chas G. Ramsey was proprietor, foreman John Bailey champion typesetter and imbibor of the ardent, who used to come up missing about once a week, when Chas G. would lecture his thus "you can't fool me, John Bailey, more'n two or three times more," then there was yourself and your side partner Bob Ruggles (Larnon and Pythias) though I always associated Bob with Ichabode Crane. Amongst the others there was Garrit Marney, a little Frenchman who could swim like a frog, and who, on our afternoon visit to Bloody Island, was to look out for me as I could hardly swim and through whose neglect one day I nearly drowned.

You probably remember when we went to learn French from Dr Ricardo and after a short trial concluded it was too slow and that the American language was good enough for us

My name was W^m S. Grieg, but John Bailey christened me Grey and the name stuck to me for years, you used to say "Now Grey none of your sarcasm." But what changes time has wrought. Bloody Island is no more, a large city spreads over the bottom lands where we gathered pecans and Hickories and hunted for quirel, rabbit and quail, and of all the prints who trod the boards at that time very few remain, and the ups and downs and adventure "by food and field" of those few no doubt would fill volumes. I have had my share but now I am settled down amid my children and Grandchildren and haven't been in a print I hope for 3 or 4 years, though I retain good health I treasure all your works except some of the latest I haven't got, and now Sam if you will find time to write me a few lines in answer to this, to let me know you received it, I will be more than pleased, wishing you a merry Xmas and happy New Year, I am / an old Friend / W^m S. Grieg [MTP]. Note: See Sam's reply on Dec. 19. Persons mentioned: Charles G. Ramsey, John Bailey, Bob Ruggles, Garrit Marney, Dr. Ricardo.

Bertram Harrison wrote from NYC to ask Sam what time he should send a carriage for him for the benefit at the Casino Theatre Monday afternoon; the time set for Sam's talk was 5 p.m. [MTP].

H.A. Lorberg, publisher of Davis High School Library, Portsmouth, Ohio, wrote congratulations "a little late" for Sam's 70th and also to wish a merry Christmas and Happy New Year. Lorberg requested a signed photograph to be placed in their library (a three-story Victorian edifice with mansard roof). He'd sent a large photo to Florence but did not receive it back, assuming it was "probably lost in mail" [MTP]. Note: Sam's reply is estimated at 5 days, or ca. Dec. 21.

Herbert T. Stephens wrote on Kansas City Univ. letterhead to congratulate Sam on his 70th [MTP].

Andrew Carnegie inscribed a copy of his book James Watt (1905): "To one I am proud to / call friend / Mr. Clemens / Andrew Carnegie / Dec. 16th 1905" [Gribben 131].

December 16 ca. – Sam directed Isabel Lyon to answer A. Rosenthal's Dec. 11 [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as "on or after 11 Dec." Five days estimated postal time from St. Louis is allowed here.

December 17 Sunday – Sam wrote a longish inscription in JA to Sarah Bernhardt:

Ah, Madame the illustrious, I made a mistake yesterday; When you spoke of the "play," I thought you meant the book—I have no play, I was never able to write a play. But this is the book; & it has one large merit: it puts no words into Jeanne's mouth which she did not say. With the homage of Yours very truly the Author, To Madame Sarah Bernhardt. Dec. 17/05 [MTP: Anderson Galleries catalog, Dec. 17, 1934, Item 61].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today, drowsing, not very well. Poultney Bigelow came in this afternoon and when he joined us at tea he exclaimed over the wonderful change in Mr. Clemens condition and appearance. P.B. is just back from Panama and full of the dreadful condition of things down there. A condition that government reports cover up. He has written an article about it all, but said that Harper, who sent him there, and paid for the article, would be afraid to publish it and would do too much editing to it. After dinner Mr. Clemens said he's longing for Dublin [N.H.] again. His days are so full here that there isn't much chance for work or rest [MTP TS 114]. Isabel Lyon's Journal # 2: "Noise in front radiators in the night, also in Mr. Clemens's dressing room & in my room" [MTP TS 37].

John Irwin wrote from Galence, Ohio asking where he might get a copy of a piece by Sam that Harper said was out of print [MTP]. Note: allowed 3 days for Sam's reply, or ca. Dec. 20.

American Playgoers, Amelia Bingham president, sent Sam a postcard sized meeting announcement for Sunday, Dec. 17 at 8:15 p.m. at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel [MTP].

December 18 Monday – At the Casino Theatre in the afternoon (Lyon's journal #2 gives it as 2 p.m) following a performance by Sarah Bernhardt, Sam offered a few words for the benefit of Jewish sufferers in Russia. The New York Times, Dec. 19, p. 9 reported the event:

MARK TWAIN SPEAKS AFTER BERNHARDT ACTS

Jewish Benefit Audience Enjoys an Unusual Double Bill.

$3,000 FOR THE RELIEF FUND

Humorist Says He and the Actress Are Two of the Youngest Persons Alive.

The benefit matinee for the Jewish sufferers in Russia, which was given at the Casino yesterday afternoon, drew a big crowd from the professional and social worlds. Among those who helped entertain it were Sarah Bernhardt and Mark Twain. During the hour just after luncheon the lobby of the theatre looked as if a greenroom reception for all New York were in progress.

Well-known actresses in their prettiest afternoon gowns sold programmes and flowers at fancy prices. The prices, however, were no more objectionable than the smiles that went with them, and this feminine lobbying proved a popular and profitable device.

Each well-known actor was besieged as he entered with friendly demands upon his patience and pocketbook. Jacob Adler, who came a little late, could hardly force his way into the theatre through the crowd of young women, each of whom insisted upon selling him a programme and a rose.

Inside the theatre, boxes, orchestra, and balconies were filled to their utmost capacity.

Among the actors and actresses who volunteered their services were Kate Condon, Kitty Cheatham, and Chauncey Olcott, who sang; Auguste Van Biene, cellist; Ilka Palmay, in Hungarian dances; Henry Miller and Martha Waldron, in "Frederic Lemaître," and Margaret Anglin and her company in third act of "Zira."

Sarah Bernhardt presented for the first time the one-act play, in French, "L'Escarpolette," by Miss G. Constant Lounsbury, an American woman who spends most of her time in Paris. The play was given the following cast:

Le Chevalier Robert de Bellancourt.....Mme. Sarah Bernhardt

Celine Mlle. Seylor

The Marquis M. Chameroy

The piece is a dainty little production in which an eighteenth century Marquis destined by his father to marry a fiancée whom the young man has never seen, falls in love with a Fragonard portrait of a young girl in a swing. In seeking the Celine of his father's choice the youth, after a bit of mystification, finds that his unknown fiancée is the original of his beloved Fragonard.

Mark Twain, who followed Mme. Bernhardt, spoke of the wonderful French language, which he always felt as if he were "just going to understand."

"Mme. Bernhardt is so marvelously young," he added. "She and I are two of the youngest people alive."

Then the humorist told a story of how when Mme. Bernhardt was playing in Hartford some years ago three charitable old ladies decided to deny themselves the pleasure of seeing the great actress and to send the money instead to some needy friends.

"And the needy friends," concluded Mr. Clemens drily, "gratefully took the money and bought Bernhardt tickets with it."

Both Mr. Clemens and Mme. Bernhardt received warm welcomes.

Among those in the boxes were Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Schiff, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Guggenheim, Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Guggenheim, Mr. and Mrs. Jackson Gureaux, Mme. Bernhardt, Miss Margaret Anglin, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lehman, Mr. Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), and Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Adler.

Ilka Palmay, Ruth Vincent, Kitty Gordon, Josephine Jacoby, Violet Holls, Isabelle Urquhart, and Annette Kohn were among those who distributed programmes and flowers in the foyer.

About $3,000 was realized from the performance.

Miss Anglin was asked by Mme. Bernhardt after the benefit if she would appear with her in Maeterlinck's "Pelleas and Melisande." Miss Anglin expressed her pleasure at the invitation, and it is said some arrangement may be made for a performance of the play in French after the Bernhardt road tour.

A special matinee performance of "La Tosca" by Mme. Bernhardt is announced for Friday afternoon at the Lyric Theatre.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon Mr. Clemens chatted at a benefit given for the Russian Jews. Bernhardt played that Watteau one-act play L'Escarpolette, utterly charming, but before she went on she sat in the box with Mr. Clemens and it was a delight to watch those two rare geniuses chat. Bernhardt was in her man's costume but sat with her legs on a chair and covered, and Mr. Clemens beautiful white head bent ever toward her, vibrant with life and strength and genius. And then the delight of his slow saunter onto the stage amid giant applause and cries of "bravo" [MTP TS 115].

Wm. Knabe & Co. , N.Y.C., wrote to Sam. Arthur Rubinstein, (1887-1982) Russian pianist, was to begin a US tour in January, 1906, and wished to give the proceeds of one of his recitals for the relief of Russian Jews, his brother being a political convict in Siberia. Could this benefit recital use Mark Twain's name as a patron, along with fifteen or twenty others? On or just after this day Sam replied:

"Entirely in sympathy with the cause and if my name as a patron can be of any use will be glad to have you use it" [MTP].

Sam sent another Dec. 6 form letter for the occasion of his 70th birthday to Eduard Pötzl in Vienna, Austria. Sam added a short letter to the form:

Dear Pötzl: It is a beautiful & most valued appreciation, & I have read it with delight. The sound of your voice in print brings back Vienna, & you, & Letschitske [sic] to me & fills me with memories of blessed days! The will come no more—but we have had them, & that is something to be thankful for.

The congratulations are arriving from far & wide—from friends, & from strangers who are also friends—and I am very glad; I did not know there were so many [MTP].

Samuel Hopkins Adams wrote for Collier's to Sam. He had been silent on the Oppenheimer treatment because he'd been down with the grippe, and now was taking a trip to New Orleans, but when he returned in late January

I will call upon you, and shall hope to proceed with the matter then directly. / Dr. S. Weir Mitchell has signified his willingness to give me the material which he has, bearing upon Bishop Potter's participation in the fraud. I understand that Dr. Mitchell got the Bishop in a corner and made it rather unpleasant for him. This, of course, is confidential... [MTP].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote "Note for S.L.C.: / I saw Lauterbach to-day. He said, in re. The sale to Ogden, that, in case it were attacked, he thought it could be sustained....His advice for the present, summed up, is: 'Stand pat'" [MTP].

John F. Hobbs of the Thirteen Club wrote to ask Sam for his presence as the Guest of Honor at its 24th Anniversary Banquet, Hotel Savoy, Saturday evening, Jan. 13, 1906 [MTP]. Note: Sam declined; see Jan. 13, 1906 entry for Hobbs' follow up.

Winifred Ives wrote from NYC to ask Sam to speak at the Annual reception in the Babies Ward of the Post Graduate Hospital, Jan. 19 at 4 p.m. [MTP].

W.B. Rundle wrote from Cherry Creek, Nev. Sending two views (not in file) of the “old Overland Stage road” which enabled Sam to write RI, and wishing “his years upon the earth be many” [MTP].

December 18 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam directed Lyon to answer Dihdwo Twe’s Dec. 15: “Would suggest that he bring Dr. Abbot—to talk it over, arrange date & time to suit everybody” [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as “on or after 15 Dec.” Estimated postal time is allowed here.

In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Boyd Crumrine’s Dec. 16 request. “Mr. Clemens thinks that Mr. Bryan Clemens of St. Louis Mo would know about the ancestry. But that his own knowledge is vague and untrustworthy” [MTP].

Sam also replied to M. Fairchild’s Dec. 12 experience of reaching 80 by no strong drink or tobacco, staying active and living “in favor with God and man.” His tongue-in-cheek reply:

“I realize, by your experience alas! that it doesn’t matter how recklessly & irrationally a man may live, he can never be sure of escaping old age” [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as “on or after 12 Dec.,” the date of Fairchild’s letter from St. Louis. Five days estimated postal time plus Sunday is allowed here.

December 19 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Dinner engagement / Miss Winifred Holt / 44 East 78th Street. / Dentist Dr. Fulton / Dr. Fournier’s Associate. / at 3. 66 E. 58th” [MTP TS 37].

James Bertram, personal secretary for Andrew Carnegie wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam, advising that “In the course of a few weeks a cask will be delivered to you which Mr. Carnegie says you will please not hesitate to receive....” On or about this day Sam replied:

“Very glad to hear about that cask & I shall watch out for it with very agreeable anticipations—that I’m like Mr. Carnegie with the eggs—I like to have all my whiskey in one keg & then I can watch that keg” [MTP]. Note: Carnegie was the originator of the aphorism Sam often used about putting all of one’s eggs in one basket and watching that basket.

At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to an old friend and typesetter-workmate on the St. Louis Daily News in 1855, William S. Grieg, who had written on Dec. 16 from St. Louis about the times in the early 1850s on the St. Louis Evening News with a young Sam.

I have forgotten the Frenchman, but I remember the others. The excellent Ruggles—tall, slender, & with bulging eyes—became a distinguished & honored Judge in Kansas. Simmons, the refined & intellectual consumptive—a pathetic figure—I remember him well. I remember the Ricards class; also the ass who could not be taught to pronounce “une singe” otherwise than “amn Sygie”; & the mouse dans san trou he pronounced “daunz sun trow (like ou in Ouch) / Sincerely your friend....[MTP].

Note: the “ass” whose name Sam could not recall may have been William G. Waite, as revealed in a New York Times feature article which ran on June 8, 1902, “Mark Twain Among Scenes of His Early Life.” Here are two of the final paragraphs of the article, noting another compositor in those early 1850s, one unnamed in Grieg’s Dec. 16 or in Sam’s above reply of Dec. 19:

OTHER OLD FRIENDS

William G. Waite, now a printer in The St. Louis Republic composing room worked with Mark Twain in the early fifties, when he, too, was a printer. They were employed in the old Evening News office in St. Louis, and the future author worked a year in that capacity.

“He was a good printer,” said Waite, “but mighty independent. He was always called, ‘that boy’ by Charles G. Ramsey, proprietor and editor of The News. He’d get down late once in a while, and Ramsey would say: ‘Here’s that _____ boy late again.’ Clemens didn’t say anything to this for a long time, but one morning he turned on Ramsey and replied: ‘Take your dashed situation, and got to (a warm country)!’ He left the office and we heard nothing of him for several years.”

Sam sent another Dec. 6 form thank you letter for the occasion of his 70th to Louise A. Howland (Robert’s widow), now in Sausalito, Calif. Sam added a paragraph:

To think of you as a grandmother! It is quite impossible. It was a good deal of a strain to think of you as a mother; still, I managed it, being greatly helped there to by the picture of the child—good sound & solid evidence; unadorned evidence—even naked evidence; for the plump creature was reclining in an oyster shell while its wardrobe was at the wash [MTP].

In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Robert Underwood Johnson, that Clemens would be unable to attend the dinner of the Academy of Arts and letters on Friday, Dec. 29 [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tonight Mr. Clemens dined with Miss Winifred Holt and sat between her and Miss May Sinclair. When Miss Holt had finished a long talk on the goodness of God, and his mercies to her, Mr. Clemens asked her if she could account for God’s reason for making a pet of her and terrible slaves and sufferers of other human beings. She shivered at his blasphemies [MTP TS 115]. Note: Winifred Holt (1870-1945), sculptor and founder of the NY Assoc. for the Blind. May Sinclair (1865-1946) British novelist.

Thomas S. Barbour for the Congo Reform Assoc. wrote to Sam, not yet hearing from Elihu Root. Barbour thought he might go to NY this night, or in the morning, and enclosed slips (not in file) they printed this day. “Possibly you may have seen the article in the West African Mail” [MTP].

George Albert Bramley wrote to ask Sam if he could speak at the YMCA of the West Presbyterian Church for their award dinner at the Hotel Vendome, on Friday evening, the 19th of January [MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote to Sam.

I am going to do a series of reprints from their periodicals for H.B. & Co. The first volume will consist of six stories, and will be called “Their Husbands’ Wives”—that is, wives peculiarly and self-sacrificially devoted to their husbands. In this volume I should like to include your “Eve’s Diary,” which exactly denotes the typical attitude of the feminine soul. Can you let me have it, and if yes, for what money outright, a percentage being practicable? Of course, Eve was never legally Adam’s wife, but lived with him in a state which under the circumstances left no stain on her reputation. It was a kind of common-law marriage, and as you have given it the stamp of your approval, I do not think her inclusion among other devoted wives will seriously damage the series. There would be five other stories in the book, for which you need not blush ethically or artistically. You could freely use the piece in any collection of your own soon or late. The fact of the enterprise is confided to you. / Yours ever ... [MTHL 2: 799-800]. Note: Sam agreed, exacting no set price—see source notes 1&2.

Frank R. Lawrence wrote to Sam for the Lotus Club, N.Y.C. asking if they might use his name for the committee in honor of Mrs. Craigie on the afternoon of Dec. 28, and, “would it be possible for [him] to come and say a few words on that occasion?” On or just after this day Sam replied that using his name would be an honor, but he had another engagement for that evening and had to “rest in bed during the afternoon” [MTP]. Note: Pearl Mary Teresa Richards Craigie, pseud. John Oliver Hobbes (1867-1906). See also July 5, 1907.

Edmund D. Morel for the Congo Reform Assoc., Liverpool, wrote a mostly illegible letter to Sam [MTP].

Nemo (no further identification) wrote from Conn. to Sam after reading an article in the NY Sun by a Catholic priest which he claimed contradicted “something that you have written about Belgium in Africa,” but he knew Sam’s story was true and gave reasons. “I want your story about the Congo. I shall enjoy it as I have every thing that you have written and I believe tghat I have read all of your stories including your private letter to the Mammoth Cod Association” [MTP].

Volney Streamer wrote to send Sam a “belated” birthday gift, a “little book” (unspecified). He was “going about chorteling over your speech of Nov. 30the and especially the thought that all this you have done has been play!” [MTP].

R.E. Warren wrote from St.Louis to ask why Sam didn’t live in Missouri? And, had he ever lived for a short time in Cape Girardeau, Mo? “I have been told that you did live there for a short time; that you worked as a clerk for the well known war-time merchant there, Edmund Garaghty...until you were “fired” by him for presuming to fall in love with one of his charming daughters. Is it so?” [MTP].

December 20 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Ah, we saw Bernhardt in Camille today. The last act crowns everything I have ever seen. The death chatter of her poor jaw—Oh, terrible and so close to the grave. She goes beyond [Eleonora] Duse’s art in that play, in all but the gambling room scene. Mr. Clemens lunched with Mr. Howells today, and he dined with Mr. and Mrs. Cross this evening, and I flew over to see Saint Mother who is going home for Christmas. Santissima does not seem to improve any [MTP TS 115]. Note: the play was by Alexandre Dumas (1824-1895) of Musketeer fame, at the Lyric Theatre, 42 St. West of Broadway.

Isabel Lyon’s journal # 2: “Dinner at 8 with Mr. & Mrs. Cross to meet Miss May Sinclair / 6 Washington Square, N.” [MTP TS 37].

Francis Arthur Jones, N.Y. correspondent for the magazines and newspapers of George Newnes, Ltd., London, wrote Sam asking for “a few minutes any time convenient,” not to “inflict the burden of an ‘Interview’ but just to pay a little fifteen minute friendly visit.” On or just after this day Sam replied, “any forenoon at ten” [MTP].

Sarah Bernhardt sent a night telegram to Sam: “I have read your Joan d’arc it is an admirable work sincere full of life and personal. I finished it today and I will begin tomorrow to read the play happy Christmas Dear great Mark Twain / Sarah Bernhardt” [MTP].

Francis Arthur Jones, NY Correspondent wrote to ask if he might “come to see you for a few minutes at any time convenient to yourself?” He didn’t want to “inflict” an interview, “but just to pay a little fifteen minute friendly visit” [MTP]. Note: Clemens wrote on bottom “any forenoon at ten”

Harper & Brothers wrote to advise Sam that they had placed his name on the gratis list [MTP].

Robert K. Mackey wrote to Sam asking if he would autograph Sam’s speech in a newspaper [MTP].

Henry R. Thayer wrote from Denver, Colo. to Sam asking about an article he’d read in Cosmopolitan several years ago, “Concerning the Jews,” which agreed with “a good deal” of his own sentiments. Thayer had an interest in Satan, mentioned in that old article, expecting to spend eternity with Satan. “Like yourself, I have friends in both places.” [MTP].

December 20 ca. – Sam answered John Irwin's Dec. 17 question of where he might find a work out of print: "Haven't any idea. Suppose with the Harpers..."[MTP].

December 21 Thursday – Mark Twain was the guest of honor at the Aldine Association dinner given by the Society of Illustrators. The New York Times, Dec. 22, p. 9 reported on the event:

Surprise Prepared for Him by Society of Illustrators.

THEIR GUEST AT DINNER

Andrew Carnegie shares the Honors of the Evening with the Humorist—Many Noted Guests.

Mark Twain was the guest of honor at a dinner given last night at the Aldine Association by the Society of Illustrators. All the well-known magazine and newspaper artists were present, while other distinguished guests included Andrew Carnegie, Sir. C. Purdon Clarke, Caspar Whitney, Robert Collier, Jr., Norman Hapgood, Alphonse Mucha, Arthur Scribner, and Thomas A. Janvier, Frederick Remington, Henry S. Fleming, and Daniel Beard were on the Reception Committee.

It had been arranged that when the humorist arose to speak Miss Angersten, a well-known model, was to appear in the garb and with the simple dignity of Jean d'Arc, his favorite character in all history. He was on his feet as Jean d'Arc entered the room. She wore the armor of the French heroine and her hair and face made a strangely appealing picture.

The face of the humorist, which had been wearing its "company" smile all night, suddenly changed. He had every appearance of a man who had seen a ghost. His eyes fairly started out of his head, and his hand gripped the edge of the table.

Jean d'Arc presented him with a wreath of bay. He merely bowed, with his eyes fixed on the girl's face. They followed her as in reverent silence she passed out, followed by a little boy in suitable costume, bearing a banner over her head. Then Mark Twain spoke. His voice was broken, and his word came slowly.

There's an illustration, gentlemen—a real illustration," he said. "I studied that girl, Joan of Arc, for twelve years, and it never seemed to me that the artists and the writers gave us a true picture of her. They drew a picture of a peasant. Her dress was that of a peasant. But they always missed the face—the divine soul, the pure character, the supreme woman, the wonderful girl. She was only 18 years old, but put into a breast like hers a heart like hers and I think, gentlemen, you would have a girl—like that."

The humorist looked toward the door, and there was absolute silence—puzzled silence—for many did not know whether it was time to laugh, disrespectful to giggle, or discourteous to keep solemn. The humorist realized the situation. Turning to his audience he came out of the clouds and said solemnly:

"But the artists always paint her with a face—like a ham."

The rest of his discourse was taken up with reminiscences of Jack, one of the figures in his "Innocents Abroad." He told much that was new about Jack, but it was all tinged with the melancholy that has come to Mark Twain these days.

"What was his name, now?" he asked. "I can't remember names these days. Seventy years is a long time, gentlemen. You know the man I mean—the fellow that crossed the Holy Land in the first stagecoach. Come, now, some of you must remember. I can't think. Was it Robespierre, or John the Baptist, or Ben Franklin, who invented the guillotine? Why, yes!" he suddenly cried, "it was Carnegie's uncle! What was I thinking about? Mr. Carnegie and I got it all straightened out one day. It was his uncle who first crossed the Jordan in a stagecoach. Don't try to deny it, now. You admitted it when I fished up that family tree."

"I admit it," said Mr. Carnegie from his right. "It's wonderful, Mark, how names do slip one."

"Yes," said Mark Twain; "well I remember how your uncle got up on the end of that old stage coach at the Jordan ford and said he felt moved to speak. He said with tears in his voice how this was the Jordan, how yonder was the illimitable desert, over three hundred miles wide, over which Moses and his people had toiled for forty years to this spot—this spot hallowed in all history. And it was here that Jack interrupted and said:

‘Moses who, uncle?’ And your uncle said that it was Moses the poet, Moses the lawyer, the warrior, the guide who had guided his people for forty years over that three hundred miles of dreary sand.

Mr. Carnegie’s speech made a real hit. He said in part:

“I wish I were young enough to be a fellow-student, but if you’ll just count me in for tonight, I’ll try to behave myself. all my life I’ve had this streak of Bohemianism in me. You can’t tell how hard I tried to know Irving and dear old Joe Jefferson. I knew Bret Harte and Josh Billings—oh, Josh! Josh! —don’t you young fellows thing for a moment that I’m not used to high society. But the dearest of all acquaintances, after I’d scraped and bowed to get it is—[his hand fell on Mark Twain’s shoulder]—is Mark.

“It is a great thing to be able to say you have a friend like this. I remember how mad Josh Billings was because he did not meet Matthew Arnold when I received him at my house. However, he met him later, and I thought the apostle of sweetness and light would like to hear how Josh lectured and got his audiences.

“‘Well,’ said Josh Billings, ‘people want to know about the little things—all about them. If I told them the story of Jonah and the whale they’d want to know every detail. I told them all I knew, which was more’n the whale or Jonah ever knew; then they wanted to know what Jonah was doing in the whale’s society. It was society I started to speak about.

“But there’s one literary mystery I want to see cleared up tonight!” said Mr. Carnegie. “It has been rumored that I am an author. I am. I will confess it now that I hold Mark Twain’s affidavit—his signature—that I am the joint author of ‘Pudd’nhead Wilson.’ I can prove that the following passage was taken bodily from the lips of Andrew Carnegie:

“‘But the wise main exhorteth thus: Put all your eggs in one basket; then watch the basket.’

“He took that from me!”

Mr. Carnegie sat down amid roars of laughter. He had outwitted Twain himself.

Other speakers of the evening were Rollo Ogden, editor of the Evening Post; Sir Purdon Clarke, and others. Sir Purdon spoke of “Dead Artists Whom Mark Twain May Have Influenced.” He said that in England there were illustrated papers before there were illustrators and that they had been a disreputable lot—the illustrators—carefully making wood cuts from the old masters for the comic sheets and illustrating continued stories so that their employment had to last. He created much amusement [Note: see a variation of the speech in Fatout, MT Speaking p.472-7, in which he reminisces about True Williams, his first illustrator. For more than you ever wanted to know about Williams, see MTJ, 39:2 (Fall 2001) all, by Barbara Schmidt]

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam, writing about Beecher Ogden, owner of the Plasmon factory who wished to pay taxes. More Plasmon complications. He also enclosed Sam’s stock (Spiral Pin Co.) and announced he would “come and see you to-morrow (Friday) morning, unless Miss Lyon telephones me not to...Tuesday in 11 stores we sold 826 hat pins, value $501.02” [MTP].

John H. Dey wrote on Office of Treasurer, Village of Pelham Manor, Westchester NY, to Sam, noting attacks on Sam’s criticism of the Congo situation. Dey morphs his letter into anti-Semitic prose, among other things [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam with plans for “Eve’s Diary” to be included “in the first volume of a series of small books under his [Howells] editorship and that of Mr. Alden” [MTP].

Mrs. John A. Hankey wrote from Gettysburg, Pa., “inspired” to write Sam by his 70th and to give him her toast. The hand is from an elderly lady [MTP].

Wm. Knabe & Co., NYC wrote to Sam. "A day or two since we wrote asking permission to use your name as one of several patrons for a benefit concert to be given in January, in aid of the fund for the Russian Jews." They enclosed a list of other possible patrons [MTP].

Life Magazine for Dec. 21, p. 799 ran this cartoon: see Insert:

December 21 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to H.A. Lorberg's Dec. 16 request: "Were not in Florence for pleasure—paid no attention to anything that happened" [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs this as "on or after 16 Dec.." Five days estimated postal time is allowed here.

December 22 Friday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Robert K. Mackey's Dec. 20 request for an autograph on a newspaper speech. "Cut out the speech and send it, not the entire newspaper" [MTP].

Mrs. Abigail M. Roach wrote to Sam [MTP]. On or just after this date Sam sent her the form letter for the occasion of his 70th, adding a short paragraph:

Indeed yes, I remember! I do well remember the charming schoolgirl who turned out (beyond belief) to be a matron. That whole evening [Dec. 5] was delightful, including you. / Sincerely Yours / SL. Clemens [MTP].

Sam attended a gathering in the evening that is mentioned by Frederick W. Spencer in his Dec. 27 letter to Sam: "I sat in the front row of the balcony, about ten feet from you last Friday night...." The nature of the event is revealed by Lyon:

LYRIC MAT. TO-DAY—MADAME BERNHARDT
 42d St., West of B'way. in "Phedre."
 To-night, "La Femme du Claude"; Monday, "Adrienne Lecouvreur"; Tuesday, "Magda"; Wed. Mat., "Camille"; Wed. Night, "La Tosca"; Thursday, "Sappho"; Friday, "Phedre"; Saturday (Last Day) Mat., "Fedora"; Sat. Night, "La Sorciere."
NOTICE: Good Seats Are Still to be Had for Every Performance.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight we went to see Bernhardt in Phedre, Mr. Clemens, Dorothea Gilder, Francesca, Jean and I. Mr. Clemens was pretty well bored, but we were in a box, so he could walk around outside when the confinement was too oppressive. Bernhardt was very fine. It is an abstract play. The damming quality of love, and the fear of love, being the dominant note in it, and Phedre the Queen is so overcome by her own intense love for Hyppolytus, that it made Dorothea say as we drove home, that "she was like an exquisite flower destroyed by its own perfume" [MTP TS 115]. Note: the play starring Sarah Bernhardt, was by Jean Baptiste Racine (1639-1699).

John M. Curtis wrote from New Rochelle, NY to thank Sam for the many happy hours Twain's books had given [MTP].

Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam asking if he would autograph one of the set of six volumes, "Best Books of Mark Twain" for an 82 year old man in Bridgeport, Conn. [MTP].

Robert K. Mackey wrote from NYC to Sam. The letter is mostly illegible but the import is a requested autograph [MTP].

Daniel O'Day wrote from NYC to ask Sam for a letter of introduction to someone in Florence, Italy on whom he might depend to secure a house there [MTP].

December 23 Saturday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Robert K. Mackey. "Mr. Clemens wishes me to thank you for your kind wishes and he directs me to return herewith the autographed speech. May I also express my thanks for your kind message to me" [MTP].

An extensive record of the dinner...with the guest list...and with full-page photographs of those seated at each table...gives text of speeches, poems, and messages honoring MT...and a list of signers of a telegram of birthday greetings from Europe" [40-1].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Tonight Mr. Clemens dined with Mr. and Mrs. Collier and enjoyed himself and them, for he likes Mr. Collier and they love him. Santissima is very, very far from well" [MTP TS 116].

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Dihdwo Twe will arrive / Dinner / Mr. Robert Collier to meet Judge Jerome / 20 Grammercy Park [MTP TS 38].

William Howells Gulliford wrote on Gulliford Academy letterhead, Pueblo, Colo. to Sam, pasting a clipping with "Montefiore's Clever Retort" above his note: "Do'st remember the old Hanover Square rooms in London thirty years ago? and the Seattle Theatre, with the Philadelphia boys ten years ago? Hope you are well and hearty: all reasonable good wishes" [MTP].

Horace A. Kelly wrote on Hotel Threadgill, Okla. City stationery to Sam. Kelly's father had, in 1864 or 1865 been a typesetter with Sam at the same "cases" when Clemens "suddenly one day" announced that he was "going to lay down the "Stick" forever." Kelly sent birthday congratulations [MTP].

Henry Tudor wrote a fan letter from St. Louis to Sam, and wished holiday greetings [MTP].

December 24 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to William Robertson Coe (1869-1955), son-in-law to H.H. Rogers.

I have sampled the Cabañas, & they are fit for the Gods (who will not get a dam one of them.) May you live long & continue to prosper; & Mrs. Coe the same.

I started out, yesterday afternoon, to look in upon the four households and wish them a Merry Christmas, but I got belated & couldn't make it; but I shall try again soon, & shall succeed; for you are all my nearest & steadfastest & most valued friends, & I don't like to let the chief holiday-week of the year get by without a good handshake & a drink with you. I am planning this raid for New Year's Day, & I hope I shan't be disappointed. With sincerest regards to you both, ... [MTP].

Note: Dias writes of Coe: "A native of England, he was educated in Wales, migrated to Philadelphia with his family in 1883, and became a naturalized American citizen in 1890. In 1893, he became an insurance broker in New York. He and Mai [Rogers] were married on June 4, 1900. He was a director of various companies and, in his later years, was well-known for his large racing stable and for his many philanthropies" [MT Letters 50].

Sam also wrote to the Editor of Harper's Weekly. The letter ran in the Weekly Jan. 13, 1906.

To the Editor of Harper's Weekly. SIR:

Scarcely had Watchman Fowler taken his post at the gate when a procession of strange creatures appeared.

"Halt! Who goes there?" ejaculated the watchman when a fat negro approached, laboriously leading a thin, bow-legged goat.

"Dis heah beast is Ole Ironsides, suh," explained the goat's mahout.

—From "Dan'l the Bulldog," in the "Times."

When I read it I recognized, with a thrill, that the right word had been found at last—mahout. The 'mobile, that majestic devil, that impressive devil, is our elephant, he is in a class by himself, like the jungle monarch; to be his master, pilot, and compeller is a post of solemn and awful dignity and danger, and it does seem to me that that measly word "chauffeur" does not properly fit the occupant of it. Chauffeur is a good enough word when strictly confined to its modest and rightful place—as you will see by what Littré says about it. I translate: "A chauffeur is the firer-up on the street-corner peanut-roaster; in English, stoker." A good enough word, you see, in its own place; but when we come to apply it to the admiral of the thunderous 'mobile or of the mighty elephant, we realize that it is inadequate. No, stoker is not the thing, chauffeur is not the thing, mahout is the thing—mahout is the word we need. Besides, there is only one way of saying mahout, whereas there are nine ways of saying chauffeur, and none of them right. With ever-increasing respect, dear sir, as the ages roll on, I am yours,

MARK TWAIN.

[MTP].

Sam also wrote to George B. Harvey.

Xmas eve, 1905

O Harvey the Magnificent! little by little I am recovering from its emotions & its splendors—the most satisfying & spirit-exalting honor ever done me in all my 70 years, oh by 70 times 70! By George, nobody but you could have imagined & carried out that wonderful thing. I can't thank you adequately, dear uncle George, it is just impossible. / Yours now & always [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "This afternoon Sir Purdon Clarke came in while we were at tea, and he sat for over an hour delighting us with his talk. He took us all over the world for in his wanderings he has been all over it" [MTP TS 116].

December 25 Monday Christmas – On or about this day Sam also sent another Dec. 6 form letter for the occasion of his 70th to Josephine P. Peabody, adding Happy New Year and Merry Christmas sentiment [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean ill all day, no climax. Christmas—and my first intimation of it was an envelope on my breakfast tray, an envelope from Mr. Clemens. He received a pretty good letter this morning from a western man, a letter asking him to take up cudgels for Satan, the neglected one who hasn't done the crimes that the Almighty has done in his wrath, but as Mr. Clemens said there is no proof for there are no witnesses for Satan. If you make a personality out of the Supreme power then there is a chance of bringing that person to trial, for there are witnesses, but "How can you make a person out of that white hunk of fog" [MTP TS 116].

Peter Cadley wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam, unable to find "The Stolen White Elephant" story in a magazine [MTP]. Note: mail delivery not available on Christmas Day, Sam's reply is estimated as ca. Dec. 26.

Dr. Albert R. Halley wrote from Chicago to compliment Sam on his writing and applying for the job of writing his biography [MTP]. Note: Allowing three days mail time, Sam's decline is estimated as ca. Dec. 29.

J.T. Green wrote from Jacksonville, Tenn. to Sam, noting his recent 70th [MTP].

Francis Davis Millet wrote to Sam that he was sending "a sample barrel of cigars," and listed his favorite brands. "May God preserve you a thousand year!" [MTP].

Henry Tudor inscribed his portrait: "To dear Mark Twain / with the gratitude of nearly half a Century—all the sounder for growing old in a bottle—Henry Tudor / Christmas, 1905" [MTP].

December 26 Tuesday – Sam and Isabel Lyon attended an afternoon song recital at Carnegie Hall by Mme. Johanna Gadski (1872-1932), German soprano who achieved worldwide success and whose recordings survive. Leaving the building Clemens spotted a young girl who later wrote she was "yearning" to speak with him. They chatted briefly about the weather, and the following day she would write him a note; they would begin an affectionate correspondence. He would call her "Marjorie" and be "her oldest friend." She was Gertrude Natkin, and though a bit older than his later "Angelfish," was a precursor of the club [Natkin Dec. 27; Feb. 3 to Natkin; NY Times Dec. 24, p X1, Dec. 27, p. 9 "Mme. Gadski's Song Recital"]. Cooley writes:

ONE DAY in December 1905 [Dec. 26], fifteen-year-old Gertrude Natkin caught Samuel Clemens's eye while he was leaving Carnegie Hall. He introduced himself, discovered her name, and soon afterward began corresponding with her. Clemens wrote Gertrude a half dozen letters a month during the first three months of their friendship, each of which received her enthusiastic reply. He soon nicknamed her "Marjorie" after Marjorie Fleming, a young (deceased) Scottish writer whom he admired. ...

Even though Gertrude Natkin never became an angelfish, Clemens's correspondence with her points the way to the Aquarium and the dozen young ladies who were to become angelfish. The Natkin correspondence is characterized by a freshness and playfulness many of his later letters do not achieve...Marjorie appears to be almost giddy with infatuation [1-2]. First published in the North British Review, Gribben gives the full title: Marjorie Fleming, A Sketch; Being the Paper Entitled "Pet Marjorie": A Story of Child-Life Fifty Years Ago (1863) by Dr. John Brown [87].

At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Thomas Bailey Aldrich: "I am very glad you thought to send me Mr. Samuel's article. It is able and to the point. It will be difficult to unseat Leopold, but it is worth trying and we shall go on trying. / Merry Christmas and love to you all" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to William Robertson Coe. "Thank you cordially, dear Mr. Coe, for your sumptuous token of remembrance. Mine to you is delayed several months by the publishers, but by & by it will be autographed & sent. /Merry Christmas & best wishes to all the family from / Yours Ever" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens, Francesca and I went to hear Mme. Gadski's Recital this afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Mr. Clemens had been lunching with Mr. Archer Huntington and went with him up to 145th Street to see the new library building that Mr. Huntington is building for the housing of the Spanish library of his, and Mr. Clemens has allowed himself to be made a member of the Advisory Board in place of Mr. John Hay. So he was late to the concert, but he heard 2/3 of it and found it lovely. Her voice is so satisfying, so beautiful, so true. He was sweet to a little girl in brown who recognized him of course, and they exchanged affectionate salutations. Really he is bubbling over with a sweetness, and simpleness and loveliness which is irresistible [MTP TS 116]. Note: Johanna Gadski (1872-1932), German soprano. the NY Times, Dec. 27, 1905 p. 9, "MME. GADSKI'S SONG RECITAL" gave the performer a somewhat mixed if positive review.

Ernest Hamlin Abbott wrote to Sam.

Arriving here this afternoon, I learn that Mr. Twe, a colored student from Massachusetts, has called to see my Father, Dr. Lyman Abbott, with the request that he make an appointment to meet you to confer in regard to Congo affairs. At the request of my Father, whom I have consulted by telephone, I am writing to ask whether this is in accordance with your wish [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam. He thanked Sam for giving permission for Howells to include "Eve's Diary" in the series of small books under Howells' editorship. He enclosed $50 payment for the right. Duneka wanted to publish "Eve's Diary" as a book with a picture on every other page, and suggested Fred Strothman, the same artist who had illustrated Extracts From Adam's Diary [MTP]. Note: "Eve's Diary" was illustrated by Lester Ralph in 1906.

Henry Copley Greene wrote to Sam enclosing a check for $91.75 that was overcharged on the Dublin rental house [MTP].

Georgya E. Heolly wrote from Los Angeles to Sam, wondering if he recalled going to school with her father, Sidney B. Heolly [MTP].

George Madden Martin wrote from Anchorage, Ky. to offer 70th congratulations to Sam [MTP].

J.H. Nolen wrote on State of Missouri, Bureau of Labor letterhead to Sam, sending "a little souvenir made of wood taken from the house in which you were born at Florida, Mo." in a case "made in the Missouri penitentiary by one of the St. Louis 'boodle' convicts..." Nolen claimed he'd taken the wood from Sam's birth house himself [MTP].

Note: The souvenir is not further identified. Sam's reply is estimated at three days, or ca. Dec. 29. The "boodle" convicts were grafters at the top levels of government convicted of taking boodle. See Oct. 1902 McClure's Magazine for details, or http://www.nassaucivic.com/Tweed_Days_IN_St_Louis.htm and on other sites.

William H. Ridgway wrote on Craig Ridgway & Son Co. letterhead, Coatesville, Pa. to Sam. Having been presented with a "handsome edition" of Sam's works, he "would just dearly love to have your autograph to paste in the favorite album which to me is your 'Roughing It'" [MTP].

December 26 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to Peter Cadley's Dec. 25 question about which magazine first published "The Stolen White Elephant." Sam's reply: "Don't remember where it was published" [MTP]. Note: the story was not published first in a magazine, but as the lead story in the book by the same name, 1882. It was written by Sam in late Nov. or early Dec., 1878, originally intended to be a chapter in T4 (1880) [Wilson 247].

December 27 Wednesday – Hawkins writes that Sam overestimated the response to King Leopold's Soliloquy "and was disappointed by the Catholic response to the pamphlet. He had hoped to start a conflict between Catholics and Protestants over the Congo misrule, with the notion that Protestants would come out in force against Leopold, since the notable Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore had defended Leopold.

Isabel Lyon's Journal: The slowness of the Congo movement is troubling Mr. Clemens very much. There is no leadership to it, and he can do no more than he has done in giving to the cause "King Leopold's Soliloquy." A little attack from a Roman Catholic priest came this morning—"good enough as far as it goes" Mr. Clemens said, but one attack isn't enough to stir up Romanism against Protestantism and seemingly the great fear of the press lies in the dread of irritating the Roman Church than in any fear of Leopold's displeasure [MTP TS 116-117; Hawkins 161, 165 in part]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Dr. Quintard, 7:30" [MTP TS 38].

Paine writes on Clemens' disengagement with the Congo Reform Assoc.:

Various plans and movements were undertaken for Congo reform, and Clemens worked and wrote letters and gave his voice and his influence and exhausted his rage, at last, as one after another of the half-organized and altogether futile undertakings showed no results. His interest did not die, but it became inactive. Eventually he declared: "I have said all I can say on that terrible subject. I am heart and soul in any movement that will rescue the Congo and hang Leopold, but I cannot write any more."

His fires were likely to burn themselves out, they raged so fiercely. His final paragraph on the subject was a proposed epitaph for Leopold when time should have claimed him. It ran:

Here under this gilded tomb lies rotting the body of one the smell of whose name will still offend the nostrils of men ages upon ages after all the Caesars and Washingtons & Napoleons shall have ceased to be praised or blamed & been forgotten—Leopold of Belgium [MTB 1231].

Frederick W. Spencer wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam, confessing that in June 1904 after performing as a fiddler for the Savage Club of London, he'd lied about knowing Mark Twain. He expected to perform again for the club and wished "absolution for my transgression" by meeting and performing two original compositions for Sam, "The Old Soldiers Dream," and "Arkansas Traveler." [MTP]. On or just after this day Isabel V. Lyon made notes about their meeting, "Friday or Saturday at 8 or 7.45," —Dec. 29 or 30.

"A terror—a conceited fool. He came & played—and when a Mr. Wheaton—a submarine inventor came too—Mr. Clemens finally got out of the room—and went to bed in a nervous misery—but first proper Jean brought him back & made him say Good night" [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam advising him that Mrs. Charles Henry Webb, wife of the late Charles Henry Webb, discovered a play Sam had written “probably out on the Pacific Coast,” and wanted to know if Sam wished to recover his lost play [MTP]. Note: listed as one of two for Dec. 26 but is Dec 27.

Allan McClane Hamilton wrote from NYC to solicit Sam’s aid in seeking a commuted sentence from the Governor for Albert T. Patrick, to be electrocuted Jan. 22, 1906 [MTP]. Note: Patrick was a lawyer convicted of the murder of his partner, William Marsh Rice, and sentenced at Sing Sing. The Governor pardoned Patrick.

Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens:

Yesterday a very happy little girl went home, thinking only of dear Mr. Clemens. I wish to thank you very much for being so kind. I really think you must have seen in my face that I was yearning to speak to you and it was kind of you to gratify my wish. I am very glad that I can go up and speak to you now (if ever I have that pleasure again) as I think we know each other. Trusting you will favor me with “little business” (grand treasure) which you said I should leave to you (and which I shall, as an obedient child) I am the little girl who loves you. / Gertrude Natkin [MTAq 8]. Note: On Dec. 26 Gertrude met Mark Twain with Isabel Lyon, “coming out of Carnegie Hall one day & exchanging views concerning the weather” [Feb.3, 1906 to Natkin].

December 28 Thursday – Sam went to the West Side Court to view a libel trial brought by William d’Alton Mann (1839-1920), publisher of Town Topics against Collier’s Weekly and Norman Hapgood, editor in chief of that periodical. (Mann was a Civil War officer who fought under George Armstrong Custer at Gettysburg, and rose to the rank of Colonel. See more below Times article) Sam was not there to offer testimony. The New York Times wrote of Mark Twain “a Spectator in Court” in their article, Dec. 29, p.5 “Mr. Burden Describes ‘Fads and Fancies’ Call.” (Note: two days later Mann wrote to Clemens; see entry).

The methods used in obtaining subscriptions to “Fads and Fancies” were gone into at length yesterday [Dec. 28] at the hearing before Magistrate Whitman, in the West Side Court, on the charge of criminal libel James A. Burden, Jr., who was the principal witness, told in detail of the particular experience with Robert A. Irving, editor of the New Yorker and formerly a solicitor for “Fads,” which led him to have Irving arrested on an extortion charge three weeks ago.

Mark Twain a Visitor.

Mark Twain entered the private examination room at the West Side Court just before the session began. His appearance caused a stir among the lawyers, newspaper men, and spectators assembled there. It was afterward learned that while the humorist is not to be called as a witness, something more than curiosity had prompted his attendance. Town Topics recently contained a paragraph in which Mark Twain had been made to appear as indorsing “Fads and Fancies” at a recent dinner [Dec. 21] of writers at which Mr. Carnegie was a guest. Mr. Clemens had been quoted as uttering a soft impeachment directed at Mr. Carnegie for not devoting his millions to the distribution of the works of Mark Twain in an edition de luxe on the “Fads and Fancies” pattern instead of building libraries.

It was said that Mr. Clemens did not like the item. After listening to some of the testimony, however, he went away. He refused to say anything regarding the purpose of his visit.

Note: this on Mann from The Man Who Robbed the Robber Barons (1997) by Richard T. Gregg:

“Hero of the Battle of Gettysburg, politician, investor, Federal revenue employee, newspaper publisher, inventor, and builder of railway coaches for luxury travel, founder of the Compagnie Internationale de Wagons-Lits. ...became a columnist at the beginning of the twentieth century. His ‘Town Topics, the Journal of Society’ victimized New York’s, indeed the nation’s, upper ‘400’, who literally quaked in terror at the thought of being exposed by Colonel Mann! Those who proffered loans (never repaid, naturally!) to the Colonel, to avoid their private or scandalous activities being singled out [blackmailed] in Mann's column, included:"

E. Clarence Jones, Senator Russell Alger, Dr. Seward Webb, William C. Whitney, J. Pierpont Morgan, George and Howard Gould (sons of Jay Gould), Collis P. Huntington, James R. Keene, John "Bet-a-Million" Gates, the barbed-wire king; Rosewell Flower, broker & former governor of NY, Grant B. Schley, Charles M. Schwab, Thomas Fortune Ryan, and Perry Belmont (each with amounts from $1,000 to $76,000). Note: source lists each with each amount. See Sam's disdainful letter to Mann Jan 3, 1906.

At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to Miss Gertrude Natkin's Dec. 27 note.

"It was very sweet of you, dear, to let me shake hands with you, that day; & mind, don't you forget to remember that you are to be just as sweet & dear next time, & shake again, you charming child.

This, from your oldest & latest conquest— / SL. Clemens (M.T.)" [MTP].

Sam sent a signed photograph of himself to Miss Daisy Scott, in West Kensington, London [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Letters of love and homage come pouring in and in reply to them Mr. Clemens writes such sweet little sentences. He is moved by them, and so unspoiled and simple [MTP TS 117]. Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Dinner at Mrs. Henry Draper's / 271 Madison Ave. / at 8 o'clock" [MTP TS 38].

O.J. Bowman wrote from Horseheads, N.Y. to ask Sam if he might use his influence with "Saint Andrew" Carnegie to secure an organ for their church [MTP].

Florence T. Holt wrote to ask Sam if he would dine "with us informally on Wednesday, January 10th at eight o'clock?" [MTP].

Valentine H. Surghnor sent a night telegram from Chicago: "Congratulations young man the world has enjoyed you and your sayings and is better for your having lived in it may you continue to live long and well" [MTP].

Florence V. Swain wrote from Muncie, Ind. to Sam asking if he was a descendant of the Anthony family of Va. [MTP].

Booker T. Washington sent a telegram to Sam: "It would injure our meeting and disappoint our friends as well as place me in embarrassing position to have you withdraw since your name has already been extensively advertised among our friend[s] hope very much you will remain / Booker T. Washington" [MTP].

December 29 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to Clarence C. Buel (incoming not extant).

This letter from Harper & Bros. troubles me a little, for I hate both the name and memory of Charles Henry Webb, liar and thief, and I know of no such play. I have no memory of it and of course am not going to allow it to be either published or played; and I should like to forestall any attempt to do either of these things. There may be nothing in the report, still it is a case of might be, and can you tell me how to find out in a private way without appearing in the matter myself? / Yours Sincerely [MTP].

Sam also wrote an answer to an unidentified person (now identified in Notes below): "Yes I did lay aside the 'stick' to resume it no more forever; but January 1857 was the time it happened, & Keokuk, Iowa the place" [MTP].

Note: the "stick" was the typesetter's line of type. On Dec. 23, Horace A. Kelly wrote that his father had, in 1864 or 1865 been a typesetter with Sam at the same "cases" when Clemens "suddenly one day" announced that he was "going to lay down the "Stick" forever." This is obviously Sam's answer to Kelly.

Isabel Lyon's journal # 2: "Mr. Henry Draper / 271 Madsion Ave. / To meet the members of the Astronomical and Astrophysical society at nine o'clock" [MTP TS 38].

William Courie wrote from Syracuse, NY to Sam, sending a book which he hoped he would like, with things in it he thought he might not like. He recommened several stories. Sam wrote on the top of the letter: "N.B. Always get somebody else to send your book. It will save two persons embarrassment"

Anna Palmer Draper sent an engraved invitation for Friday evening at 9 p.m. Dec. 29, to meet members of the Astronomical and Astrophysical Society [MTP].

George P. Morris wrote on The Congregationalist and Christian World letterhead to Sam. "Possibly you may like to see a tribute to your friend, which we think not only true but clever. Yours..." [MTP].

Owen P. White wrote on Wise & White (El Paso, Tex) stationery to Sam, sending a "toast" since he wasn't invited to the 70th party [MTP].

Sam inscribed a copy of George Ade's Pink Marsh. A Story of the Streets and Town (1897): "S.L. Clemens, 1905, Dec. 29. From Wm. Dean Howells." Gribben notes Sam may not have seen this book until Howells sent it to him, and cites the July 22, 1908 note of thanks to Howells [10].

December 29–31 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to the Dec. 12 from Paula Lorch (Mrs. Emil Lorch)—was he writing another great book? Lorch was in Nurnberg, Bavaria.

"I am happy to say dear Madame, that I am writing another book & that it is half finished; also that I am writing 4 other books, & they are half finished; & finally, that I do honestly intend to finish all of them, but do not really expect to finish any of them. It is an odd confession, but it is perfectly true" [MTP].

On or just after Dec. 29, Lyon answered Dr. Albert R. Halley's Dec. 25: "Have always declined to be a party to a biography of him & he will never expect to feel otherwise about it[.] Commissioned his daughter to write it" [MTP].

On or just after Dec. 29 At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam sent thanks to J.H. Nolen for his Dec. 26 letter and gift of "a little souvenir made of wood taken from" Sam's birth house in Florida, Mo.:

"Thanks / value much more because made by a boodler whom Gov. Folk has guided into honest ways to make his b & b" [MTP].

Note: The MTP catalogs this reply as "on or after 26 Dec.," but Dec. 26 is the date Nolen wrote. Three days estimated postal time is allowed here. Joseph Wingate Folk (1869-1923) lawyer, reformer, Missouri governor (1905-1909), nicknamed "Holy Joe" for his work in prosecuting corruption and political machines in St. Louis.

December 30 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to H.H Rogers.

I had already telegraphed Booker "All right, but don't commit me to talk upon any particular subject."

Are you going to spend Saturday afternoon at home, tomorrow? If so chalk your cue and expect me right after luncheon [MTHHR 604]. Note: Sam planned to speak at Carnegie Hall to honor the 25th anniversary of Tuskegee Institute by Booker T. Washington. It is not known if Rogers agreed.

William d'Alton Mann publisher of Town Topics wrote from NYC to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens:—

I read in the New York Sun of yesterday that you were present in the 54th street Magistrates' Court at the hearing of my information for libel against Collier's and Hapgood prepared to "roast Mann". Be sure, my dear

Mr. Clemens, that I am not going to hold you responsible for anything said in the newspapers, because from sad experience I know they say any damned old thing that happens to promise sensation. However, in another place I read that you were very much offended at a paragraph in my issue of this week. I premise by saying that during the preparation of this week's issue I was so very ill that I not only did not write anything for the paper, but did not even see anything that was written, or read the proofs, which is my usual custom. I have now read the only paragraph referring to you and have conferred with that member of my staff who wrote it. It was dear old Stephen Fiske who loves his little joke and he says to me that it was a New Year's skit, and not intended in any way to be objectionable to you, for whom he has the highest and kindest regard, as have I. As I read it I am quite sure that the newspapers have made themselves ridiculous in saying that you had any feeling over the paragraph, a bit of nonsense with no serious import to any one. I think it proper that I should write this word of explanation to you. Though it has not been my pleasure to see anything of you for many years other than to pay my respects as a member of the Lotos Club and shake your hand when you were entertained there, I recall frequently our evening chats at the Langham Hotel about a third of a century ago. I also recall that away back of that I invited you to contribute to the old Mobile Register of which I was the owner and Editor-in-chief, and that you were pleased to write some very clever articles on agriculture. You wrote me in accepting to contribute that you noticed that I had an agricultural department and that as you knew nothing about agriculture you would write on that subject.

I read with great care your speech at the Harvey dinner and be sure I am delighted to know by it and from other sources that you are the same old "Mark Twain" and I trust in the enjoyment of the excellent health your appearance indicates. "May you live long and prosper". With especial kind wishes for a New Year, believe me / Sincerely yours, ... [MTP]. Note: see Dec. 28 entry on Mann.

Hamilton Wright Mabie for National Institute of Arts sent Sam a notice of the next meeting at the Aldine Assoc., on Friday evening, Jan. 26, 1906, 7 p.m. [MTP].

An unidentified person wrote from Brooklyn, NY to Sam. (Only the envelope survives) [MTP]. On the back: "St. Nicholas Hotel where the family were staying for several weeks in the winter of '68"

December 31 Sunday —Sam also wrote his signature to William H. Ridgway in Contesville, Penn.: "None Genuine without this signature on the bottle: / Truly Yours / Mark Twain" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to George Standring:

Dear Standring it was good to hear from you. I wish you lived here, & close by—I should enjoy that. For I have no young friends now; except Aldrich & [Thomas] Wentworth Higginson & Julia Ward Howe & Edward Everet Hale: Howells is old, Tom Reed & John Hay were young, but they are gone.

With old-time affection [MTP].

Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam.

"The old year which was so happy toward the last is nearing its end and I want to wish you a very happy new year. I hope that I will have as pleasant an incident this new year as I had the fortune to have last year. Thanking you for your sweet letter, I am the little girl who loves you. Gertrude" [MTAq 9].

Muriel M. Pears wrote to Sam.

Always Dear and Great Mr. Clemens,

Now that I know you, I always find it quite a little difficult to address you—isn't that unreasonable and feminine? But you can see Why—If one had gone away in the least disappointed or left indifferent it would have been so easy to have gone straight ahead without concern! But as it is—why, I can never even see the mental image of that two nights' host without a quick, soft feeling of loveliness; I wish so much I could express that feeling of personal attachment; I grope about for words and phrases; and oh, I am so disappointed and disapproving of my hopeless futile efforts in the end! The only consolation I have is to reflect that, anyway, magicians always do know everything, even the things that don't come off;—and who should know if not you who tore my heart with Eve's sweet Diary, and the memorable Birthday Speech. I cannot bear to think of these things; the sorrows of life seem sometimes nearly unendurable: "Not in our dreams, O Lord, not even in our dreams!"—yet isn't that about all that our love for our friends can do, only a little and in a degree to understand something of what they have had to meet and accept. So now you see that I am trying to thank you for the remembrance and friendship expressed in the Christmas Harper and the cutting about the Banquet. I wish I had known of this, for then I would have cabled my love too, with all the rest of the world wide choir. As it is, I am sending, as soon as it comes out, one of the Queen's Carols to the Little Lady, as a token of the Season's greetings and good wishes...[MTP].

Late December – Mrs. Helen Grandin Lord, corresponding secretary of the Sorosis 1868 requested Sam's presence on a printed invitation to luncheon on Monday, January 1st, 1906 at 1 p.m. at the Waldorf-Astoria. Sometime before that date Sam wrote on the invitation for Isabel Lyon: "Decline it" [MTP].

*Paine Hired, Dictations Begin – Retired from Congo – Auto Show – Pleas for Tuskegee Gridiron Club – Swapping Lies with Joe Cannon – Tea at Columbia U.

1906 – Sometime during 1906 Sam wrote “The Captain’s Story,” which ran in $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories, first published in Sept. 1906; the piece was an extracted republication from “Some Rambling Notes of an Idle Excursion” 1877 [Camfield, bibliog.]. Also included in $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories and written probably this year: “A Deception” [ibid].

Sam wrote an essay, “Simplified Spelling” in 1906; it first ran in Letters From the Earth (1962) [Camfield’s bibliog.].

Sam also wrote “Things a Scotsman Wants to Know,” which was included in De Vinne’s private and anonymous printing of What Is Man? in August of 1906. Since he wrote parts of What Is Man? as early as 1898, he may have written this piece earlier.

Sometime during the year Isabel Lyon replied for Sam to Daniel Kiefer (incoming not extant).

I should be far from willing to have a political party named after me. I would not be willing to belong to a party which allowed its members to have political aspirations or push friends forward on political preferment.

If I had a photograph I would send it to you with pleasure, but I never keep any on hand [Paine’s 1917 Mark Twain’s Letters p.831 gives this “no date”; MTP gives 1906].

Sam also wrote a poem to Gertrude Natkin, whom he met in Dec. 1905 and called “Marjorie.”

TO THAT BONNY CHILD MARJORIE,
A Valentine for
Marjorie, Marjorie, listen to me—
Listen, you winsome witch:
Whom ever you bless with your innocent love,
That person is passing rich.
Rich though he have not a grain of gold
Save that which is in his mouth,
Rich though his silver be all in his head
And crusts for his crow be all his bread
And his wine-tank rusty with drowth.
For your love has the power of the fabled purse
That wrought charms in the old romaunt
Who had it might live in a shack or worse
And feed on dreams & air dew & verse
Yet never could he know want.

Sometime during 1906, place unknown, Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. Harry Rogers).

Saturday eve / What was it that happened, dear pal? Did I make a mistake in the hour? I suppose so; I don't generally get anything right when there is a chance to get it wrong. I thought you said 10, but although I was especially and phenomenally dull-witted, Friday morning, I just had barely penetration enough to see that I had disordered your plans & Harry's; also I was sorry—not perfunctorily sorry, but really sorry—but being embarrassed I didn't know enough to say so. So, as dulness isn't a crime, & is very very rare with me, I am fully expecting you to forgive me. O, pet of St. Peter, why didn't you tell me, you little fraud! [MTP].

Sam sent autographed notes to unidentified theater managers. Two survive (the notes; neither manager survives!) [MTP].

Sam also wrote instructions for Isabel Lyon to write to Kate D. Wiggin (Riggs).

“Tell Mrs. Riggs that it would be perfectly fair for her to have printed notices for the kind of woman with 7-small-children-&-1-at the breast who appeals to her for literary advice, referring her to the Lord. It is his business—not a sparrow falls, so it shows he is noticing” [MTP].

Sam wrote “S.L. Clemens, 1906” on the inner cover of The Trident and the Net; A Novel (1905) by Marguerite Cunliffe-Owen (de Godart) (1859-1927) [Gribben 166].

Sam also wrote on a Thursday, early in 1906 to Frank N. Doubleday: “Harvey is going to give me written permission to privately print and distribute 250 copies of ‘a small anonymous book of unknown title and contents.’” After his signature Sam added, “We have amicably settled the quarrel and the ‘Library’ is stopped without public mention” [MTP]. Note: See May 9 Lyon's journal entry, which likely puts this letter to April. The “anonymous book of unknown title”: What is Man? printed by DeVinne and not successful.

Sam also wrote to Professor Antonio Borzi, “With many thanks for his photograph, which is an excellent likeness of me when I am at my best” [MTP]. Note: Borzi looked so much like Mark Twain, that whenever he traveled people refused to believe he wasn't Twain. See Ladies' Home Journal, May 1907, p. 59, “Mark Twain and his Double.” See May, 1907.

Sometime on a Wednesday early in 1906, Adele Burden wrote a short note to Sam, “looking forward with much pleasure to seeing” him at luncheon at 1:30 on Sunday. “In the meantime, have you discovered a curious situation that existed?” [MTP]. Note: this was prior cataloged as no date. In the file: “According to Adile Burden's before 16 February 1908 letter, he & SLC meet 2 years prior.” (Not mentioned in Vol. III.)

Eleanor Jay Chapman wrote to Sam relative to her sending him Imaginary Obligations, by Frank Moore Colby (1906) [MTP]. Note: Colby (1865-1925) [Gribben 151].

Frederick Moore Clements, chemist and pharmacist in Sydney and Melbourne, Australia, wrote, pasting a news article about Susy's biography of Clemens on his advertising sheet: “Good! / You make the ‘Kid’ I make the ‘Patent medicine’” [MTP].

Susan L. Crane wrote from Elmira to Sam (pages 1&2 are missing). She related going through the old Langdon house which had been renovated, hardly recognizing it inside. She hoped Sam was warm up in Dublin as they were in “very cold weather.” Sam wrote on the left margin of page 8: “Put this in my tin box—after Auto-use” [MTP]. Note: Sam intended the letter for use in his Autobiography.

Personal Reminiscences of Henry Irving by Bram Stoker contained stories of Mark Twain, p. 166, 324. Tenney: “MT was a guest at a supper with Sarah Bernhardt one night in 1899 when she was playing Hamlet at the Adelphi; F.P. Dunne was also present. Among those listed as having dined with Irving are ‘S.L. Clemens (‘Mark Twain’)’ and ‘Mrs. and Misses S.L. Clemens’” [42].

The Lincoln Farm Association was organized to preserve Lincoln’s birthplace and establish a memorial [Printed broadside from Cowan’s auction, June 24, 2009, Lot 456]. Note: sometime after the formation, membership certificates were issued bearing the signature of Mark Twain and 21 others, and by the end of 1907 over $350,000 had been contributed by over 100,000 people to build the Lincoln Memorial. Certificates of Membership (see insert) were issued; Mark Twain was one of 22 luminaries to sign the certificates. Sometime during the year Sam wrote “A Birthplace Worth Saving” for the Lincoln Farm Assoc. pamphlet [Camfield’s bibliog.].

January – In N.Y.C. Sam wrote an aphorism to The Printer’s Home: “Let us save the to-morrows for work. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain, / Jan./06” [MTP:Mac Donnell, No. 22, Item 123].

Sam also inscribed a printed bust portrait of himself to an unidentified person: “S.L. Clemens / Truly yours / Mark Twain / Jan.06” [MTP:Hamilton catalogs, Sept. 12, 1968, Item 88].

Sam also inscribed a photograph of himself to Klaus Kaempher in Berlin: “Truly Yours / Mark Twain / Jan./ 06” [MTP].

Sam also wrote another aphorism to Charles D. Reid (brother of Robert Reid): “Truth is the most valuable possession we have. Let us economise it. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain” [MTP]. Note: Victor Fischer of the MTP supplies that the inscription is in a first edition of IA. see Robert Reid’s note below.

Isabel Lyon’s journal carried this on a loose paper at the beginning of 1906’s “Daily Reminder”:

Tampering with the sentinel

Mr. Clemens said this of someone who tried to reach him through me. Mr. Clemens closed the matter & it is not my place to open it again [MTP TS 1].

Robert Reid wrote from NYC to Sam.

“My brother Charles D. Reid of Springfield, Mass. one of the best ever, but who is not rich like me! (in friends) spent of his brow-sweat to purchase this book on the strength of my ... promise to get you to write a little word to him in it of what you think of it...forgive me!” [MTP]. Note: the book was LA.

American Journal of Theology published “Fresh Light on the Dark Continent,” by L. Call Barnes, p. 192-9. Tenney: “a review-article, discussing a number of books about Africa. On p. 198: ‘Several succinct statements of the case against the Congo State are available in this country. But the brochure which is likely to do the most popular execution is King Leopold’s Soliloquy, by Mark Twain. The great humorist never wielded his pen more pointedly in behalf of honesty and humanity. It is significant, too, that he puts added emphasis in his second edition, issued since the publication of the report of the king’s commission” [42].

Bookman (NY) published “The Story of Mark Twain’s Debts” by Frederick A. King, p. 519-22; reprinted in June [Tenney 42].

Strand Magazine ran “Portraits of Celebrities at Different Ages—New Series. ‘Mark Twain’” p. 721-3, picturing Samuel Clemens at ages 18, 27, 33, 48, and 62. The identical article ran in the Dec. 1905 issue.

January 1 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y.C. Sam replied to Gertrude Natkin’s Dec. 31 note.

Don't forget, dear, to make your New-Year good-resolutions. Not that I think you need any reforming, for I don't; I love you plenty well enough, just as you are.

Happy New-Year! I forgot to say it before: this comes of being 17 times as old as you are, & accordingly cripple in my mind & forgetful [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean, 11; 1:20, 7 p.m., very severe.

"The last time I attended school was at the end of 1846." Mr. Clemens wrote that this morning. About 60 years ago—a little boy of ten.

Tonight I took a little book down to Mr. Clemens, a little book sent me by Belle Greene, "The Childhood of Christ", translated from the Latin of an old monkish manuscript found in a monastery in the Saly Kammergut. Translation by Harry Greene. The book came as a dampness to me, but as I began to cut the leaves I found it fragrant with legendary love, and read it to its finishing page with delight. Mr. Clemens read a part of it too, and found it delightful, but he was "afraid it was a lie" [MTP TS 1-2; Gribben 275 in part]. Note: the book was a translation by Henry Copley Greene of the Gospel of the Infant according to St. Peter, from the New Testament Apocryphal Books.

Virginia Frazer Boyle wrote New Year wishes to Sam [MTP].

John M. Leach wrote to Sam from Montreal, thinking his best book was RI, and desiring to "procure one of your productions," specifically "the story 'of Joseph and his brethren' as repeated to his Sunday Scholl class by Scotty Briggs" [MTP].

Mrs. Helen Grandin Lord sent a filled-in engraved invitation by Sorosis 1868, for a luncheon on Jan. 10, 1906 at 1 p.m. at the Waldorf-Astoria [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote & circled at the top "Decline it".

January 2 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

"I left the River for good in '61." Mr. Clemens said that this evening at 6:15 when I went in with a little batch of mail—over his head wreaths of smoke were hovering and he had the [NY] Evening Post for his reading together with the first volume of Gibbon's Rome. Among the letters I carried in was one from Col. Mann, scared he is because a squib got into Town Topics about Mr. Clemens and he had heard that Mr. Clemens didn't like it, and so he wrote fearing Mr. Clemens would sue. But Mr. Clemens said "that Colonel isn't big enough game for me—so he needn't be scared. Czars and Leopolds are my quarry these days." At dinner he warmed to the subject of Gibbons and his Rome, and Gibbon the man, whose followings of many creeds made him finally an unbeliever. Church of England, Romanist, Presbyterian, Buddhist. He tried them all. And then Mr. Clemens told of the pretty Geneva girl that Gibbon had been in love with and engaged to—but it was broken off by Gibbon père as a person of no consequence. She married Hecker though, and was the mother of Mme. de Stael with Rosseau for her maiden champion; so much for the inconsequential ones of this earth [MTP TS 2-3; also Gribben 503, 256 in part]. Note: Edward Gibbon's The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. See Sam's answer to Mann's Dec. 30, 1905 on Jan. 3.

Will M. Clemens wrote from Salmagundi Club notepaper, NYC, to ask permission for him to "come in some afternoon for a bit of chat" [MTP]. Sam wrote at the top, "No answer."

Mrs. William T. Lees wrote from Brooklyn to Sam, telling a humorous anecdote about Sam's being overcharged by a cabman. Her little son exclaimed, "what a pity they took away Mark Twain's political license—will he write any more books?" She asked for his autograph [MTP].

James A. Renwick wrote to Miss Lyon to acknowledge Sam's Jan. rent check. He wished Happy New Year [MTP].

January 3 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to William D’Alton Mann.

I supposed its intent was malicious, but if Fiske wrote it it wasn’t. I went to the Court for a very definite purpose; but as I have not spoken to any one about it, no one knows what it was but myself.

Well, well, well, Colonel dear, what a flurry you did make among the other sheep when you plunged into that gilded fold in your wolf-skin, with blood & slander in your eye! I have admired you for a whole generation; from away back in those London days which your letter lights up in the night of my memory & makes visible again; I have watched you move on from crime to crime, from glory to glory, ever victorious, ever exultant, ever beating the jail & the sheriff, strewing thick your splendid path with the rags and fragments of the raped, the bilked & the blackmailed—and always, always I was rejoicing, always I was proud of you; but never have I admired you as I admire you to-day, never have I been distinctly grateful to you until now—now that you have instituted & established a New Aristocracy, the Aristocracy of Fear, & named & catalogued its membership, & appointed for its escutcheon the trembling slave kneeling under the uplifted lash and buying mercy at fifteen hundred dollars & glad to get it at the price!

Let them call you harsh names—don’t you mind; you have done a splendid public service, & everybody knows it in his private heart: you have elected the timid ones to inextinguishable laughter; you have furnished them a sore which will never heal; you have sold them a Book which will outlast Homer & be worth to their posterity a hundred times the price that was paid you for it—and will not be purchasable even at that handsome rate—a Book which will still be illustrious centuries after Shakespeare & the Breeches Bible shall have faded from the world’s interest & become vague tradition. (Excuse these enthusiasms, they are wrong from me Colonel dear!) Also, you have done the imperial City another great & precious service; for you have proved that within its wide boundaries there does exist one whole man, one man, whom you couldn’t scare. I saw him in the Court, & when your pals were through I heard him testify — oh, but that was a refreshing breath in a mephitic atmosphere! Surely you admire that man, Colonel; why, you cannot help it, for he is your creation; that is to say, you are the Columbus that discovered him after all the New York world had believed he didn’t exist.

Give yourself no concern about the world’s censures, dear Colonel. To be censured, maligned, traduced—it is the common lot. I have not even escaped it myself; & yet where I have committed one crime you have committed a hundred. Moreover, we are old, now, & nothing matters much for you & me, oh, friend of happier days, comrade of the unreturning past! in a little while—oh, such a little while!—you will be borrowing a fan & I a halo. And yet it may not be that way—oh, who can tell, in this uncertain world? But no matter; let happen what may, I am yours for now, & then, & always / Mark [MTP]. Note: see Dec. 28, 1905 entry; Clemens observed Mann’s libel suit proceedings against Norman Hapgood.

In the evening Twain dined at the Players Club which made him an honorary member. The New York Tribune, p.7 reported the event (as did the Times and other city papers):

PLAYERS WELCOME MARK TWAIN.

A dinner was given for Mark Twain at the Players, No. 16 Gramercy Park South, last night by his friends to welcome him as an honorary member of that club. He has belonged to the Players since its foundation, but now his associates have made him a member for life. Brander Matthews presided. The guest of the evening rose as ever to the occasion, in which his humor and pathos mixed the laughter and tears. The other speakers besides Mr. Clemens were Richard Watson Gilder, Dr. John H. Finley, Frank O. Millet, Daniel Frohman, Evart J. Wendell, Robert Reid, Willard Metcalf, William Bispham and Charles Genung.

Paine writes of the evening and of a suggestion by Charles Harvey Genung (b. ca. 1863), which later would become a reality:

The night of January 5, 1906, [see note below] remains a memory apart from other dinners. Brander Matthews presided, and Gilder was there, and Frank Millet and Willard Metcalf and Robert Reid, and a score of others; some of them are dead now, David Munro among them. It so happened that my seat was nearly facing the guest of the evening, who, by custom of The Players, is placed at the side and not at the end of the long table. He was no longer frail and thin, as when I had first met him. He had a robust, rested look; his complexion had the tints of a miniature painting. Lit by the glow of the shaded candles, relieved against the dusk richness of the walls, he made a picture of striking beauty. One could not take his eyes from it, and to one guest at least it stirred the farthest memories. I suddenly saw the interior of a farm-house sitting-room in the Middle West, where I had first heard uttered the name of Mark Twain, and where night after night a group gathered around the evening lamp to hear the tale of the first pilgrimage, which, to a boy of eight, had seemed only a wonderful poem and fairy tale. To Charles Harvey Genung, who sat next to me, I whispered something of this, and how, during the thirty-six years since then, no other human being to me had meant quite what Mark Twain had meant—in literature, in life, in the ineffable thing which means more than either, and which we call “inspiration,” for lack of a truer word. Now here he was, just across the table. It was the fairy tale come true.

Genung said:

His remark seemed a pleasant courtesy, and was put aside as such. When he persisted I attributed it to the general bloom of the occasion, and a little to the wine, maybe, for the dinner was in its sweetest stage just then—that happy, early stage when the first glass of champagne, or the second, has proved its quality. He urged, in support of his idea, the word that Munro had brought concerning the Nast book, but nothing of what he said kindled any spark of hope. I could not but believe that some one with a larger equipment of experience, personal friendship, and abilities had already been selected for the task. By and by the speaking began—delightful, intimate speaking in that restricted circle—and the matter went out of my mind.

When the dinner had ended, and we were drifting about the table in general talk, I found an opportunity to say a word to the guest of the evening about his Joan of Arc, which I had recently re-read. To my happiness, he detained me while he told me the long-ago incident which had led to his interest, not only in the martyred girl, but in all literature. I think we broke up soon after, and descended to the lower rooms. At any rate, I presently found the faithful Charles Genung privately reasserting to me the proposition that I should undertake the biography of Mark Twain. Perhaps it was the brief sympathy established by the name of Joan of Arc, perhaps it was only Genung’s insistent purpose—his faith, if I may be permitted the word. Whatever it was, there came an impulse, in the instant of bidding good-by to our guest of honor, which prompted me to say:

“May I call to see you, Mr. Clemens, some day?”

And something—dating from the primal atom, I suppose—prompted him to answer:

“Yes, come soon.”

This was on Wednesday night, or rather on Thursday morning, for it was past midnight, and a day later I made an appointment with his secretary to call on Saturday [MTB 1260-62] Note: Paine initially misdates this as Jan. 5, even though he correctly identifies it as Wed. night into Thurs. a.m. Later printings of MTB correct this error and makes it Jan. 3.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Sewenhaupt. 9-

Mr. Clemens has just come home at midnight from a dinner at “The Players” where he was made an honorary member. It was a great night for all the rest of them, because he had stayed away so long—he came up the stairs in happy mood & a Japanese paper frog hanging from his coat lapel by its hind leg. This he handed to me as I went down the stairs to greet him. He knew I would be up and waiting to register his safe return.

Mr. Robert Reid had come in a cab and away they went in a gay mood, and Reid brought him home. This was in celebration of his return after his enraged resignation about 3 years back, when an ignorant book-keeper had posted “S.L. Clemens, for non-payment of dues.” He has mentioned it to me several times and of his happiness when club members sent him a winsome invitation:

“Will ye no come back again?”

Better love ye canna know” and tonight he went back.

This Morning Mr. Clemens read aloud to me Jose Rizal's wonderful poem "My last thought" written the night before his execution as a traitor, and then he read the poem he wrote after reading Rizal's beautiful work. It is equally moving.

Then he answered Col. Mann's letter [MTP TS 3-4; Gribben 582 in part] Note: Jose y Alonso Rizal (1861-1896). This date is duplicated with slight variations on two different sheet. What is used here is a combination of both.

The New York Times, p18, "Patrick's Fight for Life," announced, "Mark Twain Signs His Petition for Clemency," asking Governor Frank Wayland Higgins (1856-1907) to stay the Jan. 22 execution of Albert T. Patrick (ca.1866-1940) for the murder of William Marsh Rice (1816-1900), multimillionaire businessman who bequeathed his estate (some ten million) to Rice University, Houston. This was one of the first sensational murder trials of the 20th century; Patrick was Rice's attorney; he forged a will and killed Rice with chloroform. Patrick's death sentence was commuted by Higgins in 1906 and in 1912 he was pardoned by New York Governor John Dix, due to doubtful or unreliable medical evidence and contradictory testimony given by Rice's valet, Charles F. Jones, a co-conspirator who turned state's evidence. Interestingly, the prosecutor in the case was William Travers Jerome, a man Clemens had openly supported for district attorney. Patrick was ultimately disbarred in 1930. See NY Times, Feb. 12, 1940, p.10 "A.T. Patrick Dies; Won Murder Fight."

Other newspapers reported more of the 100 or so who signed the petition to stay Patrick's execution, including The Macon Daily Telegraph (Georgia) of Jan. 6, p.1 "Grover Cleveland and Mark Twain Sign."

John G. Carlisle, President of the Kentuckians wrote to invite Sam to a dinner at Delmonico's on Jan. 27 at 7:30 p.m. [MTP]. Note: Sam did not go; he was in Washington, D.C. on Jan. 27.

Laura K. Hudson wrote to Sam, recalling an article her husband read some 20 years prior, about Sam telling the story of three men who came to a miner's hut and gave their names as Longfellow, Holmes and Whittier. She wanted to know the whereabouts of "this delightful child" of Sam's muse [MTP]. Note: Sam replied on Jan. 12. Of course this was Clemens' embarrassing Whittier's Birthday dinner toast in Boston, Dec. 17, 1877.

Azel Stevens Roe, Jr. replied to Sam's of Dec. 29.

It was a great pleasure to get it & find that I was not forgotten. I have been away in the Far West for fifteen years, but am now living at the dear old home where in the little summer house at the foot of the garden. You wrote your name on the window at my Mother's request. It is still there & recalls to my mind when I see it those past happy hours.

I can never forget the charm of that night at your house in Hartford, when you read aloud to me, "Tom Sawyer" in manuscript, & after it was finished, at midnight, we went to the Piano & I played the Russian Hymn at your request & you sang all the fourteen verses [MTP]. Note: Roe had been a voice and music teacher in Virginia City in 1867 and a tutor in San Francisco in 1863, likely when he met Clemens. See Vol. I.

George Thomson Wilson sent Sam an engraved invitation to meet Mr. Patrick Francis Murphy, at Delmonico's on Jan. 3 at 7:30 p.m. [MTP]. Note: this likely sent before Jan. 3 as an RSVP was requested.

January 4 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today young Mr. [Horace] Ashton came and made 8 photographs of Mr. Clemens in his bed. Not very good. This morning Mr. Clemens was in one of his jovial moods when Jean came into his room, and as she grabbed his head she spoke of the time in Venice long ago when he appeared before his astonished family with his head shaven. His hair was coming out, he thought, and heroic treatment—heroic for the family—would be the only remedy. When Jean commented upon his appearance, he said, yes, his head had looked like a "bladder of snuff" [MTP TS 5].

Booker T. Washington wrote to Sam:

Of course we shall expect you to speak in any manner that you see fit at Carnegie Hall on the evening of the 22d.

I am sending you a copy of my last annual report, an illustrated pamphlet called "The Successful Training of the Negro," etc.; there may be some facts in these that you might like to refer to. / Yours truly, ... [MTP].

January 5 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Herbert Gunnison (1858-1932), publisher of the Brooklyn Eagle, declining an invitation (not extant) [Christie's auction 24 May 2002, Lot 1, Sale 1083]. Note: Gunnison was an "avid collector who sought to obtain material from a variety of 19th century personalities in the political, military, religious and cultural spectrums. The collection contains approximately 2000 items" [Ibid].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean is not well. Not only has her malady increased, but her whole physical condition is at low ebb, and the child calls for great waves of love from those of us who care. Last evening at the Volpe Concert Mrs. Gilder spoke of her beauty and her gracefulness, and it is true. In these last few days a sadness has settled over her, a gentleness that is pitiful, and you long for the masterful young creature whose powerful moods spread consternation, but always back of the moods there are an individuality, a frankness of a very high order.

Poultney Bigelow joined us a tea today after he had had a chat with Mr. Clemens. We talked Dublin, for he wants a good working place, and Mrs. Frothingham has offered him an acre. Such an impulsive man he is. He'd have to have a history. Temperaments like his are pretty apt to spring over conventionalities. I think they can't help it [MTP TS 5-6; Hill 120 in part].

Sam wrote per Isabel Lyon to an unidentified man: "Dear Sir, / I thank you very much for the compliment of your invitation, but I am obliged to decline it as I have made all the engagements for this year that I can keep. / Sincerely Yours..." [MTP: Alexander Autographs auction, Nov. 16, 2002].

Ethel de Buriatte, a confessed stranger wrote to Sam, and related reading his description of a French duel, which she thought terribly funny, to a friend, who didn't laugh. The friend confessed that her brother, age 9, used to write like that but his father "whipped it out of him" [MTP].

James Verner Long, American consul in Patios, Greece wrote sending Clemens "The Messenger of the Gods" with 70th birthday wishes. Long had "many pleasant memories" of times together in Florence, Italy [MTP]. Note: his stationery, US Consulate, Florence, left over.

Albert Bigelow Paine made an appointment with Isabel Lyon to see Sam on the following day about writing Twain's biography [MTB 1262].

January 6 Saturday – Clara Clemens continued to suffer a throat affliction. On this day she returned to the Norfolk sanitarium; she would return on Jan. 9, then go to Atlantic City [IVL TS 4; Hill 121].

Albert Bigelow Paine called on Sam at 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. about the possibility of writing Mark Twain's biography. Paine writes of the meeting:

I arrived at 21 Fifth Avenue and was shown into that long library and drawing-room combined, and found a curious and deep interest in the books and ornaments along the shelves as I waited. Then I was summoned, and I remember ascending the stairs, wondering why I had come on so futile an errand, and trying to think of an excuse to offer for having come at all.

He was propped up in bed—in that stately bed-sitting, as was his habit, with his pillows placed at the foot, so that he might have always before him the rich, carved beauty of its headboard. He was delving through a copy of Huckleberry Finn, in search of a paragraph concerning which some random correspondent had asked explanation. He was commenting unfavorably on this correspondent and on miscellaneous letter-writing in general. He pushed the cigars toward me, and the talk of these matters ran along and blended into others more or less personal. By and by I told him what so many thousands had told him before: what he had meant to me, recalling the childhood impressions of that large, black-and-gilt-covered book with its wonderful pictures and adventures—the Mediterranean pilgrimage. Very likely it bored him—he had heard it so often—and he was willing enough, I dare say, to let me change the subject and thank him for the kindly word which David Munro had brought. I do not remember what he said then, but I suddenly found myself suggesting that out of his encouragement had grown a hope—though certainly it was something less—that I might some day undertake a book about himself. I expected the chapter to end at this point, and his silence which followed seemed long and ominous.

He said, at last, that at various times through his life he had been preparing some autobiographical matter, but that he had tired of the undertaking, and had put it aside. He added that he had hoped his daughters would one day collect his letters; but that a biography— a detailed story of personality and performance, of success and failure— was of course another matter, and that for such a work no arrangement had been made. He may have added one or two other general remarks; then, turning those piercing agate-blue eyes directly upon me, he said:

“When would you like to begin?”

There was a dresser with a large mirror behind him. I happened to catch my reflection in it, and I vividly recollect saying to it mentally: “This is not true; it is only one of many similar dreams.” But even in a dream one must answer, and I said:

“Whenever you like. I can begin now.”

He was always eager in any new undertaking.

“Very good,” he said. “The sooner, then, the better. Let’s begin while we are in the humor. The longer you postpone a thing of this kind the less likely you are ever to get at it.”

This was on Saturday, as I have stated. I mentioned that my family was still in the country, and that it would require a day or two to get established in the city. I asked if Tuesday, January 9th, would be too soon to begin. He agreed that Tuesday would do, and inquired something about my plan of work. Of course I had formed nothing definite, but I said that in similar undertakings a part of the work had been done with a stenographer, who had made the notes while I prompted the subject to recall a procession of incidents and episodes, to be supplemented with every variety of material obtainable—letters and other documentary accumulations. Then he said:

“I think I should enjoy dictating to a stenographer, with some one to prompt me and to act as audience. The room adjoining this was fitted up for my study. My manuscripts and notes and private books and many of my letters are there, and there are a trunkful or two of such things in the attic. I seldom use the room myself. I do my writing and reading in bed. I will turn that room over to you for this work. Whatever you need will be brought to you. We can have the dictation here in the morning, and you can put in the rest of the day to suit yourself. You can have a key and come and go as you please.”

That was always his way. He did nothing by halves; nothing without unquestioning confidence and prodigality. He got up and showed me the lovely luxury of the study, with its treasures of material. I did not believe it true yet. It had all the atmosphere of a dream, and I have no distinct recollection of how I came away. When I returned to The Players and found Charles Harvey Genung there, and told him about it, it is quite certain that he perjured himself when he professed to believe it true and pretended that he was not surprised [MTB 1262-65]. Note: see Tuesday Jan. 9 entry.

H.H. Rogers spent a large part of the day on the witness stand in the Missouri suit to oust Standard Oil from the state. The Kansas City Star (Mo.) ran “Made Rogers Wince” on the front page, which mentioned Mark Twain:

Mr. Rogers had an engagement to play billiards with Mark Twain this afternoon, but the easy way with which Herman S. Hadley rushed it aside was more characteristic of his Kansas antecedents than even of the Missourians whom he represents. ...

Mr. Rogers went on the stand at 12 o’clock and again at 2. The first time he was under fire for an hour. The second time he was on the stand nearly three hours. ...

Rogers is almost a type of man to himself. The West does not develop exactly his type. Socially he has a few intimates with whom he is very pleasant. Mark Twain is his pet and his guest at luncheon in the Standard Oil building as often as the humorist will accept an invitation to be there. His efforts [Rogers] as a humorist to-day showed that in one fold at least he does not rank up with his friend.

B. (not further identified) wrote to Sam. “As plate etchings can be so very cheaply procured now-a days a publication such as is proposed is perfectly feasible. There is not a Sunday paper n the U.S. Canada England Australia and South Africa that will not be glad to help to give the notes of dear old [Felix] Pace to the world and they will be translated into French and German as sure as the sun shines.” B. urged Sam to “get a syndicate or a publisher onto this matter,” and wanted “a reasonable royalty on sales.” [MTP]. Note: Felix Pace not further identified.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Albert Bigelow Paine came this morning to talk over the matter of writing Mr. Clemens’s Biography. Mr. Clemens has consented to have some shorthand come and take down the chat that is to flow from Mr. Clemens’s lips. I hope it may prove inspirational. The commercial machine (Columbia Graphophonic) that Mr. Clemens was looking upon as a boon hasn’t proved so. He dictated his birthday speech into it, and a few letters, but that is all. There is something infinitely sad in the voice as it is reproduced from the cylinders, and how stricken it would be to hear the voice of one gone. Santa C. when to Norfolk, Katie, too. Mr. Clemens and I went to see “The Lion and the Mouse.” A clean little play, but so stupid [MTP TS 6].

The Lion and the Mouse (play) by Charles Klein (1867-1915) at the

Lyceum Theatre in N.Y.C. See also Gribben 384. See insert ad

Harper’s Weekly published a full-page drawing of Twain receiving a laurel wreath from a girl dressed as Joan of Arc at the Dec. 21, 1905 dinner of the Society of Illustrators [Tenney 42].

January 7 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

This morning Mr. Clemens was speaking of Roosevelt and his great blustering, and he said that “he is magnificent when his ears are pricked up and his tail is in the air and he attacks a lightning express, only to be lost in the dust the express creates.” Col. Harvey and Dorothy [Harvey] came this afternoon and took Mr. Clemens off in the ‘mobile. Mr. Clemens never speaks heedlessly, he never says things without backbones in them and he never, never wastes words. This morning he illuminated the subject of the terrible cruelty of God. He threw the awful searchlight of his fearless speech upon it and he is so convincing that you feel as if you’d been in the presence of God himself, and when you leave the room your head dizzy and ringing with his contempt of the cowardice of the clergy [MTP TS 6-7].

January 8 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Thomas S. Barbour resigning from the Congo Reform Assoc.

I have retired from the Congo.

I was not able to do it until this morning. For several weeks I have been trying to get back to where I started, something more than a year ago, when I told Mr. Morel I would write an article on the Congo & stop there. That I would not tie myself to any movement of any kind, nor be officially connected with a movement of any kind, in a way which would lay duties & obligations upon me; for I know myself, & I knew that the moment I should begin to feel my perfect freedom menaced, I would immediately tear myself loose & be free.

What have I been doing? Dreaming? Walking in my sleep? It looks so. I wake up & find myself tacitly committed to journeys, & speeches, & soon—perfectly appalling activities. To do those things would infallibly lay further burdens upon me, & presently I should find myself tangled up in the Congo matter, permanently, exclusively, & beyond hope of honorable escape. It freezes the blood in my veins to think of it. These energies, these persistences, are entirely out of my line & foreign to my make. My instincts & interests are merely literary, they rise no higher; & I scatter from one interest to another, lingering nowhere. I am not a bee, I am a lightning-bug.

I shall not make a second step in the Congo matter, because that would compel a third, in spite of me—& a fourth, & a fifth, & so on. I mean, a deliberate second step; what I may do upon sudden impulse is another matter—they are out of my control. If I had Morel's splendid equipment of energy, brains, diligence, concentration, persistence—but I haven't; he is a 'mobile, I am a wheelbarrow [MTP].

Notes: Edmund Dene Morel (originally Georges Eduard Pierre Achille Morel de Ville – he may have changed his name to get his signature to fit on a check) (1873-1924) was one of the three founders of the English Congo Reform Association; see Mar. 23, 1904 entry. As with the Anti-Imperialist League, Sam had no problem allowing the use of his name, but did not wish ongoing responsibilities.

Hawkins writes of Sam's various motivations for resigning from the Congo Reform Assoc:

Twain's reasons for abandoning the movement after more than a year of activity were numerous. In his Mr. Clemens and Mark Twain, Justin Kaplan suggests that Twain's devotion to Congo reform was limited by fear of offending his audience and risking another financial failure: "By 1905 his celebrity had become addictive and had begun to blunt his purpose as a public conscience" [366]. But while Twain was certainly shaken by his bankruptcy twelve years earlier, no evidence indicates that his withdrawal from the Congo movement turned on such narrow concerns. Twain did have some personal reasons for quitting, but, to his credit, they did not include anxiety over his popularity and income. Acting overzealously, the leaders of the C.R.A., who saw the beloved author as their best instrument for influencing public opinion, began putting inordinate demands on his time. ...

Another, less personal, consideration finally sealed his resignation. At the beginning of 1906, the reform movement was making discouragingly little progress. Despite reformers' pleas, the United States government refused to intervene in the Congo. Throughout his involvement, Twain had believed the United States was a party to the Berlin Act of 1885 and therefore had a legal obligation to supervise Congo rule. In January, 1906, the State Department told him he was mistaken; the United States Senate had never ratified the Berlin Act. Twain consequently got angry with the reformers, whom he believed had misinformed him, and he abruptly decided that no basis for a reform movement existed in the United States [149-150].

Sam also wrote to Seymour Eaton.

I have rec'd the circular of the Booklovers Corporation, making its time-worn appeal for the cash of gulls, in the time-worn fashion. I am sorry to see this; I have been persuading myself that you would reform—partially reform, I mean; partially—for I have never known, in the case of any petty thief, of a reform that covered the whole ground, after he had once gotten habituated to the feel of the coin in another man's pocket. Come, you can partially reform if you'll try. Remember what the apostle says: to wit, that while the lamp holds out to burn, the meanest swindler may return.

Yours with faint faint hope— [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Booker T. Washington.

"That suits me exactly: I will choose my subject to suit myself; & shall probably choose it that night, (22^d) on the platform. Therefore, if any one asks you what it is going to be, you can answer with truth that you don't know & that I don't know" [MTP].

Sam dined with Alice M. Ditson (Mrs. Charles H. Ditson) and went to a performance of Tosca [Hill 123; IVL TS 4]. Note: The NY Times advertised the Tosca performance at the Metropolitan Opera House at 8 p.m., starring Emma Eames, Caruso, Scotti, Rossi, and Dufriche [Jan. 8, p.14].

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

All day a rush and a swoop of work, letters and telephoning. This evening Mr. Clemens dined with Mrs. Ditson and her Boston friend, a delightful woman, “looks just as if she’d stepped out of the New Testament and hadn’t got used to her surroundings yet.” When he came home he slipped up to Jean’s room where we were chatting and told us how he had left the opera where they went after dinner—Tosca—and found Dr. Quintard in the lobby, who said that C.C. returns from Norfolk tomorrow. I know he had a good time even if he doesn’t like opera, for he came in with his eyes as shining and lovely and merry as they were the night he came home from the Players with the Japanese frog hanging from his button hole.
Mother and I went to Cecchina’s tonight [a restaurant nearby] [MTP TS 7].

George S. Ferguson wrote from Glasgow, Scotland to Sam, asking why Clemens used the name “Ferguson” for various guides in IA —“a good old historic Scottish name...” He had read in the newspapers about his 70th party and offered his congratulations [MTP].

Frederick D. Grant wrote from Army Headquarters on Governor’s Island, NY to introduce his friend, Harry Windsor Dearborn to Sam. Dearborn and Grant were interested in building a monument to Robert Fulton [MTP].

Notes: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Mr. Clemens saw Mr. Dearborn & consented to become a director of the Fulton Monument Organization.” Inside she wrote: “Mr. Clemens went to a meeting at the Waldorf on Jan. 17th. / Feb. 12 Mr Clemens & I were in the drawing room at the Gelli portrait when the door bell rang—I suggested he might like to escape, but as he attempted to flit from the room on tip toe the alertness of Philip had opened the door too soon—Mr. Dearborn came in laughing at the way he caught Mr. Clemens in flight.”

Hugh P. McCormick for the Congo Reform Assoc. wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: not found at MTP.

January 8 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote again to Thomas S. Barbour. A draft fragment survives. Sam asks, “What to do with the pamphlet?”, his essay “King Leopold’s Soliloquy” that the Congo Reform Assoc. had printed. Sam thought the American branch of the Assoc. should “go out of business for the reason that the agitation of butcheries can only wring people’s hearts unavailingly...unbacked by the American government.” [MTP]. Note: Sam’s recent appeal to Theodore Roosevelt evidently did not bring fruit.

January 8 after – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Edmund Dene Morel thanking him for a map sent and enclosed a copy of his recent letter to Thomas S. Barbour, who he felt worked “hard & well” but alone for the Congo Reform Assoc. in America but had no help. “He cannot land this giant enterprise by himself. It needs an organization like U. S. Steel” [MTP].

January 8–February 12 – Sometime during this period, Sam wrote to the Robert Fulton Memorial Association, a letter which ran in the Feb. 18 issue, p. 20 of the NY Times:

I am sure that but for his genius and energy steam navigation would have remained in the egg centuries longer than it did. He made the vacant oceans and the idle rivers useful after the unprejudiced had been wondering for a hundred million years what they were for. He found these properties a liability; he left them an asset. It is the peculiar honor and privilege of our commercializing age to estimate this majestic service at its splendid and rightful value. The monument is deserved, and it will be built. / Mark Twain

January 9 Tuesday – Sam began a series of Autobiographical Dictations (hereinafter referred to as A.D.) for Albert Bigelow Paine. Paine brought Miss Josephine Hobby, a part-time stenographer, employed by Century Magazine for many years (she would be fired in Sept. 1908 by Isabel Lyon). Miss Hobby had also worked for Charles Dudley Warner and Mary Mapes Dodge [MTB 1266]. The dictations continued with fair regularity throughout 1906 and 7, thereafter intermittently. The last recorded dictation was on Dec. 29, 1909 [MTHHR 607n1]. Note: MTHHR 607n1 uses Jan. 6, 1906 as the beginning date, which was Paine's first visit to Clemens' N.Y.C. home; Miss Hobby had not yet been hired and it's unlikely any dictation was made on that day. See also AMT 1: 250-254 in which Sam dictated first a summary of the difficulties of his autobiography, and then waded into a discussion of Big Bonanza days in Nevada, including segments on Joe Goodman.

Paine writes of this day and the images which stayed in his mind long after:

On Tuesday, January 9, 1906, I was on hand with a capable stenographer—Miss Josephine Hobby, who had successively, and successfully, held secretarial positions with Charles Dudley Warner and Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, and was therefore peculiarly qualified for the work in hand.

Clemens, meantime, had been revolving our plans and adding some features of his own. He proposed to double the value and interest of our employment by letting his dictations continue the form of those earlier autobiographical chapters, begun with Redpath in 1885, and continued later in Vienna and at the Villa Quarto. He said he did not think he could follow a definite chronological program; that he would like to wander about, picking up this point and that, as memory or fancy prompted, without any particular biographical order. It was his purpose, he declared, that his dictations should not be published until he had been dead a hundred years or more—a prospect which seemed to give him an especial gratification.

I ought to state that he was in bed when we arrived, and that he remained there during almost all of these earlier dictations, clad in a handsome silk dressing-gown of rich Persian pattern, propped against great snowy pillows. He loved this loose luxury and ease, and found it conducive to thought. On the little table beside him, where lay his cigars, papers, pipes, and various knickknacks, shone a reading-lamp, making more brilliant the rich coloring of his complexion and the gleam of his shining hair. There was daylight, too, but it was north light, and the winter days were dull. Also the walls of the room were a deep, unreflecting red, and his eyes were getting old. The outlines of that vast bed blending into the luxuriant background, the whole focusing to the striking central figure, remain in my mind to-day—a picture of classic value.

He dictated that morning some matters connected with the history of the Comstock mine; then he drifted back to his childhood, returning again to the more modern period, and closed, I think, with some comments on current affairs. It was absorbingly interesting; his quaint, unhurried fashion of speech, the unconscious movement of his hands, the play of his features as his fancies and phrases passed in mental review and were accepted or waved aside. We were watching one of the great literary creators of his time in the very process of his architecture. We constituted about the most select audience in the world enjoying what was, likely enough, its most remarkable entertainment. When he turned at last and inquired the time we were all amazed that two hours and more had slipped away.

"And how much I have enjoyed it!" he said. "It is the ideal plan for this kind of work. Narrative writing is always disappointing. The moment you pick up a pen you begin to lose the spontaneity of the personal relation, which contains the very essence of interest. With shorthand dictation one can talk as if he were at his own dinner-table—always a most inspiring place. I expect to dictate all the rest of my life, if you good people are willing to come and listen to it."

The dictations thus begun continued steadily from week to week, and always with increasing charm. We never knew what he was going to talk about, and it was seldom that he knew until the moment of beginning; then he went drifting among episodes, incidents, and periods in his irresponsible fashion; the fashion of table-conversation, as he said, the methodless method of the human mind. It was always delightful, and always amusing, tragic, or instructive, and it was likely to be one of these at one instant, and another the next. I felt myself the most fortunate biographer in the world, as undoubtedly I was, though not just in the way that I first imagined [MTB 1266-8].

Note on Autobiographical Dictations. The print-volumes released by MTP (Vol. 1 was published in 2010; others forthcoming) undoubtedly will impact study in this area. A full exposition of each day's dictations is beyond the scope of this work, and should be referenced there. What may be useful as a summary beyond this work is the notation developed by Kiskis in “Dead Man Talking: Mark Twain’s Autobiographical Dictation” which begins on Feb. 1, 1906 and separates each dictation session into three main subjects: Family, Career, and Human Race. Other primary materials, such as Isabel Lyon’s journal/daily reminders, also inform this work.

The New York Times, p.16, “Plans to Help the Blind,” announced that Mark Twain would preside at the first public meeting of the NY State Assoc. for Promoting Interests of the Blind on Mar. 29. Joseph H. Choate and Helen Keller would speak.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Mr. Paine came this morning at 11 with his stenographer—and for an hour Mr. Clemens talked. I’ve kept notes of the talk—but I didn’t keep notes of his wonderful rising color and his brilliant eyes as he warmed to the subject of the Big Bonanza Mine and its fall to nothing. He told all about Joe Goodman too. Afterward Mr. Paine and I had a little chat in the study over the autobiographical drawer. It had always been his dream, ambition, to write Mr. Clemens’s biography, but never came close to the prospect of it until Mr. Clemens said to Mr. David Munro that Paine’s book on Thomas Nast was “damn good” and Munro told Paine. Then his courage flowed. It’s the greatest treat in the world to sit in the brown easy chair and watch that master of mine talk. He was magical this morning [MTP TS 7-8; also Gribben 523 in part].

Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote from Boston that they were sailing for Egypt on Saturday [MTP].

January 10 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to unidentified gentlemen.

If you mean, am I sorry I allowed myself, in a moment of passion, to carry my quarrel with Mr. Butters into the newspapers & call him a swindler, I answer yes. It was not the right way, it was not the dignified way, to settle the quarrel, & for that reason I regret it. That it happened, was not wholly my fault, but was largely his own, in that he has persistently remained away from this State, & thus has kept out of the penitentiary, where he belongs, & where I was purposing to place him. If he had been there I should have been satisfied & would not have been moved to expose him in print. The main fault is his, but it is no matter, & I forgive him [MTP].

On or after Jan. 10 Sam also wrote to Mansfield L. Hillhouse. “I desire to express my thanks to the Board of Trustees for the honor they have conferred upon me in electing me a member of the Advisory Board of the Hispanic Society of America” [MTP]. Note: the Society was formed in 1904 by Archer M. Huntington as a museum of Spanish, Portuguese and Latin American art and artifacts; it remains open to the public at its original location of 155th in NYC.

Sam’s A.D. for this date involved a discussion of speechmaking, a reminiscence about speeches on a night at the Players Club, the “Morris incident” and comments on President Theodore Roosevelt [AMT 1: 254-260].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: recorded how Sam sought to remove himself from the Congo Reform Movement, headed by Edmund Dene Morel: “I’m not a bee, I’m a lightning bug.” “Morel is a mobile, I’m a wheel-barrow.” Mr. Clemens is tiring of Congo and said in a letter to Mr. Barbour when he wrote him that he must withdraw from the Congo matter [MTP TS 8].

Henry Darracott Allison, grocer, Dublin, N.H. wrote to Sam that he was sending two photographs of the Upton house and the Greene house under separate cover. Allison had “enjoyed immensely” Sam’s article in Harper’s Weekly, “and I have read and re-read the speeches made on that occasion” [MTP]. Note: the speeches referred to were from Twain’s 70th birthday celebration.

Thomas S. Barbour for the Congo Reform Assoc. replied to Sam's Jan. 8 "retired from the Congo" letter, begging Twain to stay and promising "not to be overzealous in putting demands on him" [Hawkins 166]:

I do not think you can leave the Congo until you take the people with you. That hour has seemed to me not far away. It has seemed near because you are there. For you seem to me not like the fire-fly or even the bee but like Orpheus. So long as you stay in Africa the people of other lands will come, in an ever increasing multitude, and they will see and act [Ibid; MTP].

Daniel Carter Beard wrote from NYC to send Sam an autograph from his friend and fellow classmate at the Art Students' League, Mr. Charles Lamb. Beard also thanked him for the "very kind things you said about me at the late dinner of the Society of Illustrators" [MTP]. Note: the dinner was on Dec. 21, 1905.

Clark Bell wrote on Medico-Legal Society letterhead (NYC) to invite Sam to their annual dinner on Jan. 17 at the Hotel Astor at 7 p.m. He also enclosed a petition to the Governor to pardon Palnek, who was to be executed Jan. 22 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote at the top, "Mr. Clemens signed the petition."

George Cary Eggleston wrote on Author's Club stationery, NYC to ask if Sam would provide a paragraph he had written long before on the Ball-Florence Percy controversy as to the true authorship of the song, "Rock Me to Sleep." Eggleston had carried the clipping with him for years, as it was brilliant and in the same meter [MTP].

John Grier Hibben wrote from the Spencer Trask Lecture Committee, Princeton, Univ., to invite Sam "to address the students of the university, in the form of a lecture, or an informal talk as you may prefer," the honorarium being $100 [MTP]. Note: Sam declined on Jan. 12.

Mansfield L. Hillhouse wrote to advise Sam that he'd been elected a member of the Advisory Board for the Hispanic Society of America at their Jan. 8 meeting [MTP]. Note: on a separate sheet Lyon wrote for Sam is thanks for the honor.

January 11 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam declined an invitation from an unidentified man, giving the reason that "I have made all the engagements for this year that I can keep" [MTP].

Sam also sent a telegram to Thomas Bailey Aldrich and Lilian W. Aldrich in Boston: "A happy voyage and a quick return" [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day involved a Jan. 3 letter from Laura K. Hudson and his reply of Jan. 12 concerning his Dec. 17, 1877 Whittier birthday "debacle" [AMT 1: 260-267].

Isabel Lyon's Journal: "Mr. Clemens "Yes I was on the Pacific Coast from Aug. 1861 to Oct. 1866." He was getting ready for dictation. Then after luncheon I took him a little poem written by Carolone Stern of Greenville, Miss. After reading it to himself and being deeply moved by it, he walked the floor and standing near me read aloud the first verse of it.

"Who speaks of care, of toil, of time?
The night-wind cools the heated deck,
The minstrel river sings in rhyme,
And gathers largesse in our wake.
And like a refrain, solemn, slow,
The leadsman's chant comes from below—
Ma-a-r-rk Twa-a-ain—"

His voice trilled as he gave the leadsman's call—but turning quickly he said, “There ought to be an echoing cry from the deck.”

Oh, the richness of his nature, and his brain and his soul. He sounds the awfulest depths of the tragedies of earth and heaven and hell—he bubbles over with gaiety—he melts with grief into silent sobs—he slays with satire your beliefs—he boils over into profanities that make you feel the terrors of the thunderbolts that must come—and he is the gentlest, most considerate, most lovable creature in all the earth—yet how he covers his true self away from most! [MTP TS 8-9; also Gribben 662, in part].

About this day Sam wrote to Jean, as seen in this paraphrase of Jean's diary, vol. 6, Jan. 14:

I wrote Father a letter yesterday, that I regret just a little having sent. In the letter I received from him [ca. Jan 11; not extant], he spoke of my sweet & gentle child-spirit that had been inspired by my illness, & urged me to try & get it back again. Also, he urged patience toward Anna and the people in the house with instructions that the doctors all meant well toward me etc. As a whole, the letter was sweet, but the statement of my having been born with a sweet nature surprised me [MTP].

George H. Daniels for the Lotos Club wrote to announce a dinner for Woodrow Wilson of Princeton, Univ. on Saturday evening, Feb. 3, inviting Sam to “say a few words” [MTP].

Samuel O. Prentice wrote to Sam on Supreme Court of Errors, Hartford, Conn. letterhead, vouching for Arthur M. Marsh, Bridgeport attorney and president of the Contemporary Club of that city. Marsh wished to interview Sam about speaking to their club [MTP].

January 12 Friday – Fred Nye of the Sunday N.Y. World wrote asking if Sam would write for their “humorous campaign in favor of the most down-trodden and abused person in the United States—Father.” On or just after this was received Sam answered: “I think it unlikely that the Harpers would approve, but even if they did I have no intention of writing a miscellaneous article on any body.”

In a side note, probably to Isabel V. Lyon, he directed her to ask a price that would:

“Suppress these people some time by saying I will agree to write an article (of not fewer than 2000 words & not more than 5000) for $5000⁰⁰ the contents of the article not to fall short of 2000 words and not to exceed 5000” [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Jan. 10 from John Grier Hibben declining to speak at Princeton Univ. [MTP].

Sam also wrote to John Horner in Belfast, Ireland.

I find the book enchanting. In my opinion it belongs away up—or away down whichever may be proper—on the summit in midsky or at the base of the foothills where sits serene the Sweet Singer of Michigan, Queen & Empress of the Hogwash Guild until now. Hogwash is a term which was invented by the night foreman of the newspaper whereunto I was attached 40 yrs ago, in the capacity of local reporter, to describe my literary efforts. Many years ago I began to collect Hog-wash literature & I am glad of the chance to add to it the extraordinary book which you have sent to me [MTP]. Note: Gribben identifies the volume as Irene Iddesleigh (1897), by Mrs. Emanda M'Kittrick Ros; Horner would also send “Barry Pain's humorous criticism” of the work and another Ros book on Apr. 21 [589]. Note: in Horner's of Apr. 21 he referred to this as “your letter of 13th”.

Sam also replied to the Jan. 3 from Mrs. Laura K. Hudson's about his Dec. 17, 1877 Whittier birthday “debacle”:

I am forever your debtor for reminding me of that curious passage in my life. During the first year or two after it happened I could not bear to think of it, my pain & shame were so intense, and my sense of having been a fool so settled, established, confirmed. I drove the episode entirely from my mind; and so all these twenty-eight or twenty-nine years I have lived in the conviction that my performance of that time was coarse, vulgar & wholly destitute of humor. But your suggestion that you & your family found humor in it moved me to look into the matter; so I commissioned a Boston typewriter to delve into the Boston papers of that bygone time, and send me a copy of it. It came this morning, & if there is any vulgarity about it I am unable to discover it; if it is not innocently and appropriately funny I am no judge. It is my intention that within the next two months the public shall hear from it and sit in judgement upon it once more. By & by I will see to it that you get a copy [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day included comments on Whittier's 70th birthday celebration in 1877 as compared to Twain's own 70th celebration organized by Colonel Harvey. Then he digressed into an anecdote of cigars he gave out at one of his Monday Evening Club meetings in Hartford, with the men thinking they were cheap and discarding them on the way out. He closed with a discussion of a meeting at Rev. Frank Goodwin's house, including Joe Twichell, Charles Dudley Warner, Colonel Greene, Rev. Dr. Burton, Hamersley and son Will, Charles E. Perkins, J. Hammond Trumbull, Henry C. Robinson, and A.C. Dunham [AMT 1: 267-272].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Headache, savage.

The dictating continues and Mr. Clemens finds it enchanting and an inspiration. "I would like to have relays of shorthanders, and keep them at it for six hours on a stretch."

Mr. Paine began classifying the assembled autobiographical papers and matter for biography this morning. It is satisfying to see him at his task, for he touches it with the hands of one caring for every scrap and realizing the value of it. When Elizabeth Dodge was here at tea this afternoon Mr. Clemens came in from a down town trip, and he told her that she was like the lovely Mrs. Osborne he met at dinner at Mrs. Kinnicutt's. He told Mrs. Osborne that he was going to dine with the Dodges in a short time and invited her to be there too. All this he told Elizabeth, who was enchanted by his naïf way of inviting, for Mrs. Osborne is Elizabeth's aunt [MTP TS 9-10].

Chatto & Windus sent Sam a financial statement with check for £131:0:6 [MTP].

John Larkin, attorney wrote to Sam that he was trying to reach Gillis & Geogehan, about the "obstreperous parts" of the heating system at 21 Fifth Ave, and would "beat into the heads" of same, "the annoyance that your daughters have suffered" [MTP].

Edgar Gardner Murphy wrote from Montgomery, Ala. to Sam, sending him a copy of his book The Present South. A letter of praise for the book from John Hay, dated Dec. 17, 1904 is in the file [MTP].
Note: not in Gribben.

Francis Stanbern wrote from Vienna, Austria to request, in overly polite bowing and scraping language, for Mark Twain's autograph [MTP].

In his A.D. for this day Sam mentioned King Leopold briefly, revealing his interest remained even though he had "retired" from the poorly organized Congo Reform Assoc. (Jan. 8) to Barbour [Hawkins 168].

January 13 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote instructions to Isabel Lyon for John Larkin: "Ask Larkin to appoint next Saturday for the tax office & make it $5,000. I want to write it up" [MTP]. Note: Larkin characterized Larkin as "my friend and attorney."

Clemens' A.D. for this day continued the discussion on the old Monday Evening Club talk about dreams. He then related telling the the dream to the Club about seeing Henry Clemens in a coffin before the explosion of the Pennsylvania, then the mistake of dosage the young doctor gave to Henry which resulted in his death [AMT 1: 273-276].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. Clemens was going to read manuscript tonight, but oh, a disturbing element stopped it. (A mood of Jean's)" [MTP TS 10].

John F. Hobbs of the Thirteen Club wrote inside an invitation to this evening's 24th anniversary dinner at the Hotel Savoy:

My Dear Clemens / Sorry "Mark Twain" could not be our guest of honor Jan. 13. Mr. Arthur Brisbane, Chief Editor of the Hearst papers will ... speak to the subject "Some Superstitions about grafters—financial, political or otherwise." Hobbs asked for Sam to write him something on the subject that might be read at the banquet [MTP]. Note: Arthur Brisbane (1864-1936) was one of the most well known American newspaper editors of his day. He was also a coach of public relations for many celebrities, including Henry Ford, Thomas Edison and John D. Rockefeller.

James Wharton George wrote from NYC to Miss Lyon. "Your favor of Dec. 21 has been on my desk all this time for I have hated to again urge that Mr Clemens give me an interview" [MTP].

Arthur M. Marsh wrote from Bridgeport, Conn. to offer Sam an honorarium of $125 to speak to his Contemporary Club, of about 125 men and women [MTP]. Note: see Jan. 11 from Marsh.

Volney Streamer wrote on Players Club letterhead, NYC to advise Sam that the $200,000 canceled check to Mrs. Ulysses S. Grant was framed and hanging beside the door to Mr. Booths' private library [MTP].

Edith de Charny Suffren for Harper & Brothers wrote to thank Sam for sending through Miss Lyon "the little anecdote about..." Pilgrim's Progress. "It will be used in this week's issue of the 'Gossip'" [MTP].

January 13 after – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote one line to George W. James: "Mr. Mighels—is here in the city address can be procured of Harper" [MTP]. Note: Philip Verrill Mighels (1869-1911) was a Nevada writer and one of the state's first literary figures. His 1905 book, Bruvver Jim's Baby, was published by Harper & Brothers.

January 14 Sunday – The New York Times, p.9 "What is Doing in Society": "Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland H. Dodge have invitations out for a dinner for Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain,) on Friday next," or Jan. 19. Note: Cleveland Hoadley Dodge (1860-1926), philanthropist active in NY politics, was the grandson of William E. Dodge, Jr. (1832-1903) Clemens' neighbor in Riverside. See Aug. 13, 1903 entry.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

This morning Mr. Paine came up to my room to talk over the dictation of yesterday. Mr. Clemens's theme was the death of his brother Henry, who lost his life in the awful steamboat disaster so many years ago. He said that Mr. Clemens had given Henry instructions what to do in case of accident—"Don't lose your head—the passengers will do that," and they did it, while Henry went for a life-boat for the women and children and he stayed by the burning craft too long. The incident is given in Orion's account of as much of all that early life as he can remember. All of this Mr. Clemens even as a young, young man; it was the keynote of his character, and today it stands as the main thing in the man's life. After Paine left I went down to Mr. Clemens's room and we went over a little leftover mail, he drifted into the Biography chat as is his wont in these days & he said that so few—no autobiographers were ever very frank. Bayard Taylor was—was “so self satisfied and sat back and licked his chops”—but it was all delightful and then Mr. Clemens said that he was going to be frank—not once but many times. (There were Rousseau confessions, but I am going to leave that kind alone, for Rousseau had looked after that end—) and I am going to say just what I think of a dinner-table full of people who preferred to talk themselves to hearing him. People like the guests at Dr. Quintard’s not long since, and Mr. Clemens said that “Quintard does know the damndest lot of catfish.” We spoke of Marie Bashkirtseff’s enchanting and naively frank journal “a perfect delight” he called it, and he chatted on in his loveliest vein. The Times had a reproduction of one of the recent bed photographs taken by young Horace Ashton. A very good and strong and sad photograph, looking exactly like him when he is at work. The hand is out of focus, but that doesn’t seriously damage it and on his knee is the cigar box desk—the desk or box we played cards on a year ago.

Col. Harvey came to talk with Mr. Clemens, also Mr. Owen Johnson came to ask use of Mr. Clemens’s name as a patron for the Russian players who have been in pitiful case but who have been taken up recently by Mr. Dan Frohman. Mr. Gilder’s interest in them has been of great assistance in this move [MTP TS 10-12; also some parts or information in Gribben 592, 687, 50]. Note: Maria Konstantinovna Bashkirtseva (1860-1884) author of Marie Bashkirtseff; The Journal of a Young Artist.

Sally B. Genung wrote from NYC to thank Sam for his kind words about their late friend John Malone. Though a stranger to Sam, she had been a firm fan since she was ten [MTP]. Note: see Lyon’s journal for Jan. 16 on Malone. Since Malone died on Jan. 15, this appears to be misdated.

January 15 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Today when I asked Mr. Clemens why mens’ voices singing in the street at night sound so heartbreakingly sad? Or away out in the country, when you are wakened by the sound of a man singing a common place song in a common place voice, why does that make you aware of all the misery of the world? Mr. Clemens replied, “The man is probably dead drunk, but that doesn’t lessen your heartache.”

The reading of the dictated manuscript is forever postponed. Mr. Twichell came this P.M. and it is delightful to have him here. After dinner he and Mr. Clemens went over to call on General Sickles, who is 84 years old. This visit is a duty which Mr. Twichell never neglects [MTP TS 12].

Clemens’ A.D. for this day continued the discussion on the old Monday Evening Club talk about dreams, giving examples of his more vivid dreams; also more comment on the Morris case [AMT 1: 276-282].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote two pages to Sam about the American Mechanical Cashier Co, and the Pope Co. taking over its assets [MTP].

Stuart Donlevy Duncan wrote from Frankfurt on the Main, Germany to Sam. “Even in my most sanguine moments I hardly dared to hope for an answer from you & I really do not know how to thank you for your kindness. Your letter has made me very happy indeed” [MTP].

Grace Kiddes Ford wrote from NYC to invite Sam to dine with them informally Jan. 18 in the evening [MTP]. Note: Sam replied on Jan. 16.

Winifred Holt for the N.Y. Assoc. for the Blind wrote to invite Sam to a meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel to promote the interests of the blind, Mar. 29 at 8:30 p.m. She also hoped he could come to her home on the evening of Mar. 27 with his daughter to meet Helen Keller [MTP]. Note: see Sam’s reply in Jan. 15 after entry.

George O’Connor wrote from Hartford, Conn. to Isabel Lyon about shipping Jean’s horse “Scott” to Katonah, NY [MTP].

January 15 after – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Lyon replied for Sam to Winifred Holt's Jan. 15: On a slip in the file with the note is one by Lyon:

Shall hope Mr. C. & Miss C can assemble there on Mar. 27. Shall be very glad indeed to have menu of things he is to touch upon that night. Also shall be glad to have some seats reserved for him for the night of the 29th. Should like 5 2 seats reserved. Bill sent now. Take it for granted that no seats are to given away. Every seat worth 3—price easily acquired. Because there are so many hundreds of people willing to pay that price to have glimpse of Helen Keller. Ladies peddle seats house will all be sold out long before Mar 29th [MTP].

January 16 Tuesday – Mark Twain attended a big automobile show at Madison Square Garden, and of course the New York Times of Jan. 16, p. 8 covered the show and his appearance:

MARK TWAIN AT THE SHOW.

Laments That He Cannot Dictate as Fast as Motor Salesmen Talk.

Mark Twain was an interested visitor at the Automobile Show in Madison Square Garden yesterday afternoon. He was the guest of Sales Manager R. D. Chapin at the Oldsmobile booth. As the popular writer walked slowly down the broad aisles, commenting upon the splendid machines on exhibition, he was followed by a curious crowd. Mr. Clemens, however, did not purchase a motor car, but he promised to come again and take a ride in one of the demonstrating machines to-morrow.

"I dictate each day about four thousand words," he said, "and I find it a hard day's work. If I could talk as rapidly, however, as some of these automobile salesmen do, I could dictate a great many more words and consequently make more money."

In N.Y.C. Sam replied to Mrs. Grace Kiddes Ford's Jan. 15, offering a gracious decline to a "kind invitation" but he was "already booked for that night"[MTP]. Note: the night in question was Jan. 18. No evidence was found for what was "already booked."

Clemens' A.D. for this day revealed his thoughts about the "perfect" way to write an autobiography, that is, to talk about "The thing uppermost in a person's mind" at the time. He related a story about John Malone, who joined an actors' troupe in Oregon which starred Edwin Booth, and how Malone missed a train that allowed John McCulloch, a fellow actor, to become established on the stage. Sam championed Malone to membership in the Players Club; Joe Twichell arrived and later brought news of Malone's death. "So there is another surprise, you see. While Twichell and I were talking about John Malone he was passing from this life. His disappointments are ended. At least he is not 'left out.' It was a long wait, but the best of all fortunes is his at last" [AMT 1: 283-287].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

John Malone is dead. Mr. Clemens had me telephone Volney Streamer at the Players that if they are short of pall bearers, he will be one. Yesterday Mr. Clemens was talking with Mr. Twichell about John Malone and now he is dead. Mr. Clemens name having been given as a patron of the Russian Players movement, this morning a Russian woman came begging for an interview, for she must have help. It was terrible for at times she was desperate or appealing, seemingly desperate. She insisted upon seeing Mr. Clemens, sure that he could and would help her. I worked with her an hour and finally she left, but as I took her to the door she had tears in her eyes.

At 6 o'clock Mr. Henderson came wanting to have Mr. Clemens read the birthday speech onto phonograph cylinders, Mr. Clemens to own the cylinders and Henderson to get nothing out of it. Forty-five minutes we talked, & I couldn't make that man make one clear statement [MTP TS 12-13]. Note: John Malone, actor and historian of The Players, died on Jan. 15. Sam was a pallbearer at Malone's funeral on Jan. 18. See entry.

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to Sam:

Miss Lyon wrote me this morning about closing your account with the Guaranty Trust Company,. You only receive 1- ½ to 2% interest and if you think it wise I will close the account ...and send the money to the Knickerbocker Trust Company.

I enclose herewith check for $34,700 for 500 shares of Utah Consolidated Mining Company stock as per statement attached [MTP]. Note: The Knickerbocker Trust would suffer a run on the bank on Oct. 22, 1907; Sam's $51,000 would be at risk.

Sam replied to Harrison: "Leave that egg in another basket & leave the basket where it is" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to John Y. MacAlister in London, summarizing the latest happenings in the American branch of the Plasmon Co. Ralph W. Ashcroft was on his way from downtown to Sam's and would be told to write MacAlister to give the particulars. "He is competent, & I'm not," Sam wrote.

That gang stacked the cards on me & on the London Co., but I think they dealt us the hand they meant for themselves. Ashcroft will know how the matter stands, & can tell you.

That young lady & her sister called. I was in bed (as now & always pretty much) but Miss Lyon saw them. I hope they are going with us to Gilder's house Friday night, where the bright people congregate. I never go there, because it is at night, but I will go with them, if they would like it [MTP]. Note: the "young lady & her sister" have not been identified.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam.

Mr. Baldwin was asked yesterday by Mr. Hammond's lawyer to state, in writing, that we would not oppose the dissolution of the Plasmon Co.

In case the Company was dissolved, its assets would be sold to pay the creditors. The only creditors are Hammond, Butters and ourselves. The principal asset is $10,000. on deposit with you, the Company having sold its patents, factory building, etc. ...we would get about half of the $10,000..." [MTP].

A. de Monthizin wrote to Lyon, sending a complimentary copy of a Mark Twain lithograph [MTP].

January 17 Wednesday – Sam attended a meeting to form an association for a 1907 centennial of Robert Fulton's Claremont. The New York Times, Jan. 18, p. 8, "For a Monument to Fulton" reported the presence of Mark Twain. On Feb. 18, the Times, under the same heading, reported Samuel L. Clemens as an "incorporator" and printed his letter of acceptance to the committee:

Mr. Clemens, in accepting membership on the committee, wrote the following letter:

I am sure that but for his genius and energy steam navigation would have remained in the egg centuries longer than it did. He made the vacant oceans and the idle rivers useful after the unprejudiced had been wondering for a hundred million years what they were for. He found these properties a liability; he left them an asset. It is the peculiar honor and privilege of our commercializing age to estimate this majestic service at its splendid and rightful value. The monument is deserved, and it will be built. MARK TWAIN.

Clemens' A.D. for this day discussed Sam's past efforts to convince publishers of the viability of a magazine dealing with older articles, The Back Number. He then told of General Sickles, of his renown and of Joe Twichell's regard for Sickles, having been in Sickles's regiment in the Civil War [AMT 1: 287-292].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

This morning a Miss Jonas, a southerner, came with a letter of introduction from E.C. Stedman. She had a little poem she had written, a negro mother's tragic cry over the lynching of her son. I took it up and interrupted Mr. Clemens in his dictating, for Miss Jonas wants Mary Shaw to recite it at the Tuskegee meeting on the 22nd. Mr. Clemens said "Oh give it to me now, now is always the best time to do things," and he read it with his great feeling, making a wonderful poem of it.

The morning mail brought a little book—a sermon by Minot J. Savage, sent by the publisher. Mr. Clemens stroked the soft leather binding & said it was "just the thing to sharpen my razor on," so the publisher has done a good deed after all.

The young receiving tellers at the Knickerbocker Trust Co. have been uncivil to me and to others of this family. I spoke of the matter to Mr. Clemens. He as going up to a meeting of the Robert Fulton Memorial Assn. At the Waldorf this afternoon and said he'd take me in to see the President of the Trust Co. Mr. Brown, the President was very busy telephoning, so we had to wait. Mr. Clemens said to me, "He's got some kind of a catfish on the end of that line and he can't land him or shake him" [MTP TS 13-14]. See also Gribben 358, 605.

January 18 Thursday – Sam was a pallbearer for John Malone, actor, who died on Jan. 15. The funeral took place at the Church of St. Francis Xavier on W. 16th Street. Requiem mass was celebrated by the Rev. Father Van Rensselaer. A large group from The Players attended. Other pall bearers were: Barton Hill, Daniel Frohman, J.H. Benrimo, Jacob Wendell, Jr., T.J. Hallowell, Charles Harvey Genung, and David A. Munro [NY Times, Jan. 19, 1906, p. 11, "Funeral of Actor John Malone"]. See also Nov. 16, 1898 to Malone.

Sam had replied to an invitation from Grace Kiddes Ford on Jan. 15 that he was "already booked" for this evening; no evidence of an engagement for Jan. 18 was found [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day involved: Senator Benjamin Ryan Tillman (1847-1918) speaks of Morris case—Funeral of John Malone contrasted with funeral of Empress of Austria, leads up to dueling [AMT 1: 292-294; see also p. 567 on Tillman].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens was pallbearer for John Malone this morning. He came home from the funeral with a weight over him, and it came out that Mr. Paine had inadvertently repeated a little remark that Mr. Clemens had made during the dictation about John Malone and it came galloping back in garbled forms. Of course it seemed a breach of confidence. Mr. Paine came up to tell me about it & he said it would have been so much easier for him if Mr. Clemens had given him a good cursing, but he didn't, he was sweet. The days have been rushingly busy for Mr. Clemens, and he seems tired in spirit and body. Tonight Barry Faulkner took me to Gonfarone's on Seventh Ave. for dinner, where we were joined by Witter Bynner. ~~It was a delight to hear those 2 lads cheer each other on over~~ each others very bright remarks and Bynner had a little notebook that he'd pull out to put down Barry's brilliances in. We walked home and they jumped me over the puddles. They're darling boys. Barry has a picture at Knoedlers and Bynner is writing a play. McClure has got Howard Pyle away from Harper's and I'm sorry. Sorry for Harper's. Bynner said that Col. Harvey is being much criticised for giving the kind of dinner that he did for Mr. Clemens on his 70th birthday, for it was shameful to sacrifice Mr. Clemens to what is regarded as a great advertisement for Harper's [MTP TS 14-15].

January 19 Friday – Joe Twichell wrote to Sam.

I declare that the deeps penetrated and explored in much research as this of radium more affect me with the sense of sublimity than those discovered by the telescope. Really this would be an admirable sort of an universe if it wasn't for the Human Race. Yet it's the Human Race that has captured the knowledge both of the Light Year and of Radio-activity. Perhaps it will amount to something eventually. / Yrs Aff. / Joe [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day focused on dueling, including the famous ones at Virginia City between Joe Goodman and Tom Fitch, and the threatened one between Clemens and James L. Laird, owner of the Virginia Union. He also included a past unfinished chapter on dueling in Austria [AMT 1: 294-302].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Paine is a "find." He is doing the very thing that I have longed to have some worshipping creature do with Mr. Clemens's papers, letters, clippings and autobiographical matter. He is bringing the mass into order, reducing the great chaos that I have always longed to be able to touch but have never found time for [MTP TS 15].

January 20 Saturday – Julia Delafield Longfellow wrote from N.Y.C. inviting Sam to dine with them "informally" and meet "a political friend, Colonel Flood" on Friday, Jan. 26 at 8 p.m. Sam answered on or just after Jan. 20:

"Look upon it as peculiarly uncommon [?] & uncalled for [one or two words illegible] of ill luck that I am obliged to be in Wash on that date" [MTP].

Just about everything Mark Twain did appeared in the New York newspapers. The Times and the Herald of Jan. 21 were among those which reported on his paying a tax for "fun":

MARK TWAIN PAYS FOR FUN.

Has No Personal Property Here, but Stands a Tax on $5,000.

"Mark Twain" yesterday [Jan. 20] consented to pay taxes on $5,000 worth of personal property, despite the fact that he had just told the Tax Commissioners that he did not own any personal property here.

Mr. Clemens had received notice of assessment on $25,000 of personal property, and on a like sum as executor of the estate of Mrs. Clemens. He told President O'Donnel of the Tax Board that his wife's estate had all been settled, and that therefore he did not owe the city anything on that estate, as it no longer existed. He also said that he did not own any personal property in this city subject to taxation.

"Just for the humor of the situation, however, I am willing to pay on $5,000 if the city needs the money," he said. His consent for that sum was taken by President O'Donnel [Note: the Herald reported Sam paid a tax of $75].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

This morning Mr. Clemens started for the tax collectors' office with Mr. Larkin. He had 3 notifications with him. Notifications running up in values to $75,000.00, but he liquidated that in the office of the Tax Commissioner and consented to pay the tax on $5,000.00. Mr. Clemens seems tired, he has had a lot of indigestion lately and he is under an added strain in preparing a speech for Monday evening. It's the second speech, almost the third that he has had in mind for this same occasion, for first it was to be on the Congo, but that was abandoned [MTP TS 15].

Lawrence J. Anhalt wrote from McVicker's Theatre, Chicago to announce the formation of an Illinois corporation with capital of one million dollars, The Economic League of America—its aims to "improve the conditions of worthy immigrants, and make them good citizens..." May Irwin, who was behind the organization, requested that Sam be among the advisory board [MTP]. Note: at top: "Pay no attention to this but preserve it / SLC"

M.A. Ommanney wrote to Sam after reading his article in the Dec. 1904 Harper's on Joan of Arc. Did she reap what she sowed? Had any woman ever done so? [MTP].

January 21 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens got into the big grey mobile with Mr. Clinton at 12 o'clock and away they went for luncheon. The day is very lovely—just the sort for motoring, for we're having a warm wave, too warm but good for motoring.

Mr. Clemens is relishing the prospect of his speech tomorrow evening, Tuskegee. He said this morning when I came back from Miss Hobby's boarding house where I had taken the manuscript for her to type; "I am promising my self a good time tomorrow night. It's a devilish speech, full of hypocrisy and sin, I wouldn't miss it for anything" [MTP TS 15-16].

January 22 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to the Armstrong Assoc. asking if they would admit his nephew, Samuel E. Moffett at the stage door, as he was "one of the editors of 'Collier's Weekly'" [MTP]. Note: admittance to the benefit for the Tuskegee Institute that evening.

In the evening, Mark Twain spoke in behalf of Booker T. Washington's Tuskegee Institute at Carnegie Hall. The NY Times reported the event on the front page:

CHOATE AND TWAIN PLEAD FOR TUSKEGEE

Brilliant Audience Cheers Them and Booker Washington.

HUMORIST RAPS TAX DODGERS

Says Everybody Swears, Especially
Off—Friends of Negro Institution Trying to Raise $1,800,000.

To give Booker T. Washington a good start toward collecting the $1,800,000 he wants to carry back from the North to Tuskegee Institute, Mark Twain, Joseph H. Choate, Robert C. Ogden, and Dr. Washington himself spoke in Carnegie Hall last night. Incidentally, it was a "silver jubilee" celebration, since Tuskegee Institute was founded, in 1881.

The big house was crowded to its utmost capacity, and there were as many more outside who would have gone in had there been room. The spectacle reminded one of the campaign days last November, when District Attorney Jerome and his attendant spellbinders were packing Carnegie Hall.

But last night it was by no means a gathering of the "populace" alone. Women in brilliant gowns, resplendent with jewels, and men in evening dress filled the boxes. Despite the avowed object of the meeting—to get money from the audience and others—there was an atmosphere of good humor and lightheartedness. Mark Twain's "teachings" were met with such volleys of laughter that the man who never grows old could hardly find intervals in which to deliver his precepts. That part of Mr. Clemens's address which referred to wealthy men who swear off tax assessments was applauded with especial fervor.

The occupants of the boxes included Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Mrs. Henry H. Rogers, Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay, Mrs. Morris K. Jesup, J. G. Phelps Stokes, Isaac N. Seligman, George Foster Peabody, John Crosby Brown, Carl Schurz, Mrs. W. H. Schieffelin, Mrs. William Jay Schieffelin, Mrs. Joseph H. Choate, Mrs. Henry Villard, Nicholas Murray Butler, Mrs. Robert C. Ogden, Mrs. Cleveland H. Dodge, Mrs. Alfred Shaw, Mrs. Felix M. Warburg, Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting, Mrs. Collis P. Huntington, Mrs. Robert B. Minturn, Mrs. Jacob H. Schiff, Mrs. Paul M. Warburg, and Mrs. Arthur Curtis James.

A negro octet sang between the speeches. Their songs were old-fashioned melodies and revival songs, and their deep, full voice filled the whole house.

William Jay Schieffelin opened the meeting by telling its object and urging that all the help possible be given to Dr. Washington. He announced that in April a special train would leave New York for Tuskegee and that the round-trip ticket would cost $50, covering all expenses. On this occasion the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of Tuskegee will be celebrated at the school itself by speeches by Secretary of War Taft, President Eliot of Harvard, Bishop Galloway, and Andrew Carnegie.

MARK TWAIN'S ADDRESS

"These habits, of which Mr. Choate has told you, are the very habits which have kept me young until I am seventy years old. I have lain in bed all day today, expect to lie in bed all day tomorrow, and will continue to lie in bed all day throughout the year. There is nothing so refreshing, nothing so comfortable, and nothing fits one so well for the kind of work which he calls pleasure. Mr. Choate has been careful not to pay me any compliments. It wasn't because he didn't want to—he just couldn't think of any.

"I came here in the responsible capacity of policeman—to watch Mr. Choate. This is an occasion of grave and serious importance, and it seemed necessary for me to be present so that if he tried to work off any statements that required correction, reduction, refutation or exposure, there would be a tried friend of the public here to protect the house. But I can say in all frankness and gratitude that nothing of the kind has happened. He has not made one statement whose veracity fails to tally exactly with my own standard. I have never seen a person improve so.

"This does not make me jealous, it only makes me thankful. Thankful and proud; proud of a country that can produce such men—two such men. And all in the same century. We can't be with you always; we are passing away—passing away; soon we shall be gone, and then—well, everything will have to stop, I reckon. It is a sad thought. But in spirit I shall still be with you. Choate, too—if he can.

Nothing to Refute.

"There being nothing to explain, nothing to refute, nothing to excuse, there is nothing left for me to do, now, but resume my natural trade—which is, teaching. At Tuskegee they thoroughly ground the student in the Christian code of morals; they instill into him the indisputable truth that this is the highest and best of all systems of morals; that the nation's greatness, its strength, and its repute among the other nations, is the product of that system; that it is the foundation upon which rests the American character; that whatever is commendable, whatever is valuable in the individual American's character is the flower and fruit of that seed.

"They teach him that this is true in every case, whether the man be a professing Christian or an unbeliever; for we have none but the Christian code of morals, and every individual is under its character-building powerful influence and dominion from the cradle to the grave; he breathes it in with his breath, it is in his blood and bone, it is the web and woof and fibre of his mental and spiritual heredities and ineradicable. And so, every born American among the eighty millions, let his creed or destitution of creed be what it may, is indisputably a Christian to this degree—that his moral constitution is Christian.

Two Codes of Morals

"All this is true, and no student will leave Tuskegee ignorant of it. Then what will he lack, under this head? What is there for me to teach him, under this head, that he may possibly not acquire there, or may acquire in a not sufficiently emphasized form? Why, this large fact, this important fact—that there are two separate and distinct kinds of Christian morals; so separate, so distinct, so unrelated, that they are no more kin to each other than are archangels and politicians. The one kind is Christian private morals, the other is Christian public morals.

"The loyal observance of Christian private morals has made this nation what it is—a clean and upright people in its private domestic life, an honest and honorable people in its private commercial life; no alien nation can claim superiority over it in these regards, no critic, foreign or domestic, can challenge the validity of this truth. During 363 days in the year the American citizen is true to his Christian private morals, and keeps undefiled the nation's character at its best and highest; then in the other two days of the year he leaves his Christian private morals at home, and carries his Christian public morals to the tax office and the polls, and does the best he can to damage and undo his whole year's faithful and righteous worth.

Political Morality.

"Without a blush he will vote for an unclean boss if that boss is his party's Moses, without compunction he will vote against the best man in the whole land if he is on the other ticket. Every year, in a number of cities and states, he helps to put corrupt men in office, every year he helps to extend the corruption wider and wider; year after year he goes on gradually rotting the country's political life; whereas if he would but throw away his Christian public morals, and carry his Christian private morals to the polls, he could promptly purify the public service and make the possession of office a high and honorable distinction and one to be coveted by the very best men the country could furnish. But now—well, now he contemplates his unpatriotic work and sighs, and grieves, and blames every man but the right one—which is himself.

As to Tax Dodgers

“Once a year he lays aside his Christian private morals and hires a ferry boat and piles up his bonds in a warehouse in New Jersey for three days, and gets out his Christian public morals and goes to the tax office and holds up his hand and swears he wishes he may never-never if he’s got a cent in the world, so help him! The next day the list appears in the papers—a column and a quarter of names, in fine print, and every man in the list a billionaire and a member of a couple of churches.

“I know all those people. I have friendly, social, and criminal intercourse with the whole of them. They never miss a sermon when they are so as to be around, and they never miss swearing-off day, whether they are so as to be around or not. The innocent man can not remain innocent in the disintegrating atmosphere of this thing. I used to be an honest man. I am crumbling. No—I have crumbled. When they assessed me at $75,000 a fortnight ago, I went out and tried to borrow the money, and couldn’t; then when I found they were letting a whole crop of millionaires live in New York at a third of the price they were charging me, I was hurt, I was indignant, and said: ‘This is the last feather! I am not going to run this town all by myself.’ In that moment—in that memorable moment—I began to crumble.

Mark Twain Disintegrates

“In fifteen minutes the disintegration was complete. In fifteen minutes I was become just a mere moral sand pile; and I lifted up my hand along with those seasoned and experienced deacons, and swore off every rag of personal property I’ve got in the world, clear down to cork leg, glass eye, and what is left of my wig.

“Those tax officers were moved; they were profoundly moved. They had long been accustomed to seeing hardened old grafters act like that, and they could endure the spectacle; but they were expecting better things of me, a chartered professional moralist, and they were saddened. I fell visibly in their respect and esteem, and I should have fallen in my own, except that I had already struck bottom, and there wasn’t any place to fall to.

Does a Gentleman Swear Off?

“At Tuskegee they will jump to misleading conclusions from insufficient evidence, along with Dr. Parkhurst, and they will deceive the student with the superstition that no gentleman ever swears. Look at those good millionaires; aren’t they gentlemen? Well, they swear. Only once a year, maybe, but there’s enough bulk in it to make up for the lost time. And do they lose anything by it? No, they don’t; they save enough in three minutes to support the family seven years. When they swear, do we shudder? No—unless they say damn. Then we do. It shrivels us all up.

“Yet we ought not to feel so about it, because we all swear—everybody. Including the ladies. Including Dr. Parkhurst, that strong and brave and excellent citizen, but superficially educated. For it is not the word that is the sin, it is the spirit back of the word. When an irritated lady says ‘Oh!’ the spirit back of it is ‘damn,’ and that is the way it is going to be recorded against her. It always makes me so sorry when I hear a lady swear like that. But if she says ‘damn,’ and says it in an amiable, nice way, it isn’t going to be recorded at all.

“The idea that no gentleman ever swears is all wrong; he can swear and still be a gentleman if he does it in a nice and benevolent and affectionate way. The historian, John Fiske, whom I knew well and loved, was a spotless and most noble and upright Christian gentleman, and yet he swore once. Not exactly that, maybe; still he—but I will tell you about it.

“One day when he was deeply immersed in his work, his wife came in, much moved and profoundly distressed, and said, ‘I am sorry to disturb you, John, but I must, for this is a serious matter, and needs to be attended to at once.’ Then, lamenting, she brought a grave accusation against their little son. She said: ‘He has been saying his Aunt Mary is a fool and his Aunt Martha is a damned fool.’ Mr. Fiske reflected upon the matter a minute, then said: ‘Oh, well, it’s about the distinction I should make between them myself.’

“Mr. Washington, I beg you to convey these teachings to your great and prosperous and most beneficent educational institution, and add them to the prodigal mental and moral riches wherewith you equip your fortunate protégés for the struggle of life.” [The rest of the article excluded]

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Jean ill, 9 or 8:50, burned on the hot radiator.

Tonight was the great 25th anniversary of the founding of the Tuskegee institute in Alabama, and the meeting was held in Carnegie Hall. Mr. Choate, Mr. Clemens, Booker Washington and a Mr. Ogden spoke. On the platform sat many men and women; those who claimed my attention were Mr. Gilder, Mr. Moncure D. Conway, Rev. Percy Grant and a row of very fine looking colored men. In our box was mother, Mr. Twichell, Mr. Paine and Miss Hobby—and two strangers. The house was packed, throngs were turned away. Dr. Quintard had tried days ago to get a seat, but wasn't able to. While we were taking off our coats a wave of applause burst and we hurried to the front of the box to see the speakers, Mr. Clemens leading, making their way to the front of the stage. ~~I was so excited that I wanted to cry & laugh & sing &~~ the interest didn't flag a minute even if Mr. Choate did "get through with his speech long before he finished it", as Mr. Paine said, and even if Mr. Ogden did give too many statistics. It was a meeting for a great cause, but statistics go best in annual reports, when great genius is so close, and so magnetic. His speech was fine, he hit the voters, tax paying citizens, a fearless rap and the whole audience winced and visibly too. It's as Mr. Clemens said, "The innocent who could laugh with joy didn't dare to because they were sitting beside a guilty friend who didn't dare to" [MTP TS 16-17].

Duffield Osborne (1858-1917), Secretary for Author's Club, NYC wrote to announce that Sam had been unanimously recommended for honorary membership on Jan 18 [MTP]. Note: see ca. Jan 24 reply.

January 23 Tuesday – Virgil Rule wrote as chairman of a committee for the Pike County Colony in St. Louis to invite Sam to their annual dinner on Mar. 3, 1906 [MTP]. Note: Allowing for five days postal service, Sam's reply to Isabel V. Lyon to "Decline," would have been approximately Jan. 29

Clemens' A.D. for this day included: About the meeting at Carnegie Hall, in interest of Booker Washington's Tuskegee Institute—Leads up to unpleasant political incident which happened to Mr. Twichell—ends with "The Character of Man" [AMT 1: 302-315].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens was in wonderful shape last night. Mr. Paine said of him this morning that he was King—yes—he was far and away the King above all the others. Take all the distinguished company together and in it you couldn't find the wonder that there was in his personality as he stepped lightly out before his applauding audience. He doesn't ever seem to walk, and yet I wonder often how he can kick up the rugs as he does. Tonight Mr. Clemens had a letter from Mrs. Ella Howland. She had read the "King Leopold's Soliloquy" and after she had paid her tribute to the power of the pamphlet she wrote—"Money have I none, but I'll work like 'Hell' to help the cause." Her zeal moved Mr. Clemens almost to tears. He shouted with joy & then read it all over again—and said he'd "take that letter to Washington next week" [MTP TS 17; also Hawkins 168 in part]. Note: Ella M. Howland not further identified.

Frederick Upham Adams (1859-1921), inventor and author wrote from Hastings-on-Hudson, NY to Sam.

I was much interested and amused over your address of last evening, and take the liberty of enclosing a copy of an 'open letter' which I have written to John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and which will be the first in a series which will be syndicated by McClure, Phillips & Company. I hope it will prove more serious than humorous.

I had the pleasure years ago of helping try to entertain you in the old Whitechapel Club of Chicago, along with Peter Dunne (Mr. Dooley) and other good friends, and have met you many times formally and informally since. With very best wishes... [MTP].

Sebastiano Cecchi of Haskard, Bankers wrote from Florence, Italy to Sam, announcing the death of Senator Odoardo Luchini at age 61 from nephritis. He advised a balance in Sam's account of 2,004.45 in Sam's favor [MTP]. Note: the amount likely in Lire, but not specified.

January 24 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Mr. and Mrs. William P. Gordon in Bunker Hill, Illinois.

I have just received your golden-wedding At Home, & am trying to adjust my focus to it & realize how much it means. It carries me back, with a single prodigious sweep, almost to the half-century mere-stone. It brings before me Mrs. Gordon, young, round-limbed & handsome, & with her the Youngbloods & their babies, & Laura Wright, that unspoiled little maid, that fresh flower of the woods & the prairies. All this is inconceivably long ago! it seems measurable only by astronomical terms & geological periods. Life was a fairy tale then, it is a tragedy now. When I was 43 & John Hay 41, he said life was always a tragedy after 40, & I disputed it. Three years ago he reminded me of this & challenged me to testify again: I counted my graves, & there was nothing for me to say.

I am old; I recognise it, but I don't realize it. I wonder if anybody ever really ceases to feel young — I mean, for a whole day at a time. My love to you both, & to all of us that are left [MTP]. Note: William C. Youngblood was a pilot on the John J. Roe when Sam met Laura Wright, Youngblood's niece in May 1858 [MTL 1: 114n7]. Gordon may have been an officer on the Roe.

Sam also wrote a short note to Magnus Gross, educator and President of the NYC Teachers' Organization: "Dear Sir: / I thank you very much for the compliment of your invitation, but I am obliged to decline it as I have made all the engagements for this year that I can keep" [MTP]. Note: Gross' invitation not extant.

Sam received the illustrations for "A Horse's Tale."

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Tells of the defeat of James G. Blaine for the Presidency, and how Clemens's, Joe Twichell's, and Rev. Francis Goodwin's votes were cast for Grover Cleveland [AMT 1: 315-319].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

It was a living picture that went along before me today in the upper hall. This afternoon Mr. Hitchcock came with the illustrations for The Horse's Tale. They are lovely, full of heart and life, and Mr. Clemens got out of bed to go into the study to look at them. Jean had been promised that she should see them, and when I suggested that they be taken up to her room, where she is confined by a burned arm, Mr. Clemens said he'd take one of them, and I could carry the rest. So up we came; Mr. Clemens ahead with his sliding-off old grey slippers flopping on every step and his delicate ankles, looking so very slim from under his long tan colored Vienna dressing gown. Along the hall he went—the light ahead shining through his hair like a halo—all eagerness to show the pictures of "Soldier Boy" to Jean. But Jean as only half aware.

Later I telephoned to Mr. Duneka about Mr. Clemens's pleasure over the pictures. Duneka has been having a hard time to find an artist for Eve's Diary. There doesn't seem to be anybody but Strothman, to his mind, and while he is good as an illustrator for Adam's Diary, he could never do Eve's. Mr. Duneka seems to think there was a dearth of subjects for Eve, but Mr. Clemens counted up 36 in a short time dictating them to me and I sent that list to Duneka [MTP TS 17-18; also Hill 120 in part]. Notes: Fred Strothman (1879-1958) illustrated Extracts From Adam's Diary; Lester Ralph (1877-1927), Eve's Diary. See a discussion of these books and illustrators in the 1996 Oxford facsimile volume of both, afterword p. 21-26. 55 illustrations were published in Eve's Diary appearing on each text-facing page.

Winifred Holt for the N.Y. Assoc. for the Blind wrote to thank Sam for his $5 contribution; she would send invitations for the Mar. 29 meeting so he could give them to appreciative friends [MTP].

Ella M. Howland wrote to Sam, impressed by the pamphlet, "King Leopold's Soliloquy." A printed letter from the Congo Reform Assoc. is in the file with Howland's letter, folded to fit the accompanying envelope [MTP]. Note: see Lyon's journal entry of Jan. 23, which suggests this date is off.

Dennis J. Mahoney wrote from Mahanoy ? City, Pa. to Sam after reading his speech at Carnegie Hall. Sam was "a true American" [MTP]. Note: Sam replied on Feb. 3; see entry.

Mrs. M. Wortman wrote from Leadville, Colo. to offer Sam her cure for rheumatism, “so cheap and simple”—cream of tarter and Asafoetida pills [MTP]. Note: from an Indian herb, also called “Devil’s dung.”

An unidentified “old, old woman” wrote from Hartford to hope that Sam knew Christ “the way, the Truth, and the Life” [MTP].

January 24 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Duffield Osborne (1858-1917), author and editor, at this time secretary of the Authors Club.

I thank you cordially for the kind words with which you have closed your note; they are very welcome & have given me great pleasure. Are you ever down my way? There are some things which I should like to talk with you privately about. I am leaving town for a week; after that I am quite likely to be at home every day & all day, & shall be glad to hear from you by mail or telephone. My tel address, which is private & not in the book, is— [MTP; a draft]. Note: JoDee Benussi identifies an announcement for a May 20, 1915 sale by Anderson Galleries of HF, together with “a signed letter by Mark Twain to Duffield Osborne, in which Mark Twain gives ... his private telephone number....” This is almost certainly the original of the above draft, and is given UCCL 09877 by MTP.

January 25, before – Sam wrote a line to the Tarboro, N.C. Literary Club, celebrating its eleventh anniversary on Jan. 25 with a “Mark Twain Evening” where quotations from eminent American humorists were read by each member of the club. He wrote: “I wish I could be there. Sincerely...” [MTP: Baltimore Sun, Jan. 29].

January 25 Thursday – At 11:45 a.m. Sam left for Washington, D.C. with George Harvey. He would stay until Jan. 30. Fatout lists him giving a dinner speech this evening at an unidentified club, and in his Jan. 23 dictation had entertained the idea of using his old Whittier dinner speech of 1877. He evidently did not do so [MT Speaking 674; IVL TS Jan. 25, 1906].

During his Washington stay Clemens would again confer with Secretary of State Elihu Root and/or Asst. Secretary Robert Bacon about the Congo situation. During this trip he would be informed that the U.S. had not ratified the Berlin Act of 1885, which put down rules for the governing of Africa: “that of the fourteen Christian Governments pledged to watch over Leopold and keep him within treaty limits, our Government was not one. Our Government was only sentimentally concerned, not officially, not practically, not by any form of pledge or promise” [Hawkins 163, 168]. Note: Sam had assumed the U.S. was a party to the Berlin Act. See previous entries. See also Feb. 10 to Barbour.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Today Mr. Clemens started off with Mr. Bowen (Col. Harvey’s secy.) at 11:45 for Washington. He was nervous and excited because his clothes weren’t ready and then he flew off to buy a new hat—a derby which he finally didn’t wear, but crushed his old soft hat in a bunch and stuck it in his overcoat pocket & put his silk hat on. Col. Harvey has taken him and he may be back on Sunday or perhaps not until mid-week.

Last night we had music—a steady lovely stream for nearly two hours. Aeolian [Co.] gave of its best. Often and often Mr. Clemens doesn’t hear the music, he couldn’t for his wonderful brain is singing melodies all its own with the music that the Aeolian is making for accompaniment. He has said that often it will start a train of thought that will rise and fall and go on and on with the strains of the music, but he doesn’t know that I am there, it is just disembodied sound, and that’s what I like best—to minister, but to have my ministrations received unconsciously [MTP TS 18-19].

Harry J. Clinton wrote from Dobbs Ferry, NY to send three photos for Twain’s autograph, one for Roy D. Chapin, one for James H. Hare, and one for himself [MTP].

Lowell C. Frost wrote to Sam, enclosing a check (unspecified) to pay for an autograph [MTP]. Note: See Jan. 31 for Sam's unique answer.

Dorothy Scarborough, English teacher at Baylor, Univ. wrote from Waco, Tex. to Sam. "...you have an unlimited number of friends down here, unknown to you." One-third of her class had written about Mark Twain during a 20-minute impromptu writing lesson on "appreciation of some living writer" [MTP].

January 26 Friday – Sam was in Washington, D.C.

David Pae for The People's Friend / The Popular Home Journal (London) wrote to Sam, relating "a recent competition" where their readers were asked "to name their favorite living writer." As a result HF and IA were tied for best; would Twain agree with this verdict, and if so, which of these was his favorite? [MTP]. Note: Lyon replied for Sam; allowing for post from London to NY, ten days time, or ca. Feb. 5.

Frank B. Swigart, a printer with the St. Louis Globe Democrat sent a clipping of his letter to the editor, in which he asks Clemens to send one book to the Printers' Home, Colorado Springs, Colo. [MTP]. Lyon wrote on top: "Mr. Clemens sent A Tramp Abroad Feb. 1, 1906 & wrote in it—'Let us save the tomorrows for work'"

January 27 Saturday – Sam was in Washington, D.C. In the evening he attended the Gridiron Club's Banquet at the New Willard Hotel. The club was celebrating the digging of the Panama Canal, and the dining room was transformed into Panama, with the club and guests marching and singing: "We're going to dig the big canal, Hurrah! Hurrah!" to the tune of When Johnny Comes Marching Home. "Mark Twain kept pace with the rest, as lively as a boy. Associate Justice Brewer, sedate and dignified, was by his side." Later, speeches were made, including one of about 20 minutes by Mark Twain. Each of the principal speakers were introduced by "appropriate musical numbers., Secretary Root, Secretary Taft, and Mark Twain being especially honored in that way." At dinner Sam sat next to "Uncle Joe" Cannon [NY Times, Jan. 28, 1906, p. 4; Fatout MT Speaking 674]. Note: Joseph Gurney Cannon (1836-1926), Speaker of the House of Representatives (1903-1911), considered by many historians to be the most dominate Speaker in US history. He would later assist Sam in December of 1906 when he came to Washington to speak to a Joint Congressional Committee on Patents.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

This was a tragic day. I came in from a shopping expedition for Jean and others and when I went into her room for tea, she told me that a terrible thing had happened. In a burst of unreasoning rage she struck Katie a terrible blow in the face. The significance of it is what is so terrible, for now she has done what I have seen in her as possible and feared she would do. ~~She is distressed poor child.~~ She described the wave of passion that swept over her as being that of an insane person. She knew she couldn't stop—she had to strike and she said that she wanted to kill and was sorry she hadn't—to her mind it doesn't seem right not to finish any job you have begun and she had wanted to kill Katie [MTP TS 19-20; also Hill 120-1 in part].

Lystra weighs in on the case for and against Jean striking Katy Leary:

That Jean hit Katy in the face seems possible, though Jean herself never mentioned the incident in her diary or letters. ... The incident may have been accidental, occurring during one of Jean's grand mal seizures, characterized as they are by involuntary movements of the arms and legs. ... Katy offers no clues about this incident. ... If Katy had any notion that Jean had tried to kill her in 1906, the down-to-earth housekeeper proved mighty charitable in her later portrayal. ... Lyon's interpretation was strikingly negative, visibly framing the event as an expression of homicidal passion [53-5]. Note: in that time, epilepsy was considered by many to be the cause of criminality. Likely the sensitive, melodramatic Isabel Lyon imagined what her fears shaped, and she was definitely afraid of Jean during seizures.

The Gridiron Club sent Sam an engraved invitation to a dinner at the New Willard Hotel, Washington, D.C. Saturday evening, Jan. 27 at 7:30 p.m. [MTP].

Edmund D. Morel wrote again urging, “Don’t ‘retire from Congo’...altogether” [Hawkins 167; MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam, pasting a Jan. 26 Hartford Courant squib at the top, “Mark Twain’s Coachman Ill.” Joe was going to see him (Patrick McAleer) without fail. Also, he had a call the previous night from the President of the Hartford Yale Alumni Assoc. “whose errand was to extend to you, through me, an urgent invitation and request to come to the Annual Banquet...Feb. 9th and offer a few remarks” [MTP]. Note: Sam did not attend.

January 28 Sunday – Sam was in Washington, D.C. The New York Times of Jan. 30, p.9 “Views of Mark Twain on Being in Congress,” reported Sam hosting a luncheon at his hotel for “Uncle Joe” Cannon, Speaker of the House, and his publisher, George B. Harvey.

On Saturday night he [Twain] attended the Gridiron dinner and noticed a great many people whose pictures he had seen. He is a little timid, but he easily made some acquaintances there, one of who was this Mr. Cannon already referred to. Mr. Cannon seemed to like him, and Mr. Twain was pleased at that. They struck up such a friendship that Mr. Twain invited Mr. Cannon to come and have luncheon with him at his hotel on Sunday.

On that day at 1 o’clock Mr. Cannon showed up, not in his famous homespun dress, but in another suit. Mr. Twain told Mr. Cannon he was disappointed, and Mr. Cannon promised to wear the homespun suit the next time he met Mr. Twain. They had a good time, and ate many things, and Mr. Harvey, a friend of Mr. Twain’s who prints the things Mr. Twain writes, was there, too. When Mr. Cannon went away he asked Mr. Twain to come and see him at his office at the foot of Pennsylvania Avenue, and see how he did his work [See Tues. Jan. 30 for a continuation of this story]

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Jean—12:30 and 9:30 P.M.” [MTP TS 20].

January 29 Monday – Sam was in Washington, D.C. Fatout lists him as giving remarks on copyright [MT Speaking 674].

Charles Alexander, Editor of Alexander’s Magazine (“dedicated to the interests of the black people in every part of the world”) wrote to Sam. He had a copy of “King Leopold’s Soliloquy” and also The Story of the Congo Free State by Henry Wellington Wack. Was Sam acquainted with Wack, and was his story of the Congo “worthy of belief?” Sam’s reply would be kept confidential [MTP]. Note: Sam answered Jan.31.

D. Ceall wrote from Rotterdam, Holland to offer himself as a fan [MTP].

Lee Crandall of Globe, Ariz. left his calling card at Sam’s NY house, writing on the back, “Here opposing joint statehood with New Mexico” [MTP].

A.B. Dodge wrote from Manchester, N.H. to ask Sam where he might get a copy or two of “King Leopold’s Soliloquy” [MTP].

Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam, wishing to renew the copyright on “Punch Brothers, Punch and Other Sketches” published in 1878 by Slote, Woodman & Co.; and could he tell them the name of the “Other Sketches” in the same pamphlet? The original copyright would expire on Mar. 14 [MTP].

Phoebe Holmes wrote to Sam on Board of Education, Eastern High School, Washington, D.C. letterhead to explain the recent production there of his Meisterschaft piece. They hadn't realized it was copyrighted [MTP]. Note: two days is allowed for postal time, with an estimated ca. Jan. 31 for Isabel Lyon's answer for Sam.

Olive Robbins, a schoolgirl, wrote from Roxbury, Mass. to ask for Twain's autograph [MTP].

January 29 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam directed Isabel Lyon to decline the Jan. 23 invitation of Virgil Rule [MTP]. Note: the MTP catalogs this directive as “on or after 23 Jan.” Five days postal service from St. Louis is allowed here.

January 30 Tuesday – Sam was in Washington, D.C. until the afternoon, when he returned to NY [IVL TS 13]. By invitation Sam went to “Uncle Joe” Cannon's office to watch him work as Speaker of the House. NY Times of this date continued from Jan. 28 entry:

So Mr. Twain showed up there this afternoon, but he did not see Mr. Cannon do any work, at least not much. He and Mr. Cannon sat in the Speaker's room and told stories all the time. Mr. Cannon must have got interested in what Mr. Twain had to say, for after a while he put his feet on the top of his table and crossed his thumbs, and that is always a sign that Mr. Cannon is interested. Mr. Twain sat alongside him and talked in a slow drawl. Mr. Cannon talked fully as much as Mr. Twain, and the philosopher enjoyed hearing what he said.

“What did we talk about?” said Mr. Twain afterward. “Well, we just swapped lies.”

The Speaker was not the only man Mr. Twain saw. He met a great many Senators and people like that.

“And,” said Mr. Twain, “there were a good many flights of imagination in what those people said. But the Speaker and I stuck pretty close to the truth.”

He reflected on this for a moment, and then seemed to fear that he had been too hasty. “At least,” he amended, “I did. I don't know whether or not the Speaker stretched a point or two.”

Mr. Twain was asked how he came to go to the Capitol.

“Well,” he said, “I wanted to see my old friend Joe Cannon.”

“Is Mr. Cannon an old friend of yours?” he was asked.

“I call him an old friend,” explained Mr. Twain, “because I met him for the first time on Saturday night, and a man you meet on a Saturday night is always an old friend. I sat beside him at the Gridiron dinner, and I gradually came to have a good opinion of him. If the dinner had lasted half an hour longer I think we would have been calling each other Joe and Sam.

Samuel is Mr. Twain's family name—the one his family uses.

“But it did not,” added Mr. Twain, “and so I have not called him Joe yet. Perhaps I will the next time I come.”

Mr. Twain and Mr. Cannon took luncheon together, and Mr. Twain looked the Senate over and saw more people whose pictures he had seen. Then he went back to his hotel and gave a dinner to a few friends. He does not know when he will go back.

The Kansas City (Mo.) Star, p. 1 reported more of Twain's activities:

MARK TWAIN VISITS CONGRESS.

The Senators Take Mr. Clemens to Lunch With Them.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Mark Twain and Congress saw each other to-day. Before they separated each knew the other fairly well. Mr. Clemens did not shy at Congress, but Congress did shy a little at Mark. Mark Twain's hair was the first thing that attracted the attention of Congress. From the floor and galleries he looked like Chief Justice Fuller. After watching his hair for a time the Senate decided to get better acquainted and Colonel George B. Harvey and Mr. Clemens were invited to come down and see the Vice President. Mr. Fairbanks glanced at Mr. Clemens's hair and looked as if he would like to know him better so that he might ask what tonics he used. Thinking it over, Mr. Fairbanks carefully brushed four hairs over his bald spot. The Vice President was about to present his visitors with his autographed photographs when other senators came romping in and insisted that Mr. Clemens and Colonel Harvey take luncheon with them in the Senate restaurant.

“We lunched and lied together,” Mr. Clemens said in describing the luncheon.

[Note: Melville Weston Fuller (1833-1910): Chief Justice from 1888-1910; Charles Warren Fairbanks (1852-1918) served in T. Roosevelt’s second administration. Fairbanks, Alaska is named after him.]

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Tonight as Jean and Barry Faulkner and I sat in the drawing-room Mr. Clemens returned from Washington, tired and jaded with a cold brewing. He had had a beautiful time, restful and enjoyable, but the evening before at a banquet he sat with his back toward a draft of some kind—either hot or cold—and though he finally changed places with Major Leigh, the deed had been done. He didn’t want to change places with the Major, for from his seat he could command the great dining room full of pretty women in beautiful garments; and to him the sight was a lovely one.

It is good to have him home again. He sat with us for a few minutes and then with one of his graceful goodnight salutations he went up to bed, and to a hot foot bath and hot whiskey and a steaming of eucalyptus and benzoin administered by that faithful, comforting, competent Katie [MTP TS 20].

William A. Caldwell wrote to Sam on The California News letterhead, Berkeley, Calif. Caldwell told of a letter he’d rec’d from a man in Washington, D.C. about the thought behind a word. The man referred to Sam’s recent talk at Carnegie Hall, that when a woman missed her train and said “Oh!” with the thought behind the word being “damn!” [MTP].

H.A. Lorberg wrote from Portsmouth, Ohio to Sam, asking about a photo he’d sent that he wanted Sam to sign [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “This man is as bad as Mr. Clemens’s maxim is good about an uneasy conscience & a hair in the mouth—He has been pestering Mr. Clemens for more than 2 ½ years.”

Helen J. Sanborn wrote to Sam. “Dear sir, / Mrs Pearmain of Boston at whose home I had the pleasure of hearing your delightful Andalusian story said that you desire to introduce to your daughter Carolina Marcial the young Spanish girl whom you met at the College Club and at Mrs. Pearmain’s.” Helen was going to bring her to NY in March, as “she speaks with great power and effect” [MTP].

January 31 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to Charles Alexander’s Jan. 29: .

The charges against Leopold are proven to the hilt by unimpeachable testimony. A small percentage of this vast mass of testimony is offered as a sample in King Leopold’s Soliloquy. In the face of this formidable testimony what Mr. Wack or any other man may say in favor of Leopold is a matter of small consequence. There is not white wash enough on the planet to modify Leopold’s complexion. Leopold’s commission, a jury packed by himself, has confirmed & established the validity of the charges. This puts all the whitewashers out of commission [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Lowell C. Frost. “Your check has already gone to a charity which needs it, & which, for economic reasons, I had declined to contribute to, although it is on my annual list. I assure you I feel as good & benevolent & exemplary as if the money had come out of my own pocket” [MTP].

Sam also sent Mr. Gummere some standard wording to decline an invitation [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Duffield Osborne, secretary of the Authors Club: “Dear Sir: The recommendation to honorary membership affords me great gratification, & I beg to return my best thanks for it. I was not aware of the Club’s earlier action (of Nov. 17, 1896), or I should have made an acknowledgment of it” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Two or three days ago when Mr. Clemens and Col. Harvey were in Washington they called on Wayne MacVeagh with the object in view of trying to induce him to write his autobiography. Mr. MacV. said he couldn’t ever drive the pen again, it wouldn’t be possible. He has been in public life for 50 years and was as close to Lincoln as he was to Mr. Clemens when Lincoln made his famous Gettysburg speech, “and that was enough to make an autobiography go” Mr. Clemens said.

Mr. Clemens described to him his own joy in dictating his autobiography and suggested that he talk an hour a day to begin with and he’d soon see how easily he could slip along into two hours. And he said that even if Mr. MacVeagh is “seventy years old” he is still a very young man in spirit [MTP TS 20-21].

Laura K. Hudson wrote to thank Sam for his “very kind note and—later on—the promised copy of the old ‘Atlantic Monthly’...” [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam, sorry to say that the news about Patrick McAleer was very bad. Patrick had been operated on and was deluded in thinking he would soon recover, but a nurse told Joe there was no hope; for his cancer of the liver [MTP].

January 31 ca. – Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Phoebe Holmes’ Jan. 29: “Matter of no consequence. Really mustn’t trouble herself—it hasn’t troubled Mr. Clemens in the least degree” [MTP].

February – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Edward E. Clarke. “DEAR SIR,—I have found the original manuscript and with great pleasure I transmit it herewith, also a printed copy. It is a matter of great pride to me to have any word of mine concerning the world’s supremest heroine honored by a place in that Museum” [MTP: Paine’s 1917 Mark Twain’s Letters, p.789].

Fatout lists Sam for a dinner speech, possibly sometime in Feb. 1906, at the General Miles Dinner in N.Y.C. [MT Speaking 674]. Note: Gen. Nelson Appleton Miles (1839-1925), medal of honor recipient for his service in the Civil War at Chancellorsville; he also was in the Indian Wars and the Spanish-American War.

Burr McIntosh Monthly (NY) ran Paul Thompson’s article “Men of Note: Samuel Langhorne Clemens,” p. 49. Tenney: “A short, conventional biographical sketch. On the facing page is a photograph of MT, ‘copyright by Marceau, Boston’” [“A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 190].

February 1 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Andrew Carnegie. “I am requested to ask you to read the accompanying letter, and I comply, not reluctantly but with pleasure” [MTP]. Note: The letter enclosed not specified.

Sam also sent an inscribed copy of TA to Frank B. Swigart: “Let us save tomorrows for work” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Frederic Remington.

The book is exceedingly interesting, & I thank you very much for sending it to me.

Up to 1811 (steam navigation) those vast rivers were not valuable; they were valuable 60 years (until 1870); they have had no value since; they have been flowing a million years. The questions arises, what were they made for, anyway? [MTP]. Note: Gribben identifies the book as History of Early Steamboat Navigation on the Missouri River, etc. by Hiram Martin Chittenden (1858-1917); the book was inscribed: “To Saml L. Clemens / from / Frederic Remington / 1906” [141].

Clemens’ A.D. for this day continued the subject of Jan. 24 about Joe Twichell’s unpopular vote for Grover Cleveland [AMT 1: 319-323].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Poultney [sic] Bigelow joined us at tea today. He looked worried & white for the great controversy he has stirred up in the government by his article on Panama has brought disaster to him. He is too honest, too fearless. He lost the friendship of Emperor William by his frank statements, and now he has lost the friendship of President Roosevelt [MTP TS 21].

James A. Renwick sent a note of receipt for $291.67 for Feb. rent [MTP].

February 2 Friday – Jean Clemens suffered three more epileptic attacks. Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Jean—9 A.M., 6 P.M., 10 P.M.

I had a very plain talk with Mr. Clemens this morning about Jean’s condition and told him how on Tuesday I had talked with Dr. [Edward] Quintard. The dreadfulness of it all swept over him as I knew it would and with that fiercest of all his looks in his face he blazed out against the swindle of life and the treachery of a God that can create disease and misery and crime—create things that men would be condemned for creating—that men would be ashamed to create. Looking up at the face of little Jean—the picture that hangs over Mr. Clemens’s bed—one can seem to see angry, pitiful, helpless tears there—tears over the swindle of her life. Dr. Quintard is going to change her treatment, and they are going to give up Dr. Starr.

This afternoon a messenger came with a note from Mr. Frank Fuller asking Mr. Clemens to call on Mr. Fuller’s ill, ill wife. I telephoned to him that Mr. Clemens would be happy to do so, and tomorrow afternoon at 5 has been set for the call. When I went up to Mr. Clemens’s room with a second note from Mr. Fuller, this time a note of gratitude, I asked Mr. Clemens about Mr. Fuller and he said that he was acting Governor of the Territory of Utah in 1861 when Mr. Clemens stopped there for 2 or 3 days on his way to the Pacific Coast for the first time. He went on to say that now “Fuller is a thousand years old, but he didn’t look it until a year ago” (his voice sounded crackly with age over the telephone) and that in those early days in 1867 when Mr. Clemens came east, Mr. Fuller met him in New York and because he had a local reputation in California wanted to have him lecture in New York’s biggest hall, Cooper Union, and they’d pack the house. Mr. Clemens said it couldn’t be done, Mr. Fuller said it could, so he started in to advertise this new lecturer and kept it up for 8 days, but it “didn’t draw a customer”. Mr. Clemens said then that they must paper the house—so Fuller sent bushel baskets of complimentary tickets to all the teachers of all the schools in or near New York, and to swell people in the city and the place was crammed, even the platform. People were turned away in shoals—and the manager took in $35. Got it from curious folks who wondered what was going on and so paid their dollar apiece to satisfy their curiosity. Characteristically Mr. Clemens didn’t tell whether he pleased those people or not [MTP TS 22-23; also Hill 121 in part].

Clemens’ A.D. for this day continued the subject of Feb. 1—The Death of Susy Clemens—Ends with mention of Dr. John Brown [AMT 1: 323-328].

American Mechanical Cashier sent a notice of a stockholders’ meeting on Feb. 13 at 3.30 p.m. in Jersey City [MTP].

The Architectural League sent an engraved invitation for their annual dinner on this evening at 7 p.m. in the American Fine Arts Building, requesting an answer [MTP].

Nanon Toby wrote from NYC to Sam. Toby had been a fan since childhood, and requested Sam to send him any “literary aspirants” requesting criticism that Clemens had no time for [MTP].

February 3 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Dennis J. Mahoney.

Dear Mr. Mahoney: / If you go on trying to make better Americans of the people whom you meet you cannot be better employed. You will be doing your best, you will be doing your full share, & nothing more can be required of any man. / May you prosper— ... [MTP]. Note: Mahoney not further identified.

Sam also wrote to Gertrude Natkin, 138 W. 98th in N.Y.C.

Now then, dear, I will recal myself to your remembrance—then I will proceed. Do you remember coming out of Carnegie Hall one day & exchanging views concerning the weather with a white-headed patriarch with a limp & a glass eye? Very well, I am that patriarch.

And so, to business. A gentleman has just been here who represents the West Side Y. M. C. A., & he says that every Sunday afternoon at 3.30 p.m he fills the Majestic Theatre, 59th & Broadway, with his young fellows & they listen to lectures furnished by prominent men. I don't lecture any more, but I promised to introduce one of his lecturers for him. I chose Gen. Horace Porter, late Ambassador to France, because I have known him 30 years. He is to talk on the 18th of this month unless he is obliged to go to Washington on Hague Tribunal business; in which case he will do his talk a week later, on the 25th.

Would you like to hear him? A few ladies are admitted—very few. They stick them around, here & there in boxes — none on the floor, which is reserved for the young fellows. My secretary (whom you saw with me) is invited, & is going. Could you come, with your father or your mother, or both?

If you come I shall want to send you a written order on those people to see to it that you are not left outside or there will be trouble. And won't you be a good child & come & speak to me?

I kiss your hand, dear.

Your oldest friend [MTAq 10].

Gertrude Natkin replied to Sam, delighted at his invitation for herself and her mother, which she was “more than delighted to accept.” When she read his letter of this date she wrote, “I could have kissed you; but perhaps that will hold good for another time” [MTAq 11]. Note: Cooley points out that Natkin didn't become an angelfish but that his “correspondence with her points the way to the Aquarium and the dozen young ladies who were to become angelfish” [2]. insert angelfish pin

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today Mr. Clemens was in one of his most interesting moods. He had no dictating to do and we went over a big waiting pile of mail & he talked about the dictated ms. and he red me scraps out of a new book. He said that Andrew D. White's autobiography is too expensive, which it is at $7.50, but good to have of course, and then he swung off onto the subject of “man” the helplessness of him and his entire lack of “free will”. I didn't know how strong a fatalist he is until this morning. Every deed is leading right on toward the next. “We're nothing but a rag bag of disappeared ancestors.” He swung up and down the room in his brown robe, smoking one cigar after another. Such a glorious creature he is! When I'm tired or nervous and worried and have to go to his room with a budget, it doesn't take long for his influence to quiet me. It is his greatness, his genius, his magnetism, his strong humanness, and his great sweet soul [MTP TS 23-24; also Gribben 760 in part]. Note: Andrew Dickson White (1832-1918).

Helen J. Sanborn wrote from Winter Hill, Mass. to inform Sam that the young Spanish girl Carolina Marcial whom he wished to introduce to Jean would be in NYC from Apr. 2 to 13, and would speak on the evening of Apr. 2 at the Hotel Savoy before the Presbyterian Union [MTP].

The New York Times, p. BR65 announced a new volume from Harper & Brothers:

“Mark Twain, Humorous Editor.”

“Men and Things” is the title of the first volume of a series—constituting a sort of encyclopaedia of humor—which the Harpers are publishing, with Mark Twain as titular compiler. Much of Mr. Clemens’s own work is included, and the series is a development of a single volume published as long ago as 1888. “Men and Things” is to be published some time after the middle of the month.

February 4 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Richard R. Bowker asking when “a copyright meeting of importance in Washington or elsewhere” would take place [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Yesterday Mr. Paine gave to Mr. Clemens and me copies of the first Tammany Tiger designed by Nast. Mr. Paine is a generous man, it is a comfort to have his presence in the house and to know that every morning he is working over Mr. Clemens’s autobiographical papers. He is bringing into order the clippings and letters and everything.

Today Mr. Clemens lunched with Mr. and Mrs. John W. Alexander and Maude Adams. We didn’t see him on his returns; but at tea time when Mr. Montague and Mr. and Mrs. Loomis were here and he came down to join us he told what a delightful time he had had and how charming Miss Adams was in her description of the great interest that the children take in her play of Peter Pan. To them it is a reality. They write letters to her about the wonderful flying and one little boy sent her five cents to pay for telling him just how it is done [MTP TS 24]. Note: Nast first drew the Tammany Tiger in 1871; it was first published in Harper’s Weekly. See insert.

Edward E. Clarke wrote to Sam from Hastings, England. Clarke referred to Clemens’ Dec. 1904 article on Joan of Arc. He had sent copies of it to various French authorities and asked if Sam would send the MS for the article to be placed in a French artifact collection. A listing of artifacts referred to is not in the file [MTP].

Samuel Johnson Woolf, graphic artist, journalist, and illustrator (1880-1948), wrote from NYC enclosing a note from Col. George Harvey. Woolf wished to paint Twain’s portrait and since Sam had “so kindly consented to sit” he wished to know when he should come [MTP]. Note: shortly after this letter, a reply was made (not extant) and an appointment set for Clemens to sit for Woolf. The following article is Woolf’s account of the meeting (day not specified, which ran in Collier’s, vol. 45, no. 8, 1910, pages 42-44, and now shown on Schmidt’s website:

It was on an afternoon in February 1906, [Feb. 9] that I had my first appointment to meet Mark Twain and make arrangements for sittings for a portrait which I was to paint of him.

At that time he lived in the old-fashioned red-brick house on the corner of Ninth Street and Fifth Avenue, the one he occupied up to the time that he moved to Stormfield. Promptly at the appointed time I called, and passing through a hall filled on either side with book-cases, I was ushered into a long, high-ceilinged front parlor so characteristic of the older New York houses. Book-cases here filled all sides of the room, and, with a hasty glance, I noticed Macaulay’s “England,” Gibbon’s “Rome,” and Carlyle’s works. Two large pictures also attracted my attention; one of him painted in Italy and Alexander’s charming decorative representation of the unfortunate Jean Clemens.

I had little time for observing more, for, on looking through the open folding doors, and which led to a cozy sitting-room, I caught my first sight of the venerable author who had but a few months before passed his seventieth milestone.

How different, in most cases, are the impressions that photographs and portraits give from those received when we stand face to face with the original! How unlike were all the pictures which I had seen of him. At that time he still wore his black clothes, and his entire head seemed strikingly pale. Instead of the rugged, weather-beaten face which I had expected, I saw one softer and calmer, but no less strong, while the delicacy and refinement of his features were most noticeable. His hair, too, which I had always thought wiry, was glossy and silken. Never have I seen a head where it seemed more an integral part—its ivory-like tones melting imperceptibly into the lighter hues of the skin, so that the line of juncture was almost entirely lost. Even his hands betrayed a more actively nervous man than one would be led to imagine a former river-pilot could be. In build he was smaller and slighter than he appeared in most pictures, though it probably was the massiveness of his head that gave this appearance.

On hearing me in the other room, and without waiting for me to be announced, he got up from a long sofa which was placed crossways in a bay window, and removing a pair of steel spectacles, he wrinkled his bushy white eyebrows until his eyes were almost lost, and came forward with a short “How d’ye do?”

My heart fell: so here was America’s humorist; how glum, how severe! But scarcely had I time to record these impressions than the eyebrows relaxed, and beginning at the corner of his deep-set eyes, a smile, no, not a smile, but rather a soft reflection of one, illumined his face; and underneath the glow of kindly sweetness could be seen the touch of sadness.

“So you have come here to do me, my boy; come in and sit down: I have been done before,” he added, “in many ways, and I have also had some portraits painted, though each one I vowed would be the last; and as I don’t believe any one’s word should be broken in at least ten years, I guess you will really be the last one to do it. Wait until you look around, and I think you will agree that I am perfectly preserved—in oil, at least.”

Reminiscences

Before deciding upon a suitable place to paint, we talked. He had seen a portrait of an actor which I had painted recently, so we, or rather he, talked of the stage and his one excursion into dramatic literature, “The Gilded Age.” Getting up from the sofa and clasping his hands behind his back, he walked up and down the room, recalling scenes of thirty or more years ago, and stopping in front of the marble mantel now and then while he emphasized some especial point.

“They thought they could kill it,” he began; “the morning after the first performance all the critics damned it—not a word in its favor; the second night we had hardly a handful of people.” Up to this point there was resentment in his voice. The plaint of the unappreciated was heard, but suddenly changing his tone, he went on, the smile again beginning to break.

“I grew anxious for my personal safety. But the third night there were almost two handfuls and several laughs, and at the end of the second week those of our friends who had not lent a willing hand had to pay for their seats. Yes, if you have something to say, say it often enough and folks will be bound to listen.” Suddenly remembering what I was there for, he said: “But this isn’t painting the portrait; we have work to do, both of us.” And so he took me from one room to the other, pointing out cherished tokens and mementoes.

Into the dining-room with its colonial furniture and a portrait of himself painted years ago by Frank Millet. “It’s all mine, except the hair,” he remarked. I looked in bewilderment. “It was this way,” he explained, “when I started sitting for that one, my hair was fairly long, but as the sittings continued, it grew until it was uncomfortable. So one day, without saying anything to Millet about it, I went to the barber to have it trimmed. Unfortunately, I grew sleepy in the comfortable chair, and when I woke up I saw that I had lost all likeness to my portrait. I didn’t know what to do, for I was afraid of Millet in those days, so on the day for the next sitting I hired a wig and went to the studio. When I got there Millet at once noticed how fine my hair looked and painted it, and it wasn’t until the session was ended that I took it off.”

Then we went upstairs to his bedroom, in which, in contrast to the rest of the house, everything was in a delightful disorder. On the window-sill stood his shaving glass and cup, while on either side of a large dark wood Italian bed, with two carved angels over the head, were tables covered with books and pipes. Opening off of this room was his den, also filled with books, and how his eyes glistened as he showed the various little keepsakes which brought back the memories of dead years. A silver loving-cup, a Bismarck tobacco jar, a drawing by Howard Pyle of the menu for his seventieth birthday dinner, together with the gilded laurel wreath with which a young girl dressed as Joan of Arc had crowned him on that occasion.

It was finally decided that the sofa in the room between the parlor and the dining-room would be the best place for him to pose. It was there as a usual thing he would sit after lunch and smoke and dream. On one side of the room was a large organ, and often during the sittings either his daughter or secretary would play. Music seems to appeal to him, rather from the associations it recalled than on its own account; and often when some old ballad or war song was played, a peculiar look would steal across his face, and his eyes would fill with tears; then, as the melody changed and some other remembrance came to him, he would pass it off with a light remark, joking in a way at his own seriousness. But that seemed to be especially characteristic of him—no matter how deep the thought that engaged his attention, by a peculiar process of mental conjuring he changed his appearance, or perhaps his point of view, so as to make it present a lighter side. In doing this he never for one moment lost sight of the original depth, but felt rather that by donning the cap and bells he could hold the attention and preach and amuse simultaneously.

At the end of one of the sitting he got up and came over to see the progress which I made on the picture. "Make me beautiful," he said; "remember, truth is your most valuable possession; therefore don't waste it." At another time two friends, very tall men came in to see him, to ask him to take a walk on the avenue. "With you two!" said he, standing between them and taking each by the arm, "never, never shall it be said that Mark Twain was the cross-piece of a capital H."

His Interest in His Hair

After two or three sittings he saw that talking did not interfere with my work, and sometimes he conversed during the entire sitting. One day, however, he said: "I am afraid my talking bothers you. I guess you are one of the few people who would be willing to pay me to keep quiet." I assured him that such was by no means the case, and that, far from interfering with the progress of the picture, it helped me.

If he was vain about anything in his personal appearance, it was his hair; and that I should get it right in the picture seemed to give him the greatest concern. Several times he gave me suggestions as to the way he wore it, asking me to wait until he went upstairs and brushed it. Then he would come down with it rearranged, and I would get to work again.

As the head began to near completion, he wanted to know what I would do with his hands, for I had them only sketched in, so as to get the general arrangement of the entire figure on the canvas. "I guess a book would look better in them," he remarked, smilingly, one day, "even if a cigar is more natural." I solved the difficulty by putting a cigar in one hand and a book in the other, as one seemed as much a part of him as the other.

One day while I was there a prominent New York paper called him up on the telephone and offered to give one hundred dollars to any charity which he might name for a fifteen-minute interview on a certain subject which he did not care to discuss. The refusal worried him during the rest of the afternoon, and before I left he gave me a note to mail to a certain hospital, enclosing a check as contribution to its "conscience fund." In many other ways did he show the same spirit, and I can never forget how on one occasion when a severe snowstorm set in while I was at his house he insisted that I wear his overshoes home, assuring me that he was old enough to break any appointment on account of the weather, and that he would not need them again until it was clear, and then he did not wear them.

The last time he posed he was particularly reflective; in fact, he said very little during the entire sitting. While I was still there the expressman called for the picture to take it up to my studio. As it was being carried out, Mr. Clemens turned and said; "Now I feel as if I had attended my own funeral!"

Note: Lyon's journal gives Feb. 9 as the day Woolf began the portrait of Twain; see Feb. 9.

February 5 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to William A. Caldwell (incoming not extant) who evidently had asked of something Sam spoke of in a recent talk; was it an example of "thought-transference"? No, it was simply an old maxim of his written in London ten years before that he'd made one of his texts in his speech. "The idea is pretty mouldy & commonplace. There isn't anybody alive (or dead) who hasn't used it from one to sixty times" [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Dr. John Brown, continued—Incidents connected with Susy Clemens's childhood—Bad spelling, etc. [AMT 1: 328-334].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today Jean and I went up to see Dr. Peterson who is going to have charge of her case, her pitiful malady, if he feels that he can benefit her. She has been running down rapidly and looks badly, and is ill, really very ill" [MTP TS 24-25].

Melvin L. Severy wrote from Arlington Heights, Mass. to Sam. Severy was preparing a book on the Congo and asked for information Sam had used in "King Leopold's Soliloquy." Sam directed Lyon on Severy's query: "All documents can be had of Congo Reform or from English Headquarters" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal records her taking Jean Clemens to see Dr. Frederick Peterson, "who is going to take charge of her case, her pitiful malady, if he feels that he can benefit her" [Hill 121]. Note: Peterson of Columbia Univ. was American's top authority on epilepsy.

Charles R. Deacon for the Union Printers' Home, Colorado Springs, Colo. wrote to thank Sam for a copy of TA Sam had donated for their Home library [MTP].

Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam (only the envelope survives), but in the file is a note from her journal, "I was very happy and sent Mark the following reply." She does not reveal a copy of the letter [MTP].

February 5 ca. – Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to David Pae's Jan. 26 question that she thought Sam would name HF and JA as "perhaps his favorites" [MTP].

February 6 Tuesday – Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam proposing a 2 ½ to 3 ½ % royalty if she sold Paul Kester's version of TS. Sometime later the note is annotated "satisfactory" [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Playing "The Prince and the Pauper"—Acting charades, etc. [AMT 1: 334-341].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

This afternoon late, I took Teresa over to the Post Graduate Hospital. She is ill, poor girl and after trying in vain to do her work and rapidly growing iller with stomach trouble, almost an ulceration of the stomach, Dr. Halsey gave orders for her to be taken there. When I reached home it was after seven and I thought Mr. Clemens would be gone to his dinner with Mr. David Munro and others at The Players; but he wasn't—he and Robert Reid stood in the middle room smoking and waiting for me to come in to give them some music. Scotch music. I played "The Campbells are Coming" for the pleasure of those two men. Robert Reid is so very tall, and big too, fine strong shoulders [MS TS 25; also Gribben 115 in part]. Note: Dr. Robert Hurtin

Halsey (1873-1955), would doctor Clemens until his death in 1910, and was a founder of the American Heart Assoc. Being in medicine, his middle name was unfortunate.

February 7 Wednesday – The New York Times, Feb. 8, reported on another speech by Mark Twain, this one at a dinner of the American branch of the Dickens Fellowship, which was celebrating the 94th anniversary of the birth of Charles Dickens. Sam did not mention Dickens in his speech. See also Fatout, MT Speaking 482-4.

TWAIN ON ROCKEFELLER, JR.

He's All Right, but as to His Knowledge of Veracity—Well!

Mark Twain declared last night [Feb. 7] that he had never told a lie in his life—up to that moment. Then he said he was glad to be present. Mr. Clemens was a guest at the dinner and entertainment given at the Press Club in memory of Charles Dickens under the auspices of the American branch of the Dickens Fellowship. George Cary Eggleston, Honorary President of the Dickens Fellowship, was toastmaster.

"John D. Rockefeller, Jr.," said Mr. Clemens, "told his Sunday school class a few weeks ago all about veracity, and why it was better that everybody should always keep a plentiful supply on hand, and I want to say to you that among the hundreds of letters I receive each week many of them have suggested that I ought to attend Mr. Rockefeller's class. I know Mr. Rockefeller very well. He is a fine fellow, and competent in many ways, but as to his knowledge of veracity—well, he is only 35 years old, and I am 70. I have been familiar with veracity twice as long as he has."

Mr. Clemens asserted that the world at large has missed the point of the story little George Washington told his father about the cherry tree episode. The boy did not tell a lie, because he could have done so had he felt like it, and he would not have had to attend a Rockefeller class to teach him now. The pith of the story was the astonishment of George's father to find that he had a son who had a chance to tell a lie and didn't do it.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Tonight at half past nine Mr. Clemens & I started for the Press Club with two of its members who came up here from the club rooms in Nassau Street. Mr. Clemens had said that if he felt like it he would have me telephone to them at nine o'clock & they promised to send a wheelbarrow for him at his own suggestion. The downtown streets were deserted and looked almost like the silent narrow dark streets of Florence. Mr. George Carey Eggleston took Mr. Clemens in charge when we arrived and a Mr. Davis took me by the hand and put me in charge of his wife at one of 3 long tables running lengthwise of the big room, which was decorated by flags, English and American, and portraits of literary men. When Mr. Clemens finally interrupted a droning stupid speech by simply entering the room, he received an applauding salutation and with his sweet gracious manner and his light, light step he was shown to the seat of honor by Mr. Eggleston and after Mr. E. made a few introductory remarks Mr. Clemens rose amid the glad shouts of all those people. How great he is, how magnetic. His speech was delightful, full of subtleties that those people couldn't see through at all, but they didn't know it. They didn't know about [Henry] Butters and Harold Wheeler [MTP TS 25-26].

Richard R. Bowker wrote to Sam that the continuation of the Copyright Conferences in NY was of lesser importance for Twain to attend than the Congressional hearings that would come later.

You will be interested to know that Dr. Edward Everett Hale, now Chaplain of the Senate, has also promised to appear at the committee hearings in advocacy of a term for life and an extension, preferably for fifty years, as he also is an example of the injustice of the present copyright system—his "Man Without a Country" as well as earlier works already being out of copyright [MTP].

George B. Harvey wrote a short note to Sam. “If you can, please do keep Wednesday the 14th, luncheon time, free to come down to give Mr. Alden a little send-off” [MTP].

February 8 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Gertrude Natkin.

Aren’t you the dearest child there is? I am perfectly sure of it. I was never surer of anything in my life. When a person gets to be as old as I am he can’t take new friends into his heart easily — they don’t seem as dear as the old ones; but you, oh you are an exception! I wouldn’t trade you for dozens & dozens of these gray-heads I’ve been so fond of all these ages.

If Gen. Porter should postpone his lecture to the 25th we will write or telephone in time, so that you & your mother will be saved from making a fruitless journey to 59th street.

Meantime, don’t forget me, & don’t forget my name. Set it down on a piece of paper; & if you lose the paper, call me up & inquire: “3907 Gramercy”—it isn’t in the telephone book.

P. S. Do you know, dear, I am lost in admiration of my own smartness. I first wrote the enclosed order, & then asked Miss Lyon to call up Mr. Powlison & say I should want a couple of friends taken care of: he broke in, at that point & said “ask Mr. Clemens to write an order; the usher will find me & deliver it, & I will see that they are shown to the seats provided for them.” She brings that report this moment. Do you notice? he came near repeating the words of my order. I used to be often bright, like that, but not lately—oh, no, that is not so—I am always bright.

He has telephoned his name; it is Charles—or Charley;—I have never seen him, & so I don’t know which he prefers. [enclosure] / Majestic Theatre— / Please report to Mr. Powlison that the friends whom my secretary spoke to him about, have arrived, so that he can have them shown to the seats provided for them [MTAq 11-12]. Note: Sam had agreed to introduce Gen. Horace Porter on Feb. 18, but wrote there was a chance Porter might have to postpone until Feb. 25. See Feb. 14 to Natkin. Charles F. Powlison is identified in the Mar. 5, 1905 NY Times article for the Mar. 4 event as Secretary of the West Side Branch of the YMCA. See Mar. 4 entry.

Clemens’ A.D. for this day: Susy Clemens’ Biography, continued—Romancer to the children—Incident of the spoon-shaped drive—The burglar alarm does its whole duty [AMT 1: 341-346].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

A whirl of young, young men came to the house this afternoon, all with messages & invitations for Mr. Clemens. Among them was a young clergyman who came with an invitation to Mr. Clemens to lunch with a club of young clergymen. But Mr. Clemens said to me as he sat on the edge of the bed with his bare feet hanging out from under a Jaeger blanket, “Why, I can’t go there, they’ll think I’m a Christian if I do, and I am—a Hell of a Christian.”

Oh, he’s so much more of a Christian than most.

This evening Mr. Gilder telephoned to say that Mr. Marly, Belgian representative here, and a Roman Catholic priest of Albany, also a Belgian and a strong adherent of Leopold’s, were at 13 East 8th Street and they’d like to see Mr. Clemens. It was just nine o’clock and I told Mr. Gilder that Mr. Clemens had gone to his room, but that I’d take him the message. When I delivered it, Mr. Clemens was superb in his denunciation of the men who could say that the Congo reports were exaggerated. He couldn’t & wouldn’t admit them. If their King had been the means of murdering one million instead of tens millions of helpless creatures, or if he confessed to the murder of only one soul, he stood guilty—just as guilty. It is a great picture he makes when he sits up in bed and with flashing eye and uplifted right arm he utters his fearless condemnations of those who are [three illegible canceled words]. I carried his reply to Mr. Gilder—the replay that those 2 men would feel insulted before they had been in the house five minutes, because he has such contempt for the man they would try to defend [MTP TS 26-27].

The Players Club wrote a short reminder of the St. Valentine's Dinner to David Munro at the Players' on Wed. Feb. 14 at 7 p.m. "Every one is requested to bring a Valentine offering to the guest of honor" [MTP]. Note: on the note IVL wrote, "Mr. Clemens took a copy of Joan of Arc."

Dihdwo Twe wrote from Ashburnham, Mass. to Sam "dissatisfied with the method of the 'Congo Reform Association'... "they are trying to influence this great country by distribution of printed circulars. This will take too much money, too long time, and besides the result will remain uncertain." Twe wanted to bring two or three Congolese children who had been mutilated and urged the C.R.A. to perform this scheme. In debt about $5,000, the Assoc. refused. A note on the back of Twe's letter by Lyon shows Sam thought the plan "excellent, but that he doubts if it is really worthwhile to continue the agitation in America with the idea of getting help from our Government" [Hawkins 171; MTP]. Note: Hawkins offers a thorough and scholarly treatment of the Congo Reform Movement and of Twain's involvement in it, and of the subsequent reversal of the US government and ultimate solutions.

Erasmus Wilson wrote from NYC to Sam. After sitting near him on the previous evening, Wilson bid him greetings from James Whitcomb Riley and also from his friend Charles Whistler, "who had the honor of setting up some of your 'stuff' in the early days of journalism on the coast." Wilson enjoyed Sam's talk and asked if he might call at his convenience [MTP].

February 8 ca. – On or after this date Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Dihdwo Twe's request. See note in Feb. 8 from Dwe, which summarizes Sam's answer [MTP].

Also on or after this date Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Erasmus Wilson's Feb. 8 request. "Mr. Clemens's movements are so uncertain that he is never sure to be at home at any particular time—his duty to be at home to receive co[mpany]—always try to be here at that time to receive people" [MTP].

February 9 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

All these days are full of interesting doings. A steady flame of delight burns through every hour; it burns—but sometimes the fog of little trying circumstances will obscure it until the wit comes to make you see right through the fog to the wonderful, wonderful flame. I don't want any earthly thing outside of this house. And it is such a comfort to have Mr. Paine full of the love of the daily dictation, missing not a gesture—not a word—not a glance, but treasuring it all.

Mr. Clemens has begun to sit for a portrait to young Mr. Woolf. He doesn't enjoy it, for he hates to be photographed or painted. We were speaking of the Gessford photograph today, it has so much fire in the eyes, a rare thing to find in any of his photographs and he said that he was just beginning to lose his temper and was on the verge of saying so when the final exposure was made [MTP TS 27-28]. Note: Samuel Johnson Woolf.

Clemens' A.D. for this day: The "strong language" episode in the bath-room—Susy's reference to "The Prince and the Pauper"—The mother and the children help edit the books—Reference to ancestors [AMT 1: 346-354].

In Wrentham, Mass. Helen Keller collapsed from overwork after attending a meeting in behalf of the deaf in Portland, Maine. She had to cancel a Mar. 20 New York appearance at which Mark Twain was to preside and Joseph Hodges Choate was to have been one of the speakers [The Oregonian, Feb. 10, 1906, p. 1, "Helen Kellar [sic] Has Collapsed"].

February 10 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Thomas S. Barbour, confiding the results of his last conference with the Secretary of State:

I am so busy with other matters that I have failed to tell you of my visit to Mr. Bacon in Washington a week ago. He & Mr. [Elihu] Root have been making a searching examination among the Department's archives with this resultant verdict: our Government is so entirely outside of the Congo matter that it could by no means initiate a move in it, nor even second a move made by one or all of the other Governments concerned, without laying itself open to the danger of undiplomatic intrusion. As I understood Mr. Bacon this was the view left on record in the Department by John Hay after an examination of the matter.

The strength of the Reform movement in America lay in the apparent fact that our Government was one of the responsible parties and therefore could be persuaded to come forward and do its duty. The above verdict relieves it and sets it free. I think it most unlikely that it will ever throw away the pleasant advantages of that verdict [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Andrew Carnegie.

The whisky arrived in due course from over the water; last week one bottle of it was extracted from the wood & inserted into me, on the instalment plan, with this result: that I believe it to be the best & smoothest whiskey now on the planet. Thanks, oh, thanks; I have discarded Peruna.

Hoping that you three are well & happy & will be coming back before the winter sets in ... [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Jan. 29 from D. Ceall. "I thank you; for I resemble Carlyle & all other men in this: that the approving word is very welcome to me. If ever Carlyle's energy of language was ever an offense to me, it must have been in a long-past & forgotten time; I shouldn't be able to find fault with it now"[MTP].

Frank Fuller wrote to Sam.

My Ever Dear Mark: My darling wife dropped asleep forever at just 6 o'clock this morning and I am all alone.

I was compelled to come down here for a few minutes & so I am rewarded with your sweet note thorough Miss Lyon.

We shall take the dear one to Portsmouth where she was born [MTP]. Note: Fuller thanked Sam for his visit, that it had meant so much to his wife, Livy's friend and intimate. "Her life went out without a moment's notice & I could not say goodbye! So went our sweethearts, Mark, so went the light of our lives into the endless unknown. Faithfully yours."

Sam replied to Frank Fuller: "I am so glad dear Fuller, so glad I made that visit; & so sorry the rush & turmoil of life prevented my repeating it. I have words of sorrow for you, but not for her: how blessed are the dead, how fortunate are the dead. Ever your friend" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Grant came in this afternoon and after talking with me about Mrs. Peabody who had applied to Mr. Clemens for aid, and in whose behalf I had telephoned to Mr. Grant, he went up to talk with Mr. Clemens. After dinner Mr. Clemens told me that when Mr. Grant returns from Boston at the end of a week he is going to take Mr. Clemens to the Hippodrome. Mr. Clemens has been wanting to go, for there is a great spectacular scene which is beautiful, we are told.

Today the beautiful Barnett photograph arrived from England and it is for me. For 3 years I have longed for one, and as I grow older I marvel more and more over the fact that anything I long for with a strong steady silent desire, comes to me in time. It never fails [MTP TS 28]. Note: over the first paragraph above there are three diagonal lines, as if the paragraph was stricken.

Her journal about this day on Feb. 11: Yesterday [Feb. 10] after the portrait sitting Mr. Clemens and I went over to the hospital to see Teresa. She was so happy to see the Signor Padrone, & the pale face brightened; but we couldn't stay long for a little girl suffering from heart disease made Mr. Clemens own gentle heart ache so that we had to leave. [in left margin: The little girl died that night, 4 days later the head nurse told me that as she was dying, blood spurted from her lips upon the nurse's gown and she murmured "Excuse me."] He is so thoughtful & feared that the unlighted cigar he carried would make the little creature ill, but the nurse in charge said, “No”, she wouldn’t notice it and so we came home through the snowy streets, the coupe having to go slowly [TS 18]. Note: See Feb. 11 for the entry relevant to that day.

Ida Benfey Judd wrote from 1 W. 87th, NYC, to Sam. She referred to his prior permission through Frank Bliss, to use parts of FE in a comedy presentation. Now she was planning a trilogy of Biblical stories about Job and Joseph and asked Sam if she could come and tell them to him. Would he be a patron? She’d already enlisted Felix Adler, John Burroughs, Bronson Howard, Mary E. Wilkins, Ida M. Tarbell and a few others [MTP]. Note: source says this may be 1906 or 1907.

Abbott Handerson Thayer wrote to Sam about the peace and quiet of his Dublin house, and how it all made him reflect on life, Sam’s 70th birthday, and how thankful he was for “Mark Twain’s existence” [MTP].

Harper’s Weekly published “When Mark Twain Lectured” by W.H. Merrill, p. 199, 209. Tenney: “Describes an MT lecture ‘in the early seventies...in a thriving village in western New York” [42].

Collier’s Weekly published “Lincoln Farm Association” [Camfield’s bibliog.].

February 11 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Today hasn’t been a very gay Sunday, for Mr. Clemens went off to lunch at Mrs. Henry Holt’s with the Pumpelly’s, & then he went to see Mr. & Mrs. Rogers finishing up with dinner at the Broughtons & not reaching home until nearly 10:30” [MTP TS 28-29].

Evelyn Garrant Smalley wrote from NYC to thank Sam for his help in “responding so instantly” with a letter for her to Andrew Carnegie. Carnegie had “promised to guarantee a thousand dollars” to her fund for Russian actors [MTP].

February 12 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

The dictating began again this morning after two days of rest. This evening Mr. Clemens was saying that Mr. Paine and Miss Hobby make a good audience, and quite enough too. Mr. Paine came in while Jean and I were at tea, so he joined us. He came to inquire some facts about Mr. Clemens’s fountain pen, for it is such a good one. (The Conklin Pen). The sitting for the portrait bores Mr. Clemens; perhaps because he feels that it is not going to be very good and then it is at a bad time in the day too, but any time would be bad with that artist. As we came up stairs for the night Mr. Clemens gave me the last budget of typewritten ms. It is very beautiful, for just now he is talking about Susie Clemens and her “autobiography of my father,” and he has begun to use parts of it for the autobiography [MTP TS 29].

Clemens’ A.D. for this day: Susy’s Biography continued—Some of the tricks played in “Tom Sawyer”—The broken sugar-bowl—Skating on the Mississippi with Tom Nash, etc. [AMT 1: 350-354].

Mary E. Joyce wrote from NYC in behalf of a club of fifteen crippled boys, to whom she was reading TS. She wanted to find pins or buttons with Twain’s picture to give to the boys [MTP]. Note: on the mourning-bordered note from Joyce, Lyon wrote, “Mr. Clemens applied to R.W. Ashcroft who knows where the little badges can be made.” See Mar. 17 entry.

February 13 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to thank an unidentified person for “the newspaper slip & for your pleasant words” [MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. for this day: Susy’s Biography continued—Cadet of Temperance—First meeting of Mr. Clemens and Miss Langdon—Miss Olivia Langdon an invalid—Dr. Newton [AMT 1: 354-359].

M. McElroy wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam and enclosing an article that referred to a meeting for the blind. Was it to be a public or private meeting? McElroy offered to put Sam in touch with someone who could offer “good and substantial practical ideas” for Sam’s undertaking for the blind [MTP]. Note: see ca. Feb. 13. McElroy enclosed a clipping from the Boston Evening World, “Helen Keller in State of Collapse.” Lyon wrote on the typed letter, “Meeting will take place on the 29th of March at the Waldorf, but necessarily with Miss Keller absent from the program. It will be public. As for further particulars I am not very well posted, but refer him to Miss Holt who is at the head of the movement.”

Gertrude Natkin wrote a valentine poem to Sam on a picture postcard (of a girl with flowers), mailed inside an envelope:

TO MY SWEET VALENTINE

You are a merry merry lark,
You are the noble witty Mark;
My thoughts of you to tell, I fain,
You cut my little heart in Twain

[MTAq 12]. Note: Sam replied on Feb. 14

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mr. Clemens is hating & hating & hating having to sit for his portrait, and it is such a bad portrait too. Young Woolf hasn’t caught one gleam even of Mr. Clemens’s personality and the man who gazes at you from that canvas hasn’t one idea in his head. It must be stopped. There is a mistake somewhere [MTP TS 29-30]. Note: Samuel Johnson Woolf.

Brander Matthews wrote a small, mourning-bordered note to Sam. “Do you know any good reason why you should not come here to lunch at half past one on Washington’s Birthday—the 22nd—Thursday of next week? / I’ve scarcely seen you all this winter” [MTP].

William McCutchan Morrison wrote to thank Sam for his little booklet, “King Leopold’s Soliloquy,” which he thought had done more good than anything written on the subject [MTP].

February 13-15 Thursday – During this period Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to an unidentified person’s invitation to an opera in Washington [MTP].

February 13 ca. – On or after this date Sam directed Lyon to reply to M. McElroy’s Feb. 13 request: the meeting was on Mar. 29 at the Waldorf, and public, but Helen Keller “of necessity” would not appear. He directed Lyon to steer the man to Miss Hall who was head of the movement [MTP].

February 14 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Gertrude Natkin.

It was a very sweet Valentine, & you are a dear. But I have told you that before. You got ahead of me, but it was only because I was busy. Yesterday I bought my favorite book for you, but I fell to reading it, & became fascinated, as always before, & here it lies, yet—unsent. It is the book of that quaint & charming & affectionate & tempestuous & remorseful little child, Marjorie Fleming. Doubtless you are already acquainted with it. I am incurably slow & lazy, but I will send it, sure—I certainly will.

General Porter can’t lecture on the 18th, but I have promised to introduce Dr. Van Dyke on the 25th. I think it will be at Carnegie Hall—but I will let you know. He is a very gifted man, but I have not known him as long as I have known Porter.

Aren’t you dear & sweet? Doubters are requested to inquire of SLC [MTAq 13]. Note: Dr. Henry Van Dyke, clergyman and Sam’s friend was also unable to speak; Sam did give a lecture on Mar. 4. Fatout lists as “conjectural” a speech introducing Van Dyke as “late Feb. early March, and before Mar. 4” [MT Speaking 487-

91] but Van Dyke did not speak, so it's doubtful the speech was ever given. Evidently Fatout did not have access to all the letters, and his schedule of speeches is sometimes in error.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight Mr. Clemens went to The Players to a dinner given as a surprise to Mr. David Munro, that canny Scotchman at half past six. I was in Jean's room when Mr. Clemens called me asking me to give him some music & when I reaching the living room I found Mr. Paine there too. He was going up to The Players with Mr. Clemens. The music was Scotch, as it always is in parts now. "Ye Banks and Braes of Bonnie Doon," - "Robin Adair" - "Bonnie Sweet Bessie" - "The Campbells are Coming"- he loves them all and as he paced the floor smoking, he sang bits of the airs in a low voice. Mr. Paine exclaimed with pleasure at the sweetness of the music and he was watching Mr. Clemens's enjoyment of it [MTP TS 30]. Gribben also notes these songs and "Loch Lomand", p. 115, 369.

Fatout lists Sam giving a speech or a story at the "sendoff" Henry Mills Alden Luncheon. Alden was editor of Harper's Magazine [MT Speaking 674].

A.D. Howard for the NY Tribune wrote to Sam asking several questions, including one about the original character of Huck Finn [MTP]. Notes: On or just after this day, Sam wrote on the letter for reply: "I believe the original of Huck Finn is still alive, & that he is a magistrate in a far western state, & that he is a respected & respect worthy man. I do not consider myself privileged to reveal his name. I cannot answer the other questions it would take too much time" In the file is a newspaper clipping datelined Wallace, Idaho, Feb. 12 " 'Huckleberry Finn,' Twain's Friend, Dies," naming one Captain A.O. Tonkray, native of Hannibal, Mo. dead at 65. Sam wrote at the top of the page with the pasted clipping, "Huck Finn was Tom Blankenship & is still living." Lyon wrote on the side, "Mr. Clemens never heard of Capt. Tonkray. / Would like a little interview to any passages in the Book refer to Capt. Tonkray." See ca. Mar. 6 from Capt. Tonkray's brother.

Robert Reid wrote to Sam, sometime before Feb. 14, advising of a surprise dinner for David Munro on Feb. 14 at the Players Club and "WE WANT YOU!" [MTP].

Ora J. Parker wrote to I.V. Leroy (sic; Isabel V. Lyon),

Yours of late date at hand advising me that I have made a "common error" in asking Mr. Clemens to comment on my sketches.

The poet has advised so strongly against this weakness of our common human nature that I feel justly rebuked and properly ashamed at having so far disregarded his inspired advice [MTP] Note: She went on to say that she'd rec'd Sam's thanks for five sketches but six were sent. "Why, oh why! Miss. Leroy [sic] could you not have done me the faint service of counting them right?" then in a PS she took another look at the "5" and saw it was a "6," so apologized again.

February 14 ca. – Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Mr. Ora J. Parker's gift of sketches and request for comment. Such requests came "with such frequency that long ago he made a rule not to grant any of them, and so be fair to all" [MTP].

February 15 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to George B. Harvey.

Dear Uncle George: / I greet your 70th birthday with gratitude & enthusiasm, & with cordial wishes that there may be many happy returns of it.

And next time, don't swindle me out of my share in it, but invite me in time. I think it's a cruelty & a shame that I can't be there.

With love to all the Trinity, ... [MTP]. Note: Sam's humor: Harvey was b. Feb. 16, 1864, making him but 42 years old.

Sam also wrote to L.E. Shattuck [MTP]. Note: he gave the same response offered to A.D. Howard of the NY Tribune ca. Feb. 14, which suggests Shattuck was another newspaperman.

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Susy Clemens' Biography continued—Death of Jervis Langdon—Birth of Langdon Clemens—Burlesque map of Paris ...[AMT 1: 359-363].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens rang for me this morning at 9:10, & when I went in he said: "I've been thinking about making a round of the hospitals & talking to some of those sick people." Then he told me about the time in London when he and C.C. and someone else went to an accident ward perhaps, for everyone was picturesquely bandaged, & they had a very satisfactory time. "Once I talked to the inmates of an insane asylum, in Hartford. I have talked to idiots a thousand times, but only once to the insane."

I asked him about the dinner last night and he told me that they had kept Mr. Munro "down cellar" for awhile & when he was brought up, he found 20 or more men in the library with plaids across their breasts & he as presiding officer had linked arms with completely surprised Mr. Munro & they marched around through the rooms with bag pipers going on ahead. I know it was better than Mr. Clemens could say, for he is so modest about himself & does not realize how completely he contributes to perfections. He said that Mr. Paine had a poem for the occasion—the best thing of the evening, thought Mr. Clark had a good one too. [in left margin: No more portrait sittings!...] [MTP TS 30-31].

Mally Graham Coatsworth Lord (Mrs. Herbert Lord) wrote from 623 W. 113th St. NYC to Sam. "My dear dear Mr. Mark Twain,— / There is to be a group of your adorers at our house from four to six on Washington's Birthday, quite a lot of people, and I want to know if you won't come and be adored" [MTP].

Sam's A.D. of this day titled "The Fortifications of Paris" covered: Livy's illness after Langdon Clemens' birth and her care by Rachael Gleason of Elmira; the death of Emma Nye at the Clemens home; the publication of the wacky map—the piece was selected for MTE [249-52].

February 16 Friday – Sam gave a speech as the honorary head of The Ends of the Earth Club at the Savoy Hotel. The New York Times reported on p.9:

ENDS OF EARTHERS FOREGATHER HERE AGAIN

And Astonish Mark Twain with Some Very Brief Reports.

HE AND OTHERS REMINISCE

The Author Tells How He Filled Cooper Union 39 Years Ago—150 Globe Trotters at Dinner.

Once every year a body of men of prime fellowship, hailing from the four corners of the earth, but speaking the Anglo-Saxon tongue, gather in New York to see each other, shake hands, and say "How d'ye do." They call their organization The Ends of the Earth Club. The name typifies their clan, for it is to the very jumping-off places of the earth that its membership of men in every known profession reaches, and if the fun they had at their third annual dinner at the Savoy Hotel last night didn't penetrate to the ends of the globe, it was the sole fault of modern methods of communication.

The Ends of the Earth Club, of which Mark Twain is the honorary head, with Rudyard Kipling and Admiral George Dewey as members of the Honorary Council, was formed three years ago by globe trotters of New York and elsewhere in the world, whose idea was to dine together once every twelve months and exchange felicitations. Here are its principles:

Members: Good fellows with no axes to grind who speak our language.

Lodge: Wherever the four ways meet—the North and South and East and West trails.

Greeting: “Where do you come from?” “I come from the ends of the earth.”

What for?”

“To speak the language.”

Mark Twain was the honorable guest and made the main speech at the dinner last night and sat next to Gen. James H. Wilson, who, although the speeches were all informal, acted as toastmaster. Mr. Clemens did not arrive at the dinner until 10 o'clock. When he did appear the Ends of the Earthers rose and sang, “For He’s a Jolly Good Fellow.”

Now, the Ends of the Earth Club has no regular quarters and has no business to transact, but at each dinner it goes through the mock form of receiving reports from its Secretary and Treasurer.

“The report of the Secretary,” responded Secretary C. Bowyer Vaux, indicating the menu card, “is already in cold type before you.”

....

Mark Twain, in beginning his talk, said he never intended delivering another speech or another lecture, but that when it came to reminiscences he would take care of his share.

“I don’t quite get the hang of this club,” he said. “You don’t know what the Treasurer’s report furnishes except that it doesn’t furnish anything. I might just as well be in the S.P.C.A. I don’t know whether you adopted that method or whether the Society for the Propagation of Cruelty to Animals adopted it. [Laughter.] Only you do come out better than they do.”

Mr. Clemens then went on to tell about Mulberry Sellers, to whom Gen. Wilson had alluded in his introduction.

“When I was writing the book,” he said. I had great trouble with Mulberry Sellers. I had the man’s name written originally as Mulberry Sellers. A friend told me I ought to change it.

“‘Make it Escol Sellers,’ he advised.

“‘But I’m afraid,’ I replied. ‘An Escol Sellers may be living and we may get into trouble.’ However, I made it Escol Sellers and one day a man from Philadelphia, a stately and cultivated gentleman, approached me.

“‘Sir,’ he said, ‘my name is Escol Sellers. I’ll give you fifteen minutes to take my name out of that book.’

“We did it, but that didn’t end the trouble, for a Mulberry Sellers turned up in Wisconsin, one on the Wabash, and others from various parts of the country.”

Mr. Clemens then told of his first lecture delivered at the Cooper Institute thirty-nine years ago.

“I met a man on the streets of New York a few weeks ago,” said he. “He was my old friend Fuller, ninety years gone and gray-headed. I was glad to see him, and the moment I laid eyes upon him I was brought back to my first lecture in New York, at Cooper Institute. Fuller was the man who proposed it. I demurred.

“‘Nobody knows me here, Fuller,’ I said, ‘and the thing will be a failure.’

“‘No such thing,’ he argued. ‘We will fill the house at $1 a head.’

“I was young enough to be deceived by his flamboyant talk and immediately had dreams of filling the house at $1 a head. He suggested Cooper Institute. I’ve been there once, and don’t want to go again.

“They advertised me as the “Eloquent and Celebrated Mark Twain.” They hung up in the city buses great bunches of flimsy cards advertising my coming lecture. The cards were to be pulled down and read by anybody interested. I saw them and got to haunting those buses. I rode up and down, up and down through this town of New York watching with beating heart and hoping that someone would pull one of those sheets.

“I never saw anybody do it. I finally advised Fuller to flood the city with paper, and we did so. We sent out barrels of complimentary tickets. When the eventful night came, the streets were blocked with struggling men and women. The house was jammed with people. I felt flattered, for it was my first lecture in the East. It was a magnificent triumph. We had a superb time, and we took in $35. I remarked about this to Fuller the other day.

“‘No,’ he said, ‘it was $350.’

“I didn’t hold that against him and ask him for the money, because it happened too long ago.”

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Susy's Biography mentions little Langdon—The change of residence from Buffalo to Hartford—Clemens tells of the sale of his Buffalo paper to Mr. Kinney—speaks of Jay Gould, John A. McCall and John D. Rockefeller [AMT 1: 363-366].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Every day except Sat. & Sun. Mr. Paine & Miss Hobby come & every day is a delight & an inspiration to those two—and to Mr. Clemens as well. He does enjoy it so" [MTP TS 31].

Lu B. Cake wrote to Sam that "some time ago" she'd sent her book Who Killed Him? Gentiles, not the Jews, and had "begged a line to help bring the case before the public more fully, not that you endorse the contents..." She was preparing a circular and had obtained responses from "eminent ones," such as ex-President Grover Cleveland. On or after this date Sam replied that he had "very little time to read therefore economized by reading subjects which interested him "& this one does not" [MTP].

Mary E. Joyce wrote from NYC to thank Sam for his response to her search for badges or buttons for her club of fifteen crippled boys. "I had no idea of anything so perfectly beautiful coming in answer to my letter, and the boys will be as delighted as I am....The club is the 'Little Men's Club,' and the idea of having the initials on the button with the picture is a fine one" [MTP].

The Monmouth (N.J.) Daily Review sent Sam a telegram asking "In what work will we find 'Definition of a gentleman'" [MTP].

William H. Rideing for Boston Youth's Companion wrote to Sam. "I enclose 2 copies of the photograph I spoke of at the Players the other night and I shall be very much obliged if you will write you're your autograph in pencil on one and your autograph and a line or two besides on the other, which I mean to keep for myself" [MTP].

W.W. Sturges wrote from Meadville, Mo. to Sam.

I notice the remarks in the papers about the piece of poetry sent you concerning the lightning bug & like yourself I don't think it applies to you; but here is one I think does:

De Lady bug hab de golden wing:—
De firefly hab de flame;
De bed bug don't hav no wing at all;
But he gits dare all de same.

Sturges, who signed himself "scientist" added a PS: "Please hand my best regards to our mutual friend 'Eli Perkins.'" [MTP].

Of the selections from Twain's A.D.'s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto's choices, was "The Teaching of Jay Gould," dictated this day, in which Twain decried Jay Gould's greed; he made fun of a "seemingly pious article" about John McCall, and excoriated Americans who held the unprincipled rich in high esteem [77-81].

February 16 ca. – Robert Fraser Standen wrote to Sam. "I should be much obliged if you will inform me when this book of yours, substantiating the accusations made against Mrs Eddy in the postscript above quoted, may be expected to be placed before the public" [MTP]. Note: Sam replied on Feb. 24. Standen had quoted a PS of Sam's in his letter to Harpers on Dec. 2, 1905.

February 17 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam sent his autograph on a small card to an unidentified person [MTP #10492].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today Mr. Clemens said that 'Poultney Bigelow's father is trying to pin him to a square mile of this earth. Trying to have him settle on the old Bigelow estate for the summer. It's somewhere up on the Hudson'" [MTP TS 31-32].

Frederick A. Duneka of Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam that Eve's Diary "book promises to be a very beautiful one." Sam had suggested to include "a little extract" from Adam's Diary in the book—was he still "of the same mind"? Sam wrote on the letter on or just after this day that he was "Still of the same mind" [MTP].

President Theodore Roosevelt and Edith K. Roosevelt sent Sam an wedding announcement of their daughter, Alice Lee Roosevelt to Mr. Nicholas Longworth for this date. Soon after Feb. 17 Sam wrote on the back to Isabel Lyon: "We ought to drop them a note & say we'd heard it" [MTP]. Note: See Feb. 18 to Clara; Sam's advice here was not carried out by Miss Lyon.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to enclose 50 shares of stock to Sam and Stanchfield as a bonus for their last purchase of stock. The Co. had been organized in London, "to exploit the pin there....I have been too busy with pin and Plasmon matters to run up and see you this week, but will do so next week if you will let me know when to do so" [MTP].

Jean Burlingame Beatty (Mrs. Robert Chetwood Beatty) wrote from Westfield, NJ to thank Sam about an article he'd written in 1870 or 71 about her grandfather, Anson Burlingame, whom Sam much admired [MTP]. Note: see Vol. I for entries on Anson Burlingame, who made it possible for Sam's scoop on the SS Hornet.

Charles F. Johnson wrote from Hartford, Conn. to Sam. The letter was to introduce Mrs. Parsons (first name illegible), who wished Sam to attend a dinner for the Smith College Alumnae and "to say something to [illegible word] the gayety of the occasion. Three hundred girls is rather a formidable audience, but I know you are a brave man" [MTP].

Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam.

My darling Mr. Clemens / My vocabulary seems quite exhausted when I want to tell you how kind and good you are. I wanted to call you "sweet and dear" but I didn't know whether you have a copy-right or not on these words. But I don't suppose you will mind if I use them; I shall change them a little, you are very sweet and very dear.

I want to thank you for your kind gift. It is a sweet little story but that is quite natural since it is your favorite. May I be your little "Marjorie"?

I can hardly wait until I see you again as you imagine that the postponement of the lecture was quite a disappointment to me I think I will stop writing now as I am getting a little sleepy (no offense meant) and I want my thoughts always to be bright and fresh when I write to you I will have something nice to dream about after writing this to you. Good Night / The little girl who loves you / Gertrude [MTAq 13-4].

February 18 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote verse to an unidentified person. A draft survives:

For your love has the power of the fabled purse
That wrought charms in the old romaunt
Who had it might live in a shack or worse
And feed on dreams & air dew & verse
Yet never could he know want [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Clara in Atlantic City, N.J. referring to the President's daughter, Clara's illness and other matters.

Well, dear Ashcast, she's married, ain't you glad? I know it, because the President has sent a card which says so. I was going to telegraph him that we already knew about it, but Miss Lyon who is provincial & Farmingtonius & not well up in society things thought it quite unnecessary, & even said so. So there it stands. It is no fault of mine. I wash my hands of it.

Your ring still lies on my bed-table. It is a bait—for Catherine—and Philip—and Miss Lyon. I am watching them. They do not suspect. Keep it to yourself—we'll see what will happen, when it happens.

I am afraid you are in bed yet, as I hear nothing to the contrary. If you had remained here you would have had this attack anyway, & become bedridden, so it is fortunate that you are there in that wholesomer air. Don't hurry back—don't. And don't try to send Katy—I won't allow it.

Teresa is getting along a little, at the hospital. To-morrow they will put her in a room to herself. I am glad of that [MTP]. Note: Teresa Cherubini was the maid.

February 19 Monday – Govinier C. Hall for the Knife & Fork Club in Kansas City, Mo. wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: the social club was formed on Nov. 29, 1898: "The Club has just one purpose - to hold monthly dinners which will bring together the young business and professional men of the city in social intercourse, and which will afford an opportunity to present addresses of high character on the important subjects that are engaging the attention of the thinking men of the times" Hall is not listed in the 1902 membership rolls online, but interestingly, General Frederick Funston is.

<www.vintagekansascity.com/organizations/knifeandforkclub/about.html>

Fatout lists Sam for a dinner speech on Feb. 19 to Pilgrims of the U.S. in N.Y.C. [MT Speaking 674].

February 20 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. Sam directed Isabel Lyon to write to William McCutchan Morrison, Congo missionary, in Lexington, Va.: "I thank him very much for his letter, and I hope that the agitation of the Congo question will bear fruit. I think the promise looks good in England" [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day: About Rear-Admiral Charles Wilkes—And meeting Anson Burlingame in Honolulu [AMT 1: 367-369].

Sam inscribed a recent photograph of himself to Frank R. Lawrence: "Take note of this, Frank Lawrence, old friend of mine. To be good is noble, but to teach others how to be good is nobler—and no trouble.—S.L. Clemens." [MTP; Kansas City Star, Feb. 20, p.1; also NY Times p.1]. Note: Lawrence was past president of the Lotos Club; see Nov. 11, 1893 entry.

In the afternoon Sam was the guest of honor at Columbia University. The New York Times, Feb. 21, p. 2; He took Jean along [IVL Feb. 20 TS 20]:

TWIN THE GREATEST

In English Literature, Says Brander Matthews—A Columbia Tea for Him.

Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) was the guest of honor at a Columbia University tea held yesterday [Feb 20] afternoon in Earl Hall. More than 900 students greeted Mr. Clemens and Sir Caspar Purden-Clarke, Director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and Edward Robinson, the Assistant Director, who were also guests.

At the close of the reception the students gathered outside Earl Hall and cheered Mr. Clemens to the echo. The tea was more generally attended than any other held this year.

Prof. Brander Matthews earlier in the day, while lecturing to his class in American literature, called Mr. Clemens the "greatest figure in English literature." Prof. Matthews declared that there is no man even in England who can be compared to Mark Twain as a master of the language.

Sam also began a letter to Gertrude Natkin that he added a P.S. to on Feb. 21.

Isn't it odd, you little witch! I was already thinking of calling you by that name [Marjorie] & now you have thought of it yourself. And I am very glad to share those other titles with you, dear, very glad indeed, notwithstanding they are pretty flattering for me, while they fit you to the shade of a shadow.

Dr. Van Dyke has not been able to get free of his preaching-engagements for next Sunday. Therefore he can't lecture that afternoon. Also, it gives me my freedom, for I am now not obliged to do any introducing there, & I think I won't; but if I change my mind I will write & tell you. I am become so tired & dull, these latter days, that I would like to go to bed & stay there the rest of the season. It is a dreadfully long winter; I wish it would quit, & try something else. It makes me sour & out of patience, & to-night I am sour beyond expression! But you—well, you never can be that, Marjorie Dear, it's against your nature. / Good-night & bright dreams! [MTAq 14].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Tonight Mr. Clemens dined with Mr. & Mrs. Robert Collier. He & Jean went up to a reception at Earl Hall, Columbia University, this afternoon & saw some interesting people, but mostly not I think. They came home very tired & Mr. Clemens went at once to his bed to rest.

This morning Mr. Paine said such a beautiful thing about Mr. Clemens. "Oh, he's the King—he's the King, and it's so glorious to know he is crowned.

~~I was so grateful to him for saying it.~~

Mr. Clemens has been telling us about an attractive lady, a Mrs. Lord, who was at the reception this afternoon. She was introduced to him, he liked her and asked her to come again as she passed on after a word with him and Sir Purdon Clarke. "And she did come again, she came five times and every time I was glad to see her" [MTP TS 32].

Virginia Taylor wrote from Barnard College, NYC to invite Sam to speak the "Barnard Union." Her father, Charles T. Taylor "says you do not remember him, of course, but he met you through his friend, Henry Cuyler Bunner, whose books he illustrated. I did not have anything more tangible to place myself in your mind this afternoon at the Columbia University Tea, excepting Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder's directions, which I delivered. / Barnard is young and needs your help" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the back of the letter: "Mar. 7th / telephone / Call at 3³⁰ / with an open / mobile."

February 21 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam added a PS to his Feb. 20 to Gertrude Natkin:

Mr. Powlison has been here, & he is a charming man. Of course he persuaded me. The date is March 4, 3.30 p.m., at the Majestic Theatre. You & your mother will be shown to the box, as per the order which I sent you, & you will find Miss Lyon & her mother there. Mr. P. has to provide a clergyman to furnish respectability, & I will take care of the rest of the show myself.

I'm getting dreadfully late, & I've an engagement! Good-bye, you dear little friend [MTAq 14]. Note: Charles F. Powlison. When Van Dyke was not able to speak, Sam agreed to do so on the above date.

Sam also wrote to Sarah S. Collier (Mrs. Robert J. Collier):

Do you know, my dear, it has probably never happened before. Of course the materials have often been present under a roof, or the summer sky, but scattered among the mass, not isolated, not bunched. When two or three are gathered together (of those aspects,) it will be found that the Almighty, with all His advantages, is not likely to get there ahead of me. I am seventy, but I have never before seen three such beautiful girls concentrated in a space coverable by an umbrella—and bunched; no surrounding neutrality of commonplace faces & figures & gowns to reinforce & emphasize & exaggerate the effect [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Jervis Langdon just escapes being a railway magnate—Clemens' dealings with Elisha Bliss, the publisher [AMT 1: 369-372].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens enjoyed the Collier dinner last night. When I went to his room this morning he was full of glee over a darling little note he was writing to Mrs. Collier in code telling her how beautiful she & Mrs. Dooley & Mrs. Pulitzer were as they sat together on a couch when the men joined them after smoking. It is satisfying to see his enjoyment of beauty. He spoke of Jerome, who was there & said "he's a handsome devil"—"and he's a gentleman too, but when he talks he uses so much slang that you have to stop him & get him to translate, & there are plenty of profane words scattered nicely along." When they joined those beautiful creatures, Mr. "Jerome was sensible & sat down on a grizzly bear's head in front of them", but Mr. Clemens took Mrs. Sallie's place on the couch, between Mrs. Dooley & Mrs. Pulitzer, so he could see only one beautiful profile at a time. (And to think of his own wonderful beauty, between those two young creatures, for he was a glory as he started out at 10 minutes before 8) [MTP TS 32-33].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead to Sam.

I wired Vernon on Tuesday that you would prefer he should see Lauterbach and Baldwin next week, and I also wrote him confirming this and stating that you would not be a party to any negotiations in which Wheeler or Butters were mixed up [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft enclosed a copy of a note he'd sent to Edward Lauterbach and also a statement "of the money paid out by me during the last seven months of 1905. Please send me your check for the $289.90 when convenient"

Homer Croy wrote for the Savitar (Univ. of Mo. yearbook) to advise Sam that this year's book would be dedicated to Mark Twain. They were expressing last year's book and requested a photo for use plus a "little letter in longhand so that we can reproduce it" [MTP].

February 22 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

These days are fat with good things. This morning a man from The Evening Post came to ask permission to publish Col. Mann's letter to Mr. Clemens and Mr. Clemens's reply to it. The other night when Mr. Clemens was dining with Robert Collier, Mr. Jerome was there and Mr. Clemens mentioned the little correspondence—Jerome said that that letter could be subpoenaed, which Mr. Clemens said "would suit me exactly for I am a slave to the law and would yield up my grandmother or any other asset." He walked up & down the living room enjoying in his imagination the publication of that letter, after I had told him of the Post's request, & since then there have been an Englishman from the Times, and a nice man from the Herald eager for that same letter. The Englishman said that it was Mr. Clemens's duty to publish anything in his best vein & he had been told that the letter had been written in a very happy mood. (Certainly a strong truthful mood) [MTP TS 33-34].

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Susy's remarks about her grandfather Jervis Langdon—Clemens tells about Dwight Atwater—David Gray; and about meeting David Gray, junior, at a dinner recently [AMT 1: 373-375].

Sam dined with Mr. & Mrs. Norman Hapgood. He was accompanied by Dorothea Gilder. Also at the dinner were Roger E. Fry, and Robert W. Chambers [IVL Feb. 23 TS 21]. See Feb. 23 entry for more on Mr. Fry.

George J. Helmer for Infirmary of Osteopathy wrote to solicit Sam's support at the NY State Legislature to fight laws that would "render the Osteopathic practice illegal in this State" [MTP].

Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam.

Now darling Mr. Clemens, you know way down in the bottom of that big heart of yours that you could'ent be "sour or out of patience" no matter what the weather man is doing with the weather. That going to bed and remaining the rest of the season is like the butterfly who as a nasty horrid little caterpillar goes to bed and then blooms into a beautiful butterfly. But this is not like your case, as you could not become nicer than you are, whereas there is a great chance for improvement in the case of the caterpillar.

Do you know Mr. Clemens, according to the Latin language, your name suits you perfectly. What made me think of this was because I was just translating "Cicero" and I came across the word Clemens: merciful, good, kind, just like you. I like to write my letters to you in my own room away from everybody else and after I have sent the letter I keep the folks curious as to what I wrote you but finally I tell them as I keep a duplicate of my letters to you.

Now Mr. Clemens, in case you go to bed, please wake up by March 4, Good-bye, Your little girl who loves you. / Gertrude / P.S. That was force of habit, I meant to sign Marjorie.

Excuse that blot I could'ent help it / well, we shall let it go with a kiss [MTAq 15]. Note: Cooley notes that "the letter shows no sign of an inkblot, but Gertrude may have kissed and blotted the letter. Future 'blots' sent by both Gertrude and Clemens are symbolic." It is easy to understand how enchanted Sam must have been by this creative, educated, and affectionate young girl.

February 23 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Last night Mr. Clemens dined with the Norman Hapgoods. He said this morning that the Hapgood dinners are best avoided, for there are always too many people there—too many big people. Mr. Fry the new assistant Curator of the Museum was there, doubtless a charming man, but not very talkative, & Robert W. Chambers, Mr. Clemens had no chance to talk with, & altogether he came home very tired & not inspired. Dorothea Gilder went up to the dinner with him [MTP TS 34]. Note: Roger E. Fry, Englishman, artist and art critic, was curator of paintings for the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He later wrote several books on art.

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Clemens tells how he became a business man—Mentions his brother Orion's autobiography [AMT 1: 376-379].

W. Vernon wrote to advise he would be in NY on the 27th and 28th and wished to make an appointment with Ashcroft and with Sam's counsel [MTP]. Note: this letter is addressed to Ashcroft, and likely forwarded by him to Sam, together with Ashcroft's Feb. 23 to Lauterbach. Vernon then wrote the following letter to Sam:

I have received a letter from Mr. Ashcroft, saying that you would take part in no negotiations in which Mr. Butters or Mr. Wheeler had to do. When I was in New York, it was arranged that Mr. Hammond (and with Mr. Wheeler's consent) that he should withdraw entirely from the Plasmon matter. There never has been any question of having any dealings with Mr. Butters, as nobody wishes to have anything to do with him. The opinion expressed about this was universal.

Wilson encouraged Sam to attend the meeting with him, Ashcroft, Sam's attorney, and Hammond, on Tuesday Feb. 27. If not then, Wilson would like to see Sam on Wed., Feb. 28 [MTP] Note: Lyon wrote on the letter Sam's directives: "Telephone Ashcroft- / Read the letter / Hammond gone to Mexico? / Can't see why he should be present / Counsel knows more than / he does—their affair to know / what do to—If Ash or counsel thngs he ought to be there / he'll go."

Candace Wheeler wrote from NYC to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens

The 4th of March, on Sunday, at three o'clock, we expect to have a little very good singing and a few very delightful people. Really delightful people I will say, since I hope you will be hear and the Gilders and the Doubledays and McElways & Choates—all of them of the kind that are worth while, and no one who is not—not one, even as an attachment [MTP]. Note: She also asked if Jean and Clara might come. Lyon wrote on the letter, “Cannot make any plans for daughters but should like to know how long it will hang on for he has an engagement to talk on 59 St at 3⁴⁵... / Telephone / Hope to get there”

February 24 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka. “Saturday. Many thanks. The books have come. I am fully equipped for the voyage now. SL. Clemens” [MTP]. Note: since Sam was not planning any voyage, the reference may be rhetorical.

Sam also replied to Govinier C. Hall’s Feb. 19 at the Hall-Truman Furniture Co. in Kansas City. Sam was “old, or nearly that” and would “not travel any more.” He thanked Hall for an unspecified book and praised the illustrations in it: “God bless this artist & ~~clame~~ & try to forgive the other kind” [MTP]. Note: Hall had written for the Knife & Fork Club.

Sam also replied to Robert Fraser Standen’s ca. Feb. 16: “It is quite likely that the Harper Corporation has doubted the policy of publishing the book at this time. In fact this is really the case. But as to my “preferences,” I haven’t altered any [MTP]. Note: the book was the delayed Christian Science.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

This afternoon after I had finished playing the Tannhäuser Overture to Mr. Clemens, he suggested that the joys of a trip in the subway from Astor Place to the Northern terminus would be considerable, for he loves the subway. I said doubtless he would enjoy it. Then he asked me if I’d like to go. It was a happy suggestion. I played The Chorus of Angels through & away we went up to the 150th Street where we got out & walked down toward the Hudson. It is very close to the beautiful new Spanish Library Building given to the city by Mr. Archer Huntington. Mr. Clemens has been made consulting director of it, taking the place of Mr. John Hay. Oh, it was a dear afternoon, & we reached home in just an hour and a half after leaving the house. The air was soft, the mud—real mud on that real country road—had the spring quality, the Hudson lay glinting in a soft silver mist, & the automobiles went honk-honking along in a steady stream to the north [MTP TS 34-35; also noted in Gribben 732].

[From IVL Feb. 25:]

We are having fun out of an incident which occurred yesterday [Feb. 24]. It seems that when Mr. Clemens & I were in the northbound subway train he had been acutely aware of a beautiful girl who sat on “the port side of the car”. At dinner last night he asked if I hadn’t noticed how lovely she was. I had to say no, I hadn’t seen her. “Didn’t see her! Why her beauty filled the car!” When I reached C.C.’s room after dinner I confessed to her that I hadn’t seen that beautiful girl because I had been trying not to look at a glorious young god of a man. She told on me at tea this afternoon [Feb. 25], to the delight of Mr. Clemens & Bynner. Here’s a case! I’m to chaperone Mr. Clemens. C.C. is to chaperone me, & Bynner said “I’ll take a front seat.” But he has been deputed as a suitable chaperone for C.C. In great glee Mr. Clemens called us “a pair of old flirts” [MTP TS 22].

Harper’s Weekly published “Anecdotes of Mark Twain” by Henry P. Goddard, p. 280-1. Tenney: “Recollections by Goddard, who knew MT in the 1870’s. Notes MT’s generosity in signing over a lecture fee to Colonel Richard Malcom Johnston; describes MT’s comments on lecturing and his gradual reduction of lecture notes to a few marks on his fingernails” [42]. See Jan. 17, 1889 entry for Sam’s donation of lecture fee to Johnston. No 1870’s information on Goddard has been found connecting him to Sam.

February 24 ca. – Sam replied to Henry Copley Greene (incoming not extant), who had evidently sought a signature on a petition to install streetlights in Dublin, N.H. “about Dublin Lights— If I were going to tell the entire truth I don’t care whether they have lights or haven’t them. The people who care are the ones to sign” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Harper & Brothers: “There isn’t a cent of money in a Danish translation—can have the permission provided your trans & pub. fin in 3 years—otherwise keep some one else from that opportunity” [MTP].

A draft exists (possibly not sent) from Sam per Isabel Lyon to an unidentified man:

Dear Sir: / When I finished the book & handed the MS. to the Harpers my interest in the matter ended. Whenever I have finished a book the question of whether it should ever be pub. or not is a matter of indifference to me. I have no preferences. The book [CS] has been ready for publication some 3 or 4 yrs. If at any time the Harpers should conclude to issue it, there will be no occasion to consult me about it [MTP].

February 24–28 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to the editor of the Saturday Evening Post that his contract with Harpers “doesn’t allow it. Besides, very busy with regular work” [MTP].

February 25 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Late last night—midnight & after—I sat here cutting Harper’s magazine for Mark & came across a beautiful little poem by Mildred Howells. I took it to Mr. Clemens this morning, he read it aloud to me & then cut it out of the magazine. This afternoon when Witter Bynner was here for tea, Mr. Clemens read it aloud again saying that he had wasted a whole chapter to say what she had said in a few lines & then as he paced the room he talked a little bit about the power of poetry to convey our thoughts in fittest form. Witter Bynner then recited a little poem of his own which is to appear shortly in McClures. It, too, is very beautiful, & is another summing up of a life problem. He is a magnetic creature.

At half past four Mr. & Mrs. Paine & their 3 lovely children, Louise, aged 11, a little poetess, Frances, aged 7, and tiny Joy, aged 3 came in for tea.

[on separate sheet of paper dated Feb. 25—an incident; see this placed for Feb. 24:] [MTP TS 35-36].

Note: Witter Bynner (1881-1968), poet, and writer. Bynner was a 1902 Harvard graduate and later became friends with D.H. Lawrence. Bynner lived for three decades in New Mexico, where he threw parties for famous people.

At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to William Dean Howells, now in Atlantic City, N.J. at the St. Charles Hotel.

Miss Lyon brought to me, this morning, Mildred’s poem, in the March Harper; & its depth, & dignity, & pathos, & compression, & fluent grace & hearty—and stern veracity—have haunted me all day & sung in the ears of my spirit like a strain of solemn music. What a lumbering poor vehicle prose is for the conveying of a great thought! It cost me several chapters to say in prose what Mildred has said better with a single penfull of ink. Prose wanders around with a lantern & laboriously schedules & verifies the details & particulars of a valley & its frame of crags & peaks, then Poetry comes, & lays bare the whole landscape with a single splendid flash.

This evening I went out to 59th street to read the masterly poem to my brilliant niece, Mrs. Julie Langdon Loomis, who is a daft admirer of yours & student of Silas Lapham & others of your books; but I had my journey for nothing, for of course I left the poem in my other vest. And a pity, too, & I cursed myself.

Clara is grateful to you, & very properly sorry & ashamed for letting you run all over that place in search of comfortable quarters for her. I gave her a scolding, but of course that didn’t undo her evil work. / With love to you both [MTHL 2: 800-801]. Note: source gives clarifying notes: Mildred Howells’ poem was “At the Wind’s Will,” which “figured human beings as autumn leaves driven by chance winds,” an idea that would find agreement with Clemens. Sam was working on What Is Man? which he was to have printed privately in August. Clara Clemens was also in Atlantic City, at the Brighton Hotel, confined to bed by an illness.

Patrick McAleer, longtime servant for the Clemens family, died at the age of 60 in Hartford. Sam would attend Patrick’s funeral. In his Mar. 4 speech at the YMCA, Sam called Patrick “my ideal of an ideal gentleman” [MTHL 2: 802n2].

Sam wrote to Robert Fraser Standen (Stander?) in Dover, England. This letter not extant but mentioned in Standen's Mar. 23, 1907 letter [MTP].

Duffield Osborne wrote for the Authors Club to invite Sam to a reception for Norman Hapgood on Mar. 15 at 9 pm [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the bottom of the letter: "That date is to me quite impossible as I have got to be in Washington."

February 26 Monday – A telegram (not extant) came to Clemens from Hartford, announcing the death of Patrick McAleer [IVL TS 23]. Note: This was likely sent by Twichell. See IVL's Feb. 27 entry.

Sam wrote to Joe Twichell: "Shall reach Hartford about two thirty today to attend Patrick's funeral Wednesday. I desire to be a pall bearer" [MTP]. Note: likely this was a telegram. Also included in IVL's TS 23.

Sam also wrote to Brig. Gen. Albert Leopold Mills (1854-1916): "Dear Sir, / By permission of the enclosed post card which I think is authentic I venture to offer to the Academy a photograph of what is left of me, & add my grateful remembrance of pleasant days with the officers & the cadets of the long time ago. / Very truly yours..." [MTP: Paine TS]. Note: Mills was in the West Point class of 1879. He was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for his bravery at Santiago, Cuba, on July 1, 1898. Later in 1898 he was appointed Superintendent of West Point by President McKinley, a post which he held until 1906. Clemens visited the Academy in the spring of 1879. Leon writes Mills likely heard Sam speak then [131, 250]. See Feb. 28 for Mills' reply.

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Susy comes to New York with her mother and father—Aunt Clara Spaulding visits them at the Everett House—Aunt Clara's ill luck with horses—The omnibus incident in Germany—Aunt Clara now ill at the Hoffman House from a horseback accident thirty years ago—Clemens takes Susy to see General Grant—Clemens' account of his talk with Grant—Clemens gives his first reading in New York—Also tells about one in Boston—Memorial to Longfellow—And one in Washington [AMT 1: 379-385].

Sam traveled to Hartford, arriving at about 2:30 p.m. for Patrick McAleer's funeral on Feb. 28.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

This morning's mail brought letters from the ends of the earth, five of them. First a letter from a Danish Unitarian Minister asking the privilege of translating Joan of Arc into his native tongue; next a letter from a Spanish actress asking an autograph; then a letter from a secretary of a Club in Canada asking Mr. Clemens to be their guest of honor; then a delightful letter from a school boy in Montpelier, France, asking for a copy of "Innocents Abroad"—a large order—Mr. Clemens said. And lastly a request from "the most enthused of his Hungarian admirers" for a word in writing.

The French boy is a dear. Mr. Clemens calls him Gertrude's twin & would like the fun of marrying them. He plays the darlingest games.

This afternoon Mr. Paine who is a veritable Chorus of Angels, took Jean & me down to the East side through the Polish-Jew quarter where the Hebrew in every guise runs a law-abiding riot. It's a lovely medley of street vendors of every kind. Jean is going to pack a description of it into a German essay. Through the Bowery we went into Chinatown, enchanting babies we saw & we ate chop-suey in a very nice Chinese restaurant. We bought Chinese bowls & Mr. Paine bought me a darling Chinese man [MTP TS 36-37].

T.N. James wrote from Boston to Sam asking if he would consider being the Editor-in-Chief of "Men of Mark" in New York [MTP]. Note: Sam answered on or just after this date. See below in Feb. 26 ca.

Sam also wrote (possibly a telegram) to Charles Hopkins Clark:

“Will you assemble some Cheneys & Twichells & other friends at Hartford Club Thursday [Mar. 1] & lunch them & me at my expense. / S.L.C.” [MTP]. Note: Sam would attend Patrick McAleer’s funeral on Feb. 28. This note also included in IVL TS 23.

February 26 ca. – On or after this day Sam instructed Lyon to answer the Feb. 26 offer of T.N. James that his contract with Harpers would not allow him to “take up their proposition” [MTP]. Note: if the mail was delivered on the same day from Boston, his reply would have been made prior to his leave for Hartford; if later, then upon his return to N.Y.

February 27 Tuesday – Sam went to Hartford; Katy Leary also went [Feb. 26 to Twichell; IVL below and Feb. 28].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Yesterday [Feb. 26] came a telegram from Hartford announcing Patrick’s death & when I told Mr. Clemens he was deeply moved. He was sitting in the Gladstone chair [see insert Gladstone chair] in the living room & after a moment he said “I must go to the funeral.” So this morning he went.

Mr. Clemens will spend tonight with the Twichells & tomorrow night with the Whitmores, & how happy that will make them. How glad Mrs. Whitmore will be. ...

The weather has changed & it is very, very cold [MTP TS 37-38].

George J. Helmer for Infirmary of Osteopathy wrote to Sam. “Your letters to the Assemblyman and Senator just received. I thank you for calling my attention to the fact that the circular letter was more in the form of a command than a request. Am glad that seventy years has not dulled your vision for the abnormal” [MTP].

February 28 Wednesday – In Hartford Sam was a pall-bearer at Patrick McAleer’s funeral.

William Dean Howells wrote from Atlantic City, N.J. to Sam.

No praise that I ever had for work of my own gave me such entire and perfect joy as your praise of Pilla’s poem. Of course your letter has gone straight to her, and she will know how to prize the words which are simply without price.

I have no complaint to make of Clara [who was also in Atlantic City] except that I was not the least use in the world to her. Sometimes she must make that up to me. I wish she could go to Bermuda while Pilla is there.

To-morrow I shall be 69, but I do not seem to care. I did not start the affair, and I have not been consulted about it at any step. I was born to be afraid of dying, but not of getting old. Age has many advantages, and if old men were not so ridiculous, I should not mind being one. But they are ridiculous and they are ugly. The young do not see this so clearly as they do; but some day they will.

So you have been up, burying poor old Patrick [McAleer]—I suppose he was old, too. I remember how you used to work, one while, over his stable. I dare say he did not like it; but he probably never said so, and now the best return you can make is to see him put under the ground. It is strange, but that was really the best you could do, and I am glad you did it.

I want to hear some of your autobiography, if you will let me: or you could give me the MS. and let me read it for myself.

Mrs. Howells joins me in love to you all.

After his signature Howells added a paragraph about resolving death, and of his 87 year old father’s resolving it [MTHL 2: 801-2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Santissima sang today for Mrs. Day & Alice Day & Miss Burbank & Miss Gordon & Miss McGinnis & Dorothea Gilder. Some of her notes were very, very beautiful, but she has the beginning of another cold, & so she was a little nervous. Dorothea Gilder was refreshing in a pretty new brown crepe de chine frock, she whirled around in a sweet naive way & asked us to admire it. We had been doing it without her pretty bidding. Saturday she sails in the Princess Irene for Gibraltar with Miss Cecilia Beaux.

Katie came home tonight from Patrick's funeral. She said it was beautiful to see Mr. Clemens walk up the aisle of the Cathedral with his hand on Patrick's coffin. (And I hope his spirit could see the honor done to his dear faithful body by his wonderful master.) She said the place was full of people, for it became known that Mr. Clemens was to be at the funeral & so homage was done to him. I hope Jesse Moore had a look at his beautiful face. Katie said that Mr. Clemens didn't go to the cemetery [MTP TS 38-39].

Hill writes of Clara Clemens' struggle to regain her singing form and of Isabel Lyon's journal entry: "On February 28 she attempted to sing: ',' Isabel commented [122].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam. "At the request of Miss Lyon, I am sending you a copy of the additions you wrote to 'Adam's Diary' which are to be inserted at page 35. / We expect to have a dozen more pictures for 'Eve's Diary' in two or three days. When they arrive, I shall let you know" [MTP].

Bernard F. Martin wrote on Senate Chamber, State of NY letterhead to acknowledge receipt of Sam's letter. "I voted against Osteopathy last winter. I have not made up my mind as to my course on this bill mentioned by you" [MTP].

Albert Leopold Mills, Superintendent of West Point Military Academy, replied to thank Sam for his photograph sent Feb. 26. Mills hoped that Sam might come to see the many changes there [MTP]. Note: See Leon 250.

Susana Torres de Pastex wrote from Buenos Aires, Argentina to Sam. She was sending a parchment painted with "our great Mark Twain!" and asked that he might "write something on it" [MTP].

Leslie J. Tompkins wrote on Assembly Chamber State of NY letterhead to thank Sam for his suggestions concerning the Osteopathy Bill. Tompkins had not yet studied the bill. He feared his bills would be "buried in committee" [MTP].

W. Vernon wrote to Sam, sorry that a meeting was not to be, but "delighted however to hear that the probabilities in favor of a settlement of this business [along] lines we discussed in the fall are nearly attained." He hoped to be back from England in the beginning of May [MTP].

March – Sam inscribed a copy of TS with an aphorism: "Let us save the to-morrows for work, Truly Yours Mark Twain, Mch/06" [MTP: City Book Auction catalogs 26 May 1945, Item 119].

Charles E. Dana wrote for the Contemporary Club in Phila. to invite Sam to their 20th anniversary dinner. They had chosen "American Humor" as the subject. Miss Agnes Repplier, (1855-1950) Philadelphia essayist known for her scholarship and humor, would give an address on the subject [MTP].

John Fretwell wrote to Sam enclosing a photo of himself dated Aug. 1902 and related being mistaken for Twain in several locations. On the photo envelope, Fretwell typed: "Port: of a man who in Kaltenleutgeben bei Wein, Louksor in Egypt, Birmingham, England, Boston, Mass. & New York, has been charged with crimes committed by Mark Twain, but in Each case succeed[ed] in proving an Alibi. / [picture] made in Zurich, Aug 1902" [MTP]. Note: photo of Fretwell in file; his moustache resembled Twain's.

March 1 Thursday – In Hartford, Sam luncheoned with friends assembled by Charles Hopkins Clark [Feb. 26 to Clark; ca. Mar. 10 to Clark]. F. Kaplan puts this at the Hartford Club and includes Joe Twichell [631]. Note: Clark wrote on Mar. 9 suggesting they split the bill for the lunch; Sam agreed.

F. Kaplan also has Twain reading "Wapping Alice" to Harmony Twichell's Saturday morning discussion group sometime during the three days in Hartford, but if he did so it would not have been on a Saturday. Kaplan writes, "Harmony felt smoldering resentment that he dared present a story about sexual escapades and transvestitism to respectable female company," though it's not clear how he knows she smoldered [631].

In the evening Sam returned to New York [IVL TS 24].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Tonight Mr. Clemens came back from Hartford & he took cold up there. It began going up in the train when he sat in a draft & the wind blew into the Twichell house & into his bedroom, so that wasn't comforting & yesterday morning at the funeral, he took off his coat when he got into the Cathedral & struggled against the creeping cold. The coat was miles away for he had given it to the Sexton, not realizing that he was going to be away up by the altar. He said the service was so beautiful. The priest's voice was fine & in the right key, and "there was one voice in the choir that was divinely beautiful"—he couldn't tell me whether it was a boy's or a woman's, but oh it was so satisfying [MTP TS 39].

Ulysses S. Grant, Jr. wrote from San Diego, Calif. to Sam that he'd rec'd Harper's notice of the Hill Crest edition, though he already possessed each volume, "some of them several times over, and there is not a volume among them that I have not occasionally presented to a friend when in need of good literature." Grant especially valued the books with Sam's autograph. Though he only got to NY once in three or four years, Grant intended to call on his next visit [MTP]. See Sam's reply on Mar. 8.

James A. Renwick wrote to Sam, sending a rent receipt $291.67 for March rent [MTP].

March 2 Friday – Clara Clemens returned to Atlantic City; she would make another NY trip on Mar 13 to audition [Hill 122].

At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Gertrude Natkin in N.Y.C., whom he now referred to as "Marjorie."

Marjorie dear, Mr. [Charles F.] Powlison has sent tickets—which is very well; it simplifies things.

The house is made up of men, you see. Certainly this is a new kind of matinée.

He has added come compliments (for me). I have destroyed them. Compliments make me vain; & when I am vain I am insolent & overbearing. It is a pity, too, because I love compliments. I love them even when they are not so. My child, I can live on a good compliment two weeks with nothing else to eat.

Marjorie, Marjorie, listen to me—

Listen, you... you...

Do you notice? it's a poem. I've got that far all right. I expect it to be 8 or ten lines when I get it done. It will take a long time, because poetry is very difficult for me, on account of it's being outside the range of my great talents. I expect to finish that second line during March, & take hold of No. 3 in April. I intend that it shall be exceedingly good when I get done, you dear little creature

Friday afternoon.

P. S. It was a very nice blot, dear; there couldn't be a nicer blot than that [MTAq 16]. Note: see Natkin's Feb. 22 for explanation of the blot.

Sam also sent a telegram to C. Brereton Sharpe for the Plasmon Syndicate in London. "Have made an adjustment of Plasmon controversy preserving your third interest, but must issue $7500 Preferred Stock at par, each shareholder subscribing pro rata. Have agreed subject to confirmation of your subscribing $2500. Advise you to agree to it. Telegraph either yes or no Clemens" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Santissima went back to Atlantic City. I have been playing to Mr. Clemens, playing his favorites and after I had played many things that he loves I took up the Largo. He sat in the big green tufted chair quite near me, with his back toward me, and when I had finished it he said "If you're not tired play the Susie one", that is the Intermezzo. I played it and he said "I can fit the words to both those pieces, as the coffins of Susie & her mother are borne through the dining room & the hall & the drawing room of the Hartford house. Susie calls to me in the Intermezzo & her mother in the Largo, and they are lamenting that they shall see that place no more." Oh, is soul is so lonely. Days are when it is so terrible [MTP TS 39-40].

Nineteen year old Julius Cohn wrote to Sam on Emil Nathan & Co., Wholesale Liquors (his employer) letterhead. Cohn had not been able to save to buy more of Twain's books, his father deceased and his earnings supported his mother and sisters—he asked Clemens if he could "let me have a few" books? [MTP].

March 3 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Homer Croy, editor of the Missouri University's yearbook the Savitar. Croy had sent Sam a copy of the 1905 yearbook which announced a proposal to dedicate the 1906 edition to Mark Twain. See insert 1906 Savitar.

The Savitar has arrived, & I thank you very much for it. Everything that comes from the University interests me,—& this book affects me in that way strongly.

Meantime my secretary has mislaid your letter. According to my recollection it proposed to dedicate the next Savitar to me. If that is so, I shall be proud of the honor, I assure you.

I do not remember that you added anything, but if you did it has escaped from my memory, & I beg that you will repeat it. / Sincerely Yours ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote per Lyon to decline an invitation by the Yale Chapter of the Phi Beta Kappa Society to lecture: "I have not an open date for the rest of the season" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean and I went over to the Gilders' last night. So many strange people! But I had a nice talk with Mr. Everett Shinn who tried to sell his Cornish place to Mr. Clemens a year ago. I saw & quite liked several people. Mary Lawton was a glory in white satin. Mr. Gilder was beautiful.

Secured a cabin for C.C. on the Minnetonka sailing June 9th. (Weeks later—Returned that security.)

Mr. Paine came in this morning with some beautiful photographs of Mr. Clemens. Photographs that he made of Mr. Clemens in bed & they are wonderful.

Barry Faulkner came in for tea & he told us how on Jan. 24, a bitterly cold day, Gerald Thayer, utterly naked climbed to the top of Monodnock. I think it was a glory of a thing to do. Think of that strong young naked white creature dashing alone through the winter woods. Think of him standing along among the mighty rocks on the top of the mountain. It is the great primeval call of the wild & there seems to me to be something akin to a religion in it [MTP TS 40-41].

George Daulton wrote from Staten Island, NY to send Sam one of Gessford's photographs for him to sign. George was the son of Sam's "old time printer friend," Frank Daulton. George's wife had a serial running in St. Nicholas, and one of George's stories was "under consideration" at the Century Co. Frank Daulton was now living in Arkansas dwelling "with extreme pleasure in his memories of you." George would like to visit Twain sometime [MTP].

Alice M. Ditson (Mrs. Charles H. Ditson) wrote from NYC to Sam. "My Dear Mr Clemens— / send the enclosed with no further comment than that 'them' my sentiments—" And you wanted to have my angel dog for breakfast! Infidel! Nevertheless I am yours affectionately ..." [MTP].

Richard Watson Gilder wrote to Sam.

President Finley and I are collecting letters to Ex-President Cleveland from his friends, appropriate to his 69th birthday.

If the plan appeals to you, will you kindly send a sealed greeting under cover to me at the above address [Century Magazine, NYC], and I will send it, and the other letters, South to him in time for him to get them, all together, on the 18th of the present month... [MTP].

C. Brereton Sharpe for the Plasmon Syndicate sent a telegram reply to Sam's cable of Mar. 2. "We to-day cabled in reply as follows: — / 'Raif New York. / Yes / Praevalet'. Sharpe also wrote a letter, quoting Sam's Mar. 2 cable, his reply and added: "and are very pleased indeed to learn that you have been able to arrive at an adjustment. / We trust that the arrangement you have made with Mr. Hammond will prove a satisfactory one for all concerned, and that we may look forward in the near future to good and profitable results from the Plasmon business in America" [MTP].

March 4 Sunday – At about 4 p.m. Sam spoke at the Majestic Theatre for the West Side Branch of the YMCA. Gertrude Natkin and her mother were in the audience. The New York Times, Mar. 5 p. 2, recorded the wild crush at the doors and also Sam's speech.

POLICE HUSTLE CROWD AWAITING MARK TWAIN

Bungle at the Majestic Theatre Angers Y. M. C. A. Men.

WOULDN'T OPEN THE DOORS

Mr. Clemens Gives Some Advice About the Treatment of Corporations and Talks About Gentlemen.

Members of the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association found that entering the Majestic Theatre yesterday afternoon to hear an address by Mark Twain had a close resemblance to a football match. No one was injured, but for a few minutes the police were hustling the crowd backward and forward by sheer force, a mounted man was sent to push his way through the thickest of the press and the jam was perilous.

The doors of the theatre should have been opened at 3 o'clock, and about three hundred persons were there at that time. It was an orderly crowd of young men with a sprinkling of elderly ones, but Capt. Daly of the West Forty-seventh Street Station would not allow them to be admitted until he has summoned the reserves. It took twenty minutes for these to arrive and every moment the crush grew greater. Still there was no disorder and the police as they formed into line had to face nothing more dangerous than a little good-humored chaff.

The crowd was ranged in a rough column facing the main doors of the lobby. The Young Men's Christian Association authorities came out several times and asked the Captain to allow the doors to be opened.

"If you do it, I'll take away my men and there'll be a lot of people hurt or killed," he replied. "I know how to handle crowds."

Then he proceeded to handle the crowds. He tried to swing the long solid line up against the southwestern side of Columbus Circle and force them in by the side entrance of the lobby, instead of the one they faced. First he sent a mounted man right through the column. The patrolmen followed and in a moment the orderly gathering was hustled and thrust in all directions.

Capt. Daly's next maneuver was to open the side door. The crowd surged up, but he had them pushed back, and closed the door again. The crowd was utterly bewildered. Then the Young Men's Christian Association authorities opened one-half of the door on their own responsibility. Through this narrow passage the crowd squeezed. The plate glass in the half that was closed was shattered to atoms, and the men surged forward. A few coats were torn, but in spite of the way in which they had been handled everybody kept his temper. If there had been any disorderly element present nothing could have avoided serious accidents. In the end all but 500 gained admission.

Hold Police Responsible.

At the opening of the meeting, the Rev. Dr. Charles P. Fagnani, the Chairman, said: "The management desires to disclaim all responsibility for what has happened. [Cheers.] The matter was taken out of their hands by the police. [Hisses.] You have been accustomed long enough to being brutally treated by the police, and I do not see why you should mind it. [A voice: "You're right."] Some day you will take matters into your own hands and will decide that the police shall be the servants of the citizens."

At the end of the meeting, Charles F. Powlison, Secretary of the West Side Branch, stated he had been asked to submit a resolution condemning the action of the police, but it had been decided it was better not to do so.

Mark Twain was introduced as a man "well worth being clubbed to hear." He was greeted with a storm of applause that lasted over a minute.

"I thank you for this signal recognition of merit," he said. "I have been listening to what has been said about citizenship. You complain of the police. You created the police. You are responsible for the police. They must reflect you, their masters. Consider that before you blame them.

"Citizenship is of the first importance in a land where a body of citizens can change the whole atmosphere of politics, as has been done in Philadelphia. There is less graft there than there used to be. I was going to move to Philadelphia, but it is no place for enterprise now.

"Dr. Russell spoke of organization. I was an organization myself once for twelve hours, and accomplished things I could never have done otherwise. When they say 'Step lively,' remember it is not an insult from a conductor to you personally, but from the President of the road to you, an embodiment of American citizenship. When the insult is flung at your old mother and father, it shows the meanness of the omnipotent President, who could stop it if he would.

Mark Twain Got the Stateroom.

"I was an organization once. I was traveling from Chicago with my publisher and stenographer—I always travel with a bodyguard—and engaged a stateroom on a certain train. For above all its other conveniences, the stateroom gives the privilege of smoking. When we arrived at the station the conductor told us he was sorry the car with our stateroom was left off. I said: 'You are under contract to furnish a stateroom on this train. I am in no hurry. I can stay here a week at the road's expense. It'll have to pay my expenses and a little over.'

"Then the conductor called a grandee, and, after some argument, he went and bundled some meek people out of the stateroom, told them something not strictly true, and gave it to me. About 11 o'clock the conductor looked in on me, and was very kind and winning. He told me he knew my father-in-law—it was much more respectable to know my father-in-law than me in those days. Then he developed his game. He was very sorry the car was only going to Harrisburg. They had telegraphed to Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, and couldn't get another car. He threw himself on my mercy. But to him I only replied:

"Then you had better buy the car."

"I had forgotten all about this, when some time after Mr. Thomson of the Pennsylvania heard I was going to Chicago again and wired:

"I am sending my private car. Clemens cannot ride on an ordinary car. He costs too much.' "

Definition of a Gentleman.

Mark Twain went on to speak of the man who left $10,000 to disseminate his definition of a gentleman. He denied that he had ever defined one, but said if he did he would include the mercifulness, fidelity, and justice the Scripture read at the meeting spoke of. He produced a letter from William Dean Howells, and said:

“He writes he is just 69, but I have known him longer than that. ‘I was born to be afraid of dying, not of getting old,’ he says. Well, I’m the other way. It’s terrible getting old. You gradually lose things, and become troublesome. People try to make you think you are not. But I know I’m troublesome.

“Then he says no part of life is so enjoyable as the eighth decade. That’s true. I’ve just turned into it, and I enjoy it very much. ‘If old men were not so ridiculous,’ why didn’t he speak for himself? ‘But,’ he goes on, ‘they are ridiculous, and they are ugly.’ I never saw a letter with so many errors in it. Ugly! I was never ugly in my life! Forty years ago I was not so good-looking. A looking glass then lasted me three months. Now I can wear it out in two days.

“‘You’ve been up in Hartford burying poor old Patrick. I suppose he was old, too,’ says Howells. No, he was not old. Patrick came to us thirty-six years ago—a brisk, lithe young Irishman. He was as beautiful in his graces as he was in his spirit, and he was as honest a man as ever lived. For twenty-five years he was our coachman, and if I were going to describe a gentleman in detail I would describe Patrick.

“At my own request I was his pall bearer with our old gardener. He drove me and my bride so long ago. As the little children came along he drove them, too. He was all the world to them, and for all in my house he had the same feelings of honor, honesty, and affection.

“He was 60 years old, ten years younger than I. Howells suggests he was old. He was not so old. He had the same gracious and winning ways to the end. Patrick was a gentleman, and to him I would apply the lines:

“So may I be courteous to men, faithful to friends, True to my God, a fragrance to the path I trod.

When inquiries were made last night at the West Side Branch as to whether a complaint of the action of the police would be made by the association to Commissioner Bingham, it was said to be improbably that any official action would be taken” [Note: Patrick McAleer died on Feb. 25; Sam was a pallbearer at his Hartford funeral on Feb. 28].

Bernhardt Wall (1872-1956), pioneer etcher and producer of fine press books” made a sketch (see insert) of Mark Twain during his above YMCA speech.

At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Charles Hopkins Clark in Hartford.

This is the first time I have had a chance to thank you. The cold I caught in the North-bound train, & which I increased by attending the funeral in the Cathedral without an overcoat has kept me in bed ever since, until this afternoon when I had to keep an engagement to address the Y.M.C.A. in the Majestic Theatre: the physical exertion of speaking pumped up a perspiration which seems to have abolished the cold; & so I am able at last to thank you for taking all that trouble for me, & I do thank you most heartily, most cordially, most gratefully.

You must let me pay that bill, Charley, then I will love you from crown to boot heels—and I’ll trust you again. Send it, & with it your love. You have mine. / Mark [MTP].

In the evening Sam began a letter to Gertrude Natkin that he added to on Mar. 8 and 9.

But you were a delightful surprise when you did at last arrive, this afternoon! I had really given you up, & was getting into that vicious mood which comes upon a disappointed person & makes him go on a platform & say odious things to a mass of men who only think kindly of him & have never done him any harm in the world!

I supposed I had carried stupidity to the limit when I failed to instruct Miss Lyon to telephone you to come to the stage door—but it wasn’t so, I was stupid again in letting you & your sister go in that you.) I thought I had made a step & added a word, but I was mistaken. Marjorie, Marjorie, listen to me—listen, you (elf?)

No, elf won't do, because I must have a word that can furnish a proper rhyme at the end of the fourth line, & there isn't anything that rhymes with elf except self & pelf & shelf. Those are inelegant; there are not going to be any inelegant words in this work of art, my precious little maid. But I'm not worrying—I'll have that word inside of three weeks, sure. For I am full of talent. The noun is the only difficulty, not the adjective. I can manage the adjective; any two-syllable one that hasn't the emphasis on the wrong end & has sugar enough it in, will do, & I know several of those [MTAq 16-17].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today we went up to the Majestic Theatre, Mr. Clemens & mother & I, & he spoke to all those many, many Y.M.C.A. men. But the main thing is that Gertrude was there, "that darling child." We went in the stage door & for a very long time Gertrude didn't arrive. Mr. Clemens's look of disappointment made me heartsick and feebly[,] I tried to find the child in that vast crowd. It was a Christian crowd, but as I turned away from a big burly young man who had tried to gain admittance & had failed, I heard him say: "Just my God damn luck!" Mr. & Mrs. Paine & Miss Hobby were in the next box & Mr. Clemens's talk was lovely & brave & strong & instructive & humorous. No one else in all the world can combine all those qualities with such great wonderful personal charm. The other men walked with their feet onto that stage. He appeared with a soft unconscious step, light as a girl's & with a grace that is undescrivable. There's never been so graceful, so unconsciously beautiful, so masterful and strong a personality. He seems never to be aware of himself [MTP TS 41].

George Henschel wrote for the Century Assoc. NYC to invite Sam and Clara to "a little Bohemian dinner in the Duset Room of the Hofbrauhaus Broadway & 30th Street on Tuesday March 20th at 7:30" [MTP].

March 5 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Alice M. Ditson (Mrs. Charles H. Ditson).

I am glad to have that speech; it has moved me, & also modified me, in some degree. I don't feel the same passionate appetite for your dog that I felt that evening; & it is probably because I have just had my breakfast. I can't really depend on my reforms; they are so likely to be inspirational & temporary; therefore for my sake & the dog's, I think it will be better that one of us keep out of the way [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Livy warns Sam when he attends the Cleveland reception at the White House—Describes the Paris house in which they lived in 1893—Also room in Villa Viviani—Also dining room in house at Riverdale—Tells how Clemens was "dusted off" after the various dinners—and the card system of signals—Letter from Richard W. Gilder regarding Grover Cleveland's sixty-ninth birthday—Mason [AMT 1: 385-389].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

It was so dreadful to have to go to a little reception at Mr. Weyman's studio, The Benedict in Washington Square, but Jean couldn't go alone & I toted her, & after I got in there I didn't mind it a bit, I liked it, for the room was beautiful, & Mr. Weyman was agreeable. There was a lovely dull gold ceiling & frieze above a soft indescribably colored wall—oh tan, or pale sand color, & there were lovely pictures there & a beautiful big screen, copying an old German style & lots of lovely candles lit it all. The talk didn't amount to a great deal, but the effect of the room was very satisfying [MTP TS 41-42]. Note: evidently Sam did not go. Weyman was not further identified.

H.A. Williams, nephew of Steve Gillis and James Gillis, was in N.Y.C. with a letter from his uncle Jim and wrote to Sam: "He was very anxious to have me see you if possible. I have heard so many pleasant things of you both from Uncle Jim and my Uncle Steve, that I trust you will be able to appoint some day when I can have the pleasure of meeting you" [MTP]. Note: Clemens replied ca. Mar. 6

March 6 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Grover Cleveland.

Grover Cleveland, Esq.

Ex-President.

Honored Sir:

Your patriotic virtues have won for you the homage of half the nation & the enmity of the other half. This places your character as a citizen upon a summit as high as Washington's. The verdict is unanimous & unassailable. The votes of both sides are necessary in cases like these, & the votes of the one side are quite as valuable as are the votes of the other. When the votes are all in a public man's favor the verdict is against him. It is sand, & history will wash it away. But the verdict for you is rock, & will stand.

With the profoundest respect, SL. Clemens [MTP].

Sam also wrote an aphorism to Mr. Isidor Lewis: "Truth is the most valuable thing we have. Let us economise it. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / March 6/06 / Mr. Isidor Lewis." [MTP].

Sam also wrote this above aphorism tipped into a memento program of a dinner given him by the Lotos Club. The sheet is also signed by William Dean Howells, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, and others [MTP].

Note: This same inscription suggests that the aphorism was given to Mr. Isidor Lewis and perhaps others at the dinner.

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Clemens makes Baby Ruth intercede in behalf of Frank H. Mason, and he is retained in his place—Clemens' letter to Ex-President Cleveland—Cleveland as sheriff, in Buffalo—as Mayor he vetoes ordinance of railway corporation—Clemens and George Washington Cable visit Governor Cleveland at Capitol, Albany—Clemens sits on the bells and summons sixteen clerks—The Lyon of St. Mark [AMT 1: 389-392].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today came a letter [not extant] from a man asking if Clemens's one act play would be available for vaudeville, & appropriate. The play is "The Death Wafer." Mr. Clemens said to me: "They could try a funeral service, & if that succeeds they could try this." Tonight after Jean played it, Mr. Clemens said: "The dearest & sweetest lie I ever heard is the Lorelei." & then he chuckled [MTP TS 42].

Robert Fulton Cutting wrote from 32 Nassau St. in N.Y.C. to Sam. Would he be able to "make an address" to the N.Y. Trade School on Friday evening April 6? Fulton described the proposed audience as "nearly one thousand young men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five who are learning the elementary trades... They belong to the most ambitious class of our American industrials and come to the school for hard work and not for play" [MTP]. Note: On or about Mar. 10 Miss Lyon's answer reflected Sam's desire to accommodate such students if possible, though many times such offers were declined straightaway.

Charles Putzel, NY attorney, wrote to Sam.

Our guests and our members will be greatly pleased with your very kind acceptance to be present at this complimentary Dinner to me. There will be a hundred and fifty diners, and your wish, I have already communicated to the Toastmaster, and you are now placed at the bottom of the list of speakers. ... New York Cab Company will have one of its cabs at your door on Thursday, at 9:15 P.M. ... [MTP]. Note: see below reply.

Sam also replied to Charles Putzel:

Dear Mr. Putzl [sic Putzel] —

I can be there by 9.45 day after tomorrow evening, & shall be very glad—but I want to be about the last speaker, or along there, so that I can gather a test or two from the previous talkers. My secretary will not let me forget the date. / Truly Yours / SL. Clemens [Christie's auction Dec. 4, 2009, Lot 38 Item 2153]. Note:

source gives this as a testimonial dinner for Putzel, a newly appointed tax commissioner. Fatout adds the Mar. 8, 1906 dinner speech for Putzel was given by the Freundschaft Society, N.Y.C (Putzel was a former president of the society) [503, 675].

March 6 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote a note to Philip Sawyer: “Pay to the order of Tom Sawyer comrade of Huckleberry Finn. Two hundred dollars” [MTP].

Sam gave advice to Isabel V. Lyon to reply to H.A. Williams’ Mar. 5 letter. “2 o’clock Thurs afternoon be pretty sure to be in & glad to see him” [MTP].

Alex C. Toncray (Tonkray) wrote to Sam, as quoted in his A.D.

You no doubt are at a loss to know who I am. I will tell you. In my younger days I was a resident of Hannibal, Mo., and you and I were schoolmates attending Mr. Dawson’s school along with Sam and Will Bowen and Andy Fuqua and others whose names I have forgotten. I was then about the smallest boy in school, for my age, and they called me little Aleck Tonkray for short [MTP]. Note: Alex’s brother was the Capt. Tonkray whose death was sent by clipping; see Feb. 14 from A.D. Howard and Sam’s reply to this on Mar. 8.

March 7 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Robert K. Mackey, who was seeking autographs for his son’s set of Mark Twain books. Lyon wrote that if Mackey would leave the first volume Mr. Clemens would autograph it for him [MTP].

Sam also wrote to John F. Tremain of the Chemung County Society who had written on Dec. 9 conferring upon Mark Twain honorary membership in their society and inviting him to dine with them on Mar. 29. Sam thanked him for both but declined to attend due to other engagements [MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. for this day: Susy’s Biography—John Hay incident—Giving the young girl the French novel—Susy and her father escort Livy to train, then go over Brooklyn Bridge—On the way to Vassar they discuss German profanity—Clemens tells of the sweet and profane German nurse—The arrival at Vassar and the dreary reception—Told by Susy—The reading, etc.—Clemens’ opinion of girls—He is to talk to the Barnard girls this afternoon [AMT 1: 392-396].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to invite Sam to dine at Delmonico’s on Tuesday, Mar. 13 at 7:30 p.m. since Col. Harvey and Major Leigh were sailing for Europe the following day [MTP].

In the afternoon, Sam was guided by a young woman to speak at Columbia University for the Barnard College Union reception. Fatout writes:

At a Barnard College reception, the girls swarmed around Mark Twain with a gratifying display of flattering affection. He enjoyed the society of young women. In MTA (2: 172), he says: “Girls are charming creatures. I shall have to be twice seventy years old before I change my mind about that. I am to talk to a crowd of them this afternoon, students of Barnard College...and I think I shall have just as pleasant a time as I had with the Vassar girls twenty-one years ago.” He did have a pleasant time, recording in a dictation next day his great satisfaction in being fussed over. Escorted to the platform by Miss Russell, president of Barnard, and Miss Hill, dean, he stood before a painted backdrop depicting a woodsy setting, and faced a house crowded with admiring femininity. Introduced as one whom all the girls loved, he spoke for an hour, and afterwards shook hands with everybody, his youthful listeners assuring him that his words would undoubtedly make them lead better lives [495]. Note: see Fatout 495-502 for full text of Clemens’ speech, which includes the watermelon tale. Also included in his talk was the story of a visitor to the Hartford home sometime after 1890, a story he’d told at the Players Club on Jan. 26, 1894. The story of Benjamin Ellis Martin (d. 1909), a Civil War surgeon and author had stopped to visit the Clemens family; Sam mistook him for an etchings salesman. The tale was published in 2004 as “Courtesy to Unexpected Visitors” in Mark Twain’s Helpful Hints for Good Living p. 25-6 and notes p. 186.

After the reception Sam dined with Professor of Philosophy Herbert Gardiner Lord of Barnard College [Virginia TaylorMar. 8]

Edwina L. Levy wrote after listening to Sam:

I had the great pleasure of listening to Mark Twain this afternoon at Barnard College, and the still greater pleasure of meeting him after the lecture. Would you induce him to be kind enough to send me his autograph, that I may have a souvenir of one of the most delightful afternoons I have ever spent [MTP]. Note: photograph of Sam enclosed for signature.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Jean, 9:20 I was alone

Tonight at 9:30 Mr. Clemens came slipping upstairs after his expedition to Barnard College & his even later with Prof. and Mrs. Lord. He had had a beautiful time. At half past 3 he slid away in a mobile with strong young Virginia Taylor & 2 other Barnardites, and this evening he told how he had had a beautiful time. He sat on my broad short divan here & told me how much he had enjoyed all those girls, and how responsive they had been. He told Mrs. Lord last Sunday that he wanted that mobile full of girls & it was about that—though there was a place for me too, his authorized chaperon, but I couldn’t go—I dared not leave Jean alone. But I bought of a street vendor 3 darling pots of primroses—1 for Jean, 2 for me and they are such a comfort. One is on the floor by my fireplace & the 2nd vol. of “Roughing It” dropped off the shelf as I was getting it, & knocked off a shaft of blossoms & 3 pretty leaves [MTP TS 42-43].

March 8 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam added to his Mar. 4 to Gertrude Natkin. He would finish the letter on Mar. 9

Thursday afternoon.

Marjorie, I’ve got the words! The words That rhyme. The rest is easy, because No. 3 doesn’t have to rhyme with anything. Observe:

TO THAT BONNY CHILD, MARJORIE.

Marjorie, Marjorie, listen to me—

Listen, you winsome witch:

Whomever you bless with your innocent love,

That person is passing rich.

There, dear—that poem is as good as half done, I think. All in good time I shall finish it, will see [MTAq 17].

Sam also wrote on the Mar. 1 from Ulysses S. Grant, Jr. “I prize your friendship very highly & shall be glad to welcome you to my house when you come to New York. We will then sit down together & brush the dust off that friendship. / I do not run across Gen. Fred in the flesh, but I am glad to say I remain in touch with him” [MTP]. Note: Sam signed and dated this, likely for Lyon to copy & mail.

Clemens’ A.D. for this day: The Barnard lecture—Subject Morals—Letter from brother of Captain Toncray—Clemens reply that original of “Huckleberry Finn” was Tom Blankenship—Tom’s father Town Drunkard—Describes Tom’s character—Death of Injun Joe—Storm which came that night—Incident of the Episcopal sextons and their reforms—John D. Dawson’s school in Hannibal—Archibald Fuqua’s great gift [AMT 1: 396-400].

Isabel Lyon’s journal noted that Sam dined with Moncure D. Conway and Andrew Dickson White, men Lyon referred to as “those 2 autobiographists” [Gribben 760: TS 143].

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

Later Sam spoke before the Freundschaft Society, honoring Charles Putzel, a past president of the group, who had just been named a tax commissioner. The New York Times, Mar. 9, p1: reported:

TWAIN'S WANING CONSCIENCE.

No More Left Than a Millionaire, He Says at Putzel Dinner.

Four hundred members of the Freundschaft Club met at their quarters, Park Avenue and Seventy-second Street, last night, to do honor to their late President, Charles Putzel, on his appointment as Tax Commissioner. Among those who were asked to meet him all were officers or ex-officers except Mark Twain. The Chairman, Julius J. Frank, explained that the humorist was King of all Hearts and all Affection. Mayor McClellan sent a letter of regret.

Mr. Putzel remarked that when Mayor McClellan appointed him to office the members of the Freundschaft evidently assumed that he was selected to reduce the assessments on the club. The dinner was set three weeks before the close of swearing-off time. Then the club could sing:

What is it to us if taxes rise and fall!

Thanks to our Putzel, we pay none at all.

After Signor Campanari had sung the Toreador's song Attorney General Mayer was introduced. Then ex-Controller Grout assured the new Tax Commissioner that if he needed criticism he had only to assess The Journal, The World, The Sun, The Herald, and The Eagle at their true value.

Mark Twain, who received an ovation, said:

"Mr. Putzel is related to me in a very tender way through taxes. They are a sore subject to me and I was glad to hear there was any foreign product untaxable in America except the answer to prayer.

"When I went to his office and saw Putzel in the receipt of perjury, I recognized him right away. Years ago I met him in a bookstore. I asked him the discount of a book for a publisher. He said 40 per cent. I asked him the discount to an author. He jotted down another 40 per cent. What was it to clergy? Forty per cent again.

"Well, I said, I was only on my way there, kind of studying. So he put down 20 per cent without a smile. I was in despair and asked him for 10 off, as a member of the human race. He never moved a muscle, but as I left the store called me back for the book and the 40 cents that was coming to me.

"I hoped I might get something from him now as Tax Commissioner. I put up my hand and made a statement. It was pain and grief to me, for I was brought up in the pious circles of Missouri. But a year in New York had left me with no more conscience than a millionaire. I would like to compliment him, anyway, for I may get relief next year.

"Attorney General Mayer suggested I might be a Supreme Court Judge. I can't be that, for I know nothing of the administration of justice. But I understand from his speech he is the propagator of crime for the whole State, and, as I am reasonably familiar with crime, I might have his job [Note: Julius Marshuetz Mayer (1865-1925), New York Atty. Gen. 1905-1906. Later became a judge.

After the event Sam wrote his thanks to Charles Putzel.

Dear Mr. Putzel: I intended to write you the next day & still the next & the 3 next & the next day, but was always prevented by one interruption or another; & so at last you have gotten in ahead of me. I wanted to speak of the very thing you have now spoken about: the generous & moving reception accorded me, both when I entered the hall & when I rose to speak. These things go to a man's heart & they went to mine. The praises & affection lavished upon me were as fine as anything of the kind I have had the good fortune to listen to, & none of them rang false; they were as manifestly sincere as they were fine. I was very glad to be there, & hear those happy speeches, & see that great body of choice men, & have the pleasure of shaking hands with so many of them [MTP]. Note: Charles Putzel was recently appointed a commissioner of taxation; he was also a trustee for the City College of N.Y. (1901-1910)

Sam also replied to Alex C. Toncray (Tonkray) in Chicago, who wrote on Mar. 6.

Dear Mr. Toncray: / It is plain to me that you knew the Hannibal of my boyhood, the names you quote prove it. This is an unusual circumstance in my experience. With some frequency letters come from strangers reminding me of old friends & early episodes, but in almost every case these strangers have mixed me up with somebody else, and the names and incidents are foreign to me.

Huckleberry Finn was Tom Blankenship. You may remember that Tom was a good boy, notwithstanding his circumstances. To my mind he was a better boy than Henry Beebe & John Reagan put together, those swells of the ancient days [MTP]. Note: mail from Chicago to NY now took only 2 days.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

The days are so full of varied joys. I lunched with Mrs. Day & her daughter & Miss Caer was there too, that interesting woman who spent 11 months in the royal palace in China. Her accounts of her life there were delightful. One of the Chinese grandees diplomatically told her that he could send her a wonderful ointment for the hair, one that would darken it for her too. To them a blond must be really a torture for they depict their devils as fair haired.

I came home to find quite a number of things to do, people to see & telephoning, & Mr. Clemens gone to his bed tired. He was resting up too, for he dined with Moncure D. Conway & Andrew D. White (those 2 autobiographists) before going up to the Freundschaft Club at 9:30. But I had a darling chat with him, & he was interested in Mrs. Day & her Christian Science. Mr. Dearborn came in to see if Mr. Clemens would speak in Carnegie for the Fulton Memorial Association. The idea pleases Mr. Clemens. Mr. Glover, a handsome man, came in to see Mr. Clemens, but had to see me instead [MTP TS 43-44]. Note: Harry Windsor Dearborn.

John Brown, Jr. ("Jock") wrote to Sam, hoping he remembered him. He'd given letters of his father to his cousin, Dr. J.T. Brown, to write a memoir of his father, which was published in 1901, but little use was made of the letters. "Among the letters I got back in 1902 were some from you and Mrs. Clemens. I have now got a large number of letters written by my father between 1830 and 1882 and intend publishing a selection in order to give the public an idea of the man he was....I now write to ask you if you have letters from him and if you will let me see them and use them" [MTP].

Moncure D. Conway in NYC sent a note by messenger to Sam. "Can you come this evening at seven sharp to the Century Club to dine with Andrew D. White? / The messenger will wait for an answer, if you are in....The short notice is inevitable" [MTP]. Note: Sam went; see IVL entry this day.

Ernest A. Gerrard wrote from 104 E. 20th N.Y.C. to Sam that he was mailing a copy of France and the Maid, a play based on Joan of Arc. "I send it to you because I know you are one of the few Americans sufficiently familiar with the subject matter to appreciate and enjoy the truthful handling of the characters and events" [MTP]. Note: Sam answered ca. Mar. 10.

Lillie T. Noel wrote from Washington Training College, Wash., D.C. to relate an incident and to ask Sam's opinion of what he might have done in that situation. It seems that during a group pose for a photograph, a lady sneezed who was sitting above a young man. Some item flew down the stairs but the lady was quicker to retrieve it than the young man—it was a set of the lady's false teeth. What would Sam have done or said in that situation to restore the lady's dignity? [MTP]. Note: Sam replied Mar. 10.

Philip Sawyer wrote from NYC to Sam, signing "Tom Sawyer." He was "overjoyed to find" Sam's "check in my mail this morning—particularly as 'my pump had begun to suck!'" [MTP].

Virginia Taylor wrote from Barnard College to thank Sam for speaking at the College, and that he was "certainly are an angel." She apologized for not being able to "deliver you safely home," and that perhaps "we shouldn't have let you accept the dinner engagement with Professor Lord" [MTP]. Note: H.G. Lord Philosophy Professor.

March 8-11 Sunday – During this period Sam replied to Ernest Carson Hunt (incoming not extant) that he had never written a book entitled, “How to be a gentleman” [MTP].

March 9 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam added to his Mar. 4 and Mar. 8 to Gertrude Natkin, who had telephoned him, perhaps before he completed the letter [Natkin Mar. 10].

Friday.

I knew I could do it, dear. By going without rest or food for a day & a night I have compressed the proper work of months into a single cataclysmal explosion. And so as you see, it is finished:

Rich, though he have not a grain of gold
 Save that which is in his mouth,
 Rich, though his silver be all on his head
 And crusts for his crew be all his bread
 And his wine-tank rusty with drouth;

For your love has the power of the fabled purse
 That wrought charms in the old romaunt:
 Who had it might live in a shack or worse
 And feed on dreams & dew & verse,
 Yet never could he know want.

(There, Marjorie dear—I charge you a blot for that) [MTAq 17-18]. Note: blot = kiss.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Mr. Clemens is following up the Fulton Memorial Talk at Carnegie. He likes it better than he did. He is dissipating—but delightful. Off in a hansom for tea with Betty Buffum at the Waldorf & then in the hansom up beautiful Fifth Avenue to 91st St. to drop Mr. Clemens’s cards along at the various places where he has dined. Mr. Carl Schurz, Mrs. Burden, Norman Hapgood, Prof. Sloane, Mrs. Alexander, Mr. Henry Holt, then leaving Betty at the Hotel Marie Antoinette & so home in the growing twilight down the long avenue with its roadway so polished by the solemn padding of horses & carriages that the light sent long shafts of yellow & silver, like the reflections on ice, & we went into them & into them like riding down rainbow rays. Just as I was leaving the house I saw Mr. Clemens & Mr. Paine sauntering back from the Players. Today came a Tribune man to offer Mr. Clemens the office of U.S. Senator in place of Chauncey DePew who is resigning. If he’d accept they’d boom him [MTP TS 44-45]. Note: leaving his card at various hosts was perhaps a way of thanking or inviting in return.

Charles Hopkins Clark wrote from Hartford to Sam suggesting they split the bill for the Mar. 1 luncheon in Hartford [MTP]. Note: Sam agreed in his *ca.*Mar. 10.

Edward M. Foote wrote for the Young Men’s Bible Class, NYC to invite Sam to their reunion on Mar. 22 at 8 p.m. [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the letter: “I daren’t be with thee. I’d like to mighty well.”

Mrs. Clement March wrote from Cambridge, Mass. for the Bazaar of Women’s Clubs there to ask if Sam would contribute some of his work to the Book Table [MTP].

Miss Lyle E. Sullivan wrote from Trenton, Mich. to ask Sam for his photo and autograph [MTP].

March 10 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote a postcard to Edwina L. Levy. “Oh, dear me, Miss Levy! I’ve ‘lifted’ this English girl’s post-card without noticing what I was doing. But I’ll send her a more recent photograph to make up for it” [MTP].

Sam also wrote on Edwina L. Levy's Mar. 7 letter to Miss D. Stickney, explain his blunder of sending the photograph Miss Stickney had sent of him to Miss Levy. "But I am sending you a far more recent one, & shall hope that you will forgive me." (photograph signed and enclosed) [MTP]. Note: photo sold on eBay Nov. 8, 2008, Item # 260311578030, and inscribed "Very Truly Yours Mch 10/06 / Mark Twain".

Sam also replied to the Mar. 8 from Lillie T. Noel.

The standard of etiquette for a dropped garter has become—through our modified manners in the drift of the centuries—precisely the etiquette for dropped teeth. The remark proper at that early day is exactly proper for our time & must not be altered. Mr. A. should have bowed low, handed the lady her teeth, & sternly quenched the smiles of the witnesses with the noble "Honi soit que mal y pense." [MTP]. Note: French phrase meaning: "Shamed be he who thinks evil of it".

Gertrude Natkin wrote another affectionate letter to Sam, mentioning her phone call to him of the day before. She had received his letter this a.m. and replied, including a little verse she'd written:

LAY OF ANCIENT ROME

Ole Marcus was a Roman,

A Roman good was he,

No dagger was seen neath his toga blue

But there a heart brave and true [MTAq 18-19]. Note: see source for the full text.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Saturdays Mr. Clemens doesn't dictate, except to me, & we save up the important letters for that day & go through them as through a delightful game, wondering what will come next in the great batch of mail that comes from all parts of the world during the week. His moods are always interesting.

Mr. Rogers came at 12:30 and took him off to luncheon and to the matinee, "Abbyssinia" [sic] at the Majestic Theatre. He came home a little tired while Mr. Paine sat at tea with Jean & me, & after a glass of milk, he tucked the evening papers under his arm to go up to his bed & reset before going out again this evening to play billiards with Mr. Rogers.

Mr. Henderson came in again to talk about having Mr. Clemens speak the birthday speech onto those cylinders, & I suppose now that he will really do it. We had a nice talk over that & over the Herald reporter who came with the Tribune man's "Senatorial" Copy. Mr. Paine told me yesterday that Mr. Clemens reception of the suggestion & of the reporter was so find & so characteristic [MTP TS 45-46; also, in part, Gribben 642].

Note: "Abbyssinia" was a musical comedy.

March 10 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to Charles Hopkins Clark's Mar. 10 letter: "All right—got to compromise on half then" [MTP]. Note: To split the bill for the luncheon in Hartford on Mar. 1.

At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Robert Fulton Cutting's Mar. 8 invitation to address the students of the N.Y. Trade School: "At present cannot see his way to it—but would like to think this over for a day or so to see if he can manage it" [MTP].

Sam also replied to Ernest A. Gerrard's Mar. 8 note (writing on it) that he was sending a play, France and the Maid for Sam to appreciate: "I have taken a glimpse of it here & there & think I know I shall have great pleasure & content in reading it when these strenuous days are by, & I get a chance to stop working & speechifying & steal a holiday for reading & rest" [MTP].

March 11 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

This morning I went in with some more left over mail. A letter from John D. Rockefeller S.S. [Sunday School] chairman or something, asking Mr. Clemens to address that class. He chuckled and said “I daren’t be with them, but I’d like it mighty well,” for he’d talk about Joseph of course. We had such a talk about the human race.

But the morning was so beautiful. Mr. Clemens went to work to write a fictitious correspondence between himself & Brig. Gen. Fred D. Grant which was to be submitted to H.G. Muller & Mr. Dearborn when they came this afternoon, & to be printed in the Carnegie Hall programs to excuse Mr. Clemens from any formal Fulton Memorial speech making. He read most of it aloud to me when I went in later & was joined there by Mr. Paine who came in to show Mr. Clemens the Tribune article which was in the Herald & Mr. Clemens excused us both so that he could continue his work & we came up to my rooms.

Mr. Clemens didn’t come down to luncheon, he had a glass of milk & at 2:30 Mr. & Mrs. Gordon Miller came for the interview or rather Mr. Muller, but we all went up to the bedroom & Mr. Clemens read aloud that fictitious correspondence & the plans are made for the Carnegie Hall speech which is to be made some time in the week before “Holy Week”. Mr. Clemens remarked “Mrs. Miller is a pretty and very young woman. Too good for Miller.”

After they left Mr. Clemens went down to the living room where we had music until we were interrupted by a young Mr. Elsberg—the student who introduced everyone to Mr. Clemens at the Columbia Reception a fortnight or so ago. He proved a tiresome creature, & when A.C. Fahnestock came in to see Mr. Clemens that gave him the needed chance to leave the worrisome companionship of young Elsberg, & when Mr. F. left, Mr. Clemens slipped away & out into the fresh air for a stroll. Elsberg stayed on & on, but by & by Mary Lawton came in, handsome & fresh & full of Dr. Anspacher’s play of Tristan & Isolde which she has just been reading & which is admirably suited to her heroic personality, & which she is to have for her own if she can interest people in the rather costly presentation of it. Finally Elsberg left & then Miss Lawton told us of an interesting interview she had had the afternoon before with Ada Rehan, when she went to see her with a letter of introduction from Mr. Clemens. Miss Lawton was very anxious to have Ada Rehan coach her in the Shrew, but that couldn’t be brought about for Miss Rehan doesn’t ever coach anyone. Miss Lawton said that Ada Rehan is a very impressive figure now, a majestic creature who has lived beyond her victories. She lives always in the past, & her outlook is a very pessimistic one, for she sees how dramatic art has been commercialized in these days, & that without money one might as well give up. Mary Lawton said that she was beautiful & like a woman at the head of a Salon, with the graciousness of manner, a beauty of gesture that one may read about, but rarely see. She sent sweet little messages to Mr. Clemens begging him not to work too hard, not to let the public demand of him beyond his strength. She couldn’t realize the fun he gets out of his talks for Y.M.C.A.’s & for the Freundschaft Clubs and their like. He loves it all. It’s a tonic to him to see the sea of faces before him & to hear the wave—the burst of adoring homage they lavish upon him.

We were alone for dinner, for Jean went up to dine with Mrs. Loomis & Mr. Clemens was very tired. He stayed downstairs only a little while, & for only the andante movement of the Schubert Unfinished Symphony—but as I went upstairs later he called me in to his room & said that he wanted me to telephone Mrs. Stanchfield in the morning to ask her to tell me the story of the Irish woman who lived at Elmira many years ago & whose illegitimate daughter was recognized among good people because the mother had built up for herself a character of great nobility by her work for & her devotion to that baby. Then deeply moved he told me the story of John O’Donnell that faithful Elmira coachman, but tomorrow Mrs. Stanchfield will doubtless tell the stories to me and Miss Hobby will shorthand them for she is to be there for that purpose. Mr. Clemens looked tired & depressed & beautiful as he lay there with the soft cloud of tobacco smoke from his cigar surrounding him & the carved columns of the beautiful old bed, a picture for always [MTP TS 46-49]. Note: The following to and from Grant, according to Lyon’s above entry were “fictitious.” Nevertheless, they are given unique UCCL #’s by the MTP. In his A.D. Sam discussed these following 8 correspondences, done with the approval of Grant:

I shall be unspeakably sorry if the bronchitis catches me, for that will mean six weeks in bed—my annual tribute to it for the last sixteen years. I shall be sorry because I want to be in condition to appear at Carnegie Hall on the night of April 10th and take my permanent leave of the platform. I never intended to lecture for pay again, and I think I shall never lecture again where the audience has paid to get in. I shall go on talking, but it will be for fun, not money. I can get lots of it to do.

My first appearance before an audience was forty years ago, in San Francisco. If I live to take my farewell in Carnegie Hall on the night of the 10th, I shall see, and see constantly, what no one else in that house will see. I shall see two vast audiences—the San Francisco audience of forty years ago and the one which will be before me at that time. I shall see that early audience with as absolute distinctness in every detail as I see it at this moment, and as I shall see it while looking at the Carnegie audience. I am promising myself a great, a consuming pleasure, on that Carnegie night, and I hope that the bronchitis will leave me alone and let me enjoy it.

I was vaguely meditating a farewell stunt when General Fred Grant sent a gentleman over here a week ago to offer me a thousand dollars to deliver a talk for the benefit of the Robert Fulton Monument Association of which he is the President and I Vice-President. This was the very thing, and I accepted it at once, and said I would without delay write some telegrams and letters from Fred Grant to myself and sign his name to them, and in this way we could make a good advertisement and I could thus get the fact before the public that I was now delivering my last and final platform talk for money. I wrote the correspondence at once. General Grant approved it, and I here insert it [The following 8 notes, including to and from Hugh Gordon Miller, were included in this “fictitious” bunch] [MTA 1: 425-428 A.D. Mar. 20, 1906].

Frederick D. Grant's telegram marked “Private and Confidential,” which prompted a telegram reply, then back and forth notes all on this day. Grant asked if Sam would consider, for $1,000, to speak at Carnegie Hall for the benefit of the Robert Fulton Memorial Assoc.

Sam telegraphed reply to Grant that he'd “be glad to do it, but I must stipulate that you keep the thousand dollars and add it to the Memorial Fund as my contribution.”

Grant's short note suggesting Sam not contribute the full amount and asking, “Why should you do this work wholly without compensation?”

Sam replied again to Grant's last note:

Because I stopped talking for pay a good many years ago, and I could not resume the habit now without a great deal of personal discomfort. I love to hear myself talk, because I get so much instruction and moral upheaval out of it, but I lose the bulk of this joy when I charge for it. Let the terms stand.

General, if I have your approval, I wish to use this good occasion to retire permanently from the platform.

Grant wrote back: “Certainly. But as an old friend, permit me to say, Don't do that. Why should you?—you are not old yet.”

Sam then wrote a much longer and more humorous reply.

Dear General: / I mean the pay-platform; I shan't retire from the gratis-platform until after I am dead and courtesy requires me to keep still and not disturb the others.

What shall I talk about? My idea is this: to instruct the audience about Robert Fulton, and... Tell me—was that his real name, or was it his nom de plume? However, never mind, it is not important—I can skip it, and the house will think I knew all about it, but forgot. Could you find out for me if he was one of the Signers of the Declaration, and which one? But if it is any trouble, let it alone, I can skip it. Was he out with Paul Jones? Will you ask Horace Porter? And ask him if he brought both of them home. These will be very interesting facts, if they can be established. But never mind, don't trouble Porter, I can establish them anyway. The way I look at it, they are historical gems—gems of the very first water.

Well, that is my idea, as I have said: first, excite the audience with a spoonful of information about Fulton, then quiet them down with a barrel of illustration drawn by memory from my books—and if you don't say anything the house will think they never heard it before, because people don't really read your books, they only say they do, to keep you from feeling bad. Next, excite the house with another spoonful of Fultonian fact. Then tranquillize them again with another barrel of illustration. And so on and so on, all through the evening; and if you are discreet and don't tell them the illustrations don't illustrate anything, they won't notice it and I will send them home as well informed about Robert Fulton as I am myself. Don't you be afraid; I know all about audiences. They believe everything you say, except when you are telling the truth. / Truly yours, ... P.S. Mark all the advertisements "Private and confidential," otherwise the people will not read them [MTA 1: 425-428 A.D. Mar. 20, 1906].

Hugh Gordon Miller for the Fulton Monument Assoc. wrote to ask Sam how long he would talk in order for him to know when to call the carriages afterward. Sam replied "I cannot say for sure. It is my custom to keep on talking till I get the audience cowed. Sometimes it takes an hour and fifteen minutes, sometimes I can do it in an hour" [MTA 1: 428 A.D. Mar. 20, 1906]. Note: end of "fictitious" notes written by Sam and approved by Grant.

The New York Times, Mar. 12, "Carnegie Assaults the Spelling Book," announced that Andrew Carnegie had led the formation of a new group on Mar. 11, The Simplified Spelling Board, of which Mark Twain was a member.

March 12 Monday – George Henschel wrote from the Institute of Musical Art, 53 Fifth Ave. to Sam:

On case your daughter Clara can't accompany you to my little Bohemian (or rather Bavarian) dinner on Tuesday the 20th at the Aufbrauhaus, won't you give me the pleasure of your company even if you have to come alone?...We shall be twelve all round—all round a round table—in a very cosy Room, drinking the most delicious Munich beer imaginable. Pray come and make us all young and happy [MTP]. Note: Sam's reply, instructing Miss Lyon to telegraph "yes" is dated ca. Mar. 14.

Sam wrote "Comments on the Moro Massacre," on Mar. 12 and 14, about the final military engagement in the Philippines, where over 600 natives were massacred by forces led by General Leonard Wood. The piece was not published in Twain's lifetime; in 1992 it appeared in Mark Twain's Weapons of Satire.

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Clemens comments on the killing of 600 Moros—Men, women and children—In a crater bowl near Jolo in the Philippines—Our troops commanded by General Leonard Wood—Contrasts this "battle" with various other details of our military history—The newspapers' attitude toward the announcements—President Theodore Roosevelt's message of congratulation [AMT 1: 403-407].

By appointment I met Miss Hobby up at the Hoffman house where Mrs. Stanchfield told us the story of Mary Donovan & her daughter. Over a cup of tea at Maillards after the Stanchfield talk was over, Miss Hobby & I discussed plans for Dublin next summer, for Mr. Clemens is very anxious to have her with him right through those 6 months [MTP TS 49]. Note: Maillard's Restaurant at Fifth Ave. & 35th Street served afternoon tea for ladies from 3 to 7 p.m.

Edwina L. Levy wrote to thank Sam again for his autograph received [MTP].

Cornelia A. Lyon wrote from Asbury Park, NJ to ask Sam for $25 to get her by until she collected some $1,500. She enclosed letters attesting to her collection, which her attorney said she would get. She prefaced her request by noting in the Mar. 11 NY Herald, the suggestion that Mark Twain be named for Congress in the event of retirement of either NY Senator. She recalled going around Sam and Livy's Buffalo house with other young girls to "catch a glimpse of the bride and groom." [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the top of the letter, "Enclosed letter returned," and on the other corner, "Request"

Charles Putzel wrote appreciation to Sam for his presence and address at the Freundschaft Society dinner Thursday last [MTP].

March 13 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote to Gertrude Natkin. In full:

To whom these presents shall come—greeting:
 One unto you unknown—
 & yet a Friend—instructs me to beg you to hold free of engagements the evening of April fifth. This, from Another Unknown Friend [MTAq 20].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean, at 8 this morning.

Santa C. came back from Atlantic City.

I talked with Mr. Clemens about Miss Hobby, who said she won't be able to give up her position with the Century people. Mr. Clemens finds her entirely to his liking & he says "it is a case of established competency" which is saying a great deal, for she is a good audience, is sympathetic & very appreciative.

(Later in the day) I talked with Miss Hobby, when I told her that Mr. Clemens would want her from May 11th to the first of November, she said she'd be willing to think it over. Just then Mr. Paine came in full of my same advice, "Give up the Century"—and she'll do it [MTP TS 49-50].

Joseph Baron wrote a long "fan letter" from Blackburn, England to Sam, noting that as a "slim youth" he had spent a US dollar on a copy of IA, and had not stopped laughing since. "Mark I have laughed & grown fat!!!" He was going to get "the best & biggest photo of yourself, & to sign it send it to me for framing in my den" [MTP].

Thomas P. Brown wrote from Compton, Calif. to Sam, informing him of a letter given to his father by King Kalakaua after a gift of HF. Brown offered to send Sam the original and Sam replied ca. Mar. 15 [MTP]. Note: The mail would have taken a bit longer to cross the country than two days. It is here reassigned to ca. Mar. 19.

Reginald Wright Kauffman wrote from the Curtis Publishing Co. in Philadelphia (Saturday Evening Post, etc.) to Sam. Kauffman enclosed a copy of a letter received "the other day" and thought it "might prove mildly amusing to you. The anxious gentleman from Brooklyn...wants to know the address of Col. Mulberry Sellers" [MTP]. Note: Sam's answer is catalogued as ca. Mar. 15 by the MTP.

Clara Clemens arrived back in New York from Atlantic City and auditioned for Loudon Charlton as her manager. Charlton thought she wasn't ready to appear in public. Isabel Lyon's journal:

At fifteen minutes past midnight Santa [Clara] stole up to my room. She couldn't sleep, poor dear, for Charlton's verdict was one to keep her awake. So she sat in a dear curled up heap on my couch, and we talked over things and people until now—and it is past 2. I have with me the memory of her darlingsness, and especially as she stole down stairs into the black black hall, with 2 little bottles of bromide powder in her dear little hand [Hill 122].

Hamlin Garland's Diaries, ed by Donald Pizer. San Marino, California: The Huntington Library (1968). Tenney: Passim on MT:

At a memorial meeting to MT, April 30, 1910, among the old guard, one intoxicated and "Opie Read purple-visaged walking sedately and talking a lot of 'guff'" (17). Dined with Clarence Darrow (November 4, 1920), who "particularly dwelt upon Mark Twain and his savage attacks on the Christian religion. It was all rather wearisome to me" (123). Says Howells inspired MT with reform ideas, and P&P and CY "were due to Howells almost directly" (152). Went to see Will Rogers on the film set for CY (December 28, 1930; 181-82). Describes MT at a dinner honoring Henry James (December 9, 1904): "When Mark Twain's humor vanishes he is tragic. His wife is dead, one daughter is dead, another is in a sanitarium" (191). At a lunch with Colonel Harvey (March 13, 1906) "Twain looked old and sluggish and congested, his purplish face and bushy yellow-white hair making him a picturesque figure. He drank more than he should and ate more than he should. He is old and his work is nearly done" (191-92). On MT's friendship for Howells and the differences between them, MT's coarse anecdotes—"His profanity was oriental in its richness and power" (192-93) [Tenney 338]. Note: no other record of a lunch this day with Harvey was found.

March 14 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to Edward M. Foote's Mar. 9 invitation:

Indeed I should like to attend the reunion of the fellowship of honorary members of Mr. Rockefeller's Bible Class, (of whom I am one, by grace of service rendered,) but I must be discreet & not venture. This is an account of Joseph. He might come up as an issue, & then I could get into trouble, for Mr. Rockefeller & I do not agree as to Joseph. Eight years ago I quite painstakingly & exhaustively explained Joseph, by the light of the 47th chapter of Genesis, in a North American Review article entitled "Concerning the Jews," which has since been transferred to volume of my Collected Works; then I turned my attention to other subjects, under the impression that I had settled Joseph for good & all & left nothing further for anybody to say about him. Judge, then, of my surprise & sorrow, when by the newspapers I lately saw that Mr. Rockefeller had taken hold of Joseph—quite manifestly unaware that I had already settled Joseph—and was trying to settle him again.

In every sentence uttered by Mr. Rockefeller there was evidence that he was not acquainted with Joseph. Therefore it was plain to me that he had never read my article. He has certainly not read it, because his published estimate of Joseph differs quite materially from mine. This could not be, if he had read the article. He thinks Joseph was Mary's little lamb; this is an error. He was—he—but you look at the article, then you will see what he was.

.... [Sam inserted a newspaper clipping from Dr. Silverman and a passage from the Bible about Joseph]

No, I thank you cordially & in all sincerity, but I am afraid to come, I must not venture to come, for I am sensitive, I am humane, I am tender in my feelings & I could not bear it if young Mr. Rockefeller, whom I think a great deal of, should get up & go to whitewashing Joseph again. But you have my very best wishes [MTP].

Sam also wrote instructions to Isabel V. Lyon. "If I am free of engagements for next Tuesday, invite Mr & Mrs. Doubleday to come to luncheon; if they can't, then invite them to come at 2 p. m.—they want me to read my Gospel of Self. /We are to telephone them TO-DAY" [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Moro Slaughter continued—Luncheon for George Harvey—Opinions of the guests as to Moro fight—Cable from General Leonard Wood explaining and apologizing—What became of the wounded?—President Roosevelt's joy over the splendid achievement—Manner in which he made Wood Major General—McKinley's joy over capture of Emilio Aguinaldo [AMT 1: 407-409].

A.A. Bustard wrote from Steubenville, Ohio asking where he might find a copy of "one of your recent stories which was written for the special edification of Secretary Hay? I believe it deals with Queen Elizabeth and Sir Walter Raleigh..." [MTP]. Note: The man referred to 1601; Sam's answer is dated ca. Mar. 16, allowing two days postal delivery.

Charles Hopkins Clark wrote to Sam that the Mar. 1 luncheon bill in Hartford came to $28.95.

"I would very much like the privilege of paying the whole bill, but you can send me a check for $14.47, if you insist. Let me know next time you are coming and I will exercise a little of the American right of independence" [MTP]. Note: Sam's answer was ca. Mar. 16.

W.O. Fuller, Jr. wrote from Rockland, Maine to invite Sam to the dedication of his new house on the night of Mar. 31. He mentioned several notables who would be there [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote "Decline it"

George Henschel wrote from Phila. to Sam. "Many thanks for your telegram. I am delighted you will be with me on Tuesday next, the 20th at 7.30. The entrance to the Dutch Room of the Hofbrauhaus is on Broadway (cor. Of 30th) ..I am sorry your daughters can't come" [MTP].

Ada Patterson for Hearst's New York American wrote asking Sam's opinion of an enclosed parody of Robinson Crusoe by Barry Pain, English humorist. And, would he give Patterson "a few minutes, not more than five...and allow me the pleasure of shaking hands with the father of 'Huckleberry Finn'"? [MTP]. Note: Isabel Lyon answered for Sam ca. Mar. 16 that "Mr. Clemens couldn't do either or any of the things asked," which leads to some speculation as to Twain's regard for the American or Hearst or Patterson.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr. wrote to Sam about the Mar. 22 evening meeting of his Young Men's Bible Class. Martin W. Littleton, ex-president of the Borough of Brooklyn (and Sam's NY neighbor) would speak. He would send the subject of the evening in a day or two. "A few words, however, on any theme which suggests itself to you would be highly pleasing, or your views on the question of lying..." [MTP].

Clara Clemens tried out again, this time for Isidore Luckstone. He "gave his verdict and it was that C.C.'s breath is not as it should be" [Hill 122].

March 14 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam instructed Isabel Lyon to telegraph George Henschel "yes" to his Mar. 12 invite for a Bavarian dinner on Mar. 20 [MTP].

March 15 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote an aphorism to Florence Watson-Cadieu, secretary of the Whidden Memorial Hospital Guild, Everett, Mass. "On the whole it is better to deserve honors and not have them, than have them & not deserve them. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain" [MTP].

Sam hosted a dinner for the Rogerses and Dr. Edward Quintard [Hill 124].

Clemens' A.D. for this day: March 5, 1906: Clemens talks to the West Side YMCA in the Majestic Theatre—Lyon meets one of the Christian young men at the door—Patrick McAleer's funeral—Luncheon next day at Hartford Club—Clemens meets eleven of his old friends—They tell many stories: Rev. Dr. George H. McKnight and the Jersey funeral—Twichell's story on board the Kanawha, about Richard Croker's father—The Mary Ann story—Decoration Day and the fiery Major and Twichell's interrupted prayer [AMT 1: 409-417, 621]. Note: See last page of source for a listing of his "eleven old friends."

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Charlton came to hear Santa C. sing, & has said that she is not yet ready for public appearances, not yet ripe.

Tonight Mr. & Mrs. Rogers & Dr. Quintard dined here. But before they came I had been called up by John D. Rockefeller hoping for a possible talk [with] Mr. Clemens before his famous Bible Class. Mr. Clemens is an honorary member of it & upon young John's invitation to attend he wrote a delightful letter to be read—or not—at that meeting. A letter on Joseph. But John D. & Mr. Clemens do not agree theologically on the Joseph subject, so Mr. Clemens said he is going to speak on lying, perhaps. At dinner tonight Mr. Clemens said that I had been sparking over the phone with young John D.

Secty the talk going on John D. Bible Classes, Lying & Joseph; the first speculator. Here has been a lot of talk with Mr. Dearborn about the Carnegie Hall talk. They can't fix upon a date for April 5 Gen. Grant can't be present & April 10th comes in Holy Week. I was afraid of that so I telephoned over to Rev. Percy Grant & he said that a talk from Mr. Clemens couldn't damage Holy Week, so it has been decided that way. When I told Mr. Clemens about the decision after lunch, he told about giving a lecture in Ceylon on Good Friday, he didn't know it was Good Friday, so he didn't know why he had such a solemn lot of people, nor why the Almighty started a great thunder storm. The lecture was in a corrugated thin iron building & the sound of the rain on the roof drowned out all sound of his voice. The days are overflowing with the joys of the dear "swindle" of life. Such a darling swindle just now.

[on a separate piece of paper:] At fifteen minutes past midnight Santa stole up to my room. She couldn't sleep, poor dear, for Charlton's verdict was one to keep her awake, so she sat in a dear curled up heap on my couch and talked over things and people until now it is past 2. I have with me the memory of her darlingness and especially as she stole down stairs into the black, black hall, with 2 little bottles of bromide powder in her dear little hand. A heavy snow has fallen. Almost the first of the year—almost—for the winter has been like a November [MTP TS 50-52].

W.T. Hall wrote on Dothan Eagle (Ala.) letterhead to Sam, enclosing a clipping from the Atlanta Evening News, "which is of interest to me, and I suppose to you." Hall was a fan who hadn't asked for an autograph in his life [MTP]. Note: the clipping is in the file see below:

MARK TWAIN FOR SENATOR.

Somebody, or rather some one, has suggested Mark Twain run for senator from New York, to succeed DePew or Platt, provided one of them can be prized off the roost.

It wouldn't do.

New York has tried one funny man in the senate and—now look at him!

Mark Twain was shaving when a Herald reporter asked him about the suggestion. Here is what the great humorist said:

"If such an offer as that were made to me it would be the most gigantic compliment I ever received. I would not consider myself, however, a worthy successor to Dr. Depew or Mr. Platt, as I am in no way qualified for the post. A senator needs to know the political history of the country, past and present, as well as its commercial, industrial and financial affairs. Of these things I am blissfully ignorant.

"Even if I were qualified, the duties of a senator would be distasteful to me. My own particular work is the greatest source of pleasure I have, and for that reason I do not consider it as work at all. I regard myself as the most lazy human being on earth. I have absolutely no industry in me whatever, and to 'make good' as a senator one must be in love with the job and be industrious. If a man is to succeed in any occupation the work to him must be a labor of love. It has always been so with me and my work, and I think I can justly say, without vanity, that my career has been, to a fair degree, a success.

"For five days every week I am busy writing or dictating, and I'm in a modified paradise the while. Saturdays and Sundays I take off, and during these two holidays, as I call them, I'm in a modified hades."

We are glad Mark Twain refuses to take to politics, but he is mistaken in regard to his disqualifying attributes. He would not have to know anything in order to serve in the senate, and as for being the laziest man on earth, we fail to see how that would interfere with his efficiency in politics. We want Mark Twain to stay where he is—in bed, dictating when he feels like it and getting up when he gets good and ready. The old man is very precious and we mustn't waste him.

Frederick D. Grant wrote from Governor's Island, NY to Sam regretting he would be unable to attend Sam's Apr. 5 lecture at Carnegie Hall for the benefit of the Fulton Monument Assoc. He suggested that Apr. 10 would be the night for entertainment on the Island and he hoped Sam would attend [MTP].

Calvin H. Higbie wrote from Greenville, Calif. to Sam advising him that "two or three parties" had been after him to write his recollections of early Nevada with Twain. He'd "been jotting down incidents that came to mind for several years" and could not recall the date Sam came to Aurora and the first trip Sam made over the Sierra's to Calif. Being sick the past few years, his "finances are getting pretty low," which is the main reason he wanted to write something [MTP]. Note: Higbie enclosed a letter from George Miner, Sunday Editor of the NY Herald, asking for Higbie's account.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr. wrote to Sam that he would call on him on Thursday at eight, and anticipated "real interest" for Sam to talk to his Young Men's Bible Class [MTP].

John F. Tremain, secretary for the Chemung County Society, wrote asking if, since Sam was unable to attend their Mar. 29 dinner, could he send "some little message of cheer and encouragement—wishing the society success, which we may read at the dinner"? [MTP]. Note: Lyon answered ca. Mar 17: "Mr. Clemens doesn't get time to write anything. Very sorry but have to make this reply in all cases" [MTP].

March 15 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam replied to the Mar. 13 from Reginald Kauffman: "I think it is a very entertaining letter & I thank you for sending me a copy of it—" [MTP].

March 16 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam began a siege with a bad cold which would keep him in bed until Mar. 23. He wrote to Gertrude Natkin:

To whom these presents shall come—greetings & salutation.
And thereto—this:
It's postponed to April 10th, you little rascal.
Unknown Friend" [MTAq 20].

Gertrude Natkin wrote a short reply:

To whom these presents shall come, greeting: Kindly notify my unknown friend that your little known friend will take due notice of the postponement and try to remain in utter darkness until then. / Your Little Known Friend [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day: Schoolmates of sixty years ago—Mary Miller, one of Clemens' first sweethearts—Artemesia Briggs, another—Mary Lacy, another—Jimmy McDaniel, to whom Sam told his first humorous story—Joshua Richmond, Sunday-school teacher, afterwards owner of Tom Sawyer's cave, which is now being ground into cement—Philander A. Hickman, the showy young captain—Reul Gridley and the sack of flour incident—The Levin Jew boys called Twenty-two—George H. Butler, nephew of Ben Butler—The incident of getting into bed with Will Bowen to catch the measles, and the successful and nearly fatal case which resulted [AMT 1: 417-421].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Late this afternoon Mr. Clemens complained of cold. Oh, he is so thoughtless about uncovering himself when he is warm, and then discovering that he is chilled, but if he has cold it is largely because the germ is here in the house. Jean has it. C.C. has had it & I have had foolish intermittent attempts at sore throat. This afternoon C.C. & I went up to have Isidore Luckstone hear her sing. We picked up Charlton on the way up & when C.C. had sung the arias from Semiramedi & Henchel's morning hymn, Mr. Luckstone gave his verdict & it was that C.C.'s breath is not as it should be. Luckstone is strong & breezy & Norsemanlike & competent & his explanations were illuminating & inspiring. Dr. Halsey came down to see Mr. Clemens late this evening, & after that C.C. & I went over to the Gilders'. There were not many people there, only 5 women & 7 or 8 men. Mme. Janvier played 2 of Dubois' compositions most charmingly, & she read some of the Provencal poetry, she being a woman of the Midi. On our return Mr. Clemens called me in to give him an account of the evening [MTP TS 52].

March 16 ca. – Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to A.A. Bustard's Mar. 14 inquiry as to where he might buy 1601: "It was privately printed—never published at all—and so far as he knows no copy of it is now in existence" [MTP]. Note: of course copies did survive and were reprinted after his death.

Lyon also replied to the Mar. 14 requests from Ada Patterson. See entry.

Sam also replied to the Mar. 14 from Charles Hopkins Clark about the cost of the Mar. 1 Hartford luncheon: "We've gotten through this time very nicely & without any bloodshed—" [MTP]. Note by Lyon: "Mr. Clemens sent check $15⁰⁰"

March 17 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to an unidentified person:

"Mr. Clemens not very well wishes me to thank you very much for your letter which greatly interested him— & that far from objecting to his translating the article into French it is a compliment which I accept with pleasure & hold at a high value—" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

This morning C.C. went off to Atlantic City again, & the day was a rushing, busy one. Mr. Clemens is not any better, but on the other hand he doesn't seem to be worse. Mr. Dearborn came in to talk up the Carnegie lecture & the price for the tickets, and Jean came in late for tea from her Italian lesson, her hair much blown & with the news that she had bought 5 dozen handkerchiefs at a kind of a sale at McCreery's. The day was dreary because Mr. Clemens didn't leave his bed at all & the moments are very anxious ones when he is not well. Cold in the head set in, he sent for Dr. Helmer who nursed him & relieved him [MTP TS 52-53]. Note: Dr. George J Helmer, Osteopath.

Gertrude Natkin wrote a reply to Sam's Mar. 13 and Mar 16 notes: "Kindly notify my unknown friend that your little known friend will take due notice of the postponement and try to remain in utter darkness until then / Your Little Known Friend" [MTAq 21]. Note: source gives a telephone call this evening from Miss Lyon to Gertrude with the news that Sam was in bed with a cold.

Mary E. Joyce wrote to Sam. "Thank you very much for the beautiful buttons. I appreciate the trouble you have taken and I am sure the boys will be delighted" [MTP]. Note: Sam helped in securing the buttons for the club of fifteen handicapped boys, as requested by Mary Joyce on Feb. 12.

Jervis Langdon II wrote to Sam.

Dear Uncle Sam: —

I have two messages for you this morning. The first is that Lee and I have a small daughter, not yet two days old, who is a lusty and good natured addition to your list of fond relatives up here in the country.

Secondly; we have noted with interest the accounts in the papers of your several outings in motor cars, and this week we see on the cover of an Automobile magazine a picture of you, regally settled in the tonneau of one. My message is that if you have become fond of motoring you must come up here sometime after fine, warm weather arrives and take some trips with me. We have a fairly good automobile of the best of habits....[MTP].

Duffield Osborne, acting secretary of the American Copyright League wrote from 33 East 17th St., N.Y. to Sam: "We are about to send out the inclosed circular letter signed by the members of the Council. Kindly authorize me to use your signature in that connection" [MTP]. Note: Sam answered ca. Mar. 19: "Yes certainly—use it."

Clara Clemens canceled a reservation on the SS Minnetonka for Europe, which would sail on June 9, and went again to Atlantic City to continue recuperating from her throat ailment [Hill 122].

March 17 ca. – Isabel Lyon replied to John F. Tremain's Mar. 15 request. See entry.

March 18 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Gertrude Natkin, who, upon learning from Isabel Lyon that Sam was in bed with a cold, had sent flowers.

Aren't you dear! Aren't you the dearest child there is? To think to send me those lovely flowers, you sweet little Marjorie. Marjorie! don't get any older—I can't have it. Stay always just as you are—youth is the golden time.

Miss Lyon came up & arranged the flowers for me, & they certainly do look like you. Consequently they are very acceptable company. I was writing a short article on the Carnegie Spelling-Reform, to put in the time, but I have finished it now.

Miss Lyon brought me your messages from the telephone, & I was very glad to have them, Marjorie dear. To-morrow, or next day I can leave this bed, then I can talk to you myself. No, to your shadow—for that is all a telephone can furnish of you. It makes you vague & unreal; & the voice is somebody else's & unfamiliar. / Good-night (blot) & sleep well, you dear little rascal! [MTAq 21].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

A busy but flighty morning. I have no time for reading in all these flying months. Perhaps I'm discouraged from attempting anything more felicitous by the great horror left by "The House of Mirth". It isn't possible for me to read it. I've made 3 attempts, only to dash it aside full of pain over its dreadfulness.

Today Mr. Elliott drifted in for tea & then Dr. Hunt came full of Vienna recollections which he & Jean exchanged & when Langdon Warner came in & stayed for dinner at Jean's invitation, to meet Barry Faulkner who was coming.

Tonight Mr. Clemens began to have sore throat, and at midnight Dr. Green came in to give him a treatment. It relieved him & our minds too when he said he felt better [MTP TS 53]. Note: House of Mirth by Edith Wharton (1905). See Gribben 758. A large "X" was drawn through the last two paragraphs.

March 19 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to W.T. Hall.

I thank you very much for the clipping from the Atlantic [sic Atlanta] Evening News.

I have waited these many years for you to hear me lecture, but now it is too late: I am taking my farewell of the platform three weeks hence. The hostiles say "But you are forgetting the gallows—" a joke which I am too proud & arrogant to notice [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean, 8:20 10:30

Mr. Paine spoke to me about a piece of land 75 acres with an old farm house on it in Redding, Ct. where he recently bought a place—$2,000.00 is the price—and when I told Mr. Clemens about it, he closed in with the idea as a good investment, and Mr. Paine has sent off the first $100.00 to bind the bargain. I didn't think he would want it because I couldn't think he would want anything that I want—with an aching heart. I reached out for that farm for I don't ever want to go back to Farmington again. I want & want & want to sell Choisy & so be able to settle where there is more room—you can see for 20 miles. Life is such a tiny bubble that why we reach out for material things I don't know; but we do it and that old beamed farmhouse on top of the hill held out its arms to me.

It is dreary & gloomy with Mr. Clemens in his bed because he must be there.

Mr. Paine has taken some more wonderful photographs of him.

Dr. Halsey came down to see Mr. Clemens & has ordered cold water compresses for his throat & Mr. Clemens finds him a beautiful creature to look at! [MTP TS 53-54; also in part, Hill 126]. Note: the Redding land would be Sam's last home, "Stormfield."

W.W. Hallock wrote from NY to offer Sam a speaking engagement to the Sphinx Club, "an organization of newspaper and magazine publishers, printers, advertisers, Agents, Newspaper Representatives, and those in kindred lines" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter "Farewell to Stage"

March 19 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Isabel Lyon replied for Sam to Thomas P. Brown's Mar. 13 offer: "should only lose it—& so does not care" [MTP].

Sam answered Duffield Osborne's request of Mar. 17. See entry. "Yes certainly—use it" [MTP].

March 20 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka of Harper & Brothers about the illustrations for Eve's Diary (1906).

We all think Mr. Ralph's pictures delightful—full of grace, charm, variety of invention, humor, pathos, poetry—they are prodigal in merits. It's a bonny Eve, a sweet & innocent & winning little lassie, & she is as natural & at home in the tale as if she had just climbed out of it. Now do you think draperies are indispensable to picture women? / Truly yours / S.L. C.

[OVER]

Isn't she cunning where she has been chasing Adam, & is looking after him in his flight? Do you note how dear & sweet & clean minded she is, & how charged with childlike wonder and interest? Clothes would vulgarize her—even a duchess's [MTP]. Note: Sam won the argument; the illustrator for Eve's Diary was Lester Ralph (1877-1927).

This was the day Mr. and Mrs. Frank Doubleday were invited for luncheon to hear Sam read his "Gospel of Self." See Mar. 14 note to Lyon [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Frank Fuller that he was "not at all well" [MTP: City Book Auction catalogs, May 12, 1945, Item 77]. Note: This is a reply to a not extant letter from Fuller.

Sam also wrote to John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

I am very sorry that, after all, I cannot meet the honorary membership Thursday Evening. I am not sick—I have merely been sick, & the doctor requires me to keep to my room three or four days longer. In answer to my protest, he says, "Risks which a younger person might venture are forbidden the Methuselah of American Literature." Do you suppose that that clumsy remark is meant as a compliment? If so, I shall find it where a doctor's compliments are always to be found—in the bill. There should be a law against this kind of graft [MTP]. Note: see Sam's Mar. 14 to Edward M. Foote about attending Rockefeller's Bible class.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens began dictating again today, yesterday he couldn't.

I have just called up young John D.'s secretary to say that Mr. Clemens will not be able to be present at that famous Bible class meeting on Thursday evening.

About tea time 20 or more of the Lester Ralph illustrations for Eve's Diary arrived from Harper's. I carried them up to Mr. Clemens who found them beautiful, full of invention & poetry & purity & humor, and it was boundless delight to see Mr. Clemens examine & approve of each one. I often think that if the value of his approval is great, then the value of his disapproval is greater; with his loveliness & depth of character he can see & overlook many weaknesses, but where he really condemns, you won't ever find any condemnation juster. He has temporary prejudices, thousands of them, but you learn the difference between those & the things he really condemns.

Today Mr. & Mrs. F.N. Doubleday were coming for luncheon & afterward Mr. Clemens was to read some of the Gospel, but he wasn't well enough to do it, & so the engagement had to be cancelled. A pity too, he said, "When there's nobody but myself issuing complete sets of microbes, we'll invite the Doubledays again." Jean has had a wretched cold for many days, & others of us are slightly infected, too [MTP TS 54-55].

Edward A. Cady wrote from San Francisco to ask who the original Tom Sawyer was. A man by that name lived there, a fireman on the Panama route for years who claimed to have met Clemens in Virginia City. Cady also asked if Sam recalled “poor old Ted McGinty of early days of the Comstock—he introduced you to me at Colfax Station in 1866” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote “No ans.” on the note. Neither man was identified.

Elisabeth Cutting wrote from Brooklyn, NY to Sam: “May I venture to recall myself to you as one of the many who paid their tribute to you on the evening of Colonel Harvey’s dinner?” Cutting was a member of the Women’s University Club and hoped to come to a reception in Sam’s honor on Apr. 2 [MTP].

T. Gilbert Pearson, secretary of the National Assoc. of Audobon Societies, wrote from N.Y. to ask Sam to protest by letter against the legalization of “certain species of foreign game in the State of New York during the entire year,” which would be enacted by an amendment to the state game law [MTP]. Note: Sam’s response came ca. Mar. 22.

Fatout lists Clemens as offering remarks to the Bohemians at the Hofbrauhaus, N.Y.C. [MT Speaking 675]. Note: no confirmation of this appearance was found; Fatout offers no supporting evidence but George Henschel wrote his thanks on Mar. 14 that Sam would attend this function.

Clemens’ A.D. for the day: About young John D. Rockefeller’s Sunday-school talks. Mr. Clemens is asked, as honorary member, to talk to the Bible Class. His letter of refusal. He accepts invitation from Gen. Fred Grant to speak at Carnegie Hall April 10th, for benefit of Robert Fulton Monument association. His letter of acceptance [AMT 1: 421-428]. Note: see April 10 entry.

Of the selections from Twain’s A.D.’s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto’s choices, was “Mr. Rockefeller’s Bible Class,” dictated this day, about John D. Rockefeller, Jr.’s class and Bible explanations [83-91].

March 21 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Jean to Lakewood.

C.C. & I went to see Otis Skinner in The Duel & a finer bit of unconscious sarcasm of stage traditions I’ve never seen. We were stunned into silence by Fay Davis’s inability to make one good or natural thing, but that inability was the saving of the play from hopeless mediocrity, & the placing of it was among the finest productions of the winter for old fashioned acting. It was glorious & we were convulsed, where everyone else was overcome by emotion—to tears [MTP TS 55].

Clemens’ A.D. for this day: Mental telegraphy—Letter from Jock Brown—Search for Dr. John Brown’s letters a failure—Joe Twichell and his wife, Harmony, have an adventure in Scotland—Twichell’s picture of a military execution—Letter relating to foundation of the Players Club—The mismanagement which caused Clemens to be expelled from the Club—He is now an honorary member [AMT 1: 429-432].

Dr. Moses Allen Starr wrote from 5 W. 54th St., N.Y. to Sam, confiding that Dr. G.W. Kirch had retained a lawyer, Mr. Shedd, in “regard to the settlement” of his bill for services in Florence to Livy. Starr suggested a compromise as a way to avoid “annoying publicity...about Mrs. Clemens illness and death” which he felt “would be so despicable” to Sam. The claim was for $400 and Starr suggested $250 [MTP]. Note: Isabel Lyon wrote on Starr’s letter: “Answer sent at Mr. Larkin’s suggestion.” See Mar. 22 notes for Starr.

Grover Cleveland wrote from Florida to Sam.

My dear Mr Clemens:

Whatever people may say, for the purposes of fine diction, about the compensations of age and all that sort of thing, the air of sixty nine is generally a little chilly; and the warmth of friendly kindness makes one more comfortable.

Mind you I find no fault with the atmosphere; and I do not complain of the stiffness of joints that increases as I go. But after all it does set one off at an easier pace if some good friend at each of these last mile posts, shouts charity out: "Go it old man! You ain't winded a bit. You'll get there!"

So from the bottom of my heart I thank you for your generous letter of congratulation. / Faithfully
Yours / Grover Cleveland [MTP].

William A. Frisbie wrote on Minneapolis Journal letterhead to ask Sam if he would come to Minneapolis as a Journal staff member for the G.A.R. encampment the week of Aug. 13. They would publish 500 words from Sam daily as observation. Digs at the home of the Journal's publisher, Mr. Swift or digs at the Minneapolis Club were offered [MTP]. Note: Sam answered ca. Mar. 23.

Jean Clemens left to take a brief stay at "Lakewood," a sanitarium. She would return on Mar. 27, and remain with her family and under Isabel Lyon's care until fall [Hill 121].

Gertrude Natkin wrote another affectionate letter to Sam, confessing how much she loved him and that she'd nearly been caught writing to him during French class. The thought of him "confined" to his room "on this the first day of Spring" made her "down hearted" [MTAq 22-3].

John D. Rockefeller, Jr. wrote to Sam.

I am in receipt of your note, also of the telephone communication through your secretary yesterday. I sincerely regret to learn of your illness and am glad to learn from your note that you are already better. / It will be a great disappointment to all those assembled on Thursday night, as well as to myself, not to have the pleasure of seeing and hearing you [MTP].

March 22 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, Isabel V. Lyon wrote notes for Sam to answer Elisabeth Cutting. "Mar 22—Think out a date for Reception. The Spanish girl Senorita Marcial will be here about Apr. 2. Would they like to invite Sen Marcial & her chaperon Miss Sanborn to this recep." [Lyon:] "Mention this as Mr. Clemens would like to help her along in her work—in any way that comes along" [MTP].

Lyon also wrote the notes to reply to Moses Allen Starr's Mar. 21 (the answer was sent at John Larkin's suggestion by Isabel V. Lyon)

Note to Dr Starr— / [diagonally beneath name:] services to Mr^s. Clemens

Kirch is a singular kind of coward—he knows perfectly well that he can bring suit in Florence any time he pleases & get his 400 whether he wins the suit or loses.

Mr. Clemens is going to consider your suggestion & arrive at a decision about it.

Here's Mr. Clemens's case—Mr Larkin must not stop him putting the Kirch case & correspondence into a pamphlet & sending it to every English speaking person in Florence & Rome—

(note by Isabel V. Lyon: Finally Mr. C. decides to ask Mr. Larkin to come talk over the Shedd matter for there's too much for the telephone—Mr. Larkin is coming this afternoon at 5. Mar 22) [MTP]. Note: see Mar. 21; Shedd was Dr. Kirch's attorney.

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Susy's Biography—Langdon's illness and death—Susy tells of interesting men whom her father met in England and Scotland—Dr. John Brown, Charles Kingsley, Henry M. Stanley, Thomas Hardy, Henry Irving, Robert Browning, Charles Dilke, Charles Reade, William Black, Lord Houghton, Frank Buckland, Tom Hughes, Anthony Trollope, Tom Hood, Dr. MacDonald, and Harrison Ainsworth—Clemens tells of meeting

Lewis Carroll—of luncheon at Lord Houghton's—Letters from Mr. and Mrs. Clemens to Dr. Brown—Mr. Clemens' regret that he did not take Livy for a last visit to Dr. Brown [AMT 1: 432-436].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. Paine has just appeared at my door to say Mr. Clemens wants to know "where in hell that God damn Gospel is" [MTP TS 55-56]. Note: Sam's "Gospel" was "What is Man?"

F.B. Goddard wrote from NYC to Sam enclosing a photo of himself and having been "many times each week" receiving "the flattering compliment of being mistaken for your distinguished self" [MTP]. Note: the man did bear a striking resemblance to Twain.

Alex D. Martin wrote from Newark, NJ to Sam. "I am an old St. Louis printer, having worked there some six years 'when you and I were boys.' I will be 76 years old on the 27th of this month. Am a Union member, in good standing, for some 54 years; belong to the No. 6 of New York; was at 'the Home', left it, —sorry for it—and have been trying to get back for over three years." Could Sam help get him a ticket? He was also "sadly in need of some reading matter," and hoped he was not "too fresh" in asking for some [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote "No ans" on the letter.

March 22 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to T. Gilbert Pearson's Mar. 20 request. "Letters should be signed by God Almighty—& the Son & young John D., & the Virgin—Gilder & himself are ragtag & bobtail—Letters should be signed by thieves with money in their pockets, thieves respected & adored" [MTP].

March 22-26 Monday – During this period Sam replied to Maude Clement Rice in Sawnee on Delaware, Penn.: "I am glad to have a copy of that letter, & shall also be very glad to sign the photograph—" [MTP]. Note: incoming not extant; possibly a relative of old "Unreliable," Clement Rice?

March 23 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to Kate W. Barrett (incoming not extant):

If I dared I would say yes, but I must not venture it. I shall be fortunate if I do not break down under the work which I am still booked to do between now & the end of the season, & it would not be safe for me to add anything to it. The invitations come every day, but I have to say no all the time; though often, as in the present case, my sympathies are strongly stirred & it costs me a pang to do it. It is a deep pleasure to me to know that you have thought of me in connection with your noble work.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens went down for luncheon today & after a frantic, frantic morning, C.C. & I went around to look at the house at University Place & Washington Sq. Then when I came back we had music.

Mr. Dearborn has had to change the date again for the Fulton lecture. It has been shifted out of Holy Week & I'm glad. When I told Mr. Clemens about it, he said "yes, it is a good thing to change the date, for to have it in Holy Week would be like playing a Comedy in Heaven—" & when I suggested that they surely wouldn't have comedies in Heaven, he said "No, there won't be any humorists there, Heaven must be a hell of a place."

C.C. & I went over to the Gilders' this evening. There were lots of people there, among them Mr. & Mrs. Albert Vorse whom I met there a week ago & we have planned to go see some Marionettes on Monday evening [MTP TS 56]. Note: Albert Vorse (1866-1910) and Mary Heaton Vorse (1874-1966). Albert was a journalist who encouraged his wife to write; Mary published her first of 18 books, The Breaking-In of a Yachtman's Wife in 1908 and later became active in the suffrage movement. Not in Gribben.

March 23 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Mar. 21, William A. Frisbie's invitation to come to Minneapolis. "Travelling days are over—don't make any journeys now except compulsory ones—" [MTP].

March 24 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Gertrude Natkin at 138 W. 98th St., N.Y.C.

Are you listening, you little rascal? You have been thinking about me? That is quite proper—when there is nothing else on hand; but not in lesson-time, that won't do. Why, not even Marjorie Fleming was so lawless as that, altho' she was a good deal of a rule-breaker. Dr. John Browne never saw Marjorie, of course, yet she was so alive to him, & so vivid, & so dear & sweet, that he told me she was the same to him as a grandchild, & that he couldn't love a real grandchild any more than he loved this little comrade of his musings & his dreams. So spoke of her as his dream-grandchild. And you are mine. I shouldn't want a sweeter one, & there couldn't be a dearer one. For a year & more I have been calling this house a hospital, & now at last I am a patient myself—but I'm only a "temporary," not a "permanent," like the rest of the family—and I shall be up to-morrow, I suppose, & may be this evening, & will hunt for you on the telephone, & thank you for those dear messages you send me. I am cross, from being restrained of my liberty, but not with you, dear, only with the rest of the human race. No, I couldn't be cross with you, you dear little Marjorie—on the contrary I blow you a volley of blots! [MTAq 22-3]. Note: Sam had been in bed with a bad cold since Mar. 16.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

"This is the day my father died fifty nine years ago" Mr. Clemens said to me 5 minutes ago as he looked at the date on the morning newspaper, The Times. He remembers it all distinctly for he was just at the age when events stamp themselves indelibly. He drew the sparkle in his eye back into its sheath after he saw & received the copy of Simplicissimus that I brought in to him. He enjoys it. He calls it his "Darling Simplicissimus".

This is the wretched day when Mr. Clemens went down to the living room & there wasn't anyone there, for a half hour he waited for a human being & none came to stay. C.C. looked in upon him as she passed out of the house, & then a blast of cold & bedeviled loneliness swept over him & made him hate his life. C.C. was late for luncheon, & Mr. Clemens loathed the meal. He dropped his 2 hard water biscuits with a bang on the mahogany table in a cursing wave of bitterness. These are the agony days when he knows Mrs. Clemens is gone.

This evening C.C., R.G. [Rodman Gilder], Mary Lawton & I went up to Hammerstein's Variety Show to see Henri de Vries in his "Case of Arson". Only fair. But there were some wonderful Hungarian dancers there [MTP TS 56-57; also in part Gribben 644]. Note: Simplicissimus; Illustrierte Wochenschrift (Munich, 1896), a humorous German magazine.

Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam on or after Mar. 24.

My Dear Mr. Clemens

—You see, I do not wish to appear as a reckless little law breaker in your sight so I have tried to restrain myself from setting forth my love on paper during school time and I have succeeded. I am just overflowing with love for you and there is likely to be an inundation at any time, hence this violation of rules.

It was very dear of you to telephone to me that evening, but you are such a dear, I knew you would telephone if you said you would. I am so glad that Apr. 10th comes during Holiday week for then I can think of you as much as I please without breaking any rules. Oh, that I could give you a real blot right now, well I will have to make the best of it and store it up for the eventful evening. . Good Night, Sweet Dreams / Marjorie [MTP; MTAq 23].

Frances Campbell Sparhawk wrote from Newton Center, Mass. to Sam. After reading "King Leopold's Soliloquy," Sparhawk was joining the Congo Reform Assoc. Noting the contrast of outrage with the horrors of the Russo-Japanese war as against the indifference of the Congo situation, Sparhawk concluded, "Our people are full of race prejudice." She thanked him for the Soliloquy [MTP].

March 24 after – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to an unidentified person. All that survives is what he wrote on the envelope: "Her songs were delightfully humorous, & were effectively interpreted by an art all her own, & refreshingly original. The house responded with enthusiasm. —Mark Twain" [MTP].

Harper's Weekly ran an anonymous article, "Further Anecdotes of Mark Twain," p. 421. Tenney "Chiefly on MT in Hartford, with texts of some brief MT notes" [Tenney 41].

March 25 Sunday – Sam lunched with Miss Winifred Holt and had tea with the Howellses [Hill 124].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean 9, 11, 4 (Lakewood, very bad day)

Mr. Clemens hates this house. He calls it "The Valley of the Shadow".

He lunched with Miss Winifred Holt & came home at half past four to find Mr. Howells here at tea in C.C.'s room. Later Mr. Henschel came in too. It was a great delight ~~for me to sit in that company~~ & hear Mr. Clemens & Mr. Howells talk of Macaulay & Trevelyan's Life & Letters & Science—Metchnikoff's Book, Mr. Howells spoke of—and Mr. Clemens was in fine form, a better mood than the one he went away in for he was depressed and lonely & said he was going to have company in the house, a man or a woman, he didn't care which. He was beautiful to behold as he paced the drawing room & tossed his head in his lonely decision to have that company in the house. After Mr. Howells left Mr. Clemens went to bed & finally I went in to see what news from Miss Holt & her scheme for the adult blind. The meeting for which & at which Mr. Clemens is to preside will be held next Thursday evening. He is bothered by the detail of it & the protracted program [MTP TS 57-58; also, in part, Gribben 712]. Note: many of Lyon's strikeouts are inexplicable, and may have been added years later with an eye to eventual publication.

Mary E. Bell wrote to Sam.

While I am very anxious to go North, I think my visit depends on my meeting you and Mr. Howells. I guarantee to make you laugh, perhaps at me, old, poor, maybe [illegible word, "graying"?] shadows. Were I young, I had rather to go to any extremity almost, than worry people. Alas! Time will not wait for me and as I am trying to earn a few dollars...I beg you will, at any hour convenient to you, grant me a short interview? [MTP].

Florence T. Holt wrote from NYC to Sam. "The Joe Smiths, who are to be in town over Sunday, will lunch with us that day at two o'clock & we thought you might come to see them...P.S. I promise not to tell any smear stories!" [MTP].

March 26 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to John Brown, Jr. ("Jock").

Dear Mr. Jock: — / With this I am returning the typed letters which you sent. They pleasantly but pathetically bring back the scenes and associations of thirty-three years ago, when Mrs. Clemens and our small Susy and I were comrades of your father in Edinburgh daily, during six weeks, without a break.

Use the letters freely. Doctor John's letters to Mrs. Clemens and me I am not able to find. We have hunted the house over, with this result. And I am greatly surprised, for Mrs. Clemens treasured them as precious remembrancers, and she always knew where to put her hand upon them. But perhaps I ought not to be surprised, for during the ten years that we were wanderers in Europe our house in Hartford was several times occupied by renters, with the result that a great many things which we valued got lost or destroyed. In this present case I deeply deplore the loss.

I shall be glad to see the memoir you speak of, if you will send it.

I thank you very much for the photographs of the beautiful children. Marjorie Fleming ought to have had just one more gift, then she would have been perfect. She ought to have looked like this little girl of yours—I mean she ought to have had your little girl's beauty. [After signature:]

I remember 23 Rutland st exceedingly well. Those were good times.
The enclosed photograph is copyrighted in G.B & America—don't let it get into print [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Asa Don Dickinson of the Brooklyn Public Library.

Be wise as a serpent & wary as a dove! The newspaper boys want that letter—don't you let them get hold of it. They say you refuse to allow them to see it without my consent. Keep on refusing, & I'll take care of this end of the line.

Was the January meeting held? You did not tell me [MTP]. Note: Dickinson was in charge of the dept. for the blind at the Sheepshead Bay Branch. Sam is likely referring to his reply of Nov. 21, 1905 to Dickinson's Nov. 19, 1905. See Dickinson's reply to this letter on Mar. 28.

Sam also wrote to Augustus T. Gurlitz. "I am told a reporter from the Journal has been here—with authorization from you. I did not see him. I have nothing to say to reporters. He is coming again; and again he will go without seeing me" [MTP].

Sam also replied to his old mining partner, Calvin H. Higbie, in Greenville, Plumas Co. Calif. Higbie had written on Mar. 15. Higbie had a manuscript to pass by Mark Twain and wanted a few details of Sam's movements.

I went down to Aurora about midsummer of '62. I suppose it must have been toward the end of October, '62 that I went to Walker River to nurse Capt. John Nye. I crossed the Sierras into California for the first time along about the middle of '64, I should say.

Send me your manuscript. I shall be as competent as anybody to sit in judgment upon its value and arrive at a verdict. Then I will ask the New York Herald to name a price & come to my house and talk with me, in case he finds that your narrative comes up to his expectations. If he should decide that he doesn't want it—but that is further along. If you have told your story with your pen in the simple unadorned & straightforward way in which you would tell it with your tongue, I think it cannot help but have value.

I was very glad to hear from you, old comrade, & shall be also glad to be of service to you in this matter if I can [MTP].

Sam had Rodman Gilder and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Vorse to dinner [Hill 124]. Note: see Lyon's next entry.

Clemens' A.D. for the day: John D. Rockefeller's Bible Class again—Clemens comments on several newspaper clippings—Tells Howells the scheme of this autobiography—Tells the newspaper account of girl who tried to commit suicide—Newspapers in remote villages and in great cities contrasted—Remarks about Captain E.L. Marsh and Dick Higham—Calvin Higbie's letter, and Herald letter to Higbie [AMT 1: 439-446].

Isabel Lyon's journal: I dined with Barry at Cecchina's.

Tonight at dinner when Mr. & Mrs. Vorse & Rodman Gilder were here, Mr. Clemens swung off into wonderful talk of the piloting days on the Mississippi; my chronicling wit is gone.

After dinner we went up to see Francis Wilson in "the Mountain Climbers". [sic] It was a foolish enough play, but the Vorses are lovely and Rodman Gilder was handsome & we whirled up there in cabs & away from there in cabs & somehow I didn't get to bed or to sleep until 4:30 in the morning. It seemed all wrong to go off & leave Mr. Clemens alone, though I venture to say that he liked it.

Mr. Clemens & I went around to see the sunshiny house on Washington Square [MTP TS 58; also in part Gribben 388]. Note: The Mountain Climber, a three-act farce at the Criterion Theatre by Curt Kraatz and M. Neal. See insert.

John Hellier wrote with “deep grief” from Manchester, England to Sam asking for his help with his wife, who was troubled with “mental delusions.” He had been told that if he could take his wife to various places she might be cured. He worked for the Inland Revenue Department and was unable to do this. Could Sam confer with the 5th Avenue doctors concerning his case? [MTP].

E.E. Olcott, president and general manager of the Hudson River Day Line of steamers, wrote to Sam, grateful for his past help on the start of their Hudson Memorial Assoc. Heller requested Sam’s “cooperation” at another event on Mar. 31 in Newburgh—the launching of a new steamer of the Hudson River Day Line [MTP]. Note: written on the letter ca. Mar. 28: “Two engagements for that day & evening.”

March 27 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Jean arrived suddenly this morning & quite white, & all day reporters have been flitting in & out trying to get Mr. Clemens to say something because Huck Finn & Tom Sawyer are reported as under ban in a Brooklyn library. Mr. Clemens hasn’t anything to say, he never does have, except from the depths of that glory of a bed & for private ears. Those reporters wanted to get hold of the letter he wrote to Mr. Asa Don Dickinson, “a most characteristic & most damndest letter” — but it would be a damaging letter if they could get hold of it. Gerald Thayer came in at tea time & he & Mr. Paine closed in on a friendship—quickly as that [MTP TS 59]. Note: Sam replied to Dickinson on Nov. 21, 1905 and Mar. 26, 1906.

Clemens’ A.D. for the day: Calvin Higbie’s spelling—Clemens scheme for getting Higbie a job at the Pioneer—in 1863 Clemens goes to Virginia City to be sole reporter on Territorial Enterprise—Clemens tries his scheme for finding employment for the unemployed on a young St. Louis reporter with great success—Also worked the scheme for his nephew, Samuel E. Moffett [AMT 1: 446-451].

Sam met Charlotte Teller Johnson (b. 1876), when she knocked on his door and asked Isabel Lyon to speak with him. Teller was active in the movement to support the Russian revolutionaries, and lived a few doors down from Clemens at 3 Fifth Ave.

Robert Hirst of the MTP in a Nov. 2000 Mark Twain Forum post quoted from Teller’s (1925) privately printed S.L.C. to C.T. of how she met Mark Twain:

It was during the Russian Revolution of 1905 [viz] that word came to a group of us who were living at 3 Fifth Ave, all of us writers, that Tschaikowsky was coming with Gorki to raise money in the U.S. When he arrived I saw him, and found him much depressed because he did not know how to reach Mark Twain, whom he wanted as chairman for a big mass meeting. Although I did not know Mark Twain myself, I offered to see what could be done. I went to 21 Fifth Ave. and asked for Mr. Clemens’s secretary. She said to bring Tschaikowsky back at 2 o’clock in the afternoon. I did, and introduced the two men, both of them white haired and most distinguished in appearance. As I started to leave, Mark Twain asked me my name and when he found that I had written a “Joan d’Arc” play which was considered the previous year by Maude Adams, he asked me to come back the next morning [Mar. 28] and read him the play. I did, and when I finished he was much moved From that day I saw him almost every day for nearly three months [Note: the next day, Mar. 28, Isabel Lyon made a journal recording, touching on this day and Charlotte Teller’s return with Tschaykoffski.]

Note: Charlotte had married a Washington engineer, Frank Minitree Johnson in 1902, but at this time was either separated or divorced. After 1915 she was Mrs. Hirsch. At this time she wrote under the name Charlotte Teller and lived with her grandmother. After 1900 several of her short stories and articles were published in newspapers and journals, including Everybody's Magazine, Harper's Weekly, and Metropolitan Magazine. Gribben identifies the 30 year old Teller and the reading of her MS of The Cage, a play about the Haymarket Riot, which Appleton published in 1907; Sam would also read her play MS of Mirabeau in Dublin, N.H. on June 15. Gribben writes of the gossip regarding their relationship which led to a permanent split (see Oct. 21, 1906) [690].

Trombley speculates: "Undoubtedly, what drew Twain to Charlotte Teller Johnson was the combination of her youth and her talent. She probably reminded him a great deal of his lost daughter Susy, an aspiring writer" [MT Other Woman 104].

Hill, who likely did not have access to the Teller document Hirst quotes from (above), puts Sam's meeting of Charlotte Teller Johnson to "early in 1906 at a meeting to support Russian revolutionaries" [156]. Hill likely confused the gathering on Apr. 11 as their first meeting. This is somewhat confusing because Hill quotes frequently from IVL's journal, and clearly he missed the Mar. 28, 1906 entry where she put Johnson's first meeting to the previous day, Mar. 27. Lystra continues the error citing Hill, but adds the claim that Isabel Lyon mounted a "defensive operation against an attractive young woman, Charlotte Teller Johnson...she had caught Twain's eye at a meeting they both attended early in 1906 in support of Russian revolutionaries" [100]. Lystra also cites Isabel Lyon's journal of Mar. 28, Apr. 6, 11, June 15, 1906. See also Oct. 21, 1906.

Note: when biographers cite secondary sources, which sometimes cite other secondary sources—the initial study done without access or with improper interpretation of primary sources—or, when errors are contained in primary sources, such as newspaper accounts or reminiscences—accuracy is sacrificed. This study does not pretend to be wholly accurate, but in comparing various sources it becomes evident that at times scholars have been misled.

NEVER TOO ILL FOR A STORY.

"Mark Twain's" Only Comment on Brooklyn's Edict Against His Works.

There is a letter over in Brooklyn signed by Samuel L. Clemens, a sad man living at 21 Fifth Avenue. Mr. Clemens, better known as Mark Twain, has been ill for a week with a cold which threatened him with pneumonia. Yesterday he was said to be better, but he did not feel well enough to receive interviewers and explain to them how it had happened that the Brooklyn Public Libraries, through Librarian Frank P. Hill, had put on the "restricted list" both "Huckleberry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer," and what he had said to them in the letter he wrote on the subject.

Mr. Clemens's secretary told the reporters that the humorist had thrown away Dante's "Inferno," which he had been reading, when he learned of the ban on his books in Brooklyn. Then he proceeded to tell a story he knew of an Englishman who "bettered a story." Here is the story as the secretary told it:

"There was once a wicked man who stayed late at his club. His wife had a cuckoo clock. As he entered the door he heard it sound twice, and on his own account added more 'cuckoos.' When he awoke in the morning he was happy in the belief that his wife had been deceived into thinking he had got home by 12 o'clock.

"Now this story was told by an American to an Englishman, who, lacking a sense of humor, insisted on telling the sequel. It was to the effect that the too lively gentleman learned from his spouse when he complained about not being wakened in time that she had been out on an errand. During the night she had heard the clock 'co-co' and decided that it had the hiccoughs, so she had taken it to the clockmaker."

The doctor who was summoned after this story said that his patient was doing very well, indeed. The fact that Mr. Hill had refused to give out the letter in regard to the edict against "Huckleberry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer" made it impossible for Mr. Clemens's [sic] secretary to make it public, the communication being personal.

Jean Clemens returned from what was likely a trial stay at Lakewood Sanitarium. She would remain with the family and Miss Lyon until fall [Hill 121].

George Cary Eggleston wrote from NYC to congratulate Sam on the Brooklyn Library's recent reflections, meaning perhaps a reconsideration on the banning of HF [MTP].

Edward M. Foote, chair of the entertainment committee for the Young Men's Bible Class, 11 W. 45th St., N.Y. wrote his disappointment that Sam could not attend their Class Reunion, and invited him to "choose an evening in the latter part of April...when you can with comfort meet...and talk the art of lying, or whatever else is in your mind at the time" [MTP]. Note: Sam's reply was ca. Mar. 29.

John Greenhall wrote from Leeds, England to ask Sam if it was correct that one of his daughters had converted to Christian Science [MTP]. Note: Sam replied on Apr. 6.

E.W. Halifax, secretary of the English Branch of the League for the Preservation of Swiss Scenery, wrote from London fearing a prior letter had gone astray: "Sir Maitin wished me to write & say he is disappointed we have not heard from you—If you could send us a word of encouragement it would be so valuable." Halifax enclosed a circular [MTP]. Note: Sam's reply from Isabel Lyon is catalogued as ca. Mar. 29, but this does not allow adequate time for the cross-Atlantic mail. Estimated time for reply here is ca. Apr. 6.

Helen Keller wrote to Sam, a letter that he inserted into his A.D. of Mar. 30.

It is a great disappointment to me not to be with you and the other friends who have joined their strength to uplift the blind. The meeting in New York will be the greatest occasion in the movement which has so long engaged my heart: and I regret keenly not to be present and feel the inspiration of living contact with such an assembly of wit, wisdom and philanthropy.

...You once told me you were a pessimist, Mr. Clemens; but great men are usually mistaken about themselves. You are an optimist. If you were not, you would not preside at the meeting. For it is an answer to pessimism. It proclaims that the heart and the wisdom of a great city are devoted to the good of mankind, that in this the busiest city in the world no cry of distress goes up, but receives a compassionate and generous answer. Rejoice that the cause of the blind has been heard in New York; for the day after it shall be heard round the world. Yours...[MTP].

Arthur B. Krock wrote from the Lewis Institute, Chicago to Sam responding the the Brooklyn Library tabooing Sam's books. His mother had argued that Matthew Arnold was a greater humorist than Mark Twain, but his father said that remark was an insult to "the Grandfather of American Literature" [MTP].

March 28 Wednesday – In the a.m. Charlotte Teller Johnson returned to 21 Fifth Ave. and read her play Joan d'Arc to Clemens. It was the beginning of almost daily visits between the two and much correspondence. See Mar. 27 entry.

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Orion Clemens' personality—His adventure at the house of Dr. Meredith—Orion's three o'clock a.m. call on young lady—Death of Clemens' father, just after having been made County Judge—Sam Clemens' small income after having become bankrupt through maladministration of Charles L. Webster [AMT 1: 451-455].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Off Mr. Clemens went at 7 o'clock to dine with Miss Winifred Holt & talk over things that are to be done tomorrow evening at the meeting for the blind. Barry & Gerald & Gerome [Brush] dined here, & after dinner we 6 went up to the Armory at 94th Street, forever away, & saw some pretty good, certainly interesting, riding, interesting because the men who rode were untrained & not under a fearful training discipline & you felt the naturalness of it.

A young and delightfulish Mrs. Johnson came in yesterday [Mar. 27] to ask if Mr. Clemens would care to meet Mr. Tschaykoffski, the Russian Revolutionary agitator. He came & Mr. Clemens had a good talk with him, but discouraged him a bit I fear. Mrs. Johnson herself is a clever creature, I believe, for she attracts you & she told me how for a year she has been working on a Joan of Arc play for Maude Adams [MTP TS 59-60]. Note: Charlotte was evidently still introducing herself as “Mrs. Johnson” while writing under the name of Charlotte Teller.

On this day or the next Sam wrote a letter to Nikolai V. Chaikovsky (1851-1926) (often seen spelled in various ways: Tchaikovsky, Tchaykoffsky, etc.) that ran in the N.Y. Times for Mar. 30, 1906:

Dear Mr. Tchaykoffsky: I thank you for the honor of the invitation, but I am not able to accept it, because on Thursday evening I shall be presiding at a meeting whose object is to find remunerative work for certain classes of our blind who would gladly support themselves if they had the opportunity.

My sympathies are with the Russian revolution, of course. It goes without saying. I hope it will succeed, and now that I have talked with you I take heart to believe it will. Government by falsified promises, by lies, by treacheries, and by the butcher-knife for the aggrandizement of a single family of drones and its idle and vicious kin has been borne quite long enough in Russia, I should think, and it is to be hoped that the roused nation, now rising in its strength, will presently put an end to it and set up the republic in its place. Some of us, even of the white headed, may live to see the blessed day when Czars and Grand Dukes will be as scarce there as I trust they are in heaven.

Most sincerely yours,
MARK TWAIN

Note: Chaikovsky was born in Vyatka, Russia, and formed a group advocating revolutionary socialist ideals, which became the Narodnik movement. After some divergence of opinions with the group he moved to the U.S. and set up a socialist commune in Kansas in the 1870s. The group failed and he moved to London to write and raise money. He returned to Russia in 1905 and opposed the Bolsheviks. At this time, along with Gorky and others, he was active in the US in trying to raise money for revolutionary goals. He was no relation to Pyotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky the composer.

Sam inscribed a copy of IA with an aphorism for Mrs. Catherine Haley: “Mrs. Catherine Haley. Do your duty today and repent tomorrow. Truly Yours, Mark Twain. March 28/06.” [ABE books: Peter L. Stern & Co., Boston June 19, 2009].

Asa Don Dickinson wrote for the Bay Ridge Branch, Brooklyn Public Library. Sam inserted this letter in his A.D. for Apr. 9, 1906.

Your letter of the 26th inst. rec'd this moment. As I have now been transferred to the above address, it has been a long time reaching me.

I have tried to be wary and wise and am very grateful to you for your reticence. The poor old B.P.L. has achieved some very undesirable notoriety. I thought my head was coming off when I heard from my chief on the telephone night before last. But yesterday he began to be amused, I think, at the tea pot tempest.

[She assured Clemens that his books had not been restricted from short fiction, only not placed with books in the Children's rooms.]

I am looking forward with great eagerness to seeing and hearing you tomorrow night at the Waldorf. ...

I am very sorry to have caused you so much annoyance through reporters, but be sure that I have said nothing nor will say anything to them about the contents of that letter. And please don't you tell on me! / Yours...[MTP].

Hugh Gordon Miller for the Fulton Monument Assoc. wrote to Sam, enclosing an article on Fulton which might be helpful in Sam's upcoming lecture, postponed from Apr. 10 to the 19 [MTP].

March 28 ca. – Hélène Elisabeth Picard wrote to Sam. The letter was inserted in the A.D. of Apr. 9. It included a clipping (in French) from a newspaper there. The clipping announced, dateline NY Mar. 27, that the directors of the Brooklyn Library put two of Twain's books on the restricted list for children under the age of fifteen. Picard was surprised by the article, but observed that in France such an article would make everyone go out to buy the book. She closed with: "I know your pen well. I know it has never been dipped in anything but clean, clear ink" [MTP].

Sam replied to a Mar. 26 the invitation by E.E. Olcott to take part in a Mar. 31 launching of a new steamer of the Hudson River Day Line. Sam had two other engagements for that day and evening [MTP].

March 29 Thursday – At the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, Sam told a story at a benefit for the blind. The New York Times, Mar. 30:

TWAIN AND CHOATE TALK AT MEETING FOR BLIND

Humorist Sightless Once—in a Vast German Inn.

HIT AT GHOST, BROKE MIRROR

Mr. Choate Urges Liberal Contributions, Mr. Gilder

Writes a Poem and Helen Keller a Letter.

A new poem by Richard Watson Gilder, a striking letter from Helen Keller, an appeal for funds by Joseph H. Choate, and a funny story by Mark Twain made up the programme of the meeting held in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria last night by the New York State Association for Promoting the Interests of the Blind.

[Gilder's poem omitted here]

Mr. Clemens presided over the meeting and told the story of when he was hopelessly blind for a space of about two hours.

"I have a mass of statistics here," he said to the large audience filling the boxes and seats on the ballroom floor, "but I am afraid of them because I was never able to do much with that rugged study, mathematics. I can only figure on the multiplication table up to seven times nine, which is—84. I can't even figure on the name of the society, it is so long. I would write it out for you to take with you, but I can't spell it, and Andrew Carnegie is somewhere down in Virginia. This association needs $15,000, and we may be able to collect it here. There is no graft in it or I would not be presiding.

"I know what it is to be blind. I was blind once. It occurred after an excursion from Heidelberg to a mediaeval town about twenty miles away. The Rev. Joe Twitchell of Hartford was with me. He is still living. I always like a minister with me on an excursion. He makes a fine lightning rod for such excursions as the one we made. We went up by rail, and circumstances were such as to bring us back on a raft.

"In this ancient town, which had not altered a building or put up a new one in 1,500 years, we had a room for the night which was as large as the beds were small. We had to sleep on our sides in the beds. Twitchell's bed was way down south in that room and mine was furthest north. I couldn't sleep after the light was put out, and finally decided to leave the room and go into the square and sit on the edge of a tinkling fountain.

"Off in the southwest of that room a mouse got busy, and I threw something at it. It pleased the mouse, and it kept on making a noise. I couldn't stand it with the other occasional noises in the room. The darkness of that room lay in great cakes. I got out of bed and clawed around in an endeavor to accumulate my clothes. I got most of the things in the room in a pile, save one sock. I began to hunt that sock. On hands and knees I crawled for three hours.

"I might have concluded that the sock was in the wash and saved myself some adventures, but I did not think of that. I remembered distinctly that there were six chairs and a table in that room before I went to bed, but I butted thirty-six chairs and enough tables to fill the dining room of the Waldorf.

"Finally I decided to stand up in what clothes I had on me. I saw a shadowy form and I had no intention of letting any ghost bite me without a struggle. I took one of the thirty-six chairs and smashed it. It was a mirror. Then I reflected.

"I got back on my hands and knees and traveled a few more miles of this Oklahoma of a bedroom. Finally I reached a wall, and stood up again. I felt a shelf. I was delighted. It was the first encouragement I had received. I was then certain that I had not passed the city limits.

"On the shelf was a pitcher of water. I groped for it and it fell. It fell on Joe Twitchell's face. It nearly drowned Twitchell, but it brought me the glad relief of company. When he struck a match I got back to bed.

"I have never found the sock, but the hours of darkness I experienced in the explorations in that room were not empty hours. They served their purpose. The Rev. Joe Twitchell [sic] had longer legs than I, and we both wore pedometers on that trip. As I walk in my sleep, I always wore mine to bed with me. When I got up in the morning I found that I had gained sixteen miles on Twitchell. Again, my reflecting after the mirror incident made me remember to tell the landlord that Twitchell had broken." [the rest of the article omitted.]

Either before or after the benefit at the Waldorf, Sam had dinner with Mr. George de Forest Brush, a Dublin artist, and his son Barry and Gerald Thayer at the Players Club [Hill 124].

Sam replied to an inquiry from the NY Times, with clippings enclosed concerning the recent death of Captain Alex C. Toncray (Tonkray), who claimed to be Huck Finn:

Dear Sir: / I have no recollection of ever having been acquainted with anyone by the name of Toncray. The original of Huck Finn was a boy of my own age name Tom Blankenship. He had a brother several years older than himself, and a good many sisters. He was a good-hearted boy, and there was no harm in him. He had no education. / Truly yours...[MTP: Watertown Daily Times, Feb. 22, 1919].

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Clemens as apprentice to Mr. Ament—Wilhelm II's dinner, and potato incident—The printing of Reverend Alexander Campbell's sermon—Incident of dropping watermelon on Henry Clemens' head—Orion buys Hannibal Journal which is a failure—Then he goes to Muscatine, Iowa, and marries—Clemens starts out alone to see the world—Visits, St. Louis, New York, Philadelphia, Washington—Then goes to Muscatine and works in Orion's office—Finds fifty-dollar bill—Thinks of going to explore the Amazon and collect coca—Gets Horace Bixby to train him as pilot—Starts with Orion for Nevada when Orion is made Secretary to Territory of Nevada [AMT 1: 455-462].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Santa Clara ill with sore throat.

This evening Mr. Clemens presided at the meeting for the blind held in the Waldorf ball room. He had never done any presiding before, but it was beautifully & bewitchingly done. Mrs. Gilder & Mrs. "White Violet" Vorse were in the box & a young Jewish girl, Ada Marks. Later Mr. Gilder joined us [MTP TS 60].

Capt. A.J. Forsyth wrote from 330 W. 11th St., N.Y. to ask if Sam, while working on the Mississippi, had ever heard of Thomas McAleer (or Mac Alear) who was Captain of the Steamer Valley Trader sometime during the 1840s. The matter involved an inheritance [MTP]. Note: Isabel Lyon's reply for Sam is catalogued by the MTP as ca. 31 Mar. "Mr. Clemens has never heard of that boat—was never a captain of a steam boat."

Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam to ask for a customer where the story "The Stolen White Elephant" first appeared. Was it in some periodical? [MTP]. Note: Sam's answer is catalogued by the MTP as ca. Mar. 31. See that entry.

R. Scarano wrote from 70 W. 102 St., N.Y. urging Sam to propose buying his "nice small edition of Dante, the so called 'Dantino'" [MTP]. Note: Sam's reply is catalogued as ca. 31 Mar. by the MTP. See entry.

March 29 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to Edward M. Foote's Mar. 27 invitation: "It isn't likely that I'll find a vacancy between this & my going away for the summer—on the 24th of April—but I can tell more about that later on & so I will not let the matter escape, from my mind—" [MTP].

March 30 Friday – Joe Twichell wrote from Hartford to Sam:

I am ordered on duty—as reader of a Scripture lesson only—at the service named on the enclosed card [not extant], which will be in commemoration of the close of the Civil War.

Harmony proposes to attend it with me. It will require us to be in New York from Saturday night to Monday morning. There are plenty of places where we could stay while there, but our choice of all is 21 Fifth Avenue, and there shall be our quarters if you say so [MTP]. Note: Joe also related gratitude from Patrick McAleer's people for Sam's attendance at the funeral.

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Clemens interview with Tchaykovsky, and Clemens' views regarding the Russian revolution—Clemens presides at meeting of the Association formed in interest of the adult blind—His first meeting with Helen Keller—Helen Keller's letter, which Mr. Clemens read at this meeting [AMT 1: 462-467].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

A turmoil—Mr. Clemens was tired all day. He lunched at The Players with Mr. Paine & Gerald Thayer & later Jerome [Brush] came in—Oh, it was as late as six o'clock—with the news that he cannot go on the West Indies trip with Gerald, for his heart isn't strong enough for volcanic climbing such as they're planning. Mr. Brush & Barry & Gerald were called in at about midnight to discuss it all; but earlier in the evening we—Jean & Jerome [Brush] & I—had gone over to the Gilders', & I felt illish, so illish that to talk was like hawling bogs up by the roots out of black mud [MTP TS 60].

Cartoonist on the Evansville Courier, identified only as Alexander, wrote that he was sending under separate cover cartoons of Huck Finn and Tom Sawyer that had made a "hit" in the newspaper, and he hoped Sam liked them [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Likes the cartoon very much & thanks you for sending it."

Sam's piece "For the Russian Revolution" ran in the NY Herald, Times, and Tribune [Camfield's Bibliog.].

March 31 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to George O'Connor.

To Mr. George Connors: / My daughter neglected to consult me when she entered into negotiations looking to the matter of engaging your services as coachman for the summer, and now I am obliged to say that it is absolutely necessary for me to have a man of years & experience, one who is trained to the saddle, who can take the full responsibility of two horses under the saddle in case of need. I feel that I must find some one who can meet these requirements since all of them are important [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to James B. Pond who was still coaxing Sam to lecture. Lyon wrote thanks but that Mark Twain "expects to retire permanently from the platform," sentiment given many times in the past [MTP]. Note: Pond was nothing if not persistent.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Tonight Mr. Clemens said he'd like to get up a game on copyright. Have all the authors in the U.S. sign a petition to have copyright on Mr. Clemens's books extended for life & 50 years beyond. He'd be willing to go down to Washington next January & lobby for it—for if Congress would grant the right to one author, it would be the entering wedge for all of them.

Jean & I went down to see Gerald sail in the little Fontabelle for Dominica, & later we went up to call on the Brushes at the Grand Union. Mrs. Brush was very attractive when she said that Mr. Brush preferred her babies to any others & that was why he was always painting them.

Louis Agassiz Fuertes was there too. Came in to show Mr. Brush some studies for a wild fowl calendar, & they're lovely [MTP TS 61].

J.Q. Adams wrote on Art Commission of the City of New York letterhead to Sam:

Some are born great
Some achieve greatness
Some have greatness dribbled on them by Father Time but try to rob him of the credit. However, I want very much to see you and have a chat...[MTP]. Note: Sam answered ca. 2 Apr.

Eleven year old Elizabeth Owen Knight wrote from Rockville, Md. to Sam. "I know you will be surprised to hear from a little Maryland girl that you have never seen. I wish I could know you, for I have enjoyed your books so much and I want to write and tell you how much I have enjoyed them." She thought it funny that the Brooklyn Public Library would restrict his books for younger children [MTP].

March 31 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Capt. A.J. Forsyth's Mar. 29 inquiry. "Mr. Clemens has never heard of that boat—was never a captain of a steam boat" [MTP].

Sam also replied to Harper & Brothers' Mar. 29 inquiry as to where "The Stolen White Elephant" story first appeared.

In Buffalo I began to scratch together sketches for vol of sketches—then I did this extraordinary thing—I made a contract with Bliss for that vol of sketches at a royalty of 7½% which would mean that I made that cont. after cont for Roughing It which was 7½%—By & by—the several years—Osgood wanted a book & I said he couldn't do anything with a book—(10% royalty)—nothing but a vol of sketches—Osgood won but just did sell 10000 copies in 6 mos. [MTP].

Sam also replied to R. Scarano's Mar. 29 offer to sell a set of Dante's works. Sam referred him to Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., as they possessed "almost every edition of Dante that has ever been printed" [MTP].

April – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam inscribed a copy of TS to Norman D. Bassett with an aphorism: "Few things are harder to bear than the annoyance of a good example. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / Apl./06 / Norman D. Bassett" [MTP].

Ellis Parker Butler (1869-1937) inscribed his book Pigs Is Pigs (1906) to Sam dated April 1906 in Flushing New York [Gribben 119].

Early in the month Gertrude Natkin wrote another letter to Sam, announcing she had restrained from writing him during school time, as she did "not wish to appear as a reckless law breaker" in his sight. She had Twain fever: "I am just overflowing with love for you and there is likely to be an inundation at any time...." She also thanked him for a telephone call, and was glad Apr. 10 came "during a Holiday week" [MTAq 23].

M. Rogers wrote from London, England to Sam, noting belatedly the Nelson Centenary (1805-1905). "I beg that you will accept the enclosed as literary curiosities or relics of old time journalism, and as a souvenir of Nelson's times, and if you will acknowledge receipt & kindly let your reply be an autograph... [MTP]. Note: an unused stamped env. remains in the file.

Woman's Home Companion ran an anonymous article "The Four Greatest Living Americans at Work," p. 28-9. Tenney: "Photographs of Grover Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, and Andrew Carnegie working at their desks, and MT writing in bed; notes MT's world wide reputation and praises him for the labors by which he paid off his creditors after his publishing house failed” [“A Reference Guide Fourth Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1980 p. 175].

Human Life ran “Henry H. Rogers” by Robert H. Murray, p. 1-3, 29. Tenney: “On p. 3, ‘As a Friend of Twain’s’ describes the help and advice Rogers gave MT in putting his financial affairs back together after the Webster failure; provides no new information” [“A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 190].

April ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam sent a one-sentence note of introduction for Albert Bigelow Paine, his “particular friend (also biographer)” to Annie E. Trumbull [MTP].

April 1 Sunday – Although not cited by Fatout or others, on Apr. 4, Charles F. Powlison for the YMCA wrote from NYC to thank Sam for addressing their Sunday afternoon meeting.

Cuyler Reynolds wrote from Albany, NY to Sam, relating that his late father had engaged James W. Paige and given him “his type-setting bent,” and how building such machines had made his father a failure and left them in poverty. He had heard Sam had lived in a house once used by D’Annunzio and wanted to know the address. He’d also defended Sam’s book, Extracts of Adam’s Diary to Bishop Doane [MTP]. Note: William Croswell Doane (1832-1913), First Bishop Episcopal Diocese of Albany. Gaetano Gabriele D’Annunzio (1863-1938), Italian poet, journalist, daredevil.

April 1 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to the cartoons of Huck Finn and Tom Sawyer sent Mar. 30 from the Evansville Courier by cartoonist Alexander [MTP].

An envelope survives addressed to Charlotte Teller Johnson catalogued as “1 April to 25 October 1906” [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II sent Sam a report as trustee to former stockholders of J. Langdon & Co, Inc. from Feb. 17, 1905 to Apr. 1, 1906 [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the letter for Lyon to “write Jervis and tell him he transacts that business better even than his Uncle Sam could after all his experience on the platform.”

April 2 Monday – The New York Times, Apr. 3, p. 9, “Three New Plays at Vassar Benefit,” reported that “Mark Twain was the centre Times of one admiring group in a lower stage box...” at the Hudson Theatre, N.Y.C. The plays: The Mallet’s Masterpiece; The Land of the Free; The Watteau Shepherdess. Fatout offers more detail and some speculation about this event:

That he made a speech is not on record, but he probably said something. Afterward, in an informal reception on the stage, he shook hands and autographed programs, sometimes adding a maxim, such as “Do your duty today and repent tomorrow.” To sign programs he rested them on the shoulder of Miss T.V. Dickson, one of the ushers. “A nice quiet little desk,” he said, that he wished he could keep. He also kissed a good many of the ladies, especially the young ones. He had such a good time with the Vassar girls that he did not make it to the Museum of Natural History, where the governor general of Canada and other very important persons were anxiously waiting for him to take part in some unknown function [MT Speaking 675]. Note: Fatout gives no source for this information.

Sam sent his autograph to Mary Scott Allen [MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. for the day: Government of new Territory of Nevada—Governor Nye & the practical jokers—Clemens begins journalistic life on Virginia City Enterprise—reports legislative sessions—He and Orion prosper—Orion builds $12,000 house—Gov. Nye turns Territory of Nevada into a state [MTP Autodict1].

The Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. wrote to Sam enclosing seats for the opening night (Apr. 9) of the billiard tourney (Apr. 9 to 21) at Madison Square Garden. "Should you find it inconvenient to attend on April 9th, we shall be glad to substitute seats for any date you may select" [MTP]. Note: Isabel Lyon answered thanks for Sam ca. Apr. 4 that there were no engagements for Apr. 9. See entry.

Irving Bacheller inscribed a gift of his new book Silas Strong, Emperor of the Woods (1906): "To Mark Twain / who, I hope, for / this little book / will credit me / something on my / great debt to him. / Irving Bacheller / Riverside Conn. / April 2 1906". Sam signed the front pastedown endpaper: "S L Clemens / 1906 / Apl. / 21 Fifth avenue" [Gribben 37].

Susan Kearny Selfridge wrote to Sam. "Following my husband's recent death (Captain Selfridge, U.S.Navy) I find I must work—and am opening a very charming Tea House this season at Magnolia, Mass.—that most lovely of American spas." Would Sam agree to speak there as a Saturday Matinee speaker? She was the daughter of Gen. Phil Kearny, Civil War hero [MTP]. Note: Sam's reply is given ca. 4 April by the MTP.

E.L. Hathaway wrote from Granger, Wash.: "You do not know me and never will, but I feel quite acquainted with you, through your writings." He asked for a list of all of Mark Twain's books; didn't need an autograph, "a printed or typewritten list" would do [MTP]. Note: Sam answered ca. Apr. 8: "will find the list in the Cyclopaedias."

April 2 ca. – Sam replied to J.Q. Adams' Mar. 31 request for a chat. See entry. "Come—am usually at home afternoons. / SLC / Tel. 3907 Gramercy" [MTP].

Sam also gave Isabel Lyon instructions for answering Jervis Langdon II's ca. Apr. 1 letter: "Write Jervis & tell him he warrants that business better even than his uncle Sam could after all his experience on the platform" [MTP].

April 3 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Gertrude Natkin at 138 W. 98th St., N.Y.

Mr. Clemens has asked me to send you these tickets for a box for the evening of the 19th, and to say that he would write you himself, but that these are very very busy days, & when he is not working he is too tired to do anything but rest up for the busy day that comes to-morrow.

He sends his love to you as always—and will be glad when the days come when he will not be so driven [MTP].

Sam spoke at the Women's University Club and included a story about a walking tour with Joe Twichell [J.P. Lewis Apr. 4].

Sam's A.D.: He complained about the Congo Reform Assoc.; He had discovered the "Association's conviction that our Government's pledged honor was at stake in the Congo matter was an exaggeration; that the Association was attaching meanings to certain public documents connected with the Congo which the strict sense of the documents did not confirm" [Hawkins 170]. Note: Sam also discussed the famous "Report of My Death" to a reporter [MTE 252-3].

Reflecting Mark Twain's popularity, the New York Times announced on p.2, "MARK TWAIN LETTER SOLD, at auction for the grand amount of $43—a nine-page letter to Thomas Nast for Nov. 12, 1877."

Clemens' A.D. for this day included: The Barnes incident again—Benjamin F. Barnes appointed to Postmastership of Washington—Clemens prepares speech on King Leopold of Belgium, but suppresses it after learning that our Government will do nothing in the matter—Intends to speak at Majestic Theatre on "The American Gentleman” but is defeated by length of first part of programme—Theodore Roosevelt the American gentleman—Mark Twain letter sells for $43 at Nast sale—Report cabled that Clemens was dying, in London—Reporters interview him for American papers [MTP Autodict 4].

Of the selections from Twain’s A.D.’s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto’s choices, was “The American Gentleman,” dictated this day, which accused Theodore Roosevelt of being representative of America’s bad manners. Sam also made reference to the massacre of 600 Moros in the Philippines [33-4].

April 4 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Charles J. Langdon in Elmira. “Was there a Mrs. Lee among the Quaker City’s passengers? I do not recal the name” [MTP]. Note: Mrs. S.G. Lee of Brooklyn was on the excursion [MTL 2: 387].

Clemens’ A.D. for the day: The Morris case again—Scope of this autobiography, a mirror—More about Nast sale; laurels for Mr. Clemens—Clippings in regard to Woman’s University Club reception; Clemens comments on them—Vassar benefit at Hudson theater; Clemens meets many old friends [MTP Autodict1].

J.P. Lewis wrote from Glenbrook, Conn. to Sam. Where could he find “the story about a walking tour with Mr. Twichell that you told at the Women’s University club yesterday [Apr. 3].” Lewis professed to admire Twichell and if he might get to know Mark Twain better he’d like him as well [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Lyon’s reply as “ca. 6 April.” See entry.

Charles F. Powlison for the YMCA wrote from NYC to thank Sam for addressing their Sunday afternoon meeting. He had called to thank Sam personally but he was not at home [MTP].

F.A. Solomons wrote from Washington, D.C. to Sam recalling “a most delightful interiview” he had “back in the Sixties” about Dan Slote. Solomons also thanked him for “the noble words you recently spoke out at a public dinner in New York anent the diabolical treatment of the Russians, murderous Government towards its almost helpless subjects...” If Sam ever traveled to Washington again, Solomons would count it as a “pleasure to greet you and present you to my family” [MTP]. Note: Lyon answered ca. Apr. 6 for Sam.

April 4 ca. – Isabel Lyon answered the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co.’s Apr. 2 note with tickets for the world’s championship billiard tourney, Madison Square Garden, Apr. 9 to 21. See entry. “Thanks for the tickets—glad to have them for that date as has no engagement” [MTP].

Sam also replied to Susan Kearny Selfridge’s Apr. 2 request.

Mrs. Selfridge / The announcement which I made in public a day or two ago that I have quitted the platform permanently was quite seriously made. I said I would not appear again for money nor before an audience that had paid to hear me. It is a promise which I shall keep. I am too old & tired to travel & I make no journeys, even short ones that are not compulsory. I remember those days in Paris well & pleasantly & I wish I were so situated as to be able to be useful to her in her work, but my circumstances bar me [MTP].

April 5 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Alice Pearmain (Mrs. Sumner B. Pearmain).

Dear Mrs. Pearmain: The first of May falls on Tuesday. My plan is to go to Boston on the previous Saturday, & remain until the family are settled at Dublin and ready for me. The family leave here for Dublin the first of May and will have everything ready for me by the 4th or 5th of May, no doubt. I thank you ever so much for your exceedingly kind invitation and I gladly accept it. I will keep bachelor’s hall at the Touraine [Hotel, Boston] three days, & remove to your house on the day appointed for me in your letter—May first. I am a desperately tired man & I have engagements in front of me which will find me much more tired by the time

I reach Boston. I shall be wholly glad to slump down there & have a rest. With many thanks & with love to you all & to Margaret. Sincerely yours, S.L. Clemens [Skinner Auctions Oct. 26, 2002 Sale 2167 Lot 18].

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Miss Mary Lawton the rising sun, Ellen Terry the setting sun—Ellen Terry's farewell banquet, on 50th anniversary—Mr. Clemens's cablegram—Clemens has fine new idea for a play; James Hammond Trumbull squelches it—Orion Clemens is defeated as Secretary of State—At Mr. Camp's suggestion Mr. Clemens speculates unfortunately—Orion refuses—Mr. Clemens just discovers that he still own 1000 acres of the Tennessee land—Orion comes East, gets position on Hartford Evening Post—After various business ventures he returns to Keokuk & tries raising chickens [MTP Autodict1].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The Vorses took Mr. Clemens, Jean & me up to see that wonderful creature Ruth St. Dennis [vi] in her Hindoo dances. Oh, such a marvel as she is" [MTP TS 61]. Note: Ruth St. Denis (1879-1968) was an early modern dance pioneer who would found Adelphi University's dance department in 1938. Her and her husband, Ted Shawn, were known for their Oriental productions. The ad for this day give it as a 3 p.m. matinee at the Hudson Theatre. See insert.

William Bengough wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam:

I enclose a print from the portrait sketch I made of you that rainy fall day in dripping old Kaltenlutgen away back in '98. The day I called to tell you about Santiago—and stoically kept my promise not to print our interview.

I realize the imperfection of my hasty sketch, and wish that some day I could make a "real oil painting" of it, with a sitting or two to help me out.

This appeared in the March number of M.A.P. —you probably saw it staring at you on various newsstands [MTP]. Note: Lyon answered ca. Apr. 7: "Doesn't think he could make it worse."

Norman Hapgood wrote to Sam on a University Club note sheet. "I am giving a lunch at this club next Monday at 1 to the British novelist, H.G. Wells. Can you be persuaded to come? Hoping so..." [MTP].

Calvin H. Higbie wrote to Sam: "Yours of March 26 at hand, and much pleased that you will do so much for me, but as the San Francisco Chronicle, Sunday, of March 25, has begun an [a series] article on the same subject, I am afraid that it will greatly injure my plans." He characterized the first article as "a garbled mess...nothing original...taken almost verbatim from Roughing It, and with some deliberate lies." He had consulted an attorney in S.F. to prosecute them for libel and damage [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote to go on with things as if nothing had happened and to have the MS typewritten. They wouldn't know if any damage had been done until he submitted the MS to the NY Herald or to a magazine.

Wanda M. Russian wrote from Chicago asking if she might "translate into German works of your pen specified by you and under your own conditions?" [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Sam's reply as "ca. 7 April," but five days estimated postal time is allowed here, giving ca. Apr. 10. See entry.

Albert G. Webber, attorney in Decatur, Ill. wrote philosophizing about whether a person in good health and in the luxury of wealth enjoyed Twain's humor as much as one with bad health and "buoyed up by adversity."

Is it not in your power to produce a work of humor which will portray the wrongs and abuses of the poor and the downtrodden and that will cause the rich to ponder over what good they can do with their wealth to mankind [?]. Can you alienate selfishness and cultivate a love of mankind [?]

The luster of such a concluding work from you would be an apex of imperishable honor and glory to your immortal living monument [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the back of the letter: “I wrote that very book nine years ago & after I am dead it will be published but not before that.”

April 5 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Ellen Terry, the actress:

“Age has not withered, nor custom staled, the admiration and affection I have felt for you so many many years. I lay them at your honored feet with the strength and freshness of their youth upon them undiminished. / Mark Twain” [MTP].

April 6 Friday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Mary E. Bell: “When Mr. C. came home from the theatre he wrote this sentence hoping it might be made useful among her other testimonials Re—Mrs. Bell” [MTP]. Note: evidently Bell had performed on stage.

Sam also replied to John Greenall in Leeds, England who had written Mar. 27:

How things do get mixed in this world! I wrote the extravagant chapter you speak of in '97 or '98 in Vienna at a time when Christian Science was so new to me that I had not studied it at all, & was only interested to play around in the shallows with it & get a moment's fun out of it. This is my dim recollection of the time, the circumstances & the article. Three or four years later here at home, I took up the matter again & actually studied the history of Christian Science, its claims & pretensions, & its bible; with the result that if I had had any hostility toward Christian Science itself previously, I lost that & in its place conceived a vast admiration for & detestation of Mrs. Eddy. Mrs. Eddy stole “Science & Health.” She is an ignorant twaddler. She can't write English; she can't write anything above nursery grade, she hasn't a vestige of reasoning power. But she has extraordinary courage. She has on her shoulders the best business head in Christendom—bar none. While obscure, & without money or influence, she stole Quimby's book & upon it she built her Science, organized its ancient & powerful forces compacted the whole into a religion, & hitched the religion & Christianity & herself to the Holy Family; & she has moved successfully forward from that day to this toward her chosen goal—recognition as a god, & founder of a religion which may last 3000 years & probably will. She has accomplished more in 30 years than any other founder achieved in a century.

I have said all this in detail, & it was ready for publication three years ago. My publishers have always been doubtful about the judacity of publishing the book. My interest in books perishes when I have finished writing them. My publishers may take their time, the matter has no interest for me.

I have never tried Christian Science myself, but it is not because I am prejudiced against it. I have no prejudices. I am quite willing to experiment with anything that comes along, if I have occasion & there is opportunity. I have often tried hard to persuade my family of invalids to try Christian Science, but their prejudices were too strong for me.

I have not taken back anything I have said about Christian Science; my unpublished chapters are not hostile to it, but only to Mrs. Eddy who is a great & shining & impressive fraud. /Yours Sincerely ... [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Mr. Clemens's present house unsatisfactory because of no sunshine—Mr. Clemens meets Etta in Washington Sq.—Recalls ball-room in Virginia City 44 years ago—Orion resumed; he invents wood-sawing machine; invents steam canal-boat; his funny experience in bath-tub. Bill Nye's story—Orion's autobiography—His death [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

On my knees before the fireplace in Mr. Clemens's room, I cleaned his pipe while he talked to me of Joan of Arc & Peterson pipes & Mrs. Johnson [Teller] & her Mirabeau play as he nestled enthroned in his bed, and then after hasty tea I went up to see Maude Adams—a darling with her frank lovely eyes. She wore a short, brown corduroy suit, a pale green silk necktie, and she loves Mr. Clemens. She loved his reason for wanting to see Peter Pan, “because it breaks all the rules of drama” & she was happy because he likes Peter. I went up to ask her just what she does think of Mrs. Johnson's Joan of Arc play, & she likes it. She thinks it the best Joan of Arc play written so far, but it isn't entirely actable yet—it has got to be changed a little [MTP TS 62]. Note: see also Gribben 690.

In the evening, Sam went with Miss Lyon and Jean to the Gilders, where H.G. Wells was being entertained [IVL Apr. 7].

NOTE: Ralph W. Ashcroft sent several letters to Isabel Lyon during this year concerning Koy-Lo business or Plasmon business and developments. Most of these letters are not included here; likewise for nearly all other letters between persons outside the immediate Clemens family. DHF.

Poultney Bigelow typed a letter from Colon, Panama to Sam.

Thank God this is my last week of the Isthmus—at lease on this time !
The place stinks of cess pools, swamp and political graft and , for my sake I am happy in having abundant evidence to sustain all the charges I made against the Administration on December 1st. 1905.

Today the scoundrels are here pumping brackish water from the Chagres into the water mains—brackish water taken less than two miles from the sea! Pumping it into the mains and mixing it with swamp water, and this TAFT proudly proclaims as a FINE WATER SUPPLY for COLON.

And the poor women and babies spewing it out and begging tank water from private people who have some still stored up!

This makes me an anarchist, socialist anything you please—

By the way there's a flourishing Mark TWAIN Club down here and two of them are member[s] of the "ENDS of the EARTH".

Tracy ROBINSON, remembers you indelibly from your visit here in 1867-8? was it and spins your yarns about the Quaker City—maybe it was a year or two later...

Tracy ROBINSON is the oldest and most respectable man of the place—he was here in 1860 and has been here ever since, now he is 74 years old , one of the sweetest gentlest and honestest of men.

He has published a volume of poems called "Under the Palm" or some such title.

Then there is J.S. GILBERT who quotes you by the yard, he has been here some 20 years and published a volume of verse called "Panama Patchwork"—with good stuff in it—as good as some of Kipling. Shall try and get a copy for you.

He is one of your Club and then there is W. ANDREWS—a Briton who has been here some 25 years—and spouts Tom Sawyer and Joan of Arc by the yard ! ... [MTP]. Note: Bigelow signed off by saying he hoped to reach NY toward the end of the month to retire to his farm at MALDEN on the Hudson. He was forced to turn to the Hearst Syndicate to get the truth told about Panama. Sam wrote on the bottom of the letter in black ink:

"MAXIM / It isn't your conduct that makes you respectable or the reverse, but people's opinion of it."

William Dean Howells wrote on Hotel Regent N.Y.C. letterhead to Sam. "If this finds you awake, get out of bed, no matter if it is as early as twelve o'clock, and say over the phone that you will come here to lunch on Sunday at one o'clock, to meet H.G. Wells, the man from Mars and other malign planets, and an awfully nice little Englishman" [MTHL 2: 803]. Note: Sam accepted; see Apr. 8 to Clara.

Charles J. Langdon replied to Sam that he had his "letter of inquiry in reference to a Mrs Lee, and as to whether" he remembered her as a passenger on the Quaker City. "I have a vague recollection of such a party and how she looked, but as I recall it she was not a passenger for the whole trip." He suggested Sam contact the Severances of Cleveland for confirmation. Edward Loomis had lost his mother and he and Julie were on their way to Watertown NY for the funeral [MTP].

David Warfield, actor, wrote to Sam, "delighted to know that you are to attend our play on Saturday—and should you care to come 'in back' for a few moments after the performance, I should deem it an honor. As for the seals which I offered you—it still goes—any date you may name" [MTP].

The New York Times ran an excerpt from Sam's comments in Harper's Weekly:

MARK TWAIN ON J. W. FOLEY.

Says the "Schoolboy" is a Public Pet and a Pioneer of Spelling Reform.

Mark Twain in Harper's Weekly.

A year and a quarter ago Mr. Foley began to do schoolboy poems in a fire-new and blood-curdling and criminal fashion of spelling which no self-respecting eye could endure at first. It was phonetics carried to the uttermost limit of exactness in the reproduction of sound effects. The public felt deeply outraged, and there was a smell of insurrection in the air—a quite justifiable condition of things, too, for the poems looked like the alphabet hiccupping home in disorderly squads, a most painful and irritating spectacle—but I ask you, what has become of that insurrection? No man knows. It disappeared and left no sign. For the public had done the fatal thing; it kept on reading the poems in order to curse the spelling, and of course the natural thing happened; familiarity with the spelling modified the reader's hostility to it, then reconciled him to it, and at last made him fall in love with it; and now—well, now Mr. Foley's schoolboy is a pet.

[Note. James William Foley (1874-1939), poet, was both praised (compared favorably to Eugene Field) and criticized for his "inconsistent" spelling. His Songs of School-days was published later in the year by Doubleday; he was at this time a private secretary to Governor Searles of N. Dakota.]

Gribben cites Isabel Lyon's journal that Sam discussed Miss Charlotte Teller Johnson's play on this day, probably an unperformed work she co-authored with Martha S. Bensley, "Sociological Maid. A Play in One Act" [690].

April 6 ca. – Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to E.W. Halifax's Mar. 27 request from London. Written on Halifax's letter in pencil: "Mr. Clemens wishes he could but he is talking & writing & dictating all day & has to decline a number of things every day that he ought to be strongly interested in" [MTP]. Note: MTP catalogues this reply as ca. Mar. 29, but this does not allow adequate time for the cross-Atlantic mail. Estimated time for reply here is ca. Apr. 6. or ten days.

Lyon also responded to J.P. Lewis' Apr. 4 requests: "The whole thing is in the book called a tramp abroad. Merely outlining it from memory [at the Apr. 3 talk for the Women's University Club.] This will beat both of his games—He's not invited to call & he wont get an autograph letter" [MTP].

Lyon also took instruction from Sam to thank F.A. Solomons for his Apr. 4 "pleasant note" and hoped that he might "have the pleasure of meeting him again some day in Washington" [MTP].

April 7 Saturday – Clara Clemens wrote to her father, the letter not extant but was quoted by Sam in his Apr. 10 letter to William Dean Howells and also in his reply to Clara [MTP]. See entries.

Sam was elected as the "annual guest" of Smith College's New York Alumnae at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor. The New York Times, Apr. 8, p. 7, reported:

TWAIN AND SIR PURDON LAUD SMITH GRADUATES

Humorist Elected Annual Guest of the College Club Here.

GALA DAY AT HOTEL ASTOR

Miss Peck Says She Will Climb the Highest Mountain on This Hemisphere

The New York Alumnae of Smith College, the "Smith College Club of New York," held its eleventh annual luncheon at the Hotel Astor yesterday afternoon with many interesting events. The first was the election by acclamation of Mark Twain as the annual guest of the club.

Mr. Clemens is not making speeches at the girls' clubs he visits nowadays. He tells a story and they let him off at that. Yesterday he told the always interesting one of taking a girl to the theatre, and of his tight shoes, and how he walked gallantly home with the shoes on one arm and the girl on the other. But Mark Twain can't tell a story and nothing else, so he had to tell the Smith girls just how nice he thought them.

"When I come to a gathering like this," he said, "I feel that I should like to be an aspirant for political honors; I should like to be elected the belle of New York so that I could come to these luncheons all the time."

Then it was that the girls rose en masse, created a new office, and elected Mark Twain as "Annual Guest" to fill it. And the "Annual Guest", who had talked at bouillon time that he might get off early, went away and didn't take luncheon with the girls at all.

Sir Casper Purdon Clarke spoke at the regular speech-making time at the end of the dinner, and it was then that he told the Smith girls that he would have to apologize to them because a good many years ago he had crossed the ocean on purpose to see Smith College as a sample of what might be done with an English girls' college, and had then found Wellesley so satisfactory that after visiting Vassar he had gone home without seeing Smith at all.

"I had come to study colleges architecturally and not institutionally," he said, "and I thought Wellesley, representing the ideas of a woman, could not be improved upon." The Smith girls applauded heartily.

"Mark Twain," said Sir Purdon, in closing his remarks, "is, I think, better known and better loved in England than he is here. He is one of the most lovable and best men in the world."

Miss Annie Peck, the mountain climber, told the club how pleased she was when she heard the Smith girls speaking of her as "our Miss Peck," because she had once been a teacher in the college.

Miss Peck told the club of something of her experiences, of how she first climbed the Matterhorn, acquired a reputation for mountain climbing, and felt that she must make good her reputation by going into it in earnest.

"Mount Sorento, was the first mountain I ever tried to climb and didn't succeed," she said. "I tried twice. Once my money gave out and a second time the men who were with me gave out. They wouldn't go more than half way up. Now I am going to find the highest mountain on this hemisphere and climb that, and then I am going back to get the best of Mount Sorento."

President Seelye of the college told the girls that they had just as much right to intellect as men, and that their brains were as good, but that they must remember that womanliness is as important for a woman as manliness for a man.

"College women are trying like Miss Peck," he said, "to reach the highest point, the highest altitude, but it is the highest altitude of womanhood, and not manhood. The trouble in some women's colleges is that try to imitate the men. There are some things that men do that women should not."

Dr. Seelye said Andrew Carnegie, who has offered the college $62,000 on condition that it raise a like amount, for a biological laboratory, has given the authorities the privilege to use the money for a library, which is much needed. Mr. Rockefeller has given $100,000 for an endowment fund and a like amount for an assembly hall and dormitory.

[Note. Sir Casper Purdon Clarke (1846-1911), English museum director, was the second head of NY's Metropolitan Museum. Fatout mistakenly reports this event as 1901 (p. 668). Laureus Clark Seelye (1837-1924), first president of Smith College (1873-1910)]

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Clemens lunched with the Smith College Alumnae today & had a beautiful time being "petted" until Mr. Paine arrived to take him away to see David Warfield in "The Music Master." He did enjoy it so much & thinks it's a greater play than Rip Van Winkle & he thinks that David Warfield is a greater actor than Joe Jefferson was.” He came back while we were at tea, with a beautiful wave of freshness in spite of the bigger wave of freshness which carried him up to his bed after he had given a cheery salutation, pushed his hands through his hair & seized upon the evening papers.

Last night we went over to the Gilders’. Mr. Clemens went too, for Mr. H.G. Wells was to be there and Mrs. Gilder did so hope Mr. Clemens could find it in his inclination to come. Jean was beautiful. Mr. Paine said of her today that she had the tragic beauty of a young queen doomed to the block. She had a little silver bandeau on her dark hair, which always makes her so classically beautiful. Mr. Paine was there—and I met & liked a Miss Beatrice Hanscome [MTP TS 62-63; also noted in Gribben 385]. Notes: David Warfield (1866-1951) performed in the play The Music Master, by Charles Klein at the Bijou Theatre, (see insert). Warfield played the role of Anton von Barwig, a pianist in a dime museum in N.Y.C. who rediscovered his lost daughter—his best role played from 1904-1907. At one time he was one of the wealthiest actors. Lyon recorded Sam’s opinion of the play: he thought it better than Boucicault’s adaptation of Rip Van Winkle.

Paine writes: “We went behind when it was over, and I could see that Warfield glowed with Mark Twain’s unstinted approval. Later, when I saw him at The Players, he declared that no former compliment had ever made him so happy” [MTB 1305].

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam signed a postcard to Miss Maud Morris in Baltimore, Md. [MTP].

John Larkin, attorney, wrote a short note to Sam that he’d seen Mr. Dorenms (?) and would see Sam next week when he returned from the South [MTP].

April 7 ca. – Isabel V. Lyon replied to William Bengough’s Apr. 5 note. “Doesn’t think he could make it worse” [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Apr. 5 from Albert G. Webber: “I wrote that book nine years ago & after I am dead it will be published but not before that” [MTP].

April 8 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to a not-extant letter from daughter Clara, now convalescing at the Hotel Brighton in Atlantic City, N.J.

I am so glad, you dear ashcat! so glad the auto[biography] interests you; I was so afraid it wouldn’t. I couldn’t guess as to how it might read, for I have purposely refrained from reading a line of it myself, lest I should find myself disappointed & throw up the job. I wanted it to gather age before I should look at it, so that it would read to me as it would to a stranger—then I could judge it intelligently. However, as Twichell wanted to experiment with it I took the last 3 days instalments & corrected them—and in this way I found out that I was doing well enough for an apprentice who was an unpractised learner in the art of dictating to a stenographer. Twichell’s verdict is, that the interest doesn’t flag. That’s all I want. I only want to interest the reader, he can go elsewhere for profit & instruction.

Yes, dear child, I’m a “recognized immortal genius,” & a most dissipated one, too. I lunched with Howells to-day to meet H. G. Wells; & Frank Millet was there, & Francis Wilson, & Norman Hapgood, & other charming people. Tomorrow I lunch with Norman Hapgood (to meet the Russian revolutionists, I think) & to-morrow night I dine with Mr. Rogers & go to the great billiard-championship match; & next night I dine out to meet Narodny, the Russian revolutionist, who has been in hiding here a block away from us for a month, & nobody knew it.

Pile up health, dear—pile it up! & meantime be happy. Give my love to Katy [MTP].

Notes: as mentioned above, Sam had lunch with William Dean Howells, who had invited ten men, with the guest of honor H.G. Wells (Herbert George Wells; 1866-1946), British science fiction author (IVL notes that Sam went to the Gilders' on the evening of Apr. 6 to meet Wells, so this was not their first meeting). He also invited Francis Millet, artist and journalist; Francis Wilson (1854-1935), American actor and comedian; Joe Twichell; and Norman Hapgood were among the guests (See prior entries for details on others.) Ivan Narodny (1870-1953), journalist and art promoter, was one of a half dozen names the leader of the Cronstadt uprising of the military in Oct. 1905 took; after coming to the US he worked for the Russian newspaper Russkii Golos (Russian Voice) and the New York American. He was a contributor to many art journals and started his own, The Pilgrim's Almanac. The New York Times had published an interview with Narodny on Apr. 7, characterizing him as "chief agent" of the Russian revolution. He would invite Mark Twain to meet Maxim Gorky at a dinner on Apr. 11. See also MTHL 803n1; Lyon's journal TS 155; W.D. Howells to his sister Aurelia H. Howells, Apr. 8.

Sam also wrote to Gertrude Natkin, who had just turned sixteen. Sam thought impropriety was perceived in his relationship after a young woman turned sixteen.

You are the sweetest grandchild I've got, Marjorie dear, & the best. Am I long time sending that stage-door order? Yes; & it is partly because I was born lazy, & partly because I have been very very busy gadding around & very very tired and Interrupted.

10.30 p.m. This is an hour later than usual for me to return to bed. So you are 16 to-day you dear little rascal! Oh, come, this won't do—you mustn't move along so fast; at this rate you will soon be a young lady, & next you will be getting married. I shall be sorry, then; & moreover if you don't appoint me your head bridesmaid & be exceedingly good to me I will do everything I can to break off the match.

I was going to give you this pen, & now it will do for a birth-day token. It is the best one I have ever had; I have used no other for 4 years. I asked Miss Lyon to send to Toledo for another one for me, & it will arrive before the 19th I guess.

[Sam gave instructions for where Gertrude should go at the Carnegie bldg. for his Apr. 19 lecture.]

Sixteen! Ah, what has become of my little girl? I am almost afraid to send a blot, but I venture it. Bless your heart it comes within an ace of being improper! Now back you go to 14!—then there's no impropriety. Good night, Sweet Fourteen [MTAq 24-5].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. Twichell is here—Mrs. too, & Mr. T thinks that auto-ms. is absorbingly interesting. C.C. has taken a lot of it away with her & writes enthusiastically about it too.

Mr. Clemens lunched with Mr. Howells today up at the Hotel Regent. Mr. H.G. Wells was there, & Francis Wilson & Norman Hapgood & Frank Millet & Mr. Clemens said it was delightful [MTP TS 63].

Marie E. Burns wrote on The "Little Mothers" Aid Assoc., Brooklyn letterhead to remind Sam that their Easter Festival would take place on Sat. Apr. 21 from 2 to 5 p.m. If Sam could stop for a "few minutes and give the children a world of greeting it would be greatly appreciated" [MTP].

Edward Everett Hale wrote to Sam that Hale's copyright on short story "The Man Without a Country" (1863) would expire this year. He discussed details of copyright legislation under consideration [Gribben 285: MTP]. Note: Isabel Lyon noted receipt of the letter in her journal of Apr. 10. Sam wrote a reply on the letter, also dated Apr. 10.

William Dean Howells wrote on Hotel Regent N.Y.C. letterhead to Sam, wanting "to see every word of the 578 pages before this"—a portion of Sam's A.D., which he wrote "is one of the humanest and richest pages in the history of man." Howells lone objection was including the episode where Orion got into bed with two old maids (see MTA 272-4) [MTHL 2: 803]. Sam's full autobiography (or at least the first volume) was published in Oct. 2010; two additional volumes are forthcoming in 2012 and 2014.

April 8 ca. — Sam answered E.L. Hathaway's Apr. 2 request [MTP]. See entry.

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

April 9 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

When you come by for me at 5 this afternoon won't you please bring me

1—$500-bank note;

4—100- “ “

10—10- “ “

& please ask Miss Harrison to draw this $1000 from my balance at the Guaranty Trust. / Yours ever

Miss Lyon doesn't know about this. SL. Clemens [MTHHR 604-5].

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN CONCERT HALL.

BILLIARD TOURNAMENT
18-2 World's Championship.
HOPPE, CURE, SCHAEFER, SLOSSON,
SUTTON, MORNINGSTAR, CUTLER.
 Monday, 8 P. M.—Cure vs. Morningstar.
 Tuesday, 2:30 P. M.—Sutton vs. Cutler.
 Tuesday, 8 P. M.—Slosson vs. Loser of Monday night. SEATS—$2, $1.50, $1, 50c.

In the evening Sam and H.H. Rogers attended a billiard tournament for the “18-2 World's Championship” at Madison Square Garden [ca. Apr. 4 to Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co.]. Note: this was not the first billiards match the pair had taken in. Isabel Lyon's Journal for Apr. 10:

[Sam and Rogers were conspicuous:] were about the only men in evening clothes, and because of our old white heads....there was a great wave of applause [as they were about to leave], and Mr. Clemens turned instinctively to see the shot that had been made, only to find the billiardists surprised at applause for what wasn't anything to applaud, and then Mr. Clemens knew that “he was the shot” they were celebrating [MTHHR 605n1]. Note: The NY Times sub-headlined “Mark Twain Cheered” on Apr. 9. The eventual winner on Apr. 21 was George F. Slosson, who defeated Jacob Schaefer, 500 to 396 [NY Times, Apr. 22, p15].

Sam also writes an aphorism to an unidentified person: “We ought never to do wrong when any one is looking / Mark Twain” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon replied for Sam to Hélène Elisabeth Picard's Mar. 28. “Mr. Clemens keeps utterly away from anything that wrings his heart. He has too many speeches to make, too many people to see in these days & he must remain cheerful—In these rushing days must deny himself the pleasure of writing letters. He dictates several thousand words a day etc” [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Letter from French girl enclosing cable about “Huck Finn”—The Juggernaut Club – Letter from Librarian of Brooklyn Public Library in regard to “Huckleberry Finn” and “Tom Sawyer.” Clemens' reply —Thedelugetoreporters trying to discover the contents of that letter [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

“Today came a note from Mr. Howells who returned with it a batch of auto-ms. which Mr. Clemens took up there yesterday. He wants to read all the 578 pages that went before the batch he had—and he thinks it is wonderful. Says that Mr. Clemens is ‘nakeder than Adam & Eve put together’ in his absolutely sincerity” [MTP TS 63].

B.M. Byrne wrote on Jackson City Bank, Jackson Mich. letterhead to Sam. “I am addressing you for the Outlook Circle of The Kings Daughters, to learn if it would be possible for them to secure you for a lecture here this Spring” [MTP].

Fred E. Farnsworth for the Bankers' Club of Detroit wrote to Sam asking if he could deliver an address sometime in the last week of April or the second week in May [MTP].

Benjamin W. Gilchrist for Geo. A. Hasley Council, Newark, NJ wrote to Sam asking for a lecture during May [MTP].

April 10 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a reply on Edward Everett Hale's Apr 8. "I had already dismissed the copyright matter from my mind, recognizing that it was too late to accomplish anything with it this year. Therefore I squash my answer to your letter into a simple sentence, to wit—I haven't any wish to follow up the copyright matter this year" [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Apr. 8 praise of his A.D. from William Dean Howells:

It is lovely of you to praise it so, & to want to read the rest of it. I'll see to it that you do read the rest of it, before you get out of the notion. Clara will arrive this evening & fetch it. She took 500 pages with her—to pretend to read, as I supposed, & thus please me—but she has actually been reading them; & moreover she says in plain terms:

"I spent the morning reading in your biography even forgetting my fresh air duties the time passed so smoothly, so rapidly"—& more of the same sort. This from one's own flesh! It is next to incredible.

Let us institute a gang next fall, made up of nice publishers & nice literary folk, whose function it shall be to entertain at luncheon the visiting literary stranger, the expense to be distributed among the gang. He must be entertained, & why should the cost fall upon an individual?—as in the H.G. Wells case. There's you; & me & Augustus Thomas; & the Colonel; & Sam McClure; and Doubleday; & Gen. Haven Putnam; & Ed Burlingame; & Gilder; & Mr. Shaw; & Mr. Dogley & Robert Collier; & Norman Hapgood; & Francis Wilson; & David Munro; & Lanier; and—and—well, there's others. Plenty of nice boys. None eligible but literatics, publishers, & maybe a one or two nice actors & managers. Yours ever [MTHL 2: 804].

Notes: those not prior identified: Edward Burlingame, editor of Scribner's; Albert Shaw, ed. of American Review of Reviews; Henry W. Lanier secretary of Doubleday, Page & Co.

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Child's letter about "Huckleberry Finn" being flung out of Concord Library—Ambassador White's autobiography—Clemen's version of the Fiske-Cornell episode—Another example of his great scheme for find employment for the unemployed—This client wins the Fiske lawsuit [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean, 10:10 from 6 a.m. (very good & obedient) 12:05, very bad; 5:05

The morning mail batch wasn't heavy, but it had a nice letter from E.E. Hale on the copyright question in which he said that nothing can be done in the matter this year, but if Mr. Clemens & Mr. Howells have any personal reason for pushing it, he is willing to do his part. His copyright on "A Man Without A Country" expires this year & it is "pretty devilish" SLC. There is no reason now, why Mr. Clemens should want to push the matter & he dictated a reply to Dr. Hale.

Last evening Mr. Clemens left at 5 with Mr. Rogers & after dinner at the Rogers's they went to see a champion billiard match at the Madison Square Garden. This morning Mr. Clemens said he and Mr. Rogers were very conspicuous for 2 reasons. Because they were about the only men in evening clothes & because of our old white heads. The men assembled there were a serious & a knowing lot; men ranging in age from 35 to 50; most discriminating company, & there were miracles wrought there, Mr. Clemens said. He told me how the game went—all on the side of the Frenchman Curé, who was laying against the young American, Morningside. 100 points ahead he was when Mr. Clemens and Mr. Rogers started to leave at 10 o'clock. As they made their way along to the exit there was a great wave of applause, & Mr. Clemens turned instinctively to see the shot that had been made, only to find the billiardists surprised at applause for what wasn't anything to applaud, & then Mr. Clemens knew that he "was the shot" they were celebrating [MTP TS 63-64].

Also in her journal for Apr. 11: "Last night [Apr. 10] Mr. Clemens dined with Mrs. Johnson and her revolutionary tribe—Narodny and others. No—Narodny wasn't there either—but he's to be there tonight, and Gorky too. A buck dinner" [MTP].

John Brown, Jr. (“Jock”) wrote from Edinburgh, Scotland to Sam. “Thanks for your kind note returning the types of your and Mrs. Clemens’ letters and thank you for letting me use them. ... I have sent you the Memoir by Dr. J.T. Brown.” He also thanked Sam for his photograph [MTP].

Harry C. Eva for Harlem Rescue Mission wrote to invite Sam to be “one of the speakers” at the sixth anniversary of the Mission on Apr. 19th at 8 p.m. [MTP].

Ivan Narodny wrote from 3 Fifth Ave., NYC to invite Sam to dinner Wed. Apr. 11 at 7 pm to meet Maxim Gorky [MTP].

Guion P. Wilson for Journalists’ Club of Baltimore wrote to Sam asking him to appear at the Lyric Theatre there to help the club climb out of debt [MTP].

April 10 ca. – Sam replied to Wanda M. Russian’s Apr. 5 inquiry about German translating:

I don’t know where these rights belong but I do know they formerly belonged to Chatto & W. pub. London & whether they have been transferred to Harper & Bros or not I don’t know. Robert Lutz of Leipzig has long had the right in Germany [MTP]. Note: this was written across Russian’s letter.

Sam also replied to Marie E. Burns (hers not extant): “In the circumstances I find I’m getting more & more worn, & there are many things for me to do before I can leave this town” [MTP].

April 11 Wednesday – Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote from the Hotel de France & Choiseul, Paris:

Dear Mark: / I’ve a bit of news which I am sure will interest you, since it is the only happy thing that has befallen this stricken family during the past three years—the engagement of Talbot to a sweet young New England girl, a Miss Eleanor Little.

We start for home on April 27—the fiancée remains on this side for a while—and I shall be glad to get back. We made a long sojourn in Egypt, and I have had all the potted mummy I want at present. We all are well and send love and remembrances to you and your little flock, God keep them! / Yours affectionately ...[MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. for the day: Frank Fuller and his enthusiastic launching of Clemens’ first New York lecture—Results not in fortune but in fame—Leads to a lecture tour under direction of James Redpath—Clipping in regard to Frank Fuller, & Clemens’ comments—Olive Logan clipping & Clemens’ comments—Clemens’ feeling toward suicides [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Santa C. arrived yesterday [Apr. 10] & last evening I took mother to see Mrs. Fisk in Leah Kleshua [sic Kleschna]. It is such a good & well acted & well staged play...After the play we went around to the Green room & saw Mrs. Fisk...She was delighted with the message which Mr. Clemens sent her about the Horse’s Tale (it is to appear in Harper’s in August) but she said its main work would be done in Mexico & not yet in Spain—for Spain isn’t ripe for it[.] She sent Mr. Clemens her dear love & other charming messages which he was waiting for on my return.

Last night Mr. Clemens dined with Mrs. Johnson and her revolutionary tribe—Narodny and others. No—Narodny wasn’t there either—but he’s to be there tonight, & Gorky too. A buck dinner.

They sat down 13—such a hellish superstition it is [MTP TS 65]. Note: Minnie Maddern Fiske played the lead role in Leah Kleschna at the Academy of Music. Born Marie Augusta Davey, she was often billed simply as Mrs. Fiske.

Charles Butler Fenton (1862-1962), former New Zealand captain, wrote from Brooklyn, NY to Sam. “May I request you to kindly place forward your proposed lecture to be delivered on 19th inst. at Carnegie Music Hall to an earlier date. / As I am a seafaring man, Master of a merchant steamship, trading to China ports, in the employ of your friend Mr Rogers, and as I purpose getting married on the 19th inst; hence the reason of my request” [MTP]. See Apr. 16 for Sam’s matchless reply.

The New York Times, p. 11, “Ellen Terry’s Jubilee” announced a movement to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Miss Ellen Terry’s stage career. Mark Twain and Joseph H. Choate were “in full sympathy” and Daniel Frohman of the Lyceum Theatre was taking subscriptions. A big benefit started by the London Tribune was also being held in London for Ellen Terry, the aim being to fund her retirement.

The New York Times, p. 6, “Riot of Enthusiasm Greets Maxim Gorky” also announced the dinner for this evening to which Ivan Narodny invited Twain to meet Maxim Gorky (Aleksey Maksimovich Peshkov) (1868-1936), Russian author and activist; the paper then reported the substance on Apr. 12, p.4:

Gorky and his wife will be guests at many receptions here. This evening he will be a guest of honor at a dinner at A Club, 3 Fifth Avenue. Mark Twain, W.D. Howells, Peter Finley Dunne, Robert F. Collier, Robert Hunter, Gaylord Wilshire, M[r]. Narodny, and M[r]. Tchaykoffsky will be among the other guests [Note: See picture insert below, which also gives among the group, Maxim Gorky, and his son Zinovii Peshkov].

McFarland writes of The A Club at 3 Fifth Ave. (where Charlotte Teller Johnson lived with her grandmother) a few doors down from Sam’s 21 Fifth Ave.:

In February 1906, a group of eighteen or twenty young writers and social workers bought a mansion at 3 Fifth Avenue, just north of Washington Square, with the intention of entering into a cooperative housing arrangement. The news caused a small stir in the newspapers. The proposed housing collective was so at odds with the individual or familial ways that New Yorkers usually lived that reporters were dispatched to investigate this novel group. When a reporter asked its president, Howard Brubaker, what the collective’s name was, Brubaker casually replied, “Oh, just call it a club.” Thereafter it became known as “A Club” both in the newspaper accounts and in the popular lore of the group itself. Although the A Club cooperative housing experiment lasted only a few years, it nevertheless brought together and helped solidify a network of individuals whose contribution to Village history far outweighed their relatively small numbers.

Newspaper reporters who interviewed A Club’s founders received somewhat contradictory descriptions of the group’s purpose and membership. The earliest version came from Helen Todd, a wealthy Chicago settlement worker who had bankrolled the purchase of the mansion. She described A Clubbers as “people who like the bohemian life and are interested in the East Side of New York,” and who took the Fifth Avenue house “because it is only a short distance from the ‘ghetto.’” The part about wanting to be close to East Side slums was true enough, but the New Yorkers in the group objected to Todd’s use of the word “bohemian” in connection with themselves. Charlotte Teller [Johnson], an editorial assistant at Everybody’s magazine and a writer of both fiction and nonfiction, emphasized that “Life [at A Club] will not be bohemian, as has been stated, for most of us are old enough not to be childish in that way....We shall lead a perfectly conventional, normal family life.” She, for one, hoped to organize women who were employed in the factories of the Washington Square district. “We are here for work,” she stated emphatically [120-21]. Note: editorial emphasis on names.

Isabel Lyon’s journal for Apr. 12: Last night [Apr. 11] Mr. Clemens dined with Narodny & Maxim Gorky and others down at #3 Fifth Avenue. It must have been a delight even if Gorky cannot speak a word of English. He sat on Mr. Clemens’s right & his adopted son acted as interpreter. Mr. Clemens said when the signal for serving dinner was given 3 Japs in white uniforms moved off for the soup & as one of them served Maxim Gorky, he reached out his hand & took the little Jap’s in friendly greeting “A better thing than the Portsmouth Peace,” for while neither could speak a word of the other’s language, their hearts did the spontaneous talking that tells [MTP TS 65-66]. See the rest of the Apr. 12 entry. Hirst notes that the language barrier “... explains, perhaps, why there are not extensive records of what the two talked about.”

GORKY AND TWAIN PLEAD FOR REVOLUTION

Committee Formed to Raise Funds for Russian Freedom.

TO ARM REVOLUTIONISTS

”I Come to You a Beggar That Russia May Be Free,” Says Gorky at A Club Dinner.

The American auxiliary movement to aid the cause of freedom in Russia was launched last night at a dinner given at the Club A House, 3 Fifth Avenue, with Mark Twain and Maxim Gorky as the principal spokesmen.

“If we can build a Russian republic to give to the persecuted people of the Czar’s domain the same measure of freedom that we enjoy, let us go ahead and do it,” said Mark Twain. “We need not discuss the method by which that purpose is to be attained. Let us hope that fighting will be postponed or averted for a while, but if it must come—” Mr. Clemens’s hiatus was significant.

“I am most emphatically in sympathy with the movement now on foot in Russia to make that country free,” he went on. “I am certain that it will be successful, as it deserves to be. Anybody whose ancestors were in this country when we were trying to free ourselves from oppression must sympathize with those who now are trying to do the same thing in Russia.

“The parallel I have just drawn only goes to show that it makes no difference whether the oppression is bitter or not; men with red, warm blood in their veins will not endure it, but will seek to cast it off. If we keep our hearts in this matter Russia will be free.”

The dinner was given by Ivan Narodny, the representative in this country of the Russian military revolutionists, in honor of Maxim Gorky. The list of guests included Dr. Nicholas Tchaykoffsk, Robert Collier, Kikolay Zavolsky Pieshkoff, the adopted son of Gorky; Nikolas Burenin, his friend and private secretary; Arthur Brisbane, David Graham Phillips, Robert Hunter, Ernest Poole, Dr. Walter Weyl, Leroy M. Scott, and Howard Bruebaker. W. D. Howells and Peter Finley Dunne had been invited but were unable to attend.

Mark Twain’s speech followed the reading by Robert Hunter of a manifesto formally inaugurating the American movement to help make Russia free. This movement will involve the appointment of a large committee of men of National reputation to aid in the collection of funds throughout the United States for the purchase of arms for the Russian revolutionists.

Mr. Clemens, Mr. Collier, Mr. Howells, Mr. Dunne, Mr. Hunter, Mr. Phillips, Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago, and others have already accepted places on the committee, and it was said by Mr. Hunter that invitations have been sent to a great number of others who are expected to join the movement.
[information about funds cut out here]

Mark Twain sat on the right of M. Narodny. Maxim Gorky sat on the right of Mr. Clemens. On the other side of the Russian writer sat his adopted son, who acted as interpreter during the animated conversation which was carried on between the American author and the writer who has depicted so vividly the tragic depths of the life of the lower classes in Russia.

Mr. Clemens, in beginning his speech, paid a warm tribute to Gorky, and this was returned by the Russian when his turn came to speak.

Gorky Praises Mark Twain.

“I am very glad to meet Mark Twain,” he said. “I knew him through his writings almost before I knew any other writer. I was little more than a boy when I began to wait and hope for the meeting which has been realized tonight. It is a happy day - a day happy beyond all expectation to me.

“Mark Twain’s fame is so well established all the world over that I could not add anything to it by any words of mine. He is a man of force. He has always impressed me as a blacksmith who stands at his anvil with the fire burning and strikes hard and hits the mark every time. He has done much to beat away the dross and bring out the true steel of character in his writings.

"I come to America expecting to find true and warm sympathizers among the American people for my suffering countrymen, who are fighting so hard and bearing so bravely their martyrdom for freedom. Now is the time for the revolution. Now is the time for the overthrow of Czardom. Now! Now! Now! But we need the sinews of war, the blood we will give ourselves. We need money, money, money. I come to you as a beggar that Russia may be free."

"What have you read in American literature?" Gorky was asked.

"I have read Mark Twain. The reading proved an inspiration to me. It is part of the liberal education of Russia to read Mark Twain's works. They have all been translated and sold in hundreds of editions [The article continued on. The New York Sun, Apr. 12 p. 2, and the New York Tribune, p4 also gave accounts.]

April 12 Thursday – In the evening Sam and William Dean Howells visited Maxim Gorky. New York newspapers followed Gorky's every move, including a p. 2 article from the Apr. 13 Times, "MAXIM GORKY VISITS THE TOMB OF GRANT," which included the following passage on Mark Twain and W.D. Howells:

Mark Twain and W. D. Howells called upon Gorky at his apartments in the Hotel Belleclaire last evening. They remained with him for about half an hour discussing literature, and invited him to attend a literary dinner about a fortnight from now. Gorky accepted the invitation.

Some waiting reporters waylaid Mr. Clemens and Mr. Howells in the hotel lobby after their call. When Mr. Clemens was asked regarding the purpose of their visit he made signals of distress to Mr. Howells, who was some distance away, and said:

"Come here, Howells. You don't look as if you had any information. You are a good man; come back here and tell them all about it, and be sure to make it a private talk so as to get it in the papers."

Mr. Howells modestly averred that the idea of the dinner had originated with Mr. Clemens.

"Yes," said Mark Twain, "we are going to offer Gorky the literary hospitality of the country. He is big enough for the honor. It is going to be a dinner with only authors and literary men present. We want to do it in proper style, and will have authors not only from New York, but from Chicago, and we may have some literary geniuses from Indiana, where I believe they breed 'em."

Sam also made his second appearance at the international billiard championship at Madison Square Garden. Willie Hoppe defeated Albert G. Cutler. The New York Times, p. 7, quoted Sam, coming as he said:

"To see the boy David get away with one of the billiard Goliaths." He was accompanied by Albert Bigelow Paine. They came in while Cutler was in the middle of his fifth turn at the table. There was a spontaneous outburst of applause, and Twain smiled and bowed his white head to all parts of the house before taking his seat. Then he began a running fire of comment upon the play, applauding good shots of both competitors without partiality.

At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Calvin H. Higbie, who had been seeking Sam's help with a manuscript. Yes, the MS should be typewritten; exposure in some Western newspapers shouldn't hurt Higbie's chances for publication: "If they don't mention it, it is not 'our affair to remind them of it'" [MTP].

In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to an unidentified person or persons.

Mr. Clemens suggests that it would be a wise arrangement if certain nice publishers & nice authors were to band together to entertain foreign literary men when the visit these shores. H. G. Wells has just been over here—is here in fact—& Mr. Howells gave a delightful luncheon for him but all the expense fell on Mr. Howells & Mr. Clemens feels that that ought not to be—especially when there are those who would gladly share it— [MTP].

Sam also wrote an aphorism on a small card for an unidentified person: "Let us save the to-morrows for work. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / April 12/06" [MTP].

Sam also inscribed the same above aphorism in a copy of HF to an unidentified person [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Today Mr. Clemens had me go with him to the barber's near at hand to have his hair trimmed. I always go with him now, & early in the week I ordered his summer clothes & shirts—such pretty shirts. This after noon after Norman Hapgood & Robert Collier left, Mr. Clemens went up to the Hotel Regent where Mr. Howells is staying & together they called on Gorky. Mr. Clemens didn't come home until after seven & then he was so tired—so tired he couldn't eat any dinner, more than 6 olives, & up to his bed he went. I slipped into the room to find him reading Tacitus & oh, so tired & so dear & so beautiful [MTP TS 66].

Joe Twichell wrote a short note to Sam. "This is to advise you that Harmony and I expect to arrive at your door at a little after 4 oclock Saturday P.M." [MTP].

Josiah Flint Willard wrote from NYC to Sam. "You have been a most distinguished 'Tramp Abroad,' and as a tramp at last at home, after a long hospital experience in Berlin, I wonder whether you would be good enough to introduce me to Gorky. My intentions upon Gospodinn Gorky are not mercenary, although I have been a tramp in Russia." [MTP].

April 12-15 Sunday – Sometime during this period Sam left a calling card at Charlotte Teller Johnson's house: "I have come to ask after your cold, & to see if you are up & about: in which case can you see me in your workroom instead of venturing out into the air to come to my house? I hope you are well enough to take that risk, but naturally I am not in a position to guess intelligently. / SLC" [MTP].

Sam wrote a four-page unpublished MS called "A Cloud-Burst of Calamities" in which he narrated a day-by-day for Apr. 12 to 14, 1906 concerning the Maxim Gorky situation and scandal [MTP].

April 13 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a note of introduction for Maxim Gorky to Josiah Flint Willard at 119 Waverly Place, N.Y.C., replying to Willard's Apr. 12: "Dear Maxim Gorky: / Mr. Willard, the bearer of this, begs me to give him a line of introduction to you & I comply with his request in the conviction that you will find him interesting, since, like yourself, he has seen the seamy side of life & has had adventures" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Now then, dear Charlotte, you need some forgiveness yourself! I have to admire that letter, I can't help it, for it is wonderful; its match may exist somewhere in literature, but its superior doesn't.

...The hand that wrote that letter can do the Mirabeau—that I know. If you yourself have had any doubts, brush them away; for there is greatness in you, Charlotte,—more of it than you suspect, I think. You are going to surpass your utmost anticipations.

Next Thursday that lecture at Carnegie Hall—why did I make that engagement! it exasperates me to think of it—oh, more than that, it makes me sick, it nauseates me. Be good—come & see me Wednesday morning & see if you cannot help me get rid of that fatal feeling. Will you do that? Will you?

Those lovely flowers! Dear me, you didn't forget anything! I'll give you my stiletto when you come—I realize that I don't know how to use it [MTP].

Sebastiano V. Cecchi wrote from Florence, Italy to Sam. “I was glad to get your news through Miss Lyon's letter of the 11th Feby. and hope you continue to be well.” A friend had sent him a magazine which covered Sam's 70th Birthday celebration and Cecchi enjoyed Sam's speech. Traverso had advised him that Countess Massiglia's charges of perjury against Sam's “late servants Bruschi & Folli” resulted in a not guilty verdict, so another “fiasco in on record for the late landlord & landlady of yours!” Traverso had sent him lawyer's bills amounting to 552.70—“be so good as to give me your instructions about them.” He also wanted to know if Sam wanted to proceed with the old lawsuit [MTP].

Edith V. Conlis wrote from NYC to Sam. She and her sister were artists, daughters of James Conlis of Farmington, Conn. and she requested an interview [MTP].

F.T. Richards wrote from NYC to Sam. A devoted fan, Richards wrote: “I am sending you the original drawing of ‘Life's’ Monthly Calendar in which your 70th anniversary is recorded. / If you will allow me to present it to you, it will give me great pleasure” [MTP].

Carolyn Wells wrote to Sam from Rahway, N.J., having seen Sam as “truly affable and amiable...at close range” at his birthday dinner. She had since been “trying to screw up her courage” to ask him to write in her book, “which as you can see for yourself, is no common or garden autograph album. Please join the Mermaid Club as a most Honorable Honorary and Honored Member, and then, if you will, return the book to my New York address no. 12 East 22nd Street” [MTP].

April 14 Saturday – Four autographed notes by Clemens on a four-page letter by an unspecified reporter of the NY Times, requesting his opinion on Maxim Gorky's trip to America to raise funds in the cause of Russian emancipation. Sam refused to be interviewed but answered written questions with written answers, with the proviso that they would be printed verbatim, if at all. Two of the notes follow:

We were quite willing to accept France's assistance when we were in the throes of our Revolution, & we have always been grateful for that assistance. It is our turn, now, to pay that debt of gratitude by helping another oppressed people in its struggle for liberty...

In as much as we conducted our own Revolution with guns and the sword, our mouths are closed against preaching gentler methods to other oppressed nations. Revolutions are achieved by blood & carnage alone. So far I know there has been but one Revolution which was carried to a successful issue without bloodshed. / Mark Twain [MTP: American Art Assoc.-Anderson Galleries catalogs, Jan. 29, 1936, Item 119].

April 15 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied with an aphorism to Carolyn Wells: “It is easier for a needle to go through a camel's eye than for a rich woman to sprain her ankle & keep it out of the papers. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / April 15, 1906 / With greetings & good wishes to Carolyn Wells” [MTP].

The New York Times ran a front-page scandal story involving Maxim Gorky; Mark Twain's remarks on helping Russia were included:

GORKY AND ACTRESS ASKED TO QUIT HOTELS

She Is Not Mme. Gorky, Though He Calls Her So.

REAL MME. GORKY IN RUSSIA

Writer's Companion is Mme. Andreieva, a Russian Actress—He Says She's His Wife in His Eyes.

The manager of the Hotel Belleclaire, where Maxim Gorky and the woman who has been generally known here as Mme. Gorky, have been staying as guests of H. Gaylord Wilshire, discovered yesterday from a published story what has been no secret since their arrival—that is, that the so-called Mme. Gorky is not the wife of the revolutionary leader, but Mme. Andreieva, a Russian actress. As a result, both were compelled to leave the hotel. They moved to the Lafayette-Brevoort, at Fifth Avenue and Eighth Street. Late yesterday they left this hotel also, going to apartments at 12 Fifth Avenue. At the Lafayette-Brevoort it was said that they had departed of their own accord.

[more details of the controversy are cut here]

MARK TWAIN'S POSITION.

We Took France's Aid, and Should Help Russians, He Holds.

Much adverse criticism has arisen here through the formation of the committee to purchase arms to aid Maxim Gorky in his revolutionary movement. Many prominent men are on the committee. Mark Twain, one of the members, was questioned on the matter yesterday at his Fifth Avenue home.

"Why," he was asked, "should this country assist in any way the Russian people in their revolutionary movement?"

"Because we were quite willing," he replied, "to accept France's assistance when we were in the throes of our Revolution, and we have always been grateful for that assistance. It is our turn now to pay that debt of gratitude by helping another oppressed people in its struggle for liberty, and we must either do it or confess that our gratitude to France was only eloquent words, with no sincerity back of them."

"But do you think it consistent that Americans, with their so-called love of peace, should aid in a movement to throw Russia into a bloody revolution, particularly in view of the fact that America was chiefly instrumental in bringing to an end the Russo-Japanese war?" To this Mr. Twain replied:

"Inasmuch as we conducted our own Revolution with guns and the sword, our mouths are closed against preaching gentler methods to other oppressed nations. Revolutions are achieved by blood and courage alone. So far as I know there has been but one revolution which was carried to a successful issue without bloodshed."

"In lending, then, our assistance to the Russian people for the overthrow of their despotic form of government, why should we not also start active propaganda seeking the abolition of all similar forms of government?"

"Simply because," replied Mr. Clemens, "we have not been invited to do it. Should the invitation come, as in the present case, we will put our shoulder to the wheel." [See Schmidt for full article.]

Susan Crane wrote from Quarry Farm, Elmira to ask Sam for autographs for two young cousins of her late husband, Theodore Crane. The mother of the children would be in NY. "...I think how Livy would rejoice in all you are doing to help every body, and—possibly with her mighty, inspiring love she is undergirding you in these very activities—Sometimes it seems that she is not far away and helps..." [MTP].

April 15 after – Sam wrote "The Gorky Incident" sometime after Gorky was evicted from his hotel on Apr. 15, 1906; it was not published in Sam's lifetime. It first appeared edited by Bernard DeVoto in Slavonic and East European Review (Aug. 1944), p. 37-8; it was again revised and published in Letters from the Earth (1962), which Budd gives as the more accurate TS [Budd, Collected 2: 1011].

Frank E. Vaughn wrote from NYC to Sam. In a melodramatic letter, Vaughn contrasted Gorky's welcome with "shrieks of 'Crucify Him'" and closed with "Hands off and give Maxim Gorky a chance!" [MTP].

April 16 Monday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Nikolai V. Chaikovsky. "Mr. C asks me to write for him and say that he is not going to take any public notice of the man Spiridovitch. He is not too troubled about the matter" [MTP]. Note: Alexander Spiridovitch (1873-1952), Russian police general. In 1906 Spiridovitch was assigned to a detail guarding the residences of Czar Nicholas II. When the Russian prime minister Pyotr Stolypin was assassinated in Kiev, Spiridovich was investigated, but cleared of any charges, and he retained his position.

Sam also wrote a reply that is pure Twain to the Apr. 11 from Charles Butler Fenton.

Dear Capt. Fenton: / I remember you very well & very pleasantly & I remember that voyage very well also—but not so pleasantly. As to your request for a postponement of my lecture date, the spirit is willing but the difficulties are so great as to be prohibitive. Let us get up a compromise. If you should postpone your wedding you would disappoint only one person—besides yourself. If I should postpone my lecture I should disappoint 3000 persons beside myself. If you were going to marry 3000 ladies & I were going to lecture to only one person the wedding would be incomparably the more important occasion of the 2 & I would promptly surrender to that great fact & postpone my lecture. There is one perfectly right & fair & equitable way out of our snarl. If you will marry 3000 ladies I will postpone. If you persist in limiting yourself to one, then you must postpone & come to the lecture.—both of you. I am a little vain of this idea—I don't think Solomon himself could beat it for straight & stern & uncompromising justice to all parties concerned [MTP].
Note: Fenton later helped with the opening of the Panama Canal; he lived to be 100.

Sam also wrote to Joe Goodman in Alameda, Calif.

Dear Joe: / I thank you very much. I shall advise with the Harpers & then write Tufts.

Well, we are having a time here, over Russia! / Yours ever / Mark [MTP]. Note: Sam referred to the Gorky scandal.

Daniel Carter Beard for the Society of Illustrators wrote to Sam. "The Society of Illustrators is not going to have a dinner so don't be alarmed, but we are going to have an informal smoker at the Aldine Ass[oc] on Saturday night at 9 PM April the twenty first, and if you will come and smoke with us, no speech, we will feel highly complimented" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the letter, "Will try to be present / Mr Dougherty." The MTP catalogs Sam's reply as "ca. 18 April." See entry.

Frederick D. Grant wrote from Governor's Island, NY to Sam. "I am looking forward with the greatest pleasure to presiding at the meeting to be held on the 19th Carnegie Hall, for the benefit of the Fulton Memorial, when you are to lecture." Grant wanted to know if Sam would touch on any political questions regarding the US or any other country, as this would cause him embarrassment. As an Army officer he was not allowed to make such opinions public and thought Sam might do so at the event. He provided his phone number should Sam want to discuss this issue, and marked his letter "Confidential" [MTP].

Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam.

Perhaps it is rather inconsiderate of me to write to you at such a busy time but I cant restrain myself from sending you some love and blots [kisses]. Of course I shall keep a good many of these imaginary blots and bring them forth into real ones for Thursday evening. I am quite sure you will accept them then.

I was going to send you a cartoon that was in the paper Friday evening but Miss Lyon told me that you have already seen it.

I almost forgot, I am taking up too much of your time because when you are not busy I want you to rest. I hope you will be already to receive a volley of “real” blots. / Good night [MTAg 25-6]. Note: Sam was to give a speech for the Fulton Assoc. on Apr. 19. Getrude referred to an Apr. 13 cartoon, possibly:

Insert cartoon: Idaho Statesman, p.10, Apr. 13, 1906

(smaller text in right corner: “Uncle Mick will appreciate him”)

Belle Vernon wrote on The National Arts Club, NYC letterhead to Sam. She reminded him she had been one of Miss Porter’s girls at Farmington years before. Since Sam was “so delightful” at the Woman’s University Club, she invited him to dine at the Club on Wed. evening Apr. 18 at 7:30 p.m. [MTP].

April 16 ca. – Old Guard of the City of NY sent Sam a handwritten invitation to their Anniversary dinner at the Hotel Astor on Monday Apr. 23 at 7 p.m. [MTP].

April 17 Tuesday – Sam wrote to an unidentified person about Benjamin Chapin, who performed on stage as Abraham Lincoln. This letter appeared in the Cleveland Plain Dealer on Apr. 22, 1906 in “Lincoln Lives in Ohio Actor.”

April 17, 1906. / In the beginning of the first act, while Mr. Chapin did seem to me to be a very close and happy imitation of Mr. Lincoln, it was only an imitation—an artificiality. But at that point the miracle began. Little by little, step by step, by an imperceptible evolution the artificial Lincoln dissolved away and the living and real Lincoln was before my eyes and remained real until the end. Happily to it that strong word “miracle” because I think it justified. I think that I have not before seen so interesting a spectacle as this steady growth and transformation of an unreality into a reality. / S.L. Clemens, (Mark Twain) [MTP]. Note: Chapin’s play on Lincoln ran from Mar. 26 to the week of Apr. 8 [NY Times Apr. 8, “This Week’s Offerings” p. X1]. It is not clear which day Sam attended the performance.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mrs. Johnson came back from Washington. She paid me damn compliments. Life is sticky. Where are, are, are the ideals” [MTP TS 66-67].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to advise Sam on the “best thing to do” about Bobbs-Merrill’s “attempt to re-publish some of your old non-copyright matter in the newspapers.” Duneka suggested they wait until “the book is issued, then get out an injunction preventing the sale or distribution...on the ground that at least one of the articles in the volume is not by Mark Twain.” He also announced: “We are going to get out a de luxe edition of “EVE’S DIARY” on hand made paper, —a limited edition to sell for $5.00 per copy. It ought to be profitable and it ought to be good advertising” [MTP].

Brander Matthews wrote to Sam. “Dear Mark: / Here is the MS of that paper I perpetrated on you eight years ago. I thoroughly enjoyed writing it; and I said what I thought—and very much what I had been saying in fragments here and there these many years. / Yours ever...” [MTP].

Apr. 18, 5:12 a.m. The Great San Francisco Earthquake

April 18 Wednesday – The New York Times, Apr. 19, p. 14, “Sutton Beats Slosson by Superior Billiards,” again mentioned Mark Twain’s evening at the international billiards tourney at Madison Square Garden:

Mark Twain witnessed the contest from his usual seat at one side of the table. He laughed heartily as the French billiardist rubbed along the caroms for fair-sized runs at the beginning until he had obtained a lead of 270 to 183 at the end of the thirteenth inning by cleverly executed ball-to-ball billiards.

The American humorist foresaw the end, however, as he explained to those sitting near him.

Gertrude Natkin wrote from NYC to Sam: “NOTICE! / A little girl is very anxious waiting for the eve of he 19th. Reward! Of ten blots to the one identifying this little girl” [MTAq 26; MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam.

Dear Mark: / See what you’ve brought me to! What stories could I tell such an audience? Were I to undertake it, I should have to ask you to give me a lesson or two in the art. But I can’t go, fortunately. May 4th I shall be in Lexington, Ky. attending Mr. Ogden’s Southern Education Conference. Harmony is going with me. We leave New York May 1st and shall be away till May 9th.

After his signature, Joe added, “Thanks for your just comment on Gorky’s bad mistake. Poor fellow; he didn’t understand our bigotry. Too bad!” [MTP]. Note: in the file is an invitation (dated Apr. 16) to Twichell from the Periodical Publishers’ Association of America, Edward Bok (ed. Ladies’ Home Journal, Phila.) for a dinner on May 4. It appears that Joe marked the following paragraph: “The Board of Directors thought that you might be willing to come and add zest to the entertainment of the evening by giving our guests some of those stories which you know so well how to tell.”

April 18 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Apr. 16 from Daniel Carter Beard: “Will try to be present / Mrs. Dougherty” [MTP].

April 19 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a note for Gertrude Natkin (and probably her mother): “Please admit these friends of mine by the stage door, & greatly oblige” [MTP].

In the evening Sam gave his “last speech” at Carnegie Hall in the cause for aid to earthquake-stricken San Francisco. New York newspapers covered the event, including the Times, Apr. 20, p.11.

MARK TWAIN APPEALS FOR THE ‘SMITTEN CITY’

Begs the Audience at His Last Public Lecture to be Liberal.

A UNIQUE TALK ON FULTON

Humorist Speaks in His Old Vein for the Benefit of the Fulton Memorial Association.

Mark Twain’s last words on the public lecture platform were an appeal for charity to alleviate human suffering. He delivered his public valedictory at Carnegie Hall last night, and in announcing with a tinge of sadness that he appeared in the role of a public lecturer for the last time, he begged New York to aid the victims of the disaster in San Francisco.

"Now," he said to the audience which filled the hall, "since I must, I shall say good-bye. I see many faces in this audience well known to me. They are all my friends, and I feel that those I don't know are my friends, too. I wish to consider that you represent the Nation, and that in saying good-bye to you I am saying good-bye to the nation.

"In the great name of humanity, let me say this final word: I offer an appeal in behalf of that vast, pathetic multitude of fathers, mothers, and helpless little children. They were sheltered and happy two days ago. Now they are wandering, forlorn, hopeless, and homeless, the victims of a great disaster. So I beg of you," he concluded, raising his head and stretching out his arms in appeal, "I beg of you to open your hearts and open your purses and remember San Francisco, the smitten city."

Mr. Clemens later talked to the newspaper reporters about earthquakes on the Pacific coast.

"I haven't been there since 1868, he said, "and that great city of San Francisco has grown up since my day. When I was there she had 118,000 people, and of this number 18,000 were Chinese. I was a reporter on The Virginia City Enterprise in Nevada in 1862, and stayed there, I think, about two years, when I went to San Francisco and got a job as a reporter on The Call. I was there three or four years.

"I remember one day I was walking down Third Street in San Francisco. It was a sleepy, dull Sunday afternoon and no one was stirring. Suddenly as I looked up the street about three hundred yards the whole side of a house fell out. The street was full of bricks and mortar. At the same time I was knocked against the side of a house and stood there stunned for a moment.

"I thought it was an earthquake. Nobody else had heard anything about it and no one said earthquake to me afterward, but I saw it and I wrote it. Nobody else wrote it, and the house I saw go into the street was the only house in the city that felt it. I've always wondered if it wasn't a little performance gotten up for my especial entertainment by the nether regions."

Mr. Clemens delivered his lecture last night for the benefit of the Robert Fulton Memorial Association, which is to erect a monument in New York to the memory of the man who applied steam to navigation.

"I wish to deliver a historical address," he began. I've been studying the history of—er—a—let me see—a," then he stopped in confusion and walked over to Gen. Fred D. Grant, who sat at the head of the platform. He leaned over in a whisper and then returned to the front of the stage and continued:

"Oh, yes! I've been studying Robert Fulton. I've been studying a biographical sketch of Robert Fulton, the inventor of—er—a—let's see—oh, yes, the inventor of the electric telegraph. Also, I understand he invented the air—diria—pshaw! I have it at last—the dirigible balloon. Yes, the dirigible—but it is a difficult word, and I don't see why anybody should marry a couple of words like that when they don't want to be married at all and are likely to quarrel with each other all the time. I should put that couple of words under the ban of the United States Supreme Court, under its decision of a few days ago, and then take 'em out and drown 'em.

"And Fulton was born in—er—a—well, it doesn't make much difference where he was born, does it? I remember a man who came to interview me once, to get a sketch of my life. I consulted with a friend—a practical man—before he came, to know how I should treat him.

" 'Whenever you give the interviewer a fact,' he said, 'give him another fact that will contradict it. Then he'll go away with a jumble that he can't use at all. Be gentle, be sweet, smile like an idiot—just be natural.' That's what my friend told me to do, and I did it.

" 'Where were you born?' asked the interviewer.

"Well—er—a,' I began, 'I was born in Alabama, or Alaska, or the Sandwich Islands; I don't know where, but right around there some where. And you had better put it down before you forget it.

" 'But you weren't born in all those places,' he said.

" 'Well, I've offered you three places. Take your choice. They're all at the same price.'

" 'How old are you?' he asked.

" 'I shall be 19 in June,' I said.

" 'Why, there's such a discrepancy between your age and your looks,' he said. "

" 'Oh, that's nothing,' I said, 'I was born discrepantly.'

"Then we got to talking about my brother Samuel, and he told me my explanations were confusing.

" 'I suppose he is dead,' I said. 'Some said that he was dead and some said that he wasn't.'

" 'Did you bury him without knowing whether he was dead or not?' asked the reporter.

" 'There was a mystery,' said I. 'We were twins, and one day when we were two weeks old—that is, he was one week old and I was one week old—we got mixed up in the bathtub, and one of us drowned. We never could tell which. One of us had a strawberry birthmark on the back of his hand. There it is on my hand. This is the one that was drowned. There's no doubt about it.'

"Where's the mystery?" he said.

"Why, don't you see how stupid it was to bury the wrong twin?" I answered. I didn't explain it any more because he said the explanation confused him. To me it is perfectly plain.

"But," continued Mr. Clemens, "to get back to Fulton; I'm going along like an old man I used to know, who used to start to tell a story about his grandfather. He had an awfully retentive memory, and he never finished the story, because he switched off into something else. He used to tell about how his grandfather one day went into a pasture, where there was a ram. The old man dropped a silver dime in the grass, and stooped over to pick it up. The ram was observing him, and took the old man's action as an invitation. Just as he was going to finish about the ram this friend of mine would recall that his grandfather had a niece who had a glass eye. She used to loan that glass eye to another lady friend, who used it when she received company. The eye didn't fit the friend's face, and it was loose. And whenever she winked it would turn over.

"Then he got on the subject of accidents, and he would tell a story about how he believed accidents never happened.

"There was an Irishman coming down a ladder with a hod of bricks," he said, "and a Dutchman was standing on the ground below. The Irishman fell on the Dutchman and killed him. Accident? Never! If the Dutchman hadn't been there the Irishman would have been killed. Why didn't the Irishman fall on a dog which was next to the Dutchman? Because the dog would have seen him coming. Then he'd get off from the Dutchman to an uncle named Reginald Wilson. Reginald went into a carpet factory one day, and got twisted into the machinery's belt. He went excursioning around the factory until he was properly distributed and was woven into sixty-nine yards of the best three-ply carpet. His wife bought the carpet, and then she erected a monument to his memory. It read:

"Sacred to the memory of sixty-nine yards of the best three-ply carpet, containing the mortal remainders of REGINALD WILSON. Go thou and do likewise

"And so on he would ramble about telling the story of his grandfather until we never were told whether he found the ten-cent piece or whether something else happened."

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Carnegie / St. Andrews dinner at Engineer's Club. Speech by Mr. Clemens, very good, on simplified spelling" [MTP TS 67].

Josephine D. Crockett wrote from Public School 99, NYC to advise Sam that the children of the school would plant a tree on Arbor Day, May 4, and name it "Mark Twain." Could he be present at 1:30 p.m.? [MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote on Regent Hotel, N.Y.C. notepaper to Sam.

This seems a poor old thing one may be kind to without a great deal of suffering. If you will fix an afternoon of next week—when Mrs. Gorky is not calling—I will come to listen to her donkeyisms at your house. Shall we say 4 p.m., Monday, and will you have her notified?

I am awfully sorry not to come and keep your platform down tonight. Last night was one of quite useless and meaningless pain—waking every hour after morphine, and getting no sort of credit for it. / Yours ever...[MTHL 2: 805; MTP]. Note: Howells enclosed a letter from Mary E. Bell dated Apr. 15.

April 20 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam began a letter to Charlotte Teller Johnson that he finished on Apr. 21.

It was a charming surprise, dear my lady, but it was over before I could rouse my mind out of its 5-days' drowse & take advantage of the opportunity to ask some leading questions about the present status of the Gorky situation & thrash that matter out to a finish. It vexes me to think the chance escaped. But I didn't suspect that the time was so short. I know my own attitude—that is definite enough—but I wanted to get at yours. Next time don't be quite so precipitate. Hörst du? [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Jean one. / Cesare made sketch of Mr. Clemens talking, standing beside Mr. Carnegie" [MTP TS 67].

April 21 Saturday – In the afternoon Sam presided over a meeting at the Casino Theatre to organize help for the city of San Francisco. The New York Evening World, p. 2, reported:

CALIFORNIANS ARRANGE TO GIVE AID TO VICTIMS.

Meeting at Casino Under Auspices of Mrs. Oelrichs and Mrs. W.K. Vanderbilt, jr., Presided Over by Mark Twain.

Crowding the Casino Theatre from stage to entrance hundreds of Californians gathered this afternoon to discuss plans for aiding their stricken friends and relatives in San Francisco and neighboring towns. Mark Twain was in the chair, and under his guidance the business in hand progressed rapidly.

The outcome of the meeting was the announcement of a benefit performance in the Casino a week from to-morrow night, a benefit euchre party of the California Club at the Waldorf-Astoria on April 27 and the appointment of a committee with Blanche Bates as chairman to visit the Mayor and ask him for the right to take charge of ordering necessary supplies of clothing to be bought out of the great fund already raised and to be sent at once to San Francisco.

All Anxious to Help.

Everybody seemed anxious to help in the meeting. Henry Miller, the actor, was his own stage hand, helping to arrange the tables and chairs on the stage for the speakers. When the curtain went up on the assemblage of speakers, there was a great burst of applause as Mark Twain arose in the centre.

"I take it for granted you all know me," said he, "and if you don't now you surely will before I get through. I'm here on a mission and I'm most always known as S.L. Clemens, which may be hard to spell."

He then introduced Henry Miller, who announced the benefit performance for a week from to-morrow night.

When Mr. Miller concluded Mark Twain again arose.

"It hadn't been forty-eight hours," said Mr. Clemens, "since I threatened myself with never again appearing before a paying audience. Well, I haven't for you paid nothing to come here, but you'll pay before you go out. I mean that I want every one to resolve to buy tickets for the benefit performance. You'll pay mentally before you leave here. I feel certain."

Calls it Great Calamity.

He went on to say feelingly that he looked upon San Francisco as an old home, since he lived there forty years ago, when it was a small but growing town. He characterized the earthquake and fires as "the greatest calamity of ancient or modern times." Referring to ways of helping the city now he said:

"Let us turn from the dead to the living. The dead are at peace. But consider that there are 300,000 homeless persons there now. They are many of them starving, half clothes, deprived of their means of livelihood. We must help them at once, and we will."

In speaking of the subscription list for the sufferers he said:

"The poor are always ready to give money. The poor man out of his poverty gives one-half or one-fourth of what he has. The rich man gives one-tenth of one per cent of his fortune. The pennies and the dimes and the quarters are what will make the present fund the size we need.

He then paid a tribute to the Salvation Army and said it should be represented on all committees working in the area of destruction.

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam finished his Apr. 20 to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Saturday Eve. No, it was only the "drowse"—plain dullness, intolerable stupidity, lifelessness, almost amounting to the condition which we call "dazed." It came of ragged sleep. You see, I am in bed these by compulsion. There is nothing animating about it. It doesn't even move my temper; it merely petrifies me. And when is it to end? Maybe Tuesday, maybe Wednesday; maybe—well, the doctor can't tell. / Sincerely SLC [in left margin:] I didn't even thank you; but that was dullness, not intention [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Lyon pasted or copied a newspaper clipping from an unidentified newspaper with a poem titled "Farewell" to Mark Twain.

John Horner wrote from Belfast, Ireland to Sam and included a second book by Mrs. Emanda M'Kittrick Ros, Delina Delaney (Belfast, Ire. No date), and a copy of Barry Pain's humorous criticism of Irene Iddesleigh (1897), another book by Ros he'd sent before. Sam inscribed the book with his name and "1906". Horner requested a signed photograph of Twain in exchange [Gribben 588].

April 22 Sunday

April 22 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Ella and Margaret McMahon. "I must send you both a word of sympathy in these days of your bereavement, although I know that words cannot comfort the stricken any more than they can convey the sympathy of the one who writes them": [MTP]. Note: object of sympathy not specified.

April 23 Monday – The New York Times, p.12, "Billiard Benefit Plans" announced a billiard benefit for San Francisco at the concert hall of Madison Square Garden on the following evening. Mark Twain had been asked to make "a brief address."

The Old Guard was to parade with a following banquet at the Hotel Astor. Rain cut the parade short but the banquet went off as planned, with Mark Twain making a characteristic late arrival. The New York Times, Apr. 24, p. 7, reported:

OLD GUARD CELEBRATE THEIR 80TH BIRTHDAY

Rain Stops Parade, but Banquet Joy Makes Up for It.

It was the Old Guard's eightieth anniversary yesterday [Apr. 23], and a popular military organization celebrated the birthday in its characteristic way. The rain spoiled the parade, an untoward incident, since from the side of every Guard there dangled a brand new sabre, and not many people had a chance to see them.

The banquet at the Hotel Astor in the evening, however, was made all the more glorious.

The fulldress uniforms of the Old Guard are concededly the finest hereabouts. They were set off to advantage in the banquet hall, which was decorated with flags and bunting selected to harmonize with their coats of white and gold. A feature of the banquet was the entrance of Mark Twain at the close of the celebration. The banqueters had cheered President Roosevelt and cheered Grant, but they cheered the veteran humorist still more.

During the speechmaking a concealed anonymous poet shouted bits at the guests through a megaphone which he aimed at all of the diners. Mark Twain's flowing locks came in for a long tirade of poetry, which amused the humorist immensely.

....

Mark Twain thanked the Old Guard for the fine reception they had given him, and then he told a story. He got a bouquet of roses for telling it. [Also noted in Fatout, p. 675].

Alf Hayman manager for Charles Frohman's Empire Theatre, wrote to Sam. "Mr. Frohman requests me to write and say to you that Miss Lawton was called to 'The Duel' rehearsal by his cable request, and the question of her playing the part rests with Mr. [Otis] Skinner, who by the way seems very much pleased with the work of Miss Lawton up to date" [MTP]. Note: Charles Frohman (1860-1915), brother of Daniel Frohman. Both men were involved in various NY theaters, including the Lyceum. See May 7 entry to Skinner.

G.C. Hewett, mining engineer in Colorado Springs, Colo. wrote to Sam, enclosing a picture of “the house you are said to have lived in in Arroya, Nevada.” Since he loved RI, he wished to know if it was written in that house [MTP].

Carolyn Wells wrote a short note from Rahway, NJ to Sam. “Thank you 1000 times for your humorous contribution to my book. It was most kind of you to write it for me” [MTP].

April 24 Tuesday – In the evening at Madison Square Garden, Sam made some brief remarks at a billiard exhibition of trick shots for the benefit of San Francisco.

The game of billiards has destroyed my naturally sweet disposition. Once, when I was an underpaid reporter in Virginia City, whenever I wished to play billiards I went out to look for an easy mark. One day a stranger came to town and opened a billiard parlor. I looked him over casually. When he proposed a game, I answered, “All right.”

“Just knock the balls around a little so that I can get your gait,” he said; and when I had done so, he remarked, “I will be perfectly fair with you. I’ll play you left-handed.” I felt hurt, for he was cross-eyed, freckled, and had red hair, and I determined to teach him a lesson. He won first shot, ran out, took my half dollar, and all I got was the opportunity to chalk my cue.

“If you can play like that with your left hand,” I said, “I’d like to see you play with your right.”

“I can’t,” he said. “I’m left-handed” [Fatout, MT Speaking 520-1].

April 25 Wednesday – The New York Times, p. 13, “What is Doing in Society” included a squib about Mark Twain and Miss Ida M. Tarbell to be the guests of honor at a May 1 evening celebration in the Gibson Studios for the tenth anniversary of the incorporation of the College Women’s Club. Fatout does not list his appearance; newspapers give the event as May 4, when Sam was under doctor’s orders “to remain in bed two or three days” [May 4 to Teller].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Jean, noon. Eve.” [MTP TS 68].

Frederick J. Hall wrote from Tarrytown, N.Y. to Sam, enclosing a letter by Sam he advised should be burned (not in file now). “The circumstances that prompted you to write it were, I think, as follow: J.W. suborned one of our agents and secured a number of copies of Gen’l Grant’s Memoirs, which he advertised at cut rates. Our firm brought suit, and while the decision was in our favor, it was—like most legal decisions—ambiguous and unsatisfactory. You felt J.W. deserved a flogging, but later it was decided to let the matter rest where it was” [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Sam’s reply as “ca. 27 April.”

Frederick W. Davis wrote from Brooklyn to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens:— / I had a very interesting call last Sunday morning on a friend of yours, Mr. Bloodgood H. Cutter, the “poet Lariat”. He is now in his 89th year and his faculties seem to be as bright as ever. He remembers the adventures on the “Quaker City” as if they were but yesterday, and told me some very laughable ones. One in particular was where he went to visit the Emperor of “Roosia” with your company. He said the Captain, (Duncan) took him aside and remarked: “Now Cutter, when you visit the Emperor of Russia you must not hand him any of your poetry”! He told me how the ship’s officers were worried over the subject of court dress for all the members of the ship, and how he put on a new velvet suit he had purchased in Genoa. The waves were rather high when they were about to embark in a row-boat for the shore, and he dashed back to his stateroom for a long bombazine coat to put over the velvet clothes. He did not discover till he was in the row-boat that the long coat contained a voluminous quantity of the poetry above-mentioned. He told me all about the visit to the Emperor, who received you all so kindly, and how the members of the party made fun of him for going off with one of the court ladies, who showed him through the palace. On the way back to the ship he discovered that he had left his bombazine coat behind with all the precious poetry!

He was for going back for it at once, but the Captain and others persuaded him not to go back and mar a good impression,—by offering to pay for the coat.

He told me about his climb up Mt. Vesuvius, and his poem on “Gibraltar,” [sic] which he said you called “slush”! He said you and Dan and the Doctor were inclined to be a little wild on the boat, getting up dances, etc., and he was afraid he was not popular because he did not countenance such proceedings. He said Dan once dressed up in the costume of a Moor for a masquerade ball and said: “Now Cutter, look at this costume, and write me a poem on it”. [Cutter:] “So I went down in the cabin and got pen and paper together, for I was all the time scribbling, and in about 15 minutes re-appeared with the poem on Dan’s costume”, he said.

Mr. Cutter recited about a dozen of his poems to me (there was no escape!) one being entitled as near as I can remember, “Lines Addressed to Sam, (a negro servant) on Being Presented with one of my Old Hats”. He said he was afraid you did not think very much of him because he was not “edicated” but he intended to use his free-born American privilege of putting his thoughts into verse if he chose to. He told me about your sending a carriage up for him on your last visit near the vicinity, and appreciated it. He gave me a poem on parting, and I asked for one for you, which I herewith enclose [not extant]. If you are in that neighborhood in the near future, (Little Neck station), I would advise you to make a call on the old gentleman, as his surroundings are rather astonishing. (A large wooden figure stands in his front yard, taken from the prow of a ship’s boat) and there are many other curious things.

You may [have] forgotten that in the last ten years you have written me two or three letters, but I have not. I have dashed this off hurriedly on the typewriter thinking it might amuse you and call up old recollections. If you are ever in Brooklyn, I hope you will ring the bell at the above address and let me show you a hundred interesting things. Your popularity is ever on the increase. / Respectfully yours ...[MTP]. Note: after his signature Davis added a short paragraph urging Sam to come and visit Cutter with him. “You owe it to posterity!”

Percy Stickney Grant for the Church of the Ascension, NYC wrote to Sam, enclosing a poem by Dihdwo Twe to honor Gen. Oliver Otis Howard, founder of Howard University. “What do you think of this for poetry? It just came to me from our young Liberian friend, Dihdwo Twe. It strikes me as not at all bad” [MTP].

Sumner Bass Pearmain wrote to Sam. “Just a line to remind you that Miss Lyon is to write me (or wire) what train you tke that I may meet you @ the station—you should get ticket & trunk checks for Boston Back Bay Station” [MTP].

April 26 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote congratulations to Thomas Bailey Aldrich and Lilian W. Aldrich in Ponkapog, Mass.

I rejoice with you.. This is from habit, temperament, training, tradition—that straitjacket which keeps its grip on us always & won’t allow our common sense any little liberty to work. And I rejoice with you in earnest, I can’t help it. Oh, I know—I know. I have stood where Talbot stands, & was happy: happy, & not afraid. What riches! And now—what poverty! Life is a silly invention, an immeasurable brutality. Now, then—

x x x x

Hang it, I am in this mood, & I don’t seem to be able to drag myself out of it. There are but two tragedies—birth and marriage—& when they occur among friends whom I hold dear, they break my heart, they disorder my mind, they drive me into rages. Then I say unbecoming things; yet I have to say them, I can’t quiet down until I get them out of me. I have seen a good deal of Howells, lately, & he is as sweet as ever he was in his life. I am leaving for Dublin, N. H., for a long summer, & am impatient to start, for I have led a turmoilsome life this winter, & am tired to the bone.

With great love to the 3 of you—& the prospective fourth— [MTP]. Note: Talbot Aldrich, son just married.

April 27 Friday – In the evening at 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Gertrude Natkin.

Those lovely flowers & that precious valley!—certainly you are a dear sweet little girl, Marjorie; there's none dearer nor sweeter. I am hereby answering that valley with another, you dear child; also I am sending an Aüf wiedersehen along with it, & thereto the injunction that when the wiedersehen occurs next fall it shall find you a little girl still. Cling to your blessed youth—the valuable time of life—don't part with it till you must. / With love, & good-byes, & lots of blots— / SLC [MTAq 27].

April 27 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote wrote thanks to Frederick J. Hall: “Glad to have that letter it will do to go into the MS” [MTP]. Note: the MS referred to may have been the autobiography soon to run in the North American Review v. 183-186 1906-7.

April 28 Saturday – Sam wrote to Gertrude Natkin, his letter not extant but referred to in Natkin's reply of early May. From the context of her reply, Sam asked her if she would like to have an autographed photo of himself for her room [MTP].

April 29 Sunday

April 30 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Robert Reid.

I keep thinking about that picture—I cannot get it out of my mind. I think—no, I know—that it is the most moving, the most eloquent, the most profoundly pathetic picture I have ever seen. It wrings the heart to look at it, it is so desolate, so grieved. It realizes San Francisco to us as words have not done & cannot do. I wonder how many women can look upon it & keep back their tears—or how many unhardened men, for that matter? [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to H.H. Rogers. “Mr. Clemens directs me to hand you herewith his check for $50,000⁰⁰. Will you kindly have an acknowledgment of its receipt returned by bearer” [MTHHR 605]. Note: the source indicates Sam's finances “seem to have been in good condition” at this time [n1].

Sam also wrote to Marcella Sembrich, opera star: “Welcome back to life again, dear Madame Sembrich, after that stupendous adventure!” [MTP].

Sam would write ca. May 6 to Charlotte Teller Johnson that “Four went to Dublin last Monday, 6 are here, waiting for me.”

May – Poultney Bigelow wrote a short note to Sam from Malden, N.Y.. “Bless you—best of Sublunary Benefactors—long years to you—full years—happy years for the sake of your fellow humans” [MTP].

Human Life published “Mark Twain—Dean of Our Humorists,” by William A. Graham, p. 1-2. Tenney: “A popular, appreciative account, chiefly of the Hartford years. Mentions conversations with MT and hearing him speak at a Thanksgiving-Day dinner at the YMCA in 1888 o 1889” [“A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 190].

William Greenfield authored “A Playmate of Mark Twain's, Who, as a Little Girl, Used to Make Mud-Pies with the Great Humorist,” in Human Life, p.22. Tenney: “An interview with Tabitha Quarles Greening (Mrs. J.W. Greening, of Palmyra, Missouri; she was the daughter of Jane Lampton Clemens's sister Martha—MT called her ‘Puss’). She remembers MT as rather delicate in his youth, and full of pranks, and his brother Orion as absent-minded. She describes the Clemens family's move to Hannibal: young Sam was left behind, making mud-pies, and was still occupied when her grandfather, Wharton Lampton, rode by a half-hour later and picked him up” [“A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 190; also Tenney 42].

Sometime in early May, before May 8, Gertrude Natkin replied to the (not extant) of Sam's Apr. 28:

Oh, Mr. Clemens, I should just love to have an autographed photograph of you for my room. I have always wanted it but I thought you might think of it yourself. Mr. Clemens: if you only could realized how I love you. I cannot express it, but I suppose sending a few blots will help a little. / I hope you will love me just the same. You know I have taken away those two years long ago [MTP].

May 1 Tuesday – Robert Reid wrote on this day or May 2 to Sam.

Dear St Mark / A thousand thanks to you for your beautiful note anent the picture. I only wish the picture deserved it!—I wish you wouldn't go away for such a long summer, for a long summer it will be if H.H.R. holds me to contract labor!! Why must it be that a man should be, because “artistic,”—such a damn phool as I am!—However in the midst of my troubles is always the shining joy of your friendship! / Yrs for painting / Robert Reid [MTP]. Note: the file cites Lyon's note on her copy of this letter, that the subject of a rough sketch which Reid was going to paint was the S.F. earthquake of Apr. 22, 1906.

May 2 Wednesday

May 3 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal: “Mr. Clemens's inspiration for this morning. ‘Get up a stench in England about the Gospel. Have 200 copies printed anonymously there, uncopyrighted, too’ [MTP TS 69].

The Independent (NY) ran a brief review of Men and Things (reissue of Mark Twain's Library of Humor) p. 1046. Tenney: “In ‘this curious book’ there is little humor. ‘It would seem that each author is represented by his inferior work only,’ and much of it ‘is rather of the mournful sort’” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Seventh Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1983 p. 170].

Mary E. Bell wrote from Shirley, Mass. to ask Sam for “any kind word” on her sketches. She referred to an interview with Sam and sent regards to Miss Clemens and Miss Lyon [MTP].

May 4 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam, down with bronchitis again, wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

I have your note, dear lady Charlotte, & of course I say “Yes”—quite willingly, too.

Professor Giddings's article is remorselessly severe, but it is all good sense. The editorial is sane, also. The whole case is as pitiful as it can be—that of those poor Gorkys, I mean.

The doctor has been here—it was not I but others who invited him—and I am to remain in bed two or three days. There are two “fastest” Boston trains—the 10 a.m. & the 1 p.m., & I shall take the latter when I go. Monday? Yes, I think—if I shall have learned your plans by noon of that day; otherwise I will wait & go Tuesday. This, on the guess that the doctor will offer no objections.

I hope your work will go smoothly & pleasantly & satisfactorily, & I am sure it will [MTP]. Note: Sam would need a few more days to recover He would leave New York on May 14.

Frederick A. Duneka wrote a short note to Sam. “I am enclosing proofs of your article on Mr. Howells. It seems to me that perhaps a line or two might be changed in the second paragraph. In reading it over, I am again surprised at its exquisite charm. / A check will follow when we get the proofs back” [MTP].

John T. Fenlon for Lincoln Farm Assoc. wrote to advise Sam that the association had been “duly incorporated...with you as one of the original twenty-one incorporators.” “No stock will be issued and no liability of any kind is assumed by you, the purposes being purely patriotic as given above” [MTP].

May 5 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam inscribed an etching to Edward Lauterbach: “It is not best to use our morals on weekdays, Edward, it gets them out of repair for Sunday. Your friend / Mark Twain / May 5, 1906.” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Oren Root, Jr., an officer in the Kingsbridge Railway Co.

My daughters are frequently robbed by conductors on the surface lines; there they report to me, but bring me nothing upon which I can enter a complaint, since they shrink from asking the robber for his number. But at last my eldest daughter has brought me a number. The swindle was perpetrated this morning upon the 3rd avenue between 60th & 64th street (going up town), between 11 & 11.30, & the thief's number is 3818.

I am bedridden, but if you will send some one to me for the particulars, I will furnish them. Please telephone first, (3907 Gramercy)—it is not in the telephone book [MTP: John S. Mayfield, Mark Twain vs. the Street Railway Co., 1926, p.18-19].

May 6 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

~~I am sitting here at 2:30 in the morning. I couldn't can't sleep.~~ Downstairs I hear Mr. Clemens cough. I have taken 2 heavy drugs, but they don't effect—a terrible anxiety weighs—up Fifth Avenue, drays drag themselves. Horses, I suppose are in front of them. ~~I feel a calamity.~~ The Valley of the Shadow, Mr. Clemens calls this house. Trunks are around ~~but the terror is heavy upon me.~~ ~~When Santa started for Gilders tonight I told her I'd go for whiskey—but there was not whiskey to quiet me. Foolish for me to think it would~~ [MTP TS 69]. Note: though most editorial strike outs are not used in Lyon's entries, all of these are. The pattern of most strikeouts suggests that Lyon, at a later time, deleted those phrases and passages which were melodramatic, effusive in her regard for Clemens, or woe-is-me; such is the nature of the above. Many of the deletions and emendations suggest she may have been preparing the documents for eventual publication. Most of her diaries/journals/daily reminders are published in this volume for the first time.

The New York Times, p.1, "Mark Twain Out Again," reported on the improving health of Twain who would leave for Dublin N.H. "within a few days."

May 6 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a PS (afterthoughts to his May 4) to Charlotte Teller Johnson: P.S.

It is bronchitis that is keeping me here. There is only about ten cents' worth of it, but even that much means bed, according to doctor-notions.

I have torn up the preceding sheet: it was mainly about Giddings's article, &—like the article—not worth while. Giddings did his work well, but what he lacked was a subject; there was nothing before his house; he was establishing the facts of the multiplication table when nobody was doubting those facts; & at the same time he was overlooking the issue that was before the house, & the only one.

In Gorky's case it is a very large one; in Smith's case, or Jones's it would have no importance. Gorky is a puzzle & a vexation to me. He came here in a distinctly diplomatic capacity—a function which demands (& necessitates) delicacy, tact, deference to people's prejudices. He came on a great mission, a majestic mission, the succor of an abused & suffering vast nation. As to his diplomacy, it does not resemble Talleyrand's, Gortschakoff's, Metternich's; it is new, it is original, it has not its like in history: he hits the public in the face with his hat & then holds it out for contributions. It is not ludicrous, it is pitiful. As to his patriotism,—his lofty task of lifting up & healing his bleeding nation,—it can't stand the strain of a trifling temporary inconvenience. He has made a grave blunder & persistently refuses to rectify it.

A diplomat of full age ought surely to know this pair of simple things that a country's laws are written upon paper, & that its customs are engraved upon brass. One may play with the one, but not with the other. It is less risky for a stranger to dance upon our Constitution in the public square than to affront one of our solidified customs. The one is merely eminently respectable, the other is sacred.

What I am afflicting you with these platitudes for? To get them (& the revolution) out of my system. It looks like using you as a convenience, but I don't see any other way. Come, let's cut the resolution! & concentrate on Mirabeaus & Autobiographies & other spirit-contenting industries. I hope you are getting along with the mentioned last act to your satisfaction, & that I may see a carbon copy when it is done.

Four went to Dublin last Monday, 6 are here, waiting for me. Also, the music [Orchestrelle] has gone to Dublin. This house is several shades too quiet, now. "Dublin, N.H."—that is the whole address: it is only a village, you needn't add anything. Dear my lady, Aufwiedersehen [MTP].

May 7 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Otis Skinner (1858-1942), actor and a star since the mid 1890s. Clemens came to the defense of Mary Lawton:

Dear little Otis:

So you have discharged her! Your reasons have greatly interested me. To-wit:

She is too tall. But she is no taller than she was when you engaged her.

She is too large. But she is no larger now than she was then.

Her voice isn't right. But it is the same voice that was satisfactory before.

She has freckles. But they are the same old ones.

She has red hair. She had it before.

She "doesn't spell correct." How do you know?

Those are all the reasons you have mentioned for discharging her—but were they all you had? Isn't it possible that you have withheld one or two? This, for instance, from a Richmond paper:

"Mr. Skinner's leading woman this year is Miss Mary Lawton, who, though a young woman, shows rare talent, & promise of a brilliant future. As the Duchess of Chailles she rendered the star able support, & her splendid work in a most trying role evoked frequent outbursts of applause."

It is just possible that the outbursts of applause were a little too frequent to please you? You are aware that that has sometimes been a more serious defect than red hair. Could still another overlooked reason for discharging her have been this paragraph from another Richmond paper?

"Too much praise could not be lavished on Mary Lawton, who appeared as the Duchess de Chailles. Here we have a young actress with every requisite for success—beauty, magnetism, grace, individuality, & strength. She makes her role wonderful, & in successfully living her part proves herself a student not only of stagecraft but of the profoundest psychology. One would hardly wish to see another attempt the work she does in "The Duel." The part seems essentially hers, & should remain her exclusive province."

With such unanswerable reasons as these for discharging her, why do you suppress them & waste your strength upon such little matters as her red hair & the fact that she "can't spell correct?"

I do not charge you with violating the letter of your contract, I only charge you with being meanly treacherous to the spirit of it. I also charge, that—in the peculiar circumstances of the case—its terms would not have been exacted by a man, but only by a homunculus. Miss Lawton was to play a week for you on trial, & provide stage-clothes at her own expense. She saved you fifty dollars a day; her work was entirely satisfactory to your audiences; it won the praises of your troupe; it won the praises of your manager; it won your own praises, freely & frankly expressed. The trial-week completed, you hadn't the courage to dismiss her yourself, but put that humiliating office upon your manager, & furnish him the fictitious pretexts above quoted. You did not even offer to pay for the stage-clothes you had obliged her to buy. You know, from the beginning—confess it!—that you intended to use her to save expenses, & then dismiss her. In other words, that you meant to rob her. Would you mind telling me what it feels like to be an Otis Skinner?

You are a good actor—pretty loud, pretty ranty, & all that—but good & popular; the best in your line, as any just critic will grant. It is argument that you have some intelligence; the presence in you of intelligence is argument that by study & practice you could become a man, in time. It could be worth your while. There you would deal honorably by a poor & friendless girl like Mary Lawton, & not take advantage of her poverty & friendlessness to swindle her out of her clothes—as you have done—& discharge her upon the basis of a lie—as you have done. / Mark Twain [MTP].

Note: The Duel by Henri Lavedan (1859-1940), a three act play starring Otis Skinner, was performed at the National Theatre, Washington, D.C. April 23 through April 28, 1906 after an earlier run in NYC. The play contained only two female roles [Gribben 398]. Lyon wrote in her journal for Wed. Mar. 21, 1906 that she and Clara went to see the play; see entry.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Somewhere along here, C.C., R.G., [Rodman Gilder] & I went to see "Peter Pan". That wonderful Maude Adams! ~~I do not care if people do say that she has had children by Charles Frohman, I should like to know her & should like to see the child.~~ I should like to know more of her than the bit I saw of her in the hotel that afternoon. She thrilled me through & through with that exquisite play of Barrie's—of her exquisite acting of it. You never think of her as a woman in her boy part. I was weak with the ever present sobs in me—& R.G.'s eyes were flooded with beautiful tears too [MTP TS 69-70]. Note: Lyon strikes out the gossip about Adams; it's as if she is self-censoring with an eye to others reading the material or to publication.

J.Q. Adams wrote to Sam. "Here is the cartoon I spoke of from the Chicago Tribune. It's jaundiced look comes from hanging on the wall of my study since your last birthday" [MTP]. JQA shown on letterhead as asst. secy of Art Commission of the City of New York.

May 7 ? Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson. "I am getting into pretty bad shape, therefore, it will be best for you to come pretty soon—however, after lunch will do, I suppose. Pulse normal—temperature variable; temper ditto" [MTP].

May 8 Tuesday – Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to John B. Stanchfield with a copy to Sam. "Wright called at my office to-day. He said he has been out to the Coast recently. He said also that Butters had now plenty of money; was largely interested in the Realty Bonding & Finance Company, of Oakland; was actively connected with some new traction syndicates building trolleys in Northern California; and that some of his Oakland property has doubled in value recently." He gave an address for Wright in E. Orange, N.J. [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam that he would put his essay on Howells in the July issue of Harper's unless he heard from Sam to the contrary. He did not want the Howells article to immediately precede "A Horse's Tale," nor to be in the same issue with Howells' own travel article. He enclosed a check for $712.80 for 2,376 words of the Howells article [MTP].

May 8 ? Tuesday – Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam that it "seems such a long time since" she'd written, and "what a disappointment to you to be confined to your room" when he might be "contemplating the enjoyment of the green meadows, of driving, riding, and other pleasures." Gertrude asked for a signed photo of him, and expressed her love again [MTAq 27-8; MTP].

May 9 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "I think it was this day that Mr. Clemens gave the gospel ms. to Mr. Frank Doubleday to take & start in on the publishing of 250 copies to be printed on the DeVinne press. Not to be published in Mr. Clemens's name, not even to be copyrighted in his name" [MTP TS 70]. Note: clearly added at on later day. See under 1906 year entry a letter to Doubleday on this subject.

Oren Root, Jr. replied to Sam after investigating "the unfortunate incident" to which Sam referred on May 5, in which a street car conductor failed to make proper change for Clara Clemens. In view of the long employment of the conductor (since 1900) Root did not think the mistake was intentional, and wished to make amends. He enclosed 20c in stamps [MTP]. Note: see Sam's May 13 reply.

May 10 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to Gertrude Natkin's May 5-8:

Hail & Aufwiedersehen, Marjorie dear! & thank you for the blots—which I duplicate. Indeed it has been a troublesome captivity, but the end is near by, now, for if the weather permits, I am to leave my room day after to-morrow (or at furthest Monday) & break for the woods & freedom—that is to say, Dublin, N.H.

An autographed photograph? Why, I did think of it long ago, you little witch, but of course it wouldn't have been proper etiquette for me to offer it, you know. If there is one in the house you shall have it right away; & if there isn't, Miss Lyon will send out & get one.

Good-night & good-bye. I love you dearly, you dear little Marjorie (blot) & I'm glad you have shed those two unnecessary years (blot) [MTAq 28]. Note: "at furthest Monday" was May 14, the day he left N.Y. See Sam's May 13 to Natkin.

W.B. McGarvey for International Spiral Pin Co. wrote to Sam advising of a 6% dividend on preferred stock for 1905; he enclosed a check for $219 [MTP].

May 11 Friday – William Dean Howells wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam. “I wont take advantage of a delicate convalescent; so when I come next, we’ll talk, not read and listen. There’s talk enough left in us, I hope. / Yours ever, / W.D. Howells / This is final” [MTHL 2: 806].

Poultney Bigelow typed a postcard to Sam.

Did you get a volume of “Panama Patch work!”—verse by my friend J.S. GILBERT of COLON. If so DO write him a few sweet words—he is a lovely clean fellow. When do you go to DUBLIN—myself am a FARMER at MALDEN on HUDSON—have planted onions and potatoes—have seven cows, three horses and several hens and my typewriter machine! All I want is someone to lean over my fence with a pipe and a smile like yours—for my name is / PB [MTP].

May 12 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Paine[,] Underwood & Johnson get up a game on copyright / Here’s this old [illegible word] Clemens over 70—in 5 years or more his copyrights will begin to perish, & they are the main support of his children—That should start the ball. Saturday, May 12, 1906, Dublin” [MTP TS 70].

The Saturday Evening Post published “Mark Twain’s Solo.” This issue sold on eBay in Feb. 2009, but no such article is listed in the index of the magazine, so perhaps it was a cartoon.

Gertrude Natkin began a letter to Sam that she finished on May 13. See below.

May 13 Sunday – Sam inscribed his photograph to Gertrude Natkin: “To Getrude, with the love of her oldest friend— / Mark Twain / May 13, 1906” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a follow up to Oren Root, Jr. on his complaint of his daughter being charged the wrong fare. Sam thanked him for investigating his complaint and acknowledged receipt of 20 cents worth of stamps: “The conductor against whom that charge can be made only once in two years must be a valuable man, and I should be the last one to wish to get him into trouble” [MTP: John S. Mayfield, Mark Twain vs. the Street Railway Co., 1926, p.22-3]. Note: see May 5 to Root and May 9 from Root.

Gertrude Natkin finished her May 12 to Sam, calling him “Grandpa” and asking him not to love her “any less because I am sixteen. No matter how old I am in years, I shall always be your young little Marjorie as long as you wish it” She thanked him for sending her a present of one of his pens that would inspire her [MTAq 29; MTP].

May 14 Monday – Carl Schurz, statesman, reformer, and Secretary of the Interior under Rutherford B. Hayes, died in N.Y.C.

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam sent his sympathies to the Carl Schurz family.

I beg the privilege of offering to the bereaved family a word of sympathy—deep & out of my heart. Words can convey nothing more at such a time—in them is no comfort. I am of those who loved Carl Schurz & revered him. In him I have lost a friend & guide, in him the nation has lost a noble citizen & most faithful servant. Not many go down to the grave mourned as he is mourned. With the deepest respect ... [MTP].

Afterward, Sam and Isabel Lyon left New York bound for Dublin, N.H. to spend another summer. Their first stop was Boston, where Sam stayed with the Pearmain’s and Lyon stayed at the Lennox Hotel [IVL May 14 TS 70-71].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

It was such a confused morning before we left for Boston. Mr. Bynner telephoned asking for a thousand words on Carl Schurz for McClure who died early this morning. Then other telephonings from Mr. Duneka for Carl S. message & Mr. Doubleday & Mr. Bynner again. Up & down I flitted while Mr. Clemens sat chatting with Mrs. Johnson [Teller] who came in to say goodbye. But we got started—I so tired & sodden & lifeless. The journey of 5 hours was easy & soft. Mr. Pearmain met us at the station, took Mr. Clemens home with him & left me at the Lennox Hotel [MTP TS 70-71]. Note: also, stuck into her 1908 Datebook: “Carl Schurz died today. Mr. Duneka telephoned asking for a message for Harpers from Mr. Clemens [MTP: IVL TS 8].

On May 31, Sam would write Charlotte Teller Johnson of their arrival: “Two hours after we reached Dublin Miss Lyon telegraphed Duneka: “Mr. Clemens decides not to attempt a Carl Schurz tribute.” An hour & a half later she telegraphed him: “The tribute is written—make room for 613 words” [MTP]. Note: the tribute ran in the May 26 issue of Harper's Weekly as “Carl Schurz Pilot”.

Léon de Vesly, conservator for a museum in France wrote in French to Sam (enclosed in Clarke's May 30)

SEINE INFERIEURE

Rouen, le 14 Mai 1906

Honoré Maître,

J'ai l'honneur de vous remercier du numéro de la Harper's Magazine dont vous venez de faire don au Musée de la Tour Jeanne d'Arc à Rouen. Je vous suis particulièrement reconnaissant de votre manuscrit don't M. Clarke nous a fait, hier, une belle traduction.

Le manuscrit et le livre seront désormais déposés dans les vitrines du Musée où ils feront l'admiration de tout ceux qui ont le culte de la grande héroïne française et l'amour de leur Patrie. — Encore merci!

Veuillez agréer, je vous prie,
Monsieur et honoré Maître l'expression de ma vive reconnaissance,

Honored Sir,

I have the honor to thank you for the issue of Harper's Magazine which you have given to the Musée de la Tour Jeanne d'Arc in Rouen. I am particularly grateful to you for your manuscript which Mr. Clark translated beautifully for us yesterday.

The manuscript and the book will from now on be shown in the showcases of the Museum where they will be admired by all who adore the great French heroine and who love their country. — Thank you again!

Please accept, honored sir, the expression of my vivid recognition and my profound respect,

The director,
Conservateur des Monuments historiques,

De Vesly

To Mr. Mark Twain

May 14 after – Sam wrote sympathies to Miss McMahon on the death of Carl Schurz [MTP: noted in Isabel Lyon file]. Note: MTP catalogs this as 1906 only. Schurz died on May 14, which places this note after.

May 15 Tuesday – Sam and Lyon left Boston and traveled by train to Dublin, N.H. [IVL May 15 TS 71].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

~~Oh dear—such a [illegible word] cry in me. We're in Dublin now & the wind is crying such a terrible [illegible word]. It must be the hard plaster walls [several illegible words].~~ We came up from Boston this morning. Belle Greene was at the station and Mr. Clemens took her for Col. Higginson's daughter & said that he came near saying, "No babies yet?" The drive over from Harrisville was very sweet, through the budding spring for New Hampshire is 3 weeks behind New York. Mr. Clemens was huddled up in a Jaeger blanket, for Mr. Pearmain had left his cape in the carriage in Boston [MTP TS 71]. Note: Miss Belle Greene daughter of Henry Copley Greene and Mary Abby Greene.

Edward McKee for Marks, Montrose & McKee wrote from Los Angeles to request an autograph from Mark Twain [MTP].

May 16 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

This morning Mr. Clemens went to work. It was after he went down from his room & he paced the porch in deep thought for a while (after a reporter from the Boston Globe had come & interviewed & photographed him). Then into the study he went, & at half past 2 he came out with a tribute of 600 words to Carl Schurz. It is so beautiful & strong. As we were nearing Boston [on May 14] Mr. Clemens began to feel that he couldn't write it, & wished that word wired to Mr. Duneka, but today the spirit in him spoke & poured itself forth in sacred tribute. Just before dinner I went onto the porch & Mr. Clemens sat there with Emerson's poems. He read Monadnock. There we sat under its mighty shadows & he red the stately poem as no one else in the world can read. After dinner he red much more of Emerson [MTP TS 71-72].

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam. "Dear M.T. Your telegram is just here." He was sending proofs from #19, the rest would come along day by day. "Hope you are fine it's hotter than thunder here today" [MTP].

Frank Northrup, for Northrup & Co., NYC wrote to Sam. "I collected the empty Pail as you requested of me, and on Monday I had an interview with Mrs. Johnson, during which she expressed the hope that you would pursue the treatment further in your Country home." The "treatments" were for Sam's chronic bronchitis [MTP].

Robert Reid wrote to Sam.

Dear St Mark / Do you mind?—I sent a copy of your letter—along with the photo, to my brother—who lives in Springfield & knows Bowles well—& to him went my brother—& betwixt 'em they published—as per enclosed! I do hope you dont mind. I was astonished to hear you were still in town—& called to see you & find you'd just left that day! I hope you did not see and believe as others did, the report in The Times, that my picture sold for $50!—$250—was bad enough / Yours... [MTP].

May 17 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mr. Clemens reads poetry to Jean & me every evening. Such reading it is. There never was anyone to read so beautifully before & to charm you so & hurt you so” [MTP TS 72].

May 18 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

I am lying fallow here, all these days, & drowsing & resting. Life begins to stir in me at last, but I’ve no use for it yet, for my stenographer is delayed & I can’t begin work until 3 days hence.

I do prodigiously like this air, this altitude, this deep silence, this unneighborred solitude. By the end of the month we shall be entirely settled & wonted & smoothly going, & ready for you & Mrs. Rogers to come to us & get a breath of brisk unsalted back-country air. We are 80 miles from Boston, by excellent ‘mobile roads.

If you sent for that check your order went to Dublin, Ireland. Do it again, & do it right.

Brer Duneka is slippery beyond imagination! I must tell you about it when you come. I mean another now, that he played slippery once before. I had forgotten it. In minor ways he is slippery a good 3 times out of 5. I want to get my Christian Science book out of his hands without raising a coolness. I must think of a way [MTHHR 607]. Note. Christian Science was published in 1907.

H.H. Rogers wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam.

My dear Clemens: / I sent you yesterday a statement of the Directors of the Standard Oil Co. to its Stockholders, which I hope you will read when you have time, between now and the 1st. of January.

I am reminded to write you because I have just had an interview with Charles Fairchild, a gentleman of pleasant memory, whom you will recall. He is trying to sell me some property in Boston. I did not “catch on.” He looked somewhat depressed and dilapidated. I told him I would not buy the City of Boston if I could get it for $5,000. He thought it an amazing remark, and I told him I thought it would have your endorsement.

Mrs. Rogers, Dr. Rice and I are going to Fairhaven to-night. It is needless to say we would like to have you along, but that is impossible. I hope you reached Dublin in safety. The stock I had advised you to buy did not work as well as I thought it would, and so I have done nothing in the matter. / With kindest regards / P.S. I cannot lie. I did not use your name with Fairchild. That remark crawled in [MTHHR 606-7].

William Dean Howells wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam.

After a great toil and fret in a boiling temperature, I have found those letters of yours, which I will send to any exact address you give me. When you have autobiographed from them, will you send them back? We find ourselves unable to part with them, because there is surely great pleasure and perhaps profit in them. I suppose we can trust you, but I will feel better if Miss Lyon says you will do it.

We expect to sail for Kittery Point by the 11 p.m. express next Thursday. Till then, here.

I hope you got to Dublin in good shape, and feel young.

I went to the Schurz funeral yesterday. But how futile all funerals are! A man might as well live. One discourse in English which I could not hear, and one in German which I could not understand. Such is death [MTHL 2: 806-7].

May 19 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Orchestrelle put up today. / Mr. Paine & Miss Hobby are to arrive today” [MTP TS 72]. Note. the Aeolian Co. disassembled, shipped, and reassembled the Orchestrelle, from NY to Dublin, and returned it to NY after the season. The arrival of the biographer and stenographer on May 20 means Clemens did not dictate for his autobiography until Monday, May 21.

Roi Cooper Megrue wrote for Elisabeth Marbury to Sam, enclosing notices for “How I became Editor of an Agricultural Paper,” recently produced in Paris, and a “very great success” there. “Our Paris office requests me to ask you to give Mr. Timmory the liberty of using his own judgment for the publishing of this play in France” [MTP].

William Woodward Baldwin for the Plasmon Syndicate wrote to advise Sam of the annual meeting of the Plasmon Co. of America on May 22, 1906 at 12:30 in the afternoon. If Sam could not be present, Baldwin had his proxy and could act as his substitute if he wished [MTP].

May 20 Sunday – On or after this date in Dublin, N.H., Sam replied to Roi Cooper Megrue's May 19:

From your favor of May 19th I quote this sentence, to-wit: "Our Paris office requests me to ask you to give Mr. Timmory the liberty of using his own judgment for the publishing in France of his dramatization of How I became Editor of an Agricultural paper." I hereby accord to Mr. Timmory that liberty [MTP]. Note: Same day mail from N.Y. to Dublin was possible, but Sam's reference to his "favor of May 19th" rather than "today" suggests this reply was on May 20 or after.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. Paine & Miss Hobby drove up this morning & I went with him over to the Raynor cottage with a view to renting it for the summer. Mother to come and chaperone Miss Hobby who is distressed over any lapse from propriety" [MTP TS 72].

May 20? Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to William Dean Howells.

[Fragment:] "I have such volumes and volumes of things that I want to say that I shan't need any letters for many months to come, and so I don't want the responsibility of having those letters sent here or anywhere" [MTHL 2: 807]. Note: Sam had asked for his old letters to jog his memory for A.D.'s See May 18 from Howells.

May 21 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam began dictating again for his Autobiography [MTHHR 607n1]. Sam's A.D. of this day, "The Jumping Frog" gives a short history of the famous frog tale; it was selected for MTE [143-48].

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Early experiences as an author—Publishing of "The Jumping Frog" in volume of sketches—Meeting George W. Carleton in Luzerno. His apology for having refused to publish Clemens' book of sketches. Difficulties attending the bringing out of "The Innocents Abroad" [MTP Autodict2].

Robert D. Hanna for the Plasmon Syndicate wrote to advise Sam of a special meeting of the stockholders of Plasmon Co. of America at June 21, 12:30 p.m., #11 Broadway, Room 932 [MTP].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam. "I find your telegram awaiting me upon my return today from Vermont, where I went to attend the funeral of my mother. You can readily imagine the accumulation of things to do I find confronting me, but I shall worry through them as fast as I can and at the earliest possible moment, probably within two or three weeks, shall pay you a visit" [MTP]. Note: for some reason Sam wrote a list of names on the top of the letter: "H.G. Wells / Thos. Edison / Lord Avebury / Carnegie / Write Mr. Doubleday"

May 22 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. Clemens is sitting down stairs in the hall revising the auto-ms. & chuckling with delight over the account of the speech he made 20 years ago at the Whittier dinner. "Oh, it will do to go into print before I die." —and the couch shakes with him & his laughter ~~He sits in his white clothes—so beautiful he is—so pure—~~and he calls out that he must begin at once to read it aloud to me" [MTP TS 72-73].

William Woodward Baldwin for the Plasmon Syndicate wrote in receipt of Sam's proxy for this day's stockholder meeting [MTP].

May 23 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Frank N. Doubleday.

The Gospel is going to be a fine book. Keep the 250 copies safe & secure. Your share of the swag is 20% whenever we sell a copy—which will not happen for a good while yet; nor until the edition is rare & people are illing to pay $300. a copy for it. That is the price, or we hold on & wait ten years—you & my daughters. ... [MTP].

Note: Sam referred to his What Is Man? here as “The Gospel.” He “maintained his anonymity by having Frank N. Doubleday serve as his go-between with DeVinne Press, a New York City firm that published 250 copies of the book in August 1906. Issued without an author’s name, the book was copyrighted under the name of J.W. Bothwell, DeVinne’s superintendent” [Rasmussen A-Z 510]. Editorial emphasis. See also Trombley, MTOW p. 63, who writes, “Twain hoped it would create a literary sensation; instead, it fell flat...he wanted to burn the 240 volumes left.”

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam, enclosing a check on the Knickerbocker Trust Co. for $137.50 on the Duvall County, Florida bonds, held by Sam as executor to Livy’s estate. Charley had been in Hot Springs, Va. and was not well.

“I trust you are all well at Dublin and on your new farm. I suppose you will look closely after the management of the farm and see that the crops are properly gathered when they are ready, if you can tell when that is which I doubt. / With love to you all” [MTP]. Note: Sam answered this tease ca. May 25.

Clemens’ A.D. for the day: Charles Henry Webb states that “Jumping Frog” has been favorably received by that he has received nothing on it because of dishonesty of the American News Co.—Clemens makes contract the American Publishing Co. for “Innocents Abroad” and suppresses the publication of “Jumping Frog” by Webb—afterwards discovered from the American News Co. that Webb had swindled him. Terms of contract with Elisha Bliss for “Roughing It” and “A Tramp Abroad” [MTP Autodict2].

May 24 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

The Gospel proof [“What is Man?”] comes along in batches from Mr. Doubleday & it is so beautifully printed to begin with & so absorbingly interesting that once you begin a galley you can’t stop until you’ve read all the batch. And Mr. Clemens does like it so much! It is his pet book and absolutely true. That & the Rubiyat ought to stand together [MTP TS 73].

In N.Y.C. William Dean Howells wrote to Sam.

“What you want to read is ‘In Our Town’ by Wm. Allen White. It is like all the middling-sized towns you ever lived in. It is a series of photographs taken with Roentgen rays. McClure publishes it. —Just off for Kittery Point, tonight. / Yours ever”... [MTHL 2: 808]. Note: June 24 to White; June 26 to Howells.

Clemens’ A.D. for the day: Clemens tries to buy his contracts from the American Publishing Co. & finally takes his next book, “Old Times on the Mississippi,” to James R. Osgood, who published it by subscription and made a failure of it. Osgood next published “The Prince and Pauper.” Clemens buys numerous patents, losing on all of them; also stock in Travelers Accident Insurance Co.—description of Senator John P. Jones—Mr. Clemens refuses to buy telephone stock [MTP Autodict2].

May 25 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Frank N. Doubleday.

Y.M. This is too much! I think it is not right to jest about such things.

O.M. I am not jesting, I am merely reflecting a plain & simple truth—& without uncharitableness. The fact that man knows right from wrong proves his intellectual superiority to the other creatures; but the fact that he can do wrong proves his moral inferiority to any creature that cannot. It is my belief that this position is not assailable.

Doubleday, please add the above pair of remarks after O.M.’s remark that he isn’t “hoisting” man up to the rat’s moral level [MTP]. Note: What Is Man? using Y.M. and O.M. for Young Man and Old Man.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

"The Raynor Cottage idea has fallen through. Miss Hobby was impossible in her old-maidish whims. Mr. Paine said he had worked with her for 8 years & never before knew what a damn fool she is. In her stenographic capacity she is excellent, but as a human companion she is impossible—a terror" [MTP TS 73].

May 25 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Charles J. Langdon.

The letters which the mail daily brings to me are of 6 kinds—6 definite & distinct kinds. The purport of each kind is always the same, my answer is always the same, & can always be answered in the same old form of words. We keep a stock of these forms written out & on hand, & I have nothing to do but sign them & mail them. There is a 7th kind; it does not come often, but we keep a form for it, too. That is the sarcastic kind. The form for that one is: "Tell him to go to hell." That is my form. Miss Lyon translates it into something more Christlike, & away it goes. When she read to me your closing remark about my agricultural abilities, I said, from the force of habit, "Tell him to go to hell." But I take that back, seeing it's you.

I am glad to hear the good news of your health. We are all well here, except myself, & enjoying this Paradise to the limit.

As executor I acknowledge receipt of your check for $137.50, & return you my thanks [MTP].

May 26 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

This afternoon when Mr. Clemens picked up the Times & noticed the date, he said, "This is one of my anniversaries—48 years ago I said goodbye to my little sweetheart". He told me then how he had said that he wouldn't see her for years—2 or 3—& she had given him a little gold ring & then he went away. Laura Wright was her name & she was very young. In all these 48 years he had never seen her. There weren't many romances in his life. There were 2 early ones, Laura Wright and Laura Hawkins [MTP TS 73-74].

Harper's Weekly published Sam's memorial: "Carl Schurz, Pilot." Carl Schurz died on May 14, the day Sam reached Dublin, N.H.

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Mr. Clemens becomes his own publisher and makes Charles Luther Webster general agent in firm of Webster and Co. Publishers. Webster publishes "Huckleberry Finn" successfully—Daniel Whitford of firm of Alexander and Green draws contract—Lecture tour with George Washington Cable—Farewell address on 19th of April [MTP Autodict2].

William Allen White (1868-1944) wrote and sent a copy of his book In Our Town (1906). The letter is not extant. The inscription: "For Samuel L. Clemens / with gratitude for / many happy hours/ from W.A. White / Emporia, Kansas / May 26, 1906" [Gribben 762].

May 27 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Two hours of this morning Mr. Clemens called me & had me make notes. He planned out a course of action to be followed out in his scheme of breaking away from the Harper Contract & selling 50000 words to McClure for $50000.00 to be syndicated. He wants it to go into the papers—even into the Hearst papers—to reach his "submerged clientele"—~~but I'm not altogether sure about the wisdom of that. I think he is too great for that.~~

This afternoon he read more auto-ms. & after he went to rest Mr. Brush & Gerome came in from a heavy rain. They stayed for dinner where Mr. Clemens reminisced about the "Innocents Abroad" days, the days spent in the Holy Land [MTP TS 74].

May 28 Monday – Clemens' A.D. for the day: Clemens calls on General Ulysses Grant just as he is about to sign contract with Century Co. for publication of his Memoirs on 10% royalty. Clemens dissuades him, and finally decides to publish them himself. Terms upon which they were published [MTP Autodict2].

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam.

Your letter of the twenty-third, and the paragraph this morning to be inserted after the Old Gentleman's remarks about rats, are safely to hand. The book, I understand, is going on all right now, and will soon be in shape. I have read part of the proof I have with great interest. As philosophy it is unassailable. To me it is very interesting. / Thank you for your remarks about Dr. Van Dyke's Little Masterpieces of Poetry [MTP].

Charles Burr Todd wrote from Redding, Conn. to Sam.

"I am about to issue a new edition of my History of Redding, which will have a chapter on the literary colony and portraits of R.W. Gilder, Albert Bigelow Paine, Ida M. Tarbell and others! As you have lately joined us should like yours if wholly agreeable." Todd wished an electrotype photo of Twain for use and asked if Sam was ready to give his plans for Redding [MTP]. Note: enclosed is a sales flyer on A History of Redding (1905), and The Real Benedict Arnold also by Todd. Also The True Aaron Burr. His middle name being Burr, Todd may have been related to Aaron Burr.

May 29 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam began a letter to Charlotte Teller Johnson that he added to on May 30, 31 and June 2, 1906.

I recognized your voice almost immediately in the telephone, although I hadn't heard it since last year when I was leaving for those woods & hills. It was a very welcome sound. I suppose I broke into your work. I wouldn't have done that if I had thought. Next time, I will wait till evening—6 o'clock. I'm not overworking, these days, but you are, without a doubt. I was overworking, the whole winter; & the very day that the strain was removed with my last engagement, the collapse came—and the recovery hasn't arrived yet. If it doesn't happen to you when you finish this tremendous tour de force—but it well, & sorry am I.

Indeed I shall be glad to get that carbon print—it isn't far away now. Last night I read myself to sleep with Saint-Simon, & was again astonished at that man's facility in dealing off vivid & delightful portraits with his felicitous pen. And behold, after I talked with you I set about the dreary work of revising some chapters of my autobiography, & made the happy discovery that (I pay myself complements when I stand in great need.) I had to have a listener, for a person can tell very little about a piece of literature without reading it aloud—so I interrupted Miss Lyon's work & made her do the listening—the very service which you shirked, & I forgave you for it, too—I don't know why I am so good, I don't get any credit for it. At least not in this world; but in the next there'll be a good many white marks. You don't know what you lost, Charlotte. I didn't find it a dreary labor at all. I give you my word I haven't come across anything more entertaining in seven years. It is the first time I have ever read anything of my own & not been able to keep from laughing. I mean, when I knew it was my own. But you wouldn't have laughed. You are the soberest, gravest [rest of the page and top of the next cut off]

The deep stillness & repose of this place is a comforting contrast to the rage & turmoil of New York. The house stands on a wooded hill overlooking the United States, & there are but two houses in sight. I should like to stay here the rest of my days. Which reminds me that I am not properly treated by my tribe. I am never allowed to talk about the human race, & now they have taken to interrupting me every time I try to arrange about my funeral. It is to be in January, a year & seven months from now—January the 4th; if I told you the 6th it was a mistake, it is the 4th; I tell strangers it is the 6th, but I do not intentionally deceive friends. Last night I was arranging about lamentations, & was remarking that friends who cried would get a chromo, but I was as rudely stopped, there, as if I had been committing a felony. Do you know, some people have no feeling. But you are not that way; you know how to sympathise with the down-trodden & oppressed; I will fly to you when I wish to discuss those matters.

10 p.m. It is a homelike place, & delightful. The five places are spacious, & the woods is excellent. I read aloud, nights—and the others grind music out of the machine. I come to bed at 9.30; by 11 my neglected fire goes out; before morning I catch a fresh cold every time; but I am used to it now, & it doesn't matter. It is an ideal life, & full of satisfactions; & if I could have anything like a fair chance at the human race & the funeral, I should be perfectly happy.

Write—and tell me all you know. You said you would [MTP]. Note: Louis de Rouvroy Saint-Simon (1675-1755); see Gribben p. 601-2.

Charles Barmore (“Famous men in fine art portraiture”) wrote from NYC to ask Sam to sign some photos he was sending by a.m. express [MTP].

Frank N. Doubleday wrote to Sam on a letter from the printer, Theodore L. De Vinne & Co., NYC. De Vinne questioned Sam's directive to put a half title to precede Chapter 3 on p. 39. De Vinne's May 29 to Doubleday: “I fail to see the reason for it, unless he wants to make a decided break in the book at this point...” Doubleday asked if they should include a brief title between each chapter [MTP].

Elizabeth Jordan for Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam.

Notes: During the spring and summer of 1906 Elizabeth Jordan, editor of Harper's Bazaar, made several attempts to persuade Clemens to write a chapter in a novel of plural authorship suggested to her by Howells for serial publication in the magazine. The story was to be called The Whole Family, and its plot concerned “the engagement of an unmarried daughter of the house.” As Miss Jordan described the project, “The Father, (Mr. Howells), begins the story, the Mother, (Mrs. Deland) continues it, the Son, (Mr. Thomas Janvier) tells his side of it, and so on....Mr. Howells and I are very anxious that you write the Small Boy's chapter” (Elizabeth Jordan to SLC, New York, 29 May 1906, MTP). see more MTHL 818-19. Thomas Allibone Janvier (1849–1913), writer and historian from Philadelphia.

Clemens' A.D. for the day: Webster's fine new quarters—Clemens calls on General Grant when he hears that his sore throat has been pronounced cancer—General Grant tells him of the ways in which Ferdinand Ward deceived him [MTP Autodict2].

May 30 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam added to his May 29 to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Next night. After all those gay spirits, comes the natural reaction, the inevitable reaction, & I am as melancholy as a dog. All day. This morning came a newspaper from the Sandwich Islands, with an account of a marriage in it. Bride, groom, bridesmaids, groomsmen, their friends, their relations—I knew every one of them! & began to call up their faces out of the past, & their friendly voices, & shapely young forms, & care-free laughter, &—then it occurred to me, “Why, those are the children of the young people I knew”—for it was 40 years ago. It was a shock! More was to come: some of them were grandchildren of young people I had known; the bride & another were, at any rate. And her grandfather was referred to as “the late chief justice.” There is a whole history in it: bachelor, starting in life, in my time; husband since; father; grandfather; chief justice; dead, & buried. All since we comraded together. It made me blue. Human life is a fiendish invention, Charlotte. You admonished me lately to avoid melancholy—and that was wise—but in the same breath you confessed to that temperament yourself. Well, we can't help these things: they are not subject to command, they are purely matters of temperament—for your sake I wish it were not so.

10 p.m. Do I seem to be writing a journal? It is by the master's desire.

This letter reminds me of the time I reformed. I said I would smoke only one cigar a day. Before the month was out I was getting the cigars manufactured specially. They were as long as a crutch [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Holiday from dictating & Mr. Clemens has been reading the auto-ms. aloud & revising it. I am his audience—he has read fifteen thousand words, 2 hours this morning, & nearly the same time this afternoon he has given to it. Susy's Biography was the theme of it & his comment upon her comment is touching ~~so wonderful~~ is he—that all others are bleak, so full of surprises & thought & action that there is no monotony where he is.

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

Tonight he read from the first Jungle book—but he was too exhausted after the long reading & revising of the day & so went early to his bed [MTP TS 75]. Note: The Jungle Book (1894) by Rudyard Kipling.

Edward E. Clarke wrote two letters from Hastings, England to Sam. In the first letter Clarke tells of a tour of the Union Jeanne D'Arc, Rouen, with materials that drew quite a crowd. The president of the Union, Pierre Drapeau, had written to Clarke that he had a son in NY, who sought literary work and would like to have an interview with Twain. Lyon notes on the back of the first letter to the effect that Sam was old and "heavily burdened," and that this was one of "a thousand appeals from strangers, to all of which he is obliged to say no." Clarke's second letter was one of introduction for this above mentioned son to Mark Twain [MTP].

May 31 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam added to his May 29, 30 to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

4.30 p.m., next Day. I am as tired as a day; but as jubilant as a whole wilderness of dogs. I have labored 4 ½ hours today—2 at dictating, this morning, & 2½ this afternoon at reading autobiography aloud on the porch to Miss Lyon & Mr. Paine. I will say it again, unto the Lady of Charlotte: you were in the wrong, distinctly in the wrong, unquestionably in the wrong that day, when you so stubbornly & violently & vindictively refused to let me read autobiographical MS to you, for I find it most shoutingly entertaining, I do indeed. It was not like you, it was far from like you to act like that, & I hope that these reproaches of mine will fill you with a consuming & devastating repentance & remorse. In which case you will be forgiven & get a chromo.

I was minded to telephone you at noon, but was out of pretexts—except a riddle, & it would not have been fair to break into your work for that. This is it: it has never yet been guessed:

One says to the Other, "You can refuse me ten thousand requests, but there is one which you will be obliged to grant. I ask that one now. Look in the glass."

The Other looked in the glass, & it was so.

Can you furnish the answer? Examine the glass & tell me the result. I am waiting.

This letter is getting oppressively long for you who are a busy person, but I can modify it with the scissors.

How to Reach a Decision when in Doubt. Arrive at a decision. This will settle your mind, then you will do the other thing. Two hours after we reached Dublin Miss Lyon telegraphed Duneka: "Mr. Clemens decides not to attempt a Carl Schurz tribute." An hour & a half later she telegraphed him: "The tribute is written—make room for 613 words." If I had your gait I could have achieved it in 21 minutes.

The Gospel is actually done. I finished it at 3 o'clock this morning [MTP]. Note: The Gospel was What Is Man?

Clemens' A.D. for the day: The lovely morning & the majestic Mt. Monadnock—Clemens speaks freely in this autobiography because he speaks from the grave—Does not believe in immortality—Charles Luther Webster a Jew—Bill taken up in Congress on last day of President Chester A. Arthur's term by which Ulysses S. Grant was again made a General—Grant's indifference to eulogies [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

This has been a wonder day. Mr. Clemens dictated out on the porch this morning. In the afternoon he read the auto-ms. to me & then after the tea I started off ~~with Carlyle's French Revolution under my arm to read [several illegible words] anywhere between here & the mountain pasture, a wonder point from which you can see the great mountains sweep for miles in all directions. The trail up is indicated by little piles of stones placed there by Raphael Pumpelly & it is beautiful. Jean had supper with the Brushes & after our dinner here Mr. Clemens read The Rubaiyat to me. Oh what a gifted man he is—what a marvel!~~ In these days he is overflowing with a buoyancy belonging to a man of 45. Strength has come to him in these hills & ~~perhaps it will come to me too~~ [MTP TS 75-76; also mention in Gribben 518]. Note: Lyon's strikeouts are left in for clarity. Her effusive praise of Clemens is often lined out, as is her more striking emotion, but some struck passages, such as the Carlyle passage are inexplicably struck. Providing them here affords clarity.

May 31 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Elizabeth Jordan's May 29:

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

The idea is excellent

Mr. Clemens is not acquainted with any of these people & so he would like to have as many of these instalments as he can—In fact he doesn't think he can do it at all until he has half of the instalments for nothing is suggested now, but the small boy talking against vacancy [MTP].

Summer 1906 – Sometime during his 1906 stay in Dublin (May 18 to Oct. 18, excluding a few trips), Sam met Ethel Barrymore, who was spending the summer at the artists' colony in Cornish, N.H., where she posed for several paintings. The colony, active between 1895 and 1925, was spread out over Windsor, Vt., Plainfield, and Cornish. During its time nearly 100 artists, sculptors, writers, designers, and well-known politicians chose to live there, either for the full year or during summertimes. Barrymore would become a famous actress. She wrote her memoirs in 1955 and mentions her first meetings with Mark Twain:

I went over to Dublin, New Hampshire, which is about fifty miles from Cornish, to visit Joseph [Linden] Smith, the artist. They were having some kind of garden fete and I was to be a sprite coming up from a fountain. Mark Twain was one of the guests that night. He was always very nice to me.

It was the first time I had seen him in white evening clothes. I met him with Bob Collier at dinner in New York shortly afterward, and he was still in his white evening clothes. I saw him again at some big benefit at an opera house where there were booths. He was sitting in the book stall, signing things, when I passed by. He called out, "Oh, there's the water sprite!" [TS by Tenney: Memories: An Autobiography by Ethel Barrymore p.154-5]. Note: Sam would "come out" in white evening clothes more spectacularly in winter in Washington on Dec. 7, 1906 before a Congressional committee. At this point, his dress was in-season.

June – Sam wrote "The Private Secretary's Diary." It was first published in Fables of Man (1972).

June 1 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Dictating: Mr. Clemens will never learn to be prudent about himself. Early this morning—at 7—I heard sneezes & then coughings & he told me when I went to his room to administer Coryza tablets & premonitory whiskey, that this time he had gone into the study to close the window, had found some papers there that interested him & he had stayed there in the cold until the chilliness came, when he went to bed and piled on all the blankets he could get hold of. When I deplored it, he was sweet & gentle as always & said he "hadn't ever done it before". Exactly—It is the things he hasn't done before that you can't plan for [MTP TS 76].

The Hartford Courant, p.17, reprinted Sam's article on Carl Schurz from Harper's Weekly of May 26. Schurz died May 14, the day Clemens arrived in Dublin N.H.

Richard Lloyd Jones for the Lincoln Farm Assoc. wrote to advise Sam of the first annual meeting of the Board of Trustees for the Assoc. on June 7 in the offices of Clarence H. Mackay, 253 Broadway, NYC [MTP].

Elizabeth Jordan for Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam. "Miss Lyon's note has reached me this morning, and I am delighted to know that you will write the small boy's chapter" [MTP]. Note: Jordan was getting up a collaborative story from well known authors for publication in Harper's Bazaar. Sam would find no inspiration for the work.

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Gen. Grant wishes Clemens's opinion of the literary quality of his Memoirs. Clemens places them side by side with Caesar's "Commentaries." Chauncey Depew's best speech. Ex-Confederate General Simon Bolivar Buckner's visit to Gen. Grant. General Grant's death. Webster suspects his bookkeeper, Frank M. Scott [MTP: Autodict2].

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

June 1 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Edward E. Clarke.

Mr. Clemens requests me to write for him & thank you for the journals & letters you have sent him; but he wishes me to say that he is sorry Monsieur Dropeau [sic Drapeau] asks him to do anything for his son, for Mr. Clemens is too heavily burdened in these days to be able to grant such requests, and this one is one of a thousand appeals from strangers to all of which he is obliged to say no [MTP].

Pierre C. Drapeau wrote in a very small hand, and in part French, a picture postcard of Joan of Arc to Sam. He thanked Sam in advance for meeting his son, who wrote Sam on June 24 to ask for an interview [MTP].

June 2 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam finished his May 29, 30, 31 to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

LATER. / In a curious way we have discovered that the village hello-girl is prodigiously interested in all messages that proceed from this house, & was as prodigiously interested in them last year. Very well, I did not personally use the telephone at all last year & have personally used it only once this year. I'm done! I was intending to use it again to-morrow, but I shan't. If I ever use it personally again it will be a case of unavoidable necessity [Written in the margins:] Charlotte, the only ambition of my life it to be good & pure & sweet, & so I wish to ask your advice. I find that in this dictated rough-draft of my answer to my brother-in-law General Langdon, I have unconsciously & inadvertently used profanity. I am in some distress about it, & would like to have your advice. I never use profanity except when writing to clergymen. Do you think it wrong to use profanity when writing to other people? If you do, I will not do it any more. I will do just as you say.

Also—another point. To-day the dentist drove here from Keene, 15 miles, to begin some repairs on my teeth, & I liked him so much that I wanted to do something to show it, so I invited him to the funeral. Jean & Miss Lyon were very indignant, & after he was gone, they said I ought to be ashamed of myself for forcing such an attention upon a person I had never seen before. I said I meant no harm, & I didn't tell him the right date anyway; I told him the 6th. Now Charlotte, he is nice; do you think I did wrong? If you think so, I will send him word not to come. I will do just as you say, for I think more of your judgment than I do of theirs. You are my friend, while they—well, I regard them as mere accidental acquaintances.

I will remind you that you promised to write me every fortnight—& here it is a month & not a line from you yet. You never fell short of a promise before. I want to hear from you. Are you in good spirits, & cheerful? I hope so. But I think you must be very tired. Is the osteopath threatening consumption again? You intimated it. Is he repeating it? [MTP]. Note: Sam enclosed Charles Langdon's May 23 and his response.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

2½ hours dictating this morning, & the long story of Mr. Clemens's unfortunate alliance with Webster has been finished. Five days he has been at it, grinding it out. As he has walked the porch he has made frequent appeals to his watch in sheer weariness, hoping to find that 12 o'clock has been reached.

There are a lot of old bound volumes of Little's Living Age in the house & Mr. Clemens has taken them as his reading, but finding about only one readable article in a volume. It's a pretty dull collection, & solid, not a break made by a remark & today as Mr. Clemens opened one of them he said it was "like looking at an asphalt pavement" for dull monotony [MTP TS 76-77]. Note: it was unusual for Sam to dictate on weekends.

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam, enclosing a check for $25 for a coupon of the Atlanta Gas Co, from the estate of Susie Clemens.

You will see that notwithstanding in your last letter you consigned me to the infernal regions because of my kindly attempt to help you in your farming undertaking that I have not yet taken my departure. This is largely due to the fact that I prefer to wait for you as I think you can show me about the place to which you sent me better than most any other guide that I could get [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Examination of the books & punishment of Frank M. Scott, who had stolen $26,000—Webster refuses books which Clemens wishes published & accepts worthless ones—He is succeeded by Fred Hall—Charles L. Webster accepts Edmund Clarence Stedman's "Library of American Literature" which caused the firm to fail—Clemens starts on his lecturing tour around the world & in 13 months pays off all his indebtedness—James W. Paige, & the type-setting machine [MTP: Autodict2; MTE 186-95].

June 3 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

The morning bed-talks are vastly interesting. I go into Mr. Clemens's room a little before 9, after he has finished his breakfast. I make a good audience for him to talk against in order to get himself into the dictating swing. The day has passed long since when he discovered he couldn't sting me by his tirades against the superstitions of the church & his disgust at those who worship "a tarbaby of a Jesus Christ" or the "dangling carcass of a virgin", so he lets his speech flow freely on those subjects.

Tonight after dinner when we were talking about fleas & how they never trouble him, he curled up in a splendid spasm of laughter, & then when he unwound himself he told of how when they were traveling in the Holy Land 40 years ago, he bought a pipe & some vile native tobacco from an old woman in Nain. They did some of their journeying by night to avoid the heat, & as they were jogging along he at the head of the procession, he lit that pipe & as the smoke rolled over his shoulder, one after another of the 6 other pilgrims rolled down from their horses, sickened by the vile smoke & he has never recovered from the fun of seeing their misery. He laughed his great hearty laugh, as he sat by the window, stamping his feet on the floor & bending his white head to his white knees in a joy which never diminished [MTP TS 77-78]. Note: entries for June 3, 6, and part of 7 have X's across from margin to margin, as if the entries were judged unsuitable in some way, possibly for publication.

Richard R. Bowker wrote from Stockbridge, Mass. to Sam.

"The stage is well set—Senate and House Committees together, Library of Congress Sen. Reading Room—for the copyright hearing Wed. June 6th at 10, and we hope you can take a central place, health permitting, speaking especially as to the life-and-fifty-years term. The bill is very good, tho not all that all want" [MTP].

June 4 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka.

I find that this "Library of Humor" is not the one which was compiled by me, but is a new book, in whose compilation I have had no part. Also, I find that this book is being actually "published" & its sale pushed.

Also I find that it is not a cheap book, "with no money in it for either of us," but is cloth-bound & higher priced than my own book.

I only consented that you should resurrect my old book, issue a trifling edition in a cheap form, & make ostensible publication to "save the copyright" from piracy by a Western publisher.

This astonishing violation of a plain & simple agreement is most unsatisfactory to me. I would not have consented to a real republication of the book which I myself compiled & was responsible for, neither would I have dreamed of allowing anyone to put my name to a book in whose compilation I took no part.

I must ask you—in fact I must require you—to take this book out of print immediately, & destroy the plates. Truly Yours

Necessarily I shall expect—and require—20% royalty on all copies of the book sold between its issue & its suppression. I must ask you to send me your check for $600, as my books have not been advertised in Harper for Jan. Mar. & June [MTP]. Note: Sam also complained to H.H. Rogers on June 6 and wanted his opinion on this letter before sending it.

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam. “Dear Uncle Mark, / Alas! alas! I am called back to England to attend to some business and sail tomorrow. I expect to return in about six weeks and to see you then. / Trusting that your behavior is beyond reproach and that you are greatly benefiting from your mountain air, / Faithfully yours...” [MTP].

H.H. Rogers wrote to Sam.

I received your letter in due time and note that the automobiling is good to Dublin. Mrs. Rogers has a new machine of which she is very proud, and it is barely possible that you will see us in New Hampshire before many moons have passed.

Col. Harvey was in here to-day for a chat about matters in general, and particularly because he is going back to Europe to-morrow on the Baltic. Your friend Duneka remained in the hall, and I only saw him at the parting. I wanted to ask Duneka for the money due on the manuscript you have at Harper’s; but hardly dared take the liberty. The Colonel said business was not very good, and he could go away as well as not, which leads me to say that I am of the opinion that they are not particularly prosperous [MTHHR 608]. Rogers cautioned Sam not to do anything to jeopardize the contract.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

June 5 Tuesday – Marguerite Merington wrote to Sam. “To-morrow –Wed. June 6, at four, Dr. Douglas Hyde, President of the Gaelic League and Mrs Hyde are coming to me at dear Ruth McEnery Stuart’s with whom I am staying. They would so greatly like to see you—Mrs Stuart joins me in warmly hoping that you and the Misses Clemens will come” [MTP].

June 6 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam sent a telegram to H.H. Rogers. “Yes still am investor to amount formally mentioned Come up here both of you and I will return with you if properly invested”

Sam then wrote Rogers a letter:

I’ve been sending you a line by telegraph.

Harvey was due here on a visit—any time between June 4 & 10—and I was going to talk “Library of Humor” with him. But I shall now have to do the talking with Duneka. Duneka must arrange a satisfactory compromise with me or I will enjoin that book & sue for damages for unauthorized use of my name for the acquiring of money under false pretenses. I wrote him a letter the other day (first to be submitted to your judgment) and I will enclose a copy of in it this. Now then, jump into the ’bile the both of you, & come! We are all ready, waiting, & wanting you. Telegraph me.

This is country here—real country. Yesterday at 6 p.m., I was standing along on the front porch looking out on the distant valley & the frame of mountains, when a buff & beautiful creature—a doe—came loafing as unconcernedly across the grounds as if she owned the property. There—aren’t we in the country? Isn’t that a sign of it? I was quite unarmed, there was no help near, yet I was not afraid. I got under the porch, but that was because it was going to rain.

Yes, the $10,000 is waiting there for investment—tuck it in for me. I was going to offer Harvey $50,000 worth of Autobiography for the Weekly, (102,000 words at 30 cents); he would deadline; then he would cancel (in writing) my right to take it elsewhere./ With love to you all— [MTHHR 609-10]. Note: See June 4 to Duneka for the conflict over the new Library of Humor book.

Clemens’ A.D. this day included: The celebration at York Harbor—Olivia Clemens’ failing health—She entertains, for the last time, the beautiful “American foreigner” introduced by Carmen Sylva—The return to Riverdale in invalid’s car—The season of unveracity [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

This morning great argument! I had just told Mr. Clemens that yesterday Mr. Paine had told me that he had been married twice, the first marriage beginning in romance, ending in tragedy, & they separated. Mr. Clemens then took up a cudgel for a woman similarly separated, defending, excusing, & damning the human race for making the defense a necessity. ~~Woman that I am, I always wonder how much of the past cause of the unhappiness must be laid to the woman—unless the man is a drunkard, then I think most of it must be laid to her. She doesn't know her power.~~ Mr. Clemens laid all the faults of all mankind to the mothers for they alone—alone—have the teaching of their children. But he didn't mean all that—for it goes against his gospel and weakens his position. I sat on that stiff little chair defending the mothers & I couldn't say what I ought to have said because I was blind with the suddenness of his attack. ~~I trembled & wanted to say~~ [page ends] [MTP TS 78]. Note: again the strikeouts are instructive; along with the June 3 entry (none were made for June 4 or 5), this entry has a large X-out from margin to margin.

Two copies of the first American edition of Eve's Diary, Translated from the Original MS were deposited with the copyright office. The book was released this month [Hirst, "A Note on the Text" Afterword materials p.27, Oxford ed. 1996].

Miranda N. Thomas wrote from Wash. D.C. to Sam, having noticed in a copy of the Digest a few weeks prior, the "optical illusion" of Sam's photo with the imagined little girl leaning to his ear. She enclosed the clipping (not in the file) [MTP]. Note: see photo in the Dec. 8 entry when it ran in Harper's Weekly.

June 7 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara at the 21 Fifth Ave. home in N.Y.C.

Clärchen dear, it is good news you send, very good news indeed. I take it that with your voice's progress your health improves, too—may it continue!

I hope you will not have to stay in New York after this month, for I judge you are going to have blistering weather there.

We are living in a solitude, but it is a pleasant one. We have no near neighbors. Yesterday towards sunset I was standing on the piazza when a couple of beautiful young deer sauntered leisurely across the grounds a little distance away, & stopped & took an indolent survey of me, then passed lazily along & disappeared among the trees. Jean is going to put salt on a rock there & encourage them to come again & be sociable & friendly.

I am dictating two hours every morning, & enjoying it—& enjoying fine health, too, but I do no work. Jean drives, & Miss Lyon walks, but I only read & loaf, afternoons.

Mr. & Mrs. Rogers are coming presently, per automobile, & maybe I shall go back with them to Fairhaven for a few days.

With a hug & a kiss & a have-a-good-time, dear ashcat, / Father [MTP].

Sam also sent a telegram to William Dean Howells: "Please dont burden yourself with Furness story—I think I Can tell it well enough to answer" [MTHL 2: 808].

Note: the source gives the A.D. for this day as dealing with "the parallelism of the situation in the Furness household, described to him by Howells, with the story 'Was it Heaven? or Hell?' (Harper's, December 1902...), and with the elaborate precautions taken in the Clemens household during the winter of 1902-03 to keep from Livy the knowledge that Jean was dangerously ill with pneumonia" [n1].

Clemens' A.D. this day included: The difficulties of Clara's position during her mother's and Jean's illness—The Susy Crane letter—Mr. Clemens' version of William Dean Howells' story—Taking Livy to Florence, and her death, there [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean, 11:30; 2:15

Edith

Yesterday Mr. Paine and I went off for a walk, up over the hill in Monadnock direction. We went to find a wonderful pink bush, but were stopped before we could reach the distant spot by a thunder storm. We crept in under a hemlock tree & with the rain dripping from our noses, we philosophized. In these days I'm not as happy as I ought to be, & the very unhappiness is teaching me things of course.

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

Is it the loneliness, perhaps?

Evenings Mr. Clemens reads aloud to us. The Jungle Books now.

Standing alone on the porch, Mr. Clemens saw 2 deer sauntering along close to the house [MTP TS 79; also mention Gribben 378].

John Daniels for the Congo Reform Assoc., Boston wrote to Sam "to ask for further aid in the work of this Association." The urgent appeal to their friends stemmed from a debt of $5,000. "We must have money." Could Sam at least supply some names of likely donors? [MTP].

Harper & Brothers wrote to Isabel Lyon: "Replying to your favor of June 5th asking us to send one copy of Harper's Magazine, the issue of December 1902 to Mr. S.L. Clemens, Dublin, N.H. we regret that we are unable to comply...as this issue of the Magazine is entirely out of print" [MTP].

June 8 Friday – Clara Clemens' 32nd birthday. She called her father on the telephone, that device he used to swear and rail at in Hartford in the late 1870s [June 9 to Clara].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Santa telephoned for it is her birthday & her voice made us lonelier than ever. When she asked me how things were here I blurted out that it was lonely & Mr. Clemens felt it too, & from his last letter to her she said she could know it. Then later we held a "Lodge of Sorrow"—Mr. Clemens & I—and have pronounced this Upton House as failure. It is remote from all human beings—and wonderful as the view may be, the "human jewel" is more of a necessity than is the view.

Mother arrived in F. from Washington today.

Today Mr. Paine went down to New York [MTP TS 79-80].

William Dean Howells wrote from Kittery Point, Maine to Isabel Lyon that he'd received a telegram from Furness (not extant): "Please tell Clemens...I remember no more of the Furness story now than he does," but a friend of Pilla Howells was "acquainted with the precise circumstances" and he would write him again once he saw her in a few days [MTHL 2: 809]. Note: the Furness story was a parallel one to Sam's "Was it Heaven? or Hell?" Howells wrote again on June 11.

Samuel S. McClure wrote to Sam. "I arranged with Peter Finley Dunne to syndicate his articles. On the average I got about $1,250. an article, of which he got $1,000. and I got $250. I think that a series of short articles, made up of parts of your autobiography, each more or less completely a story, could be syndicated for at least as much as Mr. Dunne's." McClure offered to take up the syndication and pay Sam an 80% royalty of the gross receipts [MTP]. Note: Sam replied ca. June 11. He was contemplating dumping Harper's and letting McClure syndicate 50,000 words at $50,000. See IVL entry for May 27. His unhappiness with Harper's stemmed from their reluctance to publish Christian Science; he also perceived they were not advertising his books properly.

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam enclosing papers for him to sign for him to be come "a member of the Societe des Auteurs et Compositeurs Dramatiques of France. It is necessary that these papers be signed in order that you may receive your royalties" [MTP].

Barbara Mullen wrote from Moberly, Mo. to bring before Sam what she considered to be "a slander that is being perpetrated upon you almost every day in the town where you passed your boyhood..." It seems that the recent new hotel, named after Twain, was so full up daily that the hotel agents were going to the train depot and calling out repeatedly, "Mark Twain's full!" [MTP]. Note: Sam answered on June 14.

June 9 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara.

Clärchen dear, many happy returns! it was a joy to hear your dear voice in the telephone yesterday.

This is a special letter. I have a note from Mrs. [Charlotte Teller] Johnson (whom you do not like), saying she has finished the 4-act play which was only in the form of skeleton-notes when I saw it the first of May. Good or bad, this is an astonishing achievement for so brief a time. I am forgetting: I did see more than a skeleton, I saw half of an act in completed form. Mansfield has sent for the MS, & Lorraine wants to read it next. This play may not be a good one, but she will write a good one yet. She has talent & industry.

She is going to ask you over to dinner; also Percy Grant, who called, the other evening, & asked to become an ex-resident member of the "A Club"—that group of 13 pen-laborers at No. 3. Perhaps you will decline, but I hope not.

There's been no way to kill time, after my 2 hours of dictation, mornings, & I was likely to die of the boredom of it. But now I am saved. I have come across a story whose two heroes are Bambino and an old Admiral, & am enthused by it, & am going straight to work and finish it. It will take a couple of months; & so, my afternoons will not be dreary hereafter.

With 'bunnance of hugs & kisses & birthday congratulations, / Father [MTP]. Note: no recent note from Charlotte Teller Johnson is extant. See June 18 to Clara. The "A Club" at 3 Fifth Ave., N.Y.C. was a group of writers living together, including Mrs. Johnson. See Apr. 11 entry for McFarland's description of the "A Club," strictly speaking not a club but a commune.

Sam also wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson at 3 Fifth Ave. N.Y. "It is fine news. I wish I could be present, but shall be delayed until Monday or Tuesday" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

~~These are days of struggle & I can't write very much.~~

Mr. Clemens is not altogether satisfied with the dictating. It comes too regularly & he can never stand routine of any kind.

Oh, but it has been a damned enough day. Jean was insolent to her father. He stayed in his bad all the afternoon. ~~Climaxes are coming—the [illegible word]'s letter came & my great spirit sat & wrote Oh C.C. [several illegible words]; & here I sit waiting for the electric lights to go out at [illegible word] & I'm smoking cigarettes [illegible words].~~

~~June 9, 1906—From Dublin I am writing Miss Hyde for she predicted calamity for me a year hence & the ghost—the demon of that calamity is ever beside me [MTP TS 80].~~

Samuel S. McClure wrote to Sam, thinking it might be profitable to syndicate some of Sam's books, like RI and TS. He suggested Sam ask H.H. Rogers about the idea. Also, he wrote, "Mr. Will Irwin of San Francisco, who rewrote the copy of the New York Sun describing the earthquake will call upon you within a few days. I think that we ought to get together and squeeze all the money there is to be had for you out of your work serially. I wish to heaven I were the publisher of your book[s]" [MTP].

D. Willers wrote from Fayette, NY to invite Sam to "Old Home Week" commencing Aug. 19 [MTP].

June 10 Sunday – In the evening in Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Let me congratulate, let me shout! I wrote you a good deal of a letter to-day, & took a world of pains with it, in the pretty doubtful hope of persuading you to put the work aside a while & not destroy yourself with it, but I have burnt it without a regret for the labor wasted. Charlotte dear, you have come through handsomely, you remarkable creature! Take a good satisfying rest—you deserve it.

Indeed yes, I wish I could be at that dinner; & it might have happened, too, but for the accident that whereas I made ready yesterday to leave for New York to-day to begin a lawsuit, news came last night that I needn't go for six weeks yet. I felt disappointed. And quite naturally, too, for I did want to escape from this place for a week or two. Most privately & most confidentially I wish to whisper to you that this beautiful, this enchantingly beautiful homestead, is a perfectly heartbreaking solitude. It would be that, even if the summerers were already here—which they are not; for they all live two or three miles away—too far for me.

I've stopped dictating—tired of it. I've stopped reading autobiography & admiring it—tired to death of it! We are tired of each other's faces. "The others find ways—such as they are—to kill the time, but I can't find any way. Jean takes long drives every day—I never do, I detest it. Miss Lyon takes long walks every afternoon over the hills & through the woods—I have not stepped a foot off the piazza in all these weeks—or is it years? I was never so dismally situated in my life before. It is so different from last year! We couldn't get that house this year, but we have spoken for it for next year. Oh, Solitude—think of it! two days ago I was standing on the piazza at 6 p.m. when two beautiful deer came sauntering across the grounds & stopped & looked me over as impudently as if they thought of buying me. Then they seemed to conclude that they could do better for less money, & sauntered indolently away.

.... [cut here is a description of pages he decided not to send, including an "incomprehensible" PS to Dr. Northrup that was "merely a surreptitious letter" to Teller]

I'll study the play several days, when it comes, but I shall be afraid to criticise, because I am not competent.

You wrote a real letter at last, Charlotte, & a most cheerful & inspiring & satisfactory one. / SLC [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

The morning business hour is all the day now. This morning it was quite a wonder—but I felt pretty ill when Mr. Clemens was reading aloud to me "The Brotherhood of Man"—a bit of a ms. he wrote 1½ years ago. I'd been so ill in the night & I couldn't sleep. Jean's insolences—poor child—& the great lonely hours have given the place a new name. The King calls it "The House of Mirth" [MTP TS 80-81]. Note: This entry and part of June 11 are crossed out with a diagonal X from margin to margin.

Sumner Bass Pearmain wrote to Sam. "Delighted to have this done for you—This is a copy from the Boston Transcript. I trust you are all well" [MTP]. Note: No enclosure is in the file.

June 10 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote a reply on the June 8 letter from Samuel S. McClure.

It may be that I can accept your offer, but I can't tell about that yet. As to the kind of stuff to be taken from the auto[biography] that is not a thing for me but is for some one to do who is representing you—Any time that Bynner can come.

First be necessary for Mr B to find out if the stuff here is the kind that he wants [MTP]. Note: Witter Bynner, at this time editor for McClure's.

June 11 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson, trying to cheer her up; she was discouraged "after a long hard siege of work," as he put it. He regretted his "foolish letter" to her, and acknowledged that her "nerves would be worn" from her "long toil."

That I should vex you, or pain you, of all persons—you know I would not do it purposely; you must surely know that. Take heart. / Sincerely Are you obliged to do the work now? Might not a month's rest be an advantage to you & to it, too? Even if you resent this suggestion I have to take the risk & make it. And at least I mean it in good part. I would say three months if I dared [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. this day included: The beautiful morning—Noble situation of the house—Its one defect, loneliness—The visit of the deer—Sympathy with Adam and Eve in Garden of Eden—Eruption of Vesuvius—Earthquake in San Francisco [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Tonight when Nancy Brush was here, Mr. Clemens read aloud "Red Dog"—Kaa's eyes were like "stale opals"—such a good description, he said. I wish Kipling could hear him read those masterpieces & see him read them, for it is a satisfying sight.

Today at half past five Mr. Clemens called me & read to me a fable he has written a short time before. He had concocted the fable in bed this morning, very early, & later he read the fable again to Nancy & Jean. It's about the animals looking in a mirror to see a beautiful something, but each one saw only a reflection of himself & accused the house cat & all the others of lying [MTP TS 81; noted by Gribben 381]. Note: "Red Dog" by Kipling, who's phrase was ("the light seemed to go out of his eyes and leave them like stale opals")

William Dean Howells wrote from Kittery Point, Maine to Sam, giving him the full particulars of the Furness story: "Mrs. Fiske, who recalled the facts to Pilla, was here yesterday, and repeated them to me" [MTHL 2: 809-10]. Note: See June 9 from Howells.

Harper & Brothers wrote to Isabel Lyon. "We are in receipt of your letter of June 8th and have sent the 2 copies of EVE'S DIARY. /Harper's Magazine for December 1902 has been out of stock for several years. We shall, however, endeavor to purchase a copy for Mr.Clemens..." [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam. "I have your letter of June 8th regarding Mr. Ducquois' application to dramatize "The Californian's Tale". I will write Miss Marbury about it and am sure we will be able to arrange satisfactorily" [MTP].

June 11 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam gave instructions to reply to the June 9 from D. Willers: "Tell him to go" [MTP].

June 12 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Samuel S. McClure. "Just please call on Mr. Rogers & talk your ideas to him about everything. The idea of syndicating those books seems to me a good one & I dont see that it could be objectionable to the publishers at all" [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. this day included: The San Francisco earthquake—Mme. Sembrich's experience—The strange absence of fear shown by all who were shaken up by the earthquake—Clemens speaks of the great San Francisco earthquake which occurred when he was living there—He learns through Richard Williams of the safety of Steve and Jim Gillis [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean 11:30 violent; 4:20

I have to sleep on Bromidia.

The loneliness here this year is enough to do one a damage, and the loneliness is not because one is alone, either.

Gerome came in for tea this afternoon and told me of [illegible word] part of his recent life. What a dear impressionable & beautiful young creature he is. He has not been able to draw much of late, his eyes have troubled him, & so his active young mind has been running along in the producing of plays. He gave me a synopsis of one, which has a pretty invention, with enough of the impossible in it to make it quite taking, I should think.

Mr. Clemens slept a good part of the afternoon & came down with his auto.-ms. to read, but he didn't read it. Gerome was here & then came dinner & then a visit to Jean, & then he went to bed again, tired out [MTP TS 81-81]. Note: Gerome Brush.

June 13 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote one sentence to H.H. Rogers, asking him to get his Christian Science book from Harper's and put it in his safe until he arrived [MTHHR 610].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Beginning of headache. E

Mr. Paine came back today from his N.Y. trip. He saw C.C. several times & found her the “dearest thing” and “the most beautiful creature” in the world. He told her that this is “the most beautiful place on earth & also the most lonely”, and it is. I’m afraid, in fact I know, that Mr. Clemens is a little tired of him, but he’ll get over that. He must—for Mr. Paine is doing a great work for Mr. Clemens & the children. He is invaluable, for his interest does not slacken in his daily labor.

~~This day I am ill. The nervous terrors of yesterday & the several past days have done their work—and done it well.~~

Tonight Mr. Clemens read from a ms. he wrote 30 years ago: “Captain Stormfield’s Visit to Heaven”. It is a wonderful piece of satire & is written with the same touch, & the convictions of today. It was intended as a satire on “The Gates Ajar” & years ago Mr. Howells wanted Mr. Clemens to publish it & ask Dean Stanley to write an introduction to it. In 1891 just before they left the Hartford house Mr. Clemens read it, but didn’t like it then. Now he does, & the part he read tonight is publishable [MTP TS 82-83]. Note: The Gates Ajar (1868) by Mrs. Elizabeth Stuart Ward [Gribben 741].

Samuel S. McClure wrote to Sam.

I want to thank Miss Lyon very much for her letter of the 11th. / I regard this matter which we are discussing as of the first importance to both of us, and I would be ready to arrange to spend two or three days in Dublin to look over the manuscript. When I am there I can talk over the other matters which I wrote about [MTP].

Lester Ralph wrote about this day from Warrensburg, NY to thank Sam for his note about the drawings for Eve’s Diary and was glad they pleased [MTP].

Abraham Clemens (1831-1915), age 74 and a cousin of Sam’s, was married at Claysville, Pa., 11 p.m. to Mrs. Elizabeth McFarland, age 67 or 72. New York papers reported the marriage on June 15, including the Times and the Evening World. The latter added that “Mark Twain telegraphed his congratulations” (not extant) and gave the bride’s age as 72, and that they eloped: “Mrs Clemens stated that she believed her husband would not require discipline similar to that she used on her last husband whom she kept in a tree for three hours with a shotgun trained on him because of his refusal to comply with her wishes” [Times, p.1; World p.16]. Note: Sam and Abraham were third cousins, their great-grandfathers being brothers.

Clemens’ A.D. this day included: The days of reporting on the Morning Call—The advent of Smiggy McGlural & the resignation of Clemens—Destruction of Morning Call building in recent earthquake—Good times with Bret Harte in Morning Call office [MTP: Autodict2:MTE 254-63].

June 14 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Miss Martha S. Bensley (later Bruere) (1879-1953), author who had her articles on the Russian revolution published in the Mar. 1906 issue of the A.F. of Labor’s magazine, American Federationist.

I am sending you a small book. But I do not wish you to think I approve of the pictures, for I do not. I think they are scandalous. I tried hard to get the artist to put clothes on those people, but he would not do it at any price that I could afford. Please tear the pictures out, then you need not be afraid to leave the book lying around. / With kindest regards and best wishes [MTP].

Note: Sam sent Eve’s Diary; he liked to joke about the drawings without clothes. Apr. 6 entry lists Bensley as a collaborator with Charlotte Teller Johnson on a play not performed. A N.Y. Times article of Apr. 16, p.1, identifies Martha Bensley as “connected with a syndicate which supplies Russian stories for magazines.” She was questioned in the article about the whereabouts of Maxim Gorky, who had been turned out of the third hotel after the scandal involving his live-in mistress broke.

Sam also wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson but did not send it; Instead he sent the draft to Isabel V. Lyon, writing: “I did not send this, Miss Lyon, but spewing it out relieved me.” The note he wrote to her:

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

That Mr. Mansfield should decline your play—or anybody’s play—is matter of business, & cannot astonish me; but that he should do it without the courtesy of a word, is a thing which does surprise me.

For many months I have had the conviction that God Almighty has got loose & is down here somewhere in disguise. Can this be He, do you think? / Sincerely Yours / SL. Clemens [MTP].

Sam also replied to the June 8 from Barbara Mullen in Moberly, Mo. “Don’t you mind that. There is good in it, & no harm. It cheers many a dry traveller with the pleasant thought that there’s at least somebody that’s full” [MTP].
Note: Mullen was a teacher at Hannibal High School.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Bad headache today.

Edith.

Tonight Mr. Clemens read the most readable part of the second part of “Capt. Stormfield’s Visit to Heaven”. It is delightful & he plans to “throw it all right into the autobiography”. Such a wealth of imagination. He read me an unpublishable bit from the same ms. this morning.

[written diagonally across lower portion of page:]

Eve’s Diary has come and it is charming with Lester Ralph’s illustrations. How I watched that book grow a year ago [MTP TS 83].

Sam’s A.D. of this day titled only by date dealt with Bret Harte’s character and his desire to imitate Charles Dickens; the piece was selected for MTE [263-8]. Note: Entirely about Bret Harte—his appearance, dress, writings, etc. [MTP: Autodict2].

June 15 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Last night Mr. Clemens did not sleep very well. In fact it was one o’clock before he had even a touch of drowsiness; so this morning he did not feel like dictating. I telephoned to Mr. Paine & Miss Hobby & then after our “Business Hour” and I had written a letter or two, I went back to Mr. Clemens’s room at eleven o’clock & he began to read Mrs. Johnson’s play “Mirabeau” which arrived last Monday. ~~I cannot find fitting words tonight with which to praise it.~~ It is a prodigious piece of work & a remarkable one; full of interest & talent right straight through. Mr. Clemens read 2 acts before luncheon & after resting until 3 o’clock, he read to the finish—five acts. His reading it today was inspirational, for by the evening post came a note from Mrs. Johnson asking for it, & it lies ready & stamped to go off by the morning post. Mr. Clemens read it beautifully. He has to read anything like a play aloud to get at its values, & so the day was a good one for me, & for him too, I think. C.C. cannot understand how his presence is always restful for me. And it is. If I’m tired or nervous & he comes in to talk over things, or I go to him in his tobaccoed room, I’m rested before I’ve been with him very long, & then I’m more than rested, I’m refreshed and stimulated [MTP TS 84]. Note: see also Gribben 690. See Sam’s evaluation of Johnson’s play in his June 16 letter to her.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-lo Co. letterhead to Sam.

I returned from England this week. MacAlister sends his love to you. The English Plasmon business is apparently in very good shape....Hammond has kept his word about withdrawing the bankruptcy petition, and has paid the fees of the receiver and trustee amounting to about $2,000. All suits have been stopped, except my libel and slander suits [He also gave some details about the pin co.; MTP].

June 15 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Harper & Brothers: “If that person was authorized he naturally got his authority from C&W [Chatto & Windus], but Mr. Clemens knows nothing about it” [MTP].

Lyon also wrote for Sam to Samuel S. McClure. “Mr. Clemens suggests that what you do look at he would like you to examine instead of glancing at. There are more than 200[,]000 words—Good little hotel a short half hour away” [MTP]. Note: the MS was his autobiography.

June 16 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam began a long letter to Charlotte Teller Johnson he added to on June 17, 18. Several portions of pages were cut out.

I am sending you a book. You are not obliged to read it, but you are obliged to admire the pictures, for they are just as sweet & cunning as they can be. Perhaps you remember that that publisher insisted that an artist would not be able to get an variety or effectiveness into pictures of human figures where he was denied the help of drapery. I would like to exhibit him without drapery in church & see if it wouldn't change his mind.

It is a beautiful play, Charlo, & is full of life & energy & character. The people are not specters, they are alive. Mirabeau is greatly portrayed; you have missed no detail of his rich & varied nature, he stands forth clear, winning, worshipful, a majestic & benignant colossus. The new Marie Antoinette, unstable, vascillating, sometimes queen, sometimes woman, sometimes both, is a very valuable addition.

I tried reading the play to myself, knowing I should arrive nowhere by that process—and that is where I arrived. I must read it aloud, if I would arrive somewhere. I read a couple of pages aloud to the furniture—of course that was a failure, & embarrassing; the furniture made fun of me. Then I took a liberty which you must condone: I shut off Miss Lyon's afternoon walk, yesterday, & required her to act as audience, which she was properly glad to do. For a first-night, I doubt if any performance ever went off with a more intemperate & sustained enthusiasm. Of course it was a prejudiced audience: half of it would be prone to admire the play in any case, & the other half know it would be much healthier to admire it than to fail of that courtesy; but no matter: after all allowances, the verdict was far from valueless; the admiration was sincere, & the enthusiasm unforced.

Even by the light thrown by that ignorant & ill-prepared first-reading I established on fact, beyond question: that the play reads strongly, brightly, movingly; of course these effects would come out still more in a month & much more—forcibly in subsequent readings. I cannot see any room for doubt that it will also play. The audience (which includes myself) expressed the conviction that if it were put on the stage it would play itself. It was a prejudiced audience, it is true; but it was unanimous, it was hearty; &, the predilections notwithstanding, I attach value to its opinion.

There was to be a second reading to-day, but just as the performance was closing at 6 p.m., your letter was brought up; therefore we hurried the MS to the mail. The letter was 22 hours coming to Dublin; by the grocer's negligence it lay there all day yesterday—10 hours. Per those terms you will not get the MS until Monday. I am sorry for the day, Charlotte, by you see how it happened.

In revising, you will naturally have out the “to-night”—but don't forget it. Let him say, “she is my guest.” It is fine, & must not be weakened by a superfluity.

I am not competent to criticise anything but phrasings, verbal hastinesses, minced metaphors, & so on. By the time you are done revising, there won't be any to criticise. But if by chance you shall overlook one, I shan't. There is one bit of heedlessness that you may possibly overlook—but you mustn't. More than once you use the word “court” where you mean the King, or the queen, or both, & not the court at all.

Yes, I want him back when you are done with him. and by & by, in the future, when you shall have finished revising him, I must have him in that form, too. That's the one I am going to put under the verbal microscope, if you don't object.

I am glad you have put him by & sent your steam-hammer going on other work. Don't look at him again for three months, except some theater require it. In three months, unconscious cerebration will have done the revising for you, & there'll be nothing to do but register the product.

I am doing nothing today. That is to say,

Against all etiquette this letter—as usual—is stringing out, & stringing out, & will have to suffer what Kipling's Mulvaney suffered. He was a corporal, & for misconduct he was “rejoiced.”

[portion of page cut out]

Charlotte, you certainly are clever if you have really guessed that riddle, for I give you my word no one else has ever guessed it. Now try your hand on [remainder of page cut off] [MTP].

Note: the pages cut off begs the question as to who did the cutting and why? If Sam, then perhaps he wanted to delete passages he felt might discourage her, as he seemed to be acting as a sort of mentor or literary counsel, and he did deal with her in a tender fashion. If Charlotte cut the passages, well there's no telling why. Or, perhaps the letter simply got damaged over the years. The notation about the letter taking 22 hours from NY to Dublin, yet spending 10 hours at the grocers, suggests that the normal mail time was 12 hours.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Petit mal. [Jean]

No dictating today either. For 2½ hours this afternoon Mr. Clemens read auto-ms. to me. It is solidly interesting, & later Gladys Thayer came in for tea & the Beethoven Fifth Symphony. "All drying up for music" she has been. Mr. Clemens sat off in the dining room enjoying it too—but I thought he wasn't there, for of late he has sometimes seemed to avoid music. He moods have been quite at variance with his former self. He is none the less great, but he is living in a world apart [MTP TS 84-85].

June 17 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam added to his June 16 to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Sunday continued. I've come back to bed—there was no way to put in the time. It is still raining as hard as ever, & is reposeful & contenting. I finished both letters—oh, acres of MS!—make them kill time for me as long as I could. If by good luck Mr. Rogers says yes—but I know he will, & then I shall do as I've said.

And after all, it's only 3 p.m. Read? No, there's nothing I want to read. I think I will discuss with you the human race—as you & Howells phrase it. No—I think I will read. Roba di Roma; a good rainy-weather book. Good-bye, Du. /SLC [MTP]. Note: Roba di Roma (1863) by William Wetmore Story (1819-1895). Sam had read this book in Oct. 1878 in Florence. See Gribben p. 669.

Sam also replied to the June 11 from William Dean Howells.

It was wrong to bother you about the [Furness] story. I only needed to say: "This is Mr. Howell's story, turned into fiction-form"—& then insert the tale "Was it Heaven?—or Hell?" I've done that. In fact that was the only right way.

The dictating goes lazily & pleasantly on. (With intervals.) I find that I've been at it, off & on, nearly two hours a day for 155 days, since Jan. 9. To be exact, I've dictated 75 hours in 80 days & loafed 75 days. I've added 60,000 words in the month that I've been here; which indicates that I've dictated during 20 days of that time—40 hours, at an average of 1,500 words an hour. It's a plenty, & I am satisfied.

There's a good deal of "fat." I've dictated, (from Jan. 9) 210,000 words, & the "fat" adds about 50,000 more. The "fat" is old pigeon-holed things, of the years gone by, which I or editors didn't das't to print. For instance, I am dumping in the little old book which I read to you in Hartford about 30 years ago, & which you said "publish—& ask Dean Stanley to furnish an introduction; he'll do it." "(Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven.)" It reads quite to suit me, without altering a word, now that it isn't to see print until I am dead.

To-morrow I mean to dictate a chapter which will get my heirs & assigns burnt alive if they venture to print it this side of 2006 A.D.—which I judge they won't. There'll be lots of such chapters if I live 3 or 4 years longer. The edition of A.D. 2006 will make a stir when it comes out. I shall be hovering around taking notice, along with other dead pals. You are invited. / Mark.

P.S.

I think Miss Lyon told you the reason we couldn't send you the Autobiography—there's only one typed copy, & we had to have it for reference, to guard against repetitions. The making of a second copy is now begun; & so, we can presently begin to mail batches of it to you. This book is already perfectly outrageous, in spots, but that's nothing—it's going to be worse by & by if I live beyond my appointed date. I don't care for my other books, now, but I dote on this one as Adam used to dote on a fresh new deformed child after he was 900 years old & wasn't expecting any more surprises. I've written a short Preface. I like the title of it: "Spoken from the Grave." It will prepare the reader for the solemnities within.

I'm in the middle of a history of Bret Harte, but I'll break into that with a newer & hotter interest tomorrow—according to the laws of this book: the newest & hottest interest takes precedence of anything I may be talking about. The rest of Bret will be postponed—like Orion. (You didn't see the last of him; he got postponed & pushed ahead several times, by intruding, warmer interests of various kinds.)

Dialogue the other day, over the long-distance, between Miss Lyon & Clara (bad telephone):

Miss L. Your father wants an MS book which is unfinished. In drawer in his study. (Yells it 3 times.)

C. "Oh, an MS book? What's the title? (Yells it 3 times.)

L. Has no title. First sentence is, "Tell him to go to hell!" (Yells it many times.)

C. Tell him to go...?"

L. Yes.

C. Go where?

L. Go to hell! (Several times)

C. I can't get the last word.

L. Oh—hell!

C. Can't get it. Spell it.

L. H—e—double—ll HELL! Get it now? Tell—him—to—go—to—HELL!

C. (Shouting.) Tell him to go to hell?

L. That's it. Your father wants it.

[cross-written in the right margin:] You see we might have been hauled to Court by the telephone company [MTHL 2: 810-12]. Note: Sam thought "Was it Heaven?" should be inserted into his A.D. The source gives "Adam's Monument" as the MS yelled for on the phone, DV 309 and 309a, MTP.

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Dear Uncle Henry: / Certainly I retain you; and—as you suggest—I mean to go to you & begin operations at the source. First, I want M^cClure to see you & explain his scheme—I think he clearly understands that no scheme can be arranged with me until it has secured your approval first. He wants 50,000 words of my Autobiography for his syndicate, for $50,000 cash, or for 80% of the gross receipts. I have now about 250,000 words for him to choose from.

I'd like to see a lot of this stuff in print before I die—but not the bulk of it, oh no! I am not desiring to be crucified yet. Howells thinks the Auto will outlive the Innocents Abroad a thousand years, & I know it will. I would like the literary world to see (as Howells says) that the form of this book is one of the most memorable literary inventions of the ages. And so it is. It ranks with the steam engine, the printing press & the electric telegraph. I'm the only person who has ever found out the right way to build an autobiography.

I've had a secret enemy at Harpers from the very beginning. I suppose it is Duneka, that Jesuit. With a sleeping partner, Major Leigh. Duneka has defeated several legitimate projects of mine. Unless he is a fool, he knows there's more advertising for Harper & my books in M^cClure's project than we could buy for the whole Harper income; but if Duneka can defeat it he'll do it.

His conduct in the "Library of Humor" matter convicts him of being not merely a thief, but a particularly low-down sneak-thief. I desire his scalp.

My project is this: go to New York a couple of weeks from now or a shade later, & have some talks with you & Lauterbach, & perhaps a talk with Duneka. Then I propose to get out the yacht & take you up to Fairhaven & play billiards until you have to return to New York; then take you down in the yacht & look over the ground again. Then back to Dublin via Boston.

How does it strike you? / This is the Sabbath day. Try to keep it holy. Ys ever... [MTHHR 611-12]. Note: Frederick T. Leigh, treasurer of Harpers. Edward Lauterbach, Sam's attorney at this time. See June 23 entry of Lyon's journal.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Jean, 8:30. Petit mal all day / Today I lunched with the Danas. It was like a dream to see them again & to see them so little changed. / Mr. Pearmain brought Mr. Ireland over this afternoon" [MTP TS 85].

June 18 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam finished his June 16, 17 to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Monday. I keep forgetting to warn you that if you write me by way of Ireland I may never get the letter. There's only one way to account for a now-&-then due letter that didn't come: the "New Hampshire" was spelt out, the P.O. clerks, in their haste, started it for Dublin, Ireland, by way of Hampshire, England. P.O. clerks are not made by God, but by hand. Now they're going via France! On May 26 a letter full of bills for payment started from home, addressed "Dublin, New Hampshire," & didn't reach me until June 14. In mid-ocean the steamer's mail-clerks discovered the error & put the letter ashore at Cherbourg for return. It came back decorated with French 15-centime stamps of the "Due" species—and not payable by the United States, who made the mistake, but by me, who didn't. Of such is the human race!

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

Write it "Dublin, N.H.," with a big, big, N.H., Charlotte. Most P.O. clerks are near-sighted, & the rest are dead [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Clara at 21 Fifth Ave. N.Y. enclosing his photo from The Weekly Digest.

Clara dear, if any of these photographs are in the house, examine them & see if you can detect this nightgowned child that is whispering in my ear. A lady in Norfolk Va. has made the discovery, but she has emphasized the pillow-wrinkles with her pencil to help me make out the shape. There are 3 different negatives, but the child is in them all.

I am mighty glad you are to have Lilly Burbank with you, as long as we can't have her with us, which I wish we could. Now you will be happy, & not lonesome. We are in luck, too. Mr. Allison has been scouring the country for kittens for us, & to-day they have come. Beautiful little creatures, & just weaned; a gray one & two black ones with white gloves & half-masks. They are on my bed helping me write. And so this place is no longer the Lodge of Sorrow (my name for it), nor the House of Mirth (Miss Lyon's name for it[]).

Mrs. Johnson [Charlotte Teller Johnson] sent her play—in the rough, for it was pushed through in 5 weeks—and it is fine & strong & brisk. Five acts. I read it aloud to Miss Lyon Friday, & sent it back—it was needed, for copying—but it will be returned to me presently, then I will send it to Norfolk or will read it to you when you come, whichever you prefer. I'm not overworking—oh, my land no! I dictate 2 hours in the morning, about 4 days per week; and read & revise an hour or two, afternoons, with Miss Lyon for audience. I do nothing, after that, but cripple time—I can't really kill it. I've done about 3 volumes the size of Huck Finn since Jan. 9, & I think they're mighty satisfactory. Love to you, dear; & much the same to Miss Lilly [MTP]. Note: MTP catalogs this as "18 or 19 June," though Sam, losing track of the date, headed it June 20. The postmark is 5 a.m., Dublin June 19. Since it is doubtful Sam wrote it earlier than 5 a.m. on June 19, it is placed on June 18. Miss Emily W. Burbank.

Clemens' A.D. this day included: The five letters written by three women, twenty-seven years ago, and Clemens' comments upon them. Bret Harte again [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: In an old sack of letters sent to SLC from Keokuk about 5 years ago he unearthed a batch of 5 letters this morning which are a romance & a tragedy. Today he dictated in the house & his topic was the 5 letters and their tragedy, a dictation to be published 500 years hence.

Three kittens were brought to Mr. Clemens room by Katherine this morning, & he is going to keep all of them; renting them for $5.00 for the season with the understanding that good homes are provided for them in the fall [MTP TS 85].

Note: Victor Fischer of MTP enlightens about the 5 letters, objects of Sam's June 18 dictation: "They are not letters to Clemens; they are taken from a sack of letters from strangers to one another that Clemens says he had had for five years. Briefly the letters tell in the first person the story of a young woman who in 1879 claimed that she had gotten pregnant by a married man and pleaded to be taken in and helped by an older woman, after which a complicated story is told, with accusations against her and with her denials."

The letters have been catalogued by the MTP: Mrs. William Griffiths to Mollie Clemens, Oct. 5, 1879; Mollie Clemens to Mrs. William Griffiths Oct. 9, 1879; Mrs. William Griffiths to Mollie Clemens; Mollie Clemens to Sylvia M. Hunt Oct. 16, 1879; Sylvia M. Hunt to Mollie Clemens Oct. 18, 1879.

June 19 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

10:30 p.m. & we are just home from the Handasyd Cabots where we 3 have been to supper & then to hear music later. Mr. Copeland was, there, & he is an exquisite pianist. Mr. Cabot played the cello beautifully & the evening was a delight. Besides ourselves & Mr. Copeland, were Dr. Russell, Mr. Brush, Dr. Porter, Mr. Joe Smith, Miss Putnam &—but that's all. Mrs. Cabot is a very handsome creature; she was in a turquoise blue evening gown, she was a picture. The light fell in a great blast upon her cheek & bare shoulder, & she was lovely to look at.

It was the “deity” that formed the basis of today's dictation & both Mr. Paine & Miss Hobby expected lightning to strike that room. Miss H. asked me later what I thought of Mr. Clemens's views & I told her I was used to them & that I'd been an unbeliever for so many years that to me his views of God were a literary criticism & nothing more. My own belief in the eternal isn't weakened any by his terrific words—neither is his own, I think [MTP TS 85-86]. Note: the Cabot family was among Boston's Brahmins, also called “First families of Boston,” descended from John Cabot b. 1680 who immigrated to Salem, Mass. in 1700. E. Handasyd Cabot (b. ca 1869), and Elise P. Cabot (Mrs. E. Handasyd Cabot) .

Clemens' A.D. this day included: About the character of God, as represented in the Old and New Testaments [MTP: Autodict2].

S.G. Niles wrote from Nashville, Tenn. wanting to know if Clemens' articles on Christian Science had ever been published in book form [MTP].

June 20 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

“There was a row in Silver Street”

Day after day Mr. Clemens is so harassed & tormented when he is reading the dictated matter by continually coming across Hobby blunders, & the worse one—the most exasperating one is where she invariably corrects Mr. Clemens' writing “one thousand” or “one hundred” where he has said “a thousand”, or “a hundred”. Today it passed the limit of his endurance. Through his tightly shut teeth he damned that “hell-fired word” until he was tired; & then he went for “that idiot!”—“that devilish woman!” “I'd like to taker her out & have her scalped and gutted!”

It was such a joy to me to hear Mr. Clemens chuckle out from the living room while Jean & I were at luncheon: “There was a row in Silver Street; Be God I wonder why!” It follows morning discussions of a certain order, or disorder. I sat in my study this morning & listened to the dictating. It struck at the fundamental parts of the Christian creed & isn't to be published for 500 years. Miss Hobby who has strained points in her wish for chaperones, won't need one now I think, because discussion of the Immaculate Conception doesn't leave much uncovered. Not if Mr. Clemens is doing the discussing ~~which he did~~ [MTP TS 86-87]. Note: Gribben p.699 gives the Silver Street line as a song.

Clemens' A.D. this day included: The defects about Bibles—Remarks about the Immaculate Conception [MTP: Autodict2].

June 21 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Early the King said: “No dictating today.”

~~This was a wonder {two illegible words} telephoned down to~~ telephone Mr. Paine not to fetch up the Hobby horse & then I went back to Mr. Clemens's room & he read auto-ms. until nearly one o'clock. He read to the finish—almost. He read the interesting baneful story of his publishing experiences & disasters & he finished up with the latest dictation—the blasts at theology & creeds & gods. He was in a great mood & gave that mood full swing.

~~This afternoon Mr. Paine & I walked up to the sunset rock & there we sat & talked for a long time. Big black ants crawled around us & he would kill them with his heavy heels. But the talk was good. It always is—for we haven't two topics, but only one. He spoke of the many tragedies in Mr. Clemens's life & then said “But a King's life is always a tragedy.”~~ [MTP TS 87]. Note: one may only speculate as to why Lyon struck out the paragraph about Albert Bigelow Paine.

Ben L. Bennett wrote to Sam about Abner Martin, who had been Chief Mate on the Pennsylvania when the boilers blew. He survived and was now 85 or so, with failed eyesight. Bennett did not ask for help for Martin but it may have been his intent [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote at the bottom: “June 18, 1858 - / Was in the death room 2 or 3 times, but they couldn’t fetch him. Wouldn’t take their sleeping medicines.”

June 21 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to the June 19 from S.G. Niles “Nobody but the publishers—Harper—can answer your question. The book has been in their hands for 3 years awaiting publication—The first half of the book has already appeared in N. A. Review—” [MTP].

June 22 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Upton Sinclair.

In dictating the morning’s chap in my auto one day last week I uttered a paragraph which indicates that I realize the magnitude & effectiveness of the earthquake which “The Jungle” has set going under the Canned Polecat Trust of Chicago.

Also it is noticeable that at last Europe [is] getting uneasy about the condition of our commercial morals and is even beginning to wonder if we really have any. The Sun’s London correspondent undertaker. / Sincerely Yours [MTP]. Note: Upton Sinclair (1878-1968), prolific author who became famous for The Jungle (1906) an expose of the meat-packing industry. He was labeled a “Muckraker.”

Clemens’ A.D. this day included: The brutal Russian massacres of the Jews—Compares ancient & modern massacres—Tendency of present generation to turn its attention to war—Evil influence of the Bible upon children—Present God & religion will not last [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

This evening a lot came in for supper & charades. But first there was dictating in the morning, more theology & then after luncheon we sat on the porch & Mr. Clemens read the very first autobiography beginning, written many years ago, about 1877[-]9—44 typewritten pages & telling of his boyhood days, & the farm & the joys of living in. He was deeply moved as he read on & on.

Those who came for charades were Mr. Brush, & Gerome & Nancy & Tribly, Fannie Dwight & Louise Hunnewell, Hildegard & Gerard Henderson, Eleanor Cabot & a friend of hers. Mr. Clemens was one captain, Mr. Brush the other, & Mr. Clemens’s team went out first to act TELEGRAF. Their next word was Intoxicate. Mr. Clemens is a great actor. He inspired those young people & could have done the whole thing all by himself. In the whole word Intoxicate, he & Gerome came in together, locked arms, hats on the side of their heads, & gloriously, roaring drunk. Mr. Clemens had on Jean’s black tam—as the family physician in “toxic” he was very funny—for he blew up the log-of-wood baby with the bellows—reversing its function & calling it a stomach pump—and he acted, her really acted [MTP TS 88].

Aubrey Boucicault (1868-1913) for the Green Room Club, NYC wrote to Sam to ask for signed volumes for the Club’s library. George Bernard Shaw and George Ade had already sent books [MTP]. Note: The Green Room Club of London was primarily for actors, est. in 1877 by none other than the great Henry Irving. Evidently several functions were held with corresponding clubs in New York. Aubrey was the son of the late Dion Boucicault (1820-1890), who was born Dionysius Lardner Boursiquot. See entries for Dion in Vol I & II. On the inside of the letter Lyon wrote, “Mr. Clemens is just leaving Dublin for 10 days—but he will comply with pleasure when he gets back.”

Brander Matthews wrote to compliment Sam on his piece about Howells [MTP].

June 23 Saturday – About this day Sam gave Lyon a memo to write Witter Bynner: “Write Bynner that Mr. Clemens feels that McClure is a publisher & not an editor. Can’t you look over that Ms.” [MTP]. Note: Bynner was an editor at this time for McClure’s. See ca. June 10 entry.

Another memo was given to Lyon, this for Samuel S. McClure likely having to do with the same above reply to Bynner. Both memos carry a “?” for this date: “Telegraph Mr. McClure that Mr. Clemens can see him at noon on Wednesday June 27” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mr. Clemens has been harassed ever since we arrived here by what he calls “the Harper treacheries.” They issued the Library of Humor last winter. I wondered why Mr. Clemens did not make a fuss about that publication, but he was interested in other things then & he didn’t notice what a damaging book it is. But he knows it now & we are negotiating with Mr. Rogers by long distance telephone to make a plan for Mr. Clemens to go to N.Y. next week & begin operations against the Harpers by making them withdraw the Library of Humor from the trade, & destroy the plates—at the same time publishing Mr. Clemens’s repudiation of the book. He grows so angry, so indignant—and every day he makes a fresh plan, every day he outlines a fresh attack on those publishers. He said they are all of them scamps but Mr. Duneka is more fool than knave, the King says, yet he loves all of these men [MTP TS 88-89; also MTHHR 612n3 in part].

Note: once he felt wronged, as he surely was in the reissue of Library of Humor, Sam could be obsessed and unrelenting in his attempts at retribution. Lyon further pointed out that he felt all publishers were “scamps,” a sore point that went back to the double-books of Elisha Bliss. George B. Harvey, upon his return from Europe, quickly smoothed things over.

Clemens’ A.D. this day included: Concerning the character of the real God [MTP: Autodict2].

June 24 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam gave Lyon instructions to write Ralph W. Ashcroft about a perceived “insulting advertisement” by Harpers, which stated that he was going to withdraw his Christian Science book from publication. Would Ashcroft look in Publisher’s Weekly for April 1903? [MTP].

Sam also replied to the June 22 of Brander Matthews (the note sent by hand to 121 E. 18th, NYC).

I thank you for that hearty word. I am sure we should always like to stand up for each other, but we can’t often get the fitting & unforced opportunity. For instance, in this case I had the right opportunity, but was robbed of it. I didn’t want to say it to his embarrassed face, I wanted to get it into print while he was still in Europe—there was oceans of time—but the Harpers not only beat my game, but beat it by months; & so, took the grace all out of it [MTP].

Sam also replied to the May 26 from William Allen White in Emporia, Kans.

Howells told me that “In Our Town” was a charming book, & indeed it is. All of it is delightful when read to one’s self, parts of it can score finely when subjected to the most exacting of tests—the reading aloud. Pages 197–216 are of that grade—I have tried them a couple of times on the family—and pages 212–216 are qualified to fetch any house of any country, caste or color, endowed with those riches which are denied to no nation on the planet—humor & feeling.

Talk again—the country is listening [MTP]. Note: Howells had recommended White’s book In Our Town (1906) in his May 24 letter. See Gribben p. 762.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

This afternoon Gerome came to read his play; but Mr. & Mrs. Joe Smith & Mrs. Putnam arrived at the very beginning of the reading & Gerome & Jean fled to the study. The Smiths knew that Gerome was here, though, for he left his tell-tale Eastern hat on the hall table, & Mr. Smith picked it up. We had a very good time for Mr. Clemens got up from his bed where he had been sleeping, after having luncheon with the Pearmaines & went down to the porch where we all sat & where he told a ~~profane~~ story or two, & I told a story or two also, about Mr. Clemens & his dislike of “modesty on the premises”. Joe Smith is a delight, & Mrs. Smith is beautiful, slender & straight as a dart [MTP TS 89-90].

Charles J. Drapeau wrote to Sam, enclosing his letter of introduction from Edward E. Clarke. Drapeau requested an interview [MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote from Kittery Point, Maine to Sam

Dear Clemens: / I could not have asked to have anything gentler or kinder said of me than you have said in the July Harper. I was so eager to see it that I sent into Portsmouth for the magazine yesterday, and I have since read it again and again, feeling more and more that it must be true. Such appreciation convinces even the object of it; if it is not quite true, still it is so admirably expressed, that he hopes it will convince other people anyway. The passages you quoted from me shone with a luster that they never had before, and that came from their cordial setting. Your praise has brought back the good great times when the men, Lowell and Longfellow and Holmes, who held the eminence you now hold, spoke well of me. I think round the world, and I find none now living whose praise I could care more for. Perhaps Tolstoy; but I do not love him as I love you, and the honor he could do me would not reach my heart as the honor you have done me does.

Dear friend of forty years, thanks! / Yours affectionately / W.D. Howells [MTHL 2: 813]. Note: Sam’s essay in July Harper’s Monthly, “William Dean Howells.”

June 24 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Aubrey Boucicault’s June 22 for the Green Room Club. Sam was leaving Dublin for ten days but would “comply with pleasure” on his return [MTP].

June 25 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Dear Charlotte, I am called from this solitude to that of the society of Katy & the butler at No. 21 for a day or two, & am due to arrive there at 6 p.m. to-morrow. If you haven’t registered any crimes against me in the past ten days I hope you will be so good & so kind as to appear at 21 Wednesday morning at 10—if that isn’t too early for you—and let me look at you. Could you? Would you? Will you? [MTP].

Sam also gave the following memo to Lyon: “Send Ms. To Coan when it comes” [MTP]. Note: Dr. Titus M. Coan (b. 1836).

Sam also inscribed a copy of Eve’s Diary to Harriet E. Whitmore: “Dear Mrs. Whitmore— / This— / with the compliments of / The Authoress / & the love of / The Translator. / Dublin, N.H., June 25/06” [MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. this day included: Only hearsay evidence that there is to be a Heaven hereafter—Christ does not prove that He is God—Takes up the human race—Man a machine, & not responsible for his actions [MTP: Autodict2]. Note: if Clemens truly believed this latter idea, then why did he suffer from so much guilt? Also, Christ claimed to be God and refused to give those “a sign” that it was so, due to their unbelief.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Some subite [?] thing cast into my blood and the knowledge that Mr. Clemens was going to be nervous this morning and he was. I stood outside his door, not wishing to enter—and on every count he was at odds. Jean’s slowness in sending for her bonds; the mail—the damned damned mail; the trains tomorrow; his clothes today; the Harpers; this devilish Dublin; Miss Hobby’s slowness. Oh everything. His eyes were shining, his cheeks were flushed. He is often animated by a devastating something in these days—a something destroying his peace of mind. The drama of life I suppose it is. [inserted in pencil: Charlotte Teller]

We sat on the porch after luncheon & Mr. Paine came to make some photographs. Then Gerald Thayer came fresh from his West Indian trip & his adventures there. Gladys came too & we had music. Beethoven & the great Tschaikowski movement & Schubert. I walked with Mr. Paine later over to the cottage & he comforted my weeping mood. He is a rare good man & how I have needed him this year [MTP TS 90]. Note: The last lines about Paine, as well as the first six lines of the June 26 entry, are shown in the TS to have parallel diagonal lines through the text. Also noted in part by Madsen 69n12. Paine had been a professional photographer at one time.

Poultney Bigelow wrote from his farm, “Malden on Hudson.” He’d been reading TS and HF to neighbors. “Well, there’s no more news in that—but now I’m a farmer here on this Homestead where my father was born and where I’m absorbed in simple things. / Have just finished a string of articles on the Panama things for the COSMOPOLITAN magazine.” The book of verse he’d sent to Clemens had come back to him [MTP].

John Larkin, NYC attorney wrote to Sam, sending a check installment of $105.39 on the Archer County, Texas property [MTP]. Note: see Vol. I for the history of this land that Livy purchased.

June 26 Tuesday – Sam left Dublin, N.H. and traveled first to Boston, then on to New York. If his plans went as he’d told Charlotte Teller on June 25, he arrived home at 6 p.m. (See IVL’s journal entry below). In the evening he wrote to William Dean Howells

It is lovely of you to say those beautiful things—I don’t know how to thank you enough. But I love you, that I know.

I read “After the Wedding” aloud to Jean & Miss Lyon, & we felt all the pain of it & the truth. It was very moving & very beautiful—would have been overcomingly moving, at times, but for the haltings & pauses compelled by the difficulties MS.—those were a protection in that they furnished me time to brace up my voice, & get a new start. Jean wanted to keep the MS for another reading-aloud, & for “Keeps” to, I suspected, but I said it would be safest to write you about it.

I like “In Our Town,” particularly that Colonel of the Lookout Mountain Oration, & very particularly pages 212–216. I wrote & told White. After “After the Wedding” I read “The Mother” aloud & sounded its human deeps with your deep-sea lead. I had not read it before, since it was first published.

I have been dictating some fearful things, for 4 successive mornings—for no eye but yours to see until I have been dead a century—if then. But I got them out of my system, where they had been festering for years—and that was the main thing. I feel better, now.

I came down to-day on business—from house to house in 12½ hours, & expected to arrive dead, but am neither tired nor sleepy. / Yours as always / Mark [MTHL 2: 814-15]. Note: “After the Wedding” was a poem of Howells that would run in the Dec. Harper’s; “The Mother” was another Howells poem published in Harper’s Dec. 1902.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: This morning at 6 o’clock we left the house to start on the journey to Boston. Mr. Clemens had overslept & so couldn’t shave—but that didn’t matter. He was so gay & told a delightful story about an experience he had 30 years ago when he was on a train & a farmer introduced a conversation on his own achievement & his crops. Hiram Carey sat & listened as a keen Yankee farmer can. On the train going to Boston Mr. Clemens was in a great mood, he talked steadily saying unforgettable things of which I have made notes elsewhere. Reaching Boston we took the trunk on a cab & drove to the Boston Public Library where we stayed for more than an hour over the Abbey & Sargeant pictures & too the wonder of the Mexican marble entrance was enchanting—the yellows are wonderful. It is so sweet to prowl about any place with Mr. Clemens for he catches & holds the beauties of things and forever he is a joy. As we stood at the entrance of the long reading room Mr. Clemens caught sight of a little girl who was watching him & he sent me to bring the child to him. She attached herself & we went on through the place with the child as guide & when we left to enter the cab again Mr. Clemens kissed her goodbye & left her in a little maze of wonder. I left him at the station for N.Y. & then I went to shop & shop—with a foolishly miserable heart in my breast. It would be so lonely now at The Lodge of Sorrow [Fifth Ave. house] [MTP TS 90-91].

June 27 Wednesday – In NYC Sam went to see H.H. Rogers but he was in a board meeting; he talked with Katharine I. Harrison. In the evening Miss Lilly Burbank and Miss Mosher were passing by his house and he had a chat with them at the gate [June 28 to Jean Clemens]. Notes: Miss Emily W. Burbank (ca.1869-1934), NY writer and lecturer, and Miss Florence Mosher, had been a pupil of Leschetizky. Both ladies were friends of Clara and Jean Clemens.

Isabel Lyon's journal: A strange thing happened yesterday. Somewhere behind me I must have left the my loneliness, for as George drove me up the long slope to the house, I was filled with a great sweet sense of coming home and a wonderful peace enwrapped me for the first time this year—here in D.

This afternoon Mr. Paine & I went to the Upper Pasture & we read a bit of his ms. & he made photographs and the talk was steady & full of the interest of life.

He is a wonderful child too—& how many there are in the world [MTP TS 91-92]. Note: Lyon returned from Boston to Dublin while Sam was now in NY. The intimate conversations shared with Paine contrasts with their later animus.

June 28 Thursday – At 5 a.m., 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean, still in Dublin, N.H.

Jean dear, it is 5 a.m., this not being a good atmosphere to sleep in. I had a pleasant enough journey, (Tuesday) & went to bed almost as soon as I arrived; but I was not tired & not drowsy.

I saw Miss Harrison yesterday & she was looking very fine; but I did not see Mr. Rogers, he was attending a Board meeting. But I asked Miss H. to tell him to get out the yacht & scrape the barnacles off & I would go to Fairhaven with him tomorrow morning (Friday) & return when I got ready. It is just the weather for the trip.

I could not deposit your bonds, for I had left the key in my room; but I will go down this morning & attend to that.

Last evening Miss Lilly Burbank and Miss Mozher [sic Mosher] passed by & I had a talk with them at the gate. Miss M. goes to Clara next week.

Katy & Philip seem to be well, & they take good care of me.

B'gosht'lmighty I think I will go to sleep again. With a hug, / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Augustus T. Gurlitz of the NY Journal.

My dear Mr Gurlitz—your letter [not extant] has just been received. I shall not be in town for the next few months; but if you consider the matters discussed therein should be brought to the attention of Harpers'—will you be kind enough to let them know at once and inform me of the result of your Interview [MTP: Sotheby's, N.Y. catalogs Dec. 11, 1990, Item 384]. Note: Sam last wrote Gurlitz on Mar. 26.

In Dublin, N.H. Isabel Lyon's journal:

Again this afternoon Mr. Paine & I went to the Upper Pasture. He told me the story of his life. ~~Oh it is so wonderful!~~ Old Fraud!

Tomorrow he goes down to his Redding farm & he will be away probably as long as the King will, which I doubt will not be for a long, long time. How much of solitude that will mean for me [MTP TS 92]. Note: the contrast between her opinions of Paine suggests she added "Old Fraud!" sometime later, after relations with Paine had cooled. Edits, deletions and insertions are seen throughout her entries.

Charles Orr, librarian of the Case Library, Cleveland, Ohio, wrote to Sam.

Having seen some letters of the late John Hay, copies of which I enclose, I am somewhat anxious to know the title of the piece mentioned, or whether it is printed in your published writings. / Did you know Alexander Gunn to whom Hay's letters were addressed? / An answer at your convenience will greatly oblige [MTP]. Note: the enclosed copies of Hay's letters (esp. June 24, 1880) refer to Sam's piece 1601.

June 29 Friday – NYC: Early in the morning Sam went with H.H. Rogers on his yacht Kanawha and sailed to Fairhaven; He slept on board [June 28 to Jean; 1 and 2 July to Clara].

In Dublin, N.H. Isabel Lyon's journal:

[written diagonally] I am giving birth to something. The parturition pains are great & the birth is a slow one—weeks & weeks. I know not what shall be born but it will be greater—greater than I, & the shell of me is not worthy to be the mother.

The worst of the pains are misunderstood things, I know. But out of the misunderstood comes the understood, if we are not too dulled by agony to be able to see [MTP TS 92].

June 30 Saturday – In Fairhaven, Mass. Sam rose at 5 a.m. and after luncheon “began to play billiards & kept it up until a quarter past 2 this morning [July 1]” [July 1 to Jean].

Gertrude Natkin's diary: “On June 30, Mr. Clemens sent me Eve's Diary with his autograph” [MTAq 30].

July – Harper's Monthly published Sam's article, “William Dean Howells,” p. 221-5 [Budd, Collected 2: 1011].

The Reader carried a photograph by Underwood & Underwood of Mark Twain reading in bed [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 191].

July 1 Sunday – In the evening in Fairhaven, Mass. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Dublin, N.H.

Jean dear, I got up at 5 in the morning yesterday at Wuthering Heights [Rogers' home] & after luncheon here I began to play billiards & kept it up until a quarter past 2 this morning. I got up at 8.30 & have been up & talking all day until now. I am not tired, but as I must rise at 7 to-morrow & go aboard the yacht I think I ought to go to bed, now.

So I will say good night & send a hug & a kiss, dear heart, & seek my pillow [MTP].

Sam also began a letter to daughter Clara that he finished July 2.

Clara dear, I spent Wednesday & Thursday in New York, then slept on board the yacht & sailed for here early Friday morn.

I was expecting to return in the yacht to-night & be in New York a fortnight—till Col. Harvey's return from England—but it isn't necessary. On the way here Mr. Rogers & I discussed my matter, & concluded that he could perhaps take care of it better without me than with me.

And so I expect to stay here a day or two longer, then go home to Dublin direct, by rail. I think I shall leave for home the 4th or 5th, when the Rogerses sail for New York [MTP].

July 2 Monday – In Fairhaven, Mass. Sam finished his July 1 to Clara in Norfolk, Conn.

Monday morning.

Your telegram [not extant] arrived an hour ago, at breakfast. Mr. Rogers decided as follows: I must return to New York in the yacht on the 4th; have some talks with Duneka for several days & get an understanding arranged, to be ratified or opposed by Harvey when he gets back from England the middle of the month; then return to Fairhaven in the yacht next Friday or Saturday & go thence to Dublin by rail. By rail it is only 4½ hours.

With a power of love, dear heart, / Father [MTP].

Samuel S. McClure wrote from NYC to Sam. “My Beloved Friend! / this is not a business letter it is a love-letter. I read the wonderful chapters of your autobiography. All are wonderful, but the chapter about the dear dear child are the finest I have ever read in literature. I wept & loved & suffered & enjoyed.” McClure wished he could publish “this wonderful thing” in his magazine [MTP].

Elizabeth Jordan sent Sam a note. It is not extant but referred to in Sam's July 6 reply [MTP].

July 2 ca. – Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam, thanking him for Eve's Diary, which he sent on June 30. She "laughed heartily" over the book. "How good of you to think of me and especially in such a sweet way as I prize very highly any of your works" [MTP].

July 3 Tuesday – Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam, enclosing a check for $120 for various bond coupons, property of Susie Clemens' estate [MTP].

Tudor Storrs Jenks for Anti-Child Slavery League wrote to Sam, wishing to use his name in their cause [MTP]. Jenks, (1857-1922), author, poet, artist, editor, journalist and lawyer. Jenks was secretary of the League. He is known today for his popular works of fiction and nonfiction for children and the masses [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben, though Jenks was a prolific author. In 1906 two of his many books were published: A Doll That Talked, and In the Days of Scott. See Sam's ca. July 25 reply.

July 4 Wednesday – In Fairhaven, Mass. Sam inscribed a copy of Eve's Diary to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. Harry Rogers, Jr.): "Mrs. Harry Rogers, jr / with the compliments of / The Authoress / & the kind regards of / The Translator. / July 4/06" [MTP].

In the early a.m., Sam returned with H.H. Rogers in the Kanawha to New York instead of going by rail to Dublin, N.H. as earlier planned [July 2 to Clara].

July 5 Thursday – In the afternoon at 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

It is fine, dear Charlotte—fine, & admirably written, felicitously expressed—there's nothing commonplace about the phrasing. If you will let me say it, it is well beyond what I thought you could do. Your manner is mature, facile, practised, confident, & you have the sure touch of a seasoned old professional. I was mightily surprised—I confess it—and as mightily gratified. You have set yourself a high pace—keep it up! The interest begins with the opening sentence, & does not flag afterward. Let Margaret have a show when you can—I mean the sixteen-year-old over the way [MTP].

In Dublin, N.H. Isabel Lyon's journal: "Oh how little wit we have to control anything with. I cast my thoughts toward the ones with whom I would willingly be, but I am Prometheus—and am chained to the rock & daily my soul is torn out of me—no—not my sould—not my soul" [MTP TS 93].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam. "Don't send your subscription and cheque to the Plasmon Company until you hear from Mr Baldwin or myself" [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue wrote for Elisabeth Marbury to Sam: "I have just heard from Miss Marbury that she has arranged with M. Ducquois that he will adapt in the French your story of "The Californian's Tale" [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam enclosing a draft for his 1/3 share of the rent for four months on the Eire Basin property at Buffalo [MTP].

July 6 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to Elizabeth Jordan. "I am here for a day, & your note of July 2^d has just reached me. I shall be eager to get those first chapters, & shall hope they will inspire me to do the boy" [MTP]. Note: Jordan was ramrodding a collaborative story for Harper's Bazaar. Clemens was chosen to do the boy chapter. Sam ultimately could not interest his pen in the story.

Isabel Lyon's journal (in Dublin, N.H.):

Today after Gerald Thayer & Jean started for a walk to Thorndyke Pond I went to the upper pasture, but I was too full of sadness to remain there. Perhaps not all sadness but moodiness. These solitary walks are very good though, for they give a chance to think things out—just as ABP [Paine] says. I had been thinking about moral courage & trying to sift it down, and at dinner we were talking about it. To me it seems to be repression of self. G. said it was a “repression of pity” too, & he’s right. Then he said I’d better read Neitzche’s “Also Sprach Zarathustra”, he recommended. Gerald had his copy with him on ship coming up from Dominica & someone—probably a negro servant—took it—& all his advertising for it did not bring it back [MTP TS 93].

July 7 Saturday – N.Y.C.: Sam was spending his days in Rogers’ Standard Oil office or the lawyer’s office, and his nights aboard the Kanawha, which they anchored “about ten miles” out [July 10 to Jean]. Note: Harper’s lawyer and Sam’s lawyer Edward Lauterbach were negotiating to settle the dispute about the “unauthorized” Library of Humor reissue. See July 10 to Lyon.

Isabel Lyon’s journal (Dublin, N.H.): “When we were young what a fine wit we had for writing down our doings & finding them important. Now that we are grown older, we do not put them down on paper for we know of how little importance they are & life holds a deeper meaning for us in the doings of other people” [MTP TS 93-94].

Calvin H. Higbie wrote from Greenville, Calif. to Sam. The sole typist there promised to type and send his MS sometime the following week. Sam was free to edit it any way he chose [MTP].

July 8 Sunday – Samuel E. Moffett wrote to Sam. “My dear Uncle, / I was in Washington last week, and took advantage of the opportunity to copy off one of those copyright lists.” Moffett included lists of 134 copyrights renewed for 1903 [MTP]. Note: evidently Clemens had requested the lists for his work on the copyright cause.

July 9 Monday – NYC: Sam again spent time in lawyers’ offices and at Standard Oil’s office.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Belle Greene is offering me—giving me a very beautiful thing—& as I grow older in these days, I find that it is not a thing to be spurned; for she is giving me a big burst of very lovely affection, & the valuation of it is almost as great as intellect I find. In fact somehow I feel the need of just the strength that affection gives & the friendship of ABP [Paine] is god-born. He stands for a great amount of my strength just now & I wish he might always—for he is a rare creature & strong [MTP TS 94]. Note: contrast this sentiment about Paine with her entry on June 28.

Joseph Mills Hanson wrote from St. Louis to ask Sam if he recalled an incident about Captain Grant P. Marsh a veteran steamboatman in 1858-9. Marsh was an intimate friend of Horace Bixby. Hanson was engaged in preparing the personal recollections of Marsh for publication [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Grant Marsh incident is correct as Mr. Clemens remembers it. It is so long ago that he has no recollection of any of the river men except the few he was associated with for a considerable length of time.”

J.T. Arnold wrote a fan letter from Chattanooga, Tenn., enclosing a newspaper clipping (not extant).

Will expect in the next account of an interview, to find you reading one of Scott’s novels, and crying over the fall of feudalism. Crying over the grave of Adam showed that you had a tender heart in your youth; but crying over the fall of feudalism and slavery would clearly show, that at approaching old age, your heart was still tender, even mellow.

I remain one of your numerous readers and admirers [MTP].

July 10 Tuesday – At noon, 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Dublin, N.H.

Jean dear, I spend the days in the Standard Oil & the lawyer’s office, & my nights on board the yacht where it is cool & noiseless. At 6 p.m. (or 5) we go aboard & drop down about ten miles & anchor out in the open.

We come up to East 23^d Street in the morning & go ashore right after breakfast. This evening I shall dine with the Coes, & sleep at home. Clara still has the cold which she caught at Tyringham, 3 weeks ago. I want you to help me the very best you can, to persuade her not to come to Dublin. It is 4 railway trips in the blistering weather of the end of this month, with a rest at Dublin so brief as not to be a rest at all. I want to have her there as badly as anybody, but not at the sacrifice of the small remnant of health that is left in her. Write her & beg her with real earnestness & sincerity not to come—for she is not coming on her own account but solely upon ours.

It is noon. I'm done with the lawyers for to-day. The seances will continue every morning till Friday, when we sail for Fairhaven, & will be resumed next Monday. That will be close to the end, I guess. I tell you no particulars, for I don't want them known.

It's hot, hot, hot! / With hugs & kisses / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Isabel V. Lyon in Dublin, N.H.

I enclose copy of the Harper contract for preservation.

Mr. Duneka is frying in the fire which he prepared for himself, & is a very humble & suffering sinner. His sufferings are not going to end just yet. His lawyer & mine were anxious to bring him & me together for a talk, but I objected to intercourse with his grade of criminal.

We made a step or two to-day. Others will be made to-morrow & next day. By Friday our entire hand will have been revealed. When I get back from Fairhaven Monday morning Col. Harvey will be here from Europe & the real & final business will begin & we shall soon know whether we go to court or arrive at a settlement outside.

Duneka says that in 3 of those Harpers the advertisement was present, but in the back part of the magazine [MTP]. Note: Sam had argued his books had not been advertised by Harpers for three months, and demanded payment for lost sales. Also, the delay of publication for Christian Science was an issue.

Arthur G. Stedman wrote to Sam. "My Dear Mr. Clemens: / Knowing how highly you appreciate the works of Mark Twain, and that above all others you consider him the greatest humorist and genius of the age, I take great pleasure in introducing this young lady, who is selling a very fine edition of his works. / Yours sincerely..." [MTP: The Diary of a Book-Agent, by Elizabeth Lindley (1906)]. Note: Stedman wrote this note to Miss Lindley, who was "trying on" being a book agent and not getting far with it. She was sent to Stedman's desk as a joke by a colleague. He then wrote the above note and told her to call on a Mr. Clemens, whom she did not know or realize was Mark Twain.

Sam replied to the above from Arthur Stedman, after questioning Elizabeth Lindley, who at the last moment realized she was the butt of a practical joke, having been sent to sell Clemens a copy of his own work. From her 1906 book, after asking if Mr. Clemens was home:

I was told that he was, and giving my card to the maid, I stepped into the reception room.

A slight noise in the adjoining parlor attracted my attention, and on looking up I was more than surprised to see the original of the picture in my sample copy.

"Clemens, Clemens," I muttered, then it dawned on me that I was the victim of a practical joke. I could feel the angry blood burning in my cheeks, as I thought of the fun those men were having at my expense. But before I could think of what to say or do, Mr. Clemens entered the room, and I found myself tendering him the letter [by Stedman, above]. One glance at his face and I determined to play my part out.

He read the letter through, then over again. A twinkle in his eye, and a slight twitching of the muscles of his mouth were the only indications I had that he appreciated the situation. I stood demurely by, looking innocently down, wondering what was going to happen next.

"Taken many orders?" he inquired dryly.

"I have not taken any yet," I replied. "I have just started in."

"Have you ever done this work before?" The question was accompanied by a scrutinizing look.

"No," I said, with a slight tremor in my voice.

"And you are trying to make your living this way?"

I answered in the affirmative, my eyes filling with tears.

"Then I will subscribe to the work to help you along," he said kindly.

I could hardly hide the triumph I felt, as I thought how those men, who intended only to disconcert and annoy me for their amusement, would feel at the outcome of the joke. Mr. Clemens, who had left me rather abruptly, soon returned, with a check and a letter.

"I have selected the best binding," he observed smilingly, "and I wish you personally to take a set of these books, not later than to-morrow, to the gentleman who sent you here. You may read this note, which you will be kind enough to give him." Wishing me success, he bowed me out.

On leaving the house, I opened the letter and read: [See letter below].

MY DEAR ARTHUR: / You know it has been my custom for the past twenty years to make you a substantial birthday present. I intended buying you an automobile this A.M., but knowing that, like myself, you look upon Mark Twain as the greatest of living authors, I have subscribed to the set of books you so kindly brought to my notice.

I am aware that you already have six or seven different editions, but feel sure you will be delighted to receive this one. / Yours faithfully, etc. [MTP: Elizabeth Lindley, The Diary of a Book-Agent 9-10].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam. He complimented the Howells article in Harper's and would have liked to see what Howells said about it. He also liked Sam's obituary for Carl Schurz. He added family happenings and plans. After his signature he added: "I have just been writing a note of sympathy (a proper one) to Chauncey Depew. He is an old friend of mine, and I am sorry for him. Think of me being sorry for Chauncey Depew!!!" [MTP]. Note: The object of Twichell's sympathy for Chauncey Depew was not uncovered.

July 11 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.):

The fight with Harpers is keeping Mr. Clemens on & on in the city. But I know that he likes it there. He writes that he spends his nights on Mr. Rogers's yacht. They go abroad early; pull out about 12 miles down the bay—or sound—and so enjoy cool silent nights. This morning I had a sense of anxiety weighing upon me; so great a one that I telephoned down to the city to ask Katie if all was going well with Mr. Clemens. She said that it was—all of it going well. His health is good & his spirits too—so that means that he is happy [MTP TS 94-95].

July 12 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote his plans to Isabel V. Lyon in Dublin, N.H.

Checks received & banked.

We sail at 9 a.m. to-morrow, for over-Sunday. [to Fairhaven]

I resume business here on Monday, when Col. Harvey arrives. I shall expect to be here all the week [MTP].

Note: in her July 13 journal entry, Lyon calls this "a note not so big as a post scriptum."

Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.): Today came a dear little note from Mr. Clemens saying that with no one to watch the barber he had arisen from the chair with short, short hair—and Mrs. Coe wants a "long haired" photograph of him.

I wonder if he is coming back to us at all. The day before he left, when Mr. Paine made the photographs, he told me that he felt that he must make them on that day, for he had the feeling that Mr. Clemens would stay away. He does not like it here I know. He lives in a world away from here, and this Upton place he finds lonely in the extreme. It is that—the isolation of it casts a shadow, a cold shadow over what ought to be beauties. Even the good, good servants find it very depressing [MTP TS 95]. Note: Sam's letter of the haircut referred to here is not extant; does not fit the prior letters shown before this date.

July 13 Friday – In the a.m. Sam and H.H. Rogers sailed again for Fairhaven on the Kanawha [July 12 to Lyon].

Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.):

"Zarathustra" has arrived!

And the evening post brought a note not so big as a post scriptum from Mr. Clemens. He was just off for Fair Haven, to spend Sunday there & then on to N.Y. for another week of controversy & with Col. Harvey newly arrived from Europe to settle the matter. Settle it as to whether it is to be settled out of court—or in court. A dear note came from C.C. too, she is in better spirits now than a few days since, and a letter from ABP [Paine] was in the same batch. ~~Such a good letter.~~

~~Today I walked again to the birch “house” in the Upper Pasture. It is so beautiful there, & as wonderful as many cathedrals. Oh it [illegible word]~~ [MTP TS 95-96]. Note: again, Lyon deletes lines positive about Albert Bigelow Paine, and about the walks she took to the “Upper Pasture” with him, where they had long talks. At some later point it suggests that he lost her favor, and she went in to strike out such passages. July 13 and 14 entries have long diagonal parallel lines through the text, as if she wanted to omit these entries. “Thus Spoke Zarathustra”: treatise by Friedrich Nietzsche published in four parts (1883-1885); see Gribben 508.

July 14 Saturday – Sam was at the Rogers’ residence in Fairhaven, Mass. for a weekend stay [July 12 and July 16 to Lyon].

Isabel Lyon’s journal (Dublin, N.H.):

Here am I reading “Thus spoke Zarathustra” & I do not pretend to be qualified to say how wonderful I find it. ...

Last evening’s note from Mr. Clemens enclosed within it 2 letters—one from Mr. McClure—that “red hot Presbyterian” and one from Bynner—appreciating the autobiographical ms. that they have been reading. Mr. McClure’s letter was beautiful—a “love letter” to that King [MTP TS 96].

Minnie Maddern Fiske wrote from Santa Cruz, Calif. to Sam. “Dear Mr. Clemmens [sic] / I cannot resist telling you of the particular happiness & consolation you have brought to our home this summer.” Ashton Stevens, the dramatic critic of San Francisco Examiner, “a very gifted young man” had been ill and staying with the Fiskes. They would read to him nightly, mostly from HF and P&P. Stevens asked her to write Sam and tell him of his enjoyment of the books, and that he had known “the old compositor, [Little] Ward” [MTP]. Note: Sam replied on July 27. Ashton Stevens (1872-1951), drama critic for Hearst newspapers, including the Chicago Herald-American.

July 15 Sunday – Sam was at the Rogers’ residence in Fairhaven, Mass. for a weekend stay [July 12 and July 16 to Lyon].

Isabel Lyon’s journal (Dublin, N.H.): “I am alone today;—wonderfully alone! / All the morning I had a rich solitude here in my room, reading Nietzsche & theosophy... / A solitary luncheon—more reading—and then at 4.30 lovely Gladys Thayer came, & we had tea & talk together. I played for her the Tannhauser Overture & Grieg & Träumerer, before she left to hurry home” [MTP TS 96-97].

July 16 Monday – N.Y.C. 10 a.m. Sam wrote to Isabel V. Lyon in Dublin, N.H.

“I have just arrived. Please thank my nephew Sam Moffett for me, & say I wonder at his sending a valuable letter to ‘Redding,’ a place I have no recollection of ever having heard of in my life.

Preserve his statistics. / With love to Jean” [MTP].

July 17 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal (Dublin, N.H.):

Jean, 3:30

Poor Jean was very ill today; but the balance was struck—though not for poor Jean—for Mr. Paine came back & spent the morning with me, & he was rich with news of Mr. Clemens & C.C. To give Jean a chance to slip quietly into the house at 11:30, Mr. Paine & I walked over to the Raynor cottage—and talk? How we did talk! & the best of it is that he still has a thousand things to say. Little by little he let out the fact that probably Mr. Clemens will not be back here for a long, long time. Oh, he told me things he didn’t know he was telling me. All about the Harper controversy & McClure’s shiftiness. McClure who could write such a wonderful letter!

In between these facts he told me another story too. The wonderful McClure letter was the one he wrote in appreciation of Mr. Clemens's auto. [MTP TS 97-98].

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Sam's publishers discussed, Charles Henry Webb, Charles L. Webster, Elisha Bliss, Harpers—Duneka afraid of Christian Scientists [MTP: Autodict2].

A.L. Steers for Aeolian Co. wrote to IVL c/o Sam.

"Your favor of the 14th inst., enclosing a list of twenty Orchestrelle numbers, is at hand.

"In accordance with your instructions, we are entering Mr. Clemens for a six month's subscription to our Circulating Library and will send him bill for same." They requested that 48 selections be made, not 24 [MTP]. Note: this letter went astray as it was mailed to Dublin, Vt. Instead of Dublin, N.H. A follow up was sent to the correct address with a copy on July 24.

July 18 Wednesday – Sam was in NYC. Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.):

What will this day bring?

The grass is down! It was so ripe, so ready, and willing, to be slain. (3 men have been working at it all the morning.) It began to be so tired; & when the scythe swept through it, it lay so still, as if glad and full of rest—like other deaths.

~~This afternoon Mr. Paine came out & after we had talked of many things we walked over to the Roger place again & he talked to me again of Life, & the Concreteness of the Past. I like his thoughts, for back of them there is soul I know. I know it today~~ [MTP TS 98]. Note: once again Lyon lined out the passage about Paine.

July 19 Thursday – Sam was in NYC. Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.): "Today we climbed Monadnock—starting before nine o'clock we slowly wound our way up those mighty slopes. I cannot write of the wonder of the mountain—the wonder of the day. It was too great. It was a mighty stroke out of the great drama of eternity. Oh the great soul of that eternal mountain" [MTP TS 98-99].

July 20 Friday – John T. Lewis, hero of Elmira, died on the way to the hospital [Sue Crane to Sam July 23, 1906].

Sam was in NYC. Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.): "Today we read Orion Clemens letters. Some of them written back in 1862. Mr. Paine is [many illegible cancelled words]. Oh, the wonder of life" [MTP TS 99].

July 21 Saturday – Sam was in NYC. Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.): "These are such beautiful days. The mountain has brought life to me. Who could have thought within the month there could be an awakening such as mine—an awakening out of black poisoned misery into the meaning of the mountain & the meaning & sacredness of life, whether in solitude or not" [MTP TS 99].

John Crowithin wrote from Blackpool, England to ask where he might get a particular volume that he'd once purchased in 1897 and one he thought was an American edition of Twain's poetry. He named several poems including, however, Bret Harte's "Heathen Chinees" [MTP]. Note: years before several poked Clemens by writing about this poem as if it were by him.

July 22 Sunday – Sam was in NYC. He signed and inscribed a photograph of himself in his three-piece white suit in a rocking chair, to Mai Rogers (Mrs. William R. Coe): "A happy voyage to you dear Mrs. Coe & a speedy return! Sincerely yours, S.L. Clemens July 22, 1906." On the back he wrote, "Shall I learn to be good? I will sit here & think it over" [Skinner Auctioneers Nov. 19, 2006, Sale 2341, Lot 27].

Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.): Jean & I lunched with the Thayers today. The table was spread out on the porch & when the meal was nearly finished Mr. Thayer came from his studio where he had been at work painting Eleanor Fisher. He was ever so interesting as usual, when he got well started on his protective coloration investigations. Mary Thayer's fiancé Frederick Birch was there too. He seemed a very insignificant young man, but he ceased to be that when he warmed up to his subject of insect life—moths & butterflies in particular, & he brought down a case of exquisitely mounted creatures for our inspection. On the way home we picked up ABP & he & I read Orion letters until nearly seven o'clock. Gerome Brush was here for dinner & he told us a lot about his play [MTP TS 99-100].

Frederic Chapin wrote from Oak Park, Ill., once again inquiring about making a musical comedy of P&P. The first time Chapin applied, he'd been directed to Elisabeth Marbury; she informed him that Daniel Frohman owned the stage rights for the play. He recently wrote Frohman who directed him to write Clemens direct [MTP]. See ca. July 25 for Sam's reply.

July 23 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.): "Jean, 9.20 very severe, but cleared up well after" [MTP TS 100].

Susan Crane wrote to Sam, who included it in his A.D. of Aug. 11, 1906. She told of John T. Lewis' dying requests and of his decline and death on July 20 [MTP].

July 24 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.): "Today we read Orion letters down under the apple tree in the field. It was very sweet down there. The Orion letters are monotonous—but they are not either [MTP TS 100].

Major Leigh of Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam. "Colonel Harvey turned over to me the matter of the proposed contents for the new volume of the Hillcrest and Trade book, and, as I understand it, the contents proposed for the Hillcrest volume is O.K." Leigh then listed ten articles to be in the new volume [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "To Col. Harvey / Mr. Clemens agrees with Maj. Leigh that there is nothing to object to in his proposal as in his letter of July 24." Frederick T. Leigh, treasurer of Harpers.

Samuel Merwin, assoc. editor of Success Magazine, NYC wrote to Sam explaining the idea of a "People's Lobby" to guard against harmful legislation by special interests from Congress [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the letter: "I am in cordial sympathy with the movement & am as glad to be cordially willing to have my name used. If I were younger, I would take part in the work, but my active days are gone by & I shall never again do anything more than look on & rejoice while others perform the labor. Sincerely..."

A.L. Steers for Aeolian Co. wrote to Sam. "We wrote you a letter on the 17th inst., in answer to yours of the 14th, and not having heard from you we are under the impression that the letter was sent to Dublin, Vt. Instead of Dublin, N.H. as on our duplicate we have Dublin, Vt." [MTP]. Note: See the July 17 letter that went astray.

July 25 Wednesday – Sam left Fairhaven, Mass. and arrived back in Dublin, N.H. [July 31 to Teller; IVL journal July 25].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today the King came home. His hair is shorter than I have ever seen it, and he is a rejuvenated [sic] man. Yes—he is in a new world" [MTP TS 100].

Herbert Shearer for Farm, Field & Fireside ("The Great Farm Weekly"), Chicago, wrote to ask Sam if he would confirm a photograph they'd rec'd of his birthplace [MTP].

July 25 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to the July 3 of Tudor Storrs Jenks. "In the conditions as no labor is required of me I am very glad indeed to have my name used" [MTP].

Sam also replied to the July 22 from Frederic Chapin:

Now the sailing appears to be perfectly plain. Please write again to Miss Marbury & this letter will be her sufficient authority to go on & make such terms with you for me as shall seem fair. I shall hope to see your work on the stage. Nothing could give me more pleasure than to see the Prince & Pauper in musical dress [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to the July 9 from Joseph Mills Hanson. "Grant Marsh incident is correct as Mr. Clemens remembers it. It is so long ago that he has no recollection of any of the river men except the few he was associated with for a considerable length of time" [MTP].

July 26 Thursday – Jean Clemens' 26th birthday.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "This morning Jean called Mr. Clemens an old sinner & he said, 'Yes, Adam & I go out every Sunday morning with a basket & gather all the apples we can find!'" [MTP TS 100].

Donchian Brothers, Importers of Oriental rugs, NYC wrote to Sam with a quote of $381.50 for repairing the rugs from his Fifth Ave. house [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam enclosing a draft for $22.17 for 1/3 share of rent for the Buffalo property on Erie Basin for July 1906 [MTP].

July 26 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Donchian Bros., New York rug importers. "Told him to put them in a $250⁰⁰ state of repair. / I.V.L." [MTP].

July 27 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara in Norfolk, Conn.

It's a darling lovely letter, you dear child, & not even Howells can surpass it for charm & grace & expression. I'm having typed copies made for Howells & Joe.

Poor Lewis is dead, & I am so glad he is set free from a world that has certain ungrateful imitation human beings in it.

I got back in time for Jean's birthday. I never had a delightfuler holiday in my life; & I did hate to leave Fairhaven. Big Mrs. Rogers is too lovely for anything, & so is little Mrs. Rogers; & as for old Henry himself, he is the finest they make.

Mr. Bynner wants to come & see us next week, & we are very willing indeed.

Let Larkin come to the house—you don't need to go to his office. He is very nice, & you will like him.

With my love & a hug [MTP].

Note: Sam read a long passage from Clara's letter in his July 31 A.D. It may be found in MTHL 2: 816n1.

John T. Lewis, black hero of the runaway carriage at Quarry Farm; Witter Bynner; see Gribben 120. John Larkin, whom Sam described as "my friend and legal advisor."

Susan Crane wrote to Sam, relating John T. Lewis' funeral and his will stating that only Dunker Baptists could give the service, as "he did not recognize as Christians any who did not follow the explicit teachings of the Lord." She added, "He was deeply and sincerely grateful to you...I am thankful the struggles are ended for the lonely man. / The old hill folks are nearly all gone" [MTP]. Note: Sam included Sue's letter in his A.D. of Aug. 11, 1906.

Sam also replied to Susan Crane.

Your letter has just come, dear aunt Sue, & I am glad to know that our poor old friend is free. It was a curious idea—that funeral sermon—but it is colored nature! The black man, both here & in savagery, has a gaudy taste in funerals, particularly his own. I am just home from a month's absence, & find my tribe prospering.

Here's a romance for you! Forty-eight years, 2 months & 1 day ago I parted from a sweetheart who was 14 years old, & since then I have never seen her nor exchanged a word with her—and to-day I got a letter from her! (I remembered the hand.) She is poor, is a widow, in debt, & is in desperate need of a thousand dollars. I sent it. Still, I am not bankrupt yet, & if you will tell me what sum I ought to contribute to that funeral sermon I will gladly furnish it.

Dear me, the letters I am getting these days! If Livy could only see them! They fairly glow with golden compliments. One is from Clara, & no poet could surpass it.

With ever, ever, ever so much love, ... [MTP]. Note: Sam referred to John T. Lewis who had just died, and his old sweetheart Laura Wright (Dake).

Sam also wrote (telegraphed?) to Frank N. Doubleday: "If not too late please put away ten copies in sheets—for I want to put them in special bindings some day / "What is Man—" [MTP].

Sam also replied to the July 14 from Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, actress and inspiration for Twain's "A Horse's Tale."

Oh, I thank you for your lovely letter, & for giving me that good word from Ashton Stevens. I do hope his health is prospering. Poor "Little" Ward! he was a manly boy, & such a fighter! When he passed away I had not seen him for 37 years.

Of course you don't know the name of the story you asked me to write, & you'll not recognize it in the current Harper—but that's the one. It will have no meaning to you till September produces the other half of it. I've been away a whole month & am just back. Your letter has been lying neglected, here, a fortnight. It is my fault & I am to blame; I said "Keep all letters till I return" [MTP]. Note: Lewis P. Ward of San Francisco days d. in 1903; it's not clear how Fiske knew Ward. "The Horse's Tale" was published in the Aug. and Sept. issues of Harper's Magazine.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "We walked up to the mountain trail to pick up a wonderful stone we had hidden on our way up Monadnock last week, and then we found a beautiful mossy bank where we sat & talked for a very long time. We took Orion letters, but we read only 1½ for talk was a plenty" [MTP TS 100]. Note: likely the "we" included Albert Bigelow Paine, with whom she'd been reading letters from Orion.

Elizabeth Jordan for Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam enclosing under another cover the first two chapters of "The Whole Family," written by William Dean Howells and Mrs. Mary E. Wilkins Freeman. "If they inspire you to write the third chapter, the small boy's, I shall be delighted" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Tell her that so far Mr. Clemens is not inspired & would like to see some of the other instalments."

July 28 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean, 10:45, violent. 6:40, long, violent. Petit mal all day.

The King is singing the Marseillaise in lusty tones as he is drawing a bath for himself. When the King sings very hard it means a perturbation of spirit; it means that something is not quite in key, it never stands for happiness.

This morning Mr. Clemens went to work on the porch & kept at it until 2 o'clock. The kittens bothered him with their friendliness until Katherine was called upon to cart them off. When I went to my study later, on the desk I found 8 closely written pages of ms., a speech—Mr. Clemens explained to me at dinner—a speech to be given at a press banquet sometime in September. A speech in which he is taking up cudgels for Standard Oil. It seems that when he was in N.Y. Mr. Melville Stone asked him to do just this thing & as Mr. Rogers's intimate friend Mr. Clemens felt that he could not do it, and brought forward many sane reasons for not doing it, but Mr. Stone could see only the fact that he wanted Mr. Clemens to make that speech & make it so that it would attack the press for "muckraking" every corporation [MTP TS 100-101; mention by Gribben, p. 592].

Samuel Hopkins Adams for Collier's Weekly wrote to Sam that at last he was ready to take up the Oppenheimer matter, and would “probably have the article ready for Collier's of September 28th or thereabout.” Did Sam have any other material on hand that might be of value? [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam acknowledging his check from Miss Lyon for $304.33 which he had forwarded with his for $608.67 to pay the taxes of $913 on the Buffalo real estate [MTP].

July 29 Sunday

July 30 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to the June 28 from Charles Orr, librarian, Case Library, Cleveland.

I cannot thank you enough for sending me copies of John Hay's delicious notes to Mr. Gunn. In the matter of humor, what an unsurpassable touch John Hay had! I may have known Alexander Gunn in those ancient days, but the name does not sound familiar to me.

The title of the piece of “1601.” The piece is a suppositious conversation which takes place in Queen Elizabeth's closet in that year, between the Queen and Shakespeare, Ben Johnson, Beaumont, Sir Walter Raleigh, the Duchess of Bilgewater, and one or two others; and is not—as John Hay mistakenly supposes—“a serious effort to bring back our literature and philosophy to the sober & chaste Elizabethan standard”; no, the object was only a serious attempt to reveal to Rev. Joe Twichell the picturesqueness of parlor conversation in Elizabeth's time; therefore if there is a decent word findable in it, it is because I overlooked it. I hasten to assure you that it is NOT printed in my published writings.

“1601” was so be-praised by the archeological scholars of a quarter of a century ago, that I was rather inordinately vain of it. At that time it had been privately printed in several countries, among them Japan. A sumptuous edition on large paper, rough-edged, was made by Lieut. C. E.S. Wood at West Point—an edition of 50 copies—and distributed among popes & kings & such people. In England copies of that issue were worth 20 guineas when I was there six years ago, & none to be had. I thank you again and am / Yours very truly....[MTP]. Note: Sam likely forgot that Alexander Gunn had printed four copies of 1601 in Cleveland in 1880. See Feb., end entry for 1882.

Sam also wrote to John Larkin. “Larkin draw up a codicil requiring the auto extension of copyright on the books” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Elizabeth Jordan for *Harper's Bazaar.

Mr. Clemens requests me to tell you that he has just returned from a long & tiring business trip, & that just now he cannot say how much he will be able to do with the small boy chapter; but if you can send along some of the other instalments perhaps when he is rested he will feel more inspired than he does now. He was glad to see the two instalments you sent him last week [MTP]. Note: see May 29 entry for the story Jordan was after. Also ca. May 31 and July 6 entries.

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Clemens returns to Dublin after a four or five weeks' vacation spent partly in New York attending to business matters connected with “Library of Humor,” and partly at Fairhaven with H.H. Rogers—The Laura Wright episode; first meeting on Mississippi steamboat, & letter just received [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Harpers have got to call upon Mr. Clemens's representative when a book's copyright is about exhausted for auto notes to be added to extend the copyright for 28 years.

Larkin drew up a codicil requiring the copyright extension by adding the auto notes unless before that day shall happen the copyright laws have been so liberalized as to make it unnecessary [MTP TS 101-102].

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam, enclosing “some correspondence bearing on the Plasmon situation.” He announced that the Int’l Spiral Pin Co. was paying a 6% dividend for the first half of 1906, and that “Utah was quoted at 56 ½ on Saturday, so it is coming up again” [MTP].

W.B. McGarvey for International Spiral Pin wrote to Sam, enclosing a check for $109.50 in dividends for the first half of 1906 [MTP].

Benjamin E. Smith of The Century Co. wrote to Sam.

A correspondent has asked that we include the word labrick (used in the first chapter of “Pudd’nhead Wilson”) in the Century Dictionary. Can you tell me anything concerning the origin of the word, or are you willing to be responsible for the first use of it? I judge, however, that it is dialectal. If the matter interests you, will you kindly let me hear from you concerning it? [MTP].

July 31 Tuesday – George B. Harvey of Harpers arrived in Dublin and spent five days with Clemens, choosing 100,000 words from the 250,000 of the Autobiography for publication in the North American Review. Harvey left on Aug. 4 [Aug. 3 to Clara]. Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Col. Harvey arrived late this evening at 9:45” [MTP TS 102].

Sam wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Dear Charlotte, you are doing wonderfully. I await the coming carbon with strong interest. I returned here July 25th, from Fairhaven, & since then have dictated 4 hours. But I am going to do 2 hours a day, now, right along.

I am dreadfully glad I gave up the syndicate idea, for Harvey has been here several days & has read my entire 250,000 words, & is going to use above 100,000 of them in the newly-organized North American Review—which begins as a fortnightly Sept. 1., & will have new features: among them a purely literary section—just the place for my Autobiographical chapters. He culled & patched together 5 instalments of 5,000 words each—and very nice culling he did, too. Howells will select for the rest of the twelve-month.

With kindest regards to Miss Bensley, ... [MTP]. Note: Martha S. Bensley, associated with the support movement for Russian revolutionaries in N.Y.C. and a collaborator with Johnson.

Sam’s notebook: Lists Robert Henry Newell (Orpheus C. Kerr) among American humorists who were formerly well known [Gribben: NB 42 TS 7].

Elizabeth Jordan for Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam that she awaited at his convenience the small boy’s chapter for “The Whole Family” and would send the “successive chapters to you as fast as they are written.” In the meantime she would keep sending reminders [MTP].

George H. Tripp, Librarian New Bedford Mass. wrote to Sam. “I very much regret that I was out of the city when you and Mr. Rogers called at the library the other day, on your quest for whaling logs. There is one which I should have liked to show you as an illustration of a very highly decorated whaling log. ...I am going to send it for you to look over...” [MTP]. Note: why the men were after whaling logs is anyone’s guess.

Clemens’ A.D. this day included: Col. Harvey arrives to-night—Letter from Clara Clemens—Sam Clemens receives copy of Duneka’s “Library of Humor”—Seventy-eight other humorists contained therein—Letter from Charles Orr referring to Mr. Clemens’s reply—Clemens tells why he wrote “1601” and what it is, & of the private printing of several copies [MTP: Autodict2; MTE 200-203].

August – The first of two installments of “The Horse’s Tale” ran in Harper’s Monthly for August. The second ran in Sept. issue; it would be published by Harper’s as a 153 page book on Oct. 24, 1907.

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers: “Dear Mr. Rogers: I’m accepting...tell me if you can go & if it will pay you to go. S.L.C.” [MTP: Anderson Galleries catalog, 4-5 April 1934, No. 4098, Item 116].

Frances Powell Case (pseud. “Frances Powell”) inscribed a copy of her book The Prisoner of Ornith Farm (1906) to Sam: “‘He didn’t ever have to tell anybody to mind their manners—everybody was always good-mannered where he was. Everybody loved to have him around, too; he was sunshine—’ / Mr. Samuel L. Clemens / with sincere admiration—and respect / Frances Powell Case / Flotsam / Wainscott, Long Island / August 1906” [Gribben 132].

August 1 Wednesday – William Dean Howells wrote from Kittery Point, Maine to Sam.

Thank you for letting me see Clara’s just tribute to you. It is a great thing to have one’s children not rise up and knock one’s head off after reading one’s writings, but it seems that it happens in your family some times as it does in mine. Many people have written me about that lovely and loveable article of yours. Some it seems to have roused to a remembrance of my existence; some it has instructed of the fact; and you did it uot of the goodness of your heart, as well as the soundness of your head.

But I cannot allow Clara to call Venetian Life “Venetian Days.” You are the only person in the world who may do this and not be destroyed.

Howells then told of a “summer of suffering” of his wife’s health. They had been re-reading FE nightly “with a delight truly unspeakable.” He PS’d: “What about that MS of your Autobiography which I was to have?” [MTHL 2: 815-16]. Notes: Sam had written an essay titled “William Dean Howells” (published in Harper’s Monthly for July 1906) in which he referred to “Venetian Life” as “Venetian Days”; Clara’s letter used the phrase “Venetian Days.”

George B. Harvey for Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam. “We have the pleasure in granting you application for the privilege of printing two hundred and fifty copies of your proposed new book, not yet named, for private distribution” [MTP]. Note: this letter appears to be in another hand than Harvey’s, written for him. The book referred to is “What is Man?” On the back of the env. Sam wrote, “Authorization to print privately 250 copies of the “Gospel,” evidently a categorizing note.

August 2 Thursday – Frederick W. Wile wrote from the Berlin Bureau of the Chicago Daily News:

I wonder if you remember an American newspaper-man to whom you gave a forenoon’s great pleasure in London in the summer of 1900? He had asked you for an interview at Brown’s Hotel and you set the appointment for Kellgren’s massage-establishment, down Victoria-way, where I saw some husky rubbers doing sundry and divers things to you. Then we spent two hours walking and talking through Hyde Park. I am the proud possessor of these recollections, and I am writing to ask if you would not give me a permanent souvenir of them in the shape of an autographed photograph of yourself? [MTP].

The ledger books of Chatto & Windus show that 2,000 additional copies of Mark Twain’s Library of Humor were printed, totaling 16,000 [Welland 236].

August 3 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara in Norfolk, Conn.

Clärchen dear, I first read it to myself—merely to get the hang of it, for nothing is to be found out about a piece of literature by a mute reading of it. Next day I read it aloud to Lyon, & then the light broke out all over it & we saw that it was fine & strong & deep & moving. You have done well, dearie—very very well indeed. If others fail to see the piece’s merits it will be only because they will read it mutely—people always do that stupid thing. I can't return it to you yet,—& not for several days—for you must not send any but typed MS. to editors—they won't look at it. It will be several days before Miss Hobby can type it, for we are driving her hard, just now.

The reason is: To go back a piece,. before leaving New York I finally concluded not to syndicate any of my Autobiography, & sent that definite word to McClure. Then Col. Harvey arrived from Europe & we straightened out our snarl in five minutes. He next told me of his great plan: to turn the North American Review into a fortnightly the 1st of Sept, introduce into it a purely literary section, of high class, & in other ways make a great & valuable periodical of it. He was always icily indifferent to the Autobiography before, but thought he would like to look at it now, so I told him to come up. He arrived 3 days ago, & has now carefully read close upon a hundred thousand words of it (there are 250,000). He says it is the “greatest book of the age,” & has in it “the finest literature.”

He has done some wonderful editing; for he has selected 5 instalments of 5,000 words each; & although those are culled from here & there & yonder, he has made each seem to have been written by itself—& without altering a word. At 10,000 words a month we shall place about 110,000 or 120,000 words before the public in 12 months.

I will bank this money by itself, & you & John Howells can draw upon it up to $15,000 to build the house with. Then if you find you must, you can draw out $5,000 or $6,000 more of it.

To-morrow Harvey will carry away one full set of the MSS to Howells & get him to help select instalments. I can't do the selecting myself. The instalments will come to me in galley-proofs for approval, but I guess I will pass them on to you for final judgment after I have examined them.

The house is already named by Miss Lyon. “Autobiography House.” It's a good name, I think.

Miss Hobby is typing the 5 instalments under high pressure; the first one must appear Sept. 1.

Our income for the next 12 months (taking all sources), ought to be $70,000 or $80,000.

With many hugs & kisses, dearheart, / Father [MTP]. Note: “Autobiography House” would become “Innocents at Home,” and finally “Stormfield.”

Sam also replied to the Aug. 1 of William Dean Howells, in Kittery Point, Maine.

I am very very sorry Mrs. Howells's health remains so bad. It is hard enough to have to live with the human race, without that.

As to the Autobiography, you're going to get it—in the neck! as the vulgar say. Harvey will go hence with it, to you, to-morrow. He is going to volley it at the public in the new N. A. Review, which I think is going to be the greatest of the periodicals, & the most conspicuous in America.

I want John & Clara to take hold of that house now, & build it—out of the Review money. I shall bank it by itself for that purpose, as I have just been telling Clara.

“Autobiography House.” How's that for a name for it? Seems good. It is Miss Lyon's suggestion.

The Colonel has done some wonderful editing of this MS. He has selected five 5,000-word instalments, & pieced them together so cleverly that the seams don't show, & each seems to have been written by itself. Ever yours / Mark [MTHL 2: 817-18].

August 4 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Elizabeth Jordan, editor of Harper's Bazaar, unable to be inspired to add to her collaborated story, his contribution being the boy character:

Dear Miss Jordan: / I was hoping & indeed expecting that that boy would look in & report for duty. But it has not happened. After this long waiting he has never once rung the bell. This can only mean one thing—he is not coming; that is if he has a story to tell he is not moved to tell it through me. I could compel him, but the children of the fancy are sensitive, & I do not offend them with compulsions, & so I have given him up, & dismissed the thought of him from my mind, permanently. I would so gladly have allowed him to tell his tale by my hand, but under no conditions would I tell it for him. It gives me a sharp pang to say these things & disappoint you, but there is no alternative; the thought of the boy keeps tagging around after me, & interfering with my affairs, & for my own comfort I have to take this course with him [MTP]. Note: See May 29 entry; also MTHL 2: 818-19.

Sam also wrote a letter to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. Harry Rogers, Jr.) in Fairhaven, Mass. that he added a few lines to on Aug. 5.

You are a very dear partner in crime, & if you have missed me half as much as I have missed you, I am very well satisfied—& pretty vain, too, besides. You've got some exceedingly good new words, & they are genuine, too—I've verified them by the dictionary, & adopted them. Do you know, by & by none but the most learned people will be able to understand you & me. The others will be awed when they listen: they will think we are talking a foreign language. Awed, & envious & hostile—but no matter, they will admire, anyway. It is good that you are going to practice-up on billiards, we'll have strenuous tournaments at 21 [Fifth Ave.]; & I hope the table will be exactly the size of the one at Fairhaven, then you won't have to learn the angles over again. Stick to the English game; you will have a chance to rest while I am making exhibition-runs, & your strength will last the longer, whereas "Chicago" permits no rest.

Sam then wrote of Colonel Harvey's visit and of the forthcoming North American Review segments of his Autobiography, starting Sept. 1. He liked the arrangement and so would H.H. Rogers. He also disclosed that the "boy" for the "composite story" that Elizabeth Jordan wanted had "not yet knocked at my mind for admission." Sam wanted to go to Fairhaven for a day about the end of the month, but encouraged Mary and husband Harry Rogers to "come 'mobiling up here.'" He finished with:

Oh, if we can only learn to be good, & go to heaven! (There's 7 sabbaths per week, there, y' know. To break.) It just makes a body's mouth water. Do you believe the angels are galactophorous? I hope so.

Now then, on top of all these important things there's still another which - - - - - sho! paper of this size doesn't hold anything.

Why, so she was your grandmother! Mine, too. It makes us cousins or something, & I think it's very nice. Good-bye, dear pal. / SLC / Won't you please mail the enclosed to Mrs. Coe for me? [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today Col. Harvey went off bearing a stack of the autobiographical ms. with him. All the order to which it had been reduced is disordered again & its all a chaos. How the Paines and Hobbys will grieve" [MTP TS 102].

George B. Harvey of Harper's left Dublin with the portions of "Mark Twain's Autobiography" MS he wished to publish in the reorganized North American Review [Aug. 3 to Clara]. Before he left, either this day or Aug. 3, Harvey wrote a note of summary to Sam: "I have: / (1) Instalment No. 1 beginning with preface outlining autobiography. / (2) Instalment No. 5 beginning "My Experiences as author." / (3) Copies of complete dictation to Feb 12 inclusive. / Please send: / Instalments Nos. 2, 3 & 4 as soon as finished. / Also copies of complete dictation beginning with Feb. 13 as it proceeds" [MTP].

August 5 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam added a few lines to his Aug. 4 to Mary B. Rogers:

Sunday. / P.S.

No, gentle pal, return it to me, in the enclosed envelop. I will go over it again (aloud, this time, which is the only sure test), before I ship it to Harvey.

(Don't let any outsider see it, it is dangersome.) / SLC [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Joe Twichell.

Dear Joe: / Certainly archæology comes to the very front, now! this triumph places it at the head of the sciences. You have heard of it?—how Professor Hübner has established beyond shadow of doubt that the Virgin was 47 years old?

I think it is wonderful, perfectly wonderful. He did not need to also prove that she was black, for all Nazarenes were colored people, & are to this day.

Think of it. Black & 47. Do you believe there's any temptation He could resist? Do you? Are you going to preach about it? When? Yours ever [MTP]. Note: refers to Jesus Christ and his mother Mary; trouble is, Jesus was born in Bethlehem and only lived in Nazareth after Joseph and Mary returned from Egypt after Herod's death. "He was called a Nazarene" but was not one by birth. See Matthew chapter 2. The good archeology professor has not been identified. See also Rogers of Aug. 8.

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers, enclosing the above note to Twichell. "Upon second thought it will be better for this to come from you. In theological matters Twichell attaches much more value to your commendations than he does to mine. Just copy it in your own hand & sign it & send it to him. It will be all right. Yours ever" [MTP; not in MTHHR].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens, Jean & I lunched with Mrs. Wm. Cabot today to meet Sir John & Lady Carter. I liked them ever so much. Lady Carter is the 2nd wife—a niece of Mrs. Cabot's. It transpired that Mr. Clemens & Sir John had met several years ago in Nassau when Mr. Clemens was yachting down there with Mr. Rogers & Mr. Tom Reid. At luncheon—such a pretty luncheon for there was a table of young creatures—Mr. Clemens told how many years ago when he & Mrs. Clemens were in England they went with Moncure D. Conway out to Stratford-on-Avon, but the destination was an unknown one to Mrs. Clemens. For many years she had wanted to go to Shakespeare's grave & this was to be a surprise to her. At the station when the big station sign was very visible, these 2 men thrust themselves between Mrs. Clemens & the windows so she couldn't read that sign; & they hustled her away from a bus which had "The Shakespeare Arms" in glaring letters along its side; & only when she stood reading the epitaph in the church, did she know where she was.

After luncheon we sat out on the broad porch with the beautiful view of the hills beyond the pines & Gerald Thayer brought around the splendid, radiant, squawking makaw that he brought up from Trinidad for Eleanor Cabot's father to buy for her [MTP TS 102-103]. Note: in his NB of Mar. 22, 1902 in Nassau, Sam wrote that he'd known Sir Gilbert Thomas Carter before. Sir John may have been a relative. In his NB of June 21, 1899 he was in London and wrote of John Ridgely Carter "of our embassy."

August 6 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam inscribed the first photo of himself in the series "Progress of a Moral Purpose" to daughter Jean: "To Jean Clemens / with the deep love of her / Father / Aug. '06. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain" [MTP].

Sam also replied to the July 31 from Dr. Benjamin E. Smith of the Century Co., N.Y.

I am authority for the fact—which is a fact—that the term labrick was in constant use by all grown men except certain of the clergy in the state of Missouri when I was a boy. It had a very definite meaning & occupied in the matter of strength the middle ground between scoundrel & son of a bitch.

Sincerely Yours / SL. Clemens

P.S. But I think you are serious about this. If you are, let me brush aside the ornamental & give you the plain & authentic definition of the word. Labrick is substantially ass, a little enlarged & emphasized; let us say, labrick is a little stronger than ass, & not quite as strong as idiot [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Goes back to the failure of Charles L. Webster & Co.—First meeting with H. H. Rogers—His sympathy, and assistance—Mr. Clemens in 3 years pays off 100 cents on the dollar.—Clemens' income from his books has been as high as $57,000 a year [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: ABP came out & straightened out the ms. & then we walked to the upper pasture to talk & talk about the King. "I'm so glad he's just as he is. He ought to be just as he is. The King can do no wrong." That is our ritual. We measured off the rooms down stairs with a view to proportions for the new Redding house and if I am good, very good, I am to have a strip of land in Redding to build me there a little house. AB will let me use the strip from his own property. Oh, I must be good—monotonously good. Nancy Brush put on one of my night gowns & porpoised down the hill for Mr. Clemens. Last night she did it in the moon light and it was a dear sight [MTP TS 103]. Note: from her Aug. 7 entry for this evening:

Last evening [Aug. 6] we went to a "Joe Smith" play. It was given in the open air & Ethel Barrymore played in it. Joe Smith was a Jack Frost. Mr. Clemens & I sat on an upper balcony, whence we could look down into the lovely garden and see Jack Frost touch the flowers with baneful hand—his power banished however by the Queen of the Garden—Ethel Barrymore. But first came the old woman of the garden, walking about among her posies, & mourning their approaching deaths. How sweet she was, how dodderingly sweet & touching. The waiting for the carriage afterward was so tiresome & the thing above all others that Mr. Clemens hates so, & this morning he told me that he held himself in—a dozen times he was on the verge of saying his hatred of it all, but he didn't he didn't spoil a good & sweet evening by exploding, and how he would hve done it a few years ago! How he used to distress Mrs. Clemens & give her heartaches. Then Susie's death came & he learned to control himself for a while, but he said it was only for a while, & once again he broke out into his old ways, so heartbreaking to Mrs. Clemens [MTP TS 103-105].

August 7 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

"Training is everything" he said, "The Gospel is right" & if he controls himself now, it is due to the training of his age, his old age. Such a sweet old age it is. Of course, he bursts out sometimes into savage blasphemies. It wouldn't be he if he didn't. Early this morning, before 7, I heard a big guttural God damn from his room & then quietness. Later I learned he was mad at the green shade which had stuck & stuck [MTP TS 103-105].
Note: see the rest of the Aug. 7 entry at the end of Aug. 6.

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Clemens expresses his gratitude to H.H. Rogers—Describes the man as one of the 3 handsomest men in America [MTP: Autodict2].

August 8 Wednesday – In N.Y.C. H.H. Rogers replied to the Aug. 5 from Sam, confessing that the letter he was to copy and send to Twichell about the Virgin Mary being 47 and black had been sent along without copying due to the "disordered condition" of his desk on Monday night. Rogers disagreed with Sam on his conclusions about Mary's age and color; he felt sure he'd get a reply from Twichell, which would be his "duty to send it to your address." He related that George B. Harvey had been in this afternoon and seemed to be "rather gloating over some great victory" relating to his choice of 100,000 words of Sam's Autobiography. He also related that Melville E. Stone, manager of the Associated Press, had called "somewhat depressed" due to a letter (not extant) from Sam. Melville was making arrangements for the A.P.'s Sept. 19 annual dinner at the Waldorf Astoria.

In other words, let me "butt in" and make a suggestion, and I have not a doubt at all but that Mrs. Rogers will approve of what I say, because she never does approve of what you say, and if so, we may be able to influence you. At any rate, Mrs. Rogers is quite angry with you about various matters, and I am sure you will feel influenced when she gets near you. / Yours truly ... [MTHHR 614-15].

Clemens' A.D. this day included: The effrontery of amateur literary efforts—The playing of charades to-night—From Susy's biography: the presentation of "The Prince and Pauper" at Charles Dudley Warner's house [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King wanted to see my Zarathustra. It pained me to give him up, but I did it, & after the King had looked through it he said, 'O damn Nietzsche! He couldn't write a lucid sentence to save his soul.' Somehow I am glad he doesn't like Zarathustra. Very, very glad—but I shall be able to quote some passages to him—some telling passages—for Nietzsche is too much like himself" [MTP TS 105; also Gribben 508 using older TS page numbers].

August 8 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Calvin H. Higbie.

Dear Higbie: / I have read it, & the fact is, I am greatly disappointed. It is mainly second-hand news, worked over. In 'Roughing It' I have already told about the Wide-West blind lead; & about your locating it; & about our dreams of what we would do when we got the money; & about your going cementing & my going off to nurse Nye; & about the relocating of the blind lead; & about my joining the staff of the 'Enterprise;' & about Lake Mono; & about the robbery on the divide—and so forth & so on. To make the re-telling of these things valuable there is only one way, not two: they must be better told than I told them. You have not done that, & any editor would say so at once: & he would add that he could not use matter, anyway, that had already been used. I exhausted that ore-pile, & left nothing behind but waste rock.

You have invented some new things—such as the flap-jacks & the ball—but any editor would strike them out, because such things are without value except when funny, & you have not made them funny. And how could you? You are a straight, honest, practical, sincere man, & no schooling, no training, no diligence would ever qualify you to write humorously—it is out of your line; & even if it were not, you could not pick up that exacting art in a day.

You have made me pretty ridiculous, but I shan't mind that if the editors will buy your MS. But I clearly perceive that it would damage its chances for me to offer it to them, for the reason that they would certainly ask me for a paragraph in praise of it & I could not furnish it. In print I have never praised anything which I could not praise with heartiness & sincerity. For in my way I am as honest as you are, Cal.

But there is one thing I can do, & this I will gladly do if you say the word. I can send it to the Herald, through my literary agent, & he can say you passed it through my hands to see if there was anything in it that would wound me, & that I found it innocent of reproach in that respect. Shall I do that? Let me hear from you, old friend. / Sincerely yours, ... [MTP: TS in A.D. 10 Aug. 1906].

August 9 Thursday – Sam wrote to Frank N. Doubleday about “What is Man?” and a proposed special binding for ten copies:

If I understand McClure's tentative offer I know Harvey would not consider it. When he was here the other day he said he had told McC that the price offered must be a very stiff one. Thank you very cordially for the pains you have taken with the matter.

Good. Now if Mr. Bothwell will keep that letter-form “standing” it will come in handy in case of future distributions.

Whenever you light upon a luxurious binding for the 10 special copies, nail it, old man. / Sincerely...[MTP]. Note: J.W. Bothwell, DeVinne's superintendent, whose name was used to keep Clemens' anonymous.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today Jean, Gerry & AB [Paine] & I went up the mountain. We went slowly up those beautiful heights & rock stretches and we didn't go even to the second peak, so prone we were to nestle down upon that mighty framework & drink in its wonders. I had taken along the Rubaiyat & read from it as we sat around the spring after our dinner. Dear Jean was in a wonderfully sweet mood. Gerry was very beautiful to look at & to listen to, & AB was brilliant & full of philosophy and of himself. It was all so lovely. Then to reach home at 7:30 & find the King stretched out on the couch with the two black kittens asleep on his legs was a sweet ending to the day. Gerry spent the night [MTP TS 105].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: not found at MTP.

August 10 Friday – Melvin L. Severy wrote from Arlington Heights, Mass. to ask if he might quote from Sam's “King Leopold's Soliloquy” for a publication he was preparing [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Sam's reply as “on or after 10 August.”

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Clipping from Westminster Gazette, criticizing statement in “Diary of Eve” and calling it irreverent—Clemens replies to this—Calvin Higbie's MS—Clemens's reply to him—Extract from Higbie's essay [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: “The King says ‘Damn Nietzsche’ when I offer a quotation for the King's approval. First he damns—but then he approves with his head on one side in his quaint listening attitude” [MTP TS 105-106; also Gribben 508].

Samuel Hopkins Adams for Collier's Weekly wrote to Sam. "Your extremely interesting collection of Oppenheimer letters reached me safely, and I thank you heartily for them. That an extraordinary exhibit it is of mixed vanity and carelessness." Adams wasn't sure he had a "definite understanding" of how he might "rightly make use of this material," but would get "at" the material within ten days [MTP]. Sam wrote on the env., "Oppenheimer fraud—S. Hopkins Adams"

Thomas Wentworth Higginson wrote from Lexington, Mass. to ask Sam if he would "unite with Gilder & myself in nominating Mrs. Julia Ward Howe for membership in the National Institute of Arts & Letters?" Robert Underwood Johnson also approved [MTP].

Elizabeth Jordan for Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam. "A letter as definite as yours should be accepted as final. Nevertheless, both Mr. Howells and I are so disappointed that I am moved, with his encouragement, to say just one thing: why not drop the whole matter of the boy for three or four months—say until the first of the year? Then let me send you all the chapters that have been written" [MTP]. Note: on the collaborative story; see prior entries.

David A. Munro of the N.A.R. wrote to Sam. "The Colonel wished to send these proofs to you yesterday himself, but they were not to be had from the printer until this morning...What a chapter it is! There were tears and laughter as I read it" [MTP].

Melvin L. Severy wrote from Arlington Heights, Mass. to Sam.

I am preparing for publication a work treating of present social conditions and would like to favorably quote from your "King Leopold's Soliloquy." Is it your pleasure that I may? I shall be very grateful for the permission I feel sure you will grant [MTP]. Note: on the letter Sam wrote, "I am quite willing / must also write to the Congo Reform. Believe they will be glad."

August 10 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to Melvin L. Severy's Aug. 10 request: "I am quite willing. Must write also to the Congo Reform. Believe they will be glad" [MTP].

August 11 Saturday – Of the selections from Twain's A.D.'s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto's choices, was commentary, dictated this day, on a newspaper clipping this day of a humorous letter Sam had written years before to Andrew Carnegie asking for money to buy a hymnbook [35]. Sam also discussed Rudyard Kipling, his reputation and his first trip to Elmira to meet him in 1889; the segment of A.D. was selected for MTE [309-310].

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Man incapable of originating a thought; simply receives suggestions from the outside—Note to Andrew Carnegie, asking for hymn-book—The pension for John T. Lewis—H.H. Rogers' doubt as to the existence of John T. Lewis—Two letters from Lewis—Rudyard Kipling comes to America—Visits Clemens in Elmira [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Dear me, AB thought he straightened out the auto ms. for he found most of it missing. Something must have been wrong with AB for he overlooked it—it was in the ms. box all the time. Chewinks, I think.

We lunched at the Thayers today—the King & we—and the King made merry over meat pie & beans & lettuce. We ate out of doors on the long porch dining room & the King told anecdotes & scolded those who quarreled with the nub of a joke, making it literal. Home the King & I drove so that he could go to bed for a rest before we went to the Club to hear Miss Lowell & Mrs. Joe Smith read tales. The King went to bed for just 7 minutes, then into his clothes & away we went again, he full of the delight of seeing and chatting with people who love him so much. Barry Faulkner came back for dinner [MTP TS 106]. Note: chewink: a bird in eastern North America.

August 12 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

This was to be a busy day for a Secretary’s interests—but the King elected that his interests should be paramountest. He elected that she must sit and talk with him—so talk it was—and in the afternoon we went over through the woods to the Pumpellys’. How beautiful it was! The King’s first walk this year. He tipped along back home, prepared to be exhausted & faint-for-sleep, but no, he couldn’t catch a wink—but lay in his bed smoking & reading Roman History [Tacitus]; & keyed up into the resolve to walk every day. But of course he won’t do it. I’m sorry to be going tomorrow, for I’d like to keep that resolve so “hot from the bat” going, until it could be a habit; but the King doesn’t have habits. He hates what is a habit [MTP TS 106-107].

Laura M. Dake (Laura Wright) wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens:—

While in Chicago a few weeks ago, on a sudden geneous impulse I wrote to you. In my letter, as you know if you have received it, I asked you to ask your friend, Mr. Carnegie to help me help a young friend of mine who is making an effort for higher things, in the face of Fate. He cut wood and by other means got his degree at Harvard, then, feeling himself called to medicine, is making every effort to take the necessary course. I am deeply interested in him,—so much so, that at the risk of being misunderstood by you, I made my appeal to you to cast me a crumb from Mr. C’s millions [MTP].

August 13 Monday – Sam’s A.D. of this day (untitled) declared his admiration for the work of Rudyard Kipling, especially Kim; this A.D. segment was selected for MTE [310-12].

Clemens’ A.D. this day included: Rudyard Kipling’s 1889 visit to Elmira continued—Some of his books mentioned [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

I started for N.Y. Oh joy! By way of Boston I went, & had Mr. George Brush to nestle beside me to talk on moral—socialistic—issues all the way to the city. He is going to send me pamphlets on Socialism for he says I’m a budding Socialist. I wonder?

I found C.C. at #21 & we went together up to talk with Loudon Charlton about the plans for a concert tour this winter.

John Howells dined with us & we talked over the plans for the new Redding house. J.H. has good ideas & high ideals [MTP TS 107].

August 14 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote a delightful letter to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. Harry Rogers, Jr.) in Fairhaven, Mass.

Ho, you miraculous combination of quicksilver, watch-springs & sunshine, how you do dance out from your pen & light up this solemn solitude & set things a-moving! No matter how long you live you’ll never get old, (thanks be!) My wife never did, neither did my mother; & my mother lived to be 88, & always she was all animations & champagne & charm, like you. I think it a most remarkable thing that I was able to draw you (as mother Eve) to the very life, & all by accident. From the first page to the last, there you are; it is your very self, exactly as you would have looked & acted if you had been Eve, with a spang-new beautiful world to flutter around in—and not a detail of you lacking, so far as I can see, but the tawny hair & the clothes. And on pages 69 & 71 you are concentrated. I am pretty proud of that accident. No doubt, accidents that approximate it have happened in literature, but his isn’t an approximation, it is a reproduction, & stands all by itself, unfellowed.

Miss Lyon went to New York yesterday, to be gone a week & more, & meet Clara there & help her & the architect plan the new house, & see that there is a proper billiard-room in it for you to break records in; Jean has gone with 12 young people to climb Monadnock; so the place is empty & still, & that is the solemn solitude I have spoken of. Would you believe it?—I am developing into a tromper of the woods myself. The rich twilight of these lonely woodland roads is enchanting. If you would come—but I perceive that you can't. Day before yesterday I covered a very handsome distance indeed, for a novice.

I am so glad you liked that scrap of autobiography, dear pal; & I wish I could send more, since you are willing to read it, but there's only one "set" here, for Harvey carried away the other set to select instalments from. Some day it will come back, & then I will overwhelm you with it unless you stop trying to make out that you are a fictitious pal. There isn't any way for you to be fictitious, you wouldn't know how to go about it. Do you know?—I had the delightfulest letter from your Merlie, & was smart enough to read between the lines that she was really grateful to us for keeping order in that bridge party; & she as good as said she wished she could have all her bridge orgies policed & tranquillized like that. These are not her exact words, but they are very close.

As to that secret. I must manage that—& soon. But how? I have to have your criminal help. I could go to Fairhaven day after tomorrow (Thursday)—& Friday just as well—but shall you be there? And will uncle Henry come up Friday? (He mustn't be allowed to escape to the mountains before this conspiracy is consummated—indeed that won't do!—do you hear, Spontaneous Combustion, do you?)

Will you telegraph or telephone me?

But if you find it must be put off a week, I will arrange accordingly. Meantime keep your eye on the head senior, & see that he doesn't flee to the mountains.

From all accounts of the cruise, you & Harry must have had a delightful time; & not such a very unsociable time, neither. If I may have the privilege, dear pal, I also am / Yours affectionately / SLC
All this time I've had the help of three kittens—& not dead ones, either [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: C.C., J.H. & I went out to Redding, going by error to Danbury, picking up a sandwich luncheon at the station to carry with us & finding a very good team to take us the 8 miles to Redding. It is a lovely country. It is Connecticut. The King's stretch of land is very beautiful, with a fine site for the house to be built there & many sites beside. J.H. paced off the house foundation & we lunched on the hilltop & everything was delightful. I could only see the chimney of the old shingled farm house & the barns & I don't know where the Paine house is, for we didn't stop there at all [MTP TS 107].

August 15 Wednesday – Frank N. Doubleday wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam [MTP]. Note: Sam had asked Doubleday to "put away ten copies" of "What is Man?" for "special bindings some day" on July 27. Doubleday replied that he'd been out of town and didn't receive Sam's letter and telegram until Monday (Aug. 13).

If Colonel Harvey, as you say, would not consider anything but a stiff order, I should think the subject had better be dropped, as I do not believe that Mr. McClure could possibly get a large price for serializing these books. It is customary for newspapers to buy books of this kind for small amounts of money, it being considered splendid advertising. Mr. McClure is sailing for Europe tomorrow, and not having heard from Miss Lyon could do nothing.

Bothwell has put off the delivery of "What is Man" until the first of next week. For those ten special copies he suggests a perfectly plain crushed levant on the outside... [MTP]. Note: Doubleday continued with binding descriptions giving Sam the option of "extravagance" at $12 per book or a "very nice binding" for "two or three dollars apiece."

Sam's A.D. of this day, "A Corn Pone Prayer" dealt with the first day of school in Mrs. Horr's class in Hannibal; it was selected for MTE [107-110]. Clemens' A.D. this day also included: Praying for gingerbread [MTP: Autodict2].

August 15 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to Frank N. Doubleday: "will keep the sheets & not do any binding at present / perhaps order 20—" [MTP].

August 16 Thursday – Independent Magazine published a brief, anonymous review of Eve's Diary, p. 397. It was uncritical [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Sixth Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Spring 1982 p. 10].

August 17 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Today came such a drowsy little note from the King to say that the dictating is a burden to him, & so he is flying away down to Fairhaven & pretty Mrs. Harry Rogers, & the yacht, & he is so glad to have the holiday. Dublin is become an impossible place for him to live in” [MTP TS 108].

Harper & Brothers wrote to Isabel Lyon asking where they might find “when the following articles first appeared,” as they needed the information for copyright: “The Invalid’s Story”; “The Captain’s Story”; “In Memoriam”; Moffet’s sketch of Mark Twain, etc.

“We purpose taking Vol. 24 Hillcrest—the new volume—and add all these articles in a trade volume so that both Hillcrest and Trade Editions shall be complete and uniform as to contents” [MTP].

August 17 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Isabel Lyon answered Harper’s Aug. 17 inquiry: “Mr. Clemens thinks these copyrights are certainly dead. / P.B.P.—Pub by Slote & Woodman...Captain’s Possibly do” [MTP].

August 18 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

“Whatever is right. Sometimes it’s just right.” AB said it today when we sat on a big stone up on the King’s hilltop [in Redding]. Such a hilltop. Such a King. Such an ABP. They’re almost too “just right”. His house is darling & I had such a good time. He & Joy met me at Branchville. We jumped into the little carriage, AB picked up the reins [sic] with a great flourish, but the horse didn’t move. There was surprise on AB’s face & a chuckle from a farmer standing near—the horse was still hitched to a great big stone hitching post. We drove through a beautiful rough scrubby road & AB is such a reckless driver, such a dear wild Irishman of a man. He goes like hell & puts all the confidence in the horse, because I don’t think he could put any in himself. We went all over the property, through the old farm house & away up over the hilltop. It is very beautiful [MTP TS 108]. Note: Joy Paine, Albert Bigelow and Dora Paine’s youngest daughter.

Calvin H. Higbie wrote to Sam.

Yours of no date rec. Am not much disappointed that you condemn the article. I had sense enough to see for myself, that it was a crude affair, and sent it to you for approval, or condemnation, and am glad you condemn it, for the reason that you saw something that would make you ridiculous, [sic] and all the money in North America wouldnt tempt me to have it published for that reason alone [MTP]. Note: Sam included this letter in his Aug. 28 A.D.

August 19 Sunday – Frederic Chapin wrote from Oak Park, Ill. to Sam concerning existing rights of dramatization for P&P, possible claims by Daniel Frohman, and of Elisabeth Marbury’s position as Sam’s agent. Frank Pixley, a good friend of Chapin’s who wrote The Burgomaster (1901), King Dodo (1902), The Prince of Pilsen (1903), etc. was to write the play and lyrics, but objected to having to share royalties with Marbury [MTP]. Note: Frank Pixley (1867-1919), librettist, collaborated with Gustav Luders on popular musicals; he is not Frank M. Pixley, Am. journalist and politician who d. 1895. Not in Gribben.

Note: The MTP catalogs Lyon’s response as “on or after 19 August.” three days estimated postal time is allowed here, giving ca. Aug. 23. Also, a separate sheet dated Sept. 11 is included in this listing, and is placed in that date.

The New York Times, p.SM9 ran a feature article, “The Feminine Magazine Trust” bemoaning the decline of top male writers and the ascendancy of female writers. In part:

Of late the voice of the Muck Rake has been loud in the land. Few monopolistic corporations have failed to feel the cold steel of investigation in their very vitals.

But there is in existence one ruthless monopoly, one that has been reaching out inch by inch, killing competition on every hand with absolute mercilessness, which has so far eluded the keenest eyed of the exposers. Untrammelled it continues on its way. Unless it be summarily checked it bids fair to do away within a decade with every vestige of opposition.

It is the Feminine Literary and Artistic Trust.

The record of the advance of this combine, appalling in its record of cruelty and rapaciousness, is enough to make strong men weep.

Alas! Mark Twain and William Dean Howells are old. Frank Norris is dead—assassinated, men whisper, by emissaries of the trust. Upton Sinclair has been driven into Socialism and Winston Churchill into politics. Henry James long ago was forced to live in England. And now Booth Tarkington and Charles Dana Gibson, fearing for their lives, have also fled the country.

Is there to be no Messiah to cast the chains from man? Will no Washington, no Cromwell, raise the battle cry and lead male authors and artists to victory?

Or will every man be driven from the Eden of literature and art and the power of woman become as absolute and despotic in our magazines as it is now in our kitchens?

August 20 Monday – Sam referred to his What Is Man? As his “Gospel.” 250 copies of What is Man? was privately, and anonymously published by DeVinne Press, NYC.

Sam maintained anonymity by having Frank N. Doubleday serve as a go-between DeVinne. The book was thus issued without an author’s name, and copyrighted under the name of J.W. Bothwell, DeVinne’s superintendent. Budd points out that the piece was begun in 1898 in Vienna, with a typescript of the first draft prepared there. After making revisions and adding sections both before and after returning to America in 1900, a second typescript was made in 1902. Again in 1905 Sam revised and reordered the piece and had a third typescript made, which was, in time, used as a printer’s copy. After DeVinne set type, Sam read proofs and made more revisions. It was finally published this day [Collected 2: 1011-12]. Note: See also Rasmussen A-Z 510, Trombley, MTOW p. 63, who writes, “Twain hoped it would create a literary sensation; instead, it fell flat...he wanted to burn the 240 volumes left.”

August 21 Tuesday – “Tuesday night [Aug. 21] there was a very bright play by a lad of 18, & it was done in exceedingly good style by a dozen lads & lassies, none them older than the author” [Aug. 28 to Mary Rogers].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Here is a day I wonder about. / Jean, 10:00 in my study” [MTP TS 109].

August 22 Wednesday

August 23 Thursday

August 23 ca. – In Dublin, N.H., Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Frederic Chapin’s Aug. 19 inquiries concerning P&P dramatic rights. At the top of Chapin’s letter, she wrote: “If there is any legal complication it arises out of an affair of ten years ago & Dan. Frohman knows all about it. Please apply to him, for Mr. Clemens is unable to do so.” On the back side page one of Chapin’s letter, she wrote: “Miss Marbury will be Mr. Clemens’s agent & collect.” On the back of page two, a shorthand regurgitation of the entire P&P-Edward House-Abbey Richardson-Daniel Frohman-lawsuit mess:

After 203 mos House wrote a whining letter—having a hard time—Koto & Ned arrived—House OC the mahogany room Koto pink room—Were there long time—House made scenario of 1st act for Mr. C to fill out—but he couldn’t [MTP].

Sam then wrote more on this sheet, or Miss Lyon writing in first person as if she were Sam:

In the beginning I proposed to Ned House that he dramatize the P.& P. He said no—& the matter was dropped—Then Mrs. A.D. Richardson wanted to dram. & have Elsie Leslie act—Mr. C Said she could if she could secure E.L. (on nice terms with E.L.’s people) She dram. & then Belasco took her rude copy & licked it into shape & put it on the stage for D. Frohman. Up came House with an injunction. Later he got up a play—boy named Russell put it on in Bklyn. Creditors descended for the proceeds—House cleared out for Japan after 1st night—That acted as an abandonment, so his injunction slumped. That left about 2000.00 royalties which went to Mr. C—Whitford was to collect. (a lazy ass) Then Bainbridge Colby was asked to collect—but didn't. Then years later D. Frohman & Mr. C met in the Lotus Club, & chaffed each other about it, each claiming that the other owed money—but they went to playing billiards & dropped the subject [MTP].

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

August 24 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: “Dentist—a new gentile tooth. / The King returned this evening. He came in gay & jolly & darling, & full of his yachting trip to Bar Harbor & Mrs. Harry, & the joy of living. Sly, he was, & like a boy fresh from his wild oats” [MTP TS 109].

Frank N. Doubleday wrote to Sam announcing “Two copies of #11 & 12 of THE BOOK go to you by express today.” He hadn't heard back about the “fine bindings on the first 10 copies” of “What is Man?”

In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to Frank N. Doubleday's Aug 24 to point out that “a line had been left out at the bottom of page 131 / Can't it be written with a pen & thus added to the 260 copies? I think that would answer quite well” [MTP].

Katharine Boland Clemens (Mrs. James Ross Clemens) wrote from Long Island, NY to Sam.

“My dear Cousin Sam, / I am sending you a photo of the children, so you can become acquainted with the younger generation of the family. I do not think I have ever thanked you for the nice letter you wrote me last summer. We appreciated it so much. We have kept the Courant with all your good times abroad. I am making an interesting scrap book of all the clippings from English and American papers, about you, and some about Clara.” She wished they might meet while living in that part of the country [MTP].

B. Butler Boyle wrote on The Boyle Agency, NYC (Vaudeville and Dramatic) to suggest to Sam a “tour in vaudeville” [MTP].

August 25 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to William Dean Howells.

Dear 'Owells: / If it were my own case I should probably stand upon my innocence, & go on & publish my story “regardless”; but you are not me, & so it is different. You are better, & finer than I am, & it costs you many a pang that I escape.

My idea is this: that I send this letter of yours to Clara & let her submit it to her dear & valued & level-headed friend & mine, Mary Foots [sic Sam's nickname for her] (lately decorated by Yale for her art), & take her judgment & advice; (& hers only.) Never mind the rest of the Feet. Mary Foots is a fine human being, of full age, & has more sense than you & me (damn the I), put together. (But no matter what the result may be, you must publish the story, just the same, for the public has a right to it.)

If you will build on my farm & live there, it will set M^{rs} Howells's health up, for sure. Come—I'll sell you the site for $25. John will tell you it is a choice place.

I have been dissipating on the yacht & at Fairhaven for ten days, & am just back. Day after tomorrow I resume dictating, with your welcome encouragements to brace me up. / Yrs Ever / Mark [MTHL 2: 819]. Note: n1 the source explains Howells' “must have asked” advice on a novel he'd written, Fennel and Rue, which turned out to be the mirror of a real woman's experience; see n1. Mary Hallock Foote (1847-1938), novelist and illustrator; many of her stories portrayed mining life in the West, and often ran in the Century Magazine along side her illustrations.

Sam also began a letter to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. Harry Rogers) that he added to on Aug. 26 and 27.

Now this can't wait, but must be attended to at once, O dear pal & incomparable niece! I am still troubled about those editorial remarks about me which we read in proof yesterday. Naturally it would not be quite delicate in me to move in the matter, yet I feel that something ought to be done. Now my idea is that you could do it, with perfect propriety. Suppose you write Col. Harvey something like this:

Dear Sir: If my uncle knew that I was writing you upon this matter he would disapprove, for he is very delicate in his feelings; so I will ask you not to let him learn about it. To me your praises of him seemed most generous—indeed prodigal, even extravagant; but he is so sensitively organized that to him they sounded cold & indifferent, & they deeply saddened him. He is almost morbidly fond of compliments, & he realizes that these are good ones, but thinks they are over-cautious & thin. When we of the family butter him we do not do it with a knife, we use a trowel. It will profoundly gratify him if you will allow me to add the following paragraph to what you have written.

Very truly yours
Mary Rogers.

That is the idea, dear. Just write him that, then follow it with the paragraph. A warm one, you understand. And send me a copy of it, so that I can catch him if he tries to leave out any of the adjectives. Do it yourself, dear; don't let Harry help, nor uncle Henry, for they are prejudiced. There will be plenty of time, for the issue-date has been postponed to Sept. 4. I know, for I have just read the proof of the "Virginia-Clemens" instalment. A duplicate has gone to Fairhaven, but I don't need it & you can burn it.

It is past noon, now, & time to get up & dress for MacVeagh's luncheon-party. I am going to walk, one way, through the woods—it's only a mile. Then there's a lecture at the Club at 4. I'm going to interrupt it.

I'm dressed, now. When I looked in the glass I was stunned with admiration; & it seemed to me that if I could have a grandfather like that I could die happy.

It was a gay luncheon & a good lecture. I shall lecture, myself, at the Club, soon. I mean to call for a text, & teach the art of after-dinner speaking. COME—so that I can illustrate the blush-science. Shucks, Clara isn't going to sing in Norfolk—so that's off [MTP].

Sam wrote of the luncheon/lecture to Mary B. Rogers on Aug. 28:

Times are brisking up. Last Saturday [Aug. 25] I appeared on the platform with two pupils, & asked for a text. This one was furnished: "If it were decreed that one of the sexes must be extinguished, which one would it be best to spare?" We debated it for an hour & a quarter on the lines of my Spontaneous-Oratory-System-Without-Preparation, & it was a gay & noisy time.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Oh, the King is back & he's too wonderful & full of his "divine thunder". We had a big talk this morning—a 2 hour talk—for there was mail to go over. A letter from Doubleday, saying that McClure wouldn't offer more than $3,000.00 for the serializing of Tom Sawyer & Huckleberry Finn. (I was to have telephoned him last week but C.C. had me on a train bound for Redding at the appointed hour.) "What is Man" isn't to come out until about Nov. and Bothwell suggested a beautiful binding for the 10 copies to be specially bound. But the King won't decide anything just now. A very good letter from Signor Cecchi came next. He never received my May letter giving him instructions from Mr. Clemens to discontinue the Massiglia suit. The Countess is back at the Villa in Quarto now—but the lawyers aren't going to say that the suit is given up—for you can't ever say what such as the Massiglia might do. They might suddenly become the assailers, instead of the assailed. That point delighted the King. It is such a dear Italian quibble.

Then came a sweet letter from Maude Adams in answer to one from the King written last May. A letter telling her how beautiful a play Peter Pan is & how we were moved & thrilled. She sent the King a copy of the Alexander portrait of Peter. Then the King told me the story of Ned House's connection with the dramatization of the Prince and Pauper. A letter from Frederic Chapin brought it all out.

Today arrived 2 copies of "What is Man?" It is a beautifully made book, but lacks a line at p.131, "Put on a piece of paper what I'm to do. I understand it now, but God knows how I'll understand it 10 minutes from now. I don't think he keeps as close a watch over me as he did."

Lunch at Franklin McVeagh's at 1:30. Came home at 3. Start for the Club at 4 [MTP TS 109-110]. Note: Sebastiano Cecchi's letter from Apr. 13. Sam saw Peter Pan starring Maude Adams on Nov. 15, 1905 and praised the play. Frederic Chapin wrote on Aug. 19 and Sam replied ca. Aug. 23.

Lillian R. Beardsley wrote from Sound Beach, Conn. to Sam.

Please don't write any more such heart-breaking stories. I have just been reading Soldier Boy's story in Harper's. I don't think I would have read it had I known what was to come to Soldier Boy.

You used to write so differently. The note of pathos, of tragedy, of helpless pain creeps in now, more and more insistent. I fancy life must have taken on its more somber colors for you, and what you feel is reflected in what you write.

You belong to all of us—we of America—and we all love you and are proud of you, but you make our hearts ache sometimes [MTP]. Note: She also referred to "The Dog's Tale." Sam's A.D. of Aug. 29 included this letter.

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam enclosing a draft for $22.17, his 1/3 share of the rent for Aug. of the Buffalo property [MTP].

August 26 Sunday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam added to his Aug. 25 to Mary B. Rogers

Sunday, noon.

It is nearly time to get (temporarily) up. Jean came in at 8.30 & delivered her budget of news; Miss Lyon followed with the letters, & the rest of the news. This is a very remarkable society here & you would like it & feel at home in it. Professor Pumpelly & wife, learned people; Mr. Secretary Hitchcock, the best man in the Roosevelt cabinet, I think; several Yale & Harvard professors; two historians—Hart & Henderson; Mr. Cabot, explorer of the Great Lone Land; Handasyd Cabot & wife—music & art; Joe Smith, artist & playwright; George Brush, artist of high repute & an able & interesting talker; Abbott Thayer, capable artist, & discoverer of Nature's real color-scheme for the protection of the animals; his daughter, aged 20, a very gifted artist; Colton Greave, author—& so on. I wish you would come, & get acquainted. Say the word, Mary! At [Franklin] MacVeagh's luncheon yesterday there was only one idiot. This average cannot be matched anywhere, perhaps.* [see starred below]

Miss Lyon told of a very remarkable exhibition of spirit & character (a duplicate of an exhibition of your own), on the part of a girl-friend of ours. And of course her name is Stewart! It does seem to me that the Stewarts have all gotten loose this year. Isn't it curious? Finally—a minute ago—Miss Lyon opened up on Nietzsche; I can't stand Nietzsche, so I dismissed her with some Don't-Mary words suitable to the provocation, & I think there won't be any more Nietzsche to-day.

I think I will talk at the Country Club next Saturday, & in the village the following Saturday (Sept. 8). There's a concert (the one I spoke of) on Friday the 7th in the great room at MacVeagh's house, & it will be fine. Do come: I can easily put off both talks until October. Come along, Spontaneous Combustion; be good & don't say no.

* My child, you mustn't say "Were you the one?" For that is the obvious remark. It is so obvious that it would occur to the cat. Don't ever make the obvious remark, if you can stop yourself in time. Leave it to the dull-witted—or to the untrained, shall I say? You are not dull-witted, you are bright; & in the mouths of such the obvious remark is always a crime. And in speaking, do not permit yourself to deal in commonplace phrasing. However, you are not guilty of that, you use higher forms; & so this is not an accusation, it is only a reminder. That idiot desolated me with commonplace forms, & with the obvious remark, all through that bright (& often brilliant) luncheon-talk. She was just deadly. It was like sitting beside a persistent & unpleasant odor. Am I too officious, dear, in intruding my wisdoms and schoolings upon you? Don't be offended, I am not meaning any harm or any discourtesy. Males, through pride in their high place, are rather too apt to play preceptor, I am aware of that. I am thankful that you have discarded slang. You have goodness in abundance, you have native frankness & sincerity; you have high ideals—qualities—these of the clean mind & the clean heart: slang has no place in the regal company [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean, 2:00 p.m. 5 p.m. Bad

Mr. Clemens wanted to send a telegram to Mr. Rogers this morning. "It is Sunday, Mr. Clemens, and the telegraph office isn't open."

"It isn't? And the churches are? What a hell of an idea!"

We had such a good talk in the business hour & his presence is such an uplift. He cares a lot about having a good, big & lovely house at Redding—even though C.C. wants to whittle it down ever so much. Mrs. Rogers is going to give him a billiard table for Xmas & his plan was to put it in the library, but a word from C.C. that the library isn't so good a room as his own bed room on the 2nd floor is enough for him. He is quick to see that perhaps his plan is the wrong one—& quick to yield, and because he is never stubborn it seems dreadful not to give him his fullest wish always. This afternoon Mr. Brush & Miss Jane Adams [sic Addams] called. We sat on the great porch over tea and the talk drifted on to the Gorky incident. Miss Adams regretted the action of Mr. Howells & Mr. Clemens & the literary men who had taken him up & who dropped him so quickly when he was thrust out of hotels because he was said to be living with an actress who could not be his wife according to Russian law. Miss Adams in her great work, sees the Russians in masses out in Chicago & she sympathizes with them & so feels that Gorky should have been supported. But Mr. Clemens waxed warm upon the subject and showed her how Gorky came over here as a diplomat & not as an individual, or as a literary man. As a diplomat he could not offend against one of our strongest customs. As an artist he could pass into our country & live here unchallenged. Successful diplomats are so, by reason of their tact in never trespassing against the customs of a country. When Mme. Gorky saw how things were going she implored Gorky to send her back to Russia or to send her away, but he refused. "As a diplomat Mme. Gorky was worth forty Maxim Gorkys." Miss Adams pointed out that it was part of the revolution to wage war against the oppressive church which could crush out the liberties of a people & refuse divorce. And again Mr. Clemens held to his point that Gorky came here not as a revolutionist, but as a diplomat. He isn't doing anything for his cause by escaping & coming to this country where he can live in comfort. True, he is banished from Russia & cannot wage his war there; but on the other hand he cannot wage it here where the people will not stand for a relation such as Gorky's & Mme. Gorky's. It makes no difference if they are living pure & beautiful lives. The Americans don't call their lives by that name. They are readier to wink at the horrors & debaucheries of men who live as Stanford White is said to have lived; they will condone immoralities, but not illegalities. It must be the custom—that immorality—running alongside of the custom of legality, for apparently they stand for both—these same Americans.

Mr. Brush gave a gurgling protest when Mr. Clemens said that the American people have no brains. They do not think, they feel, without taking the trouble to understand what they are feeling [MTP TS 110-113]. Note: Miss Jane Addams (1860-1935; of Hull House, Chicago) his actions in dropping sponsorship of Gorky's visit to the U.S. after his marital scandal became known. Addams had been on the welcoming committee with Sam. She was a founder of the US Settlement House Movement.

August 27 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam finished his Aug. 25 and 26 to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.)

Monday noon. I have just finished dictating the conspiracy-installment, & have put in the Prince of Wales & Gen. Grant—and also a word about W. W. Jacob's delightful "Dialstone Lane." It will go to you soon, & you will sound the Admiral when he comes. There's no hurry, take your time about it. That is, about that; but I hope you won't take too much time about sending me a letter. In the Grant anecdote another Stewart turns up—Stewart of Nevada.

3 p.m.—in bed. I have resumed my habits, you see. When I am not away from home I live in bed, to beat the lonesomeness. Now then, Mariechan, I have just finished re-reading the Conspiracy-MS which you & I read together, & I believe that the addition of today's dictation will round it symmetrically out & make it readable & discursive, & cover up all signs of intention. Polish up your diplomacies, sweet pal, sweetest of pals, & prepare to beat down & defeat all the Admiral's objections!

Please send this aboard the yacht & greatly oblige [MTP]. Note: see also Gribben 348 on William Wymark Jacobs (1863-1943). Dialstone Lane (1904).

Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Samuel Hopkins Adams. “Mr. Clemens has ‘been dissipating away on the ocean & around’—like” [MTP]. Note: The draft ends there.

Sam also sent a telegram to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

“I brought away a trunk for a memento & I had to put some of the admiral’s things in it for ballast because it was light & down by the head & wouldn’t steer but God will make it up to him. They were all sorry to see me go, & most of them said so. S. L. C.” [MTHHR 615]. Note: this a draft for a telegram in Sam’s hand.

Sam also wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Well, Charlotte, you certainly are tearing along at a great pace. I’ve never reached a 3000-word gait often enough to hurt: I kept it up for a week once in 1902, but I hadn’t done such a thing before for 30 years, & I have never approached it since. Last year my average 6-hour day (with a pen) produced 1500 words & no more. I shan’t ever use a pen again, I think. The mere thought of it tires me. But I enjoy dictating; it is only pastime. And there’s only 2 hours of it per day—therefore I have a deadly lot of holiday hours.

I’ve only been home a couple of days, & I was hoping to find your MS here, but you disappointed me. However, I understand the situation & will be patient. Bang right ahead & keep up your courage—I will wait, & expect great things.

Miss Lyon was fascinated with you—a thing to be expected. I threw out a feeler or two & found you had not told her the McClure romance. It is too bad! Why didn’t you? Some day you must tell her the whole bunch of episodes, the whole hurricane; it is too splendid to be hidden away & monopolised by a pair of misers. I shall want to know every detail of your mother’s encounter with him, when I come.

I’ll tell you all about Joan when we finish. We began it last night. I can tell you one thing now—La Hire must teach Joan to fence, & must be astounded at her aptitude,—& must do his full share of an audience-enchanting dialogue. Don’t forget it. Write it now!

Write me when you can, Charlotte dear—Keep me posted [MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. this day included: Two instances of remarkable memory for names and. faces—General Grant’s and King Edward’s [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

The King is dictating out on the front porch—Miss Hobby is tucked back into a corner out of a damp wind, & the King paces up and down as is his wont.

This morning I said to the King, “Nietzsche says—“

“Oh, damn Nietzsche.”

“But Mr. Clemens, Nietzsche calls the acts of God, ‘divine kicks.’”

Laura M. Dake (Laura Wright) wrote to Sam.

My dear, old-time Friend:—

Your letter of July 2 reached me a moment since, after having crossed the continent twice.

Oh, how can I thank you! How can I, except to ask the Lord, every night as I commend myself to his care, to bless you and yours.

I did not dream, my dear old friend, that you would respond personally, else I would have not presumed to ask such a thing. Mr. Carnegie [sic] gives millions for libraries....

But, I fear that you have embarrassed yourself by your generosity—and, since you have not Carnegie's millions, that you can ill-afford this gift;—therefore, when I go back to San Diego, I will deed to you three lots that I have there in a new addition, and send you the deed. I could not sell them now without a great sacrifice, but they are increasing every day... [MTP]. Note: Sam included this letter in his Aug. 31 A.D.

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam. "Will you be kind enough to write a letter addressed to Miss Daisy Andrews at this office, giving her authority to collect, as Miss Marbury's Paris Representative, your royalties on the French production of 'How I became Editor'" [MTP].

Ernestine L. Merrill, in Auburn, Me., disabled but feeling life was worth living, wrote asking for "some autographic remembrance" [MTP].

August 27 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Daisy Andrews. "I hereby authorize Miss Daisy Andrews to collect the royalties due me on How I Became an Editor" [MTP].

Sam also instructed Isabel Lyon to "add an aphorism" to Ernestine Merrill's Aug. 27 request for "some autographic remembrance" [MTP].

August 28 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara in Norfolk, Conn.

Dear Ashcat, I am glad you got things arranged to your mind with Mr. Charlton, & that your outlook is so full of promise, & your heart so full of courage. This is the spirit that succeeds.

I have been away skylarking, & by consequence have been scandalously neglectful in the matter of letters to you & Jean. I've depended on Miss Lyon. Yes, turn my bedroom into a billiard room—I shall be entirely satisfied.

If the new house hasn't spaciousness we don't want it. This house is very nice, & is quite roomy & satisfactory, & cost only $15,000, Paine thinks. John must build one there for $25,000 or $30,000. You will find he can do it.

I wake at 5 & 6 & can't go to sleep again. It is the rare atmosphere, I suppose. It is most exasperating. I have resumed my dictating, & need a clear head & hot interest in the work.

It is 7. I will try to get a nap—and shan't succeed.

With hugs & kisses / Father [MTP]. Note: Loudon Charlton, concert manager, Carnegie Hall.

Sam also wrote to Mrs. Lillian R. Beardsley in Sound Beach, Conn. explaining that the purpose of "The Horse's Tale" was to "assist a band of generous ladies & gentlemen of Spain" in their effort to educate children there about the cruelty of bullfighting. He expressed regret that the only way to "move some people to effect" was to wring the human heart [MTP].

Sam also wrote a long letter to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. Harry Rogers). In part:

Oh, don't mind me, dear! I love to see you flash sparkle frisk about & carry on, even when the inspiration of it is malice & I'm the butt!

PARABLE.

All on a summer's day an obese & bristly great tarantula was resting and reflecting upon his merits, with his body crouched against the ground & his several elbows sticking up, whereby one perceived that his aspect was historical & duplicated the wreck of the Maine. Anon came a golden-belted little wasp frisking by, sweet & dear & winsome & aware of it; & he, being without discretion, begged her to furnish him some compliments wherewith to warm up a cold eulogium. But she, mistaking his desire, & supposing he wanted facts; complied, with glad enthusiasm, & walked all over him from stem to rudder-post & from futtock-shrouds to garboard strake, & wheresoever she found a defect in him she darted her stiletto into it & made him shrivel!

MORAL.

What have facts to do with a eulogium?

Sam then wrote a series of “Telegrams,” possibly made up, between himself and George B. Harvey, about Mary Rogers’ “testimonial” in his behalf. He then changed the subject:

Tomorrow the premier of England will be 70. & London paper has asked for “cables” from friends. I’ve sent one:

“To the Prime Minister: Congratulations, not condolences. Before 70 we are merely respected, & we have to behave, to keep that asset; but after 70 we are respected, esteemed, revered, & do not have to behave unless we want to. When I first knew you, one of us was not even respected. /Mark Twain.” [Note: Prime Minister was Henry Campbell-Bannerman; telegram UCCL # 07519 dated 7 Sept. 1906 is slightly different; one may be in response to an English newspaper, the other direct].

He related speaking at local “club” the previous Saturday (see Aug. 25 entry for the excerpt).

Tuesday night [Aug 21] there was a very bright play by a lad of 18, & it was done in exceedingly good style by a dozen lads & lassies, none them older than the author. We had a luncheon-gang to-day. There’s a local-talent concert tomorrow, & charades at Professor Pumpelly’s Saturday night, & I’m to be in it in my two admired characters (the German emperor—drunk—& a baby 9 months old. Notwithstanding these enlivenments, I miss my pal. I returned, a little while ago (5.30) from my daily compulsory long tramp through the woods. 6 p.m. Some visitors are announced; I must get up & dress & go down. 6.25. That’s done. I dictated 2 hours this morning. I am an industrious person, & entitled to great praise. Furnish it! Butter!

It is lovely of you to write me such nice long letters & I thank you ever so much. Twice you have apologized for this grace. You mustn’t.

I have promised by telegraph to speak at the dinner of the “Associated Liars” as you irreverently call them, Sept. the 15th, rest there, & go on to New York the next day. Clara will be there & will go to Norfolk the 19th—where she is to sing, on the 22^d. I’ll slip up there unbeknownst, if you’ll go with me? Won’t Harry go too? It’s bound to be interesting, Clara dreads to have me present, but she hasn’t asked me not to come, in many words.

Later. A telegram [not extant] from Clara: she has gone home—too cold in Norfolk.

No Melville Stone, so far. He is lost or mislaid, I reckon.

It is holiday, to-day, but we need another charade for to-night, & women must work & men must pray, you know. How useful the dictionary is! I opened it & found a charade-combination right away, to-wit, life-like. I know it will play!

He then wrote a rough outline for a play based on “life-like.” (omitted here)

That afternoon concert was fine!

This is no holiday!—I will rise & dress. Turn & turn about it has been Jean, then Miss Lyon, then Jean again, all the morning—getting instructions about the charades. Charades are exceedingly important events, Mamma Eve.

I am very glad you take my criticisms in such good part. I shan’t ever hurt you with them mittingly, dear niece of mine.

Your affectionate uncle[MTP]. Note: “Associated Liars” was Associated Press, Melville Elijah Stone (1848-1929) was general manager, also newspaper publisher, and founder of Chicago Daily News.

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Calvin Higbie's reply to Clemens' criticism of his article—The holiday at Bar Harbor, where an incident brings to Clemens's memory his scheme for teaching impromptu oratory, which he tried long ago at the Fellow-Craftsmen's Club—The same scheme is tried on board H.H. Rogers' yacht at Bar Harbor [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean, 8:20

AB came back yesterday. This afternoon Mr. Clemens & I walked over to the Joe Smiths, I, to leave him there to discuss the plan for Saturday's little speech at the Club. And there to be met by AB who went steaming down the road past Dr. Stowell's sign where I had told him to meet me, so that we could walk up to the Coply [sic Copley] Greene house together. We didn't find anyone there, but we sat out on the porch discussing the Harper contract—the contract between AB & them, & Harry Greene arrived to find us there. Later we walked home, H. Greene wandering along with us. AB was full of interesting talk about the Harpers & Redding & other things too [MTP TS 113-114].

August 29 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam finished his Aug. 28 to Mary B. Rogers.

Tuesday, 12.50 noon. [Sam likely lost track of the day; this was Wednesday, following the sequence of the prior passages].

I have been dictating for an hour & 25 minutes. And what is that to you? Ordinarily it wouldn't be anything to you, of course, but maybe it's different this time, because part of it is about our Bar Harbor luncheon. Maybe you will strike it out, but no names are mentioned, & I don't believe you will; I think you will let it stay.

I miss you—dear me, yes!

Affectionately your uncle,
Mark.

Sam also wrote to Anne Engle Benjamin (Mrs. William E. Benjamin)

I am going to return that perfectly delightful book presently—as soon as I have finished reading it again.

Mrs. Rogers senior as good as said you would accept my series of moral photographs, so I send them [enclosed] Let Beatrice paste them up in a row in her room & you can't imagine the change that will happen.

Will you kindly pass the other two sets along, for me? One is for Mrs. Rogers senior, the other is for my pal. Both are under contract & cannot escape. I take it Mrs. senior is with you by now, as I sent her an urgent & (un)important telegram to the mountains when I returned from Fairhaven, & as she didn't answer it I know she didn't get it. With very warm remembrances to all, /Sincerely Yours

I am doing my very very best to expect Harry & Mary to-morrow—I think there's going to be some fun—I think so.

[Inserted on another page with the photographs, the note listed below by Paine (in italics here)]

Aug. 29/06 [MTP].

Notes: the seven photographs, were a parody on scientific management and of time-and-motion studies in vogue at this time. Paine writes of their creation:

It was just before one of his departures that I made another set of pictures of him, this time on the colonnaded veranda, where his figure had become so familiar. He had determined to have his hair cut when he reached New York, and I was anxious to get the pictures before this happened. When the proofs came seven of them—he arranged them as a series to illustrate what he called “The Progress of a Moral Purpose.” He ordered a number of sets of this series, and he wrote a legend on each photograph, numbering them from 1 to 7, laying each set in a sheet of letter-paper which formed a sort of wrapper, on which was written:

This series of 7 photographs registers with scientific precision, stage by stage, the progress of a moral purpose through the mind of the human race's Oldest Friend. S. L. C.

He added a personal inscription, and sent one to each of his more intimate friends. One of the pictures amused him more than the others, because during the exposure a little kitten, unnoticed, had walked into it, and paused near his foot [MTB 1316]. Note: see all photographs on a fold out between p. 1316 and 1317. Here are the legends on each photograph, the numbers being written in a drawn box:

- No. 1 Shall I learn to be good? I will sit here and think it over.
- No. 2 There do seem to be so many diffi
- No. 3 And yet I should really try
- No. 4 and just put my whole heart in it
- No. 5 But then I couldn't break the Sab
- No. 6 and there's so many other privileges that perhaps
- No. 7 Oh, never mind, I reckon I'm good enough just as I am.

Isabel Lyon's journal: There was a long—a 3 hour dictation this morning—when Mr. Clemens used letters as a subject. (I had given him copies of 2 letters which Mr. Pearmain handed to me on the train going to Boston.) It was beautiful to hear the laughter from the porch; the King's rich laugh, the biographer's falsetto delight & the stenographer's chirping gurgle. I stole out to sit on a wicker thing in the hall & watch & listen. The King in white, the biographer in soft grey & the stenographer in dark blue, with a kitten in her lap. I had Bertina in mind as I sat to watch & listen. This afternoon the King & I went off to the upper pasture. We rested in the shade 3 times on the way up & the King found it all beautiful. He loved the green & grey moss, & the solemn rocks & the dark sighing pine woods & the great final height from which you can see a wide horizon, except in one place where Monadnock shuts off the distant hills. While I was suggesting a modest rock for the King to stand on & so get a better view, he mounted with swift light steps to the top of the big cairn of stones on the highest point of the hill. None of the rest of us have climbed that cairn—but the King would do what none of the rest of his have ever done. We came home for music played to Gladys [Thayer] & Miss Wollaman & Mrs. Whiting [MTP TS 114-115].

Samuel Hopkins Adams for Collier's Weekly wrote thank Sam for his help.

Here is a rough draft of the copy about the Oppenheimer Institute. Whatever changes I make in polishing it will be in the nature of cutting down, and will not affect the main points. With certain of the quotations, such as Senator Nelson's, you have no personal concern as they were written to me direct. I mention this to save you any confusion of mind. /

Charles Emory Smith, I am told, has returned to the Oppenheimer fold, but my letter of inquiry has not elicited an answer [MTP]. Note: Charles Emory Smith (1842-1908), journalist and politician, Postmaster General in the McKinley and Roosevelt administrations (1898-1902).

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote twice to Sam. The first note:

"I have Miss Lyon's letter, and am extremely sorry to hear about the mistake at the bottom of page 131. This is inexcusable, and Mr. De Vinne would not let it go out of his shop for anything. He wants you to send back your two copies of the book, and he will rectify every copy."

Doubleday's second note:

"Enclosed please find copyright certificate for the book 'What is Man[?]' It is rather amusing to receive a letter from the Librarian of Congress, asking us to give them the name of the author so that it can be used for the purpose of cross-reference. Mr. Bothwell was obliged to confess that he did not know the name of the author, so the matter stopped there" [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Letter from lady in regard to story, "A Horse's Tale," and Mr. Clemens' reply—Project for composite story—Two letters from lady who tried to aid San Francisco sufferers by contributing her brother's wife's "oll woole" suit—Reminiscences of Capt, Ned Wakeman, and extract from his letter to Joe Twichell [MTP: Autodict2; MTE 243-9].

August 30 Thursday – Sam wrote "My Literary Shipyard." It was published posthumously in Harper's Monthly Aug. 1922 [Camfield's bibliog.]. Note: Sam added to the piece and titled it "When a Book Gets Tired."

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Clemens' method of writing stories—Tells how some of his stories were commenced, how they were sometimes left for several years unfinished—some of them have never been finished—Trouble with telephones—Miss Lyon's long-distance message to Clara Clemens—Mr. Scovil gives a clause of telephone law [MTP: Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Sack Cloth" & "Ashes"—the King has named the 3 cats, & "Bettina".

The King does wish C.C. would take up Crystal Science. "By God, if she'd be a Crystal Science, I'd learn it myself." It came up because I told him how I've conquered a headache by mental effort & the King has conquered a pain, a continued pain in his right arm by the same kind of an effort. He sat on the edge of the bed swinging his ~~dear~~ bare feet and saying that he "would like to hear a drunken man discourse on Crystal Science". Then Anna came in to get some clean underdrawers for him & he talked about the virtues of those underdrawers handling them gently, & saying, "Yes, they're new—they can't be more than nine years old." ~~Oh, he is so sweet & so beautiful to look at & so gentle.~~

Mr. & Mrs. Pumpelly and Mrs. Learned and Mrs. MacVeagh lunched here and we enjoyed them ~~ever so much~~ [MTP TS 115]. Note: all strike outs included.

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam. "I have a bill for $4.60 for putting the name of Robert Richardson, as you desired to have done, on the headstone at Susie's grave. If you will kindly send me your check of $4.60 I will pay the bill and send it to you receipted. / Julie and her little Olivia are with us for a few days so that now all the family are together, except Edward [Loomis], and we expect him here over Sunday. / Best wishes..." [MTP]. Note: At the time of Susie's death, Sam could not recall the author of the verses taken from the poem (Annette) placed on her headstone, often said to be an Australian. In his A.D. for Jan. 22, 1907 Sam wrote: "We had found them in a book in India, but had lost the book and with it the author's name. But in time an application to the editor of 'Notes and Queries' furnished me the author's name....it has been added to the verse upon the gravestone." "Western wind" was changed on the headstone to "Southern wind."

August 31 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to the Aug. 29 of Samuel Hopkins Adams of Collier's.

Dear Adams: / I think that the majority of the illustrious men whom I questioned by mail as to their reasons for recommending Oppenheimer's policy-shop exhibited themselves as astonishingly careless & dangerous citizens in their replies. They knew that the public believed in them & trusted them, & they were treacherous to that trust, & shamed it. You say that when they discovered how they were being used, they withdrew their names. In silence. Do you think that that was sufficient? It does not seem so to me. I think that until they repent over their damaged names the country ought to be as ashamed of them as you will see by their letters that they are privately ashamed of themselves. It is certainly laughable—& also pathetic—to see grown-up men act as these illustrious children have acted.

Sincerely Yours
Mark Twain.

Private.

Print it, if you like [MTP]. Note: See Nov. 1905 and Nov. 16, 1905 to Depew; Sam had been upset by the claims of the Oppenheimer Institute for "curing" alcoholism, especially after sending his manservant Claude Benchotte there and having him return inebriated. He wrote several letters, Depew's being illustrative, to "illustrious men" questioning them.

Clemens' A.D. this day included: Clemens appoints 2 pupils and tries his scheme for spontaneous oratory at the Dublin club-house—Tells of his second lecture & the repetition of the Horace Greeley story—Tells the same thing later at Chickering Hall—The series of 7 photographs of Mr. Clemens—Letter from his long vanished sweetheart, Laura Wright—Reminiscences of her; of Youngblood, the pilot; & of Davis, the mate—Letter offering tour in vaudeville [MTP: Autodict2; MTE 196-200].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Jean, 8:20, violent" [MTP TS 115].

Lucia Fessenden Gilbert wrote from Malone, N.Y. to Sam, complimenting "A Horse's Tale" and asking if Sam would send a copy to the Queen of Spain. Sam then wrote on the letter and sent it to Mary B. Rogers on or just after this date. "Come, Mariechen, isn't it a nice letter? There's others like it, thanks be! & I've a passion for pettings & compliments. Clara & Jean assert it."

Further, he directed Lyon to answer Gilbert in this way: "I am able to tell her it was written (by request) for the children of Spain—to be translated & published there by the Society for the Discouragement of the Bullfight. I am a good person" [MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote from Kittery Point, Maine to Sam.

With all thanks to you for your kind interest and proposition, I have decided, after talking with my wife, not to do anything about that accursed story of mine for the present at least. I must put it by, and perhaps never print it, (unless some fortunate chance should warrant it) till all the Feet have turned up their toes. It is too bad. But we cannot face the notion of a lot of neighbor-women saying, "Isn't it a shame he has put poor H. F. into his story."

I would come and build next to you, but you ask too much for your land. $25 for a ten acre lot? No, sir.

What a day this is! All blue and gold, and me to the Hammond Typewriter! Yours ever...[MTHL 2: 820].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote a short thanks to Sam for sending the note authorizing Miss Daisy Andrews. Also, "I have received the letter from Mr. Timmory and will take up the contents at once" [MTP].

H.H. Rogers wrote to Sam that instead of taking old things from the house, Sam had taken good things, and he wanted the trunk and things back as soon as possible. He alerted Sam that Melville E. Stone would visit him in Dublin to confirm Sam's appearance at a banquet on Sept. 19, and asked Sam to telegraph him where he would see Stone or telegraph Stone direct. Rogers ended with: "By the way, I have been using a pair of your gloves in the Mountains, and they don't seem to be much of an attraction" [MTHHR 616-17].

September – The second of two installments of "A Horse's Tale" ran in Harper's Monthly, and included five illustrations by Lucius Wolcott Hitchcock. Harper's would publish both segments as a 153-page book by the same name on Oct. 24, 1907.

The first of 25 chapters of Mark Twain's Autobiography selected by George B. Harvey appeared in the North American Review, and would run each month through Dec. 1907, each installment prefaced by an editor's note: "No part of the autobiography will be published in book form during the lifetime of the author." The New York Evening World, Sept. 10, p. 13 reported:

THE MAN WHO IS INTERESTED.

In the opening chapter of Mark Twain's "Autobiography," as given in the current number of the North American Review, there is a particularly fine sentence. This is it:

If I should talk to the stenographer two hours a day for a hundred years, I should still never be able to set down a tenth part of the things which have interested me in my lifetime.

This declaration is as inspiring as a confession of faith. Indeed, it is such a confession. It expresses faith in men and in the world as things worth while. It is the embodiment in simple words of an optimist's creed. It sets forth one very excellent reason why Mark Twain, having gone past seventy years, is still going at an undiminished rate.

The man of a thousand interests does not travel in a rut. Its worst foe is he who loses himself in apathy.

In Dublin, N.H. Sam drafted a telegram to Melville E. Stone, President of Associated Press, N.Y.C. This is a reply to Stone's telegram (not extant): "I will make a nonsense speech, but none on a serious topic. I never have a serious hour nowadays. In your program make S. Langhorne speaker number 3 and Mark Twain speaker number 4. I will explain when you come. I shall expect you, your room will be ready for you. Clemens" [MTP].

Sam also wrote on a small card (perhaps for another telegram: "NIGHT MESSAGE") to Melville E. Stone. "Give me second place if possible, third place anyhow. If there are to be ladies I may wish to bring a member or two of my family" [MTP].

Critic ran a brief anonymous review of Eve's Diary, p. 288. In full: "An attractive account has been made out of Mark Twain's rather brief account of the emotions of Eve in the Garden during Adam's courtship, with alternating pages of drawing and of text. There is no little ingenuity in the development of Eve's character and knowledge of the world, as well as a touch of seriousness which sets off the humor. Possibly the book is less individual than some others by the same author, but there is no little charm in its pages. Every one will wish to read it" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Sixth Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Spring 1982 p. 10].

September 1 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam inscribed a "Year Book" to Simon Wolf: "There is no sadder sight than a young pessimist" [MTP] Note: MTP calls this "Wolf's Commemorative Book of 1906." For Wolf's 70th birthday, his daughter, Florence Gotthold, put three books together with over 400 personal messages from famous men of the day, including Twain, Grover Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, and Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Robert Montgomery Thornburgh, Captain, Asst. Surgeon, US Army, wrote from Camp Overton, Mindanao, Phillipines, about Clemens' May 26 Harper's article on Carl Schurz.

The Ben Thornburgh you mention is or was, so I am informed, my grandfather's brother. My paternal grandfather died before I was born—a prisoner in Andersonville—and my father was killed in action with Ute Indians when I was but seven years of age. ... If it would not be too great bother I most respectfully request that you give me what information you can regarding Ben Thornburgh [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the top of the letter: "Have had several letters inquiring about B. Thornburgh but that unfortunately I was not able to furnish any information. He was a fine & lovable man, but did not talk about himself & so I am ignorant of his history."

Fatout lists Sam at a "Speech-making Experiment" at the Country Club in Dublin, N.H. but gives no further citation [MT Speaking 676]. Note: IVL's journal entry below give more information:

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today the King spoke on Spontaneous Oratory with Mr. Brush & Joe Smith as pupils down at the Club & the show was good. The King was just what he is named & kept the house in a happy clamor of delight. The 2 pupils were more than good too. I sat where I could watch Mr. Dana whose face was a joy. It is such a delight to me to go around with the King, to go to the Club & have him call for me & his carriage & his coat & his hat. I am a part of his institution for a short now. There were a lot of nice people at the Club with whom I chatted afterward. Mr. Montague & Mrs. Dana & Edith Biddle & Harry Greene & [illegible word] & Mrs. Brush and dear Gerome who is wrought into shreds with hard work over the play he has written & which is to be put upon by the small local boards next week. ~~He is working with & coaching the young actors & now he is thin & pale & nervous & beautiful. He took my hand unconsciously, held it unconsciously & dropped it unconsciously after a minute or two~~ [MTP TS 116].

September 2 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

Mr. Clemens & I walked down to call on Mr. & Mrs. Joe Smith today. It was a beautiful walk through the Harry Greene wood road & we had a sweet time at the Smiths. Mrs. S. is so beautiful & Mr. is so delightful & their house is enchanting with old Italian things in the big living room & lovely Japanese things in the dining room. Mr. Clemens scratched his Mark Twain on an old blue bench with a pair of scissors & I made a wee L↓ a panel or two away on the same blue bench. This morning AB wandered out & after we had chatted awhile the King came down & was in great mood. He sat writing the inscriptions on the series of autobiography ms. [MTP 116-117].

September 3 Monday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam sent a telegram to H.H. Rogers, in Fairhaven, Mass.: “God be thanked have found some of the things send another trunk this one leaked / Clemens.” [MTHHR 617].

Sam also wrote to an unidentified man, thanking him for his letter of Aug. 31 [MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: The debate at the Dublin club house—Spontaneous oratory good scheme for ocean liner entertainments—Susy’s Biography—the sum in arithmetic—Sour Mash, & the other cats— A tribute to Gen. Grant [MTP Autodict2].

September 3, after – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote four one-line notes to H.H. Rogers [MTP]. Note: MTHHR 617n1 points out these exist in drafts and may not have been sent, but that “Clemens obviously understood the comic potential of telegraphic, unpunctuated prose.”

“I am afraid I cannot go, I have lost my father.”
Then,
“He was all I had.”
And then,
“Family prostrate.”
And finally,
“Do not send flowers send the money family will select flowers” [MTHHR 617n1].

September 4 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara in Norfolk, Conn.

I am so glad you like the pictures, dear Ashcat, & will keep them. I like them ever so much. Mr. Paine made 7 negatives in the hope of getting one satisfactory one; & when the samples came back from the developer they were all good. It seemed to me that a progressive thought was traceable ~~thru~~ thru them, & after arranging the series in varying order several times I discovered what it was.

I have posted the series into my Autobiography, with explanations—this for the remote future generations.

I hope the concert will be a grand success in all ways, barring none. That it will be, I have not a doubt, for by your faithful hard work in the face of persistent difficulties you have qualified yourself to do the requisite, so far as your share of the enterprise is concerned, & I hope & believe the church & the town will do the rest. I’ll drink a barrel to you, dear!

[cross-written in the right margin:] Thank you for the hug, & I send you a duplicate. Marcus [MTP]. Note: Sam here began to use “through” then changed it to “thru,” as it was one of the twelve words Carnegie’s Simplified Spelling convention had urged. They would have loved texting.

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: The supremacy of the house fly [MTP Autodict2].

September 5 Wednesday – Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: Items from “The Children’s Record Book,” showing their different characteristics [MTP Autodict2].

Frederic Chapin wrote from Oak Park, Ill. to Sam, enclosing Elisabeth Marbury's Sept. 4 to him. Chapin's long letter to Sam involved the many details, contracts, etc. regarding dramatizing P&P [MTP].

Charles Buxton Going wrote to Sam on The Engineering Magazine, NYC letterhead, enclosing verses about Joan of Arc. "The lady is so far exalted that I am sure you will feel no jealousy of another worshipper at her shrine. Indeed, I hope you may understand that in offering her homage, I stop to offer it to you also" [MTP].

John Larkin, NYC attorney wrote to Sam about the Tennessee lands. "We have reached the following basis of agreement: A New York corporation is to be organized with a nominal capitalization which is to be divided one-half to you and Mr. Moffett and the other half to the Tennessee lawyer and his associate in consideration of their efforts to obtain title to the lands in that state." If the plan was acceptable, would Clemens please let him know [MTP].

September 6 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Alone I [illegible word] was driven through the starlight over to the Handasyd Cabots where he & Copeland & Sakaloff & Cummings played for a few people. They are four Kings of tone. The tormenting torrent of music that those men swept out of their instruments was mighty enough to come from 40 men when they played the first movement of the quartette by Leken, a pupil of Caesar Franck he was & died before he was 24—but no man could live on for long when he could give birth do such sound—to such a composition [MTP TS 117].

Henry Mills Alden for Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam.

Dear Mark: / I received a few weeks ago from Mr. Thomas Rees some manuscripts offered for sale to us, purporting to be copies of "Snodgrass" papers contributed by you some fifty years ago to a newspaper published by his father. I returned them with a letter which I send you a copy—also a copy of a letter I have just received from him. I think you should have cognizance of this correspondence.

The offer of the manuscripts was accompanied by an affidavit sworn to by Mr Rees, Sr., attesting to your authorship. / Yours faithfully... [MTP]. Note: Sam included this letter in his Sept. 10 A.D. Alden refused to publish the letters as he said in his reply to Rees, as they would be 'a distinct injury to Mr. Clemens, after he had so utterly and deliberately discarded the earlier pen-name."

Luther E. Price, correspondent for the London Tribune telegraphed Clemens: "British Premier Campbell Bannerman celebrates seventieth birthday to-morrow the London Tribune requests tribute from you Please wire me care New York Herald" [MTP]. Note: Henry Campbell-Bannerman (1836-1908), British Liberal Party politician and Prime Minister of the UK (1905-1908).

September 7 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam sent a telegram to Henry Campbell-Bannerman, English Prime Minister.

Congratulations, not condolences. Before 70 we are merely respected, at best, & we have to behave all the time or we lose that asset; but after 70 we are respected, esteemed, admired, revered, & don't have to behave unless we want to. When I first knew you, one of us was hardly even respected.

Mark Twain [MTP]. Note: this is a near exact copy which he wrote into his Aug. 28 to Mary B. Rogers that he wrote he'd sent by request of an English newspaper, Sam also inscribed his photo to George Copeland. "It is one's human environment that makes the climate. Mr. George Copeland, with kind regards of Mark Twain, Sept. 7, 1906." [MTP: Swann Galleries catalogs, 24 Sept 1942, No. 21, Item 116].

Isabel Lyon wrote Sam's instructions for reply to John Larkin, attorney. "Much obliged to him for offering to represent Mr. C. in that Co—quite right in supposing that he does not wish to be bothered. Thank Larkin. Send him the $75 & tell him to go ahead. But send him something to sign" [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: The statement made at the banquet of The Ends of the Earth club, "We are of the Anglo-Saxon race, "etc.—Our public & private mottos & morals—Clemens' tribute to British Premier Campbell-Bannerman on his seventieth birthday—Meeting Labouchere—Anecdote of the lost deed which was to have been presented to Prince of Wales [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: I can't do anything this morning but number checks & I blunder at that. It's the wonder of that music—that Leken—I couldn't sleep—I didn't want to sleep. The wild passionate torrent of sound rang through me all the night & today I am weak. This afternoon we went to the concert at Mr. [Franklin] MacVeagh's. The King & I walked over through the woods; his mood was so sweet & I suggested getting him some white stockings to wear with his white clothes. But he won't have white stockings; he prefers scarlet—just as an accent [MTP TS 117-118].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam.

Dear Uncle Mark / I have just visited Heaven with the Cap'n—His account seems exact, truthful and, as you say, godly—too damn godly for a secular paper like the Magazine—I'm sure it wouldn't do to print it now and I guess you're sure too, if you'll tell the truth—The first review is out today & in a few days I'll send you what they all say about it—

I think it is pretty good—

When are you coming home? / GH [MTP].

Sam then wrote instructions for Isabel V. Lyon at the top of Harvey's above letter: "Tell him I arrive Monday 17th. Give him some abuse about the Horse's Tale illustrations. Write it in the first person & I will sign it—not to day, but in the morning. Tell him I arrive 6 p.m. (It's a hint; I reckon he'll know enough to recognize that)" [MTP].

Lyon then wrote for Sam to George B. Harvey. "Mr. Clemens is crying—but he's going to bear it for your sake & the magazine's. So please lend the Visit to Heaven back. He expects to arrive down there Monday the 17th &—" [MTP]. Note: this latter missive appears unfinished. Perhaps Clemens changed his mind.

Sam also wrote on the bottom page of Harvey's above letter to Mary B. Rogers. "You see, dear, your eulogium has scared him; he's afraid of everything, now, even theological disquisitions. This one was written 38 years ago & is still over-warm, apparently. He wanted to see it (for the Xmas Harper). Well, he has seen it. / U.M." [for Uncle Mark] [MTP].

In the evening Sam had planned to go to a concert at Franklin MacVeagh's. He had also encouraged Mary B. Rogers to come for the event but there is no record that she and Harry Rogers did so [Aug 26 to Mary Rogers].

Samuel Hopkins Adams for Collier's Weekly wrote to Sam.

I thank you for returning the manuscript, and particularly for your letter, which I am only too glad to publish. It puts the case so conclusively that I even feel a sort of sneaking sympathy for the eminent name-lenders. I have changed my copy somewhat since I sent that version to you, but not in any essential.

An eminent Methodist authority, by the way, informs me (this I unfortunately cannot use) that Bishop Fowler is a stockholder in the concern, and has gone so far as to commit, in the interests of the Oppenheimer treatment, a moral, if not a legal, forgery. / With renewed thanks for your help..." [MTP].

Agnes Repplier wrote from Phila. to invite Sam to speak before the Contemporary Club this autumn or winter [MTP]. Note: see Lyon's journal entry of Oct. 12; Sam took umbrage at the manner of the invitation.

Chapter I from “My Autobiography—I” ran in the N.A.R. p.321-30.

September 7 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Mr. Pulitzer.

I thank you for the little book; it is bright, condensed compact, & I believe it could get along plenty well enough without the translations. When a reader is so dull that he can't understand our jokes until we explain them to him in chuckling italics & exclamation points, or shrieking capitals, his approval is not a compliment & should be discouraged [MTP].

Note: this is likely Joseph Pulitzer (1847-1911), newspaper magnate and crusader who introduced “New Journalism” in the 1880s and fought big business corruption; though it may be Albert Pulitzer, Joseph's brother, who lived until 1909; he killed himself in Florence, Italy.

September 8 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote instructions for Isabel Lyon to reply to Minnie Maddern Fiske. “Write to Mrs. Fisk. & say it has been suggested that the people in Spain If they together ask that the book be dedicated to the Queen of Spain. It isn't the least likely that it can be done—but we think that you will not be afraid to try” [MTP].

Lyon wrote again for Sam to George B. Harvey, but this, another attempt to “give him abuse” also unfinished:

HORSES TALE

The commendatory letters are flowing in & Mr. Clemens is I am obliged to answer & say that the understanding was to be immediately issued after its appearance in the magazine, & he does not know why this agreement has failed. I remember also that the illustrations were to have been in color; they are beautiful as they are, but they would [MTP].

Fatout lists Sam at a “Speech-making Experiment” at the Village of Dublin, N.H. but gives no further citation [MT Speaking 676].

Isabel Lyon's journal: AB & I went to the Upper Pasture & he read to me a part of his ms. article on the Cartoonists. It begins with a nice sketch of Nast. It was very sweet in the upper pasture & I made some photographs “the full size of him” or as Joy says, Oh winsome little d [MTP TS 118] Note: Joy Paine, Albert's youngest daughter.

September 8 ca. – Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to thank Miss Lucia Fessenden Gilbert for her letter of Aug. 31. “Horse's Tale was written by request & solely for translation & publication in Spain by a noble company of ladies & gentlemen who propose to educate the children, not the grown people, & for that reason Mr. Clemens made it a story about a child as being better able to appeal” [MTP].

September 9 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

~~Oh these days are too full & so my soul is not moved to anything. I can't keep it up where it ought to be & so I cry & cry.~~

Mr. Joe Smith lunched here, & he & the King talked over the dramatizing for Dublin use—& for next year—“The Invalid's Story”. We sat on the side porch & the King read it aloud amid our happy shouting aches & it is arranged. When Joe Smith left with an Eve's Diary under his arm for Mrs. Joe who couldn't come, the King went up to bed—tired. But at 5:30 he got up & together we went to call on Col. Higginson who is visiting Dr. & Mrs. Mollis. We sat out on the lovely brick floored loggia & had such a ~~sweet~~ happy chat. Col. Higginson called & Campbell Bannerman called too, but he only wrote “Respectful Congratulation” [MTP TS 118].

C.G.A. (not further identified) sent a “Souvenir of Hannibal, Mo.” picture postcard to Sam from Chicago. “God bless your old soul for having lived. C.G.A. / 1454 Monadnock Bld. Chicago.” The card showed Huck Finn's Home, Twain in the entrance of Mark Twain's Cave, and a photo of Twain. In small print on one end, "Printed in Germany for Savings Bank Dept. Store, Hannibal, Mo. Publishers." [MTP].

Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) in Fairhaven, Mass. began a letter to Sam that she finished Sept. 11. "Today being Sunday dear Uncle Methuselah my thoughts, by antithesis, naturally revert to you, and you season the day for me, not disagreeably you understand, but just tempering my mind to a comfortable wickedness—" [MTP].

September 10 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Last night we sat out on the porch for a long time to watch the stars. The King & Jean & I. They were very wonderful. It seemed that almost never before were there so many & we couldn't tear ourselves away. Today's dictation was a heavy one. 3½ hours the King kept at it until he was exhausted, & AB had to stay for luncheon because it was too late for him to go home. The King had placed those people in the hall, for the weather is hot & wonderful & only in the hall could he find the proper temperature. This morning as I sat at breakfast reading Romeo & Juliet—a sudden thought flashed into my mind. A thought of how impossible it ever is to tell out the truth & strong things of life—people can't stand them. Half an hour later the King called me & said he'd read something so good. That a man can't tell the truth about himself. He couldn't write it, for he wouldn't dare read it if he could & no one could stand the strong truth of it. The King had put that thought in my head. He's always doing that sort of thing [MTP TS 118-119].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Plan of this autobiography—Capt. Sellers—Clemens published no literature until 40 yrs. ago, Two letters from Mr. Alden & one from Mr. Rees in regard to "Snodgrass" papers—Clemens' comments on same [MTP Autodict2; MTE 228-239].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam.

Mr. Timmory, who as you know adapted in French your story "How I Became Editor of An Agricultural Paper", would now like the right to dramatize for all countries two of your stories which he calls under the French titles of "Le Marchand d'Echos" and "La Revolution de Pitcairn". He would like two years in which to place these pieces. I presume you have no objections... [MTP].

John Larkin wrote from NYC to Sam. "I have your letter of the 7th inst. enclosing check for $75 for which I am obliged. As soon as the corporation [for TN land] has been organized I will prepare a deed for you to sign, and after the stock has been issued for the deed, those shares to which you are entitled will be forwarded to you" [MTP].

September 11 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers. Only the envelope survives [MTP].

Sam also sent a night telegram to Frederic Chapin in Oak Park, Ill. relative to Chapin's Aug. 19 concern about producing a play of P&P there: "My contract is in the Safe deposit New York. I do not remember the terms—My secretary goes down tomorrow—Wednesday—empowered to examine it & decide definitely with Miss Marbury" [MTP].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam about a misunderstanding—there were no plans to immediately publish "A Horse's Tale" in book form. They could, however, get it out in a couple of weeks, if he wished, but ordinary they would publish it in the spring. What were his wishes about the tale? Harvey added:

I am not returning "The Visit to Heaven" because I have formulated a scheme for publishing it which I believe to the best ever, but I want to have a chance to talk with you more fully about it than is convenient to write, and, as you are going to be here in a week, suppose we leave it in abeyance until then [MTP].

Sam replied by telegram to Harvey: "Let the tale wait, there is no hurry / Mark" [MTP].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam. "'Utah' sold yesterday at 62 5/8. / Harpers are using half pages in the daily press to advertise the Autobiography. It's appearance in the 'Review' ought to easily quadruple the circulation of that paper" [MTP].

Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) finished her Sept. 9 to Sam. "Tuesday / Father R. said he had a telegram from you last night saying you were going to New York this week—I suppose you will not return to Dublin again this year will you? We expect to move into our Tuxedo house about October first..." [MTP]. Note: this is a long, friendly, folksy letter, but somewhat difficult to read.

September 12 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "On the train between Boston & New York somewhere. Mrs. George Harvey & Dorothy are in the 2nd parlor coach ahead. I've been in to see them" [MTP TS 119]. Note: judging by this and her Sept. 14 entry, Clemens did not go on this trip, the purpose of which is not stated.

Frederic Chapin wrote from Oak Park, Ill. that he'd rec'd Sam's Sept. 11 telegram. Chapin had to go ahead with no contract on dramatization of P&P but was secure in Sam's judgment that Elisabeth Marbury would be fair in her commission [MTP]. Note: The MTP catalogs Lyon's reply for Sam as "on or after 12 Sept." Three days estimated postal time is allowed here, putting the reply at ca. Sept. 15.

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam, letter not extant but referred to in Joe's Sept. 14 [MTP].

Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) wrote from Fairhaven, Mass. to Sam.

Dear Uncle Mark—/ Father Rogers has asked me to return your scurrilous literature, and to say, that as for him, he will have nothing to do with persons who indulge in anonymous post cards, however much he might feel himself in sympathy with their sentiments.

He hopes that having enjoyed yourself, by taking away your own character, so openly you are ready to suffer the penalty—with meekness, which the law inflicts on those who are caught sending opprobrious remarks through the mail—

Only an autodactyl Hellenist—would behave so rudely— / Your most affectionate niece Mary" [MTP].

September 13 Thursday

September 14 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to the (not extant) Sept. 12 letter of Joe Twichell in Blue Ridge, N.Y.

It's all right about the Westminster, I am hoping to get converted, & I don't wish to leave any promising bait unswallowed.

I see that you wish me to help you deceive the guide into believing that you enjoy the distinction of being acquainted with me, & so, out of the weakness of inherent good-nature I consent, though I'm damned if I think it is good morals.

When Miss Lyon arrives at 8 p.m. from New York she will hunt up one of my books & I will autograph it & forward it, with pleasure.

I did get the photograph, Joe, & am glad to have it, though in my opinion it slanders you. This is a common fault of photographs.

I leave for Fairhaven in the morning to go down in the yacht, to speak at the Associated Press banquet Wednesday night. This does not mean I am going to talk myself to death this season, like last. I shall keep pretty still next winter.

I shall return home, & Jean & I will remain until toward November, but Clara is already home in New York & will not go back to Norfolk. She found the weather too cold there. / With love to you both / Mark [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam, not yet as a reply to Sam's of this date, but as a follow up to Joe's Sept. 12 (not extant).

In writing to you day before yesterday, I forgot something—this viz: shortly before I came away from Hartford I had a call from a gentleman residing in St. Paul Minn.—a leading lawyer of that city—name of White—father of a classmate of Joe's at Yale—whose errand, it transpired, was to invite you and me to the Annual Dinner of the Minnesota "Society of Colonial Wars" to be held at St. Paul, any day of October we may choose, expences of the trip to be paid by said society. We are, of course, desired to contribute eloquence to the occasion. I told him to take the business directly to you. He said he hadn't the courage. He was such a nice man that I couldn't refuse to promise my service as go-between in the case. That promise I am now keeping. Will you go? I guess I will if you will. Anyhow, I would think seriously of doing it—which I do not feel the need of doing at present, I confess.

But "Colonial Wars"! doesn't the subject fire your blood?

At your convenience please tell me what to say to Mr. White. Really, an answer is due him i.c. from me [MTP]. Note: see Sept. 14 ca. for his answer.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Watterson has locked horns with Bryan.' a good term. / I return to Dublin to find that the King is packed to go away again to Fairhaven tomorrow morning early. ~~Woe is me The loneliness to be!~~ He took my 'Romeo & Juliet' that I've been reading these days. AB went away this morning—that means more loneliness" [MTP TS 119-120].

Florenze Hartwig wrote from San Francisco to Sam, to share her troubles and woes. She enclosed a notice of a Musicale at Kohler & Chase's Music Hall, Cor. Kearny and Post Streets for Dec. 12 at 3 p.m. It is difficult to decipher just what her complaints were, except that the people there were mean to her [MTP]. Note: "No Ans" was written at the top in pencil.

September 14 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote on Joe Twichell's Sept. 14 "go-between" request letter: "Miss Lyon, tell him NO—I wouldn't make such a journey to see the Resurrection"[MTP].

September 15 Saturday – Sam left Dublin, N.H. for Fairhaven, Mass. [Sept. 14 to Twichell].

Isabel Lyon's journal: A dash & a rush all day. I got up to see the King off this morning at 5:45 & as I tied his necktie & flicked some shaving lather from his waistcoat & helped him into his overcoat, he told me the little anecdote about a General at West Point who told the young graduates that nothing must be neglected—if they would be sure that the mule drivers fed the mules they must oversee it themselves, & he spoke to them not as if they were to be lieutenants & colonels—but as Commanders-in-Chief. His eyes shone with a wonderful luster [MTP TS 120].

The New York Times, pg. BR568 in "Topics of the Week" remarked on the first installment of "Mark Twain's Autobiography" that "if the entire work turns out to be as good as this it will be a masterwork."

September 15 ca. – In Dublin, N.H., Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Frederic Chapin's Sept. 12. "Mr. Clemens is now very busy & requests Mr. Chapin to refer to Miss Marbury in whom Mr. Clemens has confidence & who has full authority to act for him. Mr. Clemens is sure that Miss Marbury will conduct everything on a fair basis" [MTP].

September 16 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Jean, 10:30—porch. 2 weeks & 2 days.

A dreadful kind of day, for Jean would not let me out of her sight. We tried to walk a little but she was not equal to it. Then I dressed up in a clown costume to cheer her up & then she began to read “Kim” aloud to me. But it was a dreadful kind of a day, for she couldn’t keep it up [MTP TS 120].

A.L. Clarke for the Los Angeles Examiner wrote to Sam, enclosing a clipping from that newspaper by C.E. Van Loan, “The Virginia City and Placerville Trail—A Golden Memory,” which told of Hank Monk and mentioned Twain at the end. “I enclose a clipping from the Los Angeles Examiner of this date containing an interview with ‘Windy’ Miller, an old Virginia Stage driver. / It will perhaps interest you as Mr Miller seems to be peevish over the fact that you and Horace Greeley both overlooked him. / With kindest regards / Your admirer and well wisher...” [MTP]. Note: on the env. Sam wrote “About ‘Curly Bill’ stage driver—[illegible word] of Hank Monk.”

September 17 Monday – Sam, likely in Fairhaven, Mass., inscribed a picture of a house to an unidentified person. “No, it is too stylish, it is not my birthplace” [MTP: MS facsimile: Paine’s 1912 Mark Twain: A Biography].

September 18 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

AB came back today, came back tired & brought me “Madame Butterfly”. He’s a thoughtful creature. ~~I was so glad to see him—so very glad for when the King is away the loneliness of this place can be screaming, because I’m not alone. I can endure myself. It’s the rest of the world that chokes me so—a certain spirit world that is disastrous to me~~ [MTP TS 120-121].

September 19 Wednesday – Sam left Fairhaven, Mass. on the Kanawha for New York City. On board he read 10,000 words of Charlotte Teller Johnson’s play [Sept. 20 to Lyon].

In the evening Sam spoke at the Associated Press Dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in N.Y.C. The New York Times, Sept. 20, p. 4 reported on the event:

SPELLING AND PICTURES AND TWAIN AT DINNER

The Associated Press Men Hear a Plea for Phonetic Forms.

THE SPEAKERS CARTOONED

So Were the Oysters, Who Couldn't Object—Gen. Porter One of the Orators.

This was the introductory sketch in a series of fancy pictures (not intended as likenesses) which adorned a highly unconventional menu prepared for the annual dinner of The Associated Press in the Astor Gallery of the Waldorf-Astoria last night. It was as quaint a menu as has been seen in this city in a long time. It was in the form of a tiny book, with a cut, like those reproduced here, illustrating every item in the feast and “taking off” every orator on the list. With each illustration went a verse.

There were about 150 members present and about a dozen guests, including Gen. Horace Porter and Mark Twain, each of them being counted for statistical purposes only as one person each.

A dozen or so women sat above the banqueters and watched them and listened to the speakers. Great American flags draped the wall in behind the stage upon which sat The Associated Press men and their guests.

The orchestra obligingly played "In the Good Old Summer Time," which was in keeping with the temperature. All the big windows were open on the north and east, however, and the green palms helped out an illusion that it was cool. Moreover, the picture of the oyster, contemporary with "r" months and lowered temperature, was on one of the first pages of the little menu book, thus:

The bivalve is a funny bird,
For silence he's renowned;
But I have heard an Oyster Bay,
'Tis an odd Long Island Sound!

The dinner was scheduled to begin at 7 o'clock. By 9 o'clock it had got as far as Mousse de volaille a la Montargis and St. Estephe, on the one hand, and Clifford Wiley, baritone, on the other. General Manager Stone of The Associated Press questioned which combination was the better. After Mr. Wiley had sung excellently the Toreador song from "Carmen," Mr. Stone rose and requested that Mr. Wiley sing "The Song That Reached My Heart."

Frank Lincoln, introduced as a talebearer, went along with sorbet de Fantasie, thus hymned and pictured in the menu book:

Here's Venus rising from the sea
Without her Paris bodice;
Quick! Eat her up before she melts —
The sorbet—not the goddess.

[OTHER SPEECHES CUT HERE]

After Gen. Porter, Toastmaster Melville E. Stone rose to introduce "Mark Twain." The diners, turning to Page 13 of the menu, found this picture and verse dealing with the gentle humorist:

His hobby was a hobby-horse
 With wings of driven snow,
 And everywhere that Sammy went
 His hobby too would go.

The band played “For he’s a jolly good fellow” when Mr. Clemens rose, and the people at the tables took up the song.

MARK TWAIN’S SPEECH.

“I am here to make,” said Mr. Clemens, “to make an appeal to the nations in behalf of the simplified spelling. I have come here because they cannot all be reached except through you. There are only two forces that can carry light to all the corners of the globe—only two—the sun in the heavens and the Associated Press down here. I may seem to be flattering the sun, but I do not mean it so; I am meaning only to be just and fair all around. You speak with a million voices; no one can reach so many races, so many hearts and intellects, as you—except Rudyard Kipling, and he cannot do it without your help. If the Associated Press will adopt and use our simplified forms, and thus spread them to the ends of the earth, covering the whole spacious planet with them as with a garden of flowers, our difficulties are at an end.

“Every day of the 365 the only pages of the world’s countless newspapers that are read by all the human beings and angels and devils that can read, are those pages that are built out of Associated Press dispatches. And so I beg you, I beseech you—oh, I implore you to spell them in our simplified forms. Do this daily, constantly, persistently, for three months—only three months—it is all I ask. The infallible result?—victory, victory, all down the line. For by that time all eyes here and above and below will have become adjusted to the change and in love with it, and the present clumsy and ragged forms will be grotesque to the eye and revolting to the soul. And we shall be rid of phthisis and phthisic and pneumonia, and pneumatics, and diphtheria and pterodactyl, and all those other insane words which no man addicted to the simple Christian life can try to spell and not lose some of the bloom of his piety in the demoralizing attempt. Do not doubt it. We are chameleons, and our partialities and prejudices change places with an easy and blessed facility, and we are soon wonted to the change and happy in it. We do not regret our old, yellow fangs and tushes after we have worn nice fresh uniform store teeth a while.

He Was a Scoffer.

“Do I seem to be seeking the good of the world? That is the idea. It is my public attitude; privately I am merely seeking my own profit. We all do it, but it is sound and it is virtuous, for no public interest is anything other or nobler than a massed accumulation of private interests. In 1883, when the simplified spelling movement first tried to make a noise, I was indifferent to it; more—I even irreverently scoffed at it. What I needed was an object lesson, you see. It is the only way to teach some people. Very well, I got it. At that time I was scrambling along, earning the family’s bread on magazine work at seven cents a word, compound words at single rates, just as it is in the dark present. I was the property of a magazine, a seven-cent slave under a boiler iron contract. One day there came a note from the editor requiring me to write ten pages on this revolting text: ‘Considerations concerning the alleged subterranean holophotal extemporaneousness of the conchyliaceous superimbrication of the ornithorhyncus, as foreshadowed by the unintelligibility of its plesiosaurian anisodactylous aspects.’

“Ten pages of that. Each and every word a seventeen-jointed vestibuled railroad train. Seven cents a word. I saw starvation staring the family in the face. I went to the editor, and I took a stenographer along so as to have the interview down in black and white, for no magazine editor can ever remember any part of a business talk except the part that’s got graft in it for him and the magazine. I said, ‘Read that text, Jackson, and let it go on the record; read it out loud.’ He read it: “Considerations concerning the alleged subterranean holophotal extemporaneousness of the conchyliaceous superimbrication of the ornithorhyncus as foreshadowed by the unintelligibility of its plesiosaurian anisodactylous aspects.’

“I said, ‘You want ten pages of those rumbling, great long summer thunder peals, and you expect to get them at 7 cents a peal?’

“He said, ‘A word’s a word, and seven cents is the contract; what are you going to do about it?’

“I said, ‘Jackson, this is cold-blooded oppression. What’s an average English word?’

“He said, ‘Six letters.’

But Was Converted.

"I said, 'Nothing of the kind; that's French, and includes the spaces between the words; an average English word is four letters and a half. By hard honest labor I've dug all the large words out of my vocabulary and shaved it down until the average is three letters and a half. I can put 1,200 words on your page, and there's not another man alive that can come within two hundred of it. My page is worth $84 to me. It takes exactly as long to fill your magazine pages with long words as it does with short ones—four hours. Now then, look at the criminal injustice of this requirement of yours. I am careful, I am economical of my time and labor. For the family's sake I've got to be so. So I never write 'metropolis' for 7 cents, because I can get the same money for 'city.' I never write 'policeman,' because I can get the same price for 'cop'. And so on and so on. I never write 'valetudinarian' at all, for not even hunger and wretchedness can humble me to the point where I will do a word like that for 7 cents; I wouldn't do it for 15. Examine your obscene text, please; count the words.'

"He counted and said it was 24. I asked him to count the letters. He made it 203.

"I said, 'Now, I hope you will see the whole size of your contemplated crime. With my vocabulary I would make 60 words out of those 203 letters, and get $4.20 for it; whereas for your inhuman 24 I would get only $1.68. Ten pages of these skyscrapers of yours would pay me only about $300; in my simplified vocabulary the same space and labor would pay me $840. I do not wish to work upon this scandalous job by the piece. I want to be hired by the year.' He coldly refused. I said:

" 'Then for the sake of the family, if you have no feeling for me, you ought at least to allow me overtime on that word 'extemporaneousness.' Again he coldly refused. I seldom say a harsh word to anyone, but I was not master of myself then, and I spoke right out and called him an anisodactylous plesiosaurian conchyliaceous ornithorhyncus, and rotten to the heart with holophotal subterranean extemporaneousness. God forgive me for that wanton crime; he lived only two hours!

"From that day to this I have been a devoted and hard-working member of that heaven-born institution, the International Association for the Prevention of Cruelty to Authors, and now I am laboring with Carnegie's Simplified Committee, and with my heart in the work.

A Real Phonetic Letter.

"Now then, let us look at this mighty question reasonably, rationally, sanely—yes, and calmly, not excitedly. What is the real function, the essential function, the supreme function, of language? Isn't it merely to convey ideas and emotions? Certainly. Then if we can do it with words of phonetic brevity and compactness, why keep the present cumbersome forms? But can we? Yes. I hold in my hand the proof of it. Here is a letter written by a woman, right out of her heart of hearts. I think she never saw a spelling book in her life. The spelling is her own. There isn't a waste letter in it anywhere: It reduces the phonetics to the last gasp—it squeezes the surplusage out of every word—there's no spelling that can begin with it on this planet outside of the White House. And as for the punctuation, there isn't any. It is all one sentence, eagerly and breathlessly uttered, without break or pause in it anywhere. The letter is absolutely genuine—I have the proofs of that in my possession. I can't stop to spell the words for you, but you can take the letter presently and comfort your eyes with it."

Mr. Clemens then read the letter which was:

"Miss _____ dear freind i took some Close into the armerry and give them to you to Send too the suffrers out to California and i Hate to truble you but i got to have one of them Back it was a black oll woole Shevyott With a jacket to Mach trimed Kind of Fancy no 38 Burst measure and passy menterry acrost the front And the color i woodent Trubble you but it belonged to my brothers wife and she is Mad about It i thought she was willin but she want she says she want done with it and she was going to Wear it a Spell longer she ant so free harted as what i am and she Has got more to do with Than i have having a Husband to Work and slave For her i gess you remember Me i am shot and stout and light complected i torked with you quite a spell about the suffrars and said it was orful about that erth quake i shoodont wonder if they had another one rite off seeine general Condision of the country is Kind of Explosive i hate to take that Black dress away from the suffrars but i will hunt round And see if i can get another One if i can i will call to the armerry for it if you will jest lay it asside so no more at present from your True freind i liked your appearance very Much."

"Now you see," said Mr. Clemens, "what simplified spelling can do. It can convey any fact you need to convey; and it can pour out emotions like a spellbinder. I beg you, I beseech you, to adopt our spelling, and print all your dispatches in it.

Twain's Serious Word.

"Now, I wish to say just one entirely serious word:

"I have reached a time of life, seventy years and a half, where none of the concerns of this world have much interest for me personally. I think I can speak dispassionately upon this matter, because, in the little while that I have got to remain here I can get along very well with these old-fashioned forms, and I don't propose to make any trouble about it at all. I shall soon be where they won't care how I spell so long as I keep the Sabbath. [Laughter]

There are 82,000,000 of us people that use this orthography, and it ought to be simplified in our behalf, but it is kept in its present condition to satisfy 1,000,000 people who like to have their literature in the old form. That looks to me to be rather selfish, and we keep the forms as they are while we have got 1,000,000 people coming in here from foreign countries every month and they have got to struggle with this orthography of ours, and it keeps them back and damages their citizenship for years until they learn to spell the language, if they ever do learn. This is merely sentimental argument.

No Real Argument.

"People say it is the spelling of Chaucer and Spenser and Shakespeare and a lot of other people who did not know how to spell anyway, and it has been transmitted to us and we preserved it and wish to continue to preserve it because of its ancient and hallowed associations.

"Now, I don't see that there is any real argument about that. If that argument is good, then it would be a good argument not to banish the flies and the cockroaches from hospitals because they have been there so long that the patients have got used to them and they feel a tenderness for them on account of the associations. Why, it is like preserving a cancer in a family because it is a family cancer, and we are bound to it by the test of affection and reverence and old mouldy antiquity.

"I think that this declaration to improve this orthography of ours is our family cancer, and I wish we could reconcile ourselves to have it cut out and let the family cancer go.

"Now, you see before you the wreck and ruin of what was once a young person like yourselves. I am exhausted by the heat of the day. I must take what is left of the wreck and ruin out of your presence and carry it away to my home and spread it out there and sleep the sleep of the righteous. There is nothing much left of me but my age and my righteousness, but I leave with you my love and my blessing, and may you always keep your youth." [Prolonged applause.]

Isabel Lyon's journal: ~~"I'm not well these days. I seem to be exhausted.~~

The King speaks in N.Y. tonight at a big banquet of the Associated Press. Melville E. Stone at the head of it all, and the King's speech will lead along to spelling reform" [MTP TS 121]

John M. Howells wrote to Isabel Lyon c/o Sam. "Thank you for your note of Sept'r 16th. / I regret extremely that Miss Clemens should have been troubled in any way with the matter of the Redding house while she is so busy. / Please tell Mr. Clemens, as to the cost of $25,000. or $30,000., or in fact, any price he decides on, it is quite possible to design a house for that sum" [MTP]. Note: Howells (1868-1959), son of William Dean Howells, was an award-winning architect Sam hired in 1906 to design "Stormfield." John had studied architecture at Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris.

September 20 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Isabel V. Lyon in Dublin, N.H.

Clara & I have just come in from dinner at the Grosvenor, & I am gone to bed.

Day before yesterday I told Mrs. Johnson frankly & in detail our judgment of the Joan play, & she took it in good part.

Yesterday on the yacht I read 10,000 words of the story, & to-day I read 10,000 more—both batches with great admiration & continuous & strong interest.

I sent Philip for 10,000 more & have just received it [MTP]. Note: Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Sam also wrote a one-line note on a calling card to Charlotte Teller Johnson: "Please send me a lot more of the MS. if you can. / It goes WELL. / SLC" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal (Dublin, N.H.): Jean, 11:30

The seriousness of Jean's disease is increasing and I am very anxious about her. AB & I took some ms. down under the apple tree—"The Mysterious Stranger"—we took, but we talked instead.

Tonight I took poor little Jean down to a Cotillion at the Club. Mrs. Wm. Cabot gave it & it was very pretty. I had a long talk with Mr. Brush out on the porch. Soon they are going to Italy for the winter, I believe [MTP TS 121].

Poultney Bigelow wrote from “Malden on the Hudson” to Sam, inviting him, Isabel Lyon, and “one of the girls” to come and “spend a month or two in the land of Rip van WINKLE—under the Catskills” [MTP].

September 20 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y.C. Sam wrote on Poultney Bigelow’s Sept. 20 invitation or Isabel Lyon to reply to. “Thank him for all of us & say we are sincerely sorry we are not able to come. SLC” [MTP].

September 21 Friday – In N.Y.C. Sam began a letter to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) that he added to after reaching Norfolk, Conn. Sept. 22, where he finished it on Sept. 23. Daughter Clara was to make her American debut as a concert singer in Norfolk on Sept. 22.

[first page of letter written between typewritten lines of letter to SLC from W. M. Vanderweyde:]

21st Sept.

At 3 p.m., I put Clara in her coupè, & started her for Norfolk, then I undressed & went to bed, bringing with me, from my handbag, Clara’s most recent letter, Jean’s most recent & yours. I was reading yours when the photographer entered the room. I dropped my hand & looked up, & he said: “There—don’t move—stay just as you are, the letter in your hand—a good pose! looks just as if you’d been interrupted, & wanted to use language!” I said, “Oh, no, nothing severer than ‘Don’t, Mary!’”—& he laughed the laugh which a person laughs when he pretends to understand but know very well he doesn’t. He made a half a dozen negatives & said he would have couple of finished pictures awaiting me at the house on my return Sunday eve, from Norfolk. I want to trade you one for butter.

8 p.m. I was up & out again at 5 p.m. & called on a lady, & would have stayed to dinner, but didn’t, because a pair of distinguished strangers were coming, & this is no weather for exertion, mental or physical. It was providential—for my cravat wasn’t tied. I found it out when I got home. I feel very much disgraced. Still, it was not my fault: my pal was far away, Katy was gone to the station with Clara, there was no one to do the tying, no one to stop me on my way out & remind me that I was irregular. Shall I cry?...I will think about it.

8.15. In bed, of course. Katy—bearing news—has come up to pack my luggage for the early train. When I was taking leave of Clara I asked her to let me lead her out before her audience. She said, no—“You’ll get all the welcome, & I none.” But on the way to the station, she told Katy she had changed her mind, & would like to be led out by her father. Mariechen, it’s butter from the butterless! & very gratifying. Next, there’ll be butter from Jean—yes, & even from you; I am not despairing [MTP].

Chapters from “My Autobiography—II” ran in the N.A.R.

William M. Vander Weyde, photographer in N.Y.C. wrote to ask if he might photograph Mark Twain for The Reader magazine. It would only take “about five minutes of your time.” He brought the note to Sam’s house on Fifth Ave. [MTP]. See next.

Sam inscribed a copy of HF to William M. Vander Weyde, photographer: “Taking the pledge will not make bad liquor good, but it will improve it. Truly Yours Mark Twain. Sept. 21/06. With compliments to Mr. W.M. Van der Wyde” [MTP].

Henry Watterson wrote on Louisville Courier-Journal letterhead to Sam.

Although I sent the enclosed [not extant] to George Harvey yesterday to be shown to you, I send it direct in order to say that the more I think about its suggestion the more it impresses me. Is it true, as I have heard, that you and Sydney Rosenfeld have collaborated on a play on the "Sellers Motif"? If not, have you ever seriously thought about it? My idea is a new play altogether written around the old plot, but brought down to date. Undoubtedly Godwin is the man to play the part.

If you have the address of either of Jim Lampton's daughters, send it to me. I am afraid that one of them, who is the preacher's wife and lives in Dallas, Tex. Is a little out of humor with me. Anyhow I want them to see what I have said about their dear old dad.

Don't let them work you too much, either speaking or writing. Your place in history is made, your fame secured, and I take it you have money enough about your clothes to pay for drinks. That George Harvey is a castiron devil of a hustler and he will never reflect that you are not as young as you used to be.

No, nor Howells neither; to whom my cordial regards [MTP].

September 22 Saturday – At 3 p.m. in Norfolk, Conn. Sam added to his Sept. 21 to Mary B. Rogers.

Norfolk, 3 p.m., 22^d

I have gone to bed—as usual. It is to be hope that you are in bed, too, & that last night's hilarious late hours & this morning's murderously early ones have not broken you down utterly & condemned you to Norfolk again.

I had a marvelously narrow escape from death coming up in the train.

Terese has been in, interrupting. She is the lovable Tuscan girl we had with us in Florence. She was at the door when I drove up in the downpour, & the tears were running down her face. I said reproachfully, "Terese, I am hurt, & I am going away; I never expected to see you cry to see me come." She looked distressed, & seized me by both hands & exclaimed, "Oh, it is not that—it is that I cry for joy to see the signor padrone again!"

That is very nice butter, & I know how to make Terese furnish it; for she believes everything I say. She is smitten with death & doesn't know it; no one would imagine it, for she does not look ill. It is very pathetic.

She came up to unpack my things, & put everything to rights & make me comfortable, & now I shall have to do her work all over again, I think, for she has been so busy talking her captivating broken English for half an hour that with all her good intentions she has only arranged to make me *un*comfortable—just as happened with my amended buttonhole flower Wednesday evening—it was much more to my liking before.

Miss Gordon (of the 69th street infirmary) was in the train, & she had a box of flowers for Clara. Why wasn't I as thoughtful! It is a shame to be so thoughtless as I am.

Clara & I have had a chat. She is in bed; she had a fright in the train yesterday. She says I mustn't lead her on the stage; also she says I must. She has a dread that the house will call for a speech. I said "I will excuse myself." "But they won't take the excuse." "Then I will say, "I would gladly respond, but Mr. Luckstone, who was to accompany me on the trombone has unfortunately caught a cold." She said that if I would be sure & stop there—& so forth & so forth. We had a most entertaining dispute but didn't really settle anything. I wish you were here, to settle it in your arbitrary way. We reach New York Sunday eve.

At 6 p.m. Sam added that "telegrams of hope and encouragement" poured in for Clara [MTP].

In Dublin, N.H. Jean Clemens telegrammed her sister Clara: "My love and warmest wishes for the best health, voice and greatest success" [MTP: Jean's Diary, Vol 5].

The New York Times, Sept. 23, p.9 ran a Special report from Winstead, Conn., datelined Sept. 22 about Clara's debut.

MISS CLEMENS IN CONCERT.

Mark Twain Makes a Speech at His Daughter's Debut.

Special to The New York Times.

WINSTED, Conn., Sept. 22.—Before a large audience in the Norfolk Gymnasium, Norfolk, this evening, Miss Clara Clemens, the daughter of Mark Twain, made her debut as a concert singer. A large delegation of the young singer's friends was present from New York and other places. Miss Clemens was assisted by Marie Nichols, a Boston violinist. Miss Clemens, who is the possessor of a rich contralto voice, was enthusiastically received.

Mark Twain made a short speech at the close of the recital. He described his first appearance before an audience in San Francisco and told of a sudden stage fright that overcame him then. He compared stage fright to seasickness and said he wished his choicest enemy could have both at the same time.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Santissima's concert tonight—& the King will be there" [MTP TS 121-122].

E.M. Blaikie, secretary for Rudyard Kipling wrote from Sussex, England to thank Sam for the book What is Man? which had reached them [MTP].

Lois Kellogg wrote to Sam, reacting to "A Dog's Tale."

Dear Author / I think you are awfully mean to write such a sad, terrificly [sic] sad story, I cried and cried and could not finish it.

I am going to keep the book just the same because I like you, but not as much as before (just now), but maybe I will like you more afterwards, but I really do not see how you can be quite so hard hard hearted.

With lots of thanks and no thanks at all I am / Your friend always..." [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote at the top, "No answer required."

Collier's Weekly ran "The Innocent Endorsers of Quackery" [Camfield's bibliog.].

September 23 Sunday – In Norfolk, Conn. at midnight, Sam added to his Sept. 21 and 22 letter to Mary B. Rogers.

Midnight. It's over!,

Sack, it was a distinct triumph!—an unqualified triumph—a triumph without any alloying doubts hanging about it—a beautiful, & blood-stirring, & spirit-satisfying triumph; & I would rather have lost one of my ear than missed it, & I would have contributed the other one to have you there.

Everything was in Clara's favor, even the weather, which was horrible. I was charmed with it & grateful for it, for the delightfulest of all audiences & the most inspiring is a bad-weather audience. It doesn't come for fashion's sake for duty's sake, it comes because it wants to. The contrast between that alert & glowing & expectant company & Melville Stone's museum of dessicated mummies was the contrast between an living & the dead. It was all on hand, galleries & all, an hour before the advertised hour (8.30) for the beginning. Rodman Gilder & I arrived at 8.30, according to command, but I was forbidden to enter the greenroom, & also forbidden to lead Clara out. The manager said no, this was Clara's show & I couldn't steal any part of it. I was given a seat in the third row & admonished to keep quiet & not try to attract attention. Luckstone's train was late. He arrived at 9, presently led Clara out. She was Egyptian, & lovely. Sack, you couldn't have looked lovelier yourself. I knew she was frozen with stage-fright, but she didn't show it.

Before she reached the middle of No. 1 I saw she was going to win. Then Luckstone turned his head & leaned over his shoulder at her, & Miss Gordon, who sat trembling at my side, heaved a deep relief-sigh and whispered, "There—that's approval!—she's perfectly safe, now."

And so she was. From that time forth to the end she walked in victory. At the end Miss Gordon & I only waited till the house had called her out a couple of times, then we pushed for the stage to congratulate her; & on the stage we met her coming out on the third call, & I kissed her so as to make myself conspicuous, & walked her off with an arm around her waist. Then came the call for your uncle, & Clara led me on.

I spoke for 20 minutes, & that is the only speech I have ever made that entirely satisfied me. I will rest on that—I shan't ever make another one. Five years from now she will be a celebrity, & I'll stick my nose in the air & say with complacency, "Why, I was present at the very birth of this renown!"

Good night (or good morning) dear Sack, it is bed-time [Note: Mr. Isidore Luckstone was Clara's accompanist.]

At 10 a.m. Sam added more:

Sunday, 10 a.m. I perceive that you are not writing me yet, about your auto-adventures. But you are better employed I think—& hope—sleeping & resting.

Twelve or 15 New York friends came up, & about the same number from Hartford. Clara will repeat in Hartford pretty soon, & in Providence two or three weeks hence.

She satisfied Mr. Bacon her manager, last night. Perhaps that was the main triumph. I hear Clara's voice downstairs—there is nothing melancholy about it. It is about time she was coming up to say good-morning. I don't believe that you or the other member of my family would be so undutiful.

I didn't half thank you, dear Pal, (in words), for the trouble you took to bring me home from the yacht, & you so full of work, but I thanked you deep down, just the same; & I wanted to spare you, too, but I was born selfish, & I couldn't.

I am impatient to mail you my news. I think I will telegraph you at your New York home & try to get on your track. Meantime I am your affectionate uncle, just the same as before. / Mark [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean, describing Clara's triumph in much the same words as he had to Mary Rogers (above). He added their plans, named a few of the guests, and closed at 11:30 a.m.

Clara & I will go Newyorking late this afternoon, reaching home toward 10 to-night.

All the Gilders except R. W. [Richard Watson Gilder] were there. Mrs. Gilder was with Clara all day, & mothered her charmingly, & took her to the hall in the evening, & dressed her there, & was her good angel all through, & she & Rodman spent the night in this house.

11.30. a.m. I hear Clara's voice downstairs—it isn't melancholy. Good-bye, dear heart, with lots of hugs & kisses [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Jean, 11:30" [MTP TS 122].

Minnie Maddern Fiske wrote from White Plains, NY to send praise and thanks to Sam for his story "Soldier Boy" [MTP].

September 24 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Monday, 6.15 p.m / Dear Charlotte, Mr. Sears has been here, & we chatted an hour & I told him what a high opinion (dam this empty pen) I hold of the book [The Cage 1907], & he spoke highly of it himself. When it is all ready to submit to magazines he will carry out your desire & let the magazine have it that will pay you the best price. I will elaborate this to-morrow at your house if I can there; & next day any how. / Sincerely [MTP].

Note: Joseph Hamblen Sears (1865-1946), writer, publisher and President of D. Appleton's, publishers (1904-1918).

Sam also wrote a letter of recommendation for his coachman the past three years, George O'Connor. Since Clara was to sail for Germany on Sept. 26, Sam wouldn't be needing O'Connor's services. Sam gave his "permanent address" as Redding, Conn. [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I went to pieces & stayed in a dark room all day—suffering" [MTP TS 122].

September 24 ca. – N.Y.C.: Sam wrote to Maude Adams, actress. An extract survives:

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

....The essential point in the story, to me, is that a young girl, ignorant of the hard world & its ways, who becomes a woman suddenly, is so absolutely absorbed in a man—in his personality, his mind, his work—that she involuntarily devotes her life to him. She does not care whether she is married to him or not; she does not think or care what the world will think or say; she lies for him without hesitation; she leaves her father for him; she sacrifices herself again & again for him & his work. In so doing, she grows to be a woman in a few months. She learns many things; she develops into a knowledge of the world. In so doing, she also teaches the man, who knows the world well, many things of the heart & mind which he had never learned.

It is the story of the heart of a woman so big that all worldly forms are gladly ignored for the love of one man. That is what a real woman would do; & in so doing she would really make the man, too, if he had character to start with. And all of this take place amidst the familiar surrounding of the Chicago of to-day. It is a strong book, Peter Pan, & if you once begin it you will not be able to leave this man & woman until you have finished the story. / Sincerely your friend [MTP].

September 25 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Isabel V. Lyon, with a humorous end note to daughter Jean, in Dublin, N.H.

About 10 last night Clara took the alarm & fled to the sanitarium in 69th street. It was because the tearing up of the avenue made such a pounding racket. I hope she will stay there—for two reasons. Miss Gordon is good company for her, & there's none here; & up there she is close to Luckstone.

Mrs. Johnson was one of the happiest persons in America last night. I sent for Sears, (President & Manager of Appletons) yesterday afternoon, & he came here at once & we talked an hour. He likes her book & is going to publish it; & I asked him to sell the serial rights for her, & he said he would do it with pleasure & give it to the magazine that offers the most. He also said it is his policy to secure a dozen authors permanently—a new book per year—and he believed she was going to be one of them. Lots of love to Jean. / Sincerely Yours / S.L. C.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote a hurried note to Sam. "I didn't hear from Col. Harvey today. / Maybe you did" [MTP].

September 26 Wednesday – NYC: Sam inscribed a photograph of himself sitting up in bed to Katy Leary: "It is your human environment that makes the climate. To Katy Leary, with the affectionate regards of her friend. / Mark Twain / Sept 26/06" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Petit mal all day. / I got up to lie out in the sunshine with a piteously aching & suffering & quivering spine. AB came out with the mail & he took a lot of it away to dictate answers to Miss Hobby" [MTP TS 122].

C.S. Palmer wrote to ask Sam for an interview [MTP]. Note: Sam replied "Pressure of work obliges me to excuse myself / SLC" – Lyon further noted: "This had been one of many requests from a stranger, for an interview, this little note was the basis of a form often used in replying to such."

The man Mark Twain labeled as the "Poet Lariat" on the Quaker City excursion died this day in Great Neck, N.Y. Bloodgood H. Cutter was 89 years old [NY Times, Sept. 27, p.1].

September 26 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to the Sept. 26 from C.S. Palmer: "Pressure of work obliges me to excuse myself. / SLC" [MTP].

September 27 Thursday – In the evening at 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Ralph W. Ashcroft.

The Colonel [Harvey] has just gone. I expected he would not be willing that any but Harpers should issue the brochure, & he wasn't.

He wants to put the 7 [photographs on being good] in the Xmas Weekly—a huge & elaborate number—& says he can print them perfectly; so I told him to go ahead. Miss Lyon is suffering a severe nervous collapse [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: “AB came out & made out checks for me & cleared up a lot of work. We did the work in the living room. I on the couch, he scribbling away beside me, occasionally giving the fire a poke” [MTP TS 122].

Miss Anne W. Stockbridge wrote from Yarmouth, Maine to Sam, nonplussed that a letter to Sam (handed first to her brother of the University Club in Boston), had been published in the newspaper without the names suppressed. In the published letter she suggested a topic for his talk at the Assoc. Press dinner [MTP].

Brander Matthews wrote to Sam. “That was a most persuasive speech you made to the Ass^d Press. / The Ex. Com. Of the Simplified Spelling Board, at its meeting yesterday, unanimously requested you to allow us to issue it as one of our documents. / Can you revise it for publication?” [MTP].

Dr. Clarence C. Rice wrote to Isabel Lyon.

Will you please remind Mr. Clemens of his promise to send one of his photographs for Miss Edna May, the Actress.

Miss May is a great admirer of Mr. Clemens and I promised her I would get the photograph, with his autograph—I hope you are all well / Very Truly Yours [MTP]. Note: Edna May Pettie (1878-1948), actress, singer, and post card beauty.

Two copies of The $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories (1906) were deposited with the Copyright Office on this day, the first edition being published this month [Hirst, “A Note on the Text” Afterword materials p.21, Oxford ed. 1996].

September 27 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) crossways on Anne W. Stockbridge's Sept. 27 letter: “You have seen those queer letters, Mary: well, this is the sequel—& not unfunny” [MTP].

September 28 Friday – About this day Sam went to Fairhaven, Mass. for the weekend. His Oct. 2 to Clara reveals he left Fairhaven for Dublin on Oct. 1.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean, 1:30 and 6:00 on porch.

Much of the day I have been out in the sunshine in the open field to the north. Jean's condition being worse I wrote lengthily to Dr. Peterson in Europe. She subconsciously feels my weakness & all her venomous points are to the fore; for it is absolutely essential that a person who is mentally strong should be with her & should fearlessly direct her. But in the afternoon AB came out & found me near the quivering white birch trees & after a good talk he read aloud to me from “Madame Butterfly”. ~~The darlinest saddest movingest little story in the world. Dear AB's voice shook & broke & stopped & he wept over [it.] How sweet it is to see a man weep. I have never seen but one other really sob, & those sobs were so strong, so uncontrollable that the man was transfigured by them & that man was XX.~~ AB knows so much about the strong artistic creatures of America. John Luther Long is a friend of his & today he said, “Long has the soul of an angel.” I don't see how any man can reach into the heart of a woman as he has done in “Madame Butterfly” & in “Purple Eyes” [MTP 122-123]. Note: John Luther Long (1861-1927), lawyer and writer best known for his short story “Madame Butterfly,” based on his sister’s recollections, a Methodist missionary to Japan; see Gribben 418; MTB 1480.

September 29 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

I have had to ask Mr. Clemens to come back on Monday.

Today a climax with Jean. In the King’s name I had to forbid Gerry Brush going with her for a long walk & then I collapsed. Jean would not listen to reason. She was far too ill to go. Gerry stayed here all the day & in the afternoon when AB came out & came up to my room—the room which was so hideous to me in May—only because I had nothing but griefs to bring into it—we went over a lot of the King’s mail & then, he sitting beside my couch, we had a wonderful talk.

Gerald Thayer came over at 5 o’clock at Dr. Stowell’s suggestion & will stay indefinitely. Because in Jean’s present condition it isn’t safe for me to be alone with her. She could easily lapse into the violence the doctors fear may come in time. They all came up to my room after tea—Gerald, & Gerry & Jean—AB was here, & we had such a gay time, for Gerry recited nonsense verse [MTP TS 123-124].

The New York Times, p. BR602, under “Topics of the Week” commented on the second segment of “Mark Twain’s Autobiography” in the Oct. issue of North American Review. “It was no masterwork like ‘Huckleberry Finn,’ but it was full of fresh, original humor.”

The St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat ran a three-page feature, “A Day With Mark Twain,” by Albert Edward Allman. Five photographs were included with a description of how Twain passed his day.

September 30 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

AB came out this morning & packed the 2 ms. trunks for me. I’m weak these days—very weak—& Dr. Stowell says I must go away. I don’t see how it is possible. We had a fire in my room and we spent most of the afternoon there, AB staying to luncheon & going on with the packing in the afternoon. I was very tired; tired from yesterday’s battle with Jean; tired from packing today—so I curled up on the couch & AB walked up & down the room, smoking cigarettes & talking about the King & the Biography and he truly says that the King’s life is divided into periods & he rehearsed them to me. AB has a walk so purposeful, too purposeful, so individual, that it is a great satisfaction to me to watch his long stride. Each step counts, & counts for a definite progress. There is nothing wasteful about him [MTP TS 124-125].

Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote from Ponkapog, Mass. to Sam.

Dear Mark: / Letters and long-distance telephones are requesting me to be “brilliant”. My immediate neighbors make no such demand; they know better. They cynically inquire after my opalescence and wonder how on earth I got these “rose-diamonds” through the custom-house unbeknown to any body. You have about ruined me—as you probably intended to do—by that paragraph in the last number of the N. A. Review. A few more paragraphs of that kind will oblige me to retire from the world. I shall retire into a nunnery. I think that would suit me in my old-age. It would have suited me at any period of my life. Meanwhile I want the rest of that delightful autobiography, and I don’t want it on the instalment plan; I want it now. I can’t wait for your convenience. Are you still at Dublin? Shall you come this way—meaning Boston—with your nightingale? We desire hungrily to hear her and see you, who are always dear to us. We purpose to move to Mt. Vernon street in the latter part of October. At present we are sojourning in Ponkapog, where our boy and his bran-new wife are spending a few weeks with us preparatory to taking up their own housekeeping in The Cambridge on Beacon street. The young couple are looking at existence through rose-colored spectacles—just as we did long ago, before we ever dreamed of any other kind of glasses. It is pleasant to watch the kids. They are—to use the language of Rozvelt’s favorite poet—

“2 soles with but a single thot,

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

2 harts that beet az 1.”—

Faithfully yours here and hereafter, unless we all are a limited corporation, T. B. A. [MTP].

September 30 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote on Aldrich’s Sept. 30 to Mary B. Rogers.

Mary, I’m sending you this to show you that there are people who want my admirable biography now. It’s butter, my pal! Although I can’t furnish it to him I can unload a chapter onto you now & then, & I mean to do it. And you must read it, & say you like it, whether you do or not. I will go to his Boston house for a few days by & by, & very willingly, but not to his Ponkapog house any more [MTP].

October – Sam inscribed an aphorism in a copy of P&P to an unidentified person: “On the whole it is better to deserve honors & not have them, than have them & not deserve them. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / Oct/06” [MTP].

Sam also sent a signed aphorism on an octavo sheet to an unidentified person: “Taking the pledge will not make bad liquor good, but will improve it” [MTP].

Spectator published an anonymous review of Eve’s Diary, p. 393-4. Tenney: “ ‘The modern American girl belonging to the monied class is the youngest, and perhaps the prettiest, of Eve’s daughters. The American humorist thinks her like her prototype in the Garden of Eden.’ MT depicts a materialistic Adam and an Eve who is more sensitive, but whose ‘love of beauty is half of it love of possession.’ ‘They are both the offspring of their surroundings, the children of a Pecuniary Paradise,—a lawless pair, whose ultimate fate may be prophesied from precedent’” [“A Reference Guide Second Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1978 p. 173].

Current Literature ran an anonymous article “Mark Twain’s Life of Samuel L. Clemens” [Tenney 42].

October 1 Monday – Sam left Fairhaven, Mass. and returned to Dublin, N.H. at 8 p.m. He replied to the Sept. 30 of Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

I have just returned from another 3 weeks’ junketing—and still with a good conscience, for “wasted time” is no longer a matter of concern to me; at least in the summer time. I have worked pretty steadily for 65 years, & I don’t care what I do with the 2 or 3 that remain to me so that I get pleasure out of them. I am 300,000 words to the good on the autobiography, & if I add an average of 50,000 a month for the rest of my life I shall be satisfied—especially if I can find ways to put in the rest of the month agreeably. If I had you near by I would make you read a chapter of it every day for your sins.

The truth is, I had no business to leave here, & I must not do it again; for Jean’s health is very bad this last fortnight, & I must stay by her henceforth, for no authority but mine can control her when she is ill—and she is always ill, poor child, these latter months. With greatest love to you all— [MTP; time of arrival in Dublin in Oct. 3 to Teller].

Sam also wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson that he would be down in about ten days, “Meantime cheer up, don’t give it up, don’t be discouraged. It must come out all right” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King has come back—now all things will be right, for I have dropped my responsibility—ordinarily I can carry it, but not when it has sucked out all my strength. He was so beautiful, so gay, so full of his trip & of Santissima’s concert & of his playings at Fairhaven. There is no one who can play so successfully as the King can. He is so fond of Mrs. Harry Rogers & calls her his “Pal.” He made a badge or a coat of arms for the “pals” while he was in Fairhaven this time in a bottle of Saccharine & a candle on a shield with “Sweetness & Light” for the motto. Their partnership was to torment or to provide entertainment for those who were playing cards—Bridge or Poker—by throwing in remarks, personal remarks—and this they’d keep up until one of them would be thrown from the room. But the joy of the restfulness of having him back. I almost cry with happiness & with relief. I sent for him on Sat., for Dr. Stowell said that if I didn’t, he would [MTP TS 125].

October 2 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam began a letter to daughter Clara that he finished Oct. 3.

Clara dear, perhaps you thought I couldn't leave my niece, Mary Rogers, but I did it. I came away from Fairhaven yesterday. Everything is going well here, except that Miss Lyon is still feeble & has to go carefully & not over-exert herself. But she is up & around, comes to meals, chats, laughs, plays the orchestrelle a little, & signs checks. I believe she will soon be quite well.

Jean is strong, hearty, & very sweet & demonstratively affectionate. But it is pretty plain that she has to have at her elbow an indisputable authority. And so I realize that I must stop junketing & stay at my post & not try to delegate its duties & large responsibilities to another. I realize it just in time; for I was planning to give up what is left of my life largely to idling & holidaying, to make up for 65 years of continuous work. I was going 'mobiling in the South of France a month or two in the spring with Col. Harvey (& possibly Mr. Howells.) However, it doesn't matter.

I dictated 3 hours this morning—so my railway journeys yesterday did not tire me. Miss Hobby the stenographer said to Miss Lyon "it was horribly uncanny, & deeply interesting, & funny in places, & touching in others—altogether a great product, & made me laugh & cry, both."

Miss Lyon reports this:

The other day Miss Hobby said to Paine: "I know I couldn't like the New Jerusalem—all jewels & gold & pearls and trinkets." Paine said:

"But it is all right; it isn't for you & your like, it was built for Jews, you know."

Go on resting & recuperating, Clara dear; you have bravely & richly earned a good rest, & it's the best thing for you, & will build you up & put you in good shape for another triumph. That was a triumph at Norfolk!

With hugs & kisses galore, / Father.

Aldrich says he is hungry to hear you sing.

Evening. Your letter has arrived. Yes, I am entirely comfortable, & glad to be in the country again.

I am delighted that you netted $60, & touched by what they propose to do with it—deeply touched & grateful.

Yes, I shall be very glad to pay Mr. Luckstone, & thank him besides for the trouble he so kindly took in your behalf.

Clara dear, I am so sorry for Teresa, whom I hold in great affection; but you must tell her, from me, that she must go home, for I cannot take the responsibility of letting her stay here against the doctor's advice & warning. If I allowed her to stay I should feel that I was treacherous to her people, who are trusting me & believe me worthy of their trust.

For a butler, go to the same place where you got Philip. I am sorry he is ill, & also sorry to lose him. My pen is empty. Goodnight / Marcus

Yes, get a room at the Grosvenor. or at Gilder's [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Another stolen holiday including banquet speech in New York & visit to Norfolk, Conn. In a letter recd. this morning friend calls—Clemens "the blesseddest 'accident' I have yet met in my life."—Clemens reviews the series of "accidents" during his life which have led up to meeting this friend [MTP Autodict2; MTE 384-93].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today I asked the King how he came to write "The Man That Corrupted Hadleyburg", & he said it was the outcome of a protest against protecting the young from temptation; let them be tempted, & let them fall early, that they may know by experience what things are to be avoided. Today AB went away [MTP TS 125-126].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam having rec'd his of Sept. 27 and was "glad to know that the matter of the photographs is settled. No doubt the utmost care will be taken to produced as nice results as is possible with "The Weekly'. He was sorry to hear that Miss Lyon was ill, and made a request regarding the title of "The $30,000 Bequest" appearing on the top of the left hand pages (of the new volume of the Hillcrest ed.) "containing other matter; it may be typographically correct, but it is certainly inartistic" [MTP]. Note: the seven photos of moral musing.

Henry Arthur Jones wrote from NYC to invite Sam to "join my party" going to Harvard on Wed. Oct. 31 where he would perform in a play [MTP].

October 3 Wednesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam finished his Oct. 3 to daughter Clara, in care of John Walker, 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y.C.

6, a.m., Wednesday.

Take my bedroom—you will never hear a hoof-click there. And keep it, permanently, if your own room is big enough for a billiard room. I hope it is, & I feel sure it is. I think I know it is.

I must telegraph you this to-day, dear [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Sept. 27 from Brander Matthews.

Certainly you can use the speech, & you do not need to copyright it. I have not seen it in print, but if you've a copy of it send it to me & I will revise it.

I am very glad you like the autobiography. We are shoving 9,000 words a month into the Review, & there's 300,000 to draw from, not to speak of the 50,000 which I shall dictate each month until the end of time.

There ain't going to be any volume of speeches, because I am too lazy to collect them & revise them [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson.

Dear Charlotte, I got your first before leaving for the yacht that morning—many thanks for it—and found the Philadelphia one awaiting me upon my arrival from Fairhaven at 8 last night. Miss Lyon is up & about, but not quite able to resume work yet. Mr. Paine & Miss Hobby have been acting as her substitutes for more than a week, & they have kept things up to date, right along; but Paine had to go to New York yesterday, therefore I had to hurry home 2 days before my Fairhaven holiday was out, & resume business at the old stand before I wanted to.

If the contract isn't signed, get it signed & off your mind. And presently when there's a carbon MS that neither you nor Sears needs, let's have it here.

Evidently you are in first-rate spiritual trim for work, now, & I am glad [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Clara Clemens' debut in Norfolk, Conn.—The episode of her crib catching fire when she was 7 yrs. old—The two other fires on the two following days—Rosa's promptness in rescuing the children—Rosa's marriage, and her experience with the scarecrow and the crows [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Brush came for dinner.

This morning I showed the King some little photographs I made of him with Sackcloth & Ashes [cats] & when he looked at himself he said—"Well, I can look more different kinds of ways than any bug I ever saw outside of a museum." It's true, too.

My decided misinformation of 2 weeks troubled me by a renewed sleeplessness last night. And at 3 o'clock this morning I [two illegible words] that now the only thing to do is to take hold of the condition mentally. I must heal it from within & in my own lame way I shall do it. I did quiet the quivering nerves, & this afternoon I lay out in the sunshiny field & slept for an hour. There was such a blessed peace within me when I wakened. Dr. Stowell commands that I go away for a rest cure, but now I think that won't be necessary [MTP TS 126].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-lo Co. letterhead to Sam. "Here is some more Plasmon literature; please read it at your convenience, and then post it back to me. / Yours..." [MTP].

(Harold) Witter Bynner wrote from NYC to confess to Sam that he'd resigned from McClure's and would live:

"on Grub street for six months and then O if I have to I can get something again in some office. / Do I deserve a scolding? —or a fatherly and saintly pat? / Will you in either event do me the inestimable favour of copying for me that Prayer from the little girl's diary? I want it badly. / Dear man, I am ...ever yours" [MTP].

O.W. Norton wrote from Chicago to compliment Sam on "The Horse's Tale," which he thought was "a little gem." He added that he was "an old soldier and an old bugler," and offered criticism that "the bugle call by which the little girl summoned her horse...except the first strain it could not possibly be played on a bugle or trumpet." Also, "The first strain of the 'Soldier Boy' call could be played on any bugle or trumpet, but the following strains or variations could only be played on the cornet or some keyed instrument, and these are never used for bugle calls" [MTP].

October 4 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to the Sept. 27 from Anne W. Stockbridge.

Dear Miss Stockbridge (if she really exists):

257 Benefit Street (if there is any such place)

Yes, I should like a copy of that other letter. This whole fake is delightful, & I tremble with fear that you are a fake yourself & that I am your guileless prey. (But never mind, it isn't any matter)

Now as to publication. I shall be going home to New York 8 days hence—

21 Fifth Avenue

Suppose you send me, there, type-written copies of as many of "Jennie's" letters as Miss [Grace] Donworth has thus far forged, & I will show them to a magazine editor & put him in correspondence with you if he thinks well of them.

For they ought to be serialized in a magazine FIRST.

I think that the swindle that they are genuine ought to be maintained. This is a sin, but that is nothing. The newspapers will attack their genuineness, & this will furnish good & cheap advertising. The Christian publisher likes that. / Sincerely Yours [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Clara Clemens' debut as a concert singer, at Norfolk, Conn. Sept. 22nd—Sam Clemens' talk—Difference between speeches & talks [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Raffael Pumpelly was here for tea.

Tonight the King spoke in the basement of the Unitarian Church for the assembled villages, an audience which appreciated him, but didn't dare show it. I wish AB could have been there, for every time you hear the King it's an event in a lifetime & I wish AB could have seen the people—trying to keep their faces straight. Bless 'em. We drove silently down to the village through the moonlight & the King's face was so beautiful that my heart stood still. He was smoking with all the dignity characteristic of his smoking. He idealizes tobacco. He makes the smoker's action an art—just as he makes profanity an art, ~~but he reduces me to~~ ~~impress~~ even when he even rolls out his curses at a collar button.

He dictated this morning but not for the full session. Earlier, just as he got up to dress & was standing by the washstand, Scott, Jean's horse, which had been turned loose in the field by the house, started off on a mad gallop & the King made a dash for the window to watch the beautiful creature. He didn't see the water pitcher on the floor, so he struck it with his shin, knocked it over & fell headlong. He told me later that if anyone could have seen him, they'd have said, "That cus is going for 3rd base." He didn't even seem to be shaken up [MTP TS 126-127]. Note: this entry had diagonal lines through it as well as horiz. & vertical lines.

Frank Nelson Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam. “Here is a letter and bill which has just come from Mr. Bothwell, of De Vinne’s. Do you want to send out any more books?” He offered to make up a list of interested people [MTP]. Note: regarding the anonymous printing of 250 copies of What is Man?

Henry M. Flagler wrote from 26 Broadway, NYC to Sam. “The ‘serious’ photographs came this morning, and I want you to believe that I am very much obliged to you for them especially for the signature evidencing their genuineness. / I showed them to one of our trusted men who has had a severe nervous breakdown. You will be glad to know that he left my office completely secured [?] with every good wish believe me” [MTP]. Note: 26 Broadway was the office of H.H. Rogers; Flagler was likely in the employ of Rogers.

John Larkin wrote to Sam, enclosing the deed to Sam and other heirs of the Tennessee land. Sam needed to sign with a notary and return the signed document [MTP].

Henry Beach Needham for Success Magazine wrote to Sam. The idea of the People’s Lobby had been received positively “by citizens everywhere,” though there had been “a little illogical ridicule in the New York ‘Sun’ and a little pessimism in the New York ‘Evening Post.’” He asked Sam to use his influence to raise funds for the Lobby, and enclosed a list of sixteen on the “Governing Committee,” of which Mark Twain was one [MTP].

October 5 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to the Oct. 3 from (Harold) Witter Bynner, supporting Bynner’s decision to devote himself to poetry.

Dear Poet: / You have certainly done right—for several good reasons; at least, of them, I can name two: 1. With your reputation you can have your freedom & yet earn your living: if you fall short of succeeding to your wish, your reputation will provide you another job. And so, in high approval I suppress the scolding & give you the saintly & fatherly pat instead.

Susy’s prayer was “.....I pray that there may be a God & a Heaven—or something better.”

We are comfortable here, as yet, but I expect to retire to New York within ten days, leaving Jean behind for a fortnight. Miss Lyon will stop in Boston a couple of weeks, for a rest, for she has been ill & has lost strength [MTP]. Note: see Gribben p.120

Sam signed Albert B. Paine’s contract with Harper & Brothers, and noted on the last page: “The above terms are satisfactory to me. S.L. Clemens. Oct.5/06” [MTP: Sotheby’s N.Y. catalogs, Dec. 10, 1993, No. 6515 Item 248].

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: Authorship of the two letters concerning San Francisco sufferers traced to Miss Grace Donworth—Letter from Miss Anne Stockbridge [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Now I’m not sure that I understand the King at all. Or, rather, there is such a deep side to him that I know I don’t understand him & that I never can. But I don’t want to. It’s the side of him that is unfathomable that helps to make his sweet greatness. This afternoon I went to the Upper pasture, & it’s the sweetest place in the world” [MTP TS 127-128].

Jerome A. Hart, Editor of The Argonaut (S.F.) wrote to Sam enclosing a clipping from “one of the early numbers of the Argonaut some thirty or more years ago. It refers, as you will see, to a ‘farewell lecture’ to be delivered by you in San Francisco, and contains a letter apparently written by you, several others addressed to you which seem also as if they might have been written by you.” Due to the interest in the Autobiography, Hart felt Sam might be interested [MTP]. Note: enclosure in file dated Oct. 6, 1906 includes “MARK TWAIN’S LECTURE IN ‘68”.

Chapters from “My Autobiography—III” ran in the N.A.R. p.577-89.

October 6 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

All day, wind & rain.

With the afternoon mail came a letter from AB to the King—a love letter & the most beautiful love letter ever written. The King was deeply moved as he read it & when he called me in from my study his voice was shaking as he said, “Superb, superb! and worth waiting 70 years for.” He gave me the letter to read & it made me weep, even as he had wept. ~~I didn’t know A.B. could write so exquisitely.~~

We had a beautiful afternoon, until the King went to his room, for I played the Chopin Nocturne, opus 37. Schubert’s Impromptu, opus 142, no. 2, the “König Stützl” as he calls the Erl König, & some Scotch music and my reward was his deep sigh of contentment [MTP TS 128].

October 7 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

It’s night now & I’ve just come to my room. The King called a minute ago & when I went to my door to see what he wanted, he stood in his own doorway & with gritting teeth said, “I wish you’d gather together my bobtailed flannel night shirts & burn them! I wish they were all in hell! I hate them so!”

He has been giving us a lovely evening, for he has been reading poetry for more than an hour—the old English ballads, & war poems

Gerome & Anna Cabot were here for luncheon, & the King didn’t stay with us very long. He went up to bed to read “Henry Esmond” & finds that it drags—& to smoke & loaf to his heart’s content. He was a little spiritless & so stayed with himself until dinner time. At luncheon we were talking of the idioms & usages of the West—the Klondike—& the King spoke of Rex Beach’s telling at the 70th birthday dinner how away out there “you pay a dollar for a drink & they lend you a blanket to throw a fit on.” “How id describes that liquor without saying a word about it,” he said.

Gerome & Anna Cabot were here for luncheon & after the meal when Jean suggested a walk, Gerome said that 3 was a hopeless number & that he’d stay & make me a call if he might. I quoted Nietzsche where he says that there is no comradeship in 3, that one of the number is like a cork bobbing on the surface & never letting the talk drop to any depths, so the split up was accomplished. Gerome & I sat by the open fire, & the talk dropped into the depths & showed me unsuspected beauties in him...[MTP TS 128-129]. Note: William Makepeace Thackeray’s The History of Henry Esmond, a novel (1852). See Gribben p. 696.

October 8 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

The King is filled with the idea of defying conventionalities & wearing his suitable white clothes all winter, so he has bidden me order 5 new suits from his tailor; the suits to be ready against the time we arrive in N.Y. He was a creature of inspiration today even to his toe tips. He was a lambent spirit, & the dictating was beautiful. I sat in the study, writing some, but listening most; & drawing checks.

This afternoon we went for a walk. Started along the Pumpelly Road. We were to walk 15 minutes out—15 minutes back. But the trail was beautiful, it was flamboyant in riotous coloring & when at the end of 12 min. we came upon some men tinkering at the MacVeagh water works, the King asked one of them if Mr. [Franklin] MacVeagh was in Dublin now & yes being the answer we went along through the woods to the house to learn that Mr. MacV. had gone to Peterboro. I always carry the King’s black cape for him to sit on when he takes his little rests on a mossy bank or a stone—or to throw around him. Today he sat on a chip-covered stone over in the woods & he talked about the Cathedral of a thousand columns in Spain. Around us were beech trees with boles like granite pillars of some ancient cathedral & so the talk easily fell into that vein. Tonight the King felt so gay that he wanted to learn to dance the Highland Fling. So I picked up my skirts & showed him some of the steps, & he copied them. He was so pretty in his white clothes toeing “side & front & side & back” with his arms up over his head [MTP TS 129-130].

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: Item from Susy’s biography about Sour Mash—Mr. Clemens describes the 3 kittens which he rented for the summer & will return to their home when he goes back to the city—Their characteristics likened to the characteristics of human beings—The ugliness of masculine attire [MTP Autodict2].

October 9 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam wrote to daughter Clara, in care of John Walker, 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y.C.

Clara dear I hope you are sleeping well, now, & without the help of drugs. Certainly broken sleep is a bad thing. I have suffered from it several times lately. Twice it has cost me my day's work. This morning it took me half an hour to dictate a dozen sentences—then I gave it up. A day or two ago I had the like experience.

I can't account for this. I am in perfect health, & there are no noises here—except when Sackcloth & Ashes [kittens] follow me up to bed & engage in a violent romp; but I turn them out when I am ready for sleep.

I have just finished Henry Esmond. There are very fine passages in it. On the whole I liked it. Its close is dramatically great. But I had a surprise: from the beginning to the end I found nothing that was familiar to me. It turns out—per the Lyon—that I've not read this book before, but was mistaking "The Virginians" for this one.

Jean seems to be getting along very well, now. She is hard at work carving things—to sell! At first I was shocked, when Miss Lyon told me, for I feared that the inspiration was need of money. But it isn't that: Jean mourns because she is the only member of the family who has no calling, & is accomplishing nothing in the world. It touches me; it is pathetic. I am glad, now, that she has conceived the wholesome idea of turning what has been an amusement into an occupation.

Our present plan is for me to arrive in New York Oct 20—& maybe the others. We shall see.

If there's nothing in the way on the 27th, I shall be in Hartford (or Farmington) attending (as the only guest) the 30th anniversary of the young girls' Saturday Morning Club. I inaugurated it 30 years ago & have always been its only mail [sic] member. I shall notify Annie Trumbull that I shall expect to have a great fuss made over me.

With many many hugs & kisses— Father [MTP]. Note: see Oct. 7 entry for Henry Esmond.

Sam also wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson and enclosed his calling card to Charles Frohman:

Dear Charlotte, I enclose the card. I think Frohman is usually in his office after 10, mornings. I think it a good idea on your part to make his acquaintance. And if you & Sears fail to make business with him, it would be well to make the acquaintance of his brother Dan, later. I am glad Sears is going to take care of your dramatic matters for you. His Ben Hur contract was a monumental achievement.

You are launched, now, & well & prosperously; & I confidentially believe you are going to sail steadily onward to success. I think the doubtful days are ended, I think the tentative days, the experimental days, are over, & that you have an occupation now, & a vocation. And I am very glad. Hoch! as the Germans say.

"The Lioness," as Jean & Clara call her, is about well again, & refuses to take the rest-vacation she ought to take. I think we shall all break for New York about a fortnight hence. It is already coldish here, but not too cold.

Meantime, go on & prosper!

[Enclosure on his calling card:]

"Will you do me the personal favor to see the bearer of this on business? / Ys Ever ./ Mark Twain" [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Item from Susy's biography about visit in Onteora—Description of the primitive inhabitants [MTP Autodict2]. Note: this entry conflicts with Lyon's journal below.

Isabel Lyon's journal: No dictation today. The King tried it—but he had had a bad night, & so he had to give it up. The kittens were too diverting too. The King said we couldn't run the house without those little creatures. They are the winsomest kittens that ever were. The King's sweet spirit is shown by this—a day or so ago one of the kittens was in the King's room when he & Jean were talking just after breakfast; the door into the hall was closed & presently the kitten wandered around the room with a mournful little cry. They went on with the chat & the kitten went in a corner & relived itself. When the King told me, & I said, "Oh dear, that's the first time such a thing has occurred," he promptly said, "Poor child! It was trying to make known its wants, but we were a pair of idiots & couldn't see what the trouble was."

Today after Miss Hobby went, the King wandered upstairs, & downstairs & into my study where he sat in the big chair that had my yellow silk shawl thrown over the back, so his glorious head rested against it & made a color scheme of silver & gold & opalescent colors, for his eyes were shining & there was a sweet young pink in his cheeks & he talked about copper stock—the Utah Consolidated. Then we loafed along into the next room, & he told me the wonderful dramatic story of Jack Reynolds. For an hour he talked. Tonight after dinner he wanted Shakespeare. I took him the 4 volumes I had brought up here & he selected “Julius Caesar” & read to us for an hour & a half. It was fine. The King acts the characters with modified gestures & inflections of voice. Big thunderstorm about 6—it blew out the electric lights & the telephones & prevented Jean & me going to the Thayers to supper and to say goodbye to Mary who is to be married to Mr. Fred Birch tomorrow [MTP TS 131-132].

In Dublin, N.H., Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Harriet E. Whitmore, asking if Sam might stay with the Whitmores when he came to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the Saturday Morning Club, which he started in Hartford. He only wanted to stay there, if possible. She requested a lamp be placed on his night table that he could allow to burn all night. She then waxed eloquent about him and gave some family news and other details.

We are to be here for about a fortnight longer I think, and oh, he is so wonderful, dear Mr^s. Whitmore, & so beautiful, & so good & so lovable. Are you seeing the autobiography as it comes out twice a month in the North American Review?

Somebody—Miss Mary Bushnell—has just sent 2 books to Mr. Clemens asking him to autograph them for Mr^s. Slayter’s fair. The Prince & Pauper—& The Yankee at the Court of King Arthur. I mention it for I thought Hattie might like to know.

I’m not ponderously well in these days; Jean has been in very bad shape during the past year, & the strain of the great anxiety made me collapse about 3 weeks ago. So I hope you’ll tell Hattie that I’d have written her about those auto-ed books—only just now I don’t write 2 letters where one will do [MTP].

Katharine B. Clemens wrote from Gore’s Landing, Ontario to Sam.

We have been disappointed all summer for having missed the possible chance of having seen you at Jamestown. Having promised to visit some friends in Michigan we were obliged not come this way and then on account of Jim’s family at Coburg, we found ourselves up here.

Jim had to hurry back to his patients and he left me and the children till November. This is a charming, quaint spot, with an old stage going to and coming daily from Coburg....We are enjoying your Autobiography in the North American Review [MTP].

Clara Marshall wrote from NYC to beg for money to publish her book [MTP].

October 10 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

There was noble dictating this morning. But the King is growing restless here. He wants his playmates & his intellectual associations—mostly the playmates, I think though. He is intellect enough for himself. No, that’s a mistake. After luncheon the King couldn’t think how to “put in the time”. He aimlessly looked about for a book, & then I thought of “Madame Butterfly”. But first I told him a little about John Luther Long & how when it came out in the Century he was so moved by it that he wrote out his strong feeling to Long. The first time Long arrived in N.Y. he went to the Century office & hunted out AB & since that day the friendship has kept right on blossoming. The King walked up & down the living room while I talked & he was touched when I quoted the beginning of a recent letter from Long to AB. “How that is nize [?] Paine beloved, that you sent me those letters.” Tonight at dinner the King said he had read “that beautiful, beautiful story, & it is perfect. There is no flaw in it. There is no word to be changed. He makes you see a country you are a stranger to, & he makes you suffer as if you had been in the story yourself.” Later he said that he hadn’t read Purple Eyes yet & that he wouldn’t read it for anything. His delight was half pain. The King went early to bed for Nancy & Tribly were here & the children began to romp. He can’t abide romping—purposeless romping [MTP TS 132-133]. Note: Madame Butterfly (1903) by John Luther Long (1861-1927); “Purple Eyes,” Century Magazine (July 1898). Collected in Madame Butterfly. See Gribben 418-19.

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: The visit to Onteora; dinner at Mary Mapes Dodge's; Clemens's method of quieting the racket at the table; some of the practical jokes which Dean Sage played on Joe Twichell [MTP Autodict2].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam about the Mechanical Cashier stock and Charles Fairchild's offer to sell Sam more of his own stock. Ashcroft included a lot of details but observed that "At present you have $40,000 of the stock and $16,000 of the bonds, the whole thing having cost you $16,000." He advised, "Please write and tell me to tell Fairchild that you don't want any of his stock. I will do so very gently and courteously" [MTP].

Samuel Brooks wrote from Manchester, England to Sam, seeking the exact words of a toast Clemens once made to "The Ladies." He also wanted to know what Sam thought of "Roosevelt's Spell reform Scheme" and gave many thanks for his books [MTP]. Note: on a separate slip in the file Lyon wrote. "that was in England at St Andrews dinner I think it was—in Guild Hall. Has no record of it. 33 or 34 years ago."

Henry Beech Needham of Success Magazine, for People's Lobby wrote to Sam. "Since writing you last week, I have been to Washington, and have seen the President. He has asked the governing committee of the People's Lobby to spend the evening with him when they are in Washington for the purpose of organization. As you know, there is some probability of his going to Panama." Would Sam be able to attend a meeting with Roosevelt on Oct. 22? [MTP].

October 10 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson. "Tell him I would rather only the one to Maude Adams be used" [MTP].

October 10-16 Tuesday – Sam wrote two aphorisms to Henry Darracott Allison, of saving work for tomorrows, and of being better to deserve but not receive credit than the other way around [MTP: from Allison's Dublin Days Old and New: New Hampshire Fact and Fancy (1952)].

October 11 Thursday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam began a letter to Mary B. Rogers that he added to on Oct. 12, 13, and 16.

Thursday.

6 pm

Dublin, Oct. 12/06.

It isn't right to pelt you with a letter so soon, dear pal, but there's been a cloud-lift today & I've got to jubilate with somebody or expire with satisfaction. Next, I will write Clara, & between you two I expect to quiet down & become rational again.

When I was arriving from Fairhaven the physician boarded the train—he was on the watch for me—& told [rest of page is cut off; section of next page is cut off leaving a few words on the right]

(You little rascal, if you had sent me without writing the part of the letter you wrote on the day & night I left Fairhaven with your victory over Harry, it would have discharged some valuable jollity into this gloom—sure!)

I will say to you & Harry (privately) that during the week that

At 1 today I put on fresh white clothes & drove—between two very real snow-storms—to a lunch-party at the house of a daughter of Professor Pumpelly—a lady-friend with much of your charm & about your age, & similarly jewelled (2 little children,) She has made several

7 p.m.

In the middle of that luncheon I got a mental-telegraphic shock, & said to myself, "Bad news is arriving at the house!" I knew something was arriving, & most likely had, in these days: "Twichell has fallen out of his pulpit & broken his neck—Clara has been run over by a cow—Harry has bankrupted Mary—at any rate something has gone wrong with someday."

But it wasn't so! As soon as I was home & in bed (afternoon-habit [on another page, in MBR's hand: I did not cut missing parts of this letter out—Uncle Mark did this himself—perhaps he was sad—MBR] at home but not elsewhere) Miss Lyon came up & reported. She brought your breezy & delightful letter (winner, after being so close to irremediable disaster, poor pal!) & Peterson's cablegram from Europe; & not even a rumor of trouble between Clara & the cow! Then Jean came up & sat on the bedside, & the last cloud vanished—

[section of letter cut out]

It is pathetic.

Presently she said, "But I am interrupting you, & will go—you are writing to Clara?"

"No, it is to my niece, my pal—stay where you are, & we will talk."

So she stayed, & was sad & subdued, but very gentle & sweet. Which wrung my heart, but threw me into a boiling internal rage—rage against brutal Nature & her hell-engendered crimes against the innocent & the unoffending—for neither your sister nor Jean has done anything to deserve the afflictions visited upon them.

10 p.m. As I had eaten luncheon I did not go to dinner, but I dressed & went down after dinner & finished reading the first half of Shakespeare's Julius Caesar aloud to Jean & Miss Lyon—that tremendous poem!—a poor enough preparation for sleep, certainly. I shall lose to-morrow; I lost to-day, & also yesterday. But it doesn't matter—there will be plenty Autobiography before we call the undertaker.

Yes, I can see the picture. I can see you quite clearly, flying around in your chaos & reducing it to order & symmetry. Ask Henry to tell you. There is no other way to keep you from wearing yourself out. I'm glad you beat him! the fact that I am fond of him these many many years doesn't seem to keep me from rejoicing when you skin him in those contests [MTP].

Note: Sam misdated the letter Thursday, Oct. 12, and the MTP shows it from Oct. 12 to the 17, but Oct. 12 was a Friday; subsequent additions are shown as "Next Day, 11 a.m.—Friday"; "9.30 a.m. Saturday"; and "Tuesday." Assumed then, that Sam had the correct day of the week in these segments and began the letter on Oct. 11, Thursday, making the dates Oct. 11 to Oct. 16.

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: From Susy's Biography [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Snow. Letter from Dr. Hunt containing cablegram from Dr. Peterson.

No dictating today. The King began it & then had to stop—it wouldn't come. But again I got the benefit of the lack of inspiration for he talked an hour & more—thundering out his detestations. He detests the stranger who applies to him for help. He detests the stranger who brings his idiotic reforms before the King's notice in an assinine [sic] letter. These creatures insult him & this morning for the first time in many weeks he wished the heavens would open & send down a bolt of lightning to split open his head. "There is always plenty of lightning, but such damned indiscrimination in the use of it." Whenever the King goes to the fresh batch of mail & opens stray letters he is bound to find something to throw him into a rage & make him curse the Human Race. He storms up & down the room & is so beautiful, that you love the torrents of blasphemy & the anger that produce that wondrous beauty.

He lunched with Handasyd Cabots today & Mrs. Cabot photographed him. (8 plates)

Tonight he read "Julius Caesar" again & standing under the light with his black cape on over his white clothes, he was lost in the wonder of the play & unconsciously acted it [MTP TS 133]. Note: Gribben adds using an older TS, a section not in this TS: "The King has been reading George Eliot's translation of Straus's [sic] Life of Jesus, & is amazed at the great care taken by Straus to trace the genealogy on the father's side. No one—apparently—not even George Eliot remembered that on the father's side he had God, & as the King said he could so easily say 'Papa up there, is enough for me'" [Gribben 673]. Gribben gives no page number.

October 12 Friday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam added to his Oct. 11 to Mary B. Rogers.

Next Day, 11 a.m.—Friday.

What a useful creature you are, Saccharin! When I've lost my sleep & can't dictate coherently & have to quit trying, I can turn for relief to you—I can entertain myself with scribbling incoherently to you, & you have to put up with it. Clara likewise.

Do you know, I'm practising for winter in the matter of clothes. Miss Lyon has ordered a very long gray overcoat to hide them when I am outside—on the street. The night of the great storm I drove to the village through the deluge & talked, in the basement of the church, to a housefull of wet farmers & their families (it's a gratis monthly function instituted by the ladies of the church) all clothed in sombre colors; & my spectral costume was the only cheerful object in that place. I meant to explain my clothes, but as I was passing to the platform Miss Fanny Dwight—summer-resorter, friend of ours, a person of extraordinary taste & wonderful judgment—halted me & whispered, “Mr. Clemens, you look just too sweet for anything!” I whispered back, “Miss Fanny, I was going to explain & justify these clothes, but in my opinion they don’t need it now.” My, but some girls do have the clear eye! Isn’t it so, Spontaneous C?

2 p.m. I’ve lost it! What shall I do? It was more butter . . . But never mind, I will think it up & tell you.

I’m lying abed to-day. I dictated only 10 minutes this morning—the mill wouldn’t go. I’m going out to dinner. But this is a special & beloved friend—otherwise I would keep my pledge.

I’m almost afraid to send you that Westminster. But I’ll do it, & you must forgive me. Which reminds me that you intimate that you came near not sending your letter, because of the pencil, etc. You mustn’t even think such criminal things! No matter what you write them with—a nail, if you choose—they’ll answer, don’t you doubt it [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Oct. 3 of O.W. Norton.

I am just leaving for home after the summer vacation—viz.,
21 Fifth Ave.
New York City A

The right address for your book when you send it; & thank you for it now in advance.

I’m not the least troubled about that mistake! You are the only bugler that will ever see the tale, & the rest of our 83,000,000 will never suspect that I’ve made a blunder. Next time, I’ll make a bugler do anything a 60-piece orchestra can, & you will see that the public will take it at par. When you get to be 70 you’ll know the human being as well as I do. / Sincerely Yours

I am writing a sea-tale in which I make a sailor fall from the garboard-strake & break his neck. You’ll see that a few profane & unreasonable salt-water experts will shed tears when they read about it [MTP].

Sam also replied to a (not extant) from Rudolph Foster, secretary White House, Washington, D.C. to decline an invitation from the President, as he was “bound by a New York engagement” for “that date” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a “Lobbying Letter” to Success Magazine.

There must have been a mistake. When asked for the use of my name in a good cause, I always say yes, but on the condition that I shall not be called upon at any time to do anything. And so I am a sleeping official on many a list. If I should try to do things in one case, I could not in fairness say no in the others, therefore I say no in every case. I have much work of my own to do, & not many months remaining to do it in, for I shall soon be needed in Heaven or elsewhere; wherefore I must confine myself strictly to my own work henceforth.

If I consented to the use of my name in the present case & forgot to add the usual “provided, etc.” it is my fault, my blunder; nevertheless—I beg of you—do not put me on any committees or expect of me any service, for I am 71, & henceforth shall devote such leisure moments as I can spare from more serious concerns, to prepare to meet - - - I do not quite know whom - - - but that is a detail which is not important & can be left to accident & circumstance. But I hope to be ready [MTP].

Plans were changed for move back to 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. for the winter some ten days earlier than planned. Packing for the began in earnest in the afternoon. In the evening Sam went to a dinner party at Franklin MacVeagh’s and wore his white suit [Oct. 13 to Mary Rogers].

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: James Redpath and the jayhawker chief at the Press dinner in Boston [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King came out of the study this morning with his gentlest smile on his face saying "Tell Agnes Repplier to go to Hell." and I said "Yes, I will." She is the president of the Contemporary Club of Philadelphia & is inviting him to go there & speak before that club & what others—Mr. Dana—couldn't do a year ago, she is confident that she can do now. But it is as the King says—she'll have to "go to Hell."

The dictating didn't work again. The King had a good night & wakened refreshed, but when he was about a quarter through his breakfast his eyes rested on some uncollected auto-ms. which he picked up & before he knew what he was about he was at work upon forming interlineations, forgetting his breakfast entirely & so stopping the proper working order of his "whole damn system." When Miss Hobby arrived he tried to dictate, but it wouldn't come. He walked up & down the living room—finally he said, "I wish Paine were here, he'd know the name of that damn jay hawker."

The country is beautiful, but we don't go out much, the winds blow so hard up on these Wuthering Heights, as the King calls this place, that to be out in it makes any tired nerves more ragged yet. But we're going home to N.Y.

Tonight the king dined with Mr. MacVeagh. I was invited too—but I could not go—a home engagement [MTP TS 134]. Note: Repplier invited Clemens on Sept. 7.

Alice W. Pearmain wrote to Sam, offering various news about Benjamin Howe, about to be engaged. Alice was building her country house and also building at Redding, Conn. Howe had heard that Sam was to build in Redding—was it true? If so, Howe wanted to be allowed to give an estimate—she gave his address and phone in NYC [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env. "Mrs. Pearmain's letter—preserve it. It contains Mr. Benjamin Howe's addresses.

October 13 Saturday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam added to his Oct. 11 and 12 to Mary B. Rogers.

9.30 a.m. Saturday

I have been editing this letter with the scissors—for I had put into it the very dismal news which I had spared you in that recent note. I went to that dinner-party at the MacVeagh's palace last night—in white clothes. All the others of both sexes—in their noblest evening costumery. (But I know all those people familiarly.)

It is a time of surprises.

The packing suddenly began yesterday afternoon & evening, & we are to land at home in New York at 6.30 p.m. next Wednesday evening—instead of 10 days later, as was the most recent previous plan. Clara will be—glad? Yes, but not entirely ready for us, perhaps. If you do not dutifully call me up, Thursday, & say good-morning, I shall be strongly tempted to call you & scold you [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King told Mr. MacVeagh last night that I couldn't accept his invitation "because there were a couple of young Bucks dining with Jean" & I had to "stay & protect her". It was too bad—but the Bucks were delightful, being Raphael Pumpelly & Gerry. We had a gay little dinner & then some metaphysical talk later.

This afternoon I had a lovely drive with Mrs. Dana & then a cup of tea with her & Milicent & Kate Hutchinson & Mrs. Collier. The talk ran upon the simplified spelling & Mrs. Dana gave us an irate & good talk on the English tongue & the forms it had gone through, while Mrs. Collier wrung her hands & deplored the complete destruction of the English language [MTP TS 135-136].

The New York Times, p. BR670, under "Topics of the Week" provided a short positive review of The $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories, published in Sept.

The American humorist is as busy as ever this Autumn, and the head of the guild of American humor, Mark Twain, still sets the key for fun. The latest Mark Twain book published by the Harpers, ... contains, of course, nothing that has not been published before; some of the copyrights covering the various contents date from the early seventies of the last century; but many of the selections here reprinted belong to their author's later years. These include his antivivisection argument, "A Dog's Tale," "Was it Heaven or Hell?" and "A Double-Barreled Detective Story,” one of the elaborate literary hoaxes Mark has perpetrated from time to time. The book also contains the recent “Eve’s Diary,” and such capital bits of genuine American humor as “A Telephonic Conversation,” “Italian Without a Master,” and that delightful alleged review of “Innocents Abroad” “from the London Saturday Review,” with which Mark gulled the readers of The Galaxy many years ago. There are some serious things in the book—not counting Mark’s ordinary seriousness, which it is not always well to take too seriously. One of these is a short biography of Mr. Clemens by Samuel Moffat; another is a poem written in memory of Mrs. Clemens.

Henry G. Bayer wrote from NYC to Sam. “I am indebted for your address to the ‘Fulton Monument Association’ of which I am, now, a Member of the Executive Committee.” Bayer’s task was to “form an American Committee of Honor owing to this International Exposition,” and requested to use Sam’s name for such a group [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the bottom of the letter: “Ans. / Dear Sir / I am quite willing that you shall put my name upon the Committee & shall regard it as an honor. / Very truly yours”

William Clemens Beans wrote on The Wheeling Telegraph (W. Va.) letterhead to Sam. Beans asserted in two enclosed articles from the Wheeling Register, that he did “not remember of having seen so many errors in the same space” as he had in Sam’s Autobiography. Bean’s grandfather was Abram Walton Clemens who he claimed “came from the same Western Pennsylvania town and locality your ancestor hailed from” [MTP]. Note: although there are several Abraham Clemenses in Sam’s family tree, this may have been Abraham (1769-1841) as he was the son of James Clemens and Hanna Walton, from Penn.

Rudolph Forster for Theodore Roosevelt wrote on White House notepaper to Sam that President Roosevelt had learned of the Oct. 22 and 23 meeting of the governing committee of the People’s Lobby and would be glad to receive members on the evening of Oct. 23. A separate slip, Forster wrote: “If you are to be here on Wednesday Oct. 24th, the President hopes you will take lunch with him at 1.30” [MTP]. Note: Sam was in NY on Oct. 24, and in Washington from Dec. 6 to 11.

Henry Beech Needham for People’s Lobby wrote to Sam announcing the Governing Committee meeting would be at 10 a.m. at the Raleigh Hotel, Wash. D.C. on Oct. 22. “Your attendance is imperative, as everything must be done to launch the movement in the best possible way” [MTP].

Thomas Augustine Daly (1871-1948) Philadelphia poet and writer, inscribed a copy of his 1906 book Canzoni : “To / Samuel L. Clemens, / Master Craftsman, / with the admiring regards / of his humble servant, / T.A. Daly / Oct. 13/’06” [Gribben 170].

October 14 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Mrs. William Cabot came out this afternoon for a quiet talk with me, recalling still more of the great depths of Gerry’s nature. Then Mrs. Pumpelly came in with Mrs. H. Cabot. The Pumpellys are leaving next week & expect to sail on Nov. 3rd for Italy. Thence they go down to Egypt for 6 weeks, then stop at Athens on their way back to Italy, where they expect to spend the rest of the winter in Capri.

Jean is in bad shape these days & the plan is fixed for our departure on Wednesday [MTP TS 136].

The Washington Post, p. B2, “Gossip of the Stage” reported a midnight supper in N.Y.C. for Henry B. Irving given by James K. Hackett. Sam attended along with George Ade, John Drew, Daniel Frohman, William Gillette, Nat Goodwin, Brander Matthews, Henry W. Savage, E.H. Sothern, Melville Stone, and Augustus Thomas. Clemens may have given some remarks, either formal or informal [Schmidt].

October 15 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Jean, 8 a.m. / The King dictated today & I went over to Keene & dentistry” [MTP TS 136].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Item from Susy's biography about Sour Mash & the flies—Livy Clemens' experiment for destroying the flies in the Hartford house—Soap-bubble item from Susy's biography; Clemens's comments—Clemens' experience in learning to ride-high bicycle—Letters regarding his fiftieth birthday [MTP Autodict2].

Harry V. Snead wrote from Flushing, NY to ask Sam for his autograph. Snead's grandfather was Capt. Walker R. Carter, who owned some Mississippi River steamboats, including the Robert E. Lee. His great grandfather was Henry M. Shreve, for whom Shreveport was named [MTP].

Claudius B. Spencer wrote on Central Christian Advocate, Kansas City, Mo. letterhead to ask Sam when Hannibal ceased be his home [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the note, "Winter of '52 or Spring of '53"

October 15 ca. – In Dublin, N.H. Sam replied to a (not extant) from Leigh Hunt at the St. Regis Hotel, N.Y.C. "I am ailing & must not venture out at night for the present, but I reach New York soon & will go and see you & T.P. & welcome you back" [MTP]. Note: possibly T.P. O'Connor.

October 16 Tuesday – In Dublin, N.H. Sam finished his Oct. 11, 12, 13 to Mary B. Rogers.

Tuesday

You hope you will come out of it "a better woman." You don't need it, Mary. You have the clean mind & the right heart, & this is a condition which is not really betterable. It is going to carry you far out of Harry's reach & mine. But I believe—I truly believe—we shall be allowed to call, sometimes, as the aeons drift by on their long course. St. Peter will sniff & say—

"Damn that mobile, throw it over the battlements!"

Angel on Duty:

"It isn't a mobile, my lord, it's brimstone. It's that over-roasted pain that comes begging around every century smelling the place up, and—"

"What do they want?"

"To see Mary Rogers."

"Oh, we can't be always bothering with those cinders. Give them a bucket of ice & throw them over the balusters."

"But my lord, they haven't been admitted far as much as three centuries, now. It is quite pitiful. And really the old one is very nice, & he does want to see his pal very bad."

Peter (touched):

"Oh, well, let him in—I remember the old wreck, & he is very nice—but heave the young one over."

"But my lord, the young one isn't so very very bad; they say there's worse ones down there."

"Oh, tell it to the marines! Still, in the circumstances . . . where is Mary?"

"Thirteenth floor, your Highness."

"Jesus H.! my, but she is a swell!"

"It is even so, my lord. A whole flat to herself, & doesn't associate with any but archangels."

"Ah, well, we have to strain a point for that kind. Say—does she want to see those stokers?"

"Says she does."

"Certainly there's no accounting for tastes. Send them up."

"Passenger-lift, my lord?"

"Oh, h—alifax, no! Freight-lift, or let them climb. And say—tell them that if they ever come here again I'll heave them in amongst the Presbyterian missionaries & keep them there to all eternity!"

Take warning, Mary. If you go & play your hand for a floor or so higher, we'll never get a glimpse of you again after this life.

Your affectionate uncle [MTP].

Sam also wrote again on Tuesday night to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Dear Pal, there is nothing to write about but dismalnesses, & they would only distress you—so I will wait. I did not know it until 8 this evening, when I had been in the house 24 hours—then I got the history of the last 10 days' happenings.

I will write when there is something cheerful to say. Meantime please dash me off a letter, Wasp, & put as many jabs & jibes & sarcasms in it as you have in stock. The more the better. Blow me a refreshing breeze! / Affectionately your uncle [MTP].

Sam also replied to (not extant) from Louise Brownell Saunders in Clinton, N.Y., touched that Louise had named her daughter after the late Susy Clemens.

Your moving letter has reached me—& my heart—& finds a grateful welcome. It is a deep pleasure to me to know that you think I am writing worthily of Susy—& her mother—that beautiful & inspiring & pathetic theme. So rare they were! I think they left not many of their lofty rank in the world when they quitted it. I wish, with you, that Livy could have known that your child was to bear Susy's name & keep her dear memory green in your heart.

I thank you, thank you, for your letter. [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Oct. 9 from Katharine B. Clemens (Mrs. James Ross Clemens) in Ontario, Canada

Dear Cousin Katherine: / Your letter has loitered a week, but has reached me at last. We have occupied this house five months, & I think we shall return to it next year, for it is charmingly situated among the hills & overlooks a noble landscape; & as for peaceful & reposeful seclusion, it has it, our nearest neighbors not being within sight.

Clara is at home in New York; she took a house in Norfolk, Conn., & didn't come here, either last summer or this. We are breaking up, now, and leaving for home (21 Fifth avenue), two days hence.

I hope to find your Vogue article there, & shall be glad to see it. Our printed mail-matter doesn't come here, but accumulates all summer.

I think that in the spring we shall begin building a house near New York—therefore we shall want to be far away—even farther than this place, part of the time—& so if it weren't for the Autobiography (which requires the presence of a stenographer & another girl (secretary) []), I should certainly pay you a visit up there in Canada; but I'm too old to travel with a horde.

Please kiss Jim for me when you see him; & remember that I am your affectionate cousin [MTP]. Note: Sam rather regularly drops the closing parenthesis.

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Reminiscences of Charles Dudley Warner & Uncle Remus (Joel Chandler Harris)—Anecdote of Jim Wolfe & the wasps [MTP Autodict2; MTE 136-39].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens is always so distressed over the sight of open trunks & packing that he wanted to run away to town as soon as he heard that we were to go by the 17th or 18th. I couldn't have him go—for Jean is unmanageable & I must have his authority over her, so I begged him to give me a chance to see how much of the packing could be done out of his sight. All the books have been boxed in the servants' sitting room, all the trunks have been packed in rooms where he never goes & tomorrow morning he will leave at 6:30 for Boston. Gerald & Gladys came in for tea & the great dear King came down to see them & he read us an extract from a letter to Mary Rogers [MTP TS 136-137].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam. "To hear is to obey. I have changed your address so the periodicals will go to 21 Fifth Avenue after today" [MTP].

October 17 Wednesday – Sam took "The long railway journey from Dublin" N.H. to N.Y.C. which he later wrote, "destroyed me for 7 whole days!" [Oct. 24 to Emilie Rogers].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "This morning the King left early for Boston & he was in a dear mood. / Jean left by way of Keene. I took her over & put her on the train" [MTP TS 137].

James MacArthur of Harper's wrote to Sam, enclosing a clipping from a Glasgow, Scotland newspaper about Mark Twain's autobiography that he thought would please Sam. From the article, "If the work as a whole turns out to be up to sample, it will be a masterpiece" [MTP].

Henry Beech Needham of Success Magazine for People's Lobby replied to Sam, having rec'd Sam's of Oct. 12. Needham apologized for his "unwarranted attempts to draft you into active service. I understand perfectly the terms on which you gave us the use of your name." He wrote "it would be a very great help" however, if Clemens could be in Washington on Oct. 23 and go with the group to the White House that evening [MTP]. Note: Sam did not go to Washington until Dec.

Benjamin O'Chiltree wrote an unusual fan letter from Baltimore, Md. to Sam.

Writing this letter is one of the pleasantest duties I have to perform before leaving for "Hell or Hadleyburg"—which the doctor tells me must be soon now.

In fact I'm living beyond my time—because he said Oct 15 was my last day "on live"—The only reason I didn't die on that date was that I wanted to read your latest story in Harpers. Some people see Naples and die—I prefer to read Mark Twain & die. I've never seen Naples,—and don't expect to. I've read almost everything you've written, and when I finish your whole output I'll give up seeing Naples and die happily without that privilege.

But——

I want to thank you for all the pleasure your books have given me during many years of confinement to my room. Life would frequently have been dull indeed had it not been for the companionship of Huck Finn, Col. Sellers, et al.

When I get to Hell the greatest torture that I will have will be the possible knowledge that you shall have written something else I shall not be permitted to read. / Yours gratefully ...[MTP].

J.P. Tower of St. Jerome's Rectory wrote from Hyattsville, Md. to confess to Sam that he'd read a portion of his Autobiography to his Roman Catholic parishioners last Sunday. He offered God's blessings on Sam and his daughters [MTP].

October 18 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Sack-Cloth & Ashes will have a good home with a Mr. Fisher—a clerk in Mr. Allison's shop. The dear little cats have been distraught for 2 days now, for they sense the coming of something.

I reached New York at 9 this evening, fetching along the cook & the waitress, Mary & Katherine, & AB met me at the station. Bless him! He cabbied the girls & then we climbed into one & he told me all the news as we drove down Fourth Avenue. At home I found the King in bed, & so darling. He has shifted into his study for a bedroom, for the old bedroom is to be made into a billiard room [MTP TS 137].

Howard C. Bronson wrote from NYC to see if he might "persuade" Sam to be a guest at a dinner at the Hotel Astor by the American Music Publishers Assoc. on Friday evening at 6:30 pm. for Mr. T.P. O'Connor [MTP].

October 19 Friday – Sam's notebook: "19th Oct. '06. This is what Katy is celebrating as her 'anniversary.' We also celebrate it, cordially. She has been with us 26 years" [NB 48 TS 5].

Agnes L. Brown wrote from Ottawa, Ontario Canada to Sam appreciating his article on Howells. She sent Sam two books, The Cape Breton Giant by “Mr. Gillis” and another unnamed [MTP]. Note: Gillis not in Gribben.

Chris Healy wrote from NYC to Sam. Healy wrote he was an “Irish admirer” who had “traveled 4000 miles mainly to see you,” and requested he call to pay respects. As a boy he was dying in a Liverpool hospital until they gave him a copy of HF to read. Since then he had read most of Twain’s books [MTP].

Loudermilk & Co., Rare books, Wash. D.C. wrote to ask which of his books contained “The Invalid’s Story”? [MTP]. Note: At the top in light ink, “Answd. Nov 26”

Charles W. Stoddard wrote from Monterey, Calif. to Sam. “Dear Mark. / Do you remember Ina Coolbrith, the California poet, Heart’s [sic Harte’s] great friend and mine? / She lost everything she had in the world by that S.F. fire. Her friends here in California are hoping to find a home for her...” and he asked for photographs with autographs that might be auctioned for her benefit [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the bottom of the letter “4 of Gessford’s photo”

Chapters from “My Autobiography—IV” ran in the N.A.R. p.705-16.

October 20 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam inscribed a photo of himself in a rocking chair to Josephine S. Hobby: “Let us save to-morrows for work. / For / Miss Hobby— / Oct. 20, 06.” [MTP].

October 21 Sunday – In N.Y.C. Sam went “Sabbath-breaking” to Urban H. Broughton’s, and beat him five out of seven games at billiards [Oct. 22 to Mary Rogers].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “All day it has rained hard & Mr. Clemens went out to the Broughtons to play billiards. He is restless & finds a great emptiness in life. He doesn’t like this house & finds no comfort outside of his own room. My own little six sided room is the only place I care for—that & the King’s room” [MTP TS 137-138].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Harriet E. Whitmore. Unable to go to Hartford this week for the 30th anniversary of the Saturday Morning Club, the event was postponed to Sat. Nov. 3. Sam would take Harriet’s suggestion and arrive on Friday, Nov. 2; Lyon was to accompany him. Clara was well but not so Jean [MTP].

Jean Clemens, also now at 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y., wrote to a friend, Nancy D. Brush. Jean was going the next day to look over Katonah, N.Y., an hour and a half by train; she would go there Wed. Oct. 25 to stay and be treated by Dr. Amut. Jean felt like she needed a higher altitude than N.Y.C., having felt “lifeless and tired almost all the time” in the City. She was looking forward to tennis and croquet at Katonah. She hoped Nancy would stop there on her way to Italy [MTP].

George Barr Baker (1870-1948), journalist with The Delineator, editor at Everybody’s Magazine, author, and activist later connected with international relief agencies, wrote on Players note paper to Sam about a young girl who would become an Angelfish, Dorothy Butes [MTP]. Note: see Dorothy’s letter Oct. 25.

Note: in his 1925 reminiscences, Some Memoirs of a Very, Very, Very Old Dutch Treater, Julian Street writes: “Baker was liked by everyone, but at that time no one suspected the extraordinary versatility which has since made him president of the First National Bank, Professor of Dramatic Art at Yale University and Dictator of the Republican Party.” Baker was later publicist for President Herbert Hoover.

Isabel Lyon also replied for Sam to the day's letter from George Barr Baker "I am seldom absent from this house in the afternoons, & shall be glad to see her any afternoon; if she will name the hour by telephone I will make it a point to be at home [MTP].

October 22 Monday – In the a.m. at 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.).

I went Sabbath-breaking to Broughton's, & beat him five games out of seven. Clara tried to stop me from going on such an errand, but I explained to her that She threatened to write you & ask if my explanation had any truth in it, but I said I wasn't afraid, & dared her to go on. I said pals always stand by each other, right or wrong. That was to discourage her, & it may be sufficient. And it may not: there is no telling. However, there is no difficulty in the matter; if she ever brings it up, by speech or pen, all you need to do is to say that whatever I said was true. She will believe you, & that will put me all right & comfortable again.

The fact is, I have to lead a life of chicane & deception with this end of the family, although it is against my nature & principles; & whatever help you can afford me, most dearest pal, will be appreciated, & I will do as much for you whenever there is a chance.

(Indeed she did write you a letter & she gave it to me to read & mail, but it seemed to me safest to suppress it—except the part wherein she said "I was very sorry you did not come in, the day you brought my father home, & let us have the pleasure & privilege of knowing the 'Mary' he praises so much & so cordially." Clara is a dear & lovable child, but troublesome. You will like her.)

Jean departs day after to-morrow. It will add to the already sufficient solitude of this house. She doesn't go far, yet she will seem a whole light-year distant—if that isn't too extravagant a figure to use in this connection.

I am enclosing a letter from a Catholic priest. I think it's lovely. (But it's only a bait—to fish a letter out of you; we throw away most letters, but Jean wants this one; & so, it's like that pasementry gown that that charitable woman gave to the Californian sufferer & had to send for it again because it belonged to another person.)

Bedad I'm going to have the privilege of attending the wedding myself! I got the invitation in Dublin—and I took it for friendly & genuine, too, not merely artificial courtesy, for I liked Miss Kane, & I noticed that if she didn't like me she didn't say so. I had a Hartford engagement, of 30 years' standing, for the 27th, but Miss Lyon undertook to get a postponement, & she has succeeded, & now I am free. October 27th, 30 years ago, 20 or 25 girls of 18 & 20 years old & thereabouts formed the Saturday Morning Club (essays & debates) & at their request I framed their rules of procedure & helped them organize. For these services they made me a member & I am a member yet—the only male one they have ever admitted. (But always when the debates began they turned me out.)

I shall see them again. How fresh & blooming & beautiful they were in that far-flown day! Some are dead now, the others are grandmothers. We've got it postponed to November 3^d.

Hang those two books, they are not unpacked yet—but they will be, before long. Harry will read one of them with interest, because it is history, & is authentic; & you are to burn the other without examination.

Noon. It certainly is a vexatious world: after all this fuss & trouble & postponement it appears that I am not to get to the wedding at last, unless the impossible shall happen in my favor. But you will wish the pair prosperity & happiness for me, won't you, Mariechen? / Affectionately your uncle Mark [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Jean & I went out to look over Katonah today.

This morning the King had a beautiful letter from a Roman Catholic priest, saying that he had used a part of the 3rd installment of the autobiography as a text for his sermon. It was the part about Susy Clemens's questions about eternity. The King cries out against the Church of Rome as a body, but its separate priests he has love & respect for—so his reply to this one was very beautiful.

Dear me, this morning a Miss Doty from No. 3 Fifth Avenue came in asking for an interview. She was not over pleased when the King declined to give it, or to let her use the stories she had heard him tell there. After she left I told the King some gossip I had heard—gossip going around "The Players"—about other quill drivers of No. 3 [Charlotte Teller Johnson's address on Fifth Ave.]. Mr. Paine told me. [on separate sheet of paper]

 Oct. 22. The King repeated the gossip to the one gossiped about
 Oct. 23. I was summoned to her presence—but didn't go.
 Oct. 24. She came in & the incident is now closed—for it was all talked over. The King sent for me to have me give particulars. I gave what I dared [MTP]. Note: the information of Oct. 22 to 24 on the separate sheet involved the rumors about Clemens seeing "too much" of Charlotte Teller Johnson, who lived in a sort of artist commune around the corner at 3 Fifth Avenue. These notes are separate from the regular entries.

And, from her Oct. 23 entry about this evening:

Last evening the King and C.C. went to see a first performance of "Cymbeline". William Winter invited them to sit in his box for his son Jefferson Winter is playing part. I asked the King about it & he said that "Viola Allen was enchanting & as full of grace as a cat." Winter was satisfying to look at too, because he was so very bad. G.G. [E.C.?] Stedman was in the box too, but the King cannot endure him, he thinks Stedman is an ass along certain lines. "He can be as bad as Gilder is at his worst, when Gilder tries to be witty."

Hill writes: "The rumors concerned Clemens and Miss Teller, who remembered that,

Mr. Clemens, much agitated, told me he had heard people were gossiping about his seeing so much of me....When I insisted upon knowing just what the gossip was, he sent for his secretary, Miss Lyons, who said that someone at the Players' Club had asked Mr. Paine (whom I never met,) who this Miss Teller was that Mark Twain was seeing so much of.

Clemens asked Miss Teller to move from the neighborhood, but she refused, pointing out that he was as old as her own grandmother; but Miss Lyon, who said she told her employer only "what I dared" of the gossip, might quite justifiably have felt that her meddling was improper. Perhaps she also reflected about what gossip might say regarding her own proximity to Clemens if it could vilify a woman who lived several houses away" [156].

Lystra writes: "Circumstantial evidence points to Lyon as the source of the rumors" [101]. Note: Lystra does not elaborate.

October 22-November 10 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Henry Mills Alden [MTP: Harper's Weekly Magazine Dec. 15, 1906]. See letter under Dec. 15 entry.

October 23 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dihdwo Twe, a Liberian who visited Sam several times and was deeply interested in the Congo reform movement. Sam dictated the letter for Twe to use as an introduction to a pamphlet calling on the world to help the Congo. Basically, Sam wrote, the human race is made up of humbugs; he felt Twe should deal with the human race as it is, not as he wished it to be—it had "no desire for uncomfortable truths, no appetite for them..." etc. [MTP].

Also about this day Sam wrote per Lyon to Mrs. H.R. Mayo Thorne of Baltimore. The secretarial memo:

Write the Baltimore woman to look for the person who telephoned you & said he had telephoned me. He couldn't possibly get my telephone address. There's no way.

asked me to say for him that it is all a mistake he has made no Baltimore engagement & makes no engagements outside of N.Y. that can by any possibility be avoided. That the person who proposed to have had speech with him me by telephone was either a deceiver himself or was the victim of a deceiver [MTP].

Sam went to 26 Broadway, the offices of H.H. Rogers, and learned that Emilie Rogers was expected home the next day. He would write her then [Oct. 24 to E. Rogers].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mrs. Crane arrived today.

[see excerpt from this entry placed in Oct. 22 entry]

The King dictated to me a long & fine letter to Dihdwo Twe, the young African who has written an article on causes of the failure of Xtianity in Africa. The article is a crude affair, but full of meat. I read it with great interest & the King was interested too, as shown by his careful reply to Twe [MTP TS 139].

Roland Holt wrote from 44 E. 78th Street NYC to invite Sam to "a most informal little dinner to celebrate the return of my sisters," Thursday Nov. 1 at 7:30 p.m. The Hewitts and Mrs. Paul L. Ford would be there [MTP].

J.P. Tower wrote from Hyattsville, Md. to thank Sam for his note of appreciation for Tower's words from the pulpit that appreciated Sam's love for Susie [MTP].

October 24 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Emilie R. Rogers.

Dear Mrs. Rogers, it is lovely of you! Yes, Mr. Coe is the very man. He will know the exact size of the Fairhaven table, & can duplicate it. When he examines this room I think he will say it is large enough: it is 15 feet wide by 18 long, & the 18 can be increased to 18.6 if necessary, by removing a bookcase.

The long railway journey from Dublin last Wednesday destroyed me for 7 whole days!—both mentally & physically; & there's been heart-burn enough to almost move me to take out a fire-policy. Indeed, to use Uncle Henry's phrase, I've had a hell of a week. At last, the week culminated last night with an assault of a disease I am not much subject to—depression of spirits. But I am all right, this morning, in all ways, & your letter comes at a happy time, & I thank you sincerely.

I played billiards with Mr. Broughton last Sunday & had a quite high & holy time.

Clara has been in here to shake her engagements in my face & prove to me that her time is already worth a thousand dollars a month. That doesn't disgruntle me. I am tired working, anyway, & will knock off & be supported. Her illustrious master, Leschititzki, is dying in Vienna, & her conscience is urging her to go over & be at the funeral, but I am persuading her that she would feel very funny if she attended his & missed mine. I guess that that settled it & she won't go; for naturally she wouldn't miss mine for anything.

I did not know Miss Lyon was going to write you, but if I had known it I would have said "go right ahead, Mrs. Rogers will not be offended."

I was at 26 B'way yesterday & learned that you are expected to-day. When you are rested I will come & gamble-off that quarter I won of you. / With love to you both ... [MTHHR 618-19].

It was time for Jean Clemens to leave the family for her new sanitarium in Katonah, New York, about an hour to an hour and a half from N.Y.C.

Jean's diary: It was desperately hard to leave Father and Clara in order to come out to a totally strange place. I tried my hardest not to cry before them, but as the time of departure began to approach I found it growing more and more difficult to restrain myself, especially when Clara began to cry, too, then it was really hopeless. Poor little Father seemed to feel badly, too, and the whole business was perfectly horrible to me. I wanted to cry hard whenever I spoke to anyone and yet at the same time I wanted to refrain from showing my feelings too plainly [MTP: Huntington Library].

Trombley writes:

Isabel accompanied a weeping, despondent Jean to the train station, and with Jean's personal maid, Anna Sterritt, in tow, secured their luggage and saw them off safely on the 11:40 a.m. train. The sadness of the scene deeply affected Isabel, who called it “heart stretching to have her so & to see her go.” Father and sister did not accompany Jean and Isabel to the station, choosing instead to remain at home [21 Fifth Ave.]. Despite her hysterics before Jean’s departure and her tears that afternoon, Clara quickly recovered and performed that evening for an audience in Irvington, New York. Her little sister would be a resident at Hillbourne Farms for fifteen months [MT Other Woman 119-20]. Editorial emphasis.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Miss Edison, a sweet young violinist who is to play a violin obligato with C.C. lunched here” [MTP TS 139].

Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote from Ponkapog, Mass. to ask Sam if he’d returned to NY and would he be there on the 9 or 10 of Nov.? If so there would be a chance to give him “a night’s shelter under your expensive roof.” Aldrich had a bit of business to transact and would go with Sam to Alden’s birthday reception if he was going [MTP].

Dorothy Butes wrote from the Hotel Majestic, NYC to Sam.

I am writing you this little note to tell you how very very much I have enjoyed reading your books. I first read Tom Sawyer last September, then Huckleberry Finn, and sat in some out of the way corner where I could chuckle over them to my heart’s content. I read “A Tramp Abroad,” at boarding-school in Switzerland last year and so preyed upon my mind that I looked upon myself as the “Tramp,” and why much to be pitied. As soon as we returned, in August, I flew to the Library for “The Innocents Abroad,” and for several weeks afterwards, when ever the librarian saw me approaching, she assumed a most lugubrious aspect, I think I must have hurt her feelings by always going to Mark Twain’s bookcase!” She professed love for the US and only wanted to live in NYC or Bar Harbor Maine in the summer. She signed the letter “Your deeply interested little reader” [MTP]. Note: not in Cooley. Butes became an Angel Fish.

J.M. Goggin wrote from El Paso, Tex. to Sam asking whether the Pamela Goggin who married Samuel Clemens was Twain’s grand or great grandmother [MTP]. Note: on the back in pencil: “Could be your G.G. M. & probably was—doesn’t know which.” Pamela Goggin (1775-1844) married Samuel B. Clemens (ca. 1770-1805) in 1797. These were Sam’s paternal grandparents.

Charlotte Teller Johnson wrote a note (delivered, not mailed) to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens— I went at once to Mr Sears so that he might destroy at once any copy of that letter. He asked me why you had withdrawn it, and I said that you did not wish to be involved in the gossip which was concerned with me. He is, of course, under the impression that you believe the gossip. That gives the final bit of logic to the situation—a sort of finale that I had not foreseen when I went to his office. It takes a great deal to make me see things / Very sincerely... [MTP]. Note: Joseph Hamblen Sears.

October 25 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers now in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Mariechen dear, it must be a Latin word, as it isn’t in the Unabridged. The U. has only “Accipient (obsolete) a receiver.”

You shouldn’t come to town & not come to see a body. However, I wasn’t at home to-day. I was taking exercise—on foot. Daily! I walk to the Waldorf, sit down a spell & talk to the people, then walk back to 21. To-day I meant to spread clear out to the new Piazza hotel, but at 45th street Miss Margorie Clinton & a young Mrs. Rogers came along in a mobile and gave me a lift down to Dr. Rice’s, where I had an errand. I am waiting till Weston gets to Chicago, then I shall walk out to San Francisco & make him ashamed. He is vain of his age; whereas he is but a lad. I was already 3 years old when he was born.

Do please try and smooth it over with young Miss Walker for me; I am a little afraid to try it myself just yet. I engaged her company for the Virginia reel, then ran off to New York the day before the ball. You can tell her I had to go because I thought it was going to rain. She is very young & will not know but that’s so.

Don't you come to town again & act so! [MTP]. Note: Margery Hamilton Clinton (1887-1980), angelfish and Tuxedo Park neighbor of Mary Benjamin Rogers. This mention of Margery predates the earliest known correspondence between Sam and Margery, ca. Jan. 1, 1907; it may be the day of their first meeting.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today Jean went out to Katonah. It was heart stretching to have her go & to see her go. / C.C. sang out at Irvington [MTP TS 139-140].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Charles S. Fairchild that Clemens could not take advantage of Fairchild's offer to sell some of his personal stock in the Mechanical Cash Register Co. and in fact would like to sell some of his holdings to place elsewhere. Ashcroft sent Sam a copy [MTP].

George B. Harvey and Clarence Mackay sent an engraved invitation to Sam to meet T.P. O'Connor, MP at a dinner at the Metropolitan Club on Thursday, Oct. 25 at 8 p.m. [MTP].

October 25, after – Charlotte Teller Johnson wrote to Sam. "fortunately Mr Frohman has been out of town and so I have not used the card you sent me from Dublin. I shall simply go to his office directly when I decide that there is reason for my meeting him personally. / Sincerely... [MTP]. Note: Sam's card is in the file; written on it, "Dear Charles Frohman: / Will you do me the personal favor to see the bearer of this on business? Ys ever/ Mark Twain"

October 26 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

It is with mighty pleasure that I record the fact that you will spend Nov. 9th & 10th (& as many days thereafter as you can spare), under this roof. We will gather some more stags together & eat, drink & get drunk, understanding that on some happy to-morrow we die & are likely to be damned. I am very very glad you are coming, old man [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

Mr. T.P. O'Connor, Mr. Leigh Hunt, Mr. Rogers & Mr. Gilder dined with the King tonight. He is going to have a series of Buck dinners.

C.C., R.G. [Rodman Gilder], Mrs. Crane & I dined at the Brevoort & then arrived late at the Astor Theatre where we went to see "Cymbeline". It is as the King says, Viola Allen she is utterly charming, beautiful, graceful, moving & satisfying & as the dear King says, Jefferson Winter is a delight too, because he couldn't be worse.

Jean likes Katonah. She says by telephone she's going to play tennis & she has been fishing with the Doctor [MTP TS 140]. Note: it was at this dinner that Hunt invited Clemens to spend the winter in Egypt.

Edwin J. Loeb wrote from Los Angeles, Calif. to Sam.

If this note ever reaches you, pray have mercy on my soul. If it doesn't, may God forgive me, since you won't.

Within a few weeks I expect to start out on a trip around the world, with the hope of getting there as my only asset. I am anxious to see if this little joke, this poor little joke, can reach its destination with the same resources to back it up.

Hoping the postal authorities can take a joke as well as knowing how far to carry one, I remain / Sadly yours [MTP]. Note: the "joke" was, he only addressed the note to "Mark Twain" without any country, state, city or street.

J.W. George, manager of American Telephone and Telgraph Co., NYC wrote to Sam.

On October 20th we were requested by Mrs. H.R. Mayo Thorne of Baltimore to reach you by telephone at the Lotos Club. The connection was however established in error with the wrong telephone and the party reached in New York misrepresented himself.

You will doubtless recall having received a letter from Mrs. Thorne covering the alleged conversation, which never occurred as far as you are concerned, and we beg to take this means of explaining a matter which I trust has caused you no annoyance [MTP].

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam enclosing a copy of the contract between him and Frederic Chapin, the musical composer, for the performance of P&P. Marbury expressed optimism that the performance would do “a large business.” Would Sam sign and return the contract? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on letter: “Mr. Clemens thinks the contract which Miss Marbury has made is excellent.”

October 27 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

The King came down while Mrs. Crane & I were at breakfast to say that Mr. Leigh Hunt has invited him to go to Egypt for the winter—to spend his days & weeks on the Nile, & to take with him whomsoever he will. It will mean to take with him a stenographer & a biographer. He couldn’t take me because I’m needed at this base of action, although he says he wishes to take me. I’m so stunned.

The King went out to a wedding—Miss Kane’s wedding to Mr. Walker’s, at Tuxedo, & late this afternoon there came a telephone message to say that he would stay over night.

C.C. came back from Katonah, much depressed over the place & the great pathos of the situation [MTP TS 140-141].

Sam spent the night with Harry and Mary Rogers in Tuxedo Park, N.Y. He “sat up in the club & sipped whisky punches & told lies until half past one in the morning” [Oct. 29 to Jean]. Note: this was after he attended a wedding in Tuxedo—see IVL’s journal entry this date. Sam did not go to Hartford to speak at the Saturday Morning Club as reported by Fatout p. 676.

October 28 Sunday – Clemens was still in Tuxedo Park, spending time with Harry and Mary Rogers.

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

The city—ever since I have been here I have been mourning for the bloom, the faint delicate bloom of the hills, a bloom that can be banished away for a whole winter, by one contact with—the city. It is as AB said, “In the mountains there was romance in the very air, but here we must make it.” Here there are no days that “seem to make clocks almanacks & histories of no account”. No, the days are only clocks & almanacs.

The King did not return today [MTP TS 141].

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam.

Mr. Arnold Daly is going to do a very interesting programme beginning November 5th. He proposes to have an invitation matinee on November 7th especially for the prominent literary people in New York. Can you be present at 2.30 on Thursday, Nov. 7th? I know the plays which he proposes giving and I assure you that they are well worth your attention. Will you let me know whether I shall have Mr Daly reserve places for you for this occasion? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “I think I’ll say yes to that.”

October 28-31 – Sometime between these dates George C. Riggs and Kate Douglas Riggs sent Sam and Clara Clemens an invitation to meet Mr. & Mrs. Forbes Robertson, Sunday, Nov. 4 at 9:15 p.m. [MTP]. Note: possibly Johnston Forbes-Robertson (1853-1937), English actor, considered the finest Hamlet of the Nineteenth Century. Robertson got his start by playing second fiddle to the great Sir Henry Irving.

October 29 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

I am so glad, Jean dear, that you are so pleased with Katonah; you will be sure to improve there. I caught cold at Tuxedo Park—I don't know why or how, for I took many precautions, & even sat up in the club & sipped whisky punches & told lies until half past one in the morning. And yet, notwithstanding, I got a cold & had to stay over Sunday. But it's gone now, I think.

Katy went to the hospital with a cold, but she is home again & well. John Howells is to dine here this evening, & another gent tomorrow evening. And the billiards table arrives tomorrow, & I shall be very glad.

I shall come out as soon as this cold is certainly gone—& on the first fine day, I hope, whether it is gone or not./ With lots and lots of love, / Father [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King came back this morning & has the seeds of a cold within him. He is still full of the Egyptian trip & has thought of Ashcroft as a companion and of Mr. Twichell. Mr. John Howells was here for dinner & later played mandolin. R.G. [Rodman Gilder] came in & capered; he always does until he sinks into seriousness.

J.H. is the most polished of young creatures, a pity he is so small & with a face like a Greek mask—which seems always to stand for culture [MTP TS 141].

I. Newbury wrote from the Portland Hotel, London to ask Sam when his book on Christian Science would appear? [MTP].

October 30 Tuesday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Ralph W. Ashcroft, in care of the advertising agent for Canadian Pacific railway, Montreal: “Mr. Clemens is indefinitely bedridden with bronchitis & has been persuaded to give up the trip to Egypt entirely” [MTP]. Note: see Nov. 7 to Mary Rogers.

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Clemens plays practical joke on Jim Wolfe—wasps in his bed—From Susy's Biography—tributes to Clemens on his 50th birthday from Oliver Wendell Holmes to James Russell Lowell & Major-Gen. Franklin—Mr. Clemens not affected by it [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King's billiard table has been put into place today, but the King has cold & so was unable to make any use of it. Today he saw Mr. Ashcroft, who will go to Egypt as stenographer (he telephoned the word) and the King saw Dorothy Butes, a sweet little English girl, & he saw Leigh Hunt too, who has told him that he must “rough it” on the Nile.

Mr. Henschel was here for dinner and D. Gilder. Mr. H. told us how an operetta of Mr. Howells' & his, written many—25—years ago, is to be brought out within the year in London. He told some delightful stories of himself & others. The King went upstairs early & took a surreptitious rap at the billiard balls, but has he said he was going to bed—he had to do it, or be heard [MTP TS 141-142]. Note: George Henschel, conductor.

Reo Bennett wrote on Astor Theatre, NYC letterhead to ask Sam where he might “get some material on the Play-copyright subject that you were identified with a few years ago.” Bennett was trying to calculate what the royalties would be for all the heirs of Shakespeare, and thought that the fortunes of Rockefeller and Carnegie “would hardly be an afternoon's spending money for Shakespear's great, great Grand-child” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “George Haven Putnam of Copyright League.”

George C. Rohrs for the YMCA, NYC wrote to Sam. They were “getting up a minstrel show” and wondered if Sam would let him “know of some joke or comic thing to do suitable for a darky bride” [MTP].

Charles M. Skinner of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle wrote to Sam, enclosing a manuscript about “Alfred” whom he labeled “another Col. Sellers.” He wrote that he simply sent it for Sam's interest, not for revenge, criticism or any other reason [MTP].

October 31 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam was down with a bad cold.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today the King really has cold and today the King has given up the Egyptian trip, for he knows that instead of spending the winter in Egyptian sunshine, he'd "spend most of it in an Egyptian cemetery"—Still "There isn't much choice in cemeteries", he thinks. He has been reading Letters from Egypt, in which the bad cold uncertain climate is much dwelt upon & Mr. Hunt's words of "Roughing it," make the King loathe to give up his home comforts. He'd rather "lie between velvet sheets". I am so glad, so selfishly glad that he has given it up [MTP TS 142].

George W. Cable wrote to Sam.

This will be brought to you by Mrs. Hazen wife of Professor Hazen, (chair of history Smith College,) herself a Smith College alumna.

Mrs. Hazen has an errand to you from the college, and if you are resolved in advance not to respond favorably it would be best not to see her, for if you do you will either change your mind or shatter it [MTP]. Note: Charles Downer Hazen (1868-1941), historian, scholar, and author, including Europe since 1815 (1910), and Fifty Years of Europe 1870-1919 (1919).

George C. Riggs and Kate Douglas Riggs finished their Oct. 28 letter to Sam [MTP].

November – In N.Y.C. Sam inscribed a copy of Eve's Diary to Elbert Hubbard: "Truth is the most valuable thing we have. Let us economise it. Truly yours Mark Twain. To Elbert Hubbard, Nov./06." [MTP: Parke-Bernet Galleries Catlogs, 25 Feb. 1938, Item 40].

Henry Hahn, Sven Riars, Agnede Larsen, Cecilic Kiar, & Bassemig wrote from Copenhagen, Denmark for birthday wishes to Sam [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env. "Answered"; Lyon wrote "Answer / Dec 5"

Marie Fensen, Alexander Bauenzelnik, Henry Hahn, et al (4 others) wrote and signed a note to Sam. "Please accept our best wishes and kindest regards to your birthday from a little party of Denmark's youth, who should be very much obliged to you, if you would be so kind as to acknowledge our friendship" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote "Answered" and Lyon wrote under this "Answd / Dec 5".

Putnam's Monthly published anonymous remarks about "Mark Twain's Autobiography" p. 217-20. Tenney: "Spurred by current publication of MT's reminiscences in the North American Review, describes and quotes his 1871 burlesque autobiography and reprints a long portion of his discussion of simplified spelling. There is almost no editorial comment" [42] The Same magazine ran "An Unpublished Masterpiece" by Charles Orr, p. 250-1. Tenney: "Three letters, dated June 21, June 24, and July 7, 1880, from John Hay to Alexander Gunn, concerning MT's 1601; there is no clue as to the topic, although its racy nature is vaguely suggested" [ibid].

November 1 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Tonight D. & Francesca Gilder, C.C. & I went up to see Forbes Robinson and Gertrude Elliot in Bernard Shaw's "Cleopatra and Caesar." Beautifully, quite perfectly staged it is, but there are no climaxes, & it ends only because the actors & everyone else is (are) tired, & it's time to go home, so unconvincing it is.

The King is still in bed but longing to get up at the billiard table.

We have had to telegraph to Hartford that the King isn't well enough to go up tomorrow to be present at the Saturday Morning club. It's too sad, for I was going too, to see Hattie Enders & others [MTP TS 142-143].

Note: Misses Dorothea and Francesca Gilder, daughters of Richard Watson Gilder.

W.H. Fletcher for the Fulton Monument Assoc. wrote to Sam that Cornelius Vanderbilt, President of the Association called a meeting on Nov. 14 at 4 p.m. in the State Room of the Waldorf Astoria. Sam was urged to attend [MTP].

William S. Hinckley wrote from Kansas City, Mo. Hinckley's ambition was to become an author and enclosed "a few items concerning my old Colonel 'Kit Carson' and" himself. "My object in writing you is for advice, because I know you are capable of giving it," and it would be appreciated. He enclosed a photo of himself, appearing to be distinguished older gentleman about 60 or more, a small drawing of "Our cabin" some eleven feet square, and newspaper clippings about Hinckley's association with Carson [MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote to Sam.

I am dispatching Miss Lyon's note to John, so that he shall not engage Valet of the Shadow for your Egyptian sojourn. I am sorry you are not able to go, but glad you are able to stay, for I want to see you, and will come as soon as we can get out of this hell of noises which we madly dropt ourselves into last night. Did you ever have your head pounded with a cobblestone? That is what it is like. If possible we shall move today. Yours ever...[MTHL 2: 821]. Note: on Oct. 30 Sam canceled arrangements to spend the winter in Egypt upon getting bronchitis. It's not clear just when the Egypt trip was first planned. Evidently Valet of the Shadow was a suggested porter for the trip. Howells had just returned from Kittery Point and the "hell of noises" was the Hotel Oxford, Park Ave. and 58th St.

November 2 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.).

Friday Morning / Can it be that I have offended you, dear pal? I do hope not. I would rather offend the Deity—twice over. Was it uncourteous in me not to write & thank you for your invitation to luncheon? I only failed of that because I have been down with bronchitis ever since Tuesday afternoon. Of course I wrote the letter, but followed my habit of adding a paragraph per day, & so the book you returned has arrived before it was finished & mailed. The bronchitis assisted the delay.

But whatever my offence is, it was not intentional, & I hope not past mending, & that you will say so. Dear me, why, I can't believe I have been guilty of anything wrong! It is unthinkable; & so I want to still sign myself your affectionate uncle until I am formally and officially degraded to the ranks [MTP].

Paine writes that he and Sam played the first game on the new billiards table (from Balke-Collender Co.), a Christmas gift delivered early (by Sam's insistence; on Oct. 30) from H.H. Rogers.

So I remained for luncheon and we began, November 2d, the first game ever played on the Christmas table. We played the English game, in which caroms and pockets both count. I had a beginner's luck, on the whole, and I remember it as a riotous, rollicking game, the beginning of a closer understanding between us — of a distinct epoch in our association. When it was ended he said:

"I'm not going to Egypt. There was a man here yesterday afternoon who said it was bad for bronchitis, and, besides, it's too far away from this billiard-table."

He suggested that I come back in the evening and play some more. I did so, and the game lasted until after midnight. He gave me odds, of course, and my "nigger luck," as he called it, continued. It kept him sweating and swearing feverishly to win. Finally, once I made a great fluke — a carom, followed by most of the balls falling into the pockets.

"Well," he said, "when you pick up that cue this damn table drips at every pore" [MTB 1325-6].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

The King got up today & played billiards with AB this a.m., for there is no dictating these days. Then he played alone for 5 hours this afternoon. R.G. [Richard Gilder] & Mr. & Mrs. [Edward] Loomis were here for dinner. Mrs. L. in black is a far too mournful looking creature. Black is a terrible color for anyone to wear.

The King played billiards during the evening with the men & AB came in just as we were on our way upstairs—because he had seen the King shooting alone. The men left & AB stayed on until midnight. The King began to look grey-skinned & tired [MTP TS 143].

Andrew Carnegie wrote a small invitation to Sam. “Mr. Clemens would be happy to have Mr. Carnegie dine with him at 7.30 on Friday evening, Nov. 9th / phone 3907 Gramercy. / Nov 2-06 /” [MTP]. Note: upon this “reverse form” of invitation, Sam wrote, “The Beggar’s most humble servant I can scarcely spare a minute But I’ll be yours at dinner time or else the devil’s in it— “and vertically, “Parody Robbie Burns.”

Mrs. F. Mallery wrote from Portland, Ore. to send Sam a poem and added not to “say any thing ill of me through the ‘Press’” [MTP].

Chapters from “My Autobiography—V” ran in the N.A.R. p.833-44.

November 3 Saturday – Either this day or the next Sam took a train trip of an hour-plus and visited daughter Jean in her Katonah, N.Y. sanitarium [Nov. 5 to Emilie Rogers].

Andrew Carnegie wrote to Sam. “So glad to learn that you are yourself again, back in town running about able ‘to take sustenance’ . Delighted to attend at dinner. / I hope we are going to snow under that Reprobate Hearst—His article upon Gilder roused my ire. / Yours Ever...” [MTP]. Note: see Carnegie’s Nov. 2 “invitation.”

William C. Edwards for Guaranty Trust of NY wrote to Sam. “We have to-day received a letter from your Secretary, Miss I.V. Lyon, requesting us to mail a check for the balance standing to your credit, and we are to-day sending her a check to your order for $1,853.75.... / We regret exceedingly that you find it necessary to close your account with us...” etc. etc. [MTP].

November 4 Sunday – Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote from Ponkapog, Mass. to Lyon & Sam that he had no plans except Sam’s for Friday night, and intended to leave Boston by morning train Nov. 9 [MTP].

November 5 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

The billiard table is better than the doctors. It is driving out the heartburn in a most promising way. I have a billiardist on the premises, & I walk not less than ten miles every day with the cue in my hand. And the walking is not the whole of the exercise, nor the most health-giving part of it, I think. Through the multitude of the positions & attitudes it brings into play every muscle in the body & exercises them all.

The games begin right after luncheon, daily & continue until midnight, with 2 hours intermission for dinner & music. And so it is 9 hours’ exercise per day, & 10 or 12 for Sunday. Yesterday & last night it was 12—and I slept until 8 this morning without waking. The billiard table, as a Sabbath-breaker can beat any coal-breaker in Pennsylvania, & give it 30 in the game. If Mr. Rogers will take to daily billiards he can do without the doctors & the masseur, I think.

I was meditating a descent upon the Coes yesterday afternoon, but learned by telephone that they were not at home. However, the weather was not auspicious for gout, & I am threatened with that, these days. The billiards will knock it out.

We are really going to build a house on my farm, an hour & a half from New York. It is decided. It is to be built by contract & is to come within $25,000. I have been up to see Jean, & it is a pathetic exile & captivity; I must have a country home for her.

With love & many thanks, / SLC /

Clara is in the sanitarium—till January 28, when her western-concert tour will begin. She is getting to be a mighty competent singer. You must know Clara better; she is one of the very finest & completest & most satisfactory characters I have ever met. Others knew it before, but I have always been busy with other matters.

I shan’t forget the 29th—sure [MTHHR 619-20].

The New York Times, p.4, dealt with Sam's as yet unpublished Christian Science, and included his Apr. 17, 1903 letter to Livingston Wright about who the true author of Mary Baker Eddy's book Science and Health. Wright's 1901 MS was published on Nov. 4, 1906 and claimed that Rev. J. Henry Wiggin was the true author of Eddy's book. Sam had long disputed Eddy's authorship. In the meantime, Harpers was sitting on Christian Science, but would publish it in 1907.

Yesterday at his home, 21 Fifth Avenue, Mr. Clemens said that he did not know why his book, which he said is still in the hands of the publishers, had never reached the public. He said that the nature of the work was indicated in his letter [Apr. 17, 1903] to Mr. Wright. Beyond this, he added, under the circumstances he could not talk at present.

George B. Harvey wrote a short note to Clemens, agreeing to dine with him Friday at 7:30 p.m. [MTP].

Frank Phalen wrote on Unitarian Society notepaper, Fairhaven, Mass. to Sam. (Phalen was a minister of that church.) He referred to Sam's connection with Mr. Wright, literary executor of Rev. J. Henry Wiggin, who Sam had discovered edited Mary Baker Eddy's Science and Health. Phalen agreed with Clemens that Eddy was a sham. He wished to meet Sam when he next came to Fairhaven [MTP].

November 6 Tuesday – Rev. William Fitz-Simon of St. Mary's Rectory, NYC wrote to Sam.

It was so kind, and doubtless characteristic of you to remember the clergy. The crown jewels reached me through Rushmore's hands and you have my sincere gratitude.

As I smoked, I was reminded of an old Maryland fellow's inscription to his departed wife. They had not lived in perfect harmony, he found it necessary especially when under the influence to use his fist as a means of correction. Yet he cared intensely, and when she was gone, as expressive of his appreciation, he had inscribed on her grave stone which stands to this day the simple text "Hard to beat" [MTP]. Note: "Crown jewels" were gifted cigars.

Jennie S. MacMillan, granddaughter of "old" Abe Curry, wrote to Sam. Grandma Curry would soon celebrate her 90th. MacMillan would send him their personal experience of the S.F. earthquake [MTP].

Edward Rushmore wrote from Tuxedo Park, NY to Sam. "The 'Crown Jewels' arrived in safety and put us deeply in your debt....I have asked a number of my smoking friends to try them...." Rushmore divulged that "reproaches have been hurled at this household by the hundred for having kept you in concealment so successfully" during a recent stay [MTP]. Note: see also Nov. 6 from Father Fitz-Simon.

November 7 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote his "pal," Mary B. Rogers:

Dear pal, there are many nieces in the world, but you are the most patient one there is, & in my opinion the only perfect one.

Yesterday morning came an invitation to Japan, for next March, & I think I came within one of persuading the Admiral to make the trip with me. But he didn't quite say yes, so I gave it up. I would like to see Japan, but the journey would be too heavy. On the 30th I made all my arrangements to go to Egypt; then the bronchitis smote me, & before sunset I had canceled them all, by telegraph & telephone. There isn't any excursion I am really prepared for, except the final one; but I don't care for that one, personally, though I think St Peter would like to see me. Let him wait; other people have to make sacrifices.

Well—yes—I was up a little late, that night, & p'raps a little weary, too, but not too weary to go to your luncheon; it was a trifle of a cold & a threat of bronchitis that lost me that pleasure & gave me a petrifying fright. Mind, I was not frightened at the thought of being killed—I don't care for being killed—but the thought of the usual 6 weeks in bed is a most substantial terror. But I am over that fright now, & shall soon be out on the street again. Clara keeps changing my doctors; yesterday she withdrew Halsey & called Quintard. I had a persistent & annoying dry bark for him to exploit, & he said he would send a medicine immediately that would modify it with dispatch. It didn't come. The bark continued—the rest of the day & all night. At 9 this morning Clara looked in, & said she had had the serenest night she had had for weeks, & it was all owing to a new medicine sent to her by Dr. Q. By the “Mr. Clemens” on the label I saw that it was my medicine, & not hers at all, & not in any way suited to her case, for she only has nervous affections, whereas I have the botts, & the heaves, & the glanders, & some other things like that. Why, Mary, I was near death all night; at one time I did not believe I should live thirty-five years. I did not greatly mind it, on account of St. Peter perhaps waiting up for me & getting anxious, but I couldn't help wishing I could see you once more before I left. Mariechen, the more I reflect upon St. Peter & his solicitude about me, the more I like him. But formerly I didn't care for him.

I have dictated a while, this morning—the first time for 19 days. On Simplified Spelling. It's good; I wish I could read it to you. Howells, Aldrich, Carnegie, & Harvey will dine here to-morrow night, & they'll have to listen to it. It goes to the root of the matter; proposes a reform of the idiotic alphabet. Then the orthography will reform itself. By natural compulsion, you see. I wish to God there were some more wise men in the world. I do find it so lonesome.

The new billiard table—pal, dear, you've never seen a table to approach it! You will see, when you come to try it. Affectionately your uncle / Mark

P.S.

My dear child, I've had an awful accident. I have coughed up my conscience. I wouldn't taken $40 for her, she was just out of the repair shops & had fresh paint on & new rubber tyres & could go like 1830 Groombridge (see astronomy.)

I am prostrated, & not able to address this note, I will ask one of the vassals to do it for me [MTP]. Note: the billiard table was meant to be a Christmas gift from Rogers, but Sam rushed it along, and Paine notes they played the first game on it on Nov. 2 [MTB 1325]. Note: Stephen Goombridge (1755-1832), British astronomer, discovered a star in the constellation Ursa Major. The star discovery was posted posthumously in 1838.

In the evening Clara Clemens had some friends in for a dinner party: Mr. and Mrs. Norman Hapgood, Mr. and Mrs. George Riggs (Kate Douglas Wiggin), Mr. Rogers (a singer), Miss Lyon, Miss Dorothea Gilder, and Rodman Gilder.

A very pleasant party and good talk. Some of it violent. Because Mrs Riggs and I do not agree about Jane Austin. She respects Jane Austin, whilst it is the one desire of my heart to dig her up. Notwithstanding, I took Mrs Riggs out to dinner. Otherwise, she behaved very well, I, also, it is thought. By 10 the company went, or 10:30; then Rodman and I played billiards—Dorothea, Clara, and Miss Leighton waiting—until much too late, and I invited everybody to continue whilst I went to bed. I shan't be a party to keeping Clara up so late again.

Percy Grant came up to my room at 5 and I made him stay till 7. We had good talk about Pepy's Diary, and about Howells. He is a charming man [Nov. 8 to Jean]. Note: Lyon's journal also carries a comment on the “friendly battle” between Sam and Kate over Jane Austen [TS 201].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Simplified Spelling [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

A dinner tonight. Mr. & Mrs. Riggs—Mr. & Mrs. Norman Hapgood, Dorothea & Rodman Gilder, & Mrs. Francis Rogers. The King & Mrs. Riggs had a friendly battle over Jane Austen, whose books the King abhors & Mrs. Riggs delights in. She looks forward to her annual attack of nostalgia, or something, when she has to lie by & recreate herself, with 2 or 3 volumes of Jane Austen's books. She wore the same little smilex crown that she wore to the King's 70th birthday dinner, a year ago, & she was brilliant & interesting, but not very well. Norman Hapgood sat on my right, C.C. next [to] him. He could sit at the King's table & say that what the King said about Austen was Rot. He could do that. But he didn't say it to the King. Mrs. Norman H. wore a crown too: her wonderful wealth of black hair—she's a handsome creature, but she looks too much like Teresa Bini [Cherubini, the maid] the Italian ward. She's Teresa very much beautified. I liked the dinner very much, afterward we 5 women sat in the living room & talked about everything, mostly, but mainly Bernard Shaw's "Cleopatra and Caesar" [MTP TS 144].

Frank W.C. Hersey, English instructor at Harvard, wrote to ask Sam if their class might use passages from HF; he listed several page numbers, etc., and was also writing to Harpers for permission [MTP].

James A. Renwick wrote to Sam acknowledging receipt of his check for $291.67 for Nov. rent [MTP].

November 8 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean.

It is a gray morning, Jean dear, and I have awakened prematurely.

I have been coughing only 8 or 9 days, yet I am already more than half tired of it. This is because it's not sentimental or sympathetic, but is a dry bark like tan-bark. I do not go out of the house yet; I go down stairs, but not frequent

[segment about the Nov. 7 dinner party]

We find Robert a first rate butler. He makes a dinner go first-classfully. Miss Layongs gave me your telephone message and I was very glad to hear from you, and to know that you are still happy and doing well. I shall be sure to go and see you as soon as I get rid of my cough. And so with many hugs and kisses, / I remain your loving Father [MTP].

A letter postmarked this date arrived in care of Sam for Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Sam wrote on the envelope: "Opened & read by mistake, but there is nothing improper in it. / Mark" [MTP]. Note: Aldrich was arriving for a visit; he was expected at a Nov. 8 dinner; see Oct. 26; Nov. 4, 7 entries.

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: From Susy's biography: Clemens thinks he will write no more books—Clemens' inability to remember faces of friends—The exquisite faces and landscapes which his mind draws & paints when he is half asleep—He has not yet written himself out; prefers dictating—Mrs. Riggs recalls the episode of F. Hopkinson Smith selling the original MSS. at auction—The artists dinner for Hopkinson Smith [MTP Autodict2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mary the good little cook went away today. C.C." [MTP TS 144].

John H. Johnston, jeweler, NYC wrote to Sam relating strange happenings about a small oil portrait tht he'd purchased of Mark Twain several years before. It seems that on three separate occasions three different dogs that came with their visiting owners, had howled and barked and growled in front of the painting. Johnston had no idea why the dogs did this but would loan the painting to Sam if he wished [MTP].

Henry Arthur Jones wrote on Hotel Marie Antoinette notepaper to invite Sam to dine with friends on Nov. 15 at 8 at the Saint Regis Hotel. After his signature Jones wrote, "I'd just written this when I received our kind invitation for tomorrow evening which I am delighted to accept" [MTP].

Governors and Officers of the National Arts Club sent an engraved invitation for this evening for the formal opening of the new Club House at 9 p.m. Charles de Kay's card is with the invitation [MTP]. Note: Fatout lists Sam as giving a speech at this event but offers no citation [MT Speaking 676].

November 9 Friday – Thomas Bailey Aldrich arrived at 21 Fifth Ave. for a weekend stay with Twain. He left on Sunday, Nov. 11 [Lyon to H. Whitmore Nov. 12].

William Dean Howells, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Andrew Carnegie, and George B. Harvey attended Sam's "Stag dinner party" to meet the English dramatist Henry Arthur Jones. Sam described the time after the dinner:

...I had to sit still until eleven o'clock—which nearly killed me with fatigue; then I heard Clara in the hall, & rushed out & dragged her in. Everybody had to get up, then, & this gave me a chance to stretch my legs. The others left, & the Colonel [Harvey] and I went up stairs & played billiards till 1.15, & Aldrich umpired the games [Nov. 13 to Jean].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King had a buck dinner here tonight for Mr. Thomas Bailey Aldrich arrived to stay 2 nights in the house. Aldrich, the poet, & the author of beautiful Marjorie Daw. Those who came were Mr. Howells, Mr. Carnegie, Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, & Colonel Harvey, who with the King & Mr. Aldrich made a batch of immortals. (I don't include Col. Harvey in that & perhaps not Mr. Jones.) However, the King nearly died of the fatigue such a dinner gives him. He flies that sort of thing in misery, & henceforth he says he will give only luncheons, for after the long strain he cannot sleep, & he nearly asks them to go, much as he enjoys the having of them. I peeped through the opening over the portiere, on my way up the stairs at 9:45 and they made a fine picture as they sat around the dining table. But I could see that the King was restless & was perched on the front edge of his chair, leaning forward with his hands on his knees. What an exquisite creature he is.

Mother & AB & I had such a nice dinner at the St. Denis. AB was very handsome & I let my cone blow off in a hot nervous misery & I talked of pent-up things [MTP TS 144-145].

Garth W. Cate wrote to Sam, sending him his copy of HF that needed to be rebound. But before it was, Cate requested Sam to "slap in your 'John Hancock' somewhere, or else send a letter back with it that can be bound in" [MTP].

David M. Jones wrote from the Rectory, Brisbane Valley, Australia to appreciate "Eve's Diary" in the London Spectator, and thanked Sam for making his weary hours easier. Jones was Welsh, and if they were to meet "on the other side" he would do his best to teach him Welsh, so asked Sam, "Please do not go where no Welshman hopes to go" [MTP]. Note. See sam's reply Dec. 27.

November 10 Saturday – Sam wrote of playing billiards until 1:15 a.m.: "I got but poor sleep afterwards & was pretty tired next day. I stayed home at night [Nov. 10] & did not go to the Alden feed. Those who went to it did not reach their beds until 4 a.m.—Howells & Paine included—but Aldrich got here at 2 a.m." [Nov. 13 to Jean].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

T.B. Aldrich is so disappointing in appearance & in qualities of all kinds that go to make up the literary man bearing a high reputation.

"Just Aldrich thou, to thine our manner born, has thou touched aught that thou didst not adorn?"

I went into Mr. Clemens's room this morning with the closing lines of a double sonnet to Aldrich at 70 & I was moved & happy by them, & glad to know that the man who could inspire that was in the house. Then pretty soon after the King read the poem aloud, Mr. A. came in. Pudgy he is, & short & red faced & mannerless & irritated because his trunk couldn't go up to Boston on the same train with him. "Why in the deuce can't it go up on the same train?" His gift of song seems turned into a worldly complaint, a worldly complaint like this. The students at Smith College "don't belong to the swell set." I'm stunned by the disappointment of it all. Such a sweet reverence I've had these many years & it was broadened by the beautiful tribute the King gave him in the dictation over in Florence. I wanted to sit & listen to the sweet wonderful flow of his speech & the most I heard was that he had lost his spectacles here in the house [MTP TS 145-146].

J. Adelphi Gottlieb for Volunteer Emergency Service Medical Corps, NYC wrote to inform Sam that he had been elected as “HONORARY MEMBER of the International Sanitary & Public Safety Commission; in recognition of the value of your suggestions for public welfare and the cause of humanity” [MTP].

On or after this date Sam replied to J. Adelphi Gottlieb. “I thank the committee for the Ex. Board of the Nat. Vol. Emergency Service very much for the compliment they have paid me in making me an honorary member of the Int. Sanitary & Public Safety Commission & I accept” [MTP].

November 11 Sunday – Thomas Bailey Aldrich left 21 Fifth Ave. after a weekend stay with Twain. He [Lyon to H. Whitmore Nov. 12].

November 12 Monday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote to Harriet E. Whitmore.

The darling wonderful White King isn’t out of the house yet. It wasn’t a bad bronchitis, but it housed him well & on Saturday when Thomas Bailey Aldrich was here—he came Friday & left Sunday) the King hopped around without many clothes on & so added to his bronchial condition which finished with heavy coughing again. But again he is better.

He was really very much disappointed over not going up to Hartford; for he wanted to go, & he wanted to go a good deal, or he wouldn’t have made the slightest effort if he had been even a little indifferent. In these days he is not by way of making any exertions that can be avoided altogether, or that can be made by me. And my own disappointment can’t be put into words at all [MTP]. Note: Sam was to go to Hartford on Nov. 2 for the 30th anniversary of the Saturday Morning Club of young ladies; Lyon was to accompany him. Bronchitis won out.

Dr. Halsey called on Sam and ordered him to bed a day or two and continue his medicine [Nov. 13 to Jean].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mr. Doubleday telephoned this morning to ask if he mightn’t publish the C.S. book that the Harpers decided not to publish in 1903. I told him from the King, to apply to Col. Harvey & Mr. Doubleday said, “Oh, pshaw” [MTP TS 146].

Mrs. L.H. Curtiss wrote from Rensselaer, NY to Sam. In “a Christian spirit,” she offered a treatment for bronchitis after noting in the Albany Times-Union that he suffered from it [MTP].

Absalom Carlisle Grimes wrote from Troy, Mo. and enclosed a Nov. 9 front page article from The Elsberry (Mo.) Democrat, picturing Grimes and his wife. The story was about his exploits as a Confederate spy. Also enclosed was a letter from J. Brooks Johnson and a squib about “Mark Twain ill with Bronchitis,” likely from the same paper, which prompted Grimes to write. Evidently Grimes was serving time in jail for some offense, judging by Johnson’s reply and the “Sheriff of Lincoln County” letterhead and envelope Grimes used.

My Dear Old Friend Sam, I enclose you a letter which explains itself, it was received yesterday—its contents vividly recalled to my mind—the days way back yonder in June or July 1861...when the scenes of Nuck Matsons Home = the vinegar keg barber chair Old Col Ralls Home = Gordins Mill where Lieutenant Clemens loomed up into existence = the March to Headquarters in the old stable = the Horse trough = which was wont to be the bed chamber of Lieut Clemens = the ignominious return March = The not much Dinner at Col Tinkers = the nights camp in Col Splawns [?] Barn & the final Disbanding of the regiment next day = & return in disgrace again to Martins farm = & last though not least the endurance & Patience of “Paint Brush”[.] [MTP]. Note: Grimes mentioned he’d failed to meet up with Clemens during his western lectures. He’d quit the River in 1884. He gives the date of his preliminary trial but does not disclose his offense. “Paint Brush” was Sam’s donkey.

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to ask Sam if Mr. Timmory could also adapt “An Encounter With an Interviewer” to the stage on the same basis as the other stories [MTP].

Edward Owen wrote on Confederate Veteran Camp of New York letterhead to invite Sam to their annual dinner in honor of the memory of Robert E. Lee on Jan. 23, 1907 [MTP]. Note: written on the left margin in pencil, “Decline beautifully.”

Anne W. Stockbridge wrote from Providence, R.I. to Sam. She judged by reports of the Alden dinner that he was now in NY and was sending at his suggestion eleven letters “forged” by Miss Grace Donworth from “Jennie Allen” hoping that he would “find sufficient merit in them to make them worthy of publication.” After her signature she added: “A woman’s postscript / Do you not think they should be published before the public forgets there was an earthquake in California?” [MTP].

November 13 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean, in Katonah, N.Y. “Jean dear, since I wrote the other day, conditions have not changed—at least for the better. They stopped me from playing billiards & I have been in bed ever since.” Sam then told of his “Stag dinner party” of Nov. 9, and of being tired on Nov. 10 from playing billiards until the wee hours, and of not going to Henry M. Alden’s dinner party celebrating his 70th. He was ordered to bed by Dr. Halsey. He finished with:

Dr. Halsey was here yesterday & said I must stay abed a day or two longer & continue the medicine.

Mr. Rogers stops in every morning & furnish[es] advice & abuse. Clara is to sing Thursday night, & Quintard is loading her up with medicine as a preparation. Clara’s manager wanted her to be photographed with me, for a literary person who wants to write an article, but she wouldn’t allow it. She told him she wouldn’t be publicly connected with me, but is going to stand or fall on her own merits. The Black Spider [Clara] is entirely right. Go on having good times, dear Jean [MTP].

J.W. Ballard wrote from Binghamton, NY to Sam. “Replying to your favor of the 12th. Would say further that we can afford to pay you $300.00 to $400.00 if you would come for the opening night of our Winter Chautauqua, and if you ever change your mind after you have said no, wish you would do so in this case” [MTP]. Note: on the letter by Lyon, “No. Mr. Clemens cannot consider it.”

Edward C. Haviland wrote from NYC to Sam soliciting his recommendation for a friend who was considering locating in Tarrytown, NY [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Tell him Mr. C never lived there.”

Minnie N. Hinds wrote to offer another treatment for Sam’s bronchitis [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answd. Nov. 26”

November 13 ca. – In N.Y.C. Sam wrote instructions for Isabel V. Lyon to reply the Nov. 13 from Minnie N. Hinds. Thank her very much for kind thoughtfulness Try every thing that is recommended so will try this in its turn which wont come for some months as he is behind hand [MTP]. Note: source: between Nov. 13 and Nov. 26, 1906.

November 14 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Ill on this day” [MTP TS 146].

Fanny Flint Conradson wrote from Franklin, Pa. to Sam. She, like many others, had read in the NY Herald of his bronchitis. She was a lifelong fan of his books since IA. Now she was a “twisted cripple” but owed much to his books for lightening her load.

...my narrowed life basks in sunshine caught in book leaves, when house-bound during winter, and how intimate I feel with my pleasure-giving writers, you the peer of all. Long ago, when your Hartford home was building, the finishing touches only lacking [1874], a mutual friend of yours and mine took me over it. When I saw the double doors of glass between your study and the children's playroom, the father's heart was as transparent as those doors [MTP].

Harriet Whitmore Enders wrote to Sam that the members of the Saturday Morning Club deeply regretted his inability to join them for their anniversary luncheon. They wished she would write for them and "express their exceeding regret..." and sent three badges which were "in the place of honor—I send them with the sincere hope from us all that you may be much stronger by this time..." [MTP].

E.E. Helt, superintendent of Vermillion Co. Schools, Clinton, Ind. wrote to Sam hoping his bronchitis was over, and that they were reading his Autobiography in the NAR. He obliquely asked for "a little answer" [MTP].

Katharine Lampton Paxson wrote from Graham, Tex. to Sam after reading his Autobiography in the NAR. "I must protest against your heralding abroad as fact the exaggerated scene of the raw turnips. It's a moral impossibility for such a thing ever to have taken place in my father's house." She claimed that exaggeration was a trait of the Lampton family, and that Sam had the trait "as high a degree as Papa did" [MTP].

November 15 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal noted she was still ill [MTP TS 146].

J.G. Babb Secretary for University of Missouri wrote to Sam requesting his portrait, though it must be "approved by a committee competent to pass on its artistic merit" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env. "No answer – the terms of the letter being uncourteous to the verge of brutality."

John A. Lockwood wrote from Syracuse, NY to Sam complaining about asking for TA at the Carnegie Library in Syracuse, but being told he already had one fiction book to check out and they wouldn't allow two; he argued it was a travel book, not a fiction book, but she was insistent. "I hope you will tell Mr Carnegie that if he allows your works on travel to be called fiction you will take them out of his libraries altogether" [MTP].

November 16 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

C.C. walks out of my room in her blue wrapper & says, "Damn the profession, I don't like anything about it!" Today I went downstairs in the afternoon. The King was playing billiards with AB. C.C. went to sing down in the bowery, & the King & I dined alone; later I played the Lohengrin Wedding March for him twice [MTP TS 147].

Chapters from "My Autobiography—VI" ran in the N.A.R. p.961-70.

November 17 Saturday – Roi Cooper Megrue wrote to Isabel Lyon enclosing Ernest Hendrie's reply to Elisabeth Marbury's Oct. 29 about dramatization rights for "The Man that Corrupted Hadleyburg." Lyon wrote on Megrue's letter sometime after Nov. 17:

Katherine telephoned

Mr. Timory can have the right to dramatize The Interviewer Mr. Hendrie be may be right, but Mr. Clemens doesn't remember. wrote Mr. Hendrie—Mr.H needn't be surprised that Mr. Clemens has forgotten, for he always forgets everything of that nature.

Note: Sam wrote a note on the letter to Lyon: "Mr. Megrue sent this to me. Please tell Katherine if you remember about it?" [MTP]. Note: Gabriel Timmory (pseud. René Wahl; 1870-1965), dramatist and journalist. .

Isabel Lyon's journal noted she was ill each day, from Nov. 17 to Nov. 23, either by "Still ill" or simply "Ill" [MTP TS 147].

Christian L. Pearce sent Sam an engraved invitation to the marriage of their daughter Maria Christine Pearce to Harold Burton Whitmore, Nov. 17, 1906 at 1 p.m. in Wash. D.C. [MTP].

November 18 Sunday

November 19 Monday – In the morning at 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.), enclosing his latest photograph for her opinion; he wanted to put it in a locket for Clara. He revealed his creative method for catching up on mail, since Isabel Lyon was ill.

This portrait looks too holy, perhaps—holier than is my custom to look, except on the Sabbath—but it is because of the new way I dressed my hair for the sitting.

I am finishing a remarkable book, dear pal, by a child of 15. You will have seen reviews of it. It is virile & rugged, & will make a pleasant change for you after the polished clean diction of the Call of the Blood. Will you be good & come & get it, or shall you prefer that I send it to you. (If I may have a choice, it's the former). When is your next singing lesson? Won't you call me on the telephone? I expect to be permitted to step outside the house about January or February.

This isn't good weather, Mary dear; it makes me feel mouldy. / Affectionately your uncle / Mark.

Miss Lyon has been ill in bed a week, & it seemed as if I never could begin the burden of clearing off the accumulated mail. But at last I went at it with determination last night & accomplished it in 5 minutes without a pen-stroke. By help of the fire. It show what native talent, unobstructed by principle, can do, when duty calls [MTP]. Note: the book was The Viper of Milan by Miss Marjorie Bowen—see Nov. 2 entry.

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Susy's spelling—More remarks about Simplified Spelling [MTP Autodict2].

J.Q. Adams wrote from Evanston, Illinois to Sam, not liking the bronchitis of Sam's and enjoying the Autobiography in the NAR, and mentioned several passages they especially liked [MTP].

Hugh Armstrong wrote from Sawtille Calif. to Sam. He'd just read RI and asked if Sam knew "the whereabouts of any of the old boys who were writers in the Territorial Enterprise." Armstrong had followed Sam's "course" and had "been so much delighted" with his writings during his Army service, which progressed from the rank of private to captain. He signed "Your Old Friend" [MTP]. Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd Nov 26"

John I. Raymond wrote from NYC to Sam.

"An article published in the Literary Digest of September 22nd, containing an extract from your autobiography, has just come to my attention. I regret not having read the first instalment of your autobiography when it appeared, so that I might have spoken sooner, a word of defence of my father, John T. Raymond's, memory[.] You have every right in the world to criticise his interpretations of the character of Colonel Sellers, but in doing so, is it necessary to besmirch his memory as you have? My father has been dead twenty years, but I think there are still those left who remember him as the antithesis [sic] of all you call him." Raymond asked Sam to "retract the insults heaped upon" his father [MTP].

November 20 Tuesday – Sam wrote thanks from 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y.C. to McClure, Phillips & Co., publishers of: The Viper of Milan (1906) by Gabrielle Margaret Vere Long (Campbell; 1888-1952), pseud. "Marjorie Bowen" (see Gribben p. 418).

I thank you for the “Viper of Milan.” But that this extraordinary book was written by a girl of 15—or 16—or 17—or 18—or 19—is clearly unbelievable, & I do not believe it. The person who wrote it is at least 25, & has served a regular & exacting apprenticeship to the pen. The Times Saturday Review’s high estimate of the book tallies with mine [MTP].

Note: the book was popular in England and announced as forthcoming in the Oct. 20 New York Times, “Pages in Waiting,” p. BR693; it was then announced on Nov. 3 as issued “this week” New York Times, p. BR1, “A Novel by a Child.” A full review was first given in the Saturday Times on Nov 17, p. BR 751, “A Precocious Author,” which Sam referred to. See McClure’s reply Nov. 23.

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: Georgia Cayvan dead—Some details of her career—The pension scheme for raising money for charity— Instance where it worked: Helen Keller—Mr. Ellsworth’s attempt to raise money, by written applications, for Major Pond’s little boy, which did not work [MTP Autodict2].

George W. Caldwell inscribed a copy of his book Oriental Rambles (1906): “To the Genial philosopher ‘Mark Twain’ / with the compliments of the constructor / George W. Caldwell / Nov. 20, 1906” [Gribben 125].

Willibald Gebel wrote to Sam on a picture postcard (of the Breslau Rathaus) from Breslau, Germany. Translation in the file by Robert J. Kleinman: “Dear Sir: As one of your ardent readers who happens to have his birthday on the same day as you, I take the liberty to send you from the far away Germany, the heartiest wishes for your seventy-first birthday. May you celebrate in the best of health still many many times! This wishes you in deepest admiration”[MTP].

November 21 Wednesday – Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: Father Hawley, and the meeting at which he presided in Hartford, 30 years ago—showing the ill effects of having too many orators when trying to raise money by public speaking [MTP Autodict2].

Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote to Lyon asking about his spectacles left there during his visit [MTP].

Elice Pumpelly Cabot (Mrs. Thomas Handasyd Cabot) wrote to Sam. “I am sending some proofs and one finished picture. I like very much the one that is finished and the two in which you are showing. Do you like any of them?” She could have any of them finished for him. Her parents had left for Egypt [MTP].

Alice R. Capers wrote from 41 Huntington, Ave., Boston to announce she was sending a picture of Mark Twain she would like autographed [MTP]. Note: Lyon on letter: “Answered Nov. 26; has not arrived here.”

November 22 Thursday – Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: The international copyright bills before Congress in ’86—Clemens supported the Chase bill—The young physician (now very old) who by drawing quaint pictures and writing original poems persuaded his little patients to take his odious mixtures, & who afterwards had these published in book form & is still living on income from his book, as he is a citizen of an honest country, Germany—Clemens will be 71 next week—His copyrights will soon begin to expire, therefore he must continue writing [MTP Autodict2].

Carmen Ramos wrote from Buenos Aires, Argentina to ask for Sam’s autograph for their “Golden Album.” She named-dropped Theodore Roosevelt as one who had complied. A rubber stamp was pressed before her signature reading “Commission du, Grand Album d’Or” [MTP].

John D. Rockefeller, Jr. wrote to Sam, regretting that Sam had been unable to meet with his Men’s Bible Class, and invited him to their annual dinner which would take place on Dec. 5 or 6, or 13; he hoped Clemens might choose a convenient day [MTP].

November 23 Friday – The Charlton Public Library banned Eve's Diary, and the New York Times reported the story on page one, Nov. 24:

BAR MARK TWAIN'S BOOK.

A Massachusetts Librarian Draws the Line at "Eve's Diary."

Special to The New York Times.

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 23—"Eve's Diary," by Mark Twain, a copy of which is among 100 books recently bought for Charlton Public Library, has been barred by Frank O. Wakefield, one of the Trustees. The other Trustees, the Rev. G. O. Jenness and Lewis A. McIntyre, concur with him. The other ninety and nine books are all right, but this one book Mr. Wakefield says, is objectionable. That is because there are pictures in the book of a kind to which Mr. Wakefield objects.

Before "Eve's Diary" could go on the circulating shelves, the Librarian, Mrs. H. L. Carpenter, looked it through. She saw the pictures and made known to Mr. Wakefield that she "had her doubts."

On every left-hand page is a picture, fifty of which represent Eve in Summer costume. Her dresses are all cut Garden of Eden style. In one of them Eve is seen skipping through the bushes unrestrained and not at all afraid. The bushes do not seriously cut off the view of Eve.

After looking long and earnestly at one picture depicting Eve pensively reclining on a rock, Mr. Wakefield decided to act.

Mr. Clemens sent out word last night to a TIMES reporter who conveyed to him the substance of this dispatch, that the action of the Charlton library was not of the slightest interest to him.

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to Miss Faith Baldwin of Brooklyn; he suggested if she had provided a self-addressed stamped envelope on her five other attempts at an autograph, she might have then been successful. He signed the typewritten note and sent it on [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Clemens tells of his idea in regard to international copyright, which he disclosed to Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes thirty-five years ago [MTP Autodict2].

Elizabeth Jordan wrote to Sam, thanking him for the "privilege of reading these letters. They are delicious; and as I told Mr. Paine over the telephone this morning, I would like nothing better than to publish a few of them with introduction and comments by you. However, I know you are ill...and I can see, too, why you do not care to appear in connection with these letters. / I am therefore returning them to you by messenger to-day" [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the back in ink: "Thank Mrs. Frances Powell Case, of Flotsam, Wainscot, L.I. / for her book." Frances Powell Case, pseud. "Frances Powell" had sent a copy of her book The Prisoner of Ornith Farm (1906) in August. This may be another book or a delayed thanks by Clemens. See Gribben p. 132.

McClure, Phillips & Co., signed N.A.B., wrote to Sam, assuring him that the author of The Viper of Milan was indeed now only 19 and had written two other novels since Viper, when she was between 16 and 17 years old [MTP]. Note: Between Nov. 23-26 Sam wrote in the top left, "Send me her picture & let me see."

William O. McDowell wrote on The United Nations of the World, NYC letterhead to Sam. "I have to-day given Mr. Ezekiel Leavitt, a Russian literary man of distinction, a letter of introduction to you. / Mr. Leavitt was compelled to leave St. Petersburg a number of years ago, and has established himself successfully in New York. / You will remember our work together as co-members of the Pan Republic Congress Committee..." [MTP]. Note: Sam on the env. "Russian distinguished literary man coming. Am done with everything."

Mrs. Harold B. Smith wrote from Worcester, Mass. to Sam enclosing a clipping (not extant). She wrote they enjoyed "Eve's Diary" and also chapters from his Autobiography [MTP].

November 23 ca. – On or after this day Sam directed Isabel Lyon to “Thank Mrs. Frances Powell Case, of Flotsam, Wainscot, L.I. for her book” [MTP]. Note: The book and author, Frances Powell Case, pseud. “Frances Powell” author of The Prisoner of Ornith Farm (1906). The book had been inscribed by Case in August, 1906. See Gribben 132.

November 24 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Came to Hfd. —Allyn House” [MTP TS 148]. Note: she had been ill since Nov. 14.

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: More about international copyright—Congresses & Parliaments made up of men who know nothing about the matter—Clemens disputes with Lord Thring his statement that there is no property in ideas [MTP Autodict2]. The segment was selected for MTE [372-80].

Andrew Carnegie wrote to Sam.

“Wednesday, 18th of December, has been fixt by Boss Gilder and myself for the Dinner which you are to grace, so pray keep that clear, and three days before spend in fasting and prayer so that you shall be fresh as a daisy. We are all looking forward to it with great interest. Hope you are well / Yours” [MTP].

Mrs. Marion Francis Crawford wrote from “Sant’ Agnello Di Sorrento” to ask in teeny-weeny handwriting for Sam write his autograph to her on a flyleaf of IA [MTP].

David W. McKay wrote on Koy-lo Co. letterhead to Sam, listing the four stockholders with amounts pledged. McKay asked for Sam’s check for $6,500, payable to the order of the International Spiral Pin Co. in payment for the $19,500 of shares taken by him [MTP].

Ella McMahon wrote from 37 Fifth Ave., NYC to Sam.

I think they have this shocking book at the Young Woman’s Christian Association Library. The librarians gave me an amusing account last summer of a dear old lady who made their lives miserable upon having the original of “Adam’s Diary”: the writer said he translated it, therefore, the original was to be had and the library ought to have it. / I am sending you by this mail, with much pleasure, the “Figaro”’s review of your beautiful, beautiful “Joan of Arc” and a very true editorial on your friend, Howells... [MTP]. Note in the file reads: “Anecdote concerning Mary Wilson appeared in the segment of SLC’s Autobiography published 21 Sept. 1906 in the North American Review.”

Miss I.C. Spencer wrote on Hotel Martha Washington, NYC letterhead to ask Sam if she might use his aphorism about the cat on a postcard with his name: “A home without a cat, and a well-fed, well-petted and properly revered cat, may be a perfect home, perhaps, but how can it prove title?” [MTP].

November 25 Sunday – In N.Y.C. Sam inscribed his “bad liquor good” aphorism in a copy of HF to Garth W. Cate [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal (in Hartford): “Quietly in bed I stayed. Hattie came in in the morning. I saw Leila in the afternoon” [MTP TS 148]. Note: see letter to Clemens below.

Isabel V. Lyon wrote a note to Sam.

I was unhappy to have to go away yesterday without the chance of having you speak to me; but the human race was getting it, for you were saying that the human race was a disappointment, & no better than—or not so good as—the monkey. I went down to the front steps feeling like the monkey—a sorry monkey, & by his looks you know how sorry a monkey can feel.

Hattie Enders came in today after church & she said beautiful things that have to be converted into beautiful messages for you.

I am feeling better after much sleep, but I am still that humiliated, and I am hoping that all goes well with you, and that it goes merrily, too [MTP].

Sam then wrote on Lyon's above note to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.).

[crosswritten on second page:] I was dictating, in the front room, ground floor, when she passed out to take her train. She heard only the opening sentence: "I believe that our Heavenly Father invented man because he was disappointed in the monkey." I have told the stenographer to write and tell her she only heard the gentlest sentence in the whole chapter—wait and see the rest.

You see, I didn't know anybody was overhearing me. I don't mind Miss Lyon, but it might have been you, & it might have been Clara; I don't want either of you around except when I am concealing my real opinion. There's no considerable liberty possible, where there's a niece or a daughter on the bridge.

At this very moment I am only waiting for Clara to depart for her train, then I am going to get up & do some forbidden things & have a pleasant time.

10 minutes later. She has come, & she has gone. I shall have adventures now [MTP].

November 26 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Andrew Carnegie at 2 E. 91st St., N.Y.C..

Dear St. Andrew:— / I should be delighted to be able to attend that dinner of yours, and would endeavor to come in a proper frame of mind, if the people who are trying to doctor me would let me come at all; but I have had many warnings from them, and from other sources, which convince me that I must stay in the house, hereafter, at night. If I were allowed to go any place after dark, it would be to your dinner [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.).

Dear pal, you have a very accurate instinct: I had been in mischief—which isn't unusual, even with me— & I was a little afraid to tell you the details. I still think that the crimes I had been committing in your absence will fare better unconfessed, though really I can give you my word they were no worse than usual.

I am not sorry you have read that dreadful book, but my main idea was to have Harry read it; because it is history & in the line of his literary likes & interests. But my! its horrors are the merest trifles compared with King Leopold's bloody doing in the Congo State to-day. I have been arranging for Leopold with St. Peter. Also I got a contract out of him for weather for you, & for the babies. If the weather furnished is not satisfactory, let me know. Peter has promised to advance you a story higher. I asked him to give Harry & me a lift, too, but he murmured as if to himself, "in my father's house are many flats, but we don't need any more just now." Do you think he meant Harry? He wouldn't mean both of us would he, do you think? Would it be courteous—with me right there? He was a little reserved with me, because he had heard about the Charlton library banishing Eve's Diary on account of the pictures, & hadn't yet made up his mind what stand he would take in the matter. He was very much interested in the pictures, & was taking as suspiciously long a time examining them as had that clothed but unclean-minded librarianess. Seven interviewer have been here, but I have not seen them & have been careful to send them word that I could not talk upon the matter because I felt no interest in it—which is true; but in one case I forgot myself & said a bright thing. But no harm has come of it. The newspaper doubted the commercial wisdom of printing it, I judge.

Clara's just gone! ordered to the country for 2 weeks by the doctor. She wouldn't consent to go until I made a lot of promises. I mean to keep some of them. But I was to begin last night & I didn't. I caught a fresh cold in the billiard room & had a horrible night. I was outside the house 20 minutes, yesterday, for the first time in several weeks. I was to repeat, to-day—by command—but

This is the House of Gayety! Miss Lyon left for Hartford day before yesterday—ordered by the doctor to remain away & rest 2 weeks. Jean's gone, Clara's gone—there'll be nobody on the premises but the servants & me for a fortnight. And it is a week of anniversaries—this one—and there is nothing else that is so hard to get through with. They are the birth-anniversaries of two of my dead, & of my own birth—and—worst of all—

Thanksgiving Day. Not the dinners—they are pleasant—but the rest of the day, with its cloud of reminiscences & its dim procession of passing spectres.

3 p.m. Last year I was loaded to the eyebrows with public engagements, from October 23 till mid-April. This year I have declined every public invitation, except one. I accepted that one day before yesterday, & have canceled it to-day. Mary, there are few people who are wiser than I—indeed I don't suppose there are any. I wish I could have been born the same day with Solomon; just to see if he would still be remembered now.

“Du bist wie eine Blume”—& the rest of it. It all applies to you, dear niece. / Affectionately your uncle [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal (in Hartford): “Today I went to see Mrs. Ingalls.” And for Nov. 27: “And spent today quietly with her.”

Andrew Carnegie wrote to Sam. “Good morning your majesty / It has occurred to us that you stay over night with us upon the dinner night so you shall escape going home in the night air” [MTP].

John G. Carlisle wrote on Manhattan Club note paper to announce the annual dinner of the Kentuckians would this year honor Henry Watterson. Since Watterson was leaving for Europe, the dinner would be on Dec. 11 at 7 pm at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel [MTP].

Ezekiel Leavitt wrote to Sam; not mailed, delivered with his letter of introduction from William O. McDowell. He was anxious to make Sam's acquaintance. “I am going to write a characteristic of your remarkable literary spirit for a Russian journal, and before sending it to Russia I would like to see you....Under a separate cover I am sending you my latest production “Russian Tales and Poems” [MTP]. Note: see Nov. 23 from McDowell.

Joe Twichell wrote that he was to be in NY Monday evening Dec. 3 for a dinner to Mr. Robert Ogden at the Waldorf-Astoria, and requested he might lodge at Sam's house. “I am sure you love me well enough, if anything is in the way of it to tell me so without discomfort. We are grieved to hear that Jean has had to leave home for her health's sake. May it not be for long.” After his signature, Joe wrote, “PS I also am a man of international reputation. A sermon of mine has been printed in England!” [MTP].

Owen Wister wrote from Phila. to Sam. “The other day in New York I was coming to see you, when I learned you were ill in bed. This is only to say how sorry I was to hear that; & I hope it's best untrue ever since, & will continue so” [MTP].

November 27 Tuesday – George Chainey wrote a long rambling letter from Williams Bay, Wisc. to Sam, enclosing a flyer on “The Unsealed Bible,” volume 1 of 30 planned [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env. “Crank Letter / Auto”

Elizabeth L. Howard wrote from Anoka, Minn. to wish Sam birthday greetings as her birthday was the same. Her husband was an 80 year old disabled veteran of the Civil War from Michigan [MTP].

John I. Raymond wrote to Sam, feeling that his letter of complaint of Nov. 19 had “gone astray,” and enclosed a copy. Raymond was the son of the late John T. Raymond, actor who played Col. Sellers [MTP]. Note: in his previous letter John had complained that Sam had besmirched his father's character in the Autobiography.

November 28 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal (in Hartford): “Today I came out here to beloved Harriet Enders. The children are wonderful. John, Bunny, Ostrom, and Elira—yes, they are wonderful” [MTP TS 148].

Theodosius Botkin wrote from the US Consulate, Port Louis, Mauritius, to relay a humorous story about one M. Perrement who suffered as a stutterer. Perrement had waited on Sam when he was in Port Louis on his world tour. Perrement “called on the Curepipe drugstore one day and tried to ask for some Ipecac. He addressed the lady clerk—‘D-d-d-d-donnez moi de h-h-h-hip-hip-hip——’ and just then the English clerk yelled ‘Hurrray!’” [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam enclosing two copies of one contract and another to be signed by Sam for the production of “How I Became Editor” [MTP].

November 29 Thursday - Thanksgiving – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to John Y. MacAlister in London (incoming not extant).

It was good to hear from you. Particularly to-day, which is Thanksgiving Day, sacred to humbug & hypocrisy; & so a letter from a sincere source comes as a breath of fresh air to the person who has fallen down the privy.

And it is lonesome in this house. The doctors banished Jean to the country 5 weeks ago; they banished my secretary, Miss Lyon to the country for a fortnight last Saturday; they banished Clara to the country for a fortnight last Monday. And so I'm a solitude. They banished me to Bermuda—to sail next Wednesday—but when I found that Col. Harvey couldn't go with me, I struck, & shan't go. My complaint is permanent bronchitis, & is one of the very best assets I've got, for it excuses me from every public function this winter—& all other winters that may come. I wouldn't trade it for your Unique, be you as vain of it as you may.

The cheque for Plasmon dividend, £700 is received & hereby acknowledged, with thanks.

I am glad you like Susy's Biography, I think it is a dear little book, & I have limitless reverence for it.

Well, I wish I could go to England once more. I'd have gone to the Aberdeen 400th last September, but they didn't offer me a degree & it made me jealous of Carnegie & I wouldn't play.

Always sincerely & affectionately yours, ... [MTP].

B.L. Willits wrote from Lenox, Iowa to ask Sam where he might obtain “The Soliloquy of King Leopold” [MTP].

November 30 Friday – Sam's 71st Birthday.

Gertrude Natkin sent a telegram to Sam. “Congratulations & best wishes with love and blots” (kisses) [MTAq 30]. Note: in her diary, Gertrude wrote: “I sent this telegram early in the morning. In the evening I sent Mr. Clemens my birthday gift which was a leather case. Soon after this Mr. Clemens went to Washington on business, that is to try to hve a copyright bill passed to have the rights of the published preserved fifty years after he is dead” [ibid.].

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam sent a telegram reply to Gertrude Natkin, 138 W. 98, N.Y.C. “the same to you and good health and happiness” [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: from Susy's Biography, item about the ducks—Mr. Clemens tells of his young ducks that had their feet chewed by snapping turtles—Billy Rice's version of “There is a happy land,” and Mr. Clemens's recollections of the first negro-minstrel shows [MTP Autodict2; MTE 110-118].

Dr. A.L. Benedict wrote from Buffalo, NY to Sam, noting that in “a published anecdote” Sam had claimed he was descended from “two or three of the judges who tried Charles I,” one of Benedict's ancestors. If Sam had made a study of his Benedict “would be greatly obliged for information” [MTP]. Note: Sam did not answer, as witnessed by an unused stamped env. in the file.

John Larkin wrote to Sam heading the letter “Re Fentress Land Company” and including details about 1000 acres of the Tennessee land [MTP].

December – Sam’s story, “Hunting the Deceitful Turkey,” first ran in Harper’s Monthly, p. 57-8 [Budd, Collected 2: 1012].

Sam inscribed a copy of The $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories to Anita Moffett: “To Anita Moffett / with affectionate Xmas greeting / from her kinsman / Mark Twain / Dec. 1906” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a letter declining to attend a gathering of Kentuckians to honor Henry Watterson, his third cousin by marriage.

I am sorrier than I can convey in words that I shall have to be absent when the Kentuckians foregather to do honor to my age-long friend and kinsman, Henry Watterson, but such is the case. My sixteen years of annual bronchial attacks have consolidated in accordance with present-day policy and become a permanent trust, carrying on business all the year around without vacations. Therefore my physician has forbidden me to attend public gatherings at night this Winter. This with the idea of saving what health is left to me.

May Watterson long keep his superfluity of it, since it comes of his being about the best man in the country at the present time, and, as far as I think, the only one without sin [MTP]. Note: the letter appeared in the N.Y. Times on Dec. 12, 1906

The Reader published a photograph of Mark Twain by Vander Weyde, on p. 107. without commentary [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 191].

Henry Arthur Jones’ article in the Atlantic Monthly issue for Dec., “Literature and the Modern Drama,” refers to Mark Twain as “a not distant kinsman of Cervantes” who uses satire to do nascent American drama a favor—“clearing it at the start from sham heroes and sham heroics” [Wells 27].

December 1906 to 1907 – Sometime during this period, more likely on his 1907 trip to England, Sam enclosed a “Tuck’s Post Card” in a letter (the card itself is not postmarked) to daughter Jean. The card has a printed poem “To Mark Twain” about the “secret little maid,” so that famous picture is likely on the reverse side. He wrote:

Jean dear, do you remember this picture with the accidental child in it?

This is made in Germany, & is good work. I am so glad, so very glad, to hear that you are cheerful & happy, & are going to fight it out on Dr. Patterson’s lines & help him in every way you can to push your improvement along to a cure. Lovingly / Father [MTP]. Note: “Patterson” is likely Dr. Frederick Peterson. The postcard also bears the following, printed vertically on the left edge: “Raphael Tuck & Sons Series No. 2565. ‘Mark Twain.’ / ART PUBLISHERS TO THEIR MAJESTIES THE KING AND QUEEN.”

December 1 Saturday – In NYC Albert Paine wrote for Sam to Thomas Bailey Aldrich in Boston.

Mr. Clemens asked me, this morning, to send you a pair of gold glasses which he found in his evening coat, when he put it on last night for the first time since you were here. He says you will probably suspect that he took the glasses with malice aforethought, intending to sell them, and that he is returning them now because he has been unable to find a market. He declares, however, with his right hand in air, that such is not the case; that the glasses were in reality put into the coat by his butler, supposing them to be the property of this household, and not by any evil intent, even on the part of the butler.

He is aware that this statement has a fragile look, but he cannot improve upon it to any extent. He hopes, therefore, you will accept it without investigation [MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: Sam’s early experiments with mesmerism [MTP Autodict2; MTE 118-125].

Rev. William Potts George wrote from Wash. D.C. sending 71st birthday congratulations. He complimented him on his many books and asked about p. 499 in FE, the statement made about the Ganges River “and its fatality for germs”—had this discovery of Mr Henkin been corroborated by further investigation?” [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam enclosing check for $25 for coupon of Atlanta Gas Co. belonging to Susie’s estate. He was “delighted” to hear from Sue Crane that he was in excellent health [MTP].

Eugene Fitch Ware (1841-1911), pseud. “Ironquill,” poet from Kansas, wrote a short note to Sam. “Dear Mr. Twain: I picked up your last volume. I read it clear through from cover to cover. It was like a bobtailed flush—I could not lay it down. / Yours sincerely, ...” [MTP]. Note: see MTB 1373-5 for more on Ware. A bobtail flush, also called a four flush, is four cards in the same suit; not a winning hand by itself. See Sam’s reply as printed in the Dec. 6 issue of the Washington Post.

Cornelius Vanderbilt for the Fulton Monument Assoc. sent an artistic notice that at the meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria on Nov. 14, Samuel Clemens had been appointed “a member of the Committee on Site,” consisting of “forty distinguished citizens” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the env. “Committee on site Fulton Memorial / Accept / Answerd Dec. 5”

December 2 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, NY Sam wrote a letter of thanks and greeting with a German translation on second leaf to “My far away friends” to an unidentified person [MTP: American Art Assoc. catalog, Mar. 3, 1925 Item 98].

Sam also wrote on a calling card to Robert Underwood Johnson: “Mouldy 71 thanks the Johnsons a thousand times” [MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: Sam’s early experiments in mesmerism, continued [MTP Autodict3; MTE 125-131].

Edwin M. Beattles wrote from Boston to send birthday greetings to Sam and a clipping from the Boston Journal of Dec. 1.

Twain Aged 71 And Alexandra 62

Humorist Says He Couldn't Help Not Being Born Same Day as Queen.

New York, Nov. 30.—Mark Twain, the humorist, is 71 years old today; and Alexandra, Queen of England, who is not a humorist, will be 62 tomorrow. The grand old humorist received hundreds of messages of good cheer at his home in lower Fifth avenue. The white-haired writer is enjoying excellent health for a man who has passed the three score and ten mile-post of his life.

I feel just as young as ever,” was the statement Mr. Twain gave out in reply to an inquiry. He wouldn’t discuss the matter further.

The Queen of England will be 62 years old tomorrow. When asked if he had anything to say regarding the Queen’s birthday, Mr. Twain declared: “I can’t help it that I wasn’t born on the same day as the Queen. I assure you it wasn’t my fault. England’s Queen has much to be congratulated for during her life.” [MTP].

Grace Kramer wrote from the Hotel Lenox, Boston to ask Sam if there was a book available on the Congo situation. She also offered birthday wishes [MTP].

December 3 Monday – Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Mesmerism continued—The Baron F. incident [MTP Autodict3; MTE 131-136].

Fanny E. Coe wrote from Jamaica Plain, Mass. to Sam. She was "preparing a series of reading books for publication" and wished to use the TS fence episode [MTP]. Note: "Ansd Dec. 6"

Major Leigh of Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam. "I beg to hand you herewith statement of your account for the year ending October 30 last. In doing so, permit me to present to you my congratulations" [MTP].

George B. Merrick, accountant for University of Wisconsin, age 65, wrote to ask Sam's permission to quote a quarter page and a half page from LM. In the file, a copy of a Diamond Jo Line Steamers booklet, "A 750 Mile Panorama Saint Louis – Saint Paul," which quotes Twain; he does not refer to it being an enclosure; it bears no copyright page [MTP].

December 4 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal (in Hartford): "At twilight I walked through the beautiful rooms of this beautiful house & my heart torn into sobbing shreds by my homesickness for the King" [MTP TS 148]. Note: she likely toured the Farmington Ave. house.

December 5 Wednesday – Francis Trevelyan Miller for Connecticut Magazine wrote to Sam, enclosing a poem, "To Genial, Whole-Souled Mark Twain," and a copy of the current issue with birthday congratulations [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: "A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur" written to contrast English life of the Middle Ages with modern civilization—Arrestment of King Leopold II—His character contrasted with character of lawyer who cared for John Marshall Monument Fund [MTP Autodict3; MTE 211-213].

December 6 Thursday – Sam replied to the Dec. 1 from Eugene Fitch Ware aka "Ironquill", the letter later appearing in the Dec. 16 issue of the Washington Post, p. E6. which contained Ware's "compliment" and Sam's reply:

Dear Mr. Ware:

I am an old brass-bound, copper-rivited, fire-assayed Presbyterian, with seventy-one years' experience in unworldliness, & I don't understand your metaphor, but I know it was intended as a compliment & I make it cordially welcome. / Sincerely...[MTP]. Note: see Dec. 1 from Ware.

Sam "rushed off" to Washington, D.C. "to attend hearings before the copyright committee" on Dec. 7 and 8 [Dec. 7 to Jean Clemens; Dec. 8 to Emilie Rogers]. Note: no prior plans for this trip were found; evidently Howells or someone else already in Washington alerted him that his presence might help.

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Clara's pious remark when her wounded hand was being treated—Jean's remark when Sam received dinner invitation from Emperor Wilhelm II—The emperor's dinner—The official of the Foreign Office, and how he got a desired vacation, and retained it [MTP Autodict3].

Dr. Giovanni Nesti wrote from Florence, Italy, a short note in Italian to Sam [MTP]. Note: at the bottom is written "XII. 06."

W.H. Dyer for the Middlesex Club "the oldest Republican Club in Massachusetts," wrote to Sam, giving a long list of luminaries they had entertained, including President Grant. Dyer invited Sam to attend a dinner on the anniversary of Grant's birth, Apr. 27, and to give an after dinner address, for which they would pay his usual fee. Mr. Thorndike Spalding would be in NY the following morning and would telephone [MTP].

Julien Tappan Davies, attorney, wrote from NYC to Sam. He had borrowed Sam's moral question photos from a very good friend, Henry M. Flagler, and could not find them to return. "I have had the pleasure of meeting you more than once here in New York," though he thought Sam did not likely remember him. Could Sam send him another set so he could return them to Flagler? [MTP]. Note: Flagler to Sam, Oct. 4.

December 7 Friday – Sam was in Washington, D.C., and spoke before the Joint Congressional Committee on Patents in favor of stronger copyright legislation. It was a cause Twain was long chasing. Shelden writes perhaps the most dramatic and telling account of his appearance in his white suit:

On a blustery Friday afternoon in December 1906, Mark Twain arrived for a special appearance at the Library of Congress, trailing smoke from his usual brand of cheap cigar. The temperature hovered at freezing and the skies were gloomy, but he was dressed warmly in a long dark overcoat and a derby from which thick curls of white hair protruded on either side. At the main doors, facing the Capitol, he entered the Great Hall of the Library and made his way down a long marble corridor to the Senate Reading Room, where a hearing was in progress on copyright legislation. The Librarian of Congress—a dapper middle-aged man named Herbert Putnam—was expecting him and emerged from the hearing to escort Twain inside.

All heads turned as the famous guest strode to the front of the chamber, which was full of lobbyists, lawyers, authors, and publishers. Normally used as a private study for senators, the high-ceilinged room had the look and feel of an elegant club.... At a long conference table facing the gathering were the dozen or so members of the Joint Congressional Committee on Patents, chaired by a jowly Republican lawyer from South Dakota, Senator Alfred Beard Kittredge.

...Twain reached his seat and paused to remove his overcoat. By this simple gesture he caused—as one observer later put it—"a perceptible stir." That was an understatement. Against the fading light of the afternoon Twain emerged as a figure clothed all in white. His outfit perfectly matched his hair, from his white collar and cravat—held in place by a "creamy moonstone"—to his white shoes. Among so many soberly dressed fellows in black and gray, he stood out as a gleaming apparition, impossible to ignore [MTMW xvii-xviii]

Insert: New York World, Dec. 8, 1906, p.1.

William Dean Howells was in the audience. Shelden writes he was "so taken aback by this unconventional outfit that the first words from his mouth were 'What in the world did he wear that white suit for?'" [ibid.]. Note: wearing white in the dead of winter was considered a shocking breach of etiquette, something Sam often relished doing. However, Twain received extensive press coverage for he flamboyant flaunting of such social norms. A composite of Sam's speech based on several sources may be found in Fatout, MT Speaking p.533-39.

Later, at the New Willard Hotel., Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y., giving his arrival and explaining the nature of his trip.

Jean dear, I came down yesterday, to attend the hearings before the copyright committee to-day & to-morrow. I was asked to speak, this afternoon, & did it. I enclose my notes for the speech, so that you can see it was a bright one & a good one.

I shall stay here several days & work for the bill, in your interest & Clara's. The Speaker of the House has given me his private room in the Capitol, & a Colored messenger to invite members for me, & I shall talk to every member. It is a large job, & will take some days, but I shall enjoy it. To-day there were a hundred people present, including a couple of dozen ladies, & I was the only man there in snow-white clothes. The others all wore black, & looked gloomy & funereal. But I had a mighty good time talking copyright to them, & Howells laughed the buttons off his clothes. /Lots of love & hugs, / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Joseph Gurney Cannon, Speaker of the House of Representatives, who had allowed Sam to use his special office.

Dear Uncle Joseph—Please get me the thanks of Congress—not next week, but right away! It is very necessary. Do accomplish this for your affectionate old friend—and right away! by persuasion if you can, by violence if you must. For it is imperatively necessary that I get on the floor for 2 or 3 hours and talk to the members, man by man, in behalf of the support, encouragement and protection of one of the nation's most valuable assets and industries—its literature. I have arguments with me—also a barrel. With liquid in it.

Get me a chance! Get me the thanks of Congress. Don't wait for the others—there isn't time—furnish them to me yourself, and let Congress ratify later. I have stayed away and let Congress alone for seventy-one years, and am entitled to the thanks. Congress knows this perfectly well; and I have long felt hurt that this quite proper and earned expression of gratitude has been merely felt by the House and never publicly uttered. Send me an order on the Sergeant-at-Arms. Quick! When shall I come? With love and a benediction, / Mark Twain [Paine's 1917 Mark Twain's Letters 801-2]. Note: the letter ran in the N.Y. Times, p.1, Dec. 9, 1906.

Sam then wrote to Kate D. Wiggin (Riggs):

Dear Mrs. Riggs: / I have telegraphed you & provoked you to say dam—and I am as sorry as I can be; sorry I can't be there Sunday; & not perfunctorily so, but most sincerely so, for I was going to see you, & have a good time; & moreover I am very sorry to break into your plans. But needs must when duty drives. It is may be that this improved copyright bill can be pushed to success; if so, there is only one way, not two: every member of Congress must be reasoned with individually. I am the only person that is willing to undertake this formidable enterprise, & perhaps the only one who has the gifts to do it 'ansomely. And so, I shall stay here & attend to it. The Speaker gives me his private room in the Capitol, & a servant to send for members, & I shall talk to all the members in urgent favor of the proposed copyright-limit of "the author's lifetime & 50 years after."

Sunday afternoon I shall talk to the President, & try to get him to send in a special message.

Forgive me—but don't forget me [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal (in Hartford): "Today came word that the King went to Washington on the copyright issue, & AB went with him" [MTP TS 149].

Daniel Carter Beard wrote from Flushing, NY to announce he was "the happy daddy of a bouncing baby boy" [MTP].

B.B. Fouts, "collector of relics," wrote from Seabrook, Tex. to Sam. Fouts had a cane supposedly made from the Florida, Mo. house that Sam once lived in. Fouts described the cane and wanted to know if it was authentic [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Never seen the house since he was 2½ years old—wasn't interested in it then & still less now."

Elsie Clews Parsons (Mrs. Herbert Parsons) wrote from 1229 Nineteenth St. NYC to introduce herself and invite Sam to lunch on Sunday at 1:30 p.m. [MTP].

Frederic Whyte wrote to Sam and enclosed an excerpt—Alfred Russel Wallace's (1823-1913) advocacy of phrenology—from Wallace's book The Wonderful Century; Its Successes and Its Failures. (1898).

Whyte asked for Sam's response, which he published (without Sam's permission) in the London Daily Graphic [MTP; Gribben 734]. Note: Sam supposed his reply was a "private answer" and would not be used in "a public way." See Jan. 29, 1907 complaint of the publication.

The New York Times, ran "Mark Twain in White Amuses Congressmen":

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Mark Twain spent a busy afternoon at the Capitol today, and for half an hour entertained the newspaper correspondents with a characteristic talk. Despite the blustering wind which swept down Pennsylvania Avenue, the author wore a suit of white flannels. In the members' gallery, which he first visited to watch the proceedings of the House, he attracted general attention.

Later Mr. Clemens visited the Speaker's room, and while awaiting the arrival of "Uncle Joe," entertained a dozen Congressmen, including Grosvenor, Payne, Daizell, and Foster, who hastened to pay him their respects. With the Speaker Mr. Clemens discussed briefly the pending Copyright bill. With William Dean Howells and a party of other authors and publishers, Mr. Clemens came here to be present at the hearings on this bill, which are now being conducted in the Senate reading room at the Congressional Library by the Committee on Patents of the Senate and the House.

With Mr. Howells, Edward Everett Hale, Thomas Nelson Page, and a number of other authors, he appeared before the committee this afternoon. The new Copyright bill extends the authors' copyright after the term of his life and for fifty years thereafter. It is also for the benefit of artists, musicians, and others, but the authors did most of the talking. F. D. Millet made a speech for the artists, and John Philip Sousa for the musicians.

Committee Enjoys Twain's Speech.

Mr. Clemens was the last speaker of the day, and its chief feature. He made a speech the serious parts of which created a strong impression, and the humorous parts set the Senators and Representatives in roars of laughter.

Chapters from "My Autobiography—VII" ran in the N.A.R. p.1089-95.

December 8 Saturday – At the New Willard Hotel, Washington, D.C., Sam wrote Emilie R. Rogers:

Oh, dear me I am ashamed! I forgot to telephone you (in my hurry) that I must rush off to Washington in the interest of the new copyright bill & couldn't keep my engagement for 5 p.m. yesterday with you. I am dreadfully sorry, & I apologize.

I came down to do a few days' or a week's lobbying, leaving to the others the speech-making before the committee; but yesterday afternoon when I was tired out & asleep in the Speaker's private room in the Capitol I was ordered to go before the Committee & speak; which I did; then I resumed my lobbying again, shall now go on with it from day to day. I tried to persuade Uncle Joe Cannon to smuggle me in on the floor of the House for lobbying purposes, but he won't. However, he has compromised by doing for me what he has not done for a lobbyist before, probably: he gave me his private room for as long as I want it, & a servant to invite members to come in & talk copyright; & so I shall stay here & conduct a strenuous private canvass of the House.

Clara invited you & Uncle Henry but I didn't know, when I left home, whether you had accepted or not. I hope I'll be there when you come, but I may be disappointed, for I must abide here & keep on striking while the iron is hot—for this a very important bill. Lobbying, man by man, buttonhole by buttonhole, is the only possible way to get it through, & there is no one to help me in this. It carried the bill of 22 years ago, & I am fully as shameless a lobbyist as I was then.

With love to you both [MTP].

Harper's Weekly ran a photo of Mark Twain in bed captioned: "The Musing Sage and—" juxtaposed with a drawing of the same scene captioned "The Accidental Little Girl in the Pillow." Under the illustrations a poem by L.J. Bridgman, "To Mark Twain." See insert

Muriel M. Pears wrote from Washington, D.C. to Sam.

My greatest and Dear Magician,

Is it possible you are in town and I have only this instant heard it? But I might have known, for only this morning I was thinking of you with a sudden vividness and actuality, so that I said aloud: "I do wish I had a little time to sit down and tell that Dear man what I had been feeling over his autobiography..." She asked if he might call on her if he was to be there awhile. She was staying with a friend and would sail for home next month [MTP]. Note: written on the letter, "She called at Capitol."

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

December 9 Sunday – Margaret H. Wentworth wrote from Wash. D.C. to Sam. She had "two young orphan nieces" under her care and asked if Twain might see them for a minute while in town [MTP].

December 10 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Home again—& the King is still in Washington. The papers are full of him, for he went down there with plenty of white clothes & people love to see him in them" [MTP TS 149].

David A. Munro for the North American Review wrote to Sam:

I am in distress over one of the first four pages of the new instalment of the autobiography, and the printer expects me to send them to the press tomorrow. That is why I pursue you to Washington.

On page 1218, Joe Goodman challenges Tom Fitch to duel and "modifies" him.

On page 1219, we expect the major to stand Joe up against Tom Fitch. But Joe is stood up with Steve Gillis and "modifies" Steve. What I would know at the last moment is if that is a slip of the pen....If it is all right as it stands, please telegraph me the words "Let it stand." [MTP]. Note: see Sam's reply in the "Dec. 10 after" entry.

The New York Times, Dec. 11, p.1 reported Sam's progress in Washington, D.C.

MARK TWAIN, LOBBYIST.

He Cuts Loose from Artists and Musicians on Copyright Bill.

Special to the New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—Uncle Joe Cannon did not comply with Mark Twain's request to get him the thanks of Congress, "in a hurry," so that Mark, in his new capacity as lobbyist, could go on the floor and seek votes for the Copyright bill. Uncle Joe would have done it if he could, for he would do anything for Mark, but even a Czar's power is limited.

However, he did the next best thing. He turned his private room over to Mark Twain today to do his lobbying in. As soon as the Speaker spread the tidings Congressmen began to pour in. Mark Twain talked incessantly for five hours and a half. He saw 180 members, very nearly half the membership of the House. All the leaders of both parties came in, Grosvenor, Dalzell, Payne, Williams, Champ Clark, and all the rest.

Mark Twain did not try to be funny with these 180 Congressmen. He fired solid argument at them, and when he got through he had learned something as well as they. He had learned that the authors had made a mistake in tying up their cause to that of the musicians, artists, and other professional men. He discovered that not even his influence and popularity were great enough to save the musicians and artists; that they were doomed anyhow, and that the authors were likely to fall with them unless the bill were split. He also learned that if it was split and the authors got a bill of their own before Congress, it would pass.

Alice Terne Glitterman for Public Education Assoc. of Wash. D.C. wrote to Sam, recollecting the time as a “tremulous Freshman in the corridors of Smith College” Twain had asked her the way to “Harry Tyler’s.” “Then she guided you to his awe-inspiring door and fled. Inquiry developed that you were YOU, and she always cherished the memory of your quip, and of the little merry walk with you along the halls of Fame.” She felt a beggar asking for “one whole evening of your time and voice” [MTP].

Margaret Lee wrote from Brooklyn to Sam. “I send you a copy of Senator Lodge’s Bill for Perpetual Copyright, and also Mr. C. D. Warner’s argument for it. I read that it was his last important piece of work. I am praying that you will succeed this time in this effort for common justice.” She enclosed several newspaper clippings in support of copyright legislation [MTP].

William A. Wetzel wrote from the High School in Trenton, NJ asking for a “message” for his students of “New Year’s Greetings” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Decline / Thank him for his suggestion”

December 10 after – Sam wrote on the back of David A. Munro’s Dec. 10, a likely telegram reply: “Make page twelve-twenty read ‘Joe tumbled Fitch down next morning with a bullet’ etc.” [MTP]. Note: Since Munro was up against a deadline, it may be Sam telegraphed him on Dec. 10 or 11. The MTP catalogs as “after 10 Dec.”

December 11 Tuesday – Sam sat for photographer Frances Benjamin Johnston (1864-1952) in her Washington, D.C. studio. He wore his white suit [Madsen 53]. Note: Johnston was a well-established professional who had photographed some of America’s prominent figures, including Theodore Roosevelt, Susan B. Anthony, Booker T. Washington, Andrew Carnegie, John Philip Sousa and others; She was the first official White House photographer. See p. 54 or print LC-J601-1305 or 1305A on Library of Congress website.

The New York Times, Dec. 12, p.1, “Twain’s Plan to Beat The Copyright Law,” datelined Dec. 11 from Washington, D.C. announced Mark Twain’s progress and activities:

He finished his legislative work in behalf of the Copyright bill to-day and will return to New York to-morrow morning.

“My duties as an occasional, unsalaried, professional lobbyist are at an end for the present,” he said.

He spent the day seeing Senators, Mr. Lodge having turned over his committee room for the purpose, as Mr. Cannon had turned over his own room yesterday. In the afternoon he and Albert Bigelow Paine, his secretary, went out to Rock Creek Cemetery for a drive.

Strangers Paw Him.

His stay here has been a sort of triumph. Wherever he has gone crowds of people have hurled themselves upon him to shake his hand. He cannot appear in the lobby of the Willard without becoming instantly the centre of a swarm of men and women, strangers to him, who fairly paw him in the exuberance of their joy.

This morning he registered his opinion of the elaborate thingumbobs out of which one has to pour cream in high-toned hotels.

“Paine,” he said, after he had tried to pour some cream into his cup and had landed it in the saucer, “Damn this—damn—Paine, I am frightfully short of adequate profanity.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Conflicting telegrams arrive, but a final one says that the King will arrive tomorrow” [MTP TS 149].

R.G. Casey wrote on R.G. Casey, Safes, Prague, Okla. Letterhead to Sam. “Dear Doctor—It has been handed down to me for generations that I am related to you by blood. Now, if this is true, I am not ashamed of it, if you are not. I have it this way. Your Mother's name, was Jane Lampton, her mother's name was Peggy Casey, daughter of Col. Wm. Casey of Kentucky. If that is true, your grand Mother Peggy Casey, and my grand father Green Casey, were brother and sister.... He would like to have a picture of the Clemens family and invited Sam to make his home in "sunny Oklahoma" [MTP]. Note: if correct, this would make R.G. Casey Sam's second cousin.

December 12 Wednesday – Sam returned to New York, and 21 Fifth Ave. [NY Times - above].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "This afternoon I went out to do an errand & on my return I found the King had arrived. He seemed sweeter & mellow than ever before. He can go away from me, but I shall not go away from him again unless he sends me" [MTP TS 149].

Miss Curtis Wager-Smith wrote on Plastic Club, Phila. letterhead to Sam, asking for help for copyrighting machine-made music, listing several organizations she'd applied to which did not know [MTP]. Note: on or just after this date Sam instructed Lyon to reply to her:

Apply to Librarian of Cong for bill before Cong. will see that machine made music has been intruded into it, & machine m. music is a matter for the patent office to handle—and has no place in literature If she will obtain & read the existing law she will be satisfied with it. It is perfectly sane—and the only thing desired is that Congress shall say yes or no as to the extension of time required by those who are anxious for it [MTP].

Miss Wagner-Smith also pasted a clipping from The Press, Phila. to the letter, "Mark Twain, Lobbyist." The article described Sam's efforts in seeing 180 members of the House of Representatives, arguing for the Bill. It also paraphrased Sam that it was a mistake to tie copyright of literary works up with music. Wagner wrote, wasn't it about time someone did something about copyright protection? [MTP].

Mr. Vere Goldthwaite (b. 1870) wrote from Boston to Isabel Lyon, to thank her "the sweet courtesy" with which she received him when he called at Sam's house the day before He apologized for any impropriety. He enclosed a clipping dated Dec. 9, 1906 from the Boston Sunday Globe, which held a large picture of a young and distinguished looking Goldthwaite, "author of a New Book on Ingersoll," yes, Robert G. Ingersoll, hero to Twain. The book was yet a MS which may explain why this man chose to knock on Sam's door [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the env. "My Compliments." Gribben supplies that this book, The Philosophy of Ingersoll was indeed published, though gives no date beyond Sam's 1906 copy. It was inscribed to Clemens:

"To Mark Twain, / with special reference to the following lines, 'I believe in the medicine of mirth and in what I might call the longevity of laughter. Every man who has caused real, true, honest mirth, has been a benefactor of the human race' /and with the kind regards of / Vere Goldthwaite / Dec. 1906"

William Holsten for New York American wrote to Sam that likely he'd seen letters of Col. Cowalsky, counsel for King Leopold of Belgium, accusing Sam of acting under a retainer from the British government. Rumors to the effect that Sam was out of the Congo movement due to his friendship with H.H. Rogers. "I have made several fruitless efforts to see you in regard to these matters. Will you not consent to make some statement in connection with them?" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter: "If the fool had come to the hotel instead of sending his damn note we could have talked. Even if he'd seen him there would have been nothing to talk about for Cowalsky's suggestion & the other sug. are mere silliness & not worth any attention."

H. Lenare, Jr. wrote from New Morton House, Erie, Pa. letterhead noting Sam's remark in the NY Journal of "how ridiculous the dress of the Male sex is." Lenare supported such a movement, perhaps begun by getting "together a number of prominent men such as, Literary, Doctors and Professors who have made health and comfort a study" [MTP].

December 13 Thursday – Clemens' A.D. of this day included: As regards the coming American Monarchy [MTP Autodict3].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

This morning when I told the King apropos of AB's friends that there was one of them that he didn't like & that it was Stedman, he said, "Oh, no, I only despise him, I don't dislike him."

AB is going to live here in the house to be the King's billiard player.

Strength is flowing back into my veins & I am glad to be alive.

Mr. Clemens said that the best bathing he ever did was in Etretat where he could stand out on a porch & pour buckets of sea water over himself & the water ran away through the slits in the flooring [MTP TS 149-150].

The Knickerbocker Publishing Co., N.Y.C. wrote to Sam asking to go over the sketch of his life they were preparing for their forthcoming work the National American Biography [MTP]. On or after this date Sam replied: "Can come see me / Have nothing to do with blowing my own trumpet except when I do it with my own mouth. I do it in autobiography—don't care how degraded I am in that" [MTP].

James F. Mallinckrodt wrote from St. Louis to support Sam in his efforts at copyright legislation. "Appearing in white attire, in winter, in the capitol of the country, in any one else would have been cranky." [MTP].

Miss Cally Thomas Ryland (1868?-1947), Richmond, Virginia's first outstanding journalist-columnist-author, wrote from Richmond, Va. that since a young girl it had been her ambition to meet Mark Twain; now she was 35 and still wanted just as intensely to do so [MTP].

Julia Barnett Rice (Mrs. Isaac L. Rice) for the Society of Suppression of Noise, NYC wrote to ask Sam for his "help in our fight." She enclosed editorials (not in the file) [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "Perfectly willing to be on advisory board but can do no work / if younger I would."

Of the selections from Twain's A.D.'s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto's choices, was a section entitled "The Plutocracy." Included in that section were nine segments, the first dictated this day and titled, "The Drift Toward Centralized Power." Sam reported the speech of Elihu Root, Secretary of State, that prophesied accumulation of power in the Federal government; Sam felt America was drifting toward monarchy; that it was human nature [61-66].

December 14 Friday – C.B. Fleet, druggist, Lynchburg, Va. wrote a humorous anecdote prefaced by the tale that Sam once told of a chairman of a lecture committee, complimenting him on "Heathen Chinees," one of Bret Harte's poems. It seems just after a play of Col. Sellers there, a man thought to be intelligent said about the play, "if you've seen one Shakespeare play, you've seen them all" [MTP].

J. Adelphi Gottlieb for the Medical Corps wrote to Sam that they were forwarding a "diploma of Honary member of the International Sanitary and Public Safety Commission," and requested his photo, and "such personal data as you may care to send for the Permanent archives" [MTP].

December 15 Saturday – Harper's Weekly published Mark Twain's letter to Henry Mills Alden to observe Alden's 70th birthday. The letter was written sometime between Oct. 22 and Nov. 10, 1906.

ALDEN,—dear and ancient friend—it is a solemn moment. You have now reached the age of discretion. You have been a long time arriving. Many years ago you docked me on an article because the subject was too old; later, you docked me on an article because the subject was too new; later still, you docked me on an article because the subject was betwixt and between. Once, when I wrote a Letter to Queen Victoria, you did not put it in the respectable part of the Magazine, but interred it in that potter's field, the Editor's Drawer. As a result, she never answered it. How often we recall, with regret, that Napoleon once shot at a magazine editor and missed him and killed a publisher. But we remember, with charity, that his intentions were good.

You will reform, now, Alden. You will cease from these economies, and you will be discharged. But in your retirement you will carry with you the admiration and earnest good wishes of the oppressed and toiling scribes. This will be better than bread. Let this console you when the bread fails. You will carry with you another thing, too—the affection of the scribes; for they all love you in spite of your crimes. For you bear a kind heart in your breast, and the sweet and winning spirit that charms away all hostilities and animosities, and makes of your enemy your friend and keeps him so. You have reigned over us thirty-six years, and, please God, you shall reign another thirty-six—“and peace to Mahmoud on his golden throne!” /Always yours, Mark

The Harper's Weekly article was entitled “Mark Twain Soliloquizes on ‘Being Good’ and Decides to Let ‘Good Enough’ Alone,” p. 1790-1. Tenney: “Photographs of MT in a rocking chair on a porch at Dublin...with his comments. Reproduced in facsimile is his introductory note: ‘This series of 7 photographs registers with scientific precision, stage by stage, the progress of a moral purpose through the mind of the human race’s Oldest Friend SLC’” [“A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 190].

Herbert Welsh, a vice-president of the Anti-Imperialist League, wrote to Sam to reinterest him in the Philippine cause [MTP]. On or after this date Sam replied: “Interests are full to the brim—cannot find the time to add another one, they poison my life. The woes of the wronged & the unfortunate poison my life & make it so undesirable that pretty often I wish I were 90 instead of 70” [MTP].

Miss Bessie Hupp wrote from Chanute Kans. to ask Sam where she might get her song published [MTP].

Julia Barnett Rice wrote from NYC to thank Sam for going on the board of the Society for the Suppression of Noise [MTP].

John S. Phillips for American Magazine wrote to advise Sam that they were putting him on their complimentary list for another year. The magazine had changed hands and in many ways was new [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote “Thank them handsomely very much obliged for extending the courtesy of that excellent magazine.”

December 16 Sunday – Mr. and Mrs. Edwin R. Ray wrote, from Tacoma, Wash. to express thanks for HF—their two “fine boys” are always “instantly delighted” by having it read to them [MTP].

December 17 Monday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam and declined an invitation to lecture from Mrs. Caverly [MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: The coincidence of the Kaiser’s and the portier’s appreciation of “Old Times on the Mississippi,” expressed almost in the same moment—The coincidence of Clemens reflecting on the definition of the word civilization, and then picking up the morning paper and finding his very ideas set forth by a writer who attributed the marrow of his remarks to Clemens [MTP Autodict3].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Oh the dear queer foreign people who write such nice funny English to the King. Here is one now, a woman from Argentina who wishes “health & good luck to the Mark Twain. Do the favor to write mi on the present tarjet an idea; thanking you for the same, your humble, S. Monica Victoria Gomez.” I find that tarjeta is Spanish for post card—so of course to her tarjet is the English of it [MTP TS 150].

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam: “Dear M.T. Here is what Andrew Carnegie says of What is Man. I’ll call on you in a day or two.” Evidently he had sent one of the 250 privately printed booklets to Carnegie, who wrote, in part: “Thanks for the volume. It will startle the ordinary man, but I don’t see that it goes much deeper than we were before. ‘The New Knowledge’, Prof. Duncan (Barnes), you should read. All is electric and one substance—of course the Brain is) somehow governs the Universe, the ant and the man included” [MTP].

Nellie C. Magennis wrote from Randolph, Vt. to ask Sam if he rec’d her prior letter and sheet music. It was all she had to earn money from, writing music, to support her 93 year old mother [MTP].

December 18 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to Frederic Whyte’s Dec. 7, which included an excerpt from Alfred Russel Wallace’s book The Wonderful Century containing advocacy of phrenology. Whyte asked if Sam had studied phrenology (reading of bumps on the scalp).

I never did profoundly study phrenology; therefore I am neither qualified to express an opinion about it nor entitled to do so. In London 33 or 34 years ago, I made a small test of phrenology for my better information. I went to Fowler under an assumed name, and he examined my elevations and depressions and gave me a chart which I carried home to the Langham Hotel and studied with great interest and amusement—the same interest and amusement which I should have found in the chart of an imposter who had been passing himself off for me, and who did not resemble me in a single sharply defined detail. I waited three months and went to Mr. Fowler again, heralding my arrival with a card bearing both my name and my nom de guerre. Again I carried away an elaborate chart. It contained several sharply defined details of my character, but it bore no recognizable resemblance to the earlier chart. These experiences gave me a prejudice against phrenology which has lasted until now. I am aware that the prejudice should have been against Fowler, instead of against the art; but I am human and that is not the way that prejudices set. / Very truly yours ... [MTP]. Note: this has been labeled to “unidentified” but fits with date and subject with Whyte’s incoming of Dec. 7, 1906.

Sam also wrote on a card to James R. Osgood regarding an appointment. Source gives only “about 35 words,” but does not give the text [MTP: Parke-Bernet Catalogs, 30 Oct. 1940].

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: Clemens and Albert Bigelow Paine go to Washington, in company with the members of the League Committee, to plead for the extension of the Copyright bill [MTP Autodict3].

George Barton wrote from Phila. to Sam, enclosing a large page article from the Oct. 16, 1904 issue of The Oregonian, “Who is Foremost Private Citizen of America?” picturing Edison, Cleveland, Carnegie and Twain, this last section written by John Kendrick Bangs [MTP].

John W. Crampton wrote on Union League, New Haven, Conn. notepaper to invite Sam to their annual dinner, usually on Jan. 17 but which could be arranged to suit [MTP].

A.L. Hardy wrote from Long Beach, Calif. to Sam. Hardy had been on the committee charged with bringing Sam to the Palmer House, Chicago feed for Grant by the Armies of the Tennessee and Cumberland. Hardy described the all night party with only seven left at dawn, and listed all who remained and what had become of each [MTP]. Note: Isabel Lyon wrote: “Remember that night very well. The Chicago Press Club was organized that night toward 7 in the morning—is still in existence.” Nov. 13-14, 1879 see entries.

Helen Keller wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens: / I heard with deep concern what you were doing in Washington the other day, and I have been so full of alarm and solicitude for you ever since, I must needs take the arduous climb to your “seven-terraced summit” and give you an admonition.

I hope you got the copyright law you wanted, and that you will get everything else you want, if it is really good for you. But pray, pray, do not try for a copyright that shall last as long as your books. Three thousand years is quite long enough in all reason. To think of eternal copyright is greed unlimited, and would hardly tally with your avowed purpose of making the Congo Free State a land of bounty—and with your costume in Washington! Were you in that white costume practising by degrees for the Ascension robe? If you were, beware now, take heed what you do, lest you should wear penitential sackcloth.

I have lately had several chapters of your autobiography read to me. I need hardly tell you with what delighted fingers I listened to them. You seemed present in very truth. All your power, all your generous vehemence, your fiery eloquence for the good of humanity were there. For you always are you, and genius is but You made manifest as a spirit, an idea to many. You have made me love your dear wife and daughter as if I had indeed held their hands. You three are united in my heart.

Perhaps my teacher and I may go to New York to attend a public meeting for the blind sometime during January, and then nothing will do but we must see you. What you said in their behalf last March greatly helped, and continues to help the workers for the blind. But you, as a reformer, know that ideas must be driven home again and again. So, although I cannot add anything to the wisdom which you and Mr. Choate uttered, I can chirp where the lions roared last year. We and our cause shall stand sure with your dear companionship for support.

By the way, do you think it will be possible to interest Mr. Rogers in the work? He has done so much for me, I do not like to ask any more, even for others. But if you happen to have opportunity, perhaps you can tell him what we are doing, and let him see that our work is practical, and may appeal to the judgment of a great business man as well as to his heart.

With kindest regards from Mr. and Mrs. Macy, and with loving wishes for a happy Christmas, I am, / Affectionately your friend ...[MTP]. Note: Sam replied Dec. 23.

A.G. Welker wrote from Sparta, Wisc. to Sam thinking there might be family connections between them, “that your Father and my Mother’s Father were brothers, My Mother’s Name was Clemmens” [MTP].

December 19 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Dec. 13 from Miss Cally Thomas Ryland. “I am thankful to say that such letters as yours do come—as you have divined—with a happy frequency. They refresh my life, they give it value; like yours, they are always welcome, and I am always grateful for them. / Sincerely Yours ...” [MTP]. Note: Ryland used a common device for humorist—she created a fictional “alter ego” who could get away with speaking blunt and outlandish truths, much like Twain’s “Mr. Brown.” She was the society editor for the Richmond News Leader. Her first novel appeared in 1904, The Taming of Betty, which later became a silent film.

Sam also wrote to “Champ” Clark (James Beauchamp Clark) (1850-1921), prominent Democrat from the 1890s on; Speaker of the House (1911-1919). “I thank you ever so much for letting me see those cordial & welcome words. Approval is what we live by; without it life is not valuable. And so, I thank you again” [MTP].

Clemens’ A.D. of this day included: Clemens gives his reasons for insisting upon an extension of the Copyright bill—arranged in the form of an interview with a member of Congress [MTP Autodict3].

Henry Darracott Allison wrote from Dublin, N.H. to Sam, wondering with the “approach of January 1st” would Sam take the Upton house for the following summer? [MTP].

Georgie Fyfe wrote from Mauritius to Sam, recalling the many happy times she’d spent with the Clemenses in Vienna. She felt his spirit haunting there. She was there recovering from an appendectomy. She still often saw the Stuarts, and “little Daisy has made a great success of her training with Lechetitsky” [sic] [MTP].

December 20 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Geraldine Farrar” [MTP TS 150].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Capt. Osborn tells to Bret Harte, in a Californian restaurant, his adventure of falling overboard and his rescue. A tramp overhears him, claims to be his rescuer, is liberally rewarded, and afterwards discovered to be an impostor [MTP Autodict3].

William R. Coe sent Sam a large fold out map of Bermuda. No letter [MTP].

Samuel Post Davis wrote from Carson City, Nev. to Sam.

I was visiting Joe Goodman last week at his home 1423 Central Ave. Alameda. I write to tell you that he is on the verge of extreme poverty through the fire and earthquake in S.F. Nearly all his holdings are now non productive and he told me that he was hunting unsuccessfully for something to do and by spring his savings will be exhausted.

It occurred to me that you with your influence with Harpers might be able to secure some congenial employment for him in his declining years. It seems a pity to see one of the finest intellects in the country and the best heart in the living world, doomed to poverty in the sunset of his life [MTP]. Note: Davis confided that Joe did not know he was writing about Joe's situation.

December 21 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

Electric music. Bermuda.

The King is planning to go to Bermuda if Mr. Twichell can go too, & I'm to go as valet & myself. I've written to Mr. Twichell & now we're waiting. Mr. Clemens would like to go there for the summer & has had me look up the temperature & other things. He thinks he'd like the isolation, but the lack of companionship would make more desolation for him than anything else, for he of all people must have companionship—mental companionship.

This afternoon Mr. Clemens & I went to see the working of the Electrical Music invented by Cahill. They have their intricate & marvelous machinery at 39th Street & Broadway & as we stood in the show room by the intricate keyboard with at least 300 keys, the clear bell like tones came to us from a chandelier or from a great hydrangia plant. Most wonderful of all was the musical wave of sound that came through an arc light. The more intense the light, the greater the sound. Mr. Clemens was deeply moved, as he always is by the wonderful or the impressive or the dramatic; at such times he cannot speak. The men crowded about him for his comment but he hadn't much of any to give. He has asked to have it installed in the house for the New Year's party.

We left Mr. Gardenhire at the house & found Barry Faulkner there on our return. Barry has won the prix de Rome & in January sails for Italy to be away 3 years [MTP TS 151]. Note: Samuel Major Gardenhire (1855-1923), attorney, author of The Long Arm (1906) and others. See Gribben 251.

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Mainly from Susy's Biography—about the "Christian Union" article; the mother's methods of punishment, etc., with a few comments by Clemens [MTP Autodict3].

H. Levey, Cleanser and Dyer wrote to acknowledge Sam's order for cleaning three 3-piece white suits and cape, totaling $10; returned Dec. 23 noted on bill [MTP].

Chapters from "My Autobiography—VIII" ran in the N.A.R. p.1217-24.

December 22 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to thank Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers) for the Christmas cigars and the kind remembrance. He would come up "pretty soon" to wish a Merry Christmas in person as he'd "worked off the several-days' engagements which Clara had piled" on [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mrs. Fiske's play" [MTP TS 151-152].

The New York Times, Dec. 23, p.2 ran an article about Mark Twain and the telephone, quoting him from the previous day, Dec. 22:

TWAIN AND THE TELEPHONE

He Hears the Telharmonium and Incidentally Tells a Story.

"The trouble with these beautiful, novel things is that they interfere so with one's arrangements. Every time I see or hear a new wonder like this I have to postpone my death right off. I couldn't possibly leave the world until I have heard this again and again."

Mark Twain said this as he lounged on the keyboard dais in the telharmonium music room in upper Broadway, swinging his legs, yesterday afternoon. The instrument has just played the "Lohengrin Wedding March" for him.

"You see, I read about this in THE NEW YORK TIMES last Sunday, and I wanted to hear it. If a great Princess marries, what is to hinder all the lamps along the streets on her wedding night playing that march together? Or, if a great man should die—I, for example—they could all be tuned up for a dirge."

"Of course, I know that it is intended to deliver music all over the town through the telephone, but that hardly appeals as much as it might to a man who for years, because of his addiction to strong language, has tried to conceal his telephone number, just like a chauffeur running away after an accident.

"When I lived up in Hartford, I was the very first man, in that part of New England at least, to put in a telephone—, but it was constantly getting me into trouble because of the things I said carelessly. And the family were all so thoughtless. One day when I was in the garden, fifty feet from the house, somebody on the long distance wire who was publishing a story of mine, wanted to get the title.

"Well, the title was the first sentence, 'Tell him to go to hell.' Before my daughter got it through the wire and through him there was a perfect eruption of profanity in that region. All New England seemed to be listening in, and each time my daughter repeated it she did so with rising emphasis. It was awful. I broke into a cold perspiration, and while the neighborhood rang with it, rushed in and implored her to desist. But she would have the last word, and it was 'hell,' sure enough, every time.

"Soon after I moved to New York; perhaps that had something to do with my moving. When I got there and asked for a fire-proof telephone, the company sent up a man to me. I opened up all my troubles to him, but he laughed and said it was all right in New York. There was a clause in their contract, he said, allowing every subscriber to talk in his native tongue, and of course they would not make an exception against me. That clause has been a godsend to me."

Speaker published a review by J. Wylie of "Mark Twain's Autobiography" in the N.A.R. Tenney: "A general, appreciative discussion, especially praising MT's love for Livy" ["A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 191].

Harper's Weekly published an anonymous article "Writing His Autobiography" p. 1845. Tenney: "A full page cartoon, showing MT, in furs, writing and leaning against a mile-post reading '71 Years Young'; nearby is an overturned automobile on which the front license plate reads 'Serious Life'" [42].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP as misdated.

December 23 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied with thanks to the Dec. 18 of Helen Keller.

O, thank you for those lovely words!

Now as to your January visit: we must certainly meet then, & have a talk.

Another thing. You say,

"As a reformer, you know that ideas must be driven home again & again."

Yes, I know it; & by old experience I know that speeches & documents & public meetings are a pretty poor & lame way of accomplishing it. Last year I proposed a sane way—one which I had practised with success for a quarter of a century—but I wasn't expecting it to get any attention, & it didn't.

Give me a battalion of 200 winsome young girls & matrons, & let me tell them what to do & how to do it, & I will be responsible for shining results. If I could mass them on the stage in front of the audience & instruct them there, I could make a public meeting take hold of itself & do something really valuable for once. Not that the real instructing would be done there, for it wouldn't; it would be previously done privately, & merely repeated there. But it isn't going to happen—the good old way will be stuck to: there'll be a public meeting: with music, & prayer, & a wearying report, & a verbal description of the marvels the blind do, & 17 speeches—then the call, upon all present who are still alive, to contribute. This hoary program was invented in the idiot asylum, & will never be changed. It's function is to breed hostility to good causes.

Some day somebody will recruit my 200—my dear beguilesome Knights of the Golden Fleece—and you will see them make good their ominous name.

Mind, we must meet! not in the grim & ghastly air of the platform, mayhap, but by the friendly fire—here at 21.

Affectionately your friend ... [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Very cold & the King started to make calls but came home when he reached 42nd St., because it would be too cold for the coachman. Later he started off to go to Lily Burbank's & there he met Isabel Hapgood—"a devil"—who repeatedly assailed him with her anti Xian Science talk. 3 times she made her attack & he came home hating her cordially—savagely. But we had a dear dinner à deux & then music & talk about the party to come. It's so good to hear the King plan a program & to see his sweetness. I was tired & had a pain in the top of my spine, but the evening with him banished all that [MTP TS 152].

H.B. Magill (Harry Byron Magill, b. 1872; author) wrote from Chicago on Great Northern Hotel notepaper wishing him the best in his fight for copyright legislation.

Your mission to the nation's capitol is being closely watched and read with deep interest by the writer and by many thousands at large. It is a noble struggle for principle on your part and when achieved, as it will be, you will not personally participate in the benefits but knowing that your children will live to enjoy the fruit of your labor will give you unbounded joy and happiness in your declining years [MTP].

Mark Twain's name was again used by a group lobbying for reform. The New York Times, p.SM4, "The Anti-Noise Society," by Julia Barnett Rice (Mrs. Isaac L. Rice) reported:

The Anti-Noise Society

The movement to form the Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noise has met with a response so general, from public officials and citizens in every walk of life, that the day seems to be at hand for a general crusade in that direction. A few days ago Mr. Clemens ("Mark Twain") sent me a charming letter [not extant] through his secretary in which he expressed the wish that he were young again that he might work hard for the movement, but adding that we could use his name in the crusade against noise.

December 24 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

C.C. goes to spend tonight with the Gilders & she'll hang up her stocking. The King wanted to be represented too in that stocking, so he sent me up to Vantine's to buy a pin—it happened to be a jade pin & is good. The barber came to trim the King's hair. The tailor came to try on his new grey suit. I went a'shopping & then Bynner came to dinner. He hasn't been well for a long time. We went up to C.C.'s room & she sang for us. She sang charmingly & Bynner was brought out of an evilish mood by her "queer voice." It is a strongly individual voice [MTP TS 152].

Charles S. Smith for the People's Institute wrote to Sam discussing a "scheme" which he hoped would meet with Sam's approval. He wanted Sam to serve on a General Committee [MTP]. On or after this date Sam replied: "I am quite willing he shall use my name in so good a cause, but I take him at his word that it requires of me no activities as I'm too old & too well loaded up to furnish any" [MTP].

Samuel Post Davis wrote again to Sam, discussing plans and projects to help Joe Goodman from impending poverty. He was selling stock and had a promise from Duneka at Harpers for $150 for an article.

We must not delay in this matter.

Money is impossible here in Carson. I can't raise a dollar on state or county warrants and both banks are busted and will not open until Jan[.]

I enclose the letter [not extant] that you may fully realize the necessity of immediate action but I have led Joe to believe that I have written direct to Harpers. I have written you as you are the only one in N.Y. that knows Joe and I am sure Harpers will move when you ask [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam enclosing a draft for $88.67, Sam's share of the Buffalo property rent up to Jan. 1. He complained of neuritis and mentioned a trip to New York to take "electrical treatments" [MTP]. Lyon wrote on the letter: "This family wouldn't require him to come here we'd have gone to his hotel if we'd known he was here. Wish him a happy N.Y."

Joe Twichell wrote a short note to Sam. "Yes, indeed, I will go to Bermuda with you, and be overjoyed to. Hurra! Hurra!!" He wanted to know the date of departure [MTP].

December 25 Tuesday Christmas – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam inscribed in a copy of What is Man? to Neltje Blanchan DeGraff Doubleday (1865-1918) (Mrs. Frank N. Doubleday) :

Dear Mrs. Doubleday: / This book has wandered into my hands, & as it is too delicate & pretty for a person like me, & just right for a person like you, I wish to beg you to take it. / With the affectionate regards of a long-time friend—to wit / SL. Clemens / New York, Xmas, 1906 [MTP: Christie's catalogs, May 20, 1988, Item 156]. Note: Mrs. Doubleday often wrote under the pseudonym of Neltje Blanchan, and was a significant nature writer and contributor in Atlantic Monthly and Harper's. See also Gribben 200.

Sam also inscribed a copy of Eve's Diary to Percy Stickney Grant:

Dear Neighbor Grant: / Do not cast this friendly token aside on account of the pictures. Skip the pictures. I didn't make the pictures. But the letter-press is safe; I made the letter-press. I prefer the pictures, myself, but they have been condemned by the Charlton Village Library, because it has a standard of indecency of its own, & these pictures have failed to reach it. / A merry Christmas to you! / SL. Clemens / Xmas, 1906 [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of Eve's Diary to Katy Leary: "To Katy Leary with the affectionate regards of her age-long friend. The Author. New York, Xmas, 1906" [MTP: American Art Assoc-Anderson Galleries Catalogs, Feb. 15-16 1934, Item 65].

Sam also inscribed a photograph of himself to Henry Rawcliffe: "Truly yours, Mark Twain. Dec. 25, 1906 to Henry Rawcliffe." At the top of the mat Sam wrote an aphorism from Chapter IX of PW: "It is easy to find fault, if one has that disposition. There was once a man who, not being able to find any other fault with his coal, complained that there were too many prehistoric toads in it" [MTP: Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogs, Feb. 23, 1954, Item 118].

Sam ate Christmas dinner with the Rogers family [MTHHR 622]. Note: n1 of source: “Miss Lyon notes in her journal for that day that he was waiting to see ‘what kind of an indigestion’ he would get from all ‘the mince pie and plum pudding mixed together he had eaten.’”

While spending Christmas with the Rogerses, Sam inscribed a copy of The $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories to H.H. Rogers’ youngest daughter, Mai Rogers Coe: “To Mrs. William R. Coe / Merry Christmas! December 25, 1906. / Taking the pledge will not make bad liquor good, but it will improve it. M.T.” [Sotheby’s NY, June 18, 2002, Lot 128].

Jean Clemens’ diary: “Father’s ‘Birds of North America’ is a beautiful book and will prove very useful indeed” [Gribben 675: TS in DV13a, MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Christmas—and I’ve spent a lot of it with the King—both before he went out to the Rogers’s for dinner—for C.C. stayed a long time at the Gilders’ & it seems dreadful for the King to be much alone—and after he came back I went down to his room & for nearly 2 hours we talked with a solid frankness. He told me how Gardenhire was drawing up papers to make AB literary executor—but that isn’t the place for AB & C.C. would not wish him to occupy it—so he will be surprised to learn of an annulment of that situation. I read a lot of the “Orion” auto-ms. aloud to dear mother this afternoon. She does love it so—and then we went down to the Brevoort for some sweetbreads & a bottle of Sauterne. On the way out I had a surprise for her, for I had asked the King if I might bring her to salute him in his bed & she was in the sweetest flutter of excitement when she went in & he talked to her about the mince pie & plum pudding he had eaten for dinner, & he was waiting to see what kind of an indigestion he’d get out of it [MTP TS 153].

Tryphosa Bates-Batcheller sent a 3”x5” purple card of Merry Christmas and Happy New Year 1907 [MTP].

Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam. “Knowing how busy you are and also how tired you are I do not wish to make you more so by taking up time but I do want to wish you a very merry Christmas. I hope that Santa has many good things in store for you, the Coming Year, including your copyright law” [MTAq 31]. Note: Sam replied, on or just after this day, also by telegram: “Wish you same and good health and happiness” [ibid.].

December 26 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) in Tuxedo Park, N.Y. After musing over who it was that called and said her name was Mrs. Rogers, Sam offered this fictional dialogue about going to Bermuda in summer.

Naturally I came home yesterday almost entirely convinced that Bermuda-in-summer & suicide are interchangeable terms. By midnight I had almost come to the conclusion to retire from the experiment.

Then I thought I would talk with Abraham about it & be guided by his advice. So I went there, & crept into his bosom, stirred him out of his dreams, & stated my case. He said,

“Who was it that said it was a bad summer climate?”

“Oh, Broughton, Coe, the Admiral—in fact all the family.”

“And your niece?”

“Yes.”

“What do they know about it?”

“They don’t know. But they have heard.”

“Heard?”

“Yes.”

“What kind of evidence is heard?”

“I—well, I dunno.”

+ + + (Reflection)

“When were you here last?”

"A little over 3 centuries ago."

"How did you find my bosom then—considered as a climate?"

"Well—er—"

"Oh, speak out!"

"Well, it was pretty damp & sweltery."

"But on the whole, comfortable?"

"Y-e-s—oh, quite."

"You had just come from visiting your Uncle Harry. How was his place, for climate?"

"Oh, insufferably warm & dry!"

"Now then, how should you regard an average between my climate & his'n"

"Oh, prime—just the thing!"

"All right—that is exactly what Bermuda in summer is. With this advantage—that there you have sweet sea-breezes instead of brimstone-fumes. It wouldn't answer for your niece, I grant you that. She is young, & unseasoned. But you are old & mouldy & seasoned. Ask Peter about her—he knows. Take my advice: try Bermuda."

So that settled it, & made me once more anxious to make the experiment.

11:45 Twichell is ready to go—as per letter just received.

11:50. Miss Lyon has telephoned Will Coe, & he is securing the passages for Jan. 2.

It is time to get up.

Many many many thanks for the picture, Mary dear—it is excellent [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Clemens' experiments in phrenology with Orson Squire Fowler; also in palmistry—General verdict; he had no sense of humor—His speech before the copyright committees of Congress [MTP Autodict3].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Gardenhire came at 2:30. The King & C.C. went to hear young MacMillan play & the King liked him very much. AB came back when we didn't quite expect him. Mrs. Gilder was here for dinner & the King abused the piano as an instrument to his heart's content. He does hate the piano so. This morning came Mr. Twichell's letter with Hurra! Hurra! in it, & the King echoed it—so I rushed up to my telephone to ask Mr. Coe to see about our passage—he got it—& we're to sail on Jan. 2nd. We're going to try to find a house down there for the King thinks he'd like to spend the summer there. They tell him that the atmosphere is so damp there that his boots will mildew over night—but he calmly says, "& suppose they do" [MTP TS 153-154].

Outerbridge & Co. Agents for Quebec Steamship Co. sent a letter of introduction for Clemens and Twichell to Mr. James A. Conyers, their agent in Hamilton, Bermuda [MTP].

Minna C. Smith wrote to Sam, having heard from Gilder that Sam would soon be going to Bermuda. She offered a rental there [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on letter, "Would like price / dimensions, situation etc."

December 27 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Nov. 9 from David M. Jones.

Dear Father Jones: /It is a pleasant & welcome greeting and I thank you cordially for it.

The prospect of studying Welsh Over There does not depress me, no, it cheers me. I have been trying to contrive ways to avoid that end of the hereafter because all its described aspects and conditions are so unthinkable stupid and uninviting, but I feel encouraged about it now, and am going to reform and make a try for it. But, mind you don't fail me. If you do, I shant stay; I will resign my place and come down and join you.

Sincerely yours, and therewith a Merry Xmas to you [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: Mind Cure comments. The sketch entitled "Luck," and the meeting with Lord Wolseley, the hero of the sketch [MTP Autodict3].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Oh the dear King—Tonight when I walked into the billiard room with 2 pair of scarlet stockings—one pair for Bynner—one for the King to wear as Siamese twins in the show—he was so taken with the color that he said he'd like to wear them all the time for he loves gaudy things. In fact he'd "like to dress like a nigger". He was dear at dinner—(C.C. has gone to Katonah for a day or so & AB was the 3rd). We were speaking of Jews when he said, waving his hand in the way he does to express vastness, "The Jews are increasing so, and increasing so, that soon there'll be enough of an audience for another crucifixion." Over the telephone tonight Lily Burbank said that at the little reception on Sunday when people were invited to meet Mons. le Braz, they left Monsieur in a body when the King came in—& they never left him an instant, they loved him so [MTP TS 154]. Note: Anatole Le Braz (1859-1926), was know as the "Bard of Brittany." He was known for his charm and the Government of France sent him of foreign cultural missions 20 times. In 1906 he lectured at Harvard.

Minnie Maddern Fiske wrote to Isabel Lyon asking for Twain's signature in a copy of HF she sent [MTP].

John Temple Graves wrote for The Atlanta Georgian to Sam. He pointed out that Clemens had never been to Atlanta, and that there was a dedication of a new Masonic Temple there between Jan. 1 and the Spring that they'd like to have him come for. "I recall most pleasantly that my last meeting with you was on the day on which we were both the guests of the President during the early part of the present year" [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam confirming the Bermuda trip. He would "come down Tuesday so as to be there by mid-afternoon" [MTP].

December 28 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

"Puppy chew the soap."

"Mr Clemens do you care to contribute to the Booth Memorial Fund?"

"No I don't. I hate this idea of celebrities scratching each other's backs & I don't want anybody to be asked to contribute anything—for me!" [MTP TS 154-155].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: From Susy's Biography: some of the stories Clemens used to tell; tribute to Clemens from Andrew Lang—Clemens' speech for Booth dinner—the game of pegs for remembering dates—Clemens is found laughing over his own book. He comments upon this—also upon the mystery of style—impossible for an author to conceal his own peculiar style—The coincidence of Oliver Wendell Holmes reading of death of relative, remarking that his name was incorrect because Dr. Holmes's father, who baptized him had lost the slip of paper on which name was written, & the finding of the slip by Dr. Holmes immediately afterwards— The coincidence of the Bessie Stone letter & the coming upon "Mary" in "Huck Finn" immediately after [MTP Autodict3].

Frederick T. Leigh for Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam explaining their position on advance advertising for forthcoming books, in reply to Sam's complaint that there had been none on CS book [MTP]. On or after this day on the back of Harpers' letter, Sam gave instructions to Isabel Lyon how to reply. "Tell him I understand the whole situation now & approve of it. & as to that full lengthened white clothed apparition—does he want to use it in that book—or shall he hand it to some other mag—because they want it" [MTP].

American Assoc. for the Advancement of Science, NY sent Sam a membership card and a certificate for being an elected member, signed by William H. Welch, President [MTP].

Manly B. Curry wrote on Army and Navy notepaper, Manila, Phillipines to Sam. Curry had a month's leave coming and wanted to meet Sam [MTP].

Samuel Post Davis wrote to Sam. In part: [MTP].

My Dear Twain. / I have written an article for the Journal and American, of N.Y. entitled "Twain at Long and Short Range." It treats of the Harper feed at Delmonicos, briefly and more of the little lunch of beer and sandwiches at that 14th St joint.

I have requested Sam Chamberlain, of the Journal to submit the proofs to you before running the article with the liberty of revision as well as the right to shelve the entire thing if you wish.

The state of Nevada is putting up a new public library to cost about $40,000 and last summer I wrote Andrew Carnegie to see if he would not contribute something toward the structure as I knew he was fond of chucking his surplus in that direction.

He was off in Scotland somewhere and I never heard from him. Now it strikes me that a life sized statue of a Comstock miner in the rotunda of that building would be a fine thing. A miner stripped to the waist with his hands on the top of his pick handle ready to tackle an honest days work. I think you might induce Carnegie to give $5000 for such a broze life size. Some evening we might get him round to your house and persuade him to limber up and if he proves cantankerous we could throw him down and take the money away from him. If we thought it a hazardous job we could send for Steve Gillis and make a sure thing.

I called you up by phone last week as I wanted to call and tell you about that stock but the party at the phone said that you were going out to dine. It was the night that the artists gave you the blow out. If this keeps up you will have [to] sell your dining room set [MTP]. Note: nothing directly given about Joe Goodman's situation. Clemens did not care much for Sam P. Davis.

December 29 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

This morning Mr. Clemens talked about the finances. The coming one will be the last year of assured $25,000 from the Harpers. Next year will begin the 40% of the previous year's income from the books—which this year has been $40,000 & the children must begin to realize that if they have only $25,000.00 a year to live on—they must manage to live on that. Live on the book income, if they can—& try to keep the dividends as a back fund. (He was propped against his pillows, & his beautiful brow quivered with emotion as he spoke of Mrs. Clemens & the children) [MTP TS 155].

Clemens' A.D. of this day included: The end of Susy's Biography: the trip to Keokuk. Clemens speaks of the journey—mentions hearing the leadsmen's calls on the Mississippi steamboat—He sees his mother, then, for the last time in life—Gives the details of the romance of her life [MTP Autodict3].

Edith Draper wrote from Lancashire, England to offer Sam her and her husband's appreciation of his books [MTP].

Frank H. Mason wrote from Paris, France to Sam.

To have been thus embalmed in your Autobiography which will be read by generations yet unborn, this is the nearest I have ever come to getting my foot on the ladder of fame....Bless you, dear kind loyal friend, for all you have done for me and mine...I was at Mannheim with poor dear Hay the last three weeks he spent in Europe...He was a choice spirit and I often wonder whether any boys like Hay, Twain, Harte and the rest of that divinely inspired gang are being born and raised now a days [MTP].

Frank E. Tripp of the Elmira Press Club wrote to Sam. "In view of the prominent associations of your illustrious life within the city of Elmira, the members of the Elmira Press Club have taken the liberty of electing you to honorary membership in their organization." [MTP].

December 30 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

The King was so distressed when I went to him this morning with the news that C.C. had given up all the program for tomorrow eve. I have never seen him so serious—so disappointed. I went to her with the news

Autobiographical Dictations resumed on a regular basis—M-F for two hours during 1906 and 1907

& she telephoned to George Gilder & to Miss Burbank who were to have helped out, & tonight with Witter Bynner they made out a good act for the charade “Champagne” which we acted at the Pumpelly’s last summer. At dinner tonight, Mr. Clemens was telling how at an Edwin Booth Memorial Meeting he sat near Mr. Gilder, & when Gilder asked him if he didn’t think it was a good meeting, Mr. Clemens said “all but the damn poem they read” & he elaborated on the frailties of the verses, while Mr. Gilder nudged him & shifted his chair Mr. Clemens who still kept on until Mr. Gilder whispered to him that the poet was within earshot & hearing all that was said.

Dr. Quintard was here today & the summer Bermuda trip is given up [MTP TS 155-156].

December 31 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a postcard to Andrew Carnegie and Louise W. Carnegie. “Unto / Mrs. Carnegie / & St. Andrew / a happy New Year & repetitions of it.† Mark” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a postcard to Gertrude Natkin at 138 W. 98th N.Y.C.: “A happy New Year to you, dear Marjorie, & many repetitions of the like!” [MTP]. Note: see Feb. 20, 1907 for her delayed reply.

The New York Times, p.1, reported on the New Year’s Eve party thrown at his home for Clara Clemens.

MARK TWAIN AND TWIN CHEER NEW YEAR’S PARTY

Humorist in a Siamese Twin Act at His House.

TWO JOINED BY A RIBBON

Twin Gets Drunk and the Joy of it Penetrates to Twain While Lecturing on Temperance.

The last thing Mark Twain did in 1906 was to get drunk and deliver a lecture on temperance, and the first thing he did in 1907 was to glory in the fact that he would be able to rejoice over other dead people when he died in having been the first man to have telharmonium music turned on in his house—“like gas.”

Of course Mark Twain did not really get drunk any more than he delivered a real lecture on temperance. He imitated a drunken man and a temperance lecturer at one and the same time, and took all the glory for the lecture to himself while he blamed his Siamese brother for the jag.

Those who have never heard that Mr. Clemens has a Siamese brother, must be told that he only had such a relative for one night only, and the occasion was a party given to a few friends in honor of Miss Clemens, at the author’s home, 21 Fifth Avenue, last night, or partially this morning, for all well-regulated cases of intoxication last more than fifteen minutes, even the imitations and the imitation given last night and given in such style that even the most ardent admirer had to admit that Mark was at least a close observer, resulted in what might be termed colloquially a “hold over.” During the hold over Mr. Clemens had something to say about politics.

The score or so of guests who had passed the evening playing charades and other games were surprised to see Mr. Clemens enter the drawing room on to the little stage at 11:30, dressed in the white suit he wore recently on Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington.

With him, in a similar white suit, came a young gentleman whom the author introduced to the company as his Siamese brother. The two had their arms about each other, and their suits were fastened together with a pink ribbon supposed to represent a ligature. Twain was rather short and broad and his hair was snow white. His brother was very tall and very slight and had black hair. It was easy to see that they were brothers. Mark remarked on the close resemblance almost as soon as he came into the room.

“We come from afar,” said Mark. “We come from very far; very far, indeed—as far as New Jersey. We are the Siamese twins, but we have been in this country long enough to know something of your customs, and we have learned as much of your language as it is written and spoke as—well—as the newspapers.”

“We are so much to each other, my brother and I, that what I eat nourishes him and what he drinks—ahem!—nourishes me. I often eat when I don’t really want to because he is hungry, and, of course, I need hardly tell you that he often drinks when I am not thirsty.

"I am sorry to say that he is a confirmed consumer of liquor—liquor, that awful, awful curse—while I, from principle, and also from the fact that I don't like the taste, never touch a drop."

Mark then went on to say that he had been asked to take up the temperance cause and had done so with great success, taking his brother along as a horrible example.

"It has often been a source of considerable annoyance to me, when going about the country lecturing on temperance, to find myself at the head of a procession of white-ribbon people—so drunk I couldn't see," he said. "But I am thankful to say that my brother, has reformed."

At this point the Siamese brother surreptitiously took a drink out of a flask.

"He hasn't touched a drop in three years."

"Another drink."

"He never will touch a drop."

"Thank God for that."

Several drinks.

"And if, by exhibiting my brother to you, I can save any of you people here from the horrible curse of the demon rum!" Mark fairly howled, "I shall be satisfied."

Just then apparently some of the rum or the influence of it, got through the pink ribbon. Mark hiccupped several times.

"Zish is wonderful reform—"

Another drink.

"Wonder'l 'form we are 'gaged in."
