"Glorious work—we doin' glorious work—glori-o—u-s work. Best work ever done, my brother and work of reform, reform work, glorious work. I don' feel jus' right."

The company by this time was hysterical was [sic] laughter. Mark was staggering about on the improvised stage, apparently horribly under the influence. His brother still held the bottle and was still putting it to the use for which it was made.

The laughter became so great that it was impossible for the old man to carry on the little farce any longer, and in a few minutes the Telharmonium music, played a mile and a half away up on Broadway, was turned on and it was playing "Auld Lang Syne" when the New Year was ushered in [Note: of course the party ended on Jan. 1, 1907].

Paine writes of the evening:

I recall two pleasant social events of that winter: one a little party given at the Clemenses' home on New-Year's Eve, with charades and story-telling and music. It was the music feature of this party that was distinctive; it was supplied by wire through an invention known as the telharmonium which, it was believed, would revolutionize musical entertainment in such places as hotels, and to some extent in private houses. The music came over the regular telephone wire, and was delivered through a series of horns or megaphones — similar to those used for phonographs — the playing being done, meanwhile, by skilled performers at the central station. Just why the telharmonium has not made good its promises of popularity I do not know. Clemens was filled with enthusiasm over the idea. He made a speech a little before midnight, in which he told how he had generally been enthusiastic about inventions which had turned out more or less well in about equal proportions. He did not dwell on the failures, but he told how he had been the first to use a typewriter for manuscript work; how he had been one of the earliest users of the fountain-pen; how he had installed the first telephone ever used in a private house, and how the audience now would have a demonstration of the first telharmonium music so employed. It was just about the stroke of midnight when he finished, and a moment later the horns began to play chimes and "Auld Lang Syne" and "America" [MTB 1364].

Isabel Lyon's journal:

June 12—I look ahead to this day with a great solemnity.

All the preparations for the party were completed—electric music, a stage built, an awning out and everything arranged for the guests to appear at 9. At 8:40 in walked Mrs. Lawrence [sic Laurence] Hutton and Mrs. [von] Rottenburg Philps [Phelps], & stood in the hall with Mr. Clemens's baby bottle in my hand and looked the surprise I felt—for one of them said, "Don't be so alarmed, we didn't want to arrive so soon." However, all went beautifully. Pamela Coleman [sic Colman] Smith sat between two candles and told some darling Jamaica folk stories, she is a quaint creature and a protégé of Ellen Terry, a protégé—which led some who should have known better to tell C.C. that she was an illegitimate daughter of Ellen Terry. I asked AB about her mother and he knew her, and has known about the family for many years.

The charade went off with great success. Bynner really was the star of the evening for his acting in Sham was excellent. "Pain" was Mr. Clemens as a baby once more, & Champagne was Bynner & Mr. Clemens as twins; B drinking steadily but the effect passing into Mr. Clemens who was giving temperance lecture. Very good it was & there were about 60 people here—but I'm much too tired to write of things as they really were. The telharmonium music was installed & at midnight there was an exhibition of it, for a Mr. Guy was at hand to direct things. It's very wonderful, even though it is not yet perfected [MTP TS 156-157]. Note: Marian Phelps von Rottenburg (Mrs. Franz von Rottenburg; 1868-1922) only daughter of William Walter Phelps divorced Franz sometime after 1900 and remarried Theodore Peters; Clemens had been one of 24 invited to the Phelps-von Rottenburg wedding (see May 19 and May 29, 1893 entries); Pamela Colman Smith (1878-1951), nickname "Pixie," artist, illustrator, and writer, best known for designing the Waite-Smith deck of tarot cards. She wrote and illustrated several books on Jamaican folklore. She is not in Gribben.

George J. Helmer wrote from NYC to Sam. "Just a word of New Years Greeting and to ask you advice on a very important matter. Mrs Clemens before sailing to Italy expressed a desire that my little boy, Geo. J. Jr. now 4 years old, should have inscribed copies of your books. What I wish to know is how to obtain same with least trouble to you" [MTP]. On or after this day Sam gave instructions on the bottom of Helmer's letter to Isabel Lyon: "Have read his letter. dont submit letter. What does he want—3 or 4 books? send vol no 1" [MTP].

*Christian Science Published, Flying Trips to Bermuda – Katonah Visits – Clara Tours
 Damned Human Race Club – Suppression of Noises – Lease Tuxedo Park House
 Aldrich Dies – Redding Plans – Last Trip to Elmira – 1st Angelfish – Jamestown
 Saturday A.M. Club Reunion – Lost at Sea! – “Oxford Would Confer...” – Annapolis
 Actors Fund Fair – Meets “Charlie” – Stevedores Shout – G.B. Shaw
 Hectic Schedules – Postpones Funeral – Ascot Cup Stolen! – Windsor Bash
 Amuses King & Queen – Punch Honors – Doctor Clemens – Oxford Pageant
 Luncheons, Teas, Dinners – Corelli, Offensive Sham – Liverpool – Homeward Bound
 Dorothy Quick, MT Mgr. – Bronchitis – Dorothy letters & visits – HHR Stroke
 Fulton Day, Jamestown – “Goddam Govment” – Knickerbocker Bank Run
 Children’s Educational Theatre– American Plasmon Bankrupt – Howells Send Off*

1907 – Sam wrote a sketch unpublished until 2009: “Telegraph Dog” [Who Is Mark Twain? xxvi, 183-98].

Sam also wrote “Little Nellie Tells a Story Out of Her Own Head” sometime during 1907. It was published in Fables of Man, Tuckey, ed. (1972). Tuckey offers that this piece is Twain’s recollection of a performance of P&P by children in Hartford, though Sam mistakenly recalled it as in Cleveland in Dec. 1884. Tuckey further fingers Nellie as possibly Helen Morton Cox, the young daughter of George Washington Cable’s sister [Fables of Man 45-9].

In N.Y.C. Sam inscribed a copy of Charles A. Young’s A Text-book of General Astronomy to Mr. Cole.

Friend Cole: I feel sure that if you will carefully peruse this “work” you will admit “most cheerfully etc.,” that I am correct in my statement regarding the subject of Geometry as a whole [MTP]. Note: Sam added a PS that if Cole was still in doubt he should read HF again and then call upon him if “still in the dark.” Written on the 30th day of some month in 1907.

Probably during 1907 Sam wrote daughter Jean :

Jean dear, do you remember this picture with the accidental child in it? This is made in Germany, and is good work. I am so glad, so very glad, to hear that you are cheerful and happy, and are going to fight it out on Dr. [Frederick] Peterson’s lines and help him in every way you can to push your improvement along to a cure. Lovingly / Father [Heritage Auction Lot 35131 ended Oct. 15, 2009]. Note: the “accidental girl in the pillow” ran in the Dec. 8, 1906 Harper’s Weekly. See entry for the picture.

In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam inscribed a portrait lithograph of an unidentified man to Charles Dana Gibson, the illustrator, after a weekend visit to his home: “To Mr. Gibson / Truly Yours / Mark Twain” Also inscribed by Horace Porter, diplomat, one time chief of staff for General Grant: “In memory of a pleasant visit to Tuxedo Park...” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Harper & Brothers requesting his Christian Science book be sent to the following:

Dr. Quintard, 145 W. 58th
 H.H. Rogers, 3 E. 78th st.
 H.H. Rogers, jr., 26 E. 57th
 Miss Jean Clemens, Katonah, N.Y.
 10 or 12 to S.L. Clemens, 21-5th ave.
 Wm. R. Coe, 6 East 78th st.
 Mrs. Benjamin,

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Miss K.I. Harrison, 26 Broadway
 R.W. Ashcroft, 11 Broadway
 Mrs. Robert Collier, 20 Grammercy [sic Gramercy] Park
 Miss Paddy Madden, 3 W 104th st [MTP].

Sam also wrote his aphorism about saving tomorrows for work to William E. Schultz [MTP: Missouri Historical Review Apr. 1933: 279]. Note: William Eben Schultz (b. 1887), Canton, Mo. Native, English teacher and musical composer, who taught for a time at Yale University, and wrote several books in the 1920s and 30s, including Cantonian: a historical pageant in commemoration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the founding of the town of Canton, Missouri (1930). See also Missouri Historical Review (Apr. 1933): 278-279 for Shultz's article, "How I Got Mark Twain's Autograph."

Sam also inscribed a copy of CS to Augusta Emma Stetson (1842-1928): "This book is dedicated to a noble human success & proved she is another General for God—Augusta E. Stetson. Sincerely Yours. Mark Twain. 1907" [MTP]. Note: Stetson (nee Simmons) rec'd the degree of Doctor of Christian Science (C.S.D.) in 1884 from the Mass. Metaphysical College. In the early 1900s she raised over one million dollars to build a structure for the First Church on W. 96th Street. It was dedicated free from any debt, a feat Twain would likely have admired. In 1909 she was excommunicated by the Boston church.

Sam also wrote to Vitagraph Co. of America. "Gentlemen: I authorize the Vitagraph Company of America to make a moving picture from my 'Curious Dream.' I have their picture of John Barter, examining his gravestone, and find it frightfully and deliciously humorous" [MTP: Lewis Jacobs, The Rise of the American Film, etc. 1968, p.76]. Note: Vitagraph made one reel silent films at this time, and increasingly needed to borrow and adapt stories from literature.

Sam also wrote his aphorism about saving tomorrows for work in The $30,000 Bequest to Katy Leary [MTP].

Sam also wrote his aphorism about taking the pledge improving liquor in HF to Ashton Stevens (1872-1951) American drama critic, whose column ran in the S.F. Examiner and later in the Chicago Herald-American [MTP].

Paine writes of a letter (not extant) from Steve Gillis sometime during this winter:

Once that winter, when a letter came from Steve Gillis saying that he was an invalid now, and would have plenty of time to read Sam's books if he owned them, Clemens ordered an expensive set from his publishers, and did what meant to him even more than the cost in money—he autographed each of those twenty-five volumes. Then he sent them, charges paid, to that far Californian retreat [MTB 1373]. Note: see also the June 7 inscription to Gillis on an unspecified book.

Letters of Dr. John Brown, With Letters from Ruskin, Thackeray, and Others (1907). Tenney: "On pp. 351, 353-354, 357-358, and 360-361 are letters to the Browns from MT and Olivia Clemens, mostly on predictable topics as they express the wish that the Browns could visit them in America and MT expresses sorrow on Brown's death (1 Jun 1882), and praises his book RAB AND HIS FRIENDS (11 Feb 1890)," etc. [Tenney: "A Reference Guide First Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1977 p. 334].

Underhill & Underhill published a little book entitled How to Tell a Story, a republishing of Sam's 1895 story [eBay 4000797684 Oct. 24, 2009].

Stephen M. Griswold's Sixty Years with Plymouth Church (1907) included a chapter, "Quaker City Excursion," p. 153-66. Tenney: "Describes the tour on which IA was based; briefly mentions MT. Quotes at length the account of the visit to the Czar at Yalta in Mrs. Griswold's A Woman's Pilgrimage to the Holy Land (1871)" [44].

Brander Matthews' Inquiries and Opinions (1907) included a section, "Mark Twain," p.137-66. Tenney: "A biographical and critical account by one of MT's early advocates in the academic world. This was written as the introduction to a complete edition of MT's works, and appears in Innocents Abroad in the Author's National Edition [44].

Aaron Watson's The Savage Club (London 1907) included "Artemus Ward and Mark Twain," and "Mark Twain's Own Account," p. 119-35 [Tenney 45].

Capital Stories about Famous Americans: A Budget of Tales of Love, Heroism and Adventure, Rev. Louis Albert Banks, ed., contained "How Mark Twain Plagiarized Holmes," p. 207. Tenney: "...from a birthday-dinner speech quotes MT's account of accidentally borrowing the dedication for IA. 'Mark Twain: His Good Deed to General Grant' (486-91) retells 'Hamilton' (sic) Garland's account 'in the Success magazine some years ago' of MT's becoming publisher of Grant's Memoirs and paying royalties that assured the financial security of Grant's family. Picture of MT, 478" [MTJ Bibliographic Issue Number Four 42:1 (Spring 2004), p.9].

Mrs. C.E. Aaron sent Sam a British picture postcard of the Cunard Line's S.S. Mauretainia. "Dear Mr. Clemens/ this is to let you know that Mr. Aaron & myself have crossed again this year unexpectedly. Ship is beautiful ... [the last sentence has flaked off, but up the left side: "Dorothy, Grandma"] [MTP]. The year and day ("5") are clearly visible on the postmark, but the month is not.

Gilbert Holland Montague sent Sam a 3"x5" Union League Club note card announcing his engagement to Amy Angell Collier of New York. "She is a niece of President Angell of University of Michigan & an old friend of Mr. A.B. Paine. She is a cousin of Chester Aldrich, whom I believe your daughters know. I beg to be remembered to all your family & household" [MTP].

Gladys B. Kyd wrote from Edinburgh, New Brunswick to ask for Twain's autograph. She also sent her book for him to sign, plus a money order to cover return shipment [MTP].

Written on Isabel Lyon's journal title page for 1907 (which is called a "Date Book"): "The King says of billiards that 'It exercises all your body & half of your soul'" [MTP].

January – James Logan (1852-1929) mayor of Worcester, Mass (1908-1911) wrote to Sam, sending him a translation of Omar Kayyam by Eben Francis Thompson [MTP] Inscriptions: the portrait of E. F. Thompson is signed "Faithfully yours" by Thompson. Volume is inscribed: "To 'Mark Twain'/Please accept this book as a partial payment on account for the many happy hours and hearty laughs which you have given me. With kind regards/faithfully yours/James Logan./Worcester, Mass./Jany. 1907." Volume also signed: "SL. Clemens/1907." Note: See Feb. 2 to Logan for more on this book; also Gribben 517. Logan was born in Glasgow, Scotland and is said to have influenced Andrew Carnegie in donating libraries.

Robert Reid wrote from NYC to Sam. "Dear St Mark. / 'It is terrible death to be talked to death'—and you had a close call the other day!—Please forgive me.—Our friend lends me word that he is going to 'advance some[?] more' so the work can go on—if not merrily..." [MTP].

January 1 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean, about how he rang in the New Year:

Jean dear, we had grand times last night: "Sham," played by Clara—burlesquing grand opera—assisted by [Witter] Bynner & George Gilder & Miss Burbank—most delightfully played. "Pain" played by me as a baby, with Miss Burbank for the mother & Miss Lyon as nurse. "Champagne" played by Bynner & me as the Siamese Twins" (I getting drunk on wine drunk by him.)

At 11.55 there was a prepared surprise: lovely music—played on a silent piano of 300 keys at the corner of Broadway a mile & a half away, & sent over the telephone wire to our parlor—the first time this marvelous invention ever uttered its voice in a private house. Two weeks from now it will go by wire 1,000 miles to Chicago & furnish the music for the Electrical Convention, & within a year or two the artist will play on those dumb keys & deliver his music into 20,000 homes—& cheap as water; only 20 cents an hour, & shut it off when you please, like the gas.

The company left at 1, & Mr. Paine & I played billiards till 3 o'clock. I am tired.

Mr. Twichell will arrive this afternoon, & he & Miss Lyon & I will sail for Bermuda tomorrow morning, to be gone a week. Dr. Quintard has engaged us to find us a furnished house in your neighborhood for next summer. Last night I wore for the first time the little gold studs which you gave me for Xmas, & found them to be just exactly what I wanted. I thank you for them, dear.

Happy New Year, & a heap of hugs & kisses.

[enclosure, written on a card with a picture of a woman wearing a hat:]

A happy New Year to you, dear dear Jean, & many of the like to follow!

By your letters, & by all reports, I know that you are happy, & may you continue so! From your loving / Father [MTP: Sotheby's NY catalogs, Dec. 12, 1991, Item 25]. Note: See NYT article Dec. 31, 1906

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers after he stopped by, and gave an accounting of his income and expenses totals for 1906: He'd made $40,000 from his books and lived on $32,000; he had $40,000 in the bank to invest upon return from Bermuda with Joe Twichell [MTHHR 622-3]. Note: see source for a page of details on Sam's finances and investments.

Isabel Lyon's journal:

We wished each other good morning.

All this day was a grand hustle getting ready to sail away to Bermuda tomorrow—only a week we shall be gone—but we'll be beyond communication, so there are heaps to do.

The King has been in a sweet & lazy mood. He played billiards until 3 o'clock; after the guests had gone he tackled AB [Paine], who had come in from seeing Pamela Smith to her next party, & they played until after C.C. and I were in bed.

Mr. Rogers came in and Mr. Clemens is getting ready for another investment. AB went home to stay there while we were away. Mother has been here all day helping me—valeting me—who never have a minute to repair my staggering-to-death garments.

The King needs the trip away—& I need it. Mr. Twichell arrived today, & he needs it too, for he was tired out with his Xmas clerical duties [MTP].

Mrs. S.B. Elder wrote from New Orleans to express her "appreciation and enthusiasm although late" for "Joan of Arc" in the Harper's of Dec. 1904 [MTP].

George Iles wrote from Park Avenue Hotel, NYC to Sam. "I have had a rare treat this afternoon in reading WHAT IS MAN? ... The book with both logic and humor clears up the fog that has long confused Egotism and Altruism, the pleasure of eating strawberries and the greater, or less, joy of seeing said berries eaten by some hungrier man." [MTP].

S.A. Keen wrote on YMCA, Columbus, Ohio letterhead to invite Sam to offer a letter of advice to young men there "who are without local home ties" [MTP].

January 1 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a Happy New Year message on a picture card (a woman with a dog) to Miss Margery H. Clinton [MTP: James Lowe Autographs, 1977]. Note: Margery was a friend and neighbor of Mary Rogers in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Sam also wrote a Happy New Year message on a picture card (a woman wearing a hat) to to Miss Herrick [MTP: James Lowe Autographs catalogs No. 30, 1985, Item 32].

Sam also wrote on a printed card to William Dean Howells: “‘Appy New Year to Mr. ‘Owells & his’n. /Mark. / 1907.” [MTHL 2: 822].

Sam also wrote to Barbara Mullen (written on a card with a picture of a woman holding a bird): “A happy New Year to Miss Mullen! / SL. Clemens / 1907.” [MTP].

Sam also wrote instructions to Miss Lyon to answer S.A. Keen’s Jan 1 request: “Can’t do it. Furnish reasons” [MTP].

Henry Meade Bland’s article, “Mark Twain” ran in the Overland Monthly for Jan., p.22-7. Tenney: “Praises MT’s tenderness and his ‘sternly philosophical side,’ notes his friendship with Charles Warren Stoddard; a popular account providing no new information or unusual critical perception. Illustration (p.22): ‘Mark Twain, drawn by Alice Resor from latest copyrighted portrait by Rockwood, N.Y.’”

January 2 Wednesday – Sam, Joe Twichell, and Isabel Lyon sailed on the S.S. Bermudian for Bermuda for a “flying trip,” a three-day stay. The voyage now took two days; 30 years before it had taken three [D. Hoffman 69; MTHHR 577]. Note: The steamer Bermudian, a twin-screw vessel, was first launched in Jan. 1905 and continued in service until WWI. Sam would take this same ship to Bermuda in Jan. 1908. See insert S.S. Bermudian.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: We sail. Bermudian

We are on our way now to Bermuda. The sea is so still & so restful that I have relaxed too entirely. Robert left at 8:30 with the trunks. I left a bit later in a cab to look after things—shifting of tickets, etc., for if there was not a full ship load we were to have a cabin each, & we have it—to my satisfaction—for as I look around I cannot see a soul that it would be possible to room with except a nice English boy. The gulls followed us until late, late in the day. It is beautiful voyaging. Just before the King arrived, a sorry young steer got loose & scared us all as he plunged up & down the wharf. They closed the big doors & the King had to wait outside in his carriage until the creature was captured. We have all been sleeping a good deal. The decks are beautiful, & we have plenty of room everywhere.

This morning before sailing the King received a letter from T.B. Aldrich who lost his glasses which were finally found in the King’s dress coat. For a month the King hasn’t been satisfied with that coat because the sleeves are so long, & the tailor took the coat away to shorten it. This morning’s letter from T.B. is to say that he had carried away the King’s coat—& the King has been wearing T.B.’s—& having it altered, etc. Oh joy, how the King shouted [MTP]. Note: Aldrich’s letter not extant, but see Dec. 1 from Sam/Paine.

Witter Bynner wrote to Sam. “Dear Mark Twain! / Here’s thanks for letting me in on that ligament and for a good time generally. / I hear you’ve brought ‘em to the point of publishing the Christian Science book. Bully for you! You might dedicate it to the subject,—not to Mother Eddy but to Auntie-Christ! / Ever your /Other Twin” [MTP].

George H. Guy wrote on New York Electrical Society letterhead to Sam, pasting a clipping on his letter: "Can you spare a moment to pass your eye over the enclosed clipping? Is this a remarkable coincidence, or an indication of some subtle pervasiveness in unsuspected directions of human example?" [MTP]. The clipping told of cats "Tom and Jennie" becoming tipsy after eating mice tipsy from eating fruit cake seasoned with brandy.

Anatole Le Braz (was LeGray) wrote on Hotel Brevoort notepaper in French:

Hotel Brevoort
Anciennement Brevoort House
Coin de la 5me Avenue et de la 8me Rue
CABLE ADDRESS, LAFBREVORT
New York, le 2 Janvier 1907

Cher Monsieur,

Je suis confus de ne vous avoir pas encore remercié de l'envoi de votre livre que j'ai été bien heureux de trouver chez Miss Mosher. Mais voici le premier moment de loisir don't je dispose, depuis trois jours. J'aurais voulu, en même temps que ce mot vous offrir un de mes volumes; malheureusement, Brentano, quand je me suis présenté chez lui, n'en avait plus un seul exemplaire. Je viens d'écrire à mon éditeur en France pour lui demander de vous expédier le Pays des Pardons. J'espère qu'il vous parviendra sans trop de délai.

Veuillez, en attendant, trouver ici l'expression de ma meilleure gratitude, comme aussi de la vive satisfaction que j'ai eue de connaître un écrivain qui n'honore pas seulement la littérature américaine, mais qui est encore une incarnation de l'Esprit dans le monde entier. J'espère qu'il me sera donné de voir revoir, lors de mon retour à New-York, dans le courant de mars, avant mon départ pour la France et je vous prie d'agréer la vive gratitude, ainsi que la profonde admiration de votre

[next page]

A. Le Braz

Hotel Brevoort
Formerly Brevoort House
Corner of 5th Ave and 8th St
CABLE ADDRESS, LAFBREVORT
New York, 2 January

Dear Sir,

I am embarrassed that I have not thanked you for having sent your book that I was so happy to find at Miss Mosher's. But this is the first free moment I have had in three days. I would have like to offer you, together with this note, one of my own books; unfortunately, Brentano, when I went there, did not have a single copy left. I have written to my publisher in France to ask him to send you Pays des Pardons. I hope that it will reach you without too much delay.

In the meantime, please accept the expression of my my highest gratitude and a strong pleasure I have had in getting to know a writer who does not only appreciate American literature but who is also an incarnation of Wit in the entire world. I hope that I will get a chance to see you again when I return to New York during May before my return to France, and I ask you to accept my deep gratitude as well as my deep admiration

[next page]

A. Le Braz

[MTP: Translation and notes by Holger Kersten, 2012]

[1] Anatole le Braz (aka Anatole-Jean-François-Marie Lebras; 1859-1926) was a folklorist, novelist, and poet. He spent the winter of 1906/07 in the United States lecturing at the universities of Harvard, Yale, Columbia and in various other parts of the country ["French Diplomat Here," New York Tribune, April 02,

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

1907, 5]. He later returned to the U.S. in 1910/11, 1911/12 and 1914-1919 [G. Dottin "Nécrologie: Anatole Le Braz." Annales de Bretagne 37:3, 458-472, 460].

[2] Brentano: Brentano's Bookstore on New York City's Fifth Avenue, the largest bookstore in the city and the third largest in the country, with 250,000 books for sale in its 31,000 sq. ft. The bookstore chain had some 20 branches from Chicago to San Francisco. One of the oldest and most respected booksellers, Brentano's owed its success to its vast assortment of books, the elegance of its premises, the dedication of each successive family member to the business, its erudite, hand-picked staff, and its remarkably cordial service. ["Brentano," The Jewish Virtual Library. <http://www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/jsource/judaica/ejud_0002_0004_0_03504.html>] Brentano's had a specialization in French literature.

[3] Au Pays des Pardons: book by Anatole Le Braz in which he recounts legends and popular beliefs of his native province, Brittany. First published in 1894, 2nd ed. 1898. 3rd expanded ed. 1901.

Claire Oddie wrote to Sam. "You wrote my cousin Mr Conner a letter – consequently I feel that I may reach you in the same manner. / Sometime before Xmas, Bretanos sent you a copy of "Eves Diary" with a note from me—asking you to make it famous! But silence still prevails. / If you have been able to decipher this—let me know & thank you in advance. "—In the name of —? "Cousin Joe" !!/ sincerely" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "It was put aside away / things to be attended / it had known she had any association with Uncle Joe—would have got up at midnight & interrupted his prayers to attend to it right away. Never interrupt prayers for any one but Uncle Joe"

James A. Renwick wrote to Sam acknowledging his check of $291.67 for January rent [MTP].

January 3 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

It has been such a sweet, long, drowsing day, with a beautiful smooth sea; the King has slept, & so has Mr. Twichell ... (there goes the dinner trumpet.) the picking up of loose ragged ends; getting ready for Hobby who will look after the mail while I'm away; & getting ready for & over the party. Of course I have relaxed. The King brought along 2 batches of Auto Ms. to correct & this morning he sat on deck & smoked for a long time. He didn't like his chair over in the long line, so when I found him sitting on a bench aft of everybody, & where he could watch the sea, he bade me sit down & we talked for a long time about the way the auto. Should be used to perpetuate the copyright of the books, & he was glad when I told him that C.C. appreciated his plan. I didn't tell him though that I was sorry he had let newspaper men get hold of the scheme. Some how I think it would have been nice to keep it quiet; though of course it originated with Sir Walter Scott. People are not disturbing the King. The one woman who tried to, I told [her] that the King wished to be let alone, must be let alone, because he had come away exhausted. Mr. Twichell tries him beyond words—so that the King almost loses patience [MTP]. Note: Twichell had grown deaf and Sam had to yell at him to be understood.

E.B. Overshiner for the Adjustarest Co. wrote to advertise their adjustable bed to Sam [MTP]. On or after this date Sam replied: "Should like to have it & if it comforts me I shall speak of it to friends but not to you or to the public" [MTP].

J.H. Brookes wrote for Abner Martin (age 88) from East Liverpool, Ohio to Sam.

...Mr. Abner Martin, formerly mate on the steamboat Pennsylvania, which blew up below Memphis in 1858...Mr. Martin (who sits at my elbow) tells me that in your book...[LM]...you mention the fact that you saw him carried into the death room on three separate occasions. ...Some time ago Mr. Martin received a letter from a colored man named Jerry Brown. This man is the son of Brown, the porter on the Pennsylvania, who Mr. Martin assures me you will remember. At the time of the explosion he was a boy seventeen years old and was on the Pennsylvania, and Mr. Martin believes that Brown and himself are the only survivors now living. / Mr. Martin has from time to time recited to me a number of anecdotes concerning "Mark Twain" which I have been unable to find in my careful reading of your works, but nevertheless have no doubt but that they actually occurred. / He remembers with much pleasure his last meeting with you at the Monongahela House, in Pittsburg, when you were considerate enough to have him come up to your room and spend an hour or more in enjoying a good smoke and in talking over old times [MTP].

Will Caeleton wrote from Brooklyn to invite Sam to an Author's Matinee benefit for The Mary Fisher Home. Caeleton mentions going with Sam to Albany that time to lobby for osteopathy [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on back: "Decline by telegraph."

Mrs. Margaret Christensen wrote from Brooklyn to Sam. She had put a clipping from the NY Journal, "Mark Twain's Loving Tribute to His Wife" on her bureau and saw it daily, seeking to "possess such a character" as Livy's. She caught a glimpse of him on Broadway one day and wished she could hear him speak. "Surely at heart you are still a boy." [MTP]. Note: Sam answered on Jan. 18.

Emily McLean for the National Society of the D.A.R. wrote a 4"x5" card to Sam. "If you but knew my dear 'Mr. Mark Twain!', the ardent admiration for yourself, which pulses in my mind & heart, which fills the soul of my young daughter & — in a more general sense—the souls of fifty thousand 'Daughters' (over whom I preside), you would come & be welcomed by us!" [MTP]. Note: In other words, they liked him.

January 4 Friday – The S.S. Bermudian reached Hamilton Harbor, Bermuda at 6 a.m. and docked about 9:30 a.m. The Clemens party registered at the Princess Hotel, next to the water just west of town. D. Hoffman writes:

It was the largest wood building on the islands, and its structure had been advertised as "a sure guarantee against the dampness usually found in houses." The dining hall opened through glass doors to a long and deep veranda overlooking the harbor. Another amenity, the billiard room on the ground floor, also came close to Clemens's heart. He had been spending an immoderate amount of time at billiards. As he grew lonelier, the games got longer. They sometimes lasted for as much as ten hours, Miss Lyon wrote [71].

The three took a long carriage ride to Harrington Sound; Miss Lyon detailed, below:

Isabel Lyon's journal: Bermuda, Princess Hotel. Such happiness.

Distant land was sighted at 6 o'clock and when the breakfast bugle sounded we were abreast of Ireland Island & the water began to take on its wonderful colors. We docked about 9:30, I think. The King is not feeling very well because he ate too heartily of baked beans & bacon & cabbage & milk yesterday at luncheon, so he has had indigestion ever since. I had forgotten how beautiful Bermuda & its waters are. The white houses grew here a thousand years ago—somehow you do not feel the hand of man in their construction, because there isn't anything inappropriate about them. This afternoon we drove over to Harrington Sound, a 2 hours drive, & enchanting. I sat with the King, & Mr. Twichell on the front seat asked the darkey driver hundreds of questions. There are many flowers blooming, hibiscus, lantana, roses & strange flowers of various kinds. We went into the Devil's Cave where the King was interested in the big groupers & beautiful angel fish, & butterfly fish & parrot fish. An old Englishman described the wonders of the place to us & how the groupers change color after they've eaten. But most of all, I was in heaven as I sat beside the King & drove along those beautiful roads—the great cut near Govt. House, all lined with beautiful trees. The King wears grey clothes now & they are very becoming. Later Mr. Twichell & I took a walk along quiet roads which led to nowhere but a hill top & I remember now that I made the same walk 18 years ago with little Juliet Claghorn, who now is dead [MTP].

T. Fisher Unwin wrote from London to send Sam "the last edition of my general catalogue" of books. He solicited Sam's visit when in London [MTP].

Chapters from "My Autobiography—IX" ran in the N.A.R. p.113-19.

January 5 Saturday – Bermuda: the Clemens party of Sam, Joe Twichell and Isabel Lyon chartered a boat, the Nautilus, and spend two and a half hours sailing in and out of the bays and inlets. Lyon details:

Isabel Lyon's journal: It has been a wonderful day, for this morning the King decided to go a-sailing. He sent me down to charter a boat & I found a cedar boat called The Nautilus with a young black man at her helm. We started at 10 o'clock, sailed for 2½ hours through the bays & inlets of this most wonderful water, enraptured by the beauty & the peace & the softness of the atmosphere. The King smoked & smoked & talked about Marconi & Tesla & Joe Jefferson & of how 40 years ago out in Nevada when he had prospected for gold & didn't get it after all their hard work, it was because they had turned in the wrong direction—for years later gold enough was found close to their place—gold enough to throw away. It was a pity to come home, but we had to. After luncheon the King had an interviewer come in from the Bermuda Colonist & I went down to the town with Mr. Twichell. When I came back I found Mr. Clemens on the porch & we jumped into the same cab. We drove to the Bermuda Yacht Club where Mr. Clemens left his card. I went shopping for souvenirs for C.C. & Jean & then the King & I had a charming drive up past the Government House road & so on home. He is so gentle & gay when Mr. Twichell doesn't make him too nervous. The roads are so hard & white & clean, the houses are so neat & nestling & now we're sorry it isn't going to be possible to spend the summer down here.

The King fell over his ship trunk in the dark as we were going down to dinner & skinned his shin. I had some surgeons' plaster with me & later I fixed it up for him [MTP TS 4-5]. Note: the interview with the Bermuda Colonist is not in Scharnhorst's Complete Interviews.

Fred Hughes wrote from London, England to Sam. "Having met with frequent allusions to the authorship of 'Mark Twain' in translations of your works into French, by my late cousin William Little Hughes of Paris, I am interested to know whether you were personally acquainted with him, or possess any little mementoes" [MTP]. Note: On or after this date Sam replied on Hughes' letter: "Had no acquaintance with him[.] the business has always been attended to by my London publisher"

January 6 Sunday – Bermuda, the last day. The group spent the day riding through Paget and Warwick, then to Hamilton Parish and to Joyce's Dock Caves, which were "brilliantly lit with acetylene gas, showing stalactites of enormous size." Later in the day Sam and Joe tried to find places they'd been back in 1877, when they stayed in a boardinghouse run by Emily Kirkham. They asked about and found the woman, now 48. This search became a subject for his Autobiography, and evidently Sam dictated segments to Miss Lyon during the trip and the voyage home [D. Hoffman 72].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Paget—Warwick—Joyce's Cave—out all day. Kirkham.

Mr. Clemens pointed it out to a passenger who has spent much time in Bermuda in its varying seasons. The passenger said, "Oh, you couldn't stay in Bermuda in the summer, your shoes would mould over night." That didn't disturb the King; he replied, "That's all right, I'd wipe them off & put them in the sun every morning" [MTP TS 6].

Daughters of the American Revolution sent Sam an engraved invitation to the Anniversary of General Washington's Wedding Day, a dinner at 6 p.m. on Jan. 6 [MTP]. Note: Sam drew vertical wavy lines down the 6x6" invitation and wrote in a box at the top, "Too late" after first writing "maybe" then scratching it out.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

January 7 Monday – The Clemens party left Bermuda, again on the Bermudian. D. Hoffman writes:

As the ship sailed from the pier, the flag was dipped three times, and the King "lifted his head high and saluted with grave beauty," Miss Lyon wrote. She said the little person at his side was Paddy, a pretty girl from the Upper West Side who had been on the same voyage to the Islands. "We spent most of the day on deck—even into the night....The King and Mr. Twichell walked up and down, but it wasn't comforting companionship for the King as Mr. T. is so deaf and can only hear when he is shouted at." Paddy Madden evidently amused Clemens, and gave him relief from the reverend.

At sea, he also took refuge in continuing to dictate his autobiography [75-6].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Off for home. Today we sailed away from Bermuda. The Consul had the flag dipped 3 times in the King's honor as we left the pier & the King standing with Paddy lifted his head high & saluted with grave beauty. We were forever getting away, & Mr. Twichell thought the big boat was stuck in the mud but we were waiting for the mail, the mail supposed to be ready at 9 o'clock and we were waiting for it at 11:20. Such a cosy & gemütlich place. No hurry anywhere, no trains, no motor cars; just lazy bliss. It's delightful to sail that tortuous channel out to the open sea; it's so narrow & so exacting that merchant ships once venturing in & getting out successfully won't try it again. The King has been offered an island with a house on it by Mr. [W.W.] Denslow, a friend of Dr. Herring. The Dr. pointed it out to us as we sailed quite near it on our way out.

I got the King's things ready for rough weather, but there wasn't any; the sea was like the Mediterranean, & there was a beautiful sunset, a copper strange sunset, which made the sea like molten metals. We spent most of the day on deck—even into the night. The King & Mr. Twichell walked up & down, but it wasn't comforting companionship for the King as Mr. T. is so deaf & can only hear when shouted at [MTP TS 6-7].

Note: W.W. Denslow; Dr. W. Conyers Herring

Winifred Holt, secretary for the NY Association for the Blind sent Sam an invitation to an event with Helen Keller and Mr. & Mrs. John Albert Macy, on Jan 14 at 7:30 pm. [MTP]. Note: On or after this date Sam wrote on the invitation, "can't go." On the back of the letter Isabel Lyon wrote:

Miss Holt's unconscious attitude would be What the Hell do I care about his health so that I carry out my plan.

Tel Mrs. Hutton

The Holts have made it so that He's soured on the cause write Miss Holt that Mr. Clemens cannot break thro the rule—nearly wrecked his health a year ago.

appoint a time in the daytime when he can go up to her shanty & see Helen Keller. / Can this be entirely private. / Miss Holt is so persuasive. The cause is so good & Mr. Clemens must not come under that temptation—[MTP].

J.J. Halsey for New York Press Art Bureau, NYC wrote to Sam, seeking again a photograph they might use for newspapers and magazines. Could he call for five or ten minutes at The Marceau Studio, 258 Fifth Ave in the next few days? [MTP]. Note: A note on the letter suggests he sent photographs.

Edward F. Harkins wrote from Boston to Sam, seeking to confirm what he'd read in several New York newspapers, that Clemens was the first person to have a residence telephone. Harkins professed to be a "student of telephone history" and asked for details, as he'd been under the impression that "a man named Williams in Somerville, Mass." was the first sometime in Apr. 1877 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "Cannot at all be sure of dates...it was very early in 77 that the tel was put in & were told at the time that it was the first time a telephone had been installed for practical business purposes & not as a curiosity or a toy"

W.H. Jones wrote from NY to Sam, recalling being present for Sam's "Babies" speech at the Palmer House in Chicago for General Grant, and recalled the guests there insisting that Sam stand on a table to deliver his address. Jones wished for Sam to go with him and his wife any Wed. evening at 7:15 "to the beautiful million dollar Christian Scientist Church 96th St & Central Park West and note the wonderful service. Will you go?" [MTP].

January 8 Tuesday – Sam was at sea en route from Bermuda to New York on the Bermudian.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King is so amusing, so paralyzing. [written diagonally]. See notebook" [MTP TS 7].
Note: Lyon continued, likely at a later time, to strike out words, phrases and even whole segments, seemingly toward publication, which never, until now, has taken place.

F.R. Hulbert wrote from Port Sudan on the Red Sea to ask Sam's permission to republish the poem with 66 names of Australia and New Zealand [MTP]. Note: On the back is a directive to Harpers for permission.

January 9 Wednesday – In the morning Sam, Joe Twichell and Isabel Lyon arrived back in New York [D. Hoffman 77]. Twain told the press, "Please don't say I have been away for my health. I have plenty of health. Indeed, I'll give some of it away to anybody who needs health" [New York Times, Jan. 10, 1907].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "We anchored at Pier 47 this morning, but were a long time doing it because we had to avoid a sunken ferryboat. The week has been one of unbroken peace" [MTP TS 7].

Annie A. Abrams wrote on Hotel Belmont, NY notepaper to Sam. She had just purchased four sets of his books for her children. Her late father, F.E. Andrews, was on the Quaker City. Could he reply with a line about him? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "He was a pilgrim in the Quaker City excursion. Remember him very well."; listed on the passenger list, Dr. Edward Andrews [MTL 2: 385].

Moncure D. Conway wrote to Sam, proposing they meet for lunch at the Lafayette restaurant, corner of 9th Street and University Place. He wanted to bring his children, Eustace and Philip, to meet Twain. It would be the last time the two men met; Conway died alone in his Paris apartment on Nov. 15, 1907; his body was returned to the US where a funeral was held on Dec. 14 [MTP: Welland 227; IVL Jan. 12].

Emarinne Harly Moore wrote from California, Mo. to ask Sam for his picture. Her father was Capt. Sam Harly; her husband was often compared to Twain [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

January 10 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

We had such a busy morning, the King & I, for there are always so many things to be talked over & telephoned about. Just now it is Helen Keller who is coming to town next week, & Miss Winifred Holt had bombarded the King with invitations to meet her & to again become involved in the Blind Association as a year ago. But Miss Holt overdid it all a year ago & now the King swears hard at the mention of her name. Now we are telephoning Mrs. Lawrence [sic Laurence] Hutton to make a quiet engagement to meet Helen Keller here, perhaps, & probably with Mr. & Mrs. Mason.

This afternoon we went out to Katonah to see Jean who was in a torrent of impossible moods & distressed her father until he was ready to weep. All the way out in the train he had talked & he bought a world almanac & read railroad accidents in the U.S. for the past nine years. He had been dictating on that subject this morning & had made a note on his note book for me to get him that almanac, when the same day one walked into his hand. The train was so hot, so fearfully hot that the King tore off his overcoat saying, "We've arrived in Hell ahead of time" [MTP TS 8]. Note: Sam and Isabel Lyon's quick trip to Katonah to visit daughter Jean was followed by Sam's letter to Jean. the next day (Jan. 11) and also on Jan. 14.

Hill writes of this visit and of Jean's "increasingly temperamental" nature:

She wanted her horse, Scott, which was promptly shipped to her, and then her father bought her a carriage to use. She recorded a romantic interest in one of her physicians at her sanitarium, a Dr. Hibbard, in her diary:

I don't in the least hope to win him, fond as I am growing of him, but I can't help wishing that if he is engaged I didn't have to be thrown with him so incessantly as I am....That desperate hunger for love does not leave me and doesn't seem to intend [to]. Doubtless for that very reason no one will ever care for me and I shall have to drag my useless, empty life out by itself. Oh! is there no hope whatsoever for me? What can I do! I feel as tho' I must find some means to prove attractive to a person that I can also learn to love [167]. Note: see Hill for more on Jean's condition during this period. See also Jan. 17 to Jean, which reveals the carriage wasn't purchased until after Jan. 17.

John J. Flinn for the Chicago Press Club sent a telegram to Sam. "CHICAGO PRESS CLUB BANQUET FRIDAY EVENING JANUARY 11 CELEBRATION OF 27 TH ANNIVERSARY WOULD BE GLAD TO HAVE WORD OF CHEER FROM YOU KINDLY ANSWER FREE" [MTP]. Note: On this day or the next Sam answered Flinn's telegram: "What the Hell can we say / Eat, drink, & be merry for tomorrow you may be out of your job. / Mark Twain" [MTP].

Andrew Carnegie wrote a 3x5 invitation card to dine and meet the Rev. Robert Collyer, on Fri. Jan. 10 at 7:30 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on side: "The dinner I let go. / Clemens forget"

James C. Fernald wrote from Wash. D.C. to ask Sam, "...in which of your works you have illustrated the reverse of Whitefield's progressive mastery of Franklin's benevolent impulses, when the orator's plea drew from the calm philosopher all his money, contrary to his fixed intention" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "infernal nuisance"

R.H. Kitchner wrote from Boston to ask Sam where he might find "The Golden Arm" in Sam's works [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "How to tell a story. / Vol 22 / Hillcrest"

January 11 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y., after dictating and playing billiards, Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah.

Dear Jean, I do hope you are feeling happier, by this time, it wrung my heart to see you so disappointed, & I could not help thinking all the time how grieved your mother would have been to see you long for a thing—anything—and have to be denied it.

[in a paragraph, Sam encouraged her to see the best in people; that she'd be happier that way]

....

We shall do all permissible things we can that can give you comfort & pleasure. Although you will not be able to drive with George in snowy times, you can make up for this by skeeing & coasting, no doubt.

Clara sang in the church in Elmira, last night, to a silent house—by the program, applause was not allowed. It was an amazingly funny idea—it could have originated in no place on the planet but Elmira, I reckon. But no matter, Clara sang at her very best, Katy says. Katy is enthusiastic about it.

Miss Lyon was sick yesterday, with a headache, but is better to-day.

I hope you will make my compliments to the doctors, & to all whom I had the pleasure of meeting there.

Be pleasant with Anna—do your very best to be pleasant with her, & don't let a prejudice against her grow up in your heart. You would hardly find a better person to take her place. It is not an easy place, dear heart, & you should consider that.

I have been trying to think of some way to dispose of your bird. Would you try the cat? I think the cat would like that kind of a bird.

I did my day's work to-day, & played billiards 8 hours, besides.

Be as cheerful & contented as you can, dear heart, for your mother's sake & mine. I love you, dear, & I send you many hugs & kisses. / Father [MTP]. Note: Anna Sterritt, Jean's maid.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mrs. Hutton seems so dictatorial. My experience with her has been only over the telephone & when I asked Mr. Clemens what kind of a woman she was, he replied, "She's a gentleman, & wears feminine attire as an affection" [MTP TS 8].

Professor William Lyon Phelps of Yale lectured in Bridgeport and called Mark Twain “easily the greatest American novelist in the history of this country’s literature” [NY Times, Jan. 12 p.8].

January 12 Saturday – The New York Times, p. BR21 ran a short notice of Sam’s new book:

Mark Twain’s Latest.

Mark Twain’s newest book is entitled “Christian Science,” and the Harpers announce it for publication early in February. It is especially stated that the book is not primarily a luminous work. Quite the contrary, and it is admitted that Mr. Clemens is not an advocate of Mrs. Eddy’s system. In fact, he opposes Christian Science with characteristic vigor and sincerity, taking in his opposition a line of his own, which is interesting whether the reader is or is not inclined to agree with the views expressed. The serious body of the work is, of course, lightened with a good deal of that quaint humor which is Mr. Clemens’s favorite weapon and the chief delight of his readers.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: This morning Jervis Langdon was here—he’s very charming—& Mr. Clemens called me in to hear him say that the house is to be built for $25,000, out of the auto-biography money, & then he said that he was going to make an investment for the children—not for himself. After Mr. Langdon left, Mr. Clemens told me that it was to be a $5,000.00 in an organ association.

Today it rains & the King has gone to Lafayette Restaurant to lunch with Moncure D. Conway & his children. He has been depressed since we went out to see Jean, & wanted the solemnest music before he left. Tonight at dinner he told when they were going round the world & would arrive at Australian or other ports, he would go off with the mayor & Mrs. Clemens would go to the hotel. On one occasion Mrs. Clemens was induced to go with Mr. Clemens & the mayor because there would be another lady there. Mrs. Professor Gibson. They found Mrs. Gibson to be a heavy coarsely dressed woman & finally discovered that she had a panorama of the Innocents Abroad & to help out the show would throw in a song & dance & sell patent medicine concocted by her husband. She was so sorry they couldn’t stay to see her show [MTP TS 6]. Note: Moncure D. Conway wrote on Jan. 9 asking for the luncheon and for Sam to meet his children, Eustace and Philip. It would be their last meeting. See entry.

Neltje de Graff Doubleday (Mrs. Frank N. Doubleday) wrote on board the SS Cedric to thank Sam for his inscription her husband has secured for her, which made her “squeal for joy” [MTP]. Note: she referred to the volume as “The Old Man’s Philosophy” when she’d read the galleys last summer; likely “What is Man?”

A.L. Hodgdon wrote from Pearson Post Office, Maryland to Sam. Her father, Capt. James Hodge Hodgdon, was commander of the Quaker City before the Civil War—was that the same ship Sam excursed on? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Yes.”

January 13 Sunday – Mark Twain’s Plea for setting apart the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln ran on p.8 of the New York Times, “A Lincoln Memorial.”

Sam wrote to Jean Clemens on Jan. 14 of his dinner company for this evening:

We ran late, last night [Jan. 13]—billiards & dinner. Present, Daniel Frohman, Margaret Illington, Mr. & Mrs. Wayland, Mr. Wark, Clara, Miss Lyon & I. Next Sunday this service will be repeated at the Wayland home; at our house the Sunday after. Next winter the alternating will continue. No other engagements can be made for Sunday evenings by these people [MTP]. Note: see Jan. 14 for the rest. Charles E. Wark, 29, native of Ontario, Canada, and Clara’s new piano accompanist. He also accompanied her in a few other indoor pursuits, which, by the help of Isabel Lyon, nearly became a scandal. See Sheldon on the Wark-Clara Clemens relationship.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Yesterday Mary Newcomb with to C.C. to Luckstone to have her voice tested. It had been quite beautiful once & she was ready for the operatic stage—really ready, for she had a conductor & roles, and then the voice broke down. For 2 years she has been living with her dead voice—but Luckstone says it isn't dead at all.

The King does get so mad at the Hobby (she did stupid things with his ms.) & here on this day full of “pretty weather” which he wants to go out in to call on the Coes, but first must read Friday's dictation which Hobby should have sent yesterday & didn't. He says, “God will knock her gully est someday.”

Oh, the billards! Today the King played for ten hours. There come shouts from the billiard room, for he loves it so, & now that AB is beginning to swear the King says he has become so much better company—in fact he is unsurpassable. I go in & sit—“perch”—on the arm of the red sofa to watch the game & the King smokes every minute. He makes such a pretty bridge of his hand, which is so beautiful & in his white silk coats which he had made at Vantine's, he is as wonderful as an ivory soul. He's too beautiful for a human man, & yet you never get away for an instant from the fact that he is a man & a very very strong one. Today I told him how the perfume of his pipe makes me long to follow Dr. H's advice to smoke one too, & how AB said he'd get me a little one, & when I asked the King if his secretary might smoke it, he said, “The secretary can do any thing she wants to, provided its proper, he gave me my first little meerschaum” [MTP TS 9-10].

John Howard Moore wrote from Chicago to Sam. “I am asking the publishers to send you a copy of my book, ‘The Universal Kinship’. I do not know that the book will appeal to you at all, but I thought that it might.” He praised Sam's pen and his wit [MTP]. Note: Universal Kinship; see Feb. 2. See also Gribben 482.

Doane Robinson wrote from Pierre, S.D. to Sam. “I wonder if you have grown beyond the point where such notes as the enclosed, contribute to warm the ‘cockles of your heart?’” [MTP]. Note: no enclosure extant; Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answered Jan. 17, 18” No answer extant.

Lyman Beecher Stowe wrote from NYC to Sam. “My dear Mr. Clemens / I am very anxious to secure an editorial position on some one of the magazines in town. You, of course, know many editors and makers of editors, and if you would give me a line of introduction to one or two of them I should very greatly appreciate your kindness.” Stowe had met him once at cousin Alice Day's and once at Sam's New Year's party “and very likely several times...[as] a small boy” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote a short letter of intro for Stowe and lists Burlingame, Page, Hapgood, McClure, Gilder, Colonel (Harvey) Davis, and Dunne.

January 14 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Isabel Lyon wrote a letter of introduction from Sam for Finley Peter Dunne to Lyman Beecher Stowe [MTP].

Sam also wrote a letter to daughter Jean. After relating the dinner company for the previous night (see Jan. 13 entry) he wrote:

Miss Lyon has gone to Redding with John Howells.

That lady did find me in the train, after my pleasant visit to you, but not until we were within 30 minutes of New York.

The stenographer has arrived (10.30 a.m.), & I must go to work.

Goodbye, dear heart—with lots of love & kisses— / Father [MTP]. Note: Sam visited Jean in Katonah shortly after returning from Bermuda.

Isabel Lyon's journal: I think the King grows lovelier every day of his life. This morning he was so interested in a sermon, no, a lecture by Dr. Crapsey appearing in today's “Sun.” A letter courageously setting forth Dr. C.'s opinions of the God depicted in the Bible, & it's a great & wretched pity that I cannot remember to write down every word that falls from the King's lips. He said that Dr. Crapsey has expressed well, what he expresses brutally. (He doesn't ever do anything brutally—but he does express himself with strength.) All the afternoon he played billiards until Mr. Larkin came to make a change in Mr. Clemens's will—i.e. giving C.C. full authority over all literary remains. The King talks so much about his death in these days. About seven o'clock he called for the organist—I am that—& I played to him Beethoven's 5th Symphony and Schubert's Unfinished Symphony until dinner time. Then after dinner when I had played the Lohengrin Wedding March 3 times while he lay curled up in a corner of the couch with his black cape wrapped about him, we talked a little about music, then he talked about what he wants done with the parts of Susy's biography of him as it appears in his Autobiography. When he is gone he would like to have it published in book form, Susy's biography of him & his comment upon it, for that will stand as a memorial of her. The King was never able to write a memorial of her. It was never anything but a Lament & couldn't ever be anything but that. But this is different—it is her word of him, which reveals herself, & he comment of her which reveals the King [in] him [MTP TS 10-11; also Gribben 505]. Note: NY Sun, a paper Clemens usually read. Algernon Sidney Crapsey (1847–1927) was an Episcopal priest, who was found guilty of heresy in 1906 and stripped of his office. Like Twain, Crapsey did not believe in the divinity of Christ.

Thomas Fitch wrote from Law Offices of Thomas Fitch, Tucson, Ariz. to Sam. In part from a wonderful letter that appears to be a reply:

You did not know that while negotiations were pending for your duel with Laird, that gentleman came to me, and said that he was weary of journalism and its acerbities, and wanted to return to the bloodless east. He offered to sell me one third interest in the Union at the low figure of $6000 and sell it entirely on credit, taking his pay from one half of the salary of $50 per week that the other partners would allow me for editing the paper, and I to pay interest on the purchase money out of the other half, at the rate of 2% per month. As a condition of the purchase I was to buy his duel, and take his place on the field of honor.

Financially the proposition did not appeal to me. The Union was just about paying expenses and salaries. [He then showed he would receive nothing the first year and increasing amounts each year to the sixth year and beyond.]

As for the accompanying proposition to buy the duel, I rejected it with scorn. The mines of the Comstock would not have tempted me to shorten your young and beautiful life, to say nothing of the chance of shortening my own. I was then still limping from the effects of my collision with Joe Goodman. As a duelist I had had pie enough. I had given up Journalism for law, and the Cacoethes Scribena no longer titillated the hemispheres of my brain, and so your life was saved to the world, which for that act of thoughtful mercy owes me many delights.

Joe Goodman and I afterwards became warm friends, Is he there? I last saw him 20 years and more ago, he was then raisin-ranching at Fresno. Later I heard of him deciphering hieroglyphics, and searching for prehistoric bugs in Central America. Daggett, Myers, Wright, Mrs. Cory, and Mrs. Fitch, who formed with you and me the occupants of the club on the third story of that brick building, forty four years ago are gone. I shall soon be 69, and while I am not weary of life and am hale and sound in body and mind, I would yet stretch out welcoming arms to the messenger who would summon me to my waiting palace among the stars. There I shall see you again old boy, even if to do so I have to put on asbestos garments, and come down stairwise with a fan in one hand and an iced julep in the other [MTP].

Francis Wayland Glen wrote from Brooklyn, NY to thank Sam for his "timely warning to the citizens of this Republic in the January number of the North American Review." Glen wanted to meet him. "We are entering upon a revolution throughout the world in finance, commerce, industry, politics, religion and the arts and sciences, and when peace is finally restored there will not be a throne left in Europe which has not been cast into Irish, Atlantic, Baltic or Meditteraen [sic] Sea [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "The thrones come back again. There's only the human race left—& its such a dam fool"

William Rutherford Mead wrote to invite Sam to the Sixth Annual Dinner of the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, Jan. 18 at 7:30 p.m., the guest of honor Sir Ashton Webb [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Ansd"; Webb (1849-1930), English architect, was the first recipient of the American Institute of Architects Gold Medal in 1907.

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam with thanks and praise for the Bermuda trip and also for Miss Lyon, whom he called, “A daisy—a bouquet of daisies—a bushel of ‘em, is she!” He noted a former college acquaintance begged him to “dissuade” Twain from writing against Christian Science [MTP].

January 15 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam began a letter to Edith Draper in Lancashire, England that he enclosed a photo he signed on Jan. 17: “I will comply with pleasure, dear Mrs Edith. My secretary will choose a photo which will go handily in the mail & I will autograph it. / Indeed I shouldn’t regret it if I were an Englishman—& particularly a Lancashire man / Sincerely...” [MTP]. Note: Lyon remarked about this note on a sheet inserted into her journal: “Here is a proof of the sweet & courteous answer Mr. Clemens writes personally to one who calls herself ‘only an English cottager.’ He is beyond words, gentle & darling to the simple ones of the earth who write from their hearts; whose letters are ‘literature’—because they come from the heart. He always appreciates them, & says so with his pen & to the writer.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: This morning the King went down stairs with his white necktie on wrong side out, & he wouldn’t let me change it, because he preferred it that way. He preferred the shining cheap satin surface & is going to instruct Robert the Butler to arrange them that way. Again he was upset at the Hobby “because she did not arrive on time”, so he fumed himself into a splendid mood & was so full of dictating that he burned away from 11:30 until 2:30.

Tomorrow evening Helen Keller is to dine here, & some people are coming in afterward.

Today Mr. Paine brought me a little meerschaum pipe—from the King. The King has been having a touch of gout on his left foot—so I’ve been painting it with iodine. When he walked down the stairs he limped & I remarked that he seemed lame, when he said yes, he was a little lame, he couldn’t step on the fo’castle of his foot. Bless him!

Of the selections from Twain’s A.D.’s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto’s choices, was “Purchasing Civic Virtue,” dictated this day, which compared America to Rome. Sam railed against Roosevelt’s Executive Order 78, which gave veterans, disabled or not, between 62 and 70, a pension; Sam saw this as a naked grab for votes.

January 16 Wednesday – Sam hosted a small party for Helen Keller; George Iles, and Mrs. James Sutherland were also present, Sam autographing his portrait for the latter [MTHHR 577; Jan. 17 from Iles; IVL TS 13 below].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: With the first Jan. number of the N.A. Review, the magazine was cut down from 128 to 112 pages & so Col. Harvey feels that he must cut out some of the Autobiography. The Auto must pay for the Redding house & the King was planning to put just that money $30,000.00 into the buildings. ~~On~~ ~~clear—Then~~ it the additional cost will have to come out of the Utah Consolidated. But the King is cosy in his bed, after 1½ hours with Tschaikovsky that evolutionist, who came in promising to stay 30 minutes. The time dragged on & I could hear the King’s voice growing tired & hoarse; I made 2 or 3 excuses to get into the room, & finally wrote him a little note, “You remember you have an appointment in 15 minutes,” & he pretended, “Yes, I’ll do it (fill that imaginary appointment) I’ll get right up—” & so off ran Tschaikovsky, so the King is cosy & smoking in his bed.

Helen Keller came tonight. At half past seven she arrived with Mrs. Macy & when the King, who had been pacing up & down the room, went to the library door to meet her as she came in with short hesitating steps, she threw her arms around him & buried her head in his neck & felt of his hair, when Mrs. Macy told her that he was still wearing his halo, the King ~~cried & I cried, too~~ wept [MTP: IVL TS 13]. Note: Mrs. John Albert Macy (Anne Sullivan Macy).

Miss Louise Gardner wrote from Tarrytown, NY to thank Clemens for signing a picture. She also thanked Miss Lyon for writing and explaining the delay [MTP]. Note: this appears to be a young girl’s hand.

Mrs. Rachel A. King wrote to Sam from Croft-an-Righ, Edinburgh, Scotland, remembering her brother, David Redding who was living on the Sandwich Islands when Twain was there, and now dead for 40 years. “Knowing his great friendship for you in the long ago, I always feel greatly interested as to your movements.” She shared her and her husband’s love of RI [MTP].

Logan Grant McPherson (1863-1925), author, lecturer on transportation, wrote on Players Club notepaper to Sam.

That first night of Cymbeline when we stole from the Winter’s box to the front row of the balcony, I was pining not only to tell you how I had read Tom Sawyer but to make a suggestion I was sure you would accept. That was that you collaborate with me in a book I was then writing, to the extent of putting in some joke of which it is sadly in need.

The fear however that the audience who saw us pacing up and down the aisles and through the lobbies thought we were a Before Using and After Using advertisement for some hair tonic so flustered me that I went ahead and completed the book myself.

To show you the extent of the calamity you might have averted I send you a copy of the book as it is—and also to show you that in that colloquy between you and me, you were not the only literary man present. / Yours in the remembrance of what to me was a memorable evening....PS Pray do not think that I expect you to read the book [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben.

Miss Paddy Madden wrote to Sam, “surprised and delighted” to receive his picture [MTP].

January 17 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to daughter Jean, whose incoming is not extant:

Why yes, dear Jean, your character—as I saw—had indeed softened, but the other day, it seemed to have hardened (temporarily only, I think) toward Anna & the others, on account of what [you] regarded as unjust conduct toward you. But I did not seem to blame & reproach you, did I? I could not mean that; in my heart I have no reproaches for you, but only mournings for your unearned estate.

What I would like, for your best sake, would be for you to force your mind away from your self & concentrate it upon a trying but valuable task: the task of making some difficult subject happy—Anna, for instance. The very best part of the Christian Science philosophy is that very thing: driving one’s mind away from its own concerns and riveting it upon something else—and closely watching it & keeping it there. You can do this—we all can—and it brings healing to the spirit & is inestimably valuable.

I do hope you are happy, dear—out of my heart I hope it. I welcome this snow-storm, because its flakes are falling about you & you are already outside & getting joy out of them.

We are not forgetting nor neglecting the horse-&-carriage matter—and shan’t. We are telegraphing George to come down here & consult; also we are on the track of a carriage.

With boundless love, dear heart, / Father [MTP]. Note: Anna Sterritt, Jean’s maid.

Sam also inscribed his photo to Edith Draper and enclosed it in his Jan. 15 note: “To / Mrs. Edith Draper / with the best wishes of / Mark Twain / New York / Jan. 17/07” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: I didn’t expect to find her [Helen Keller] as she is. I believed she would be blasé & spoiled a little because of her great fame; but she isn’t spoiled a bit. The signs of her great afflictions are always present, because she is so dependent on others. She waits with a sweet, almost breathless attention, while Mrs. Macy spells with inconceivable rapidity the sentence or remark that has just been uttered, & when it is finished her face ripples with delight & she gives a sweet little shiver of pleasure, & in her expression you can see that she has understood perfectly. Helen & Mrs. Macy are the guest of Mrs. Lawrence [sic Laurence] Hutton & while we were waiting for Mr. Macy who is staying in some other place, to appear, it was suggested that I play something on the orchestrelle to see if Helen could detect the musical vibrations. I took the Erkönig & at the first deep trembling of the bass, she turned instantly to Mrs. Macy & said “Music”. She was fully conscious of its shadings, for she said that it reminded her of the rising and falling of winds or waves. She wore a white gown trimmed with a great deal of soft lace, & a string, a long double string of coral beads.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Her face, particularly the left side of it, is very noble, as Mrs. Percy Grant pointed out to me later. But I had been struck with the nobility & the womanliness & the great play of intellect & affection & emotion & seriousness that make it what it is. The King says of her that “she is a mine” [MTP: IVL TS 13-14].

Claire Oddie wrote from 124 W. 11th St. NYC to Sam. “My faith in you remains unshaken, though it ‘niggled’ just a bit! / I am glad to know that your prayers ascend at midnight—mine will go then, so that they always creep in, under the mantle of yours [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “They’ll set the dog on ‘em in a minute—St. Peter will—“

Sam also inscribed in Eve’s Diary to Claire Oddie. “Jan. 17. 1907. / Dear Miss Oddie: / I was born lazy & procrastinacious, but if I had known you were kin to Uncle Joe I would have gotten up at midnight & interrupted my prayers to attend to this matter. You didn’t tell me you were kin to anybody, & so I didn’t suppose you were. Forgive! / Sincerely Yours / Mark Twain” [MTP].

George Iles wrote on Park Ave. Hotel notepaper to Sam.

You gave me one of the great treats of my life as you entertained Miss Keller and the rest of us last night. How her face beamed at your stories, especially as you told about the miraculous kerosene!

You were so kind as to say that you would sign a portrait for Mrs. James Sutherland who will, I trust, send a check to Mrs. Treasurer Barnes in aid of the Association for the Blind [MTP].

Frank Nicholls Kennin wrote from Toronto, Canada to Sam.

“In a collection of poems, ‘Beyond the Hills of Dream’ by the Canadian poet William Wilfred Campbell, at page 66 (Houghton, Mifflin, The River Site ... 1899) is a poem, ‘Love’, I think it is called, —I haven’t the book at hand and write from a careless memorandum—which consists of the two verses which you found in one of Miss Susy’s own books, with the quotation marks inadvertently omitted” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Thank him very sincerely; I shall at once make the correction in the book— / Send & get the book”; at the top, “Used Jan. 22”. Editorial emphasis.

Joseph Robinson wrote to Sam on Franklin College, Dept. of English, Franklin Indiana notepaper to ask for an autograph they might frame for the walls of the English Dept. [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Mr. Clemens wrote: Consider well the proportions of things; it is better to be a young June-bug than an old Bird-of-Paradise.”

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

January 17-20 Sunday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote instructions from Sam to write to an unidentified man: “Write Mauritius man & say it isn’t Mr. Clemens’ story but it couldn’t be any better if it bore his trademark” [MTP].

January 18 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Jan. 3 of Margaret Christensen.

“Dear Madam: /I thank you gratefully for your welcome letter, which has deeply touched me. Nothing could be more gratifying to me than to know that my dear lost wife’s beautiful character has spoken to you from the grave & that you have treasured the message” [MTP]. Note: From Brooklyn.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King dined with Mr. & Mrs. Broughton tonight & he enjoyed it for he had a good talk with Peter Dunne who is loud in his praises of Roosevelt, & he is younger than he is loud in his praises. The King read him a philosophical lesson or two about the President’s impulses, but the air is still vibrating with the Dooley bomb of praise.

A.B. is going to Redding tomorrow & Mrs. Dunne asked the King to look after Mr. Dooley [Dunne] a bit—to use him—to billiardist him & when I told AB he felt that that Dooley editor oughtn't to be playing billiards in the afternoons, even if they don't want to.

Mother AB and I went to Fonfarone's tonight & were amused by the crowd & the tenor who flatted, & the oldish pianist who touched the piano keys lovingly, & with all the humor of a virtuoso & then later AB & I practiced billiards & I have learned a little of the game. I made some shots [MTP: IVL TS 14-15].

Julia Langdon Barber wrote from "Belmont" in Wash. D.C. to ask Sam if he would sign the Hillcrest Edition volumes she was "about to order," and to include her name in the inscription. She asked that especially L4 be inscribed as she was one of his "favored listeners to the reading of the manuscript, upon the return voyage of the Quaker City via Bermuda" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Tell her there may be some delay about it for he has to do a great deal of autographing & is obliged to put it aside until he can devote a ½ day to that sort of thing. Then he'll write his nom de plume in it with pleasure—not a Dam sight of pleasure but just pleasure."

Mr. & Mrs. Urban H. Broughton sent Sam a formal invitation to dine on Friday January 18 at 8 pm [MTP].

Edmund D. Morel of the Congo Reform Assoc., London sent Sam "the second edition of 'Red Rubber' which you may be interested to see. I hope the first edition reached you safely." [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Yes—& has been in constant use as a window prop—"; also "Tell him that Dihdwo Twe that darkey has got a saner head on him than any missionary that ever went to that country or any other."

Frederic Whyte wrote from London to Sam. "Accept my best thanks for your kindness in complying so promptly with my request for a contribution to the Daily Graphic. I have much pleasure in sending you a copy of the issue in which it appeared" [MTP]. Note: see Sam's protest (Jan. 29) of Whyte's use of what was thought to be a private communication.

Chapters from "My Autobiography—X" ran in the N.A.R. p.113-19.

January 19 Saturday – The Hope-Jones Organ Co. was incorporated in Elmira, New York, with capital stock of $250,000 in 750 shares of 7% cumulative preferred shares and 1500 shares of common stock, all in $100 shares. The three directors: John Brand, J. Sloat Fassett, and Robert Hope-Jones. Jervis Langdon II was president and treasurer, and Hope-Jones vice-president. Jervis' Uncle Sam Clemens subscribed to $5,000 worth, payable over time on "calls," as did Edward E. Loomis, vice-president of the Lackawanna Railroad (and husband of Sam's niece, Julia Langdon Loomis); and Theodore Vail, president of AT&T, and numerous other investors. The factory was in Elmira, a 30,000 square foot building on the corner of Madison and Fifth; an office was also opened in N.Y.C. For Sam this was an investment he made for Clara and Jean [Ensor, MT & Hope-Jones 5-6]. Note: see Mar. 12 from Jervis, also Apr. 3 entry.

Isabel Lyon's journal: A flutter—no, a serious upheaving of the King's anxieties over the fact that the N.A. Review is cutting & cutting down the instalments of the Autobiography. He feels that the Harpers must be near collapsing again or they would not cut out 16 pages of reading matter of a magazine that is only 5 months old. Mother & I went to hear Gabrilowitsch play this afternoon. It was a performance to charm one. It charmed me, all but the Arensky number—but I think I didn't understand it, & I was exhausted by then, for the Chopin Sonata was wonderfully played and didn't leave much of me. Gabrilowitsch came in this evening to see C.C. & we had a pleasant chat. He quite agreed with the King that the driving around the "Spoon" to reach the front door of the Hartford house was an impossibility, until C.C. proved that it wasn't an impossibility, by walking with Gab. around the scrap basket which was the "Spoon" to the Barberini chair which was the house.

The Republican party is on a stump & the Democrat dogs are barking all around it & having such a good time. Foraker speech, Tellman speech, Blackburn endorsement of the President's position [MTP: IVL TS 15-16].

Mrs. A. Wilkinson Besley wrote from Chattanooga, Tenn. to Sam, enclosing her poem she felt was “suggested by reading ‘King Leopold’s Soliloquy’” [MTP].

Rule Letcher wrote from Bremerton, Wash. to Sam. Being a fellow Missourian, Letcher asked “how the natives of that state came to be called, Pukes?” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Should be glad to furnish the information but do not possess it.”

Anna L. Pederson for the N.Y. Wellesley Club wrote to invite Sam to their annual luncheon on Jan. 19 at the Manhattan Hotel to “tell us in a few words your experience as a lobbyist” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “decline”.

F.W. Shumaker for Sterling Debenture Corp., NYC. wrote to solicit Sam to purchase shares in the American Telegraph Company, which combined features of the telephone and the phonograph, recording speech [MTP].

January 20 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Early—at 9—C.C. went back to Katonah. R.G. [Rodman Gilder] went with her. At ten I went into the King’s room, he had a waiting look within him & after I had gone over some mail—a late yesterday batch—he picked up the paper & read a political article from The Times, seasoning it all along with the keen comment that is his. I do not become accustomed to his wisdom; no, daily I am amazed at his insight into men & political situations. He gave me a long & splendid political talk; and then I handed him a letter from a Canadian, one Mr. Kennin who wrote to say that the sweet verses Mr. Clemens had believed were written by Susy, were written by [blank space] & that he believed Mr. Clemens would be glad to know it. And he was. For as the King said, he would not want Susy to be claiming from the grave a thing that was not hers. He went on to say that the particular reason for his dislike of Stedman is due to the fact that the King wrote him, just after we came home from Italy, asking if he could tell him who wrote the verses & Stedman wrote him such an indifferent letter, one claiming all honor for Stedman the Anthologist & evincing no interest for anyone’s but Stedman’s poems.

Along about 12 o’clock the King got into & out of the tub & went to his room & his bed again. “The Librarian” as he calls Katherine, is away just now for she isn’t well—but when she’s here she rubs the King’s head dry after his bath & so I took her place & rubbed his damp hair into a glory of a white & beautiful fluff. He worked later on Auto batches & later still Col. Harvey came in and the King’s worries are at an end over the N.A. Review & its dockings of the Ms. The plan has been made to pay the King $2,000.00 a month until one hundred thousand words have been turned in, & that will provide the needed amount to build the house at Redding.

At 6 o’clock the King started in Mr. Rogers’s auto for the Rogers house where he is to spend the night. He can’t drive out any more & come home too. It racks him so for the next day, & fixes him so that he cannot dictate. It is so lonely without him, when he goes to spend a night away. I went into his tobaccoed room, & it was better to be there than to be in a thousand chapels with incense. Yesterday I told C.C. that perhaps the King will take her over to Europe in the spring. The King & I, it would be, & she was glad [TS 16-18].

January 21 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote an aphorism to an unidentified person: “Consider the proportions of things: it is better to be a young june-bug than an old bird of Paradise. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / Jan. 21/07” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Dr. Herring came, says Bermuda is better in summer than in winter.

Yesterday morning the kind said that in spite of all the builders might say to the contrary “the skyscrapers wouldn’t have any more show in time of an earthquake than a cat without claws would have in Hell”.

It was that remark of his which set me dreaming last night ... [her related dream cut here]

Gerry Brush came in this afternoon & stayed on & on with me until 9:45. The King dined with the Robt. Colliers & came home at 10:30 with freesia in his button hole, & smoking a long thick cigar. He dropped into his big brown chair & told how Mr. Dooley was there, & what a pleasant time it was [TS 18-19].

The H.W. Gray Co. sent under separate cover a copy of The New Music Review and a subscription blank [MTP].

Nat Haddow wrote to Clemens from Melbourne, Australia to relate his memories of seeing, with his late mother, Sam's lecture in Melbourne. "My mother was a very religious woman & without humor." After the lecture he "said, well Mother what do you think of Mark Twain? My son (she said) I hope you will never take me to such a place again. 'He just simply stood there telling lies'" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "We get all sorts of criticisms & we are very much delighted with this one."

J.J. Halsey of the New York Press Art Bureau, replied to Isabel Lyon and indirectly to Sam that they couldn't send a photographer to his house as he'd suggested "because we could not get the results adapted to reproduction purposes, and would much prefer to wait until Mr. Clemens could find it convenient to call at The Marceau Studio" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Cannot go / The effects can be got here perfectly well"

January 22 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

The King dined at the Coes & will stay the night.

But today he told me more about the Collier dinner than he did last night. Mr. Collier had an unpublished Kipling poem which is to appear soon in Collier's Weekly, & he asked Mr. Clemens to translate it, but he couldn't do it, because he said that if almost anyone but Kipling had written it, it would be a satire, but Kipling is so orthodox in his beliefs & this poem is about Mary and Martha—so the King thinks it will have to go with "They" "They" was never a mystery to me, & now that the story has appeared in book-form, Kipling who wouldn't ever enter an explanation of a story of his, has prefaced it with a beautiful poem which must forever wipe [a]way any doubt as to the meaning of the story. In so subtle a way he has clarified & beautified that little gem. When I said that I couldn't see why Kipling with his breadth of intellect should still be orthodox, the King explained how it is his training that makes him cling to his early beliefs; then he loves power & authority & Kingship—and that has to show itself in his religion. All the time he was talking he walked round the billiard table knocking 4 pool balls & making such good shots—and scoring such good runs—and he went on to say that the time could easily come that if his mind became enfeebled from an enfeebled body, that on a lingering death bed, he could probably call for Joe Twichell & a bible & do a lot of repenting [TS 19-20]. Note: a short newspaper clipping, datelined Stockholm, Aug. 19 is pasted here, "Nobel Prize for Kipling; Mark Twain Was, It Is Said, Suggested for the Honor This Year."

Charles Hopkins Clark wrote from Hartford to invite Sam to a "dinner call" on Mar. 6 [MTP]. Note: see after Jan. 22 for his reply.

W.W. Denslow wrote from NYC to Sam, desirous of seeing him and talking about Bermuda, and his island in particular, "as Dr. Herring of the Bermudian tells me you are interested and intend to return to the Sunlit islands" [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote from Elmira, NY to Sam, having just rec'd a property tax bill on the Buffalo property. Sam's one-third would be $43.99. Also, he wrote that Jervis "had a delightful time with you. He thinks it is much more fun to do business with you than it is to work at anything else" [MTP].

John Trotwood Moore wrote to Sam on Taylor-Trotwood Publishing Co., Nashville, Tenn. letterhead.

I inclose a clipping about you & I am sending you this by mail a copy of my magazine containing the story Rumany Riss which I thought ou might like to read.

I should love to have a line from you telling me just how much rest and sleep you take. It is not impertinence but my drive to know how much a man of your great brain work needs after hard creation or other brain work. / with personal regard... [MTP]. Note: no clipping is in the file. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Have to keep these secrets to myself. If they re likely to get into print—for Harpers wont have it— / Harpers is not my address for 2nd class mail—All such mail sent there never gets any further. For the express & extra postage charges in the summertime would bankrupt me"

S.F. Battarns for West Point Military Academy wrote to Sam: "It gives me pleasure to inform you that the privileges of the West Point Army Mess are extended to you for the ensuing year" [MTP].

In Sam's A.D. he explained about not being able to identify the author, Robert Richardson (d.1901), of the lines which had been chosen for Susy Clemens' headstone: "We had found them in a book in India, but had lost the book and with it the author's name. But in time an application to the editor of 'Notes and Queries [NY Times] furnished me the author's name...and it has been added to the verses upon the gravestone" [Gribben 508].

January 22 after – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam wrote on the Jan. 22 invite from Charles Hopkins Clark (of the Hartford Courant), declining a "dinner call" in Hartford. "Can't go have no sufficient good excuse except that I have retired—never again accept a banquet invitation that in my heart I do not feel obliged to attend from a sense of duty or for some higher reason" [MTP].

Sam replied with thanks to S.F. Battarns, for "the honor you confer in extending to me the privileges of the West Point Army Mess for the coming year. I accept them with pleasure & hope I may be able to use them" [MTP].

January 23 Wednesday – At 5 p.m. at Fifth Ave., N.Y. Sam fell up the front steps and skinned his "starboard shin" [Jan. 26 to Jean].

Isabel Lyon's journal: More about Aldrich's coat—label gone.

This afternoon Mr. Clemens went up to Mrs. Nathan's to see a clever clairvoyant Prof. Bert Rees a big-faced German who read the contents of folded bits of paper in quite a wonderful way. He told the King among other things that he would live to be 98 years ten months & 2 days old—and the King wants to swap off some of those years & months & days.

Today C.C. had another letter from T.B. Aldrich about that coat, & how the complaint is that the London label has been taken out, & how could it have happened—a poet—a man of letters—harassed by the loss of a tiny coat label—it is unthinkable; but again it shows Aldrich as he truly is & not as the finely sensitive creature that strangers believe him to be. The creature whose mentality is of a quality to keep him above the region of coats, let alone a label [TS 18-19]. Note: Mrs. Nathan may be Maud Nathan (Mrs. Frederick Nathan). See 24 Dec. 1909.

George B. Cortelyou wrote on Postmaster General, Washington DC notepaper to invite Clemens to the annual banquet of the University Club of Washington on Feb. 16 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Shouldn't be able to come now in old age, but in any case have an engagement for that date."

John C.G. Cumming wrote from Falkirk, Scotland to Sam, insisting he was not an autograph collector and thanking him for his many books. He also told a tale about corpses being dug up in China and gorgonzola cheese, that "looks like a variation of one of yours, Sir, but it isn't" [MTP]. Note: see Sam's reply Feb.2-6 entry. Also IVL's journal Feb. 4 entry.

George H. Himes wrote on Oregon Historical Society, Portland, Ore. letterhead to Sam. After reading one of the recent Autobiography articles in the NAR, Himes recalled he'd written Sam about "a journeyman printer named [Urban East] Hicks, who worked in the office of your Brother Orion at Hannibal, in he late 40's; and the fact that I wrote to you about him perhaps 18 years ago, when he was in my employ." Since Sam had inquired of Hicks, Himes told what became of him and the various places he lived in his declining years; also of his death at age 78 when a train ran over him. He added a page of his history with Hicks that began in the late fall of 1853 [MTP].

George W. Jepsen wrote for The Danish Dramatic Society, NYC to announce that Mrs. Oda Nielsen from Copenhagen, Denmark has arrived in New York and would go on tour in the US. She could “sing in almost any language, and she has a manner of interpreting her songs, which is unknown here, and which has made her famous in Europe.” Sam was invited to be the guest of honor to meet her on Jan. 27, 8 p.m. [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP as “really two dictations.”

January 24 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. the back of a chair gave way with Sam in it. He fell backward striking his head, his feet in the air, his chin crushing his chest. He was not injured, though he wrote he couldn’t do that again without breaking his neck [Jan. 26 to Jean].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: W.W. Denslow came at 5 to talk about that island of his in Bermuda but it seems that he will want it in August & if the King goes to Bermuda he will want to stay until October anyway. The King had wanted Denslow to come for luncheon. Luck prevented my reaching him by telephone to give him the invitation, & now the King tells me that Denslow is coarse & vulgar. I suspected it by his voice when he telephoned me this morning. In fact I fancied perhaps he was a little drunk—but I imagine it was just Denslow. The King sat in an ordinary straight backed chair while they were talking in the billiard room & in his interest of the subject he threw himself back in the chair. There was a crack and a crash; the chair-back split off & the King fell over backward striking his head on the floor. He told me that he had his “prayer” all ready & got it out before he touched the floor, fearing he’d land in Eternity first. He knocked the billiard balls around while he talked to me, in a soft light, & made wonderful shots [TS 21-22].

William J.C. Dulany, Booksellers and Stationers, Baltimore, Md. wrote to ask Sam who the publisher was for his “little booklet entitled ‘King Leopold’s Soliloquy’” [MTP].

Arda Bates Rorison wrote to invite Sam to the opening performance of Jeanne d’Arc Jan. 29; they could call for him at 7 pm [MTP].

January 25 Friday – Sam played billiards with Peter Dunne (“Mr. Dooley”) [Jan. 26 to Jean]. Lyon wrote:

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King said “I am just thirsting for blood & Mr. Dooley is going to furnish it!”—Billiards!—Mr. Dooley is coming for luncheon. But the King is walking up & down the billiard room with quick light eager steps—ready for dictation, but readier for the blood of Mr. Dooley [Peter Dunne]. Later: He got the blood, for he and Mr. Dooley played all the afternoon & while Mr. D isn’t a good billiardist, he is good company, & the King was quite happy, I think. Mr. John Howells came in with some nice plans for the Redding house [TS 22].

Chatto & Windus wrote to Clemens, enclosing a statement and check for £123:2:7 for sales of his books for the half-year ending Dec. 31, 1906 [MTP]

Howells & Stokes Co. (John M. Howells) wrote to Miss Lyon with details of the proposed Redding house, working within the $25,000 allowance [MTP].

January 26 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

It is good news, Jean dear, that you are having healthful outdoor times, & especially good news that Dr. Hunt perceives that your condition is improved. It is very good news.

Miss Lyon is sure you will like the carriage. From the description of it I am of the same opinion. George & the carriage & the horse will doubtless soon be on their way to you.

I am glad you enjoy your carving-work. Your pigs were cunningly & artistically done, & mighty attractive. If I could do such things I should greatly enjoy it.

John Howells has planned a house which is going to be very satisfactory, I think—in all ways, cost included.

Dooley came & played billiards yesterday & I won a dollar, & Clara tried to make me give it back to him. She does everything she can to make it difficult for me to support the family [MTP]. Note: he also told of skinning his shin and also falling backward as a chair gave way; not being able to do it again without breaking his neck. Dr. Edward Livingston Hunt.

Sam also wrote to Joe Twichell. Dear Joe: / All the periodicals have refused this poem—ever since election day. Get Charley Clark to put it in the Courant.[Enclosed:]

The Battle of Ivoy
Man For His Own Hand.
====
Being a Campaign Anthem.
====
Air—Jerusalem the Golden.
————

Ho, burghers of Dutch Albany,
Ho, buggers of New York,
Ho, sons of bitches from the slums
And painted whores from Cork,*
Ho, gallows-birds from Hell's Delight
And convicts prison-nursed,
O, gather, gather to the polls
And 'lect the bloody Hurst!
====

* A poetically-licensed divergence from fact. They don't come from there [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Benjamin dinner. A.B. back & the King glad.

This afternoon Mr. Clemens went up to see "Fletcher" the palmist. At 4 o'clock he came home full of the amusement of it. Fletcher told him that he was to live close onto a century. That he had 2 investments connected with the ground—one of which was to be of great importance in about 2 years time, and that he'd be advised to sell out, but that he mustn't do it. The King said "There's the Utah [Consolidated stock] & the Farm [Redding house]". We sat on the red sofa in the billiard room while he told me about his visit there & then he read a little of Omar Khyayyam aloud. It's a new translation just sent to the King & translates 8 of the quatrains. Of course it doesn't tally with FitzGerald's exactly, which made the King remark that "Omar had changed his principles" [TS 22-23]. Note: see Feb. 2 to Eben Francis Logan, who sent the book. Gribben p. 517 was working with an older TS here, so his page numbers are different.

In the evening Sam attended a banquet in honor of Senator from Montana, William Andrews Clark (1839-1925). Clark made a fortune in Montana in mining, banking and railroads, and owned a magnificent house on Fifth Ave., containing a wealth of art treasures. The NY Times, Jan. 27, p. 13:

DINNER TO SENATOR CLARK.

A dinner was given in honor of Senator W. A. Clark by the Art Committee of the Union League at the clubhouse last night [Jan. 26] as a mark of appreciation for the loan exhibition of the Senator's pictures which recently closed there. Among the other guests were Mark Twain, Frank R. Lawrence, President of the Lotos Club; George R. Sheldon, Robert C. Ogden, and Albert H. Wiggin.

There were thirty canvases in Senator Clark's exhibit, representing $1,000,000 in value. The members of the Art Committee who gave the dinner were Col. H. B. Wilson, Herbert S. Carpenter, Paulding Farnham, Thomas E. Kirby, Col. Harrison K. Bird, and A. A. Anderson.

Note: Fatout lists this as a speaking engagement for Twain (p.676), but from Sam's narration of the day and event in MTE (p.70-77), he clearly did not:

I went to the dinner, which was served in a small private room of the club with the usual piano and fiddlers present to make conversation difficult and comfort impossible. I found that the Montana citizen was not merely a guest but that the dinner was given in his honor. While the feeding was going on two of my elbow neighbors supplied me with information concerning the reasons for this tribute of respect to Mr. Clark. Mr. Clark had lately lent to the Union League Club, which is the most powerful political club in America and perhaps the richest, a million dollars' worth of European pictures for exhibition. It was quite plain that my informant regarded this as an act of almost superhuman generosity. One of my informants said, under his breath and with awe and admiration, that if you should put together all of Mr. Clark's several generousities to the club, including this gaudy one, the cost to Mr. Clark first and last would doubtless amount to a hundred thousand dollars. I saw that I was expected to exclaim, applaud, and adore, but I was not tempted to do it, because I had been informed five minutes earlier that Clark's income, as stated under the worshipping informant's breath, was thirty million dollars a year [MTE 72-3].

Susan L. Warner (Mrs. Charles Dudley Warner) wrote to Sam upon learning he was to be a pallbearer for Mrs. Hooker. Would he stay with Mary Barton and herself over night? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "I thank you ever so much but am not able to come."

January 27 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal:

This morning I had no mail for the King so we had talk instead & he read me Mr. Dooley's ideas about the Army Canteen which appears in today's Times. He sat up in bed & rolled it out so deliciously, gurgling with delight. I wish Peter Dunne could have seen him. I wish Kipling would see him read those immortal Jungle Tales.

C.C. went off to Boston at 12:30. Such a bustle to get her off & then as A.B. & I sat by my open fire, I bade him stop talking for I heard a wail a lamentation. It was the King singing. I flew down stairs & I told A.B. that the King was lonely, for he sings like that only when his spirit is calling for lost companionship. I found him cursing the loneliness of the house—the first floor—and it is that way. There's nothing gemütlich about those rooms, but they could be made so—oh easily. However, we lunched & the King was brilliant. Then he played billiards—a left handed game—all the afternoon with A.B. & all the evening too. I watched for a little while, & so rested myself, for I'm very weary sometimes. And the King always rests me—always [TS 23]. Note: gemütlich: German adj.: Warm and congenial; pleasant or friendly.

Gertrude H. Baldwin wrote inviting Sam to some function [MTP]. On or just after this date Sam replied:

"Don't go out at night any more except when I feel obliged to do it & that will be exceedingly seldom. If I haven't done my share of work I have at least reached the time limit when I ought to have done it" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Sam was "cursing the loneliness of this house" [Hill 165].

Robert Reid wrote a rather illegible letter to Sam that begins, "I wanted to see you—I didn't know you were going to see Mr R." (H.H. Rogers) The rest is only partially readable [MTP].

January 28 Monday – In his A.D. Sam referred to songs: "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," as he had in Ch. 11 of PW back in 1894 [Gribben 236]. He also referred to the Jan. 26 dinner, when Senator Clark of Montana "rose to the tune of ... 'God Save the King,' frantically sawed and thumped by the fiddlers and the piano” during Union League Club speeches [263]. “The Star Spangled Banner” [370]. Note: Devoto selected this day’s dictation for inclusion in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940) p.70-77.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “They” poem. Englishman

The King played billiards all the afternoon & all the evening. At luncheon when we were talking about Kipling again & the obscurity of “They” I told the King how the story is now in book form & prefaced by a beautiful explanatory poem & ran upstairs to get it for him. He read it aloud as we sat at the table & he was deeply moved by its beauty & by the last part of it especially.

[written diagonally and in red pencil:]

The poem in my Kipling—“Traffics & Discoveries” [TS 24].

In Sam’s A.D. he mentioned Finley Peter Dunne (pseud. Mr. Dooley); he “is brilliant; he is an expert with his pen, and he easily stands at the head of all the satirists of this generation” [Gribben 209].

Davis Johnson, attorney in Van Wert, Ohio wrote a Mark Twain fan letter to Sam, confessing that reading TS and HF now to his own children gave him the same pleasure it did when he was six [MTP].

January 29 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to Miss Eleanor Robson, who was raising money for the support of Bret Harte’s daughter, Mrs. Jessamy Steele, who, Miss Robson wrote this day was “in dire need and in the Portland Me. Almshouse.”

I feel that the American people owe a debt of gratitude to Bret Harte, for not only did he paint such pictures of California as delighted the heart, but there was such an infinite tenderness, such sympathy, such strength, and such merit in his work that the commanded the attention of the world to our country, and his daughter is surely deserving of our sympathy [NY Times Jan. 30, 1907, p.18 “Aid for Harte’s Daughter”].

Note: Eleanor Robson Belmont (1879-1979) was an English stage actress who was currently playing a role in a Bret Harte play, Salomy Jane. She made her New York debut in 1900 and was popular in the US until 1910, when she retired after marrying August Belmont, Jr. (1853-1924) financier and builder of New York’s Belmont Park racetrack.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Miss Minah Smith came with her plans of her Bermuda house—$125 a month & darling. I carried them up to the King who was in his tub—so I waited on the stairs until he came out of the bathroom. He Swore roundly at something in there & come to find out he had dropped 2 cakes of soap in the tub & they were so slippery he couldn’t get hold of them. I rubbed his head dry while I told him about the plans & the nigger servants & how he’d be living close to the archbishop and he wondered if anyone would be good enough to induce the archbishop to move away.

A Mr. Leander Richardson came in a short time ago to ask Mr. Clemens to allow his name to be used in a testimonial Miss Eleanor Robson is getting up for one of the Bret Harte’s daughters who is in a poorhouse, & the King is willing.

The King went up to the Rogerses for dinner & to spend the night. It is Mr. Rogers’s birthday & the King took up an ash tray with an angel fish enameled upon it. Mother & I went out to the Brevoort & later AB came in and we had a sweet and cosy talk in my room. He is such a frank creature & looks fate in the eyes & believes in the great fabric of life [MTP TS 24-25].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Frederic Whyte. “Mr. Clemens asks me to write for him & say that he has received both your letter & the Graphic; and that he supposed there was nothing about your first letter that indicated you would use his private answer in a public way. It has made him violate a contract with his publisher, which he naturally regrets” [MTP]. Note: Whyte had written on Dec. 7, 1906 asking Sam’s reaction to the endorsement of phrenology by Alfred Russel Wallace; Whyte then published some of Sam’s remarks in the London Daily Graphic without permission.

Rachel A. King wrote from Scotland to thank Sam for his kind letter and photo. On his next birthday she promised to send “something that will remind you of your boyhood” [MTP].

Mrs. F.B. Powell wrote from Woodstock, NY to ask Sam for a “few lines” [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

January 30 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tearing headache less than 3 weeks since last.

Yesterday the King gave permission to have his name used in the Eleanor Robson benefit for Bret Harte’s daughter, but today he has revoked it, for he sees through the whole thing as being mainly an advertisement for Eleanor Robson. He is so impulsive, & continually has to withdraw from propositions that he has gone into with enthusiasm [MTP TS 25].

Henry Meade Bland wrote from San Jose, Calif. to Sam, enclosing a clipping from the Overland Monthly of Jan. 1907, and a clipping from the San Jose Times. (The former in the file.) He had his artist, Miss Alice Resor, make a drawing from the photo Sam sent. He requested the honor of meeting him should Sam ever venture out West again. The article enclosed by Bland discusses the friendship between Twain and Charles Warren Stoddard, then expanded into a brief biography [MTP]. Note: after this date Sam replied to Bland, writing a note to Lyon on Bland’s letter: “not likely to ever go away from NY City again but if he comes East would be glad to see him” [MTP].

John Mead Howells wrote to Isabel Lyon enclosing “a new set of sketches embodying all the points we discussed yesterday” on the Redding house [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II wrote to Sam that the director meeting for the Hope-Jones Organ Co. on Jan 25 had issued a call for 15% on the subscription of stock. He requested Sam to send $750.00 [MTP].

Eleanor Robson wrote to Sam [MTP]. Letter is missing.

Abbott Rose wrote from NYC to Sam. She was secretary for the new organization, the Mark Twain Literary Society. She requested an autographed letter authorizing the use of his name [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: Answd Feb. 21, ‘08”

Harriet E. Whitmore wrote from Hartford to praise Sam for his books and to castigate those in Massachusetts library who restricted Eve’s Diary [MTP].

In his A.D. Sam referred to King Charles II as one who lowered English standards of “official and commercial morals,” which had been raised by Cromwell [Gribben 237].

Of the selections from Twain’s A.D.’s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto’s choices, was “The Teaching Applied,” dictated this day, which blamed Jay Gould and his successors for the corruption of the American moral system. He also accused Colorado Senator Simon Guggenheim (1867-1941) of paying for his office from the state legislature [81-3]. Also in MTE was another dictation, “The Little Tale,” of this date. It was a story of a book collector’s find of a First Folio of Shakespeare in a farmer’s house and a purchase for a price far below its value. Sam compared this to the honesty of James Hammond Trumbull. Sam likely noted the tale, told to him at the Union League Club dinner for Senator Clark, because the collector was a clergyman [91-6].

January 30 ca. – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Jan. 3 from Eleanor Robson.

It might be better taste to leave me out. For the past 30 years we were not friends. In the circumstances I do not want a prominent place—never heard of any member of the family who differed much from Bret Harte. I despised him. If there are going to be a lot of names, then well & good [MTP: MS draft]. Note: may be a first draft effort for the Jan. 29 to Robson.

January 31 Thursday – Life Magazine ran a cartoon of Mark Twain sitting “on a barrel of cigars and smoking, with text praising him in general terms for his good humor and his attacks on folly and vice” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Sixth Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Spring 1982 p. 10]. Note: compare this to the Dec. 21, 1905 cartoon in Life, celebrating his 70th birthday.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Chinatown and the beads. / The King’s watch is gone” [MTP TS 25].

Jervis Langdon II wrote to Sam on Hope-Jones Organ Co. of NY and Elmira letterhead, asking him to sign and return enclosed papers in complying with the law in the matter of organization. They were already building an organ for Troy, N.Y and expected other contracts [MTP].

Laura J. Kreps wrote from Pittsburg, Penn. to ask Sam to “revise or help” with a short story she and her daughter had written that had been rejected by two editors [MTP].

January, late (before Feb. 1) – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Jan. 2 of Witter Bynner:

Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: It might have been.
Ah say not so! as life grows longer, leaner, thinner
We recognize, O God, it might have Bynner! [MTP].

February – Sometime during the month Sam dined with William James, who wrote to his brother Henry James afterward: “Poor man, only good for monologue, in his old age, or for dialogue at best, but he’s a dear little genius all the same” [J. Kaplan 379].

The first edition of Christian Science, with Notes Containing Corrections to Date was published in February, 1907; two copies were deposited with the Copyright Office on Feb. 7 [Hirst, “A Note on the Text” Afterword materials p.13, Oxford ed. 1996].

Sometime after the release of CS, an unidentified person wrote to him about the book: “Wishing you success in your good work of shining the absurdities and hypocrisies of Christian Science” [MTP]

Sam signed his photo to an unidentified person [MTP: Maggs Bros. catalog, No. 1257, Item 38].

Stuart Gould’s article, “Samuel L. Clemens” ran in Broadway Magazine (later Hampton’s Broadway Magazine) for Feb. [Tenney 44].

February 1 Friday – Anticipating the Feb. 2 Players Club luncheon with Eugene Fitch Ware, Sam spent most of the day reading The Rhymes of Ironquill [MTB 1374].

The New York Times, Feb. 2, reported on Sam’s appearance at Police headquarters:

TWAIN VISITS BINGHAM. Delights Police Headquarters by Wearing His White Flannel Suit.

Wearing a white flannel suit, just like that in which he first appeared on Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, Mark Twain went to Police Headquarters yesterday. When he alighted from his carriage at the curb on the Mulberry Street side of the building a tattered man, who looked as though he might have strayed from a Bowery saloon, yelled:

“Hello, Mark!”

The humorist looked at the man, smiled genially, called back “Hello” in a pleasant tone, and hurried up the steps.

After spending about fifteen minutes in Commissioner Bingham’s office Mr. Clemens returned to his carriage. Before entering it he explained that it was just a social call he had made on the Commissioner, whom he knew very well, he said, having met him in Germany and several times in Washington. No, he had not found any fault with the department, he said. He did not think the police needed advice so much as some members of the highest legislative body in the land.

[Note. Theodore A. Bingham (1858-1934) Commissioner from 1905-1909; see entries Vol. II. Bingham was in the West Point class of 1879 and may have met Twain there. Leon puts “at least three visits” to West Point by Twain as early as 1876, p.37].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Frederick [sic Frederic] Thompson the hypnotized (?) artist came to the house today to tell a wonderful story about the strange influence that the spirit of Swain Gifford has had over him, converting him from a silversmith to an artist. Prof. Hyslop [sic] has become interested in his case. He came to see Mr. Clemens because he had been told that the King is interested in psychic things. The King didn’t see him, but I listened with the greatest interest to his story & AB, who came in while he was here, listened also with interest [MTP TS 25-26]. Note. Dr. James Hervy Hyslop (1854-1920), author, educator, considered by some the leader of psychical research in America. Ex-professor of Logic and Ethics at Columbia.

Witter Bynner replied to Sam’s poem (before Feb. 1) with one of his own “To Saint Mark.”

Archangel of Profanity, of Blasphemous Urbanity,
Shall be your name and post!—

You shall be king of carpers,
At all the heavenly Harpers—
You’ll make a bully Host!

At every feather-tip, an oath
Ascended from the behemoth
Shall hang and sparkle plain,

And the Creator, staying near,
Shall beg you – with attentive ear –

To take His name in vain [MTP]. Note. Clemens wrote on the letter “His laugh is a search light attained to audibility—; Offered the compliments of a box on the 16th of Feb—& he proposes to gather a friend or two go.”

James Clarence Harvey wrote from NYC to Sam, hesitant to “desecrate” the P&P play because the managers of some club suggested more comedy, “which in managerial parlance means more loud laughs...” Harvey wanted to check with Sam before letting it “go by the boards” [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

Chapters from “My Autobiography—XI” ran in the N.A.R. p.225-32.

February 2 Saturday – Albert Bigelow Paine gave a private luncheon at the Players Club for Clemens and Eugene Fitch Ware, who wrote poetry under the name “Ironquill.” Also at the luncheon were Peter Dunne (“Mr. Dooley”), and Robert J. Collier. Paine notes that Sam had “long been familiar” with Ware’s poetry, which had a “distinctly ‘Western’ feeling....” “There was in his work that same spirit of Americanism and humor and humanity that is found in Mark Twain’s writings....” [MTB 1374]. Note: see Dec. 1 incoming from Ware.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: AB’s luncheon at the Players. / He gave a luncheon for the King & for Ironquill—Ware. There were Robert Collier & Mr. Dooley beside the first 3, & they had a noble time. Ware wrote in the King’s volume of poems—Ironquill poems—“The man that is frozen to death dies hard.” It delighted me—but the King didn’t find it clever at all [MTP TS 26; also Gribben 743]. Note: Clemens never cared too much for puns.

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to James Logan, thanking him for sending “Mr. Thompson’s book,” sent in Jan.: “I owe you many thanks for sending me Mr. Thompson’s book. I read it with strong interest & pleasure, & shall continue to drink from it, for the more a disciple gets of Omar the thirstier he gets” [MTP; Gribben 517]. Note: The Quatrains of Omar Khayyám of Nishapur, Translated from the Persian into English Verse, Including Quatrains Now for the First Time So Rendered by Eben Francis Thompson (1859-1939). Intro. by Nathan Haskell Dole (1852-1935). Worcester, Mass.: Privately printed, 1906. See Jan. entry for inscriptions. See also Jan. 26, for Sam’s comment on the book.

Sam also replied to the Jan. 13 letter and book from John Howard Moore (1862-1916), instructor in zoology, Crane Manual Training High School, Chicago.

Dear Mr. Moore,—The book has furnished me several days of deep pleasure & satisfaction; it has compelled my gratitude at the same time, since it saves me the labor of stating my own long-cherished opinions & reflections & resentments by doing it lucidly & fervently & irascibly for me.

There is one thing that always puzzles me: as inheritors of the mentality of our reptile ancestors we have improved the inheritance by a thousand grades; but in the matter of morals which they left us we have gone backward as many grades. That evolution is strange, & to me unaccountable and unnatural. Necessarily we started equipped with their perfect & blemishless morals; now we are wholly destitute; we have no real morals, but only artificial ones—morals created and preserved by the forced suppression of natural and hellish instincts. Yet we are dull enough to be vain of them. Certainly we are a sufficiently comical invention, we humans. / Sincerely Yours / S. L. Clemens [Paine’s 1917 Mark Twain’s Letters p.804-5; Quoted in MTB 1363]. Note: Moore’s book was The Universal Kinship (1906) [Gribben 482].

Norman Hapgood wrote from NYC to Sam. “William James is dining here next Saturday, the 8th. Would you be one of a very small bunch to meet him?” [MTP]. Note: After this date Lyon replied for Sam, summarizing Sam’s wishes on Hapgood’s letter: “doesn’t want to have this / unspeakably glad it’s a very small bunch for Wm James & Hapgood are bunch enough in themselves / above 3 guests / strong” [MTP].

Minnie N. Goodwin (Mrs. Frederic S. Goodwin) sent Sam an invitation to a Feb. 16, 7 p.m. banquet of “uncooked food” at their studio 467 Central Park West. She had had “a little chat” with Sam “on the stage at the last Vassar Aid Benefit.” She also wrote “I honor you for exposing that colossal fraud—old Mother Eddy”[MTP].

At the annual dinner of the New York University School of Commerce at the Hotel Astor, Mark Twain’s publisher, George B. Harvey, related an exchange between Sam and H.H. Rogers. The New York Times, Feb. 3, p.4 “Wants a Business Man in the Hall of Fame,” reported:

...

Col. George Harvey, editor of The North American Review, told a story in the course of his address that threw light upon the relationship that exists between Mark Twain and H. H. Rogers of the Standard Oil Company. According to Col. Harvey he overheard a conversation between the two over a telephone, which was carried on through the aid of the author's servants.

"I found Mark Twain in bed—as usual," said Col. Harvey, "and as I went into his room I gathered that he was carrying on a conversation with some one over the telephone. As I waited I heard Mr. Clemens say to his servant, 'You tell Henry Rogers that I am not feeling very well this evening and that I should like to take dinner with him at his home.'"

"The servant went to the telephone, and returned saying that Mr. Rogers had replied he would be glad to have Mr. Clemens as his guest at dinner.

" 'Well, you ring up Henry Rogers again and tell him that I have a cold and can't go unless he sends his automobile for me.'"

"The servant did as he was bid, and returned with a satisfactory answer.

" 'Now, you ring up Henry Rogers again, and tell him that I can't go unless there is a bed convenient; it's too cold for me to return in the night air.'"

"Again there was a satisfactory reply, and I believed that negotiations were at an end, but I was in error.

" 'You ring up Henry Rogers again,' said Clemens, 'and ask whether I shall fetch night robes, or shall we waive etiquette.' "

February 2-6 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam gave instructions to Isabel Lyon to reply to the Jan. 23 from John C.G. Cumming in Scotland and "Thank him for the cheese letter" [MTP].

February 3 Sunday – The New York Times, p. SM7 ran "Mark Twain Pays His Respects to Mrs. Eddy and Christian Science," which announced the publication this week of Christian Science.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King set sail in his white clothes for Mrs. Laffan's, , so that he could arrive in time for luncheon, which he did & he came home gay & happy. Mrs. Paine & Joy & Louise came in this morning. I played on the orchestrelle for the children, but it was a trying occasion, for Mrs. Paine is jealous of this whole situation & it was difficult to break away from the frozen crust she banked herself behind [MTP TS 26]. Note: Joy and Louise were daughters of Mr. & Mrs. Albert Bigelow Paine.

Mrs. Elizabeth R. Baucert wrote from West Newton, Mass. to advise Sam of a review of CS in this day's Boston Herald. Sam had written that the Boston Christian Science Trust "gives nothing away; every thing it has is for sale." Baucert advised that she'd noticed a sign on the First CS church there "Free Reading Room," and mused that it might be free to get in but not to get out. "Your suggestion of their worship of Dollar—so prominent in Mrs. Eddy's Science reminds one of the advice of the immortal Josh Billings, "Git money, my son, honestly if ye can—but git it" [MTP]. Note: clipping from the Boston Herald is in the file, date handwritten on side of Feb. 4, "Motto is 'Down with Reason'". Twain is not mentioned.

Mary Mewell Eaton, a NYC highschool teacher wrote to Sam, trying to "awaken in one hundred youngster's hearts a love of good literature," asked for his autograph [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter from Sam: "Thank her for her letter"

February 4 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: All day in Katonah. Jean was very sweet & I had a lovely time with the dear bruised child for last Friday she fell.

This morning I had a good hour with the King who read with delight a letter from a Scotchman who told a story of the disinterment of a Chinese corpse in Amoy. The King will use it as an autobiographic note covering the mail of the day [MTP TS 26-27]. Note: John C.G. Cumming wrote from Falkirk, Scotland on Jan. 23.

J.C. Tebbetts wrote from Pittsburg about CS, which he had studied for years and which he thought was "the idiocy of Mrs. Eddy's teaching." However, Tebbetts seems to defend Eddy and quotes Scripture in doing so [MTP]. Note: Sam would reply on Feb. 7.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Mr. Eddy of NYC wrote a postcard to Sam after seeing yesterday's NY Herald about Mrs. Eddy, which did him "$10 worth of good" [MTP]. Note: evidently, this Eddy unrelated to Mrs. Eddy.

John E. Fellers wrote from Chicago to Sam, pasting three short clippings about Christian Science, advising him not to publish CS. "The writer of this letter was raised in Missouri not far from your old Hannibal home. He has always felt a pardonable pride in your growing popularity. Many of your old friends are my friends too. It will be easier for us than for thousands of others, to forget the mistake you are about to make in publishing this book" [MTP]. Note: see Sam's reply (Feb. 8-11).

Jeannette L. Gilder wrote to Lyon, wrong about the date of the Jeanne D'Arc matinee—it was the 23rd, not the 16th and so she was "holding a box for Mr. Clemens for Saturday Matinee Feb. 23rd" [MTP].

Brander Matthews wrote from NYC to Sam, observing he hadn't had a visit for some time. Could Sam "come up at half past one on Friday of next week, the 15th? I'm asking Howells, of course, and Bronson Howard,—only eight in all" [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam, enclosing contracts between Clemens and Gabriel Timmory, French playwright, for the adaptation of four other stories, all but one in French [MTP].

Mrs. L.E. Skeels wrote from NYC to ask Sam for an agency for his CS book, confident that her sales would be "very large" [MTP].

In Sam's A.D. he emphasized the importance of temperament in determining behavior, noting it accounted for "the plight of Bret Harte's daughter, who reportedly had been committed to a home for the indigent and friendless in Portland, Maine" [MTE 268-92; quotations are Gribben's 403]. Note: MTP notes: "Datelined thus; but really 5 days' ADs"

February 5 Tuesday – The New York Times, p.9 ran this squib:

Mark Twain has consented to take part in the benefit for the Keats-Shelley Memorial in Rome, Italy, that is to be given at the Waldorf-Astoria on the afternoon of Feb. 14. He will read Shelley's "Ode to a Skylark."

Ross Clark wrote from Portland, Ore. to ask if Sam had written a book titled Through Dust and Foam. If so, where could he get a copy? [MTP]. Note: Lyon on letter: 'Answd Mch 13, '07'; the 1876 book was written by R. Hook and G.D. Hook.

February 6 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Willam Dean Howells, Finley Peter Dunne, and George B. Harvey. He wanted to form "The Damned Human Race Club":

The Human Race will meet at the above address on St. Valentine's
Feb. 15th at 1.15 p.m.

This club consists of 4 members—to-wit:

Howells
Dooley [Peter Dunne]
Harvey
Clemens

Officers:

President pro tem—Clemens

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Invitation Committee—Harvey

Hon. Sec. — — Miss Lyon.

The President pro tem. hopes that all the membership will be present.

By order—

I.V. Lyon, Hon. Sec. [MTP; not in MTHL]. Note: the club never managed to fully convene:

<http://bancroft.berkeley.edu/Exhibits/mtatplay/sociallife/clubman.html>

In Mark Sullivan's memoir, he spoke of the chumminess between Richard J. Collier, Norman Hapgood and Peter Dunne that led to the formation of the G.D.H.R., the “God Damned Human Race Club”:

There was close friendship between Mark and three of the Colliers' coterie, Hapgood, Robert Collier and Peter Dunne. Dunne was the only person I ever heard call Clemens “Mark” to his face, though all of us, a generation younger, spoke of him among ourselves as “Old Mark.” Hapgood, Mark had taken into his circle as a family friend; Dunne he had taken in as a fellow humorist, one of whom Mark respected; Collier he took in as a young man he liked. Collier told me that after some early contacts Mark had said to him: “You look to me like a promising young fellow; if you continue to improve on acquaintance I'll invite you to become a member of my club.” To Collier's questions, Mark said the name of it was the G.D.H.R. Club, but the meaning of the initials Mark said he would not tell until he was satisfied that Collier was qualified to be a satisfactory member. The full name of the club, it turned out, was the God Damned Human Race; and the revelation of the name was occasion for Mark to blow off to a friend a bitterness which an honored author must not reveal to the public. “The God damned human race,” he would say, “look at them!” Watch a crowd of them coming out of a subway station, potbellied, snaggle-toothed; compare them to horses; compare them to collie dogs” [The Education of an American 231].

Isabel Lyon's journal: “Today the King went up to call on Mrs. Mary Rogers” [MTP TS 27].

Frederick Palmer wrote from NYC to invite Sam to a dinner next door to Sam at the Brevoort Hotel on Feb. 11 at 7:30 p.m. Frederick McCormick, “who was with the Russian army from the start to the finish of the war, and myself, are to give a dinner to Robert Collins who was my tent-mate on the Japanese side in the Manchurian campaign. The occasion is Mr Collins' departure to take charge of the Associated Press Bureau in London” [MTP]. Note: Editorial emphasis. After this date Sam gave instructions to Lyon: “If you will let him come in at nine or 9.30 I would like to be there”

James DeConlay, Jr., a roving correspondent of the Australasian Press and temporarily in NYC, wrote to ask if he might meet Mark Twain [MTP].

M.C.B. Hart wrote from NYC to Lyon, to thank Sam for autographing “the book and photograph” [MTP].

John Y. W. MacAlister wrote to Sam. “Fisher Unwin is bringing out a History of the Savage Club, and is anxious to have an authentic record of your connection with it...they want to know about your first visit, somewhere in the seventies...” [MTP].

Frank A. Munsey & Co. wrote on “The Scrap Book” letterhead, NYC, to ask Sam his opinion of “the greatest figures in American history” [MTP].

J.A. Nolan wrote on New York Electric Music Co. letterhead to Sam. “Please find enclosed contracts for Telharmonic music sent you at the suggestion of a friend” [MTP]. Note: Sam had engaged the company to pipe music through his telephone for his prior New Year's Eve party, and was quite taken with the technology.

February 7 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal: “Santa home ill” [MTP TS 27]. Note: “Santa” was Clara.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Two copies of Christian Science were deposited with the copyright office [Hirst, "A Note on the Text" Afterword materials p.13, Oxford ed. 1996].

In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to James K. Paulding. "Mr. Clemens asks me to write for him to say that he is willing to have his name used as one of the committee arranging for the memorial meeting for Ernest Howard Crosby" [MTP]. Note: Crosby, active in the Anti Imperialist League, died on Jan. 3 in Baltimore at age 50.

Sam also inscribed a copy of CS to Isabel V. Lyon: "To / Miss I.V. Lyon / Hon. Sec. G.D.H.R. / with affectionate best wishes of / The Author. / God's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn. / Truly Yours, / Mark Twain / N.Y. Feb./07" [MTP].

Sam also noted for Lyon what is probably a reply to J.C. Tebbetts' Feb. 4 about CS. "I accept his letter in the spirit in which it is sent, but I perceive that he has not read the book but only scrappy reviews of it, & therefore he is not in a position to form an opinion of it" [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Jan. 30 of Harriet E. Whitmore.

But the truth is, that when a library expels a book of mine & leaves an unexpurgated Bible lying around where unprotected youth & age can get hold of it, the deep unconscious irony of it delights me. But even if it angered me such words as those of Professor Phelps would take the sting all out. Nobody attaches weight to the freaks of the Charlton library, but when a man like Phelps speaks, the world gives attention. Some day I hope to meet him & thank him for this courage for saying those things out in public. Custom is, to think a handsome thing in private but tame it down in the utterance.

I hope you are all well & happy; & thereto I add my love [MTP].

C.R. Eastman wrote to Sam on Museum of Comparative Zoology, Cambridge, Mass. letterhead. After reading the several recent articles on Christian Science and Sam's attack on it, Eastman inquired "whether it would be agreeable to you to have your findings considered from the standpoint of a professional scientist..." Eastman noted that he was not allowed to take notes or copy extracts from the materials at the "Free" CS reading rooms, "not even a line or word." His notes were demanded of him and taken by a "frizzle-haired harpy in charge, who clearly 'missed the boat with Noah'" [MTP].

John Gelert, sculptor wrote from NYC to ask Sam if he would sit for a bust [MTP].

William J. Paine wrote from Orange, NJ (c/o Edison's Laboratory) after reading Clemens' opinion of Christian Science in Sunday's NY World. Paine knew "positively from experience that a part of Science and Health was written by someone thoroughly posted on [The Secret of] Secret Service & I do not think that Mrs Eddy was the person..." If he could have an interview he could explain [MTP].

James A. Renwick wrote from NYC to receipt Sam for Feb. rent. $291.67 [MTP].

Count Arthur de Jcherep-Spiridovitch (1858-1926) wrote a postcard to Sam from Moscow, Russia, sending compliments and noting that Miss Lyon had forgotten to send Twain's photo [MTP]. Note: The Count claimed to be a Major General in the Russian Army and President of the Slavonic Society of Russia and also of the Latino-Slavic League of Paris and Rome. Sam would attend his luncheon on Mar. 27. Nikolai V. Chaikovsky for Friends of Russian Freedom would dispute Spiridovitch's claims in a Apr. 1 and other later letters to Sam.

February 8 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Samuel E. Moffett in Mt. Vernon, N.Y. (only the envelope survives) [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Gabrilowitsch here. / Gilders – Tom Janvier – Drake Collection" [MTP TS 27]. Note: Thomas Allibone Janvier.

Frederick Palmer wrote a card (delivered not mailed) to Miss Lyon and Sam, thanking for the consent for Sam to be at the dinner at the Brevoort Hotel on Monday, Feb. 11 [MTP].

George W. Reeves for Hoyt & Co. wrote to Sam, enclosing a letter from George Griswold, Tuxedo park about houses for rent [MTP].

Caroline A. Skinner wrote from NYC to advise Sam that Mr. & Mrs Rogers were to dine with her on Thursday the Fourteenth, and she "would be delighted if you could come too" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "Sorry have /dinner engagement"

Edward B. Taylor wrote from Pittsburgh, Pa. to Sam enclosing a pamphlet, "Vision of Joseph Hoag" that Taylor thought might be of interest "in connection with your reference to the 'Coming American Monarchy'...in his autobiography in the NAR of Jan. 4, 1907 [MTP].

February 8-11 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Feb. 4 of John E. Fellers.

You will be able to comment upon the book more intelligently after you've read it, at present you dont seem to know any useful thing about it. Of the bushel of letters from Commentators on the book that have reached me not one of them has read the book— Consequently not one of them is entitled to have an opinion [MTP].

February 9 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "King dines at Norman Hapgood's" [MTP TS 27].

Actors' Fund wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: On or after this day Sam replied to Daniel Frohman.

Dear Frohman:—Why certainly, use my name and use it freely. Use it in any way you can think of that can help to raise money for that Fund which not right feeling and grateful human being can even hear named without a leaping of the pulses and a warming of the heart.—Forget it if you want to. Yours ever, Mark Twain [MTP: Charles Agvent catalog, No. 4, Item 188].

Herman Spencer's article, "Mark Twain and the Cat," ran in Harper's Weekly, p. 194. Tenney: "A general discussion of the pervasive reference to cats in MT's works" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 192].

Nikolai V. Chaikovsky wrote from NYC to Sam. "My American Executive Committee suggests that I should induce you to preside over the public meeting in the interest of the Russian Revolution, to be held at Carnegie Hall on the 19th inst. evening, on the occasion of welcoming to this country Mr. A. Aladin, the peasant ex-member of the late State Duma, who is coming here to work with me in the same interest" [MTP].

Emma W. Durkee wrote from NYC to advise Sam he had been elected as "permanent guest" of the Smith College Club, and to invite him to their annual luncheon at the Hotel Astor, Feb. 23 at 1 p.m. [MTP].

Norman Fraser of Pearson's Weekly wrote from London, England to Sam. "You are, I believe, of opinion that the United States will eventually become a monarchy. Would you care to write a short article—of about 1200 words—on this subject for Pearson's Weekly, & if so what would be your fee?" [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to enclose a draft for $44.33 to Sam, his 1/3 share of rent "for the premises at the foot of Genesee St. in Buffalo to March 1st, 1907" [MTP].

Joseph F. Taylor of J.F. Taylor & Co., Publishers & Importers wrote to Sam. “Mr. Paine very kindly gave me your portraits and autographs. I am indeed glad to possess these and assure you I appreciate them highly. I hope soon to hve the pleasure of meeting you...” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “This is the rubber man”

February 10 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mr. North, director of census at Washington—today called to see Mr. Clemens with a personal message from the German Emperor” [MTP TS 27]. Note: Simon Newton Dexter (S.N.D.) North (1849-1924) of Boston was Director of US Census at this time.

The New York Times, p.6, “The Suppression of Noises” included Mark Twain with “Gifted intellects in New York, as well as the suffering sick,” in opposition to “megaphone trumpetings, hucksters’ cries, the pounding of ‘flat’ car-wheels in the still watches of the night, assorted apartment house nuisances, and, especially, undue noisemaking in the vicinity of hospitals.” Mrs. Isaac L. Rice’s bill had passed to “abate the whistling and screaming of sirens on the river.” Also named were Richard Watson Gilder, Prof. John Bassett Moore, President Nicholas Butler of Columbia, Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, Dr. John Allen Wyeth (1845-1922) , and Dr. Charles E. Dana (1843-1914).

C.R. Eastman wrote on “The Harvard Union” notepaper to thank Sam “so much for your word of encouragement” [MTP].

Stanford E. Moses wrote an appreciative fan letter to Sam from the USS Georgia, Boston Navy Yard, specifically praising TS, HF, JA and “Concerning the Jews,” of which Moses was one [MTP].

February 11 Monday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Calvin H. Higbie.

Mr. Clemens asks me to write for him & say that within a day or so you will receive a letter from his biographer Mr. Albert Bigelow Paine, who is planning to make a journey out to California in the early spring to collect material for his biography.... [MTP].

Paine quotes from his notebook for this day about memory:

February 11, 1907. He said to-day:

“A blindfolded chess-player can remember every play and discuss the game afterward, while we can’t remember from one shot to the next.”

I mentioned his old pilot-memory as an example of what he could do if he wished.

“Yes,” he answered, “those are special memories; a pilot will tell you the number of feet in every crossing at any time, but he can’t remember what he had for breakfast.”

“How long did you keep your pilot-memory?” I asked.

“Not long; it faded out right away, but the training served me, for when I went to report on a paper a year or two later I never had to make any notes.”

“I suppose you still remember some of the river?”

“Not much. Hat Island, Helena and here and there a place; but that is about all” [MTB 1370].

Fatout lists a dinner speech for Sam at the Robert Collyer Dinner, N.Y.C. and gives these particulars about Collyer:

Robert Collyer (1823-1912) was a British-born Unitarian clergyman. An abolitionist, active on the Civil War Sanitary Commission, he was afterward pastor of Unity Church, Chicago, then of the Church of the Messiah, New York. He was a great success on the lyceum circuit with his popular lecture, “Clear Grit” [MT Speaking 676]. Note: Fatout gives no particulars of Sam’s speech.

Henry Blanchard wrote from Portland, Maine to advise Sam of an old schoolmate at Tufts College, who later became a Unitarian minister, J. Henry Wiggin. Blanchard quoted Wiggin that he had edited and rewritten much of the MS for Eddy's Science and Health. Blanchard also mentioned he'd met Clemens in 1869 at the Bates House in Indianapolis and remembered Sam's drollery [MTP].

Ted D. Marks, "International Amusement Promoter" wrote to Sam, reminding him they'd both been on a ship across the Atlantic, and Sam had been chairman of the concert Marks had "got up for the Benefit, for Seaman's Orphans." Marks had a "little business proposition" for Sam and asked to meet him [MTP].

Frank J. Symmes to Sam wrote on "The Merchants' Association" letterhead, San Francisco to invite Sam to the Apr. 18 Annual Dinner at the Fairmont Hotel, S.F. [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

February 12 Tuesday – In N.Y.C. Sam wrote instructions for Isabel V. Lyon to reply to Rev. Dr. Henry Blanchard in Portland, Maine—thank him for confirming statements made in a letter seven years before by Rev. Mr. Wiggin when Clemens was in England; he'd lost Wiggin's letter long before [MTP].

Henry Darracott Allison wrote from Dublin, N.H. to Miss Lyon. "Your favor of the 6th, received. I have been to the house and got the hat, livery &c. and the bag from Mr. Carey and have to-day shipped them in one box, all together to Miss Jean Clemens, Katonah, New York, care of Dr. Sharp." [MTP].

Laura M. Dake (Laura Wright), Sam's old sweetheart wrote to him:

My dear, old friend, this is just a line by way of remembrance. I keep pretty well in touch with you through your autobiography which I am enjoying very much. Your photos, also, have been enjoyed and much admired. They are so easy, and so natural, that one feels right there and waits to hear you speak.

The protégé is making fine progress in his studies. I hear from him often, and I have such faith that he will climb to the topmost rung of the ladder. Money surely is the lever that moves the world! I could never wear diamonds or costly furs etc. etc with any comfort, because human souls, struggling to reach higher planes, would always be peering at me from behind them. "A socialist," I hear you ask. Well, no—I think not, but a humanitarian.

If you knew how grateful I am to you and how grateful the protégé is for the means of working to the end desired, without being harassed by the pinches of poverty or having to curtail his studies by working after hours—you would feel such a blessed peace stealing into your heart that you will understand better when you have found such a peace in Kingdom Come.

I write, to night, chiefly to tell you of this gratitude, lest you think by my silence, that I have forgotten.

I keep in fairly good health this winter and am able to work for which, of course, I am thankful.

Some fine day you ought to take a run out to California and go once more over your old stamping ground. I cannot say that San Diego offers any attractions, but Los Angeles is simply delightful. If I ever reincarnate, I hope my karma will bring me to pass my days in Los Angeles. I sent you a line of congratulations on your birthday. I hope it reached you. I have quit counting mine, long ago. It does seem hard that old Noah and other chaps of those old days, should swing around the circle of centuries, as easily as we do decades. Oh, for the secret! Even though life be what Matalini called "a demnition grind," it is better than the Unknown beyond, for me. What think you? Yet, hold! I do not expect you to tell me, my ancient friend, when every word of yours is 30 cts! Why it makes me dizzy to think of it. Why I would write, even in my sleep if I could get 30 cts a hundred.

If ever I have a little cabin, and am "settled," I hope you will send me a few of your books, with your name in your own hand writing. I will have a "Clemen's Corner," though ever so small. Not now, however, while I am on the wing, so to speak.

I sometimes hear from your old friends, my cousins, the Youngbloods. They are well and fairly prosperous. Laura is a noble, generous woman, and the mainstay of the family. I enjoyed them very much during my brief visit last summer.

But I must not let my gossiping quill meander over the pages too freely, so I will dip it for the last time, to night, and say Adios, and with innumerable good wishes for your continued health and contentment of mind.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

As always your friend now as in Auld Lang Syne / Laura M. D— / San Diego, Cal.

P.S. I dip my goose quill once more to tell you that our embryonic physician has one more year after this to study, and then—the “bread cast upon the waters,” will surely return [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote at the top of the letter: “Have Paine write her—”

Amos F. Eno wrote a hand-delivered card to Sam inviting him to a meeting of the Neighborhood Club, Tuesday, Feb. 12th at 9 p.m. [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the card, “Decline”

Ella Harrison wrote to Sam from Chattanooga, Tenn. on mourning stationery asking him to put his name on a teaspoon she was collecting [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote “No Ans.”

Joseph Abel Morris wrote from NYC to Sam, enclosing an address Morris gave on Oct. 25, 1906 at Columbia University for the presenting of the honorary LLD degree to Samuel Clemens [MTP]. Note: Lyon attached note: “Mr. Clemens had already seen this.” Also: “an affront / no reply to make”

William Smith wrote from NYC to ask Sam’s support in “behalf of an innocent man, Patrick.” Smith referred to a reprint of “The Sunnyside” article, and asked Sam “to write a brief letter” after reading the article, “stating your opinion and address it to Judge W.M.K. Olcott, 170 Broadway” [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

February 13 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Gabrilowitsch lunched—C.C.—Atlantic City [MTP TS 27].

Edward H. MacDonald wrote to Sam from Charles Town, W. Va.. MacDonald had temporarily lived in Hannibal with an uncle in 1847 and recalled a fight over a ball game [MTP]. Note: On or after this day Lyon wrote on the letter for Sam: “I remember the name Angus McD very well—although couldn’t have known him as I was a small boy—I could not have been in the fight for the reason that I was not in Hannibal in the year 1847 after my father’s death in Mar.” [MTP].

T.C. Bigelow for Illustrated Press Bureau wrote to ask Sam for “really good photographs,” especially in his “cream-colored suit” [MTP].

George B. Harvey wrote a confirmation to Miss Lyon that he would be at the meeting of the Damned Human Race Club at 1:15 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 15 [MTP].

Mary Alice Haslehurst (Mrs. J.W. Haslehurst) wrote to Sam. “A coupe will call for you tomorrow—Thursday—at 2 p.m. to bring you to the Waldorf-Astoria, for the Keats-Shelley Matinee, and if you will kindly tell the coachman at what hour you desire to return home, —he will be at your disposition...” [MTP].

February 13-19 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Brander Matthews.

“This came to me some time ago & I didnt reply to it—it seemed to me a most strange thing if it was sent by a sane person. And now he has called in person—L[yon] has seen him appeasable wanted to know who selected ~~him~~ the King president pro tem—” [MTP]. Note: a draft.

February 14 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

I am very very glad, Jean dear, that you are having such wholesome & healthful good times & are so contented & happy. Poor little Clara isn't so fortunate; she has been laid up with a bad throat & hoarseness, but she went to Atlantic City yesterday & will soon be in shape again she thinks.

To-day I am to appear in public again, to my discomfort. I am weary of public appearances. But Mrs. Gilder asked me, & I wouldn't refuse Dorothea's mother any reasonable thing; I couldn't. I am to read Shelley's Skylark. I have never done anything of quite so serious a nature before, & would rather not be so serious this time—but I must obey orders.

My Autobiography has reached 400,000 words at last, & now I have no more solitudes about it & can go slow & easy & take my time henceforth if I choose.

I knew the elder Park Benjamin quite well. This Mrs. B. is the wife of a son of his, I suppose.

Good-bye—with worlds of love—[MTP]. Note: Jeans' incoming is not extant.

The New York Sun, Feb. 15, p. 6 reported on a reading Mark Twain gave at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel for the Keats-Shelley Memorial in Rome, Italy:

Mark Twain read Shelley's "To a Skylark," and Browning's "Memorabilia"—a word, he said, that he never could pronounce. Before "To a Skylark," Mr. Clemens said, "In that long ago time, the happiest of my life, I read that poem more than any other to my wife. Hers was a beautiful nature. Her heart touched this poem and it is sacred to me. I think it is not only the most famous lyric in the English language, but the most beautiful in any language." [Note: Fatout (p.676) lists this as a reading for Mrs. Gilder, but she isn't mentioned in either this article nor the NY Times for Feb. 15, p.11, "Keats-Shelley Meeting Pleases"; however, in his letter to daughter Jean, Sam revealed Mrs. Gilder asked him to speak at the event; Isabel Lyon recorded the two readings in her journal: Gribben, p.94].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King dined with Miss Herring at the Arts Club. Spencer Trask was there & he & the King compared Secretaries.

But first the King read Shelley's "Skylark" at the Shelley-Keats Memorial at the Waldorf. He was bored to extinction & hated it all. I sat away back in the hall,— ~~with Ashcroft sitting beside me~~—& after the King's reading, which came 3 rd—we all slipped away. These days I cannot stand a crowd of people. I must have solitude & a remoteness from herds, if I cannot have my own—my own?

The King said that he suffered trying to get those people onto the platform. He worked with Stedman, the chairman, & agonized over it—& finally said that if they wouldn't go on, he'd "be damned if he didn't go on alone!" & he'd have done it too. Before he started he was chilly, so he took some whiskey & just enough to bring cobwebs to make him forget the things he planned to say, but he made a beautiful little speech mentioning Mrs. Clemens in it, before he read "The Skylark" & Browning's "Memorabilia". After the readings, Hopkinson Smith who was on the platform kept on talking while Mr. Stedman was addressing the audience, & the King said to him—"Will you shut up?" Smith looked at him saying with the look—"Do you mean that as an insult?" & the King's look fired back, "Yes, that's just what I do mean." All this he told me as we rolled down Fifth Avenue in the cab. He was cross & irritated & hated it, & was glad to be through. He came in & called for Paine & billiards—but Paine was out, so the King went to bed until dressing for dinner-time came.

After a cosy dinner a deux, AB & I came up to my study where we went through a lot of negatives & had an illuminating talk. He is going to California & out to see old companions of the King—Joe Goodman & Horace Bixby & Cal Higbie & Tabitha Greening & Laura Dake & others too, if he can find them, to glean from them memories of the King's early life [MTP TS 27-29; Shelly mentioned in Gribben 640].

Gertrude Natkin sent Sam a valentine [MTP; not in MTAq].

February 15 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Chinatown" [MTP TS 29].

I.P. Moore wrote from London, England to inquire if Sam was his first cousin, since Moore's mother was a Clemens [MTP]. Note: After Feb. 15 Sam replied that he knew nothing about his family tree before his father, who was born in Virginia in 1799; genealogical sources give Aug. 11, 1798 in Campbell Co. Va for the birthdate of John Marshall Clemens. www.accsolinc.com/familyroots/RobertClements.pdf

H. Victor Rievenhardy wrote to Sam, behind $8 in his rent and wishing to paint Sam's portrait to earn the money [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Mr. Clemens gave him $5. Col Harvey gave him $5."

Chapters from "My Autobiography—XII" ran in the N.A.R. p.337-46.

February 16 Saturday –Witter Bynner offered box seats to Clemens on Feb. 1 for an unspecified performance for this day. No record was found of Sam's attendance to a performance for this day or evening. Lyon made no entry in her journal for Feb. 16, so it is unlikely Sam took Bynner up on his offer.

Laura M. Dake (Laura Wright) wrote to Sam that she as arranging to move "into the heart of Yosemite," where she could obtain a teaching job [MTP]. Note: in a letter to A.B. Paine this date, she wrote, "I have always regarded him [Sam] as one of the noblest and best of men."

Arthur E. Wood wrote on University Club, Baltimore stationery to Sam, grateful for the work done on CS [MTP].

February 17 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "A dear & lazy day. The dear King has been fussing a lot in these days over the auto instalments, but now he has nearly enough for the full year" [MTP TS 29].

Mrs. M.F. Cunningham wrote from Salt Lake City to Sam, thanking him for the pleasure his stories had given her and her son [MTP].

February 18 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Thompson brought 2 beautiful pictures, & I think the King will buy the moonlight one" [MTP TS 29]. Note: on Mar. 12 Frederic L. Thompson wrote to thank Clemens for buying two of his paintings. See the strange case of Thompson-Gifford. Thompson was a goldsmith who "suddenly and inexplicably seized with an impulse to sketch and paint pictures":

http://www.aspsi.org/feat/life_after/tymn/a089mt-e-Thompson-Gifford_Case.php

Helen M. King wrote from Brooklyn, NY to Sam. "Your statement about charity and Christian Science I wish to refute" [MTP]. Note: After Feb. 18 Sam wrote on King's letter, perhaps as instructions to Lyon. "Wrote the book 5 years ago at a time when the church gave nothing in charity & my neighbor an ardent C.S.ist told me the same thing. If they have improved since then I am glad of it, & the book will help them to improve still farther" [MTP].

Henry T. Elmore to Sam wrote on Fuller-Holway Co. Grocers, letterhead, Augusta, Maine, asking for Clara Clemens' present business address. Henry was May Elmore's brother and they knew that Clara was soon coming to Portland and Lewiston and wished to meet up with her. Sam might telegraph her address [MTP].

Helen Keller wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens: / I have had many a sharp twinge of self-reproach at the thought of not writing to you all these weeks. But correspondence has been almost out of the question for me until now. On our return from New York the first thing I did was to arm and equip myself for a fight against bronchitis. The attack was slight, but persevering. When it finally ceased, my teacher was taken very ill, and I was filled with trouble and anxiety, as she suffered greatly. But she is now recovering, and I begin to see daylight through a mist of happy tears.

I shall always, always remember the evening we spent with you, and had you all to ourselves for two precious hours! I think sometimes that there is nothing in the world so precious as a beautiful memory. I have many of these memories to gladden the dull days that come to all of us. They return to me often as I sit apart.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

While others chat and gossip, I am in the midst of the throbbing, odorous woods. The range and the sweep of the winds are mine, and the world and my soul are lit with the sun. My heart thrills with a strange joy when I recall the first time that I read Lanier's Hymn of the Marshes of Glynn. Very near this cherished memory is that of the evening we spent with you. How it all comes back—the beautiful room, the music that stole into my soul through my finger-tips, the pleasant company and he of the magic gift, the dispenser of happiness to every one who has heard him speak or read his books. The thoughts that I have treasured of that evening are sprinkled with the jewel-dust of your wit, and can never fade or grow less brilliant. I wish I could sit beside you oftener. For there is something about you so vital and simple and nothing-withholding that somehow darkness and silence seem no longer to be. I seem to know without word or look what you are talking about, be it the extremest nonsense or the deepest wisdom or a flash of indignation against some wrong, or pleasure over an honest, interesting letter like the one you read from the young Englishwoman. Heaven preserve you to us long; for there shall not be another like you.

It is good once in a while to plunge into the whirl and gaiety and brilliancy of New York life. I love fun and gaiety, I cannot help it, and I do not want to help it either. But it was sweet to get back to the sunny quiet of our home in Wrentham.

I returned well pleased and encouraged about the cause of the blind. I know there are still obstacles to be overcome, friends of the sightless to be convinced that nothing to do but sit in the dark all day long and fritter away one's energies in useless thinking is worse than blindness. All efforts to help the world along toward betterment seem to pass through three stages: first, vehement denial that help is needed, second, the declaration that the Lord God hath made it so, and it is contrary to religion to change it, third, that it is just what we always thought. I am sure that we shall get to the last stage if we persevere. Only it is tiresome waiting, one would like to skip one stage or two. But I think I see the day approaching when there shall be no more needless dark hours for the blind. The silver lining has been turned for them, and for me the darkest cloud is breaking into a thousand gleams of hope.

Please remember us kindly to Miss Lyon, and pray, do not forget the picture you promised my teacher, or you may lose some of that beautiful halo one of these fine mornings.

With affectionate messages from us all ...[MTP]. Note: Helen's letters are always typed with her signature in her own hand, a block printed style. At the top of the letter in Sam's own hand, but not likely related to this letter: "Add Ned Wakeman's Englishwoman's & Susy's & Western Girls?"

Mally Graham Coatsworth Lord wrote from NYC to Sam. "You ARE a DEAR to say you'll come and be adored on Friday from four thirty to six. / And then I want you to stay for dinner and decorate the family meal. You can devour the dinner and we will devour you" [MTP].

George E. Sullivan wrote to ask Sam who was the party that dramatized "Colonel Sellers" with John T. Raymond years ago; he wished to read a copy of the play [MTP]. Note: On or after Feb. 18 Sam wrote on Sullivan's letter: "should like to read a copy of it myself—but so far as I know there is no copy of it in existence. The dramatization was made by Densmore of San Francisco. He was editor of the "Golden Era" in those days I think" Gilbert S. Densmore adapted GA to a play in 1874; see May, early and other entries in Vol. I.

February 19 Tuesday – Clara Clemens left for another concert tour, with stops of: North Adams, Elmira, Hartford, Bangor, and Utica. She would return on Mar. 25 [Hill 165, 170; IVL TS 30].

Gallantz J. Bishop wrote from NYC to invite Sam to a banquet of the New Club of America, Hotel St. Regis, Mar. 14, and hoped Sam would "favor" them with "a few comments" [MTP].

Nikolai V. Chaikovsky wrote to Sam, enclosing a draft petition he wished Sam would sign, a protest to be brought before the US Congress by the Friends of Russian Freedom [MTP]. Note: Petition is in the file.

Robert Fulton Cutting, Edward T. Devine, David H. Evans, et al wrote to invite Sam "to an informal meeting Thursday afternoon, February 21, at 4:30 pm. In the rooms of the New York School of Philanthropy....Mr. Nicholas Shishkoff of Samara, Russia...will be present" [MTP].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam. “About a dozen of us are going to partake of food and drink with Mr. Howells on his birthday, March 1st, at the Metropolitan Club, at seven thirty. This is an invitation to you to grace the occasion with your presence” [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

February 20 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Feb. 19 of Robert Fulton Cutting and Others. Declining an invitation sent on Feb. 19: “I do not go out this winter when I can avoid it” [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Jan. 17 from George Iles.

Goldwin Smith understands a part of the matter, but he has no clear & limpid understanding of even that fraction. When Smith understands a thing, he is eminently competent to state it in clear & definite terms; when he doesn't understand a thing, he is like anybody else in the world, he makes a wordy fog of it—just as he has done in this instance.

I thank you very much for sending me the paragraph [MTP].

Note: Goldwin Smith (1823-1910), British-Canadian historian and journalist; after 1868 a professor at Cornell; in 1871 he moved to Toronto and edited Canadian Monthly, then founded the Week and the Bystander. It is likely that the paragraph Iles sent was from one of these latter publications.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Pamela Smith has been here for luncheon. Pam—with her drawings (& her clothes, such queer dear clothes)—but her drawings! This morning I told the King that she was going to bring drawings & he said “That is dreadful—I hate drawings!” But Pam's drawings kept him riveted so he never came in to luncheon at all, and I nearly wept at the sight of him down at the end of the library, bending over those beautiful creatures of her fancy. After dinner she sat on the floor & recited some of her Anancy [sic] stories. She says she will come again, for I played some for her & she made a sketch to go with the Schubert Impromptu. Aunt Lou came in this morning full of news of the Good Spring people. She was dressed in very simple black & her hair is like a wonderful silver halo [MTP TS 30]. Pamela Colman Smith, nicknamed “Pixie” (1878-1951), artist, illustrator and writer, best known for designing the Waite-Smith tarot cards. She worked with the Lyceum Theatre group led by Ellen Terry, Henry Irving, and Bram Stoker. Among her several books was Annancy Stories (1902). Not in Gribben. Aunt Lou is not further identified.

Mrs. Delle W. Perry wrote from Ann Arbor, Mich. to remark on Sam's white suit and praise his writings [MTP]. Note: After Feb. 20 Sam replied on Perry's letter: “merely say “to be likened to be likened to the Apollo Belvedere is compensation & healing, & comes at a fortunate time when another friend of mine—Mr. Howells—who hasn't any white clothes & therefore is envious & malicious, has been calling me a whited sepulcher” [MTP]. Note: Apollo Belvedere, also called the Pythian Apollo, was a classical marble Sculpture by Leochares, ca. 350-325 B.C.; Mrs. Perry is not further identified.

Gertrude Natkin wrote to Sam.

Although this is very late, to thank you for your sweet New Year greeting and also wish you a Happy New Year, I know that you will forgive me after I tell the reason of this delay.

A very sad misfortune has occurred in our family which naturally has upset us all. My sister (who you met and) who was with us at the Majestic Theatre on that memorable afternoon died. I wanted to write sooner but I had not the heart to write on such a sad occasion and thought I would wait until I became more reconciled to this loss.

My mother has not been well since this misfortune happened and is now in Lakewood but I hope she will come back in better health.

Now I know that you will accept my greetings for this New Year even though it is late / Your little Marjorie [MTP].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from NYC to Sam:

To S.L. Clemens, Billiard Champion and Adviser.

Pupils taken, and Impoverished.

Our motto: It is easier to give advice than to receive it; also, less expensive.

To two errors in judgement; @ .50 each,.....$1.00

[MTP: Cushman]. Sam wrote on the faded letter: "Received, as the presence of the money herewith is evidence. / SL. Clemens"

Leslie W. Quirk, editor of The Editor, NYC sent a list of 6 questions to Sam advising the young story writer [MTP].

February 21 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

Jean dear, Ashcroft's people have added another spiral-pin device: it is to secure jewels in the hair without having to wire them in, as at present. The next time Anna comes down, I want her to remember to ask us for one of these & carry it to you.

I have bought 2 oil paintings for the Redding house for $250—charming pictures, by an elderly artist who has had no art-instruction, but lends the use of his hands to a dead artist who is residing in the spirit world. This gentle & simple-hearted old proxy has been a silversmith all his life until lately, but you can see by his pictures that he is a born poet—or maybe it's the dead artist (Swayne Gifford) that is the poet.

Clara is away—warbling around the country. There is a small portrait of her in Harper's Weekly.

I'm to go out to dinner this evening—in white clothes, by request. To-morrow I go to a lady's-tea at Prof. Lord's of Columbia—in white clothes, by request of Mrs. Lord.

Pamela Smith lunched here yesterday, & sat on the floor & told a lot of delicious Jamaican folk-lore tales in a lovely negro dialect. She is in several ways a genius, of high order.

This is only a note to say I love you dearly & am sending hugs & kisses [MTP].

Note: Anna Sterritt, Jean's nurse. Robert Swain Gifford (1840-1905), landscape painter who focused on New England landscapes. The elder artist who claimed to channel Gifford is not known. Herbert Gardiner Lord (1849-1930), Presbyterian minister (1878-1895); professor of philosophy at Columbia (1900-1922). Undergraduates more than once voted Lord their favorite professor. Mrs. Mally Graham Coatsworth Lord (1861-1934). The Lords had a summer house in York Harbor, Maine [NY Times, Mar. 13, 1930, p. 21; June 25, 1934, p. 15]. Pamela "Pixie" Smith.

Sam also wrote per Isabel Lyon to George B. Harvey: "There will be a quorum of the Human Race there on the 1st—so it would be made a Human Race occasion by usurpation" [MTP]. Note: Sam's "God Damned Human Race Club" which never managed to meet.

Sam also wrote to John Y.W. MacAlister, enclosing some material taken from his Autobiographical dictation "pile" narrating his first visit to England. MacAlister was an editor besides being Sam's partner in the Plasmon efforts.

This has been delayed in many ways; but I will have Miss Lyon hurry it to the mail at once.

Use it—or part of it—or none of it—just as you please. There has been no time at my disposal in which to write something special, so I have taken this out of my vast pile of autobiographical MS. It will appear after my death, along with the rest of my Memoires. It lacks smoothness in spots, but I seldom apply an after-polish, for dictated things are talk, & talk is all the better & all the more natural when it stumbles a little here & there [MTP]. Note: the piece Sam sent included his 1872 train trip in England where he observed a man reading LA who did not smile; then his first evening at the Savage Club and misplacing some five-pound notes which the servant later found in his tail-coat pocket.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King dined at the Robt. Colliers' & met there Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney & Mrs. Astor & an artist & his wife. He can't remember the artist's name. The King never can remember names. Mrs. Collier asked him to wear his white clothes, & the King believing it would be a tiny dinner did so, & felt uncomfortable for a while—but he got over it.

Tonight AB & I spent alone with Chopin funeral march & the Cavaleria Rusticana & then a great deal of wonderful talk. How well I know him now. The King gave me his Christian Science book this morning with a maxim in it—Oh, the King! [MTP TS 30-31].

Emil Leopold Boas (1854-1912), head of the Hamburg-American Line wrote to Sam, advertising trips south with various ships [MTP].

Mrs. Louie P. Capper wrote from Aberdeen, New Brunswick to ask Sam where she might find another copy of the "Mark Twain's Birthday Book." She enclosed a stamped envelope [MTP]. Note: "Answd. Mch. 11"; Lyon replied for Sam on Capper's letter: "Has seen the book in England once—but does not know the publisher. Should imagine it might be Chatto & Windus as much of the matter is copyr". Sam also wrote he'd seen the book once in England so referred her to Chatto & Windus.

John B. Downing (Major "Alligator" Jack Downing) wrote from Daytona, Fla. to Sam.

Dear Sir:—On coming to our winter home here from Middleport Ohio, we remained in St. Louis a few days to see old friends and the many changes. I soon learned that the only star gazers left to make a long crossing in the fog was yourself, Horace Bixby and the writer. This day am in receipt of the Daily Globe Democrat containing an obituary of my old friend Capt John N Bofinger the first man for whom I turned a wheel from St Louis to New Orleans, and I think he was Capt of the Edward J Gay with Bart Bowen and Squire Bill pilots when you, Ben Thornburg, Thad Sederburg, Beck Jolly and myself went to Cairo to look for changes in the river. Now can you advise me the year we made that trip. Am writing some historical events for our Palmetto Club and require data. Again, should you at any time decide to leave New York during the cold weather and visit the most beautiful place in Florida, come here any time before the 1st of April—we leave May 1st—and advise me by letter or wire, and while we will not meet you with a Band Waggon at the Depot will give you a warm reception. The Palmetto Literary Club has a nice house built the past year and I think will seat 500, and I have no doubt of the happiness and profit you would receive from your many friends. Hoping to hear from you soon, subscribe myself, Yours very abundantly...[MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote to Sam.

I am at least out of bed, and so far on a par with that branch of the human race which is being tried for matricide, and other venial offences. But you will have to welcome that British Ambassador without me. Tell him we are not so bad as we paint ourselves—couldn't be.

It was good of you to come and see me, you fine old paranoic. I don't know how you've escaped arrest up to this time. It shows you were always right about the inefficiency of of our detective system. Good bye, you whited sepulcher / Yours affectionately ...[MTHL 2: 822-3].

February 22 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote instructions and a draft for Isabel Lyon to use to reply to Laura M. Dake (Laura Wright), who had written on Feb. 12 and 16.

Idle as he seems to be he's representing Satan & he always finds something for Mr. Clemens to turn his attention to, and wants to keep on his good side so has to attend to business

Put in the customary glads and sorrys

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Glad the protege is progressing to her satisfaction—

Sorry that her health & circumstances are not what they would be if our Heavenly father really lived up to the character given him by an overcharitable & limitlessly stupid pulpit.

We mustn't go too deep—we must stop on the verge—but have to say something about God's inhumanity to man.

When she's settled she must say so & then we'll send her some books [MTP]. Note: David "Wattie" Bowser had been Laura's "protégé" student back in 1882, and she may have reported his progress as a man.

Sam also wrote to George B. Harvey about a paper his nephew, Samuel E. Moffett had written for the NAR. Sam thought it good but realized Harvey was "the final court." He was embarrassed to ask Thomas Bailey Aldrich to look at the paper. Would Harvey ask Aldrich or show it to David A. Munro? [MTP].

Sam also wrote to an unidentified person. "If I've become a Whitmanite I'm sorry—I never read 40 lines of him in my life—but I contributed $200 toward building a cottage for the old man to die in." On the flip side Isabel Lyon wrote: "A letter came from a woman who had sent him Extracts from Whitman but he never rec'd it" [MTP].

Hill has Sam entertaining (John) Gutzon de la Mothe Borglum (1867-1941), American artist and sculptor on this day. Borglum was most famous for the Stone Mountain and Mt. Rushmore projects [164]. Fatout lists a ladies tea Sam attended at Columbia University, where he made a few remarks (likely an error) [676]. Lyon makes no mention of the tea in her journal but does mention Borglum's visit. See her entry below.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Gutzon Borglum came in to see the King this afternoon & when we spoke of him at dinner the King said that he removed only that part of the statues on St. John's Cathedral that could not be used, & that he didn't destroy anything. He has sent 2 photographs of a statue of John Mackay & one of a statue of Ruskin, that are fine.

This morning at eight o'clock AB went away & the King is so lonely without him that he has gone to bed. AB's as bad at spoiling me as Stiatessi ever was, he gives me books & books, forever [MTP TS 31].

Albert Bigelow Paine left for the West to gather biographical information on Clemens [Hill 165]. Note: Paine puts his departure to March, 1907. He would interview John Briggs, Joe Goodman, Steve Gillis, and Horace Bixby [MTB 1376].

Edward Livingston Hunt, M.D. wrote from NYC to Miss Lyon. "I thought it would interest and please Mr. Clemens to know that Miss Jean, whom I saw to-day, had in the last three weeks suffered from only one slight attack and that one of the petit mal type" [MTP].

The Columbia (Mo.) Statesman ran a brief, anonymous item, "Mark Twain's Snow-White Garb." Tenney: "...describing the broadcloth coat (and broadcloth-covered buttons), and white silk lapels and lining and zig-zag embroidery around the edges; there is white-silk braid down the outside seams of the trousers" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Second Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1978 p. 174-5].

February 23 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Joan of Arc" [MTP TS 31].

George J. Helmer, the family's NY osteopath, wrote to ask Sam for his continued support "just by speaking the word" for the bill on Osteopathy in Albany. On this day Sam replied on Helmer's letter: "gave 2 or 3 days of time without object[.] Did for the cause once what wouldn't have done for any other cause for 10000—Didn't do any good & doesn't care to repeat that experience" [MTP].

Arthur E. Bullard for Friends of Russian Freedom wrote to Sam, enclosing tickets for the March 4 Carnegie Hall program [MTP].

Harriet E. Whitmore wrote to Sam, enclosing her letter to Dr. Phelps of Yale, who spoke on Keats at the recent Saturday Morning Club. She refers to a letter from Sam she gave to Phelps about the library's rejection of Eve's Diary [MTP]. Note: Lyon: "She has carried out my intentions I am very much obliged to her"

Lizzie E. Wooster wrote on Wooster & Co. School Book Publishers letterhead, Chicago. She asked for photo she might include in a series of school readers [MTP].

The New York Times, p. 14, "Ernest H. Crosby Memorial" announced a memorial meeting of the Social Reform Club in the Cooper Union on Mar. 7 in the evening, and listed Mark Twain and William Dean Howells among several others in charge of the meeting [MTP].

The Times also interviewed Twain on the occasion of Longfellow's centenary birthday. The article ran the next day, Feb. 24, "Reminiscences of Longfellow and Others" [Fatout MT Speaking 543]. Note: Sam's acquaintance with Longfellow was slim, but he vividly remembered the fiasco of his burlesque at the 1877 Whittier dinner.

February 24 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Clara, now at the Hotel Worthy in Springfield, Mass. on a singing tour.

I shall watch with interest for your code-signals, Clärchen dear, & shall hope that they will bring good news from my self-banished exile.

I like Mr. Wark & his honest blue eyes ever so much. I think you are fortunate to be in his guardianship.

To-day I have received the golden-wedding cards of the Murat Halsteads. They had been married 21 years when we crossed with them & the Bayard Taylors in the Holsatia in 1878. However, you were only 4 years old & will not remember them.

This is a deserted house—nobody in it but me. I wandered into this parlor of yours, & I thought I would drop you a line from your desk. The Colonel [Harvey] was to come up & play billiards, but he has gotten mislaid, I reckon.

I am going to Candace Wheeler's on the 28th. In fact I go out very frequently & exhibit my clothes. Howells has dubbed me the Whited Sepulchre.

Only one person asked after me! Oh, well, I'll send you Candace Wheeler's letter & take some of the self-complacency out of you.

Take good—good—good care of yourself, precious Ashcat [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Rogers to dinner. Drake Brass Collection" [MTP TS 31]. Note: published in 1907, was a booklet, The Notable Collection of Brass and Copper, by A.W. Drake, American Art Galleries, Madison Square South, NYC. Alexander Wilson Drake (1843-1916), artist, collector, and critic, whose large collection sold at auction in 1913. A sale of lesser import was held on Feb. 27; see Lyon's entry.

William Laffan Mackay wrote to Sam. "Dear Mark: / You might not see the Cosmopolitan, so I tear this out and send it to you. Coming from an Earl you must feel it a rebuke. / Read about the island—good big island too—in the S. Pacific; and the rum epidemic. Curious the reticence of the Scotch earls; no name for his island, no name for the vigorous ailment, no name for the city and none for the steamer. Can an Earl lie?" [MTP]. Note: Mackay referred to "The Truth About Christian Science" by the Seventh Earl of Dunmore (Charles Adolphus Murray 1841-1907) in the Mar. 1907 Vol. 42 of Cosmopolitan, p. 541-44. The heading states: "With his family he is a firm believer in the principles of Christian Science...He has been most influential in the spread of Christian Science throughout Great Britain..." Twain is not mentioned in the article.

Sam attended another tea at Mally Graham Coatsworth Lord's (Mrs. Herbert Gardiner Lord), helping her "receive 200 women & girls." Before the event he fell on the ice and tore his white pants and had to stand with his "back to the wall" during the reception [Feb. 25 to Jean]. Or did he? [Mar. 5 to Jean].

February 25 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

Your news about yourself in your letter of yesterday is exceedingly welcome, & tallies with what Anna said when she was here the other day.

Exodus the Shulamite never said a truer thing than when he said—"Wonders will never cease." Last week Alice Day's old tomcat Ben Hur had kittens—one basketful on a Saturday & another one next day; the very same day a sunspot twice the size of the United States appeared far away up in the remotest nor'west corner of the great disk & was at first mistaken for a fly; right on top of that came Washington's birthday, when nobody was expecting it; & right on top of that, before you could get your breath, Tuesday fell on a Saturday, & then everybody was appalled & awe-stricken, & said Well I'm dam'd, & turned over a new leaf. If these marvels had happened in Caesar's time it would have meant nothing less than the caving-in of the Universe; but in our late day it only meant that I was to fall on the ice yesterday & rupture my white pants & have to stand an hour with my back to the wall at Mrs. Professor Lord's & help her receive 200 women & girls. I think it is wonderful, the way Nature can foretell events that way. It appears, now, that Ben Hur is booked for another basketful: I wonder what that forecasts? Heaven knows, we live in parlous times.

Jean, I did not overstate that shell-fragment incident because it didn't need it: I perfectly understood what Lady Innes (who was not writing literature, but only a diary) had supposed she was saying.

Dr. Hunt gives us a splendid report of your health in a letter to Miss Lyon. It is good news indeed.

I'm going to the Joan of Arc matinée now, but not in white [MTP]. Note: in his Mar. 5 to Jean he wrote that he didn't fall on the ice but only said he did. Lady Sarah Innes (Hodges) (1737-1770), subject of a portrait by Gainsborough.

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Candace Wheeler: "Mr. Clemens expects to be there. Thank her for her most dear & welcome letter" [MTP]. Note: Sam had written daughter Clara that he was going to Candace Wheeler's on Feb. 28.

Lyon also wrote for Sam to Harriet E. Whitmore, inviting the Whitmores to visit the following week, Monday the 4th or "any time during the week & stay ...a few days" [MTP]. Note: they stayed three days in March.

On Feb. 25 or 26 Sam replied to the Feb. 21 invitation from Emil Leopold Boas, head of the Hamburg-American Line in America. "It is very enticing but duty requires me to stay here, therwise I would be one of your passengers./ With pleasant remembrance of that long-ago dinner...." [MTP]. Note: the dinner has not been dated.

Theodore E. Busfield pastor, First Congregational Church, N. Adams, Mass. wrote to Sam. "The Ladies' Aid Society of my church has been fortunate enough to arrange with your daughter for her appearance here next Monday evening in a concert recital, and there is a very general desire to have you...introduce her" [MTP]. Note: Lyon: "No Ans"

Effie F. Cutting (Mrs. C.H. Cutting) wrote from N. Adams, Mass. to urge Sam to come to the Monday evening concert at which Clara would perform [MTP].

Albert B. Paine wrote to Miss Lyon: "I am glad the King said that—gladder still that he can think it. His good opinion is very precious to me. I must try to deserve it" [MTP].

In Sam's A.D. he quoted the N.Y. Sun's account of "three or four days ago" about the shipwreck of the Berlin [Gribben 505].

February 25-28 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Feb. 21 from John B. Downing, (“Alligator Jack”).

The year must have been 1860 I think, though it could have been the fall or winter of '59. In June '58 Bart Bowen was Captain of the A. T. Lacey; for I went from New Orleans to Memphis with him to find & care for my brother who had fallen a victim to the explosion of the Pennsylvania's boilers. I was a cub at the time. I could not have risen to the dignity of going down to look at the river in such aristocratic company as that of licensed pilots earlier than a year later, for I would have to be of the elect myself in order to attain to that distinction. I was under the impression that I never saw Bart Bowen in life after he disembarked me at Memphis. I was also under the impression that he never stood a pilot's watch after he stepped down a grade & became captain. Do not let this language mislead you. I never lost any part of my respect & affection for him on account of that of retrogression; no, he was a high-minded, large-hearted man, & I hold him in undiminished honor to this day. I seem to remember the river-inspection trip you speak of, & that the boat was the Edward J. Gay; but it is very, very dim & uncertain—as vague & shadowy as are the long-vanished faces that looked out over the breast-board, & whose blurred features you have called up out of the grave of my memory.

I thank you cordially for your most kind invitation, but I do not think I shall ever make another land journey, except by request of the Court & the Sheriff [MTP]. Note: See Aug. 15, 1881 and Aug. 18? 1881 entries for information on Downing.

February 26 Tuesday – With Clara and Paine gone, the house was rather empty and Isabel Lyon was unable to find social contacts for him. Isabel Lyon's journal:

This is too dreadful, this loneliness for the King. The evil month of March is coming galloping along, when he is usually tried beyond some kind of endurance; if it isn't physical, it is social, & I'm afraid for him. I telephone in every direction to get hold of people to come in for billiards, but no one is to be reached. Mr. Dooley is south, Col. Harvey is busy, or skittish, Dr. Rice is busy, the Coes are in Florida, the Benjamins in Lake Placid, the Broughtons en route for some southern place, & the rest of the world can't play. When I go to his room to tell him that these people are all otherwise employed, he says “It doesn't matter—” but it does matter; it matters very much indeed; and AB's going away to California just now is either devil's work or angel's [MTP TS 31-32]. Note: Hill and other sources quote this but change the “&” signs to “and”s.

Cornelius Vanderbilt for the Fulton Monument wrote to Sam quoting the resolution to be presented to the legislature for a piece of land near Columbia University on the East River [MTP]. Note: After Feb. 26 Sam replied and declined to be appointed a member of the Legislative Committee [MTP].

Arthur Benjamin wrote from Spokane, Wash. to Sam, enclosing a clipping of criticism from a Seattle paper, and praising the works of Mark Twain [MTP]. Note: “Thank him & say that the criticisms do not distress me because I never read them—& so haven't read the clipping”. Likely about CS.

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam, enclosing the original copy of “An Extract from Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven”, “in compliance with your request” [MTP].

In Sam's A.D. he again quoted another Sun article about about the Berlin shipwreck [Gribben 505].

February 27 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: “Drake sale—Tuxedo” [MTP TS 32].

Emil Leopold Boas of the Hamburg-American Line wrote to Sam. “It is too bad. Can you not shirk your duty for once? It would give me great pleasure to have you as one of our guests on one of those trips. / With kind regards...” [MTP]. Note: Sam replied Feb. 28.

Arthur E. Bullard for Friends of Russian Freedom wrote to Sam enclosing a revised copy of the petition Sam had agreed to [MTP].

Sheppard Friedman for the NY Evening Journal wrote to Sam. "I thought it might be of interest to you to know that you are not the only 'Mark Twain.' There is another." He referred to a Mexican mine by that name he'd invested in. "The particular claim...is said to be rich in gold, copper and silver as the original of its name is in wit, humor and pathos....You may not consider this high-handed procedure fair to you. Any way, 'it suits Tom Sawyer.' Will you let us know if it suits you?" [MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote to Sam.

I have been trying, all through my fortnight of grippe, to give my friend Mr. Fowler an introduction to you. He wants to paint your portrait and though he cannot hope, on account of the subject, to make as good a picture from you as he made from me, he will make one of the best possible. He is a good painter and a good fellow. Yours ever ... [MTHL 2: 823].

George E. Sullivan for the Carroll Institute, Wash. D.C. wrote to Sam asking to borrow the MS for a stage production of "Colonel Sellers" [MTP]. Note: Sam had previously written that no MS existed that he knew of.

In Sam's A.D. he quoted several Sun articles about William Whitely [Gribben 505].

February 28 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Feb. 27 from Emil Leopold Boas. "No, I should not know how to go about it. I once tried to shirk a duty, 25 years ago, & to this day I still suffer agonies of remorse every time I think of it" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "AB home. Candace Wheeler – Mrs. Stuart. Drake Sale" [MTP TS 32].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to George Griswold, real estate agent. The house Griswold had shown to Lyon and the description she'd given of it to Sam, would "meet his requirements" but he did "not care to pay over fifteen hundred dollars for a house for the Season—May 1st to Nov. 1st, and to ask if you will make that offer to the owners of the place" [MTP].

Sam also wrote instructions to Isabel Lyon to thank Georgiana R. Laffan (Mrs. William Mackay Laffan) for the Christian Science article, and to ask the Laffans for "dinner or luncheon" [MTP].

Archer H. Barber wrote on Berkshire Club stationery, N. Adams, Mass. to urge Sam to accompany Clara when she gave her concert there on Monday evening next. He enclosed a ticket to use the club [MTP].

Redmond S. Cole, editor-in-chief of The Independent, published by the students of the Missouri University wrote to Sam. "The St. Louis Post-Dispatch for Feb. 25, 1907 has in it a statement to the effect that you, along with Senator Thomas H. Benton and General Frank P. Blair, favor the pronunciation of Missouri as though it were spelled Mizzoura." Could he confirm? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam: "Yes the Post-Dispatch was correct & I still adhere."

Samuel S. McClure wrote to Sam. "I expect in time to publish in McClure's Magazine a thorough and clear investigation of osteopathy....unless osteopathy is legalized by the legislature...it will be impossible to practice it in this State....Therefore, I want you to give me a word about osteopathy. I am sure that the Messrs. Harpers will not care to publish what you write about it" [MTP]. Note: Lyon for Sam: "For various reasons (& indignations) the subject does not interest me". Osteopathy had lost its appeal to Clemens by this time.

Jennie Pomerene for the Women's College Club (NY) wrote to invite Sam to sit in a box with Dr. James Monroe Taylor, Vassar President, General Nelson Appleton Miles, General James Grant Wilson, ex-Ambassador Joseph Hodges Choate, and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University—at their matinee benefit Tuesday, Mar. 12, 2:30 p.m. [MTP].

Frank D. Stafford, Mayor of North Adams, Mass. wrote to Sam, having learned of Clara's performance there the following week. He extended “a cordial invitation” for Sam to come [MTP].

Stony Wold Sanitorium sent Sam a program for an afternoon concert to benefit their farm fund, Waldorf-Astoria, Feb. 28 at 3:30 p.m. [MTP].

George E. Sullivan, Wash. D.C. attorney wrote to Sam. “I beg to thank you for your favor of the 26th inst. written by your secretary...If I am successful in securing a copy of the dramatization [Col.Sellers] I will be only too glad to let you read it.” He had written the day before from the Carroll Institute, that wanted to put on the dramatization [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

March – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Osip I. Feldman, hypnotist. “This bust is better than the original. At least it seems so to me; & it also seemed so at the time that the gifted artist made it 9 years ago in Vienna. I am glad to see it again [MTP: Levidova, Mark Twain: A Bibliographic Catalog of Russian Translations, etc. 1974 p.133]. Note: At least two busts of Twain were made in Vienna: by Theresa Ries in Dec. 1897 and by Ernest Hegenbarth in Jan. 1898.

Sam also inscribed a copy of CS to Dr. Robert H. Halsey: “To Dr. Halsey with the Kindest regards of the Author. March 1907.” [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of CS to Franklin G. Whitmore: “To / Brer Whitmo' / with the warmest regards of / Mark Twain / March/07.” [MTP].

Current Literature ran an anonymous article, “Are We Standing at the Birth of a Great Religion?” p.321-4. Tenney: “In part a descriptive review of MT's CS, but chiefly devoted to a broader treatment of the topic, giving background on Mary Baker Eddy and newspaper discussion of her work [42].

March – May? – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Leonard Henslowe. “I am shut up with illness; but even if I were well I would not be interviewed by any but an enemy, & I am sure I do not take you for that” [MTP]. Note: Henslowe's incoming not extant.

March 1 Friday – Fatout lists a speech for Sam at the William Dean Howells dinner [MT Speaking 676]. Note: On Feb. 19, George B. Harvey had invited Sam for a Mar. 1 birthday dinner for Howells at the Cosmopolitan Club. No record was found for the contents of Sam's remarks. See Feb. 19 entry.

Sam wrote “to any friend or acquaintance of mine” [MTP]. Note: not found at MTP.

Isabel Lyon's journal: “Terrible headache” [MTP TS 32].

Brander Matthews wrote to Sam advising him that the Simplified Spelling Board would have its first meeting in April, a dinner at the Waldorf on April 3, Carnegie presiding [MTP]. Note: After Mar. 1 Sam wrote instructions to Lyon for a reply to the invitation: he wouldn't go to any banquet, not even the Lotos, if he had to “feed through”; he didn’t accept night events but “should like to have the privilege of dropping there toward the end of the banquet” [MTP].

Calvin H. Higbie wrote from Greenville, Calif. to Sam, noting that Paine and Isabel Lyon had written about Sam’s Autobiography, asking him to contribute all he knew about his dealings with Twain in the old days. A fire had destroyed his old MS and he asked if Sam could send his copy [MTP]. Note: Lyon answered on Mar. 11, sending Sam’s copy.

Jean Jewel Hotchkiss wrote from NYC to Sam, also sending in another letter articles written by her daughter on “New Metaphysics.” Her daughter Elizabeth Hotchkiss (Bessie) was born in Elmira and graduated from Elmira College, gaining a A.M. and a PhD. Could Sam advise as to how to make money from her articles? [MTP].

Robert Underwood Johnson for Century Magazine wrote to thank Sam for presenting to the Keats-Shelley Library “your volume from which you read the ‘Skylark’ and send you a duplicate so that your set may be complete” [MTP].

Hamilton W. Mabie sent Sam a bill for $5 for his dues in the American Academy of Arts and Letters for 1907 [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

Chapters from “My Autobiography—XIII” ran in the N.A.R. p.449-63.

March 2 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote congratulations to Murat and Mary Banks Halstead on their 50th wedding anniversary. The letter is not extant but was reported by the New York Times, Mar. 3, p. 7 “Halstead’s Golden Wedding.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The Chorus Lady. King spent night at Rogers” [MTP TS 32]. Note: The Chorus Lady written by James Forbes and produced by Henry B. Harris, played at the Hackett Theatre, NYC.

HACKETT Theater, W. 42d St. Ev. 8:20.
ROSE STAHL Mats. Thurs. & Sat. 2:15. in THE
CHORUS LADY.

Theodore Cornelius Bates wrote from Worcester, Mass. to Sam. “My daughter, Mrs Tryphosa Bates Batcheller, requests me to send to you a copy of her book—“Glimpses of Italian Court Life” but did not have Sam’s exact address [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben. Tryphosa Bates-Batcheller (1876-1952), socialite and concert singer: Glimpses of Italian court life; happy days in Italia adorata, Doubleday, Page & company, New York (1906).

J.F. Flanigan wrote to Sam from Hot Springs, Ark. For the 53rd Convention of the International Typographical Union, acknowledging receipt of “your article intended for publication in the Souvenir of the ...Convention.” [MTP].

J.W. of Golds Limited wrote from Birmingham, England to ask Sam if he had an objection to their selling a brand of American tobacco on the English market by the name of “Mark Twain” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: No objection to your proposition”

Murat Halstead sent Sam an engraved invitation for Saturday evening, Mar. 2, at 8 p.m. (likely sent earlier) [MTP]. Note: the Halsteads were celebrating their 50th anniversary.

Ireland Advertising Agency sent a telegram to Sam. “Do you have your white suits washed with fels naptha soap in cold or lukewarm water reply paid” [MTP].

Harrie C. White wrote from Bennington, Vt. to Sam responding to a call from Lyon that they had run a photo in Harper’s Weekly without his permission. They denied doing so and upon investigating, discovered the publisher had put their credit under his photo in error [MTP].

March 3 Sunday – In the evening Sam dined with the Robert J. Collier’s and a “dozen other guests.” He wore his “full evening dress of white broadcloth” and called it “just stunning!” [Mar. 5 to Clara; Jean; IVL TS 32].

Stella B. Leighton wrote from NYC to ask Sam if he’d known the late Captain L.Y. Batchelor of steamboat days on the Mississippi [MTP]. After Mar. 3 Sam wrote information on Leighton’s letter for Lyon to reply: “The Clemens to whom she refers was without doubt an Ohio river pilot of that day whom I did not know & who was not related to me— Her father was a Capt—river etiquette would not have allowed him to waive rank & associate with a cub pilot which is what he was” [MTP].

Charles Forster wrote on Deutscher Liederkranz stationery, NYC to enclose season tickets for the 7th Annual Billiards Tournament. He would have other tickets should Sam wish to bring a friend [MTP].

Clara Helms wrote from Egg Harbor City, NJ to Sam. Helms felt “so forlorn and forsaken...like blowing my brains, if I have any, out.” She wrote three little stories upon her return from Central American and could he look at them “and see if they are good enough for some New York paper?” “Will spit on this three times for good luck” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: “Answerd. Mch 13, ‘07”

The Detroit News Tribune, the Washington Post, and other syndicated newspapers ran an interview with George B. Harvey about Mark Twain’s earnings. From the interview, Harvey observed:

Earns $1,000 in Three Hours.

“Until recently he wrote wholly by hand. Quite unexpectedly he found that he could dictate to a secretary. He was as pleased over the discovery as was President Roosevelt when he happened upon Mount Sinai, Moses, and the Ten Commandments. Now he lights a cigar after breakfast, sits down in his library and dictates for three hours on his autobiography. When he gets up he has earned $1,000. He is a great man, and will live longer than Thackeray, who was verbose, for one thing, and whose vision was confined to a single phase of social development in a single country. Twain is world-wide in his breadth of view. A man of critical judgment said not long since that he is the first novelist of the age. Whatever his rank may be, I am sure he will remain in our literature when brighter stars have lost some of their splendor. He is now free from the worry about money, and is at his best.”

March 4 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

In packing my things in your house yesterday morning I inadvertently put in some articles that was laying around, I thinking about theology & not noticing, the way this family does in similar circumstances like these. Two books, Mr. Rogers brown slippers & a ham. I thought it was ourn it looks like one we used to have. I am very sorry it happened but it shant occur again & don’t you worry He will temper the wind to the shorn lammb—and I will send some of the things back anyway if there is some that wont keep. / Yores in jesus [MTP: MTHHR 613 as only “summer 1906”]. Note: letter headed “Tuesday” but Mar. 4 was a Monday.

Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Harriet G. Whitmore.

Mr. Clemens doesn't want to have you & Mr. Whitmore go away on Saturday. He says that from Thursday to Saturday is no kind of a visit & that he must have you stay until Monday, & you will do that, won't you? For his blessed, blessed sake? You can sleep in separate beds, if your habit requires it; I'll have them ready for you. And you can't think how beautiful it will be for Mr. Clemens to have you two here. I'm not mentioning the secretary's prejudiced views [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Colliers & Russian meeting. Aladin.

Mr. Clemens & I dined with the Collier's this evening for we were to take them up to the Russian meeting & the dinner was very lovely. Mr. Collier has 2 parrots & he took a young one out of the cage & put it on the dinner table, & the graceful (graceful because he was so awkward, the way he turned his toes,) thing walked around & upset the bon-bon dishes & Mr. Collier's cup of coffee. At the meeting, much the best thing—the only best thing—was Aladin speech; it was a very great speech. His English, his gestures & his spirit were beautiful & moving & the audience shouted & waved its handkerchiefs at the strong young graceful creature. He spoke of the “crahdle of liberty” but there wasn't anyone there who wished he had called it a cradle.

This afternoon the King & I drove up to hear the Weete-Mignon [sic] piano player. The King thought he'd like to have one at Tuxedo—but the price is too high, $1500, & they're not entirely satisfactory [MTP TS 33]. Note: insert, the keyboardless reproducing piano by M. Welte & Sons.

Fred H. Clifford wrote to Sam from Bangor Maine about Clara's concert there on Mar. 21. Would Sam come? [MTP]. Note:

Lyon wrote: “Tell Clara she has added a new burden to life / Quite a mistake Mr. Clemens was present only once.”

Frank B. Cole wrote to Sam from Tacoma, Wash.. He'd recently read Sam's Autobiography in the NAR and had known Orion in Keokuk, whom he called “a very odd man” [MTP].

George Griswold, managing director of the Tuxedo Park, NY Assoc wrote to Isabel Lyon about the price of William Voss' house rental there [MTP].

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to Sam enclosing a check for $350, preferred stock dividend from US Steel Corp. “Would it not be a good idea to put this in your own name, now that you have all the stock?” [MTP].

Walter W. Price for The Lambs Club, NYC wrote to invite Sam to a breakfast next Sunday at 1 p.m. Would Sam be the guest of honor? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: “Thank them as elaborately as want to / don't go unless duty commands this year”

Cornelius Vanderbilt for the Robert Fulton Memorial Assoc. wrote to reassure Sam that William R. Stewart, Chairman of the Legislative Committee, would not call upon Sam “for any active work” but would be pleased if Sam accompanied them to Albany [MTP].

Emma N. Warfield (Mrs. Edwin Warfield), wife of Maryland's governor, wrote to Sam asking him to give a reading during his May visit. Dr. Henry Van Dyke had urged her to write Clemens directly [MTP].

March 5 Tuesday – In the morning Sam signed the lease for William Voss' house in Tuxedo Park, N.Y. (about 30 miles from N.Y.C.) from May to October, 1907 [Mar. 5 to Jean; Hill 164]. The house was near Harry and Mary Rogers. Trombley writes that Sam carried on “an extended negotiation” with Voss reducing the rent from $2,400 to $1,500 [MTOW 133]. Note: the gated community was built in 1886 by Pierre Lorillard IV (1833-1901), the tobacco magnate, as a retreat for his rich New York friends. Bruce Price (1845-1903) was the architect for the gatehouse and the first thirteen houses. He had a daughter, Emily Post (1872-1960), who later became famous for her etiquette. The formal tuxedo was first worn at Tuxedo Park.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Clara at the Hotel Johnsonia, Fitchburg, Mass.

Clara dear, it is very very splendid news, from Katy to Catherine last night. You are in the swing at last, dear child, & now you will GO. Remember, the audience most surely & powerfully stirred is the small audience, when you've learned all the deep arts of your trade. They rise in their might when you let them see that theirs are welcome faces & that you are not ashamed of them for being a small house. I'm not talking about your North Adams house, but only about small ones.

I dined with a lot of people at Robert Collier's, Sunday night, & was conspicuous; for I wore full evening dress of white broadcloth—just stunning! To-day we took the Tuxedo house & signed the lease. So that's off our minds.

By the occasional letter which drifts in I have come to be quite entirely satisfied with my Shelley Skylark of the other day, much as I was depressed about it at first. Privately I knew there wouldn't be any other readings there that could come up to it, but I was troubled because I didn't hear any one say so. It's all right, though—plenty have said it since. More than that—I saw more than fifty women crying, but I had forgotten about that.

Sometime I must recite it & you play a soft accompaniment. I hope you will look in on us soon, dearheart—meantime I enclose hugs & kisses— [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean.

Oh dear me, child, what are you talking about? I didn't fall on the ice, I only said I did. It is a great difference. You ought to be more careful about imputing to people's statements interpretations which they cannot properly bear.

Apparently—as per telephone from Katy to Catherine right after the concert—Clara had an enthusiastic good success at North Adams last night.

I've told Miss Lyon to remind you & Clara that when you want any jewelry-tinkering done, to send it to us & we will get it well done for half the money you pay Tiffany's clumsy blacksmiths to do it ignorantly & assfully.

This morning we took the Tuxedo [Park] house from May 1 to November 1, & signed the lease & sent the check.

I am taking life easily & comfortably these days. I dictate only an hour or an hour & a half, mornings, & am busy the rest of the day at luncheons, matinees & private dinners—and get to bed by eleven.

Sunday Night I dined with a dozen other guests at Robert Collier's & was “de queen o' de Magazines,” as aunty Cord used to call your mother; for I was in full evening dress of white broadcloth, & was as white as a ghost. It is a very beautiful costume—and conspicuous.

Jerome sat opposite, at the table, & I asked him if he heard the stupendous dynamite explosion at 12 minutes after midnight. He said no—and added:

“Yesterday (Saturday) when I got up in the morning my wife asked me if the mighty explosion woke me at midnight, —& I said no.—which surprised her, for she said it was an awful noise & ought to have wakened a bronze image. We examined the morning paper—there was no explosion in it. So she had dreamed it. But the odd thing was, that she dreamed it exactly 24 hours before it actually happened.” It is a very striking incident, certainly.

Take care of yourself, dear, & don't slip on the ice. I never do. With lots of love & kisses— / Father [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Tuxedo lease signed.* Billiard match.

There is a billiard match going on at the Liederkrantz Hall & after the King canvassed around among his friends & didn't find anyone to go up with him, he took a cab & went alone to watch the game. We had music after dinner, & just as the King was slipping off to bed Mr. Loomis came & we went to the billiard room where they played—the King playing 3 strings to Mr. L's one. The points just dripped out of the tip of the King's cue; for the afternoon's watching had given him ideas & he was just the game itself as he tripped like a spirit around the table.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

* Mr. Voss, the owner of the house, dropped from $2400 to $1500 & so now we are going to spend the summer in Tuxedo [MTP TS 33-34].

In the evening Sam attended another billiards match in the concert hall of the Liederkrantz Club, and his appearance was cause for the New York Times to report on p.7:

WON AT BILLIARDS BY SINGLE POINT
Gardner Beat Conklin in National Tournament Game 300 - 299.

MARK TWAIN WAS THERE

Night Winner Made Highest Average and Run of the Series at Liederkrantz Club.

Dr. Leonidas L. Mial and Edward W. Gardner were the winners yesterday in the continuation of the National amateur billiard championship tournament at 14.2 balk line. Dr. Mial worked a reversal of form by defeating J. Ferdinand Poggenburg 300 points to 200 in the evening contest, while Gardner, the present champion, defeated Charles F. Conklin 300 to 299 at the matinee session. The former's average was 13 1-23, while Gardner, in a long-drawn-out game, fell to 6 24-46.

Mark Twain, attired in a pearl-colored sack suit, witnessed the greater portion of the Gardner-Conklin match, in the concert hall of the Liederkrantz Club, Fifty-eighth Street, near Park Avenue. He arrived while Gardner was at the table, and the cheering so disconcerted the champion that he missed an easy carrom. Mark Twain waved his hands and smilingly acknowledged the greeting. He watched the play, and at the good shots puffed furiously at a big black cigar.

J.E. Art for the New Life Society, Phila. wrote to solicit Sam to be on their "regular list of attractions," in other words, speak on their circuit [MTP].

Miss Isabel Florence Hapgood (1851-1928), writer and translator of Russian texts, wrote to solicit Sam's autograph in an album for hypnotist Dr. Osip Feldman [MTP].

John Mead Howells wrote to Lyon concerning details of the construction of the Redding house, and how payroll was to be made during construction [MTP].

George Mayr wrote from NYC to invite Sam to a private viewing of a painting by Jacob Isaackszoon van Ruysdael (c. 1628-1682) an Old Dutch Master landscape painter [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "Thank him while it's not likely that can get the opportunity, should be glad to see it." Card in the file shows Mayr as "Private Secretary to C. Oliver Iselin" 36 Wall St.

James A. Renwick wrote to receipt Sam for March rent, $291.67 [MTP].

Walter K. Williams wrote from Lincoln, Nebr. Sending a poem about dress fashion and "Dear old adolescent Mark Twain in 'full dress' made of white ducking / the humorist joking again" [MTP].

March 6 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Letter from Isabel F. Hapgood.

Miss Hapgood came this afternoon to bring a big album (belongs to Dr. Osip Feldman, a Russian) for the King to write in. The King cannot endure that woman & was so glad to have an excuse to stay in bed, but he wrote in the album, & put in one of the photos I made up in Dublin. She was prosy, but I found her interesting, for she has known so many find Russians. I was full of Russian coppers & brasses for I'd been around to my Armenian friend's shop & found a lot of old pieces there at prices far lower than the prices of their terrible new things, so I got some [MTP TS 34].

George Griswold wrote from Tuxedo Park, NY to Isabel Lyon, acknowledging her note of Mar. 5 covering duplicate copies of the lease, signed by Clemens and his $500 check as first installment of rent [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

W.T. Hall wrote from Dothan, Ala. to Sam, having just found a copy of “Editorial Wild Oats.” Did Sam have any other books not published through Harpers? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: “Answrd Mch 11th”

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

March 7 Thursday – Sam did not attend the memorial meeting for the late Ernest Howard Crosby, one of the founders of the Social Reform Club, but sent a letter (not extant), as did a few other luminaries. Sam was listed in the Feb. 23 NY Times article as being among those in charge of the meeting in Cooper Union [NY Times, Mar. 8, p.2 “Honor Crosby’s Memory”].

Franklin and Harriet Whitmore came for a three-day stay with Sam [Mar. 12 to Clara; Hill 165; IVL TS 32].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: This evening Mr. & Mrs. Whitmore arrived. It had been a harassing day for Mary Cook developed a very bad mastoid condition of ear & Dr. McKernon came, pierced the poor creature’s ear drums & then they took her away to the hospital. I was quivering with misery over her suffering & I’d been trying to keep her illness from Mr. Clemens when Dr. Halsey went into the King’s room (his door was open & he lay on the bed) & told him of Mary’s condition. “However, it’s all right, there are no mistakes in the fabric.”

The King & Mr. Whitmore played billiards until late, & it was a delight to hear the billiard balls clicking again. The King flitted around the table, with pink cheeks & bright eyes, while Mr. Whitmore plays a ponderous but beautiful game [MTP TS 32].

Fred H. Clifford wrote from Bangor, Maine, disappointed that Sam would not come there during Clara’s tour; he sent a copy of the 1906 B. & A. R.R. Guidebook, “which is fairly suggestive of recreation life in northern Maine” [MTP].

C. Henry Fosgate wrote to Sam, having just purchased the Mark Twain Hotel in Hannibal. He enclosed a clipping from this day’s Quincy Herald, which offered Twain $5,000 a year just to come and live in the hotel, the idea, Fosgate wrote “of the ambitious editor” [MTP].

Alex Mackay-Smith wrote to Sam from Phila., enclosing an extract from the Encyclopedia Britannica on one Joanna Southcott (1750-1814) a self-described prophetess similar to Mary Baker Eddy [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: “Mentioned in the beginning of C.S. Long ago disappeared. They don’t mention her any more.”

Albert B. Paine wrote from Kansas City, Mo. to Sam and Isabel Lyon.

Dear King and Secretary: / No disasters to date except the eating house at London Ontario, where in her haste to escape, Joy left her doll’s handbag, which thus far has not caught up with us, making it necessary for her doll to sleep in a garment which I, like Katy Murray, am far too modest to name [MTP]. Paine also compared K.C. with Chicago. Joy Paine was his youngest daughter.

James K. Paulding sent Sam a printed notice for a memorial meeting in honor of Ernest Howard Crosby, Mar 7. Paulding would be pleased to use Sam’s name as a member of the committee arranging for this meeting [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: “I am willing”

Frederick E. Pierce for Lincoln Farm Assoc. wrote to Sam, enclosing a letter by Clarence H. Mackay. The work of the Assoc. “is going forward splendidly,” and he solicited the use of Sam’s name on a list of prominent men in Connecticut [MTP].

Robert Reid wrote to Isabel Lyon.

I can't tell you how shocked and distressed I am by your letter. I seem to have driven one more nail into the coffin of the lovely (to me) friendship of dear St. Mark—by expressing my letter to him so badly as to have it entirely misinterpreted. I simply asked him, as a friend of both—whether he thought My telling Mr. Rogers a certain fact would—or could not—further my nearly hopeless cause. / And he doesn't even congratulate me!! / Most sincerely... [MTP]. Note: On the same day Sam gave the following instructions to Isabel Lyon for a reply:

Tell Robert Reid am not willing to speak to Mr. Rogers again. I did not get enough encouragement the last time I spoke to him to make me want to. There is nothing I could say to him that I have not already said—and indeed repeated. If it were some one else, another repetition might do good, but I think that with Mr. Rogers's make it would most probably fail again [MTP].

An unidentified person from NYC wrote a nonsensical, crank letter to Sam [MTP].

George Thomson Wilson for Pilgrims of the U.S. sent a printed invitation to Sam for a banquet by The Pilgrims, Mar. 23 at 7 p.m. in honor of James Bryce, O.M., English Ambassador to the US [MTP].

March 8 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. & Mrs. Gilder were here for luncheon today, & the chat was pleasant. The talk after luncheon fell on the Shelly Keats Memorial & the part Mr. Clemens took in it & Mrs. Whitmore asked him to read Rabbi Ben Ezra to us—which he did. The King may deny that he has a religion, but he has it; the very tones of his voice are vibrant with it when he reads a poem like that, or when he looks at a distant view. (And my mind goes back to Dublin & the hallowed days we spent there.) The King & Mr. W. played billiards nearly all day, & again in the evening, while Mrs. Whitmore & I went over to see the Gilders in the evening. There were only one or two there, which made it very delightful. This afternoon Mr. Gilder told how he had met Browning once or twice in a London Club & how Browning came roaring down the hall, & was vigorous in his greeting & how he pointed out Darwin & Herbert Spencer & other big men who were in that club that long ago day [MTP TS 35; Gribben 105]. Note: "Rabbi Ben Ezra" by Robert Browning.

John J. Chapman wrote from NYC to invite Sam to join Tchaykovsky and others to dine with her at the Century Club Mar. 16 at 7:30 p.m. [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "Declined"

J.M. Dean, El Paso, Tex. attorney wrote to Sam, praising IA some "36 years late," and also praising Sam's Autobiography in the NAR [MTP].

S.A. Duke wrote from Baxter, Ark. to Sam. He was just past his 79th birthday and one of the old friends who came out of the woodwork reading Sam's NAR segments.

My dear old colleague (of the Keokuk Lyceum) / I called at your home last summer and was told you was "in the Arctic regions shooting moose." I regretted that this time you was "too far away." / I am reading your biography with much interest, and think I can dimly see why when you was put on for regular exercise at our [illegible word] meeting you was never on hand [MTP].

George Griswold wrote to Lyon: "I return herewith lease, executed by Mr. Voss" [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II wrote from Elmira on Hope-Jones Organ Co. letterhead to Sam, announcing they were "progressing splendidly with the organ enterprise..." They'd won $18,000 in orders the first month of business. Jervis made a second call for stock subscriptions, which in Sam's case was $750 [MTP].

Lillian Gertrude MacQuillan wrote from Providence, R.I. to solicit Sam to speak at Brown University to raise an endowment for their new gymnasium [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: “Answd. Mch 13, 07”

Floyd M. Shoemaker wrote from Elmira, NY to solicit Sam’s autograph in a limited edition of his works [MTP].

March 9 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Yesterday came a letter from AB containing a beautiful tribute to the King. I’ll keep it right here. The King was sweetly moved by it. He lies in bed a lot these days when he isn’t flitting around the billiard table. He played all the afternoon, or much of it after Mr. Stanchfield who had been lunching here left us. This morning I sat in the King’s dressing room while he shaved, & went over the batch of mail there. He has had a very pleasant invitation from the Governor of Maryland to visit Annapolis, & inadvertently “Boost up a Presbyterian Church—but it’s right in my line for I’m nothing if not a Presbyterian!” He has never been to Annapolis, & so is trying to find an excuse to go. He wrote the Governor’s wife, Mrs. Edwin Warfield, a ~~very~~ sweet & gracious letter. What a happy woman she will be when she gets it. I couldn’t get theatre seats for Mrs. Whitmore & me, so we sat cosily in the billiard room & watched the men play. Their big bantor [sic banter] is very good and it is great to hear the King’s rich laugh [MTP TS 36].

R.E. Gunning wrote from Memphis, Tenn. to praise CS and to submit a MS for Sam’s review [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: “Answd. June 6, 07—”

Isabel Florence Hapgood wrote again to Sam. “Did you have your photograph taken last season with Maxim Gorky? ...will you be good enough to tell me where I can obtain a copy? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: “There was one taken—a flash light—the King says.” Clemens: “Don’t know anything about it. Think there was a picture taken, but is not here”

March 10 Sunday – Franklin and Harriet Whitmore ended their three-day visit at 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. with Sam [Mar. 12 to Clara].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King & Mr. Whitmore played billiards this sabbath day & then at 3 o’clock in a big snowstorm, Mr. & Mrs. Whitmore started for home. It was a pity their visit had to break off so soon; for Mr. Whitfield plays a beautiful game of billiards—“25 to 30% better than I can play”, the King says, & to lose so good an antagonist is a pity. This afternoon the King was droopy & had a touch of gout, which means that he is tired & he ought to have a change. Tonight at dinner he talked about the Tichbourne Case & he told me one or 2 stories which he has been reading from “Causes Célèbres”, one of a set of queer & battered little volumes that he ran across in the library. Mrs. Whitmore said that his mind seems keener than it ever did, & broader & fearlesser. I painted his right foot with iodine, for that wretched twinging has to be taken in hand early. Dr. Halsey reports a continual improvement in Mary’s condition [MTP TS 36-37; also Gribben 462]. Note: Recueil des causes celebres, etc. by Maurice Mejan (1765-1823).

The Carnegie Institute sent Sam two invitations, likely before Mar. 10. One to the dedication of the Carnegie Institute’s new building in Pittsburg on Apr. 11-13, and also one for the conferring of degrees at the Carnegie Music Hall, Pittsburg on Apr. 13. A third card requests an RSVP by Mar. 10 [MTP].

Mary R. Davis wrote from Stamford, Conn. to ask a favor of Sam. She was a post graduate student at NYU and president of Pi Alpha. She requested he visit and speak to the university students [MTP].

Charlotte A. England wrote on Detroit, Mich. Normal School stationery to secure Sam as a speaker [MTP].

Fedem (not further identified) wrote from Vienna, Austria to solicit Sam’s help in some injustice she compared to the Dreyfus case, but in Italy. The exact cause she was championing is not clear [MTP].

Jennie Pomerene wrote to Sam, enclosing a ticket for the College Women's Club debut Scholarship Matinee, Tuesday Mar. 12 at 2:30 p.m. And, of course, the women were "great admirers" [MTP].

March 11 Monday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to the Mar. 1 request from Calvin H. Higbie, enclosing the MS Higbie had sent the previous summer. Higbie had lost his copy. Sam also wanted to clarify Albert Bigelow Paine's legitimate position as his biographer with Higbie, who evidently had misunderstood his role. Paine was "well on his way to California" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King is restless—the gout seems better, & I painted the foot again tonight. (I hear him sneeze.) He cannot dictate & he is much in need of a change. We have been talking up a trip to Bermuda. We should have but one night there, for the Bermudian sails every Saturday from here, but the King won't care. He will have 5 days away from home & so I telephoned first to Mr. Howells to ask if he were not planning to go to Bermuda, but he isn't, & then after foraging about in his thoughts he suggested Paddy Madden, & I telephoned the invitation to her & delighted her soul. So the plan is to leave here on Sat., arrive in Bermuda on Monday, sail back on Tuesday, & reach New York again on Thursday the 21st.
 "Robert Undershirt Johnson—The great American undertaker—He'll undertake anything that can add to his popularity" [MTP TS 37]. Note: see Sam to Clara, Mar. 12.

The Junior English Class of Beloit High School, Beloit, Kans. wrote to ask Sam who was the greatest living author? They were unable to agree so would put the matter to him as "competent to judge" [MTP].
Note: Lyon wrote: "Doesn't know who is the greatest living author"

Adelaide Earle wrote from Elizabeth, NJ to ask Sam if he would give a lecture there in April or October [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "Answd Mch. 13 '07"

Clara C. Fuller wrote on Ossining School on the Hudson stationery to ask Sam to come to the school and speak to the girls [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "Answrd. / Mch 13, '07"

Theodore E. Lyon for Barnard School for Girls, NYC wrote to ask Sam to speak to their graduating class on June 5 [MTP].

Carl M. Pihl wrote to Sam on NY Electric Music Co. letterhead, NYC asking for "a few words of recommendation" for the "Electric music that you had at your residence on last New Years Eve" [MTP].

Erica Woltereck wrote on Knox School, Lakewood, NJ stationery to Sam, "fascinated" by Sam's Autobiography and wishing to translate it to German [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "Write to Harpers / Answrd. Mch. 13, '07"

March 12 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Clara, who evidently had chided him for wearing his white suit in public.

Clara dear, your impression was right. The white clothes are for home use, and are not to be worn outside, except at the tables of very intimate friends.

Your growing popularity does certainly give me a good many pangs, and yet I want it to continue, and increase. It is curious, but I feel just so about it.

[Sam advised her not to use a program and related his negative experiences with them].

....

When I read in Carnegie Hall a year ago I refused to allow a program to be distributed. I carried one with me, but used only two-thirds of it. I am going to read in the Governor's mansion in Annapolis about the 1st of May, but there will be no program. Discard it, Clara dear—abolish it. You can never tell with certainty what to sing until you have seen your audience; a song-program is much more hampering and disastrous than any reading program can be. You are coming to realize that your first duty, both to yourself and to your house, is to win your house and carry it along with you; the result is going to be (programs being abolished) that you will carry your houses by storm.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

I am very glad your audiences are liking you; it was sure to come to that. I am delighted to know that you will spend Holy Week with us. You will be most extremely welcome, dear Ashcat.

I have lost interest in everything, and am in deadly need of a change, and so Miss Lyon and I decided last night to sail for Bermuda next Saturday and be gone five days. We invited Paddy, by telephone, to go along with us, and her father had given his consent.

The Whitmores have been here for a day or two, and we had good times with them. It is a pity I never thought, long ago, to dictate my letters, and thus make them easy to read—but I mean to be more heedful now. Forgive me, dear, and receive a large cargo of love and kisses [MTP].

Note: Paddy Madden had been on the Bermudian with Sam and Joe Twichell in the three-day January trip. D. Hoffman identifies her as “a pretty girl from the Upper West Side” of N.Y.C. who had “evidently amused Clemens, and gave him relief from the reverend” [75-6]. D. Hoffman writes that Paddy was invited by telephone and accepted. The party of three left on March 16 [78].

Fatout lists Sam giving a few remarks at the College Women’s Club, N.Y.C. [MT Speaking 676]. Isabel Lyon’s journal entry gives details:

Mr. Clemens dined at the Hoyts where Gen. Miles was a guest, he had a very good time. The lady who sat on his right “was very intelligent, she talked about adultery as if she knew all about it—she was from 45 to 50.” He didn’t know her name & never reached the point of asking what it was. But it wouldn’t make any difference—he wouldn’t remember her, probably.

In the afternoon we went up to the Hudson Theatre to the College Club Benefit. The King sat in a box with General Miles, a fine looking creature, & Gen. Wilson & Edwin Markham, a sweet-faced man with a short good-natured nose, & Count [Alexander] Spiridovitch who is in this country on a diplomatic mission. The King made an explanation of why Miss Fisher didn’t arrive, & the best part of the program was Ethel Barrymore in Carrots, a darling creature. I sat close enough to the King to touch him, just outside the box [MTP: TS 37-38]. Note: did Sam make remarks to the audience or to those in his box? Editorial emphasis.

George Wharton James wrote on Bradley Studios letterhead, NYC: “I have just seen Mr. Bradley & he agrees to your terms. He will give you for the Colbrith Fund 75 large photos & 25 of the medium size if you will pose for him.” [MTP]. Note: he also wrote to Lyon.

Jervis Langdon II wrote to Sam, urging him to come to Elmira the next month for a demonstration of the Hope-Jones organ, newly installed at Elmira’s Park Church, in honor of Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, who had passed away in 1900. Sam had purchased an interest in the newly-formed Hope-Jones Organ Co. upon its incorporation (see Jan. 19).

We want you very much to be here for April 3....We all want you to hear the organ so that you will know what the company which you are part of is preparing to put on the market, and it would be the greatest possible aid to the company in connection with this advertising scheme of April 3 if you could be at the church for a little while that morning to informally meet and chat with these very delightful New Yorkers and to hear some of the music. We would not ask for anything exacting but what it to be as much of a pleasure to you as it would surely be to all these men and ourselves to have you here at that time [Ensor, MT & Hope-Jones 6-7].

Note: Ensor writes of the “grand scheme” to advertise and legitimize the unique Hope-Jones organs:

A special railroad car would be used to bring to Elmira about forty prominent organists from New York City and the surrounding area for a demonstration of the Park Church organ. Among these would be the organists of New York's Cathedral of St. John the Divine, Trinity Church on Wall Street, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian, the Brick Church, the Broadway Tabernacle, the Church of the Heavenly Rest, and other churches [ibid]. Note: Jervis' father, Charles J. Langdon added a P.S. agreeing with his son—Sam's "presence would be a mighty good factor for the organ co. and a more welcome guest could not possibly come to us" [7]. See Apr. 3.

John A. Lewis sent a telegram from Carson City, Nevada to Sam: "PAINE IS TRYING TO PLAY BILLIARDS NEEDS INSTRUCTIONS SAYS YOU ARE ABLE SEND ADVICE" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "His father was probably Editor Proprietor Composer & pressman of the Silver Age in Mr. Clemens's day in Carson City." See MTL 1:172n5 for more on John C. Lewis, this man's father.

W.D. Lowe wrote from Durham, England to ask if there were any historical foundation for P&P [MTP].

Frederic L. Thompson wrote from the Bronx, NY, thanking Sam for buying two of his paintings [MTP].

March 13 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: The check has gone off for the Bermuda tickets, & we are to sail on Saturday. Mr. Howells came in to see the King this afternoon & said that Mrs. Howells is proposing to go to Bermuda on the 28th, but that he has to pretend indifference, otherwise she'd back down at once. For tht's what she always does. It's her illness that causes her to oppose anything that Mr. Howells wants to do. And the King observed as he walked around the billiard table doing random shooting, that it was suh an easy trait to acquire; he used to have it himself in an exaggerated form & now he knows that Mrs. Clemens used to use all her diplomacy to get him to do what she wanted him to do. It makes him miserable & sick when he thinks of it now[MTP TS 38-39].

William Thomas Stead of The Review of Reviews, London wrote to Sam sending a current number of the publication and asking if they might "hope to have" his "presence as one of the Pilgrims..." [MTP]. On or after Mar. 13 Isabel wrote notes for answering Stead's letter. "was a time when he was young enough to do such a thing & should have been glad enough to take part in it, but now does not take any journeys that can be avoided, nor take a practical interest in any movement, good or bad" [MTP].

Percival E. Fansler wrote to ask Sam which of two phrases was correct: "You would best stop at the Waldorf-Astoria," or, "You had best stop at the Waldorf-Astoria" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: "Out of my line. / Answrd Mch 14, '07"

James Forbes wrote on "Offices of Henry B Harris, Hudson Theatre New York" letterhead to Sam. "Miss Janet L. Gilder made me very happy the other day by the news that you had witnessed Miss Rose Stahl's performance in my play, "The Chorus Lady" and had enjoyed our joint effort. / To have won the approval of a mastercraftsman is the greatest tribute that a novice like myself could have received" [MTP].

John M. Howells wrote to Sam about the Redding house plans. "Persuant of our telephone conversation to-day with Miss Lyon, we write covering several points discussed." John covered drawings for piping of acetylene gas, electricity, and quotes from 3 general contractors. "We will take up the specifications next week and believe that all will be ready to take figures by the end of the month" [MTP].

Arthur Leonard wrote from Liverpool, England to Miss Lyon on "The West African Mail" letterhead. Morel had been away on Congo matters a long time but would be very glad to see Dihdwo Twe when he passed through Liverpool [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon, enclosing a letter in French concerning a dispute over the dramatization of Sam's tale, "The Californian" [MTP].

Barbara Mullen wrote from Hannibal, Mo. to Sam, praising the Mar. 1 segment of his Autobio. in the NAR [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: “Write her a thank you of some kind or other. So pleased to find that there are a good manyh people—Southern people here who recognize the truth / Answrd Mch 25, ‘07”

Emma N. Warfield (Mrs. Edwin Warfield) wrote to Sam on Executive Mansion, Annapolis, Md. Stationery. “The Governor and I are inexpressibly touched by the hospitality you have extended to us. / We expect to be in New York on the twenty-first and the twenty-second of March, Thursday and Friday of next week [MTP]. Note: Sam had invited them to dine.

Richard B.B. Wood wrote from Keokuk, Iowa to Sam, enclosing “Orion Clemens’ Lunch”—the story about Orion eating a bowl of yeast by mistake. Wood had sent it to the NAR but they returned it and suggested he send it to Clemens [MTP].

March 14 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: This morning I mentioned R.U. Johnson not being at a meeting & the King let on to be astonished, & he said “Oh Jesus, No Johnson. Undershirt!” Mr. Rogers arrived pretty early & the King was in the bathroom; he came along the hall in his night clothes & his old red slippers, saying “Oh yes, oh yes, I reckon you’ll find that somebody else is up just as early as you are” & then as the door closed, followed the usual affectionate abuse of each other.

Robt. Collier & Mrs & Mr. Walker dined here. But—After dinner the King read “Interpreting the Diety” aloud, & then followed a discussion as to whether it should or shouldn’t be published. It should be, of course; but there isn’t a publisher who would have the courage to print it. Although, as Collier said “The publisher ought to want to publish it, & doubtless would want to.” But it’s just as the King says, we are all slaves in one degree or another. The King is a slave because he mustn’t submit to it because it would be bad for his children [MTP TS 39-40].

R.G. Chase wrote from West Medford, Mass. to ask Sam for “a few selections for reading” on his evening with his Reading Club. He planned to give his club an account of Carleton’s “estimate of himself for declining the publication” of The Jumping Frog [MTP].

Anna Palmer Draper wrote from NYC to decline Sam’s dinner invitation of Mar. 22, as she had to be on Boston that day [MTP].

Hugh McLellan wrote from Champlain, NY to Sam, “at last” thanking him for Tom Sawyer [MTP].

A. Emilius Outerbridge & Co., Agents for Quebec Steamship Co. wrote to Miss Lyon: “We acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 13th inst. enclosing check for $273.36 for which we return herein the tickets and advise having booked Mr. Clemens and party in rooms 29 and 62 from Bermuda March 19th” [MTP].

Victor Robinson for Alturia Magazine wrote to Sam asking for his 10 favorite humanitarians of the 19th Century [MTP].

Maryland Governor Edwin Warfield wrote to Sam, accepting his invitation for dinner, and expressing pleasantries that he was finally able to get to know Mark Twain [MTP].

March 15 Friday – Sam sat for A.F. Bradley, a New York photographer. Isabel Lyon’s journal recorded the event:

I went up to the Bradly [viz] studio with the King at eleven this morning, & Mr. Bradly must have made 25 exposures of the King. He was in his white suit & very very beautiful. Now at 1:30 I slipped down to his room to see him lying asleep with his glasses on & his hands clasped over his breast and over a volume of “Plutarch’s Lives”. His body is so sweet, so gentle in these days, but from the flash of his eye you can see the strong active crusader-like life he is living in his mind [MTP TS 40].

North American Review published a review of Christian Science by Charles Johnston, p. 641-5. Tenney: “Argues that Mary Baker Eddy is indeed a psychic, though lacking the character to fully cope with what has been revealed to her. She has her virtues (amply proclaimed by her disciples and by herself), but also her failings, and ‘it is natural and right that Mark Twain should lay more stress on the sordid despotism, the vanity, the pretence, which he makes exceedingly plain in his earnest and disinterested study. He is absolutely right in underlining the passion for money, backed up by claims of immediate divine guidance....’” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 192]. Also, in the same issue, Charles Klein, p. 636-41, offers a point-by-point defense of Eddy and Christian Science [ibid.].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote from NYC to acknowledge blank check from Sam to be used, “if at all, in the purchase of Utah Consolidated shares” [MTP].

Arthur Judson Bleazby wrote from Lynn, Mass. to Sam. “In dealing with the subject of Christian Science, which you have not understood, but misjudged, error alias the devil has compelled you many ‘miles’ and you have misinterpreted the meaning of Matthew, 5th Chapter, and 41st verse. The last word is an adjective not a proper noun and name” [MTP]. Note: Matt. 5:41: “And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.”

William Augustus Croffut, a Redding Conn. native, wrote to Sam, noting from newspapers that Sam was going to “boom” Redding, by building there—“the last town in the world” he would have expected Sam to hide in. He looked forward to seeing Sam there in the summer [MTP].

E.L. Hale wrote to Sam about p. 461 in the NAR, where Sam claimed to be able to crack hickory nuts & walnuts with the kernels delivered whole. What was the secret? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote: “Place edge up, not the flat side, so that the nut splits open into 2 halves & delivers those kernels whole”

Jean Jewel Hotchkiss wrote from NYC to Sam, having had no answer to his letter two weeks before [MTP].

Chapters from “My Autobiography—XIV” ran in the N.A.R. p.561-71.

March 16 Saturday – Sam, Isabel Lyon, and the “pretty young girl” Paddy Madden left on the Bermudian. The trip would be a five-day getaway for Sam, who was suffering from gout, but all but one day would be on board the ship. Also on the outward voyage Charles W. Eliot (1834-1926), president of Harvard, and Thomas D. Peck, woolen manufacturer from Pittsfield, Mass., were on board. Sam and Peck conducted a lottery on the ship to benefit the Cottage Hospital in Bermuda, the only civilian one there [D. Hoffman 78-9].

Note: Peck’s wife, Mary Allen Hulbert Peck, was a socialite who often wintered in the islands; she would have a dalliance with the future president, Woodrow Wilson in Bermuda. Wilson arrived in Bermuda on Jan. 14, a week after Sam’s last trip, and was introduced to Mrs. Peck on Feb. 5. Mary would sue for divorce in 1911, claiming desertion; the couple had been separated since 1907 [NY Times, Dec. 9, 1911, p.1]. The Times of Mar. 17, p.9 “Ocean Travelers” mistakenly reported this as a six weeks’ stay in Bermuda for Mark Twain; and lists other passengers as: Joseph W. Bullard, Mr. and Mrs. Warren Curtis, Dr. and Mrs. Charles W. Eliot, Mr. and Mrs. F.J. Frey, Lawrence Haight, J. Donaldson Nichols, A.R. Outerbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ransom, Mr. and Mrs. Martin H. Smith, Dr. and Mrs. Frederick A. Slack, and Frank T. Wadsworth.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: On Mar 16th we sailed for Bermuda. The King, Paddy Madden & I, with a good big & interesting looking ships company. President Elliot [sic] of Harvard. It didn’t mean anything to me for within an hour the exhausted headache I had wakened with had boiled into something unprecedented & I was alarmed—Dr. Herring gave me a drug to dilate the arteries. It did it—or did something—and the bad condition increased steadily. However, I begged him for an emetic; he finally consented to give it—but it couldn't work—and lay in my system harboring impossible conditions [MTP TS 40-41].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Elizabeth G. Jordan sent Sam an engraved, postcard sized invitation for Saturday, Mar. 16 at 9 p.m. when Miss Katherine Everts would read “My Lady’s Ring” by Alice Brown [MTP].

Albert B. Paine wrote from Carson City, Nev. to Sam and Lyon that he was “having very good success in finding old friends and landmarks & material for reconstructing the past” [MTP].

Adair Wilson attorney in Durango, Colo. wrote to Sam, having had his memory jogged by Sam’s Autobiography in the NAR. “...recalled the never-forgotten ride which you and I took at a very unseemly hour in the morning down ‘Six Mile Canon’, expecting to witness the duel between Joe Goodman and Tom Fitch.” Wilson had been caught in the 1906 San Francisco earthquake and his nerves had been shot from it since [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “was a man who justified Horace Greeley’s remark Go West, young man, Go West. He was a reporter & then studied law with a shyster lawyer & then practiced & finally became a judge. Ran for Gov. too—Ruggles was another. Ruggles was long & lean & popeyed & in 1853 was setting type in St. Louis—and he went West to grow up with the Country.”

March 17 Sunday – Sam was en route to Bermuda on the Bermudian. It was now a two-day voyage.

Isabel Lyon’s Journal: Sunday afternoon I went up on deck to find the King with a Mr. Wilcox and then to find that he and Paddy had been enjoying a Mr. Binny, who was out at Katonah for awhile this winter, in Jean’s sanitarium. We also met his friend Mr. Aertsen. Both men are delightful and that pretty creature Paddy, proves a delightful bait for the very nicest men on board. She sat beside President [Charles W.] Eliot and seemed to delight him with her empty little remarks. She loves ice cream, but not candy, and she never drinks coffee, all of which she says with a conviction that makes you interested in what she is saying. She wears white when the fellows come to see her. She says a 5 page prayer to the virgin 5 times a day when she isn’t too sleepy and so on and so on, and she is so pretty” [MTP TS 121; also in part, D. Hoffman 78]. Note: Mr. Binny was Witter Bynner.

Mildred C. Sawyer wrote from NYC to invite Clara and Sam for supper on Apr. 2 at 11 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answrd. Invitation wd. Be referred to Mr. C. immediately upon his return. / Yes for C.C.”

March 18 Monday – Sam, Isabel Lyon, and Paddy Madden reached Bermuda.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: We reached Bermuda sailing in along that darling channel about 9:30. We hadn’t any packing to do, so we could enjoy every moment of it, for we were going to spend the night on the ship. We drove at once to the Princess Hotel to call on Mildred Howells and on Mrs. Stevens, and then we went for a sail among the islands in one of the sweet native boats. A hasty scramble of a luncheon, Paddy and I eating spinach and potatoes left by Mr. Binny, and we jumped into a cab and we went to the Court House to attend a meeting which is to decide whether or not Bermuda shall have the right to have electric power and lights and all the other hideous modern things. The removal of the Garrison has been a bad thing for the island, for with the removal of the Garrison, England stops the payment of over a million pounds for the support of the island, and the condition there is a grave one. We were too late for the meeting and so drove over to call on Mrs. Peck who lives in an old, old house on the Paget side. The house is infinitely charming, with a good deal of nice old furniture in it, and long ago was Government House. On either side of the drawing room fireplace are 2 recesses, really little rooms with a high window in each, and these were known as the powder rooms, for the ladies used to withdraw into them to rebeautify themselves when balls and plays were given there by the Governor. Mr. Peck went down on the Bermudian with us, and Mrs. Peck lives there all the winter through. Then the King was tired. I saw the weary sagging arrive all over his body, and the grey look came into his face, so we drove hastily home to the ship, after making some photographs of him as he stood on the pretty porch, and he went to sleep. At 7:30 we dined at the Princess [Hotel] with Mr. Aertsen and Binny as guests. Had such a good dinner and then again the weariness crept over the King, he swore at his salad, because he couldn't cut it with a dull sided fork, and then back we went to the ship. It was so sweet and so quiet, and although the darkeys were loading potatoes and carrots half the night, we heard no sound of it and slept until morning [MTP TS 122-123]. Note: Mr. Binny was Witter Bynner.

D. Hoffman writes:

With so little time to spend on land, Clemens and Miss Lyon had no need to unpack; they would spend the night on board. They rode at once to the Princess Hotel, where Mildred Howells, the daughter of Clemens's old friend, had been staying since the previous Monday. After a sail about the Islands, they took a carriage to Paget and called on Mrs. Peck. She had been at Inwood "all winter through," Miss Lyon noted. Clemens got tired, and retreated to the ship for a nap. That night when they dined at the Princess he grew tired again, Miss Lyon wrote, and "swore at his salad, because he couldn't cut it with a dull-sided fork." Their few hours on the Islands resulted in another absurdity. The same Tuesday edition of the Royal Gazette reported Mark Twain's arrival and Mark Twain's departure [80].

E.S. Duryee wrote from Springfield, Mass. to ask Sam about his note on p.178 of CS that he knew of "a simple method for curing the drink habit." Was it the Oppenheimer Institute's method? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "It is not the Oppenheimer Ins & you will find the method he speaks of in a very early chapter in Following the Equator"

March 19 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: We sailed away again this morning. We had a darling time when leaving time came, for every one way paying court to the King, and photographing him. We flew over to Trinningham's [D. Hoffman shows this as Trimmingham's] and bought him a nice panama hat, one like Binny's, and Binny was struggling with an Irish flag to hoist to the top of his hired boat in Paddy's honor and altogether it was charming. The afternoon before there had been some good talk with Mr. Aertsen about the King, who all his life had been longing for just a chance to look at him even from a distance [MTP TS 41]. Note: Binny was Witter Bynner.

The Clemens party sailed from Bermuda on the Bermudian, bound for N.Y.

Thomas Bailey Aldrich, age 70, died in Boston. His last words were, "In spite of it all, I'm going to sleep." Sam learned of his death upon return to New York.

James DeConlay, Jr. of the Australasian Press wrote to Miss Lyon asking for Sam's autograph, and enclosing a small Australian flag as her "graft" [MTP].

Samuel A. Eliot for the International Council wrote to invite Sam to be an "honorary Vice-President of the Congress" that would meet next September in Boston [MTP].

March 20 Wednesday – Sam was on the Bermudian en route to N.Y.C. Isabel Lyon's journal: "A beautiful rough day" [MTP TS 41].

Arthur E. Bullard for Friends of Russian Freedom wrote to advise Sam they were organizing on a national basis and requested he be on their executive committee [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "I am in full sympathy with the movement & am willing to have my name used, but as I am too full of duties I cannot furnish any active service"

Ernest Hendrie wrote from London, England to ask about dramatizing "The Man Who Corrupted Hadleyburg" [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Robert McClellloch for the Confederate Monument wrote from St. Louis to ask Sam if he would lecture with the ladies of the St. Louis Chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answrd Apr. 16 ‘07”

W. John Murray wrote from NYC to Sam having read various reviews of CS, which he discussed at length, criticizing those that hadn’t read the whole work [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Glad the reviews interested him. They never interest me, so I never read them & am therefore not aware of what he is talking about”

March 21 Thursday – The Bermudian docked in N.Y.C. Sam returned home to 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. and sent a telegram to Lilian W. Aldrich in Boston:

“I have just learned to-night with the deepest sorrow of your heavy bereavement & I tender the heartfelt sympathy of an old friend who always loved him, & who would comfort you if any words of his could do it” [MTP].

Lilian W. Aldrich wrote to Sam from Boston after the loss of her husband. “We have been kinsmen through many years in affection—now the tie binds closes through grief. You and I know the appalling isolation that closes about us when all that really made our life is taken from us...” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Ach Gott. Once more I am in my own room, in my own bed, and no one could be gratefuller. Today the first news we heard upon our arrival was the death of Mr. Aldrich [MTP TS 41-42].

George H. Mifflin sent a telegram to George Harvey: “Please convey to Mr Clemens, Mrs Aldrichs, Hope that he will be able to serve as honorary pallbearer tomorrow noon arlington street church” [MTP].

March 22 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote an introductory note for Frederick Upham Adams (representing Harper’s) to Dr. John S. Billings. The introduction was “upon library business” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Gov. and Mrs. Warfield, Dr. and Mrs. Kinnicutt, Miss Herrick, Dorothea G., [Gilder], Count Spiridowitch and Melville Stone dined here this evening, and it was all so satisfactory and delightful. Roses and freesia we had for flowers, and Katy Laundress cooked a delicious dinner and every thing was right—exactly right. All these people were strangers to me, but I soon lost my shyness. Gov. Warfield sat on my right and told about his plantation home, and about Annapolis. He is the 13th Governor who has lived in the new executive mansion. And we are to go down there in May and visit them. The King found Mrs. Warfield very sweet and very behind the times, oh, very! for she believes that the animals were put here as food for us. I reminded the King that she was a Presbyterian and he said that he was too, but a pretty pale Presbyterian beside her. The King reminisced about his early days as a reporter and about his experiences in boarding houses in the far west.

I am too exhausted to remember much about it. Once or twice today I felt that I must give up & find some one else to take my place tonight, but things revived me. When we went down to wait the arrival of the guests, Mr. Clemens found a letter from a man who has been reading the C.S. book and who came across the sentence: “and naively explaining which Sir William Wallace it was; lest we get the wrong one by the hassock.” He was troubled, so sat down at once to explain what a “hassock” is, then thinking the King meant “cassock”, he explained the meaning of that word too. The King enjoyed it ever so much but was sorry that the writer was a Scotchman [MTP TS 42-43].

James E. Gallagher wrote from Berkeley, Calif. to Sam, enclosing a clipping (not in file) and asking, “Are they correct in attributing to you the ‘Punch with care’ verses? I had always thought Mr. Isaac (‘Ike’) Bromley—my old friend and doubtless yours, too, wrote them” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “They ingeniously combined the signs around in the horse car— / Mr. Bromley & Noah Brooks patched together those rhymes & published them. I took the rhythmes & commented upon them & published them. / The jingle drove me mad & I wrote the sketch in order that it might drive some other people mad.”

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

John Mead Howells sent Sam “notes of decisions reached at meeting at Mr. Clemens’ House / March 22nd, 1907.” Details about windows, screens, weather stripping, floors, window trim, call bells, etc. [MTP].

Franklin G. Whitmore wrote to Sam. “Dear Brer:—/ You will have overlook my shortcomings in not writing you before this late hour and telling you how much pleasure and enjoyment you gave me during my visit with you. It was...like old times to be playing billiards with you again...” [MTP].

March 23 Saturday – Fatout lists Sam giving a Pilgrim’s dinner speech at the Ambassador James Bryce Dinner, Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y.C. [MT Speaking 676]. Particulars below:

The New York Sun, Mar. 24, p.4, “Bryce Guest of Pilgrims” reported the event but does not mention any speech by Mark Twain. In part (with all mentions of Mark Twain):

BRYCE GUEST OF PILGRIMS.

GREETINGS AT DINNER TO THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR.

Notable Assemblage Turns out to Praise and Listen to the Praise Of the New Diplomat—Chaote and Hughes Among the Speakers—Bryce on Friendship.

The International Bonds of Friendship Cement Company, better known as the Pilgrims of the United States, poured the Waldorf-Astoria just full and running over with enthusiasm and welcome last night [Mar. 23] in honor of His Excellency, the Right Honorable James Bryce, the newest Ambassador from Great Britain to the United States of America. It was the first semi-public appearance of the Ambassador since his arrival in the country and in his honor the grand ballroom was crammed with what is sometimes described as the wit and wisdom of the city.

....

W. Butler Duncan, as president of the society, sat at the middle of the great table on the dais, flanked on either hand by Ambassador Bryce and ex-Gov. Levi P. Morton.... On Ambassador Bryce’s left sat Gov. Hughes, while close by were notables almost without number.

They included ex-Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw, President Wilson of Princeton, Bishop Worthington of Nebraska, Rear Admiral Coghlan, Gen. Horace Porter, ex-Ambassador Joseph H. Choate, Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, Paul Morton, Alton B. Parker, Justice Patterson, Police Commissioner Bingham, Senator John C. Spooner, President Alderman of the University of Virginia, Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, Major General Frederick D. Grant.

At one end of the table Mark Twain endeavored to impress Comptroller Metz with the humorous side of finance, while District Attorney Jerome pattered about endeavoring amiably to sidestep everybody who wanted to know, in strict confidence of course, “all about the inside of the Thaw case.”

....

There was a little less than a polite riot when Ambassador Bryce, his health having been drunk, arose to face the great roomful of his friends. Everybody in the ballroom rose to his feet and the air was full of waving napkins, handkerchiefs and flags. The Ambassador stood with his eyes cast down, visibly affected, until the noise had died away, which was some little time. Even Comptroller Metz left off asking Mark Twain how he thought a white flannel suit would suit his complexion [Note: Edwin Anderson Alderman (1861-1931), first president, University of Virginia (1904-1931); Alderman beat out Woodrow Wilson for the job. Herman A. Metz (1867-1934), Comptroller of NYC (1906-1910) and Congressman from NY (1913-1915). Dr. George Worthington (1840-1908), Episcopal Bishop of Nebraska. Rear Admiral Joseph Coghlan (1844-1908), active in the Manila Bay campaign.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Before he went away AB brought to me a magazine (Scribner's) containing Elizabeth Jordan's story "Varick's Lady o' Dreams." & he insisted that I read it, for I'd find it exquisite. It's more than that.

~~It's so sweet to be alone this evening—for my trip exhausted me, & last night's dinner did too.~~

~~The King has gone to a Pilgrim Banquet for Mr. Bryce—and as he slipped sweetly out of the house, the feeling the back of my head, that he is the best ever, & that I'm the most fortunate, pounded away at me & gave me great happiness.~~

Last night Mrs. Kinnicutt said a thing that interested me. She said that when Karl Schurtz [sic] was writing his autobiography he was unable to write the early part of it—his German life—in English; he was obliged to write it in German and have it translated. Mrs. Kennicutt [sic Kinnicutt] said he would labor with it and write in stilted English, impossible English, and finally would give it up and go back to the German. Mrs. Kennicutt is a wonderful woman. Melville Stone was much impressed with her [MTP TS 43]. Note: Lyon often struck out, perhaps much later, the more effusive passages about Clemens.

Robert Fraser Standen wrote from Dover, England to Sam. "I have been awaiting the publication of your book [CS] before acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 25th of February last year, but now that your publishers have agreed with you as to the psychological moment at which to produce your assault on Mrs Eddy, I'm sure you will forgive me for writing again, since I can cheer you by enclosing this inimitable paragraph from the fertile pen of 'Tay Pay' O'Connor. / It takes an Irishman to see a joke, after all!" He thanked Sam for Huck Finn [MTP]. Note: T.P. O'Connor, member of Parliament.

March 24 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: ~~A lazy recuperative day, I think. I have never been so exhausted as just now.~~ I was telling the King this morning how mother who spends her winters near here changed her boarding house by herself and got into a house of questionable character and he told me of how when Mr. And Mrs. Twichell were in London many years ago, they spent a week in a house of prostitution and would probably be there yet, if some friend hadn't taken them out [MTP TS 44].

March 25 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Miss Marjorie Bowen (pseud.)

Indeed I shall be more pleased than you can think, to have "The Master of Stair" dedicated to me. It is lovely of you to conceive of this fine compliment for me, & I highly value the impulse that moved you to it. You are a wonderful girl, & I hope there is a long life before you to keep on proving it in. / With the very best wishes [MTP]. Note: see Nov. 20, 1906.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Nearly all day in Katonah. Jean is improving and is full of plans for the future home in Redding" [MTP TS 40-41].

Lyon's journal of Mar. 26 puts Clara Clemens' return from her tour to late this evening [TS 44].

Julia Barnett Rice (Mrs. Isaac L. Rice) for the Society of Suppression of Unnecessary Noise wrote to Sam. "I enclose a few clippings about our Society which may interest you." She solicited "a few words" from Clemens for their meeting [MTP]. Note: many clippings from Paris, London, and the US are in file.

Sam's A.D. of Mar. 26 recalled a visit this day from William Dean Howells, and how they reflected on the passing of so many, including Thomas Bailey Aldrich:

"Of the gay company of us that used to foregather in Boston, thirty-five years ago and more, not one is left but himself and me; and of the New York contingent of that day we could call to mind no conspicuous member still in the flesh except Stedman" [MTHL 824].

March 25 ca. – Charles Dexter Allan wrote on The Grolier Club stationery, NYC, to advise Sam that a good friend of his, Seumas McManus (1868-1960), noted storyteller of Ireland, was in town [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Mr Clemens finds he is in town & would like to know him. (at top:) Invite him here to luncheon Monday or Tuesday.” McManus wrote on this day to Miss Lyon, advising he would give a reading on Apr 30 at the National Arts Club—would Sam honor him by attending?

March 26 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: A long and enthusiastic letter from AB, who finds Carson City very interesting and so full of matter than he had to send for Mrs. P and Joy [his youngest dau.] to see it with him. C.C. came home late last night. She is a made over creature with happiness and success and music running rampantly through her veins. What a creature she is, and how beautiful [MTP TS 44].

Ferris Greenslet of Houghton Mifflin & Co. wrote to Sam, advising that beginning June 1 he was preparing a memoir of Thomas Bailey Aldrich. He requested any letters Twain might have—he could have them transcribed and return them promptly [MTP].

Alice Minnie Herts for the Children’s Educational Theatre wrote to Sam. “Your letter has made us all so happy, inspiring new spirit and ardor into those who are rehearsing your play. The knowledge that you are really truly coming to us is going ... among the children...” [MTP].

March 27 Wednesday – Sam attended a luncheon at the St. Regis Hotel given by Count Arthur de Jcherep-Spiridovitch (1851-1926), who eulogized the Russian Czar. Sam paid some compliments in introducing the Count. The New York Times, Mar. 28, p.9 reported the event. Evidently, Mark Twain’s remarks were not recorded.

John Mead Howells presented the plans for the new house in Redding, Conn. to Clara Clemens, who approved them. Hill writes that Sam “refused even to discuss the subject of the new construction” [171]. Note: The builder of the Redding house, Philip Nichols Sunderland, recalled first meeting Twain when he went with John Mead Howells to get the contract signed. This may have been that day, but likely somewhat later, after Clemens had had time to study the plans. He mentioned having signed the contract in a letter to H.H. Rogers on May 29, 1907.

Isabel Lyon’s Journal: I went down to the cellars of the Equitable Building, 120 Broadway to go over 11 cases of books and papers belonging to the Webster Publishing Co. There were great hydraulic engines all about me and their companionship and the companionship of the grimy engineers was pleasant. I condemned 5 cases which were just old ledgers, but among the other cases of letters, etc. I’ll find something. I ran upon a sketch of Mr. Aldrich’s life in ms. written by Mr. Howells which I brought home, and there are a lot of G.C. Stedman letters.

The King lunched with Count Spiridowitch at the St. Regis. Gabrilowitsch came in about dinner time and we had a chat about Count S., who they say isn’t a count at all. Miss Harrison and Dorothea G. dined here. Dorothea was very charming, C.C. was beautiful, very beautiful in a pale violet gown with a great bunch of violets at her belt, and Miss Harrison was as stately and handsome as a Duchess of Towers. John Howells lunched here to show the house plans to C.C. When we were up in the garret looking at the carved mantel there, he suggested green for the big living room. But the King hates and hates and damns green. Oh, it mustn’t be [MTP TS 44-45].

W.J. Armstrong wrote from Patterson, NJ to Sam, announcing he’d rec’d a patent on an adjustable chair that he wished to show Clemens [MTP].

E.H. Hawley wrote from Danbury, Conn. that he’d been informed of a need for a manager of Sam’s farm at Redding; he was looking for such a position [MTP].

Emily Ladenburg (Mrs. Adolf Ladenburg, widow) wrote on “The Warrington / 161 Madison Avenue” letterhead to Sam. “I am so glad you are coming to me on Friday. It will be such a pleasure to have you and Colonel Harvey with me” [MTP]. Adolf was mysteriously lost at sea in 1896 after boarding the Niagara at Nassau for a sea return to New York [NY Times, Feb. 24, 1896, “Banker Lost at Sea”]. The widow was likely a friend of Harvey’s. She went to London in 1922 and no later death notice was found in the Times.

Sometime shortly before Mar. 27 Major General Count Arthur de Jcherep-Spiridovitch sent Sam a postcard invitation to lunch on this day at 1 p.m. [MTP].

Emma N. Warfield (Mrs. Edwin Warfield, Governor) wrote on Executive Mansion, Annapolis, Md. stationery to thank Sam for the warm welcome, the delightful people and charming dinner; she urged Lyon and Clara to spend time with them when they came; and offered a day of sailing on the Chesapeake should Clemens come that way [MTP]. Note: on Apr. 4, Edwin Warfield wrote to Miss Lyon with his thanks.

Rolla Wells, Mayor of St. Louis, wrote for the Daughters of the Confederacy to again invite Sam to speak at the erection of a memorial monument in St. Louis [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answrd Apr. 16, ‘07”

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

March 28 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

Oh, the King is so great. C.C. has come back from her tour, it has cost at least $2,500.00—a financial loss, but when I talked with him this morning about the chances of proceeding for another 4 weeks, he said, “Pay the bills and tell Ben to go ahead.” He was shaving and with his face covered with lather he said in substance that she was still learning her trade and the only way she can learn it is to know how to sail her ship in adverse winds. He said that if she had come home with twenty thousand dollars in her purse it would not be of the value to her that this experience has been; smaller cold audiences that you win over are the ones that help you most.

Seumas MacManus lunched here today, and he is a sweet and genuine Irishman, full of the problems young Ireland is trying to solve. He is poetic and when he is interested he drones his speech and makes of the word “love” a word as long as a long, long sigh.

I had a beautiful and affectionate letter from Mrs. Warfield [MTP TS 45-46]. Seumas McManus.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

March 29 before – William L. Bryan (1860-1955), philosopher, author, president of Indiana University (1902-1937), wrote to Sam. Bryan was a cousin to Joseph Bryan, a friend of Twain’s and a Mississippi River pilot from 1850-1900.

Here is a question. A man writes. Succeeds. Wins admiration far and wide. Wins finally the deep affection of thousands of men and women. A few of these can let him know. A few others try and fail, blundering about in the attempt. Most of the thousands are necessarily forever silent. Their feeling for him is an immeasurable electric charge which can never strike his lightening rod. / But does it? That is my question. Does he somehow sometimes sense the innumerable unknown friendships which he has made? Does he sometimes in the most sorrowful night of loneliness pick up like a Marconi tower the streams of attention, of friendliness, flowing toward him? / My scientific Geist says no. But I hope he may have some equivalent experience [MTP].

March 29 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Lilian W. Aldrich.

I cannot realize it. That that lovely spirit has gone out of our lives for ever, does seem so impossible. And we never shall realize it—this I know, for I have learned. The day will never come when we shall cease to hear his step & see his smile. How we loved him!

It grieved me that I could not go to Boston; but I was not well, & was exhausted by the sea-passage, & should have been obliged to take a midnight train—prohibitory conditions when one is old.

There is only one comfort for you & me—our stay here is not for long [MTP].

Sam also replied to the before Mar. 29 of William L. Bryan.

Assuming that I am that person, I think I may say that it is like this: when a fragment of star-material falls into our atmosphere it catches fire & lights up & smiles a friendly greeting to us as it passes—& we infer that there are others of its gracious disposition where it came from. We reason that they are there although we cannot see them. In my case I reason so—in recent times. For now that I have lost my star, my wife, & need kindnesses; & am old, & need the friendly word, letters like yours are coming to me—with increasing frequency—& I allow myself the very precious privilege of inferring that these letters do not speak for their writers alone, but for many friends who are invisible only because they do not cross my orbit. And so I do “sense the unknown friendships;” & not merely at intervals, but every day & all the time—& rightly & limitlessly thankful am I that this is so. My life is hardly real; it must surely be a dream, a fairy tale.

I thank you for those welcome words [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The King started for Mrs. Ladenburg’s Westbury L.I. home at 3:30. He’s going down with Colonel Harvey” [MTP TS 46]. Note: see Mar. 27 from Emily Ladenburg.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on International Spiral Pin Co. letterhead to Miss Lyon.

“I enclose Telegraphone certificate of reservation of 100 shares of stock, good until April 1st. There has been no agreement on our part, as yet, to take the stock. / When Mr. Clemens returns on Monday, tell him to ante up or throw in his hand, as that day is April 1st. Rather a bad day to make an investment, I think!” [MTP].

James B. Gantt and Leroy B. Valliant wrote to Sam on State of Missouri Supreme Court letterhead, urging him “to deliver a lecture in aid of” the Daughters of the Confederacy in St. Louis [MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote to Sam.

Dear Clemens: / I have not the time or strength for the long wrestle with the Buon-Martini problem, and I am sending back the pamphlet. There would be glory in it, and I should like to share that with you; all the more glory because on the woman’s side the sorrow seems slopped up with sentimentalism, as I read the case; and sentimentalism is a part of every good woman which ought to be defended. However, I have merely sketched the thing through, recognizing my inability to co-operate. Yours ever ... [MTHL 2: 824-5]. Note: source says the pamphlet and problem are unidentified. It may refer to a linguistic problem in Dante.

F.W. Moore wrote from Brooklyn, NY to Sam. For many years Moore had recited Sam’s sketch, “Buck Fanshaw’s Funeral” and never understood the phrase “...you see he’s dead again”—why again? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “adding that word ‘again’ was a common thing out there—It can’t be explained & nobody knows how it came into use.”

March 30 Saturday – Isabel Lyon replied to Ferris Greenslet’s Mar. 26 request for letters of Thomas Bailey Aldrich: “We are a homeless family for so many years that not many letters were kept—but such as he has you are welcome to take—when Mr. Paine comes back in about a month” [MTP]. Note: this is catalogued “after Mar. 27,” the day of receipt, but is specifically given to Mar. 30 by Greenslet’s May 21 letter.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Seumas MacManus has written a sweet note to say he is sending books, 1 for the King, 1 for C.C. and 1 for me—his late wife's poems.

There is a bowl of orchids in C.C.'s room. They are so beautiful that I am drunk with the tendernesses of their colors... [MTP TS 46-47; Gribben 445]. Note: Anna MacManus (Johnston) pseud. "Ethna Carbery," The Four Winds of Eirinn. Poems by Ethna Carbery, Ed. by Seumas McManus (1902).

Charles A. Burkhardt for American Booksellers' Assoc. wrote to invite Sam to be the guest of honor at their meeting on the evening of May 15. Sam was encouraged "to meet the men who sell your books" and speak to them [MTP].

W. Conyers Herring wrote on the SS Bermudian to Miss Lyon to decline joining her and Sam in their box the next day; the specific performance not given [MTP].

March 31 Sunday – The New York Times, p. SM3 ran a feature article, "Mark Twain's Wanderings At An End." Here is the first part of a narration that reviewed Mark Twain's life and residences:

MARK TWAIN'S WANDERINGS AT AN END

In His Seventy-third Year He Prepares to Build a Home of His Own and Settle Down—Strange Record of Temporary Sojourn in Many Places and Countries.

Mark Twain is at last to have a home of his own building. He has wandered around the world for fifty years. Some of the time he had no home at all. In other years Missouri, Nevada, London, Paris, Berlin, Florence, and Vienna claimed him as their own. For a long time he had houses in Buffalo, New Haven, and New York, where his family lived. Still he wandered around the world, writing and lecturing. So numerous were these abiding places that a reporter sought him at his residence in lower Fifth Avenue one evening last week to straighten the matter out. The famous author explained the doubtful points. He chatted of art for a while. He exploded some of the stories told about himself—or rather put them in a way that robbed them of their traditional point.

Mark Twain, or Mr. Samuel L. Clemens in private life, made a distinction between a dwelling place and a home.

"If a man spends a month or two in a place," he said, "the surroundings grow too familiar. Yet he may not feel at home. If he spends a couple of years there he may come to look on the place as his home." [Note: even back then the Times was getting it wrong—Sam never owned a house in New Haven. Of course they meant Hartford].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King is away and it is very, very lonely. Easter Sunday too. Spending Sunday with Mrs. Ladenburg, he is" [MTP TS 47]. Note: Note: see Mar. 27, 28 from Emily Ladenburg widow of Adolf Ladenburg, influential NY banker. TS error shows her as "Ladenbury."

Albert I. Frye wrote from Brooklyn to Sam. Only the first page survives.

About two or three years ago I submitted a manuscript to a publisher who copyrighted the book without my knowledge, not even submitting to me a proof of the title page. I should like, in my forthcoming book, to have copyright protection if it can be secured without engaging a special train, grabbing the first two copies that leave the press, and hurrying to the Capitol [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Ansrd. Apr. 5 '07"

Jervis Langdon II wrote on Hope-Jones Organ Co., Elmira letterhead to Sam, "looking forward to your arrival here Tuesday with more pleasure than I can express." He gave train times and thought Sam would "enjoy an hour or two" with the organists [MTP].

Albert B. Paine wrote on City Hotel stationery, Sonora, Calif. to Sam.

Goodman and I have just returned from Jackass Hill and Gulch and if we had picked all the year over we could not have had a more beautiful time for a trip. The weather is perfect....We found Billy Gillis at Tuttle town and Steve Gillis at Jackass Hill where mining still pays...Steve Gillis is wonderfully clear-eyed & smart and brimming over with fun. He talked over the old times and laughed until the tears came. But he is in a bad way. Repeated surgical operations have put him to bed, permanently, and he says that his time is short [MTP]. Note: Editorial emphasis on names.

April – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam inscribed an aphorism in Vol. 1 of the Hillcrest Edition of his works to Julia Langdon Barber: “To be good is noble; but to show others how to be good is nobler—and less trouble. / Mark Twain / Mrs. A.L. Barber, May, 1907” [MTP].

Sam also inscribed in a copy of CS to Dorothy Butes: “For Dorothy, / with the affectionate regards of / The Author. / April/07” [MTP]. Note: See Apr. 22 for inscription of CS also to Butes, which suggests this also done that day.

Lady Augusta Gregory inscribed a copy of her book, Cuchulain of Muirthemne: The Story of the Men of the Red Branch of Ulster (1902): “To Mark Twain— / With kind remembrances / from Augusta Gregory— / Apr 1907” [Gribben 277].

Andrew Lang’s article, “Mark Twain,” ran in the Albany Review (London) for April, p. 35-43. Tenney: “A general account of MT’s works, which Lang first encountered while riding on a train with his friend and tutor Benjamin Jowett (later Master of Balliol); Lang ‘shrieked and exploded with laughter’ over ‘The Celebrated Jumping Frog,’ then handed it over to his companion. ‘He read through it with perfect solemnity combined with disapproval, and returned it to me without a word.’ Of MT’s works, TS is the Iliad, HF ‘the Odyssey, of life, not of boy’s life only,’ but ‘I have never read, and never will read,’ CY” [44].

April 1 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The King came back today with Col. Harvey and he seemed tired. These visitings are a little hard on him. After all he says, “His own bed is so much the best one for him and his own atmosphere” [MTP TS 47].

Carl Kelsey for American Academy of Political and Social Sciences wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: See Apr. 5 for Sam’s reply.

Nikolai V. Chaikovsky for Friends of Russian Freedom wrote to thank Sam for the use of his name for their General Committee, and to warn him about Tcherep-Spiridovitch. “He is no more ‘Count’ or ‘General’ than I am” [MTP].

Howard Brubaker for Friends of Russian Freedom wrote to thank Sam for the use of his name for their General Committee [MTP].

Albert Scott Cox wrote to Sam on Ontario Hotel stationery, Chicago, to ask his help in publishing “a long series” about “literary men,” sending Sam drawings to approve [MTP].

Carl Kelsey for the American Academy of Political & Social Science, Phila. wrote to ask Sam if he could enroll him as a member. The Academy addressed such social issues as child labor laws [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “My membership would be purely ornamental & therefore valueless. Have retired from the activities of life. I did not retire until I had been in the harness 40 years & concluded that I had done my share—that I have not retired in reality but I have all the work on my hands that I can attend to & that I mustn’t add any thing to it.”

April 2 Tuesday – Sam took what would be his last trip to Elmira, N.Y. to visit friends and family. He would attend an organ recital at the request of Jervis Langdon II, and speak at Park Church, the following day [Jerome & Wisbey 79-80].

Clara Clemens returned to N.Y.C. from Atlantic City and “stopped briefly” on the way to Katonah, N.Y. to see Jean. She would return on Apr. 6 and leave again on Apr. 8 [Hill 170].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Santa [Clara] came back from Atlantic City—hating it—and started at once for Katonah. Today the King started off for Elmira—a sense-of-duty visit, and he was sorry that he had to make it. He went up to hear the great new organ, and to make his last visit there. He hates the place now and all the people too—except the Stanchfields and Mrs. Crane [MTP TS 47]. Note: Sam intended this to be his last trip to Livy’s hometown, according to this entry. Just whom he disliked is not clear from this entry.

Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam. “We enclose an invitation from Mr. Charles A. Burkhardt, Chairman of the Committee of American Booksellers’ Association, to attend the Seventh Annual Banquet...on May 15th” [MTP]. After April 2 Sam wrote on Harper’s letter: “have accepted an invitation to go South for a while at about that date, & if back in time will be glad to be at that dinner”.

Schoolboy Harold S. Loeb wrote from Phila. to Sam on William Penn Charter School stationery to ask for an autograph. He liked Tom Sawyer best [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam.

Mark Mavourneen; / A week from next Sunday (Apl 14th) I am added in duty at a Royal Legion Memorial service in your city. Harmony also is expected. You, of course, are our first choice as host for the two nights and interesting day we shall be there...If you can take us in, say so. If, to your sorrow, you cannot, say so [MTP]. Note: “Mavourneen” means “My Darling” in Gaelic. Joe and Harmony Twichell visited on Apr. 13 and left on Apr. 15 [IVL TS 52-53].

April 3 Wednesday – In Elmira, N.Y. Sam attended a recital of the unique Robert Hope-Jones organ in Park Church. Jerome & Wisbey write:

It was on April 3, 1907...that this instrument was put through its melodic paces for probably the most critical audience that could be assembled—a group of New York’s leading organists. They came to Elmira in a special car on the Lackawanna....

The 1907 recital was the idea of Jervis Langdon [II] who had an interest in the Hope-Jones concern as well as an interest in the affairs of this church. It was his theory...that if someone of note added tone to the occasion, it might help peddle an organ or two.... The someone he had in mind was his Uncle Sam Clemens, also a Hope-Jones stockholder, along with J. Sloat Fassett, Charles J. Langdon, John B. Stanchfield—to mention a few. Mr. Langdon was right, both about the drawing power of the famous Beecher organ and the magnetism of his distinguished Uncle Sam.

And so, Uncle Sam came to Elmira on April 2 and the newspapers announced that Mark Twain was in town and interviewed him and printed his picture....

....

[Rev.] Max Eastman, who was in the audience, has described how Mark Twain, handsome of face, his white hair like a halo, made his way in his loping gait to this platform...to convulse the organists with a typical Mark Twain speech.

Here’s what he said as reported in The Advertiser...and as recalled by Max Eastman.... The springboard for the speech was a statement in Jervis Langdon’s introduction that his love of music had been inspired in early childhood by hearing Mark Twain sing an old song, “Darby & Joan.”

"Well now, Jervis," began Mark Twain, "I must emphatically deny that statement, for I never sang 'Darby & Joan.' Certainly I never sang it.

"Now, isn't imagination a precious thing? It peoples the earth with all manner of wonders, strange beasts and birds, angels, cherubim and seraphim. And it has to be exercised. No child should be permitted to grow up without exercise for the imagination. It enriches life for him. It makes things wonderful and beautiful. It awakens an interest in church organs and all sorts of things. You can see what it has for Jervis just to sit on my knee and exercise his imagination. And so, now, looking back, I'm glad...I didn't sing.

....

"I must express my astonishment at Jervis," went on Mark Twain, "for taking advantage of this occasion and of you organists to advertise his new company. And I am astonished at my old friend, Mr. Brockway.

"Here he is boldly offering for sale the sites that he has got around here for country residences. Look at Mr. Brockway. You can't find a more benevolent, more kindly face anywhere around. This is plainly the effect of opposition. He has associated with criminals all his life, and look at what it's done for him. If I had associated with criminals I might have such a face, too, but I've always been associated with Christians.

"Now if you know of any man in your locality in need of an occupation, just send them down to Mr. Brockway and he'll fit them out with any trade or business from burglary clear over to political life [79-81]. Note: Zebulon R. Brockway, Elmira Mayor. Sam did not come to Elmira on the special Lackawanna car, but arrived the day before, Apr. 2. Sam had been persuaded to purchase $5,000 worth of stock in the Hope-Jones Organ factory [Ensor, MT & Hope-Jones 6].

Ensor writes:

"By some accounts, Clemens left the church immediately after his talk and returned to the Langdon House, thus missing the rest of the day's activities, including lunch at the City Club, the playing of the organ by several visitors, and a hurried visit to the Hope-Jones factory before the return trip to New York City. After all, Jervis Langdon had not asked that he stay the entire day—only 'an hour or two.' Clemens was on hand, though, for a photograph [see insert] taken in front of the north entrance to the church, in which he, Jervis Langdon, Robert Hope-Jones, Reverend Samuel Eastman, Mayor Brockway, and the visiting organists appear" [MT & Hope-Jones 12]. Note: John Daulby Peake was the organist of the Park Church. It's unlikely that Sam went to Quarry Farm; more likely that Sue Crane went into Charley Langdon's house for the visit.

The Elmira Advertiser, Apr. 4, p.5, ran an "interview" of sorts, "Cub Reporter Has Interview with Mark Twain: Humorist Asks Himself One Question":

For an hour last evening [Apr. 3] the youngest reporter on the Advertiser, first by hints, then by pleadings, and finally by a direct demand sought an assignment to interview Mark Twain.

"What do you wish to ask Mr. Clemens?" inquired the city editor.

"Oh, I don't know; I'll think of something on the way up to General Langdon's," answered the scribe. "Wherever Mark Twain goes, they always interview him, don't they?" and to this argument there was no convincing defense.

So away started the reporter, smiling joyfully at his success in securing the assignment.

"Ask him what he thinks of the new forward movement in Elmira," finally directed the city editor.

"Ask him what progress is being made with the movement toward the monument to Adam," yelled a man at another desk.

"Ask him to write an article on 'How Best to Keep Elmira Going Ahead,'" came another voice from an inner corner of the office.

"Ask Mr. Clemens if he wore his white suit from New York to Elmira," said the telegraph editor, as the reporter, filled with the importance of his mission, finally fled from the office.

But to obtain the much desired interview was found to be quite another matter. Resting after the fatigue of the day, Mr. Clemens was found in the handsome library of General Langdon's Main Street home. Members of the family and Mr. Clemens had just finished dinner and the humorist was now smoking.

To the Advertiser's representative it was explained that Mr. Clemens positively could not be interviewed.

"I have really nothing to say," said the well-known former Elmiran. Then seeing the look of disappointment spreading over the face of his inquisitor, the hero of many a good story appeared to relent.

"Will you really be badly disappointed if you can't get something from me?" asked the veteran author, kindly.

"Yes, I will," came the answer stoutly, but with an uncontrollable quaver.

"Well, then, I'll tell you what we'll do. I have not been 'interviewed' in a long time. In fact, I stopped being interviewed some time ago, but you just ask any questions you wish and answer them for yourself, and we'll see how you manage it. But wait—ask me what I think of the new forward movement in Elmira, and I'll tell you that I think it is one of the most gratifying things I have known of in a long time. I am delighted to observe the greatly changed aspect of things here, and I can to some extent, appreciate the effort it has cost. I think Elmira is the ideal location for our big new organ industry as well as for all the other new concerns you are endeavoring to bring here. I appreciate the honors that all wish to do me, but really, I would rather have my time to myself while here. I am just making a family visit and want to have all my time undisturbed." [Scharnhorst 581-2]. Note: See Ensor for a more complete account of this event and of Mark Twain's participation.

Sam inscribed in a copy of CS to an unidentified person: "A true copy-test: / Mark Twain / April 3/07." [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal (in New York): I went to the opera tonight "Martha" with Mr. Wark. It was a delight to hear the old fashioned music again; and part of it was almost farcical, but that made it the lovelier—the more enjoyable [MTP TS 48]. Note: Charles E. Wark, Clara's accompanist.

Mark G. McElhinney wrote from Ottawa, Canada to Sam, "asking for nothing except the privilege of telling you how keenly I have enjoyed your writings, more especially your great satires" [MTP]. Note: See Apr. 16 for Sam's instructions to Lyon for reply.

Joseph Folle wrote on Office of the Missouri Governor letterhead to Sam, again "anxious" to secure him as a speaker for the Daughters of the Confederacy in St. Louis [MTP].

James A. Renwick wrote receipt for April rent to Sam for $291.67 [MTP].

April 4 Thursday – Sam left Elmira and returned to N.Y.C. this evening. Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King came home from Elmira tonight very tired and depressed, I think" [MTP TS 48].

Edith Elsie Baker for the Actors' Fund of America wrote to Sam, asking for "a donation of a hundred or more copies of some short but effective speech, joke or epigram from Puddenhead Wilson or Huckleberry Finn printed on a card or parchment about 6 by 8 inches"—these from his publisher; they to sell them for 25 cents [MTP].

Frank Sutton wrote from NYC to Sam. "I am pleased to enclose the two prints of the photos that I took on the steamer at Bermuda, which I hope you will accept with my compliments" [MTP].

Mrs. W.G. Moore, President of the Confederate Monument Assoc. putting in her request along with others, for Sam to speak in St. Louis [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answrd Apl. 16 '07"

Edwin Warfield wrote to Miss Lyon, grateful that Sam had accepted his invitation to visit at Annapolis [MTP].

April 5 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to Carl Kelsey's Apr. 1.

My membership would be purely ornamental & therefore valueless. Have retired from the activities of life. I did not retire until I had been in the harness 40 years & concluded that I had done my share—that I have not retired in reality but I have all the work on my hands that I can attend to & that I mustn't add any thing to it [MTP]. Note: Kelsey with Am. Academy of Political and Social Sciences.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today I took Theresa out to Jean. Poor Jean and poor Theresa.

Yes, the King is depressed and tonight at dinner said that he wouldn't go again to Elmira. He couldn't.

We went over to the Gilders this evening and saw Mme. Modjeska and T.A. Janvier and Jeannette Gilder. It was a charming break, for I had such a good chat with J. Gilder, who had on a black velvet masculine gown. The family came up and patted her approvingly, and she said to me, "You know I have a horror of being overdressed." Tom Janvier seems full of vanities and withal a pugnacious creature. Nowadays I want to fight him for he will find flaws in situations or statements. The King was in white and beautiful—though tired—and just as we were leaving I had a word with Mme. Modjeska, who longed to talk with pretty natural gestures, of C.C. and the King. Gabrilowitsch went in just as we were leaving. We talked about Redding—J. Gilder and I [MTP TS 48]. Note: Thomas Allibone Janvier, writer; Helena Modjeska famous actress. The Richard Watson Gilders had a gathering that was rather open every Friday evening. Lyon often went; Sam occasionally.

Daniel Carter Beard wrote from Flushing, NY to Sam on "The Sons of Daniel Boone" letterhead, advising of his organizing Boone clubs, each chapter to keep "an old gun as a tally gun, on the stock of which they cut a notch...I have made a few Top Notches, one of which will be the Roosevelt Notch, one the Dewey Notch, one the Bell Notch, after General Bell, of Kentucky." Beard wanted to use the Mark Twain notch for moral courage [MTP]. Note: After Apr. 5 Sam wrote instructions for Lyon to respond: "Thank him for the honor—but tell him I haven't any suggestions to make."

John Mead Howells wrote to Sam. "We hand you herewith copy of prints of the ¼" scale drawings of your house and of your stable...We enclose a few notes of decisions arrived at at our last meeting with Miss Lyon" [MTP].

Chapters from "My Autobiography—XV" ran in the N.A.R. p.673-82.

April 6 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam inscribed an aphorism in a copy of JA to Helen Fulton: "To / Miss Helen Fulton / with the respectful salutations / of the Author. On the whole it is better to deserve honors & not have them, than to have them & not deserve them. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain/ New York, April 6/07." [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of CS to Mary Thacher Higginson: "To / Mrs. Thomas Wentworth Higginson / with the warm regards of / The Autho / April 6/07." [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of JA to Katy Murray: "To / Katy Murray / from the oldest member of the household / The Author. On the whole it is better to deserve honors & not have them, than to have them & not deserve them. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain/ New York, April 6/07." [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of JA to Catherine Gregory: "To / Catherine Gregory / from her friend / The Author. / On the whole it is better to deserve honors & not have them, than to have them & not deserve them. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain/ April 6/07." [Sotheby's Auction 10 July 2003, Item 161271, Lot 200]. The source notes: "The recipient Catherine Gregory, who emigrated to America from Ireland when fifteen years old, was personal maid to Clemens for approximately five years. Her aunt Miss Catherine [Katy] Leary also worked for Clemens at around the same time, probably as housekeeper."

Clara Clemens returned from Katonah, N.Y. She would leave again in two days [Hill 170].

Spectator ran an anonymous review, “Mark Twain on Christian Science,” p. 536-7. Tenney: “A review of CHRISTIAN SCIENCE, a chaotic book which will tire and confuse readers even though most will accept MT’s conclusions. ‘It appears that criticism of any sort is not Mark Twain’s métier,’ and his argument from internal evidence that Mary Baker Eddy did not write SCIENCE AND HEALTH is weak. ‘Altogether, this book is unfortunate. Uproarious passages in it which have all Mark Twain’s old drollery and delightful extravagance tell us that his great comic powers are unimpaired. They wait to be reapplied successfully’” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Second Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1978 p. 174].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Delightful letter from A.B.P. All my day I spent with C.C. shopping. She came in from Katonah and C.E.W. went around with us. We went to see Mary Lawton as the Firefly in “When we were 21”. She was very handsome and acted very well—but is too big—she dominates the stage [MTP TS 49].

Fritz Engel wrote a one-page letter from Berlin, in German on The Berliner Tageblatt Editorial Feature letterhead. Since they were not in possession of Sam’s exact address, they counted on his popularity for the letter to reach his hands. They requested his opinion of the Tageblatt sent [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answd Apl 17 ’07”; Notes by Holger Kersten, who translated the letter:

Fritz Engel (1867-1935), German journalist, theater critic, and writer of plays and poems. Worked for the Berliner Tageblatt until 1933; starting in 1890, he was editor of Ulk, a humorous supplement to Berliner Tageblatt; a member of several cultural and literary societies; edited books on George Bernard Shaw, Oscar Wilde, Shakespeare as well as a number of lesser known German authors [Source: Archiv Bibliographia Judaica [ed.]. Lexikon deutsch-jüdischer Autoren [Encyclopedia of German-Jewish Authors]. Vol. 6: Dore - Fein. 20 vols. München: Saur, 1998: 366-371.]

Charles J. Langdon sent Sam a draft of $44.34, his one third proportion of the rent due from the Buffalo property for March and April. “It was a very great delight, your recent visit with us here...” [MTP].

Dora Wheeler Keith wrote from NYC to Sam. “I have gotten out the sketch of Mrs. Clemens & Jean from the old house where I have stored it—and I am now putting it in shape, as it is very much out of order. I wonder could you let me have any photographs you have of Mrs. Clemens—to work up the arm & hair from?” [MTP].

April 7 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Gabrilowitsch was here this evening and played for a long time—played that great Schubert Sonata.

Mr. Clemens and I went over to see Miss Harrison in Bklyn. She sent her mobile over for us and the trip was a long and dreary one; for we had to be stopped short at every corner by children who tried to get under the wheels. But Miss H’s home is very nice and her mother is sweet.

...

There are those who like to say that Gabrilowitsch is as great as Paderewski, but when I listen to the former, I find myself criticising, I don’t know what, whereas with Paderewski, I am enthralled with the great spirit of his music & don’t care how it is done [MTP TS 49-50].

Benjamin R. Tucker, publisher and bookseller, NYC wrote to Sam, sending a copy of The Ego and His Own, by Max Steiner. “Whatever you ... may think of the book, I am sure that pp. 395-405 will command themselves to Mark Twain” [MTP]. Note: Sam replied on Apr. 24 [Gribben 662].

April 8 Monday – Sam attended the Manhattan Club for a dinner honoring Charlemagne Tower, now Ambassador to Germany. The banquet was organized by Herman Ridder of the Staats-Zeitung. Several speeches were given, including one by Tower. The New York Times, Apr. 9, p.2, “Tariff Peace Near With The Kaiser” listed Samuel L. Clemens among the guests. On Apr. 10 Sam wrote a note, now judged to be to Tower, concerning a special correspondent for the Century, Robert Haven Schauffler, who was going to Germany. Sam met Tower during his stay in Vienna, then ambassador to Austria.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Santa left and Mr. Clemens went with Mr. Rogers to the Charlemagne Tower Dinner given by the Staatsgeitung Staff.

Mother and I dined at the Brevoort and had champagne for tired mother. She was disappointed to find she could drink 2 glasses and not find affects.

Today Mr. Clemens didn’t dictate, so I sent Hobby to work on checks and things, while he read “Wapping Alice” that darling condemned sketch, to me.

It has got to go into print as Auto — or as something for it is perfectly delightful [MTP TS 50].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

Clara Clemens left again [IVL above]; Hill writes that during this period “She dashed between Tuxedo, Redding, and Fifth Avenue, and from June 29 to July 8 took a trip with Miss Lyon to Halifax, Nova Scotia” [170].

April 9 Tuesday – Minnie Maddern Fiske wrote from NYC to Sam.

May I beg that you will read the enclosed newspaper clippings and letters? They explain themselves. The letter from the man in Oregon was written to Mr. Stillman the President of the American Human[e] Association in Albany. Let me be as brief as possible. A few of us who are interested and hope that a reform of this terrible abuse of animals may be effected, called a meeting the other day in Washington. There is to be an organization devoted to the effort after this reform [MTP]. Note: on the env. of news clippings, (Mar. 10, NY Tribune, Feb. 19, NY Evening Post) Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Relating to the freezing of stock on Western cattle-ranges.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Dr. and Mrs. Rice dined here and after dinner the men played billiards. The Rices wanted to talk Redding house but Mr. Clemens refuses to discuss the subject. He won’t allow himself to be informed or consulted; he will pay the bills and that’s all he will do, but when the house is finished then he will go to it. It astounds his questioning friends to hear him answer, “I don’t know” to every question they ask about the house or the property. He doesn’t want to see it, or hear anything about it. He leaves all the affairs now with John Howells and me, for Santa has passed with approval upon the plans, etc. [MTP TS 50].

Ernest Hendrie wrote from London, England to Miss Lyon, her letter of Mar. 29 in hand. Hendrie referred to an agreement with Elisabeth Marbury about producing “Hadleyburg” on stage [MTP].

John Y. W. MacAlister wrote to advise Sam that the power of attorney requested was being prepared by the lawyers and would be sent on.

By same post I am sending you a sweet thing on polygamy in South Africa. The unctious correctitude of these missionaries with regard to an ancient institution, which was enjoyed—or otherwise,—by the founders of their own religion, is as humorous as anything intentionally funny I ever read, always, of course, excepting our own “copy” [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

April 10 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Ambassaodor Charlemagne Tower:

Dear Excellenz: / This is the young gentleman I spoke to you about night before last—Mr. Robert Haven Schauffler. He will explain to you his “Century”-mission to the Vaterland—a matter which promises to be of interest & value to both Germany & America.

Yours was a most admirable speech & I was glad to hear it; but as to the others—— / Sincerely yours [MTP]. Note: the MTP catalogs this to “unidentified.” See Apr. 8 for the event spoken of here. Robert Haven Schauffler (1879-1964), author, lecturer, and musician, was at this time a special contributor to Century, and Outlook, and Success. He was a Princeton graduate who studied in 1902-3 in Berlin, and an accomplished cellist.

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Harriet E. Whitmore, making tentative plans for them to return the recent visit and come to Hartford for a few days. Sam was waiting to know if he had to keep an engagement made ten days before; if he did not he would accept their invitation [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mr. and Mrs. Wayland and Paddy Maddern [sic Madden] dined here and we had a very good time, though it seemed as if they would never go. Mr. Wayland is fine, and Mrs. W. is a “sport”, and Paddy was pretty and absolutely empty headed. Mr. Clemens wanted to read “Wapping Alice”—but he felt it was too delicately indelicate for Paddy and so we went right up to the billiard room where the men played a gentle game and Mr. Wayland told a story... [MTP TS 51]. Note: story excised here.

Marjorie Bowen wrote from London, England to thank Sam for his letter; she was “very proud to have your name on my book” [MTP].

Joseph B. Gilder for Putnam’s Monthly wrote to ask Sam for sittings for their young artist, W.D. Paddock, the portrait for the magazine [MTP]. Note: After Apr. 10 Sam replied on Gilder’s letter: “I am under engagement now to sit for a portrait. Could not add another. Cannot subject himself to fatigue of another—not strong enough” [MTP].

John Larkin wrote to invite Sam to visit on Wed. night Apr. 17 at 8 p.m. [MTP]. Note: After Apr. 10 he gave instructions on how to answer Larkin’s invite. “Thank them ever so much time is filled up—doesn’t know that he will be able to keep all the engagements” [MTP].

Corrie Scheffer wrote from NYC to ask Sam for his portrait [MTP].

Edward Anthony Spitzka, M.D. wrote to Sam. “Just to take away the taste of my ‘Encephalic Anatomy of the Races’ I send you the enclosed contribution with the hope that the reading of it will assuage the ire aroused by the terminology employed...” [MTP]. Note: see Apr.16 for Sam’s reply.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

April 11 Thursday – William Dean Howells forwarded to Sam a letter he’d rec’d from Brand Whitlock, dated Apr. 8 from Toledo, Ohio, in which he remarked on how Sam’s Autobiographicals in the N.A.R. reminded him of the “delightful afternoon” spent with him at Sewall’s Bridge. See MTHL 2: 825 for details; see also Aug. 9, 1902. Whitlock was a devoted young friend of Howells.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mr. and Mrs. Stanchfield dined here” [MTP TS 51].

Nikolai V. Chaikovsky for Friends of Russian Freedom wrote to Sam, enclosing a clipping from the NY Times, Apr. 7, 1907, “Spiridovitch’s Mission.” Chaikovsky continued to discredit Spiridovitch: “Now in possession of all this information don’t you think that your name has been very improperly and unscrupulously used either by this adventurer himself or by some of his dupes, and I shall not be surprised if he makes still further use of it in the European press unless you put an abrupt and public stop to this proceeding” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answrd Apr. 16, ‘07”

Edith Elsie Baker for the Actors’ Fund of America wrote to Miss Lyon, “delighted to have the day and hours set for his appearance with us” [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II wrote to Sam, issuing another 20% call for stock in the Hope-Jones Organ Co., which in Sam’s case was $1,000 [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

April 12 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Here I am missing the sweetest of all sweet chroniclings—the daily life of the King. But I have been so busy, for there is this house to look after, and the Tuxedo house to think of and plan for, and the Redding house to be after too, and Santa to love and be with when she was here and do for, and Jean to be anxious over and to help if I can and her doctors to see, and the King’s social life to look after—for in these days he is very lonely and reaches out for people—and people he must have, so now I’m planning parties for him.

Later The King has just been up here to ask if I have sent off the Auto installments for the May N.A. Review. But I haven’t yet, for I’m reading them first and “Jim Wolf and the Cats” with extracts from Susy’s Biography make a good number.

Oh, I’m so happy. The King dropped down into my chair with his sweet droop of figure, and I hated to see him walk away again [MTP TS 52].

Frank T. Searight for American Press Humorists, Los Angeles wrote to Sam, inviting him to their annual meeting and advising of a monument at Laramie, Wyo. For the late Bill Nye [MTP]. Note: see Apr. 18 for his reply.

Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam asking his “formal assent to making the usual arrangement with the Tauchnitz Library for the publication of your ‘$30,000 Bequest,’ for an outright payment of Fifty Pounds... the edition not to be sold outside the Continent” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Yes, I am willing, but I have the vague impression that they have always paid a hundred pounds heretofore.”

Review of Reviews wrote to Sam that they were sending the of Home Medical Library, just published, and “If when you have looked over the six volumes you care to send us your opinion, we should very much appreciate it” [MTP]. The Home Medical Library, 6 vols., Ed. Kenelm Winslow and 10 “assisted by’s” (1907); Sam later donated the set to the Mark Twain Library in Redding.

April 13 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: My hands are full and my outlet for superfluous emotions just now is my Boyagians and their “something junk”. They have thrown at me such delightful things. A marvel of a huge strange old candlestick for 50¢. Mother and I have sat around it and wondered what it’s history must be. Mr. and Mrs. Twichell arrived and I’m so tired—so tired. They are nice and dear, but killing hard to entertain, for Mr. Twichell’s deafness is increasing [MTP TS 52].

Louis Blanding wrote on City Hotel, Columbia, Calif. stationery to advise Sam of the death of James (Jim) Norman Gillis. Blanding was an officer of the Ophir Mining Co. at the time Sam was writing for the Enterprise. He noted an enclosed clipping of Gillis’ death but it is not in the file [MTP].

Anna S. Thatcher wrote from East Orange High School, NJ to advise Sam that her German Dept. would put on Sam’s farce, “Meisterschaft” on Apr. 20 for the benefit of their new athletic field. Ticket sales were so “enormous” that they had to put on a second show for Apr. 22 [MTP].

An unidentified person (female?) signed “Sold Down the River,” wrote to Sam from Santa Barbara, Calif. after having read CS. “As regards Mrs. Eddy you must understand that on the 4th July 1901, the spirit of Napoleon 1st of France was allowed to occupy the mortal body of Mrs. Eddy for a period of time which will expire on July 4th 1908—I am not yet sufficiently advanced in Planetary Science to know what will happen about then, but I think Mrs. E. will probably die” [MTP].

April 14 Sunday – With William Dean Howells and Daniel Frohman and 800 children, Sam attended a matinee performance of P&P by The Educational Alliance, Children’s Theatre, N.Y.C. and gave a curtain speech. The New York Times, p.9, “Mark Twain Tells of Being an Actor” reported:

MARK TWAIN TELLS OF BEING AN ACTOR

He Sees His Own “The Prince and the Pauper,” and Relates Story of 22 Years Ago.

STAGE SPEECH CUT SHORT

He Managed to Narrate, However,
That Once He Played Miles Hendon—Sees Educational Alliance Show.

Samuel L. Clemens—“Mark Twain”—in his white suit, sat in the audience that witnessed yesterday afternoon the Educational Alliance’s performance of the play made from his book, “The Prince and the Pauper,” in the theatre of the Alliance Building in East Broadway. Beside him was William Dean Howells, and nearby Daniel Frohman, and Miss Clemens. The rest of the audience, some 800 in all, was composed largely of the children of the neighborhood.

After the second act, the curtain was raised to disclose Mr. Clemens in his white suit. He made a speech in which he referred to his own playing of the role of Miles Hendon, and complimented the Alliance on its theatre. He was about to tell a story which he said had been told by his friend Kate Douglas Wiggin, when from the players, looking out at him from the wings and entrances to the set, applause came. Mr. Clemens looked about, puzzled for a moment, when a young woman, entering by the left upper entrance into full view of the audience, went quite close to him and began to talk to him in an undertone.

“I must apologize,” said Mr. Clemens.

Again the young woman said something in a tone not audible to those in front.

Anxious to Tell His Story.

“I only want to tell this story and then I’ll stop,” Mr. Clemens said to her.

After he had told a story about a Negro who had got a marriage license with the wrong woman’s name on it, and had then decided to marry that woman rather than pay two dollars for a new license “as there wasn’t two dollars’ difference between the two women,” he left the stage and the curtain was lowered.

The speech that had been interrupted began in a vein of family reminiscence.

“I have not enjoyed a play so much, so heartily, and so thoroughly,” said the author, “since I played Miles Hendon twenty-two years ago. I used to play in this piece with my children, who, twenty-two years ago, were little youngsters. One of my daughters was the Prince, and a neighbor’s daughter was the Pauper, and the children of other neighbors played other parts. But we never gave such a performance as we have seen here today. It would have been beyond us.

“My late wife was the dramatist and stage manager. Our coachman was the stage manager, second in command. We used to play it in this simple way, and the one who used to bring in the crown on a cushion—he was a little fellow then—is now a clergyman way up high—six or seven feet high—and growing higher all the time. We played it well, but not as well as you see it here, for you see it done by practically trained professionals.

Never Remembered His Part.

“I was especially interested in the scene which we have just had, for Miles Hendon was my part. I did it as well as a person could who never remembered his part. The children all knew their parts. They did not mind if I did not know mine. I could thread a needle nearly as well as the player did whom you saw today. The words of my part I could supply on the spot. The words of the song that Miles Hendon sang here I did not catch. But I was great in that song.”

....

Theatres Public Education

“If we had forty theaters of this kind in this city of 4,000,000, how they would educate and elevate! We should have a body of educated theater-goers.

“It would make better citizens, honest citizens. One of the best gifts a millionaire could make would be a theater here and a theater there. It would make of you a real Republic, and bring about an educational level.

Then Mr. Clemens went on to quote from a speech of Kate Douglas Wiggin, when he was interrupted.

....

Alice Minnie Herts, in her 1911 reminiscence, recalled the event:

When “The Prince and the Pauper” neared production members of the second, third, and fourth casts who attended rehearsals found the play so interesting that they suggested an invitation be sent to Mr. Clemens, asking him to come and see what had been done to make his story live. An invitation was sent, to which Mr. Clemens responded at once, saying he would come, and asking the privilege of purchasing tickets for several friends, in whose company he attended the first matinee performance.

His deep interest was immediate and unbounded, and, moreover, his broad, sympathetic mind quickly grasped the fact that the play had grown to be only the final expression of the deep, underlying educational principle, which its production adequately enunciated.

After seeing his play he responded enthusiastically to a request of the players to give a special evening performance for his friends, in the hope that some wealthy person or persons might be interested to suitably subsidize this unique and practical method of providing the best means of entertainment for young men, women, and children.

In the hope of playing at this invitation performance, vast numbers of people worked steadily during the summer of 1908 [1907], and the performance was given on the evening of November 19th of that year.

...

At the termination of the first performance of “The Prince and the Pauper” Mr. William Dean Howells, who accompanied Mr. Clemens to see the play, was asked how he enjoyed it. He replied, “The play behind the footlights was admirably well done, yet I believe I enjoyed the play in front quite as well” [60, 72-3].

Zwick also writes about Clemens and the Children’s Theater:

Mark Twain’s involvement with the Children’s Theater is particularly interesting in relation to his deterministic “private philosophy,” What Is Man? In that work and other shorter writings published in his last ten years, Twain described the roles of “inborn disposition,” “environment,” “influences,” and “training.” Although his writings on those topics have been described as pessimistic and fatalistic, Twain only saw the “inborn disposition” as unchangeable. In support of the Children’s Theater, he put his “private philosophy” to work by focusing on the “influences” and “training” that might determine which parts of the “inborn disposition” would become dominant [“Mark Twain and the Children’s Theater” <http://wenku.baidu.com>]. Note: Zwick also states that after seeing this matinee performance, Clemens “offered to organize a benefit performance, and on Nov. 19, 1907, the children performed before an audience of some of the most prominent people of the day.” See Nov. 19 entry.

Alice Minnie Herts wrote on Children’s Theatre Educational Alliance stationery to thank Sam for his visit at their performance of P&P [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Prince & Pauper. Mrs. Sallie for dinner” [MTP TS 53]. Note: “Mrs. Sallie” was Mrs. Collier, perhaps a nickname. See Dec. 5, 1908 Guestbook entry.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

J.M. Diven wrote from Peoria, Ill. to Sam after reading of his billiard skills in the NAR Auto. segment. Diven enclosed a diagram for a trick shot and told how he'd been able to beat experts at it [MTP].

Mary Thacher Higginson (Mrs. Thomas Wentworth Higginson) wrote from Cambridge, Mass. to Sam to thank him for her copy of CS with her name written in it. She was sorry they wouldn't see him in Dublin this summer [MTP].

Julia Langdon Loomis wrote from NYC to thank Sam "for this most delightful and remarkable afternoon. You were very dear to make room for Edward and I. The Hoffmans are very charming and Mr Hoffman is the man of whom I told you a year ago, the young Editor of "Tales," and a person who would much rather meet you for a half-hour's talk than go 'round the world or to Heaven" [MTP].

Note: The National Arbitration and Peace Congress met from Apr. 14 to 17 at Carnegie Hall. Many foreign delegates attended, including C.F. Moberly Bell, manager of the London Times. Sam had expressed little interest in joining world peace movements before (see Vienna entries for Bertha von Suttner, founder of the Austrian Friends of Peace), but he may have attended. No record was found, however; no mention in Miss Lyon's journal. It was during or shortly after this Congress that the New York Times gave a luncheon for Bell that Sam did attend. It was there that he answered Bell's query about when he might return to London with the seed that may have led to his honorary Oxford degree: "When Oxford bestows its degree upon me!" [Hill 166].

April 15 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Twichells go" [MTP TS 53].

Frederick D. Evans wrote from Fort McDowell, Calif. to Sam being bothered by a statement Sam made in "Concerning the Jews" some four years before, he thought in Harper's Magazine. "That you had no prejudice against any nationality—save one. / What is that one?" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Quote the paragraph / no recollection / explain it if he can"

Joseph B. Gilder wrote to Sam for Putnam's Monthly. "I am sorry some one else has a prior claim on you as a 'sitter,' but do not despair of having Mr. Paddock make a portrait of you later on. I have arranged with Mr. Howells to sit for a portrait..." [MTP].

Editors of the N.Y. Times Clemens an invitation to meet C.F. Moberly Bell, Mgr. Of the London Times, at dinner Apr. 15, 8 p.m. [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Larken / Sorry but I haven't a vacant hour between this & the time I go away for the summer on the 3rd of May / ask priv of coming a little late. Should be able to get there in time."

Anna M. Laise Phillips wrote to Sam asking for "a few brief sentences by mail" she might read to her graduating class of the Laise-Phillips School, "young women of wealth and culture" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Calls come every day / Answrd Apr. 24 '07"

April 16 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam gave instructions to Lyon for reply to Mark G. McElhinney's Apr. 3. "Thank him for his letter & say that by & by when his philosophy is printed he will send him a confidential copy" [MTP].

Sam also replied by writing on Dr. Edward Anthondy Spitzka's Apr. 10. "Well, I read the other one, & got some thing out of it for the C. S. book. Glad to have it. Life's getting a little dull lately, & nothing excites me like the encephalic" [MTP].

George Wharton James wrote to Miss Lyon. “Has Gessford sent in the photos to be autographed yet?”[MTP].

Grace S. Paley wrote on Hotel Colonial stationery, NYC, somewhat of a begging letter to Sam. Could she see him and explain her “somewhat peculiar” circumstances? She was glad he wrote “The Dog’s Tale” [MTP].

April 17 Wednesday – Sam’s A.D. of one year later noted the anniversary: “a fortunate day, a golden day, and my heart has never been empty of grandchildren since.” Cooley writes:

The specific reference is to his meeting Dorothy Butes, a fourteen-year-old English girl, whose mother asked if they might briefly visit Mark Twain during their travels in America. Clemens described Dorothy as “simple, sincere, frank and straightforward, as became her time in life” (MTAD, 17 April 1908). Although his correspondence with Dorothy was limited, he considered her, not Gertrude Natkin, his first angelfish [MTAq 33]. Note: editorial emphasis.

The New York Post-Graduate Medical School wrote to invite Sam to dinner at Delmonico’s Apr. 17 at 7 p.m. [MTP]. Note: On or after Apr. 17 Sam replied it wasn’t likely he could attend, but if he found he could at the last moment, he would, but “please don’t reserve a place for me” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Harper & Brothers. “Yes, I am willing, but I have the vague impression that the Tauchnitz Library have always paid a hundred pounds heretofore. Very truly yours...” [MTP].

R.D. Jones wrote from Radium, Greensville Co., Va. to Sam, enclosing a copy of a title page from a book with two engravings, one a picture of Captain Morgan. Jones wanted to know the value of the book [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Column in Daily Sun where all such thing are intelligently answered”

Jervis Langdon II wrote to thank Sam for his remittance of $1,000 on his subscription to the Hope-Jones Organ Co. Jervis wrote two glowing paragraphs of the company’s progress [MTP].

J.A. McM. (not further identified) wrote from West Lynn, Mass. to Sam.

Apropos of your very entertaining little book on ‘English as she is Taught’—the following true story fits in well—A teacher asked her class of boys to tell the difference between herself and a clock. A bright little urchin in the rear row raised his hand and said—‘You have a face and the clock has a face, and you have got hands and the clock has got hands, and—and (reflecting) the clock has got a pendoodleum and you ain’t’ [MTP].

Note: Sam wrote on the letter: “Preserve this. Frame it. It is the second time in 40 years that a stranger has done me a courtesy & charged me nothing for it. Such a thing is usually accompanied by the man’s address, so that I can pay him a hundred dollars’ worth of thank-you for 2 cents’ worth of complimentary attention. SLC”

April 17 after – Mark G. McElhinney wrote an essay “The Broader View,” to Sam on two legal-sized pages, including this paragraph: “It has been stated by Mark Twain, the deepest philosopher America has produced, that ‘The altar-cloth of one age becomes the door-mat of the next’” [MTP].

April 18 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied on Frank T. Searight’s Apr. 12 letter: “never make another land voyage that can be avoided either honorably or otherwise” [MTP].

At 8:15 p.m. Clara Clemens gave a performance in Fredonia, N.Y. The Fredonia Censor advertised her upcoming concert and on Apr. 24 reviewed it:

The Concert by Miss Clara Clemens, contralto, and Miss Marie Nichols, violinist, Charles E. Wark, pianist, had a good sized and very appreciative audience in Normal Chapel last Thursday evening. Miss Clemens has a rich, powerful voice and showed her fine training in her difficult selections, all of which she sang without notes. There was most delight in the violin playing of Miss Nichols. ...

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote on Koy-Lo Co. letterhead, NYC, to advise that he had sent a draft to the London Co. this day to pay the bill for Plasmon. Also that Stanchfield was keeping him posted “about the negotiations between my and Hammond’s lawyers” [MTP].

W.R.E. Collins wrote from NYC to Sam, looking for $10,000 to complete the deed on 7,100 acres of coal land in Penn. Collins offered to pay $600 plus 15% of the profit of the sale [MTP].

April 19 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: We’re just starting for Hartford. It is snowing and the King who is lathering his face for a shave suggests that I get Mrs. Whitmore on the telephone and tell her that he “may be a little late in arriving for he has mislaid one of his snowshoes.” And then such a chuckle of delight he gives as he swabs his face and I go spinning up to the telephone. I wouldn’t dampen one joke of the King’s for worlds, except where Mrs. Rogers is concerned, for she can’t be joked with over a telephone. Dinner tonight at Mrs. Whitmores with Annie Trumbull and Mr. and Mrs. Bissell [MTP TS 53]. Note: George P. Bissell, Hartford banker; see Vol I entries.

Raymond B. Butler, Secretary of the 1908 Johnstown High class wrote to Sam from Johnstown, NY. They wanted a “few words” from him to be read at the planting of a tree on Arbor Day in his honor [MTP].

Minnie Maddern Fiske wrote to Miss Lyon. “Will you tell Mr. Clemens how deeply glad we are that he will allow us to use his name as one of the incorporators of the Society for the Protection of Cattle on the Prairies” [MTP].

Chapters from “My Autobiography—XVI” ran in the N.A.R. p.785-93.

April 20 Saturday – Sam was in Hartford and met with the ladies who were first members of his Saturday Morning Club 30 years before. He wrote of the good time in a letter to Jean on Apr. 22.

Athenaeum printed an anonymous review of CS, p.466-8. Tenney: “Mostly summary; favorable, calls MT ‘one of the sanest, least prejudiced of men’ [43].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP as “Imaginary Interview with the President.”

Otto Heller wrote from St. Louis to Miss Lyon. Heller had been “hired...to make a critical and complete edition (about 20 vols.) of the works of Charles Sealsfield.” Would Sam offer his opinion of Sealsfield? [MTP]. Note: Charles Sealsfield, pseudonym for Karl Anton Postl (1793-1864), Moravian born activist and author who used American settings for romantic novels. Not in Gribben.

John Mead Howells wrote to Sam with the final copy of specifications for the Redding house and stable. Copies had been given to contractors for bidding [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II sent Sam a trustee’s report to former stockholders of J. Langdon & Co, from Apr 1, 1906 to Apr. 1, 1907, showing a balance on hand of $12,212.66, “the funds on hand to be kept safely invested to provide income out of which to pay taxes and other charges on the property” [MTP].

April 21 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “We left Hartford this morning, came to the station in Billy Whitmore’s mobile, and then as we couldn’t get a parlor car, we sat in the ordinary coach and the King talked every moment” [MTP TS 53].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Lillie d'Angelo Bergh wrote for Woman's Press Club of NYC to ask Sam "some opinions" in a letter she enclosed (not in file) [MTP].

April 22 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam inscribed a copy of JA to Dorothy Butes: "To Dorothy—/ with the affectionate regards of / The Author. On the whole it is better to deserve honors & not have them, than have them & not deserve them. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain/ April 22/07 [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

I've been to Hartford, Jean dear, to help the other girls celebrate the 30th anniversary of the Saturday Morning Club. I helped them organize it 30 years ago, & for this service was made a member; & to this day I am the only male member it has ever had.

These girls were 18 & 20 years old, in that ancient day, but they are 50 & past, now, & the signs of age are upon them; but they are still young in their hearts. We had a rousing time, a happy time, a memorable time.

I am still rusty & tired from the railway journey, & am resting-up in bed & getting ready for the yacht-voyage to Jamestown. We sail Wednesday afternoon, & shall be gone several days.

I have appointments in the first fortnight of May for Tuxedo—4th; Actor's Fund Fair, New York—6th & 8th; leave for Annapolis 9th—return in 5 days. Then Tuxedo & REST.

I hope you are having good times, dear Jean, & that I shall have a longer visit with you next time. That other visit does not count—it was nothing but a glimpse.

Goodbye, dear heart—& many hugs & kisses [MTP].

W.R.E. Collins wrote to advise Sam that his "two associates did not to the hour keep their agreement to pay a small instalment on the coal land...and I must rearrange matters and make a new deal..." Collins was trying to get Clemens to loan $10,000; see Apr. 18 from Collins [MTP].

Helen Johnson (Mrs. A.C. Johnson) wrote from Glen Falls, NY to assure Sam she didn't wish financial help, but wanted to see him—"not an interviewer, nor a reporter—just a humorist" [MTP].

Mrs. Arthur J. Tenney wrote a fan letter to Sam from Branford, Conn., She enclosed a photo of their library. She noted Sam had spent time in Branford "a number of years ago" [MTP]. Note: See Apr. 24 for Lyon's reply.

Sam G. Moore wrote a long, long letter to Sam from Portsmouth, Ohio about old days on the Mississippi. Moore had been re-reading LM, and "had to write." He steered for Horace Bixby in Sept. 1853. "Bixby learned the river from Cairo to St. Louis with my brother Capt Enos Moore[,] they were on the Crescent then..." [MTP]. Note: There are no Lyon or SLC notations on the letter and no env. in file.

Robert H. Rice wrote to Sam on Union Library Assoc., Oberlin College letterhead, Oberlin, Ohio. Would Sam favor them with a lecture? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd Apr. 27 '07"

Howard S. Ruddy for American Press Humorists wrote to Sam on the Literary Department of The Rochester Herald (NY) stationery to invite him to the next convention in Los Angeles on Sept. 15 [MTP].

William T. Shannonhouse wrote to ask Sam for a lecture in Norfolk, Va. to raise funds for the Pickett-Buchanan Camp No. 9, Virginia Division, United Sons of Confederate Veterans [MTP].

April 23 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King has new and gaudy maxim: "Prostitution is the thief of time" [MTP TS 53].

Edith Elsie Baker for the Actors' Fund of America wrote to "gratefully acknowledge Sam's $10 donation and 3 volumes of HF for their fair [MTP].

Aaron Watson for the Savage Club, London wrote to thank Sam "very heartily" for permitting, through MacAlister "to use your article on your first visit to London, and your relations to the Savage Club, in my forthcoming book on that Club, which is to be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin" [MTP]. Note: see July 19 from T. Fisher Unwin.

April 24 Wednesday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to Mrs. Arthur J. Tenney's Apr. 22. "Thanks for photo is so overdriven in these days if the enclosed is of use glad to enclose it" [MTP].

Sam also dictated a reply to the Apr. 7 from Benjamin R. Tucker, but his response is on the back of Tucker's letter in Josephine Hobby's shorthand, and is undecipherable [Gribben 662].

In the afternoon Sam left with H.H. Rogers, Harry Rogers, Urban H. Broughton, William Evarts Benjamin and Charles Lancaster on the Kanawha bound for Jamestown, Va. about 300 miles as the crow flies. They were to attend the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition of 1907 (300 years). The fair was held at what is now the Norfolk Naval Base, and drew more than 1.2 million visitors. It opened on April 26, 1907. "Some called it a world's fair, other a great international naval, industrial and marine exposition of American Imperialism." Award medals of various designs were struck, including some by Tiffany & Co. See insert of award medal.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King started for Jamestown this 1:30 in Mr. Rogers's yacht to go down for the naval review. Mr. Broughton, Mr. Benjamin, Mr. Lancaster, Harry Rogers were the other 4 to make up the six. It is so lonely, lonely again. But lots to do [MTP TS 54]. Note: Broughton, and Benjamin were sons-in-laws of H.H. Rogers; Charles Lancaster was an old friend of Rogers'.

Thomas Arkle Clark (b.1862) Dean of men, wrote on University of Illinois stationery to inquire about a possible lecture there by Clemens next year [MTP].

Alice Minnie Herts wrote on The Educational Alliance letterhead, NYC to ask Sam if he would request Andrew Carnegie "to see your play at the Educational Alliance on Sunday next, Apr. 28 or the following Sunday?" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Mr Clemens in Norfolk"

Jeannette Pozter wrote for Woman's Home Companion to Sam, after seeing the children's play of P&P at the Educational Alliance. She wanted to write an article about it and asked where she could get a copy of the play to quote from [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answr'd Apr. 27, '07"

April 25 Thursday – Sam was on the Kanawha bound for Jamestown, Va. According to Lyon's journal entry below, he sent a telegram upon arrival—if 17 hours from 1:30 p.m. Apr. 24, the arrival was approx. . 7 a.m.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Telegram that the King had swift good passage. 17 hours" [MTP TS 54]. Note: telegram not extant.

A.K. Wright, Minister, Church of Christ, San Jacinto, Calif. wrote to Sam, enclosing a newspaper clipping of his poem, "The Desert" [MTP].

April 26 Friday – Sam was in Old Point Comfort, Va. In his May 2 to Clara, Sam wrote of the first day that it was “sunny and bright.” After that the fog rolled in.

“But the first day was very gay, & really paid for the excursion. I blundered into the Virginia building, thinking it was the Maryland one; but it was all right: the Governor was holding a reception & I took it off his hands. It gave him a rest & he was thankful. I knew him & his wife before.”

Notes: Claude Augustus Swanson (1862–1939) served as governor of Virginia from 1906 to 1910. The site chosen for the Exposition on a mile-long frontage at Sewell's Point near the mouth of Hampton Roads, was about 30 miles from the original Jamestown location. Theodore Roosevelt and Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany were among the distinguished visitors.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mary Lawton came in today and in relating her experiences said that the men in the theatrical profession have no respect for her because she is a virtuous woman. When her name is mentioned they say, “Oh, Miss Lawton, she—!” and shrug their shoulders in derision. She says there must be something wrong with her, because she cannot fall in love with the men who have made advances to her. And you feel that she has never had a lover, because she kisses women on the mouth. Men, she says, do not fall in love with her; but just regard her as they would a prize cow, or other prize winning creature, or as legitimate prey, but she cannot take the necessary interest in them. She has no aptitude for intrigue [MTP TS 54].

April 27 Saturday – Sam was in the Fort Monroe, Va. area after seeing the Jamestown Exposition, having a “foggy & gashly time!” In his May 2 to Clara he wrote that after the first day:

The others deserted, & fled home by rail; but Broughton & I stuck it out—being resolved that we would never trust ourselves to the hated rail. We lay at anchor day after day smothered in white fog, & read, talked, smoked, yawned, gaped, & cursed. (This was at Old Point Comfort). Once we went ashore & spent a couple of hours with the officers in Fortress Monroe; & once we went ashore to do some shopping, & in the hotel I saw the most beautiful girl you can imagine; but I was so stupefied by the fog that I couldn't think of anything to say to her, so I didn't speak to her at all. I am still regretting it [Note: the NY Times article of May 4 gave Monday (Apr. 29) as the day Rogers and son left on the train].

Isabel Lyon's journal: “Mrs. Rosenfieldt's letter. Today's Southern paper tells that a big excursion boat ran close to Kanahwa [sic] knowing the King was on board, and nearly swamping her” [MTP TS 54]. Note: she likely is referring to Mrs. Sidney Rosenfeld, letter not extant. See May 1 entry.

T.H. Tregellas wrote from Victoria, Australia to Sam. He'd been disappointed when he saw Mark Twain in Bendigo but had kept reading all his works. Recently, an article of Twain's “Golden Boyhood” which ran in the Melbourne Argus, caused him to break down. His wife urged him to write [MTP].

E.B. Goodall wrote in a nearly illegible hand from Portsmouth, N.H. to comment on Sam's CS [MTP].

Florence Duncan Jones wrote from NY wanting to know if Sam was in the City so she could send him some literary work of a nature he'd be interested in [MTP].

April 28 Sunday – Sam was in the Fort Monroe, Va. area.

Isabel Lyon's journal: “Mrs. Baker came—stricken. Thompson came—pastels. I'm not well” [MTP TS 54].

Dorothy Butes wrote from the Hotel Majestic (NY?) to thank Sam for his “lovely book” JA. She’d been “chuckling over CS and his criticism of Mrs. Eddy’s English.” She offered an anecdote from her Latin class about a classmate, Lorraine, who she described as “about a hundred and sixty pounds, who tries to be kittenish” [MTP].

Leonna Berry Hartley (Mrs. N. Hartley) wrote from Garden City, Long Island to Sam. She wrote that “of course you remember ‘Leonna Berry,’ the ‘Berry’ being now a thing of the past...” she had two daughters she would bring to the Actors’ Fair since she’d read Clemens would be there May 8 [MTP].

April 29 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “No news from the King, and I’m down with something. Pains almost unendurable and a temperature” [MTP TS 54-55].

In Fort Monroe, Va., Sam telegraphed Isabel Lyon: “Delayed indefinitely by fog. Clemens” [MTP]. Note: Lyon mentions this the following day.

H.H. Rogers and son Harry Rogers left the Kanawha and returned to N.Y. by rail [NY Times May 4, p.1, “Twain and Yacht Disappear at Sea”].

Clemens’ A.D. for this day included: Dr Henry Van Dyke as a Man and as a Fisherman [MTP: Autodict4 pdf].

Arnold Daly wrote on Lyceum Theatre NYC letterhead to ask if Sam had “personally made the adaptation or translation of an Agricultural Editor, for which I have the contracts with Mr. Timmory and yourself?” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answd. Told him Mr. Clemens is away”

Alston Hamilton for the Fort Monroe Club sent an engraved permission for Sam to use the privileges of their club for 30 days [MTP].

Robert Reid wrote before Apr. 19 to announce that he would be married Apr. 29 to Elizabeth Reeves. If Sam could write “a little word to her she’d think it a lovely wedding present” [MTP]. Note: Reid’s penmanship was quite challenged.

Corrie Scheffer wrote from NYC to thank Sam for his photo and an autographed book [MTP].

April 30 Tuesday – On the yacht Kanawha in Old Point Comfort, Virginia, Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka asking him to send a green cloth set of his books to H.H. Rogers to the yacht at the N.Y.C. pier, foot of E. 23 [MTP]. Note: the NY Times article of May 4, p.1, included a bit about this day:

For two or three days following the opening of the Jamestown Exposition, Mark Twain was marooned off Old Point. On Tuesday he was moving around the Hotel Chamberlain, complaining that his fellow-travelers had gone away and that the fog off the capes had delayed the departure of the Kanawha.

“Here I am, all, all alone on H. H. Rogers’s yacht anchored out there, and not a saint to look down in pity. Rogers has gone home, his son Harry has gone, and the only remaining guest that came down to this Exposition opening says he is going back to New York tonight, but I cannot go.

Mr. Clemens then explained that in the face of the fog that had enveloped the capes for at least two days the yacht’s navigator declined to risk the passage. The humorist himself then declared that the situation was rendered acute by his own peculiar brand of obstinacy. “I simply will not go back by train,” he remarked.

“I declare that I feel like the ‘Man Without a Country.’ I pine for Fifth Avenue and the dear old coaches, to say nothing of the arch in Washington Square.” [Note: see also the May 1, p. 7 article in the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch in Scharnhorst, p. 585].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Tonsilitis. Telegram from the King “Detained indefinitely by fog.” And the papers tell of his loneliness with Mr. Broughton. All the other Rogerses came home by train” [MTP TS 55].

Julia Langdon Barber (Mrs. A.L. Barber) wrote a mourning border card to thank Sam for autographing her set of his books recently purchased from Harpers, “but my disappointment was of the keenest that you did not note in the Innocents Abroad, make mention of the fact that we were fellow voyagers in the old Quaker City” [MTP]. Note: on the Quaker City, she was Miss Julia L. Langdon, no relation to Charles, was among those who joined the QC at Gibraltar [MTL 2: 385].

Mary M. Keller wrote from Hartford, Conn. to ask Sam if he would meet her childhood friend while in Annapolis, “a charming Scotch woman named Worthington” [MTP].

May – Edward A. Kimball’s article, “Mark Twain, Mrs. Eddy, and Christian Science,” ran in Cosmopolitan, p. 35-41. Tenney: “A reply to MT’s Christian Science by ‘a prominent Christian Science author’” [44].

Simboli Raffaele’s article, “Mark Twain and his Double,” ran in the Ladies’ Home Journal, p.59. Tenney: “While living in Florence MT was often mistaken for Professor Borzi (later director of the Botanical Gardens at Palermo). In turn, when Borzi visited Sweden and Norway in 1899 he was widely mistaken for MT and ‘even Ibsen fell into the error and came to call on me,’ said Borzi” [44]. See 1906 year entry.

Ralph W. Ashcroft sent a telegram to Miss Lyon, c/o Sam, Tuxedo Park. “SAILING FOR NEW BEDFORD PRESENTLY WE INSPECTED GIANT LUSITANIA THIS AFTERNOON” [MTP]. Note in file: “Probably late May 1907 / Ashcroft accompanied SLC to London –Oxford trip. They sailed on Minneapolis 8 June 1907”

May 1 Wednesday – At 4 a.m. the Kanawha got underway back to New York through the clearing fog [Baltimore Sun May 10, “Mark Twain in Clover” p.14]. Note: because the yacht could not be seen leaving from shore, it was thought for a day or more that it was lost at sea.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “All day in bed. All day anxious about the King, for the Sun’s story of excessive fog makes travel dangerous. These days mother has been unspeakably sweet. But oh, we are all growing old—old! She sat on my bed tonight when Nellie came up to say “a telephone message says that Mr. Clemens will be here inside of an hour” [MTP TS 55].

Though Sam was not in New York, the lease which Sam signed on Mar. 5 for William Voss’ house in Tuxedo Park began this day [Mar. 5 to Jean].

]

The Kanawha made New York a few minutes past 9 p.m. [Scharnhorst, 587n2].

Meanwhile, in New York, Mrs. Sidney Rosenfeld, an offended Christian Science member who was also head of the Century Theatre Club, raised a stink about Mark Twain being invited to supply signed books for their booth at the upcoming Actors’ Fair. The New York Times jumped on the story, p.2, “Mark Twain Fuss in Actors’ Fair.” Either Twain was out or she would resign from the club. Daniel Frohman was consulted with the result being the transfer of Sam to the Players Club booth. The membership was in favor of Mrs. Rosenfeld resigning.

Arthur McEwan died suddenly from heart disease in Bermuda. At the time McEwan was the chief editorial writer for the New York American. He was 56. After an English course at U.C. Berkeley, McEwan became a journalist, first in Virginia City, Va. in the 1870s, and later in San Francisco [NY Times, May 2, 1907, p. 11]. Note: see entries in Vol. II.

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam. “Mr. Colwell wants to know if he can have another extension on his rights for A YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR’S COURT. He also asked if Sam could go over the Agricultural Editor piece since Arnold Daly thought it needed work [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “No—Mr Clemens wont have a thing to do with it. Frohman says so”

John T. Mitchell wrote to Sam on Missouri Presbyterian Assembly and Summer School letterhead. Mitchell invited Clemens to join them any time from July 17 to Aug 4 and take Christian Science as a subject for a lecture [MTP].

Olivia Vickers wrote from Dallas, Tex. to defend Christian Science [MTP].

May 2 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Edith Elsie Baker about the Actors’ Fund Fair flap:

I am back from the South, & find your letter which has given me deep & unqualified pleasure.

And pain, too! But on your account, not on mine. I am very very sorry, most sincerely sorry, that an incident has troubled & distressed you which has drenched my jaded spirit with the refreshing waters of a pure delight. Cheer up! & be glad, & grateful, & happy, & enjoy your president’s [Mrs. Sidney Rosenfeld] attitude at its full value: as the most innocently & impressively & comprehensively humorous thing that has been imagined by a mere uninspired human being these many, many, many centuries! Ah, I wish I could be as funny as that.

Miss Lyon knew quite well that the episode would only entertain me, & would cost me not a pang; & if she didn’t tell you that, she needs disciplining.

Now you must not retire from the field. Daniel Frohman & I are unanimously of that opinion. It is not for victors to retire under fire: that is for the defeated, & you have not been defeated.

Yours in unembarrassed sincerity [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Clara now at the Parker House in Boston.

O dear Ashcat, but we did have a foggy & gashly time!—after the first day of the fair, which was sunny & bright. [see Apr. 26 & 27 for this section of the letter, which described his activities at the Exposition].

I am glad you are having such a lovely time, Spiderchen; aunt Sue says you sang superbly at Elmira, & we have heard that you carried your Utica house by storm. I suppose it is because you are Mark Twain’s daughter. But anyway it is splendid, & I am glad.

Miss Lyon is ill, & there is no one to fight the reporters. She thinks she can go to Tuxedo Saturday—and I’ve got to go. I hope I can be there all the time of your visit, but maybe I’ll be gone South. Let us see you as soon as we can, dearheart. With lots of love, ... [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “I moved my couch over by the telephone and the King came up and talked things for 2 hours” [MTP TS 55].

Whitelaw Reid was at this time the American Ambassador to the Court of St. James. Oxford University’s Chancellor, Lord Curzon of Kedelston (George Nathaniel Curzon 1859-1925), wrote to Reid on this date that it was the “customary function” to confer “honorary degrees on distinguished men” and that he wished to confer such an honor on Samuel L. Clemens, and Thomas A. Edison among others [MTFWE 4]. Note: Reid also was given an honorary degree, and would cable Sam on May 3. Edison would be unable to attend.

Members of the Actors’ Fund Fair adopted a resolution of apology to Clemens, in the Mrs. Sidney Rosenfeld matter, expressing “shame that Christian Science and Mark Twain had come into collision over the fair” [NY Times, May 2, p.11, “Warm Apologies to Mark Twain”]. Note: See May 1 entry on the squabble.

H. Craper wrote from England to Sam. His wife had asked and rec'd Sam's letter and photo, and when she presented them to him it was "one of the greatest & most pleasant surprises of my lifetime" [MTP].

May 3 Friday – In London Whitelaw Reid sent a momentous cable to Sam in care of Harper & Brothers, N.Y. It was received in New York at 2:40 p.m.

"OXFORD UNIVERSITY WOULD CONFER DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF LETTERS ON YOU ON JUNE 26TH BUT PERSONAL PRESENCE NECESSARY CABLE ME WHETHER YOU CAN COME" [MTFWE 4]. Note: in his May 23 A.D. Sam reflected on the cablegram and his acceptance "without any waste of time." See MTFWE p.4-5 for the full text. Insert Cable: [Baetzholt 243].

The Anglo-American Telegraph Company
INCORPORATED, 1895.
FOUR DIRECT CABLE ROUTES BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND EUROPE.
CABLEGRAM RECEIVED AT 445 BROOME ST. (Silk Exchange Building), MAY 3-1907 190
PLACE FROM NO. Messages NO. of Words Received by Time Received
Q GOVT LONDON 28 33 8U 240PM M
TO S L CLEMENS CARE HARPER BROTHERS
I will come with greatest pleasure NY
OXFORD UNIVERSITY WOULD CONFER DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF LETTERS ON YOU ON JUNE 26TH BUT PERSONAL PRESENCE NECESSARY
CABLE ME WHETHER YOU CAN COME
WHITELAW REID

Sam then cabled Reid and also wrote a note. His cable:

"I WILL COME WITH GREATEST PLEASURE" [MTP].

His note to Reid:

"Recognition by Oxford is praise from St. Hubert indeed, & your cablegram of today was very welcome, I answered it by cable, & shall follow in person in time to reach England a safe day or two before the named day, the 26th of June" [MTP]. Note: See May 23 for Sam's reaction written on that day.

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to C.F. Moberly Bell, editor of the London Times:

"Dear Mr. Bell: / Your hand is in it! & you have my best thanks. Although I wouldn't cross an ocean again for the price of the ship that carried me, I am glad to do it for an Oxford degree. I shall plan to sail for England a shade before the middle of June, so that I can have a few days in London before the 26th" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Adele Durant Holt of the Century Theatre Club.

I thank the committee heartily for their invitation, just received, & would accept it, but that I have already accepted the invitation of the Players.

It grieves me that the Club should think an apology due me, for indeed it is not so. They offered me a courtesy, & I remember it & appreciate it; but they have not offered me a discourtesy, nor anything resembling it.

It is true that an attempt (not authorized by the Club) was made to hurt my feelings, but it did not have that effect. When I have been doing wrong, my feelings are sensitive, but when I have not been doing wrong, attacks upon them find them almost abnormally torpid.[MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "A cablegram from Whitelaw Reid invites the King to go to Oxford for the degree of L.L. D. to be there on June 26th and the King accepts. It is too splendid. 'Col. Harvey is the mensch to go' the King says" [MTP TS 55].

What with all the fog in Norfolk, Virginia, an erroneous report came datelined May 3 that Mark Twain and the yacht Kanawha were missing

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam asking if he could buy copies of “What is Man?” for $2 each from DeVinne, as he was getting requests for them. Also, was it all right to give a book to John Quincy Adams, whom he didn’t know [MTP].

Robert S. Hart, Secretary for Governor of Maryland, Edwin Warfield wrote to advise Sam of some details about his forthcoming trip to Annapolis [MTP].

Chapters from “My Autobiography—XVII” ran in the N.A.R. p.1-12.

May 4 Saturday – Sam moved into the William Voss house in Tuxedo Park, N.Y. [Hill 166]; his lease had begun on May 1. He gave a talk or a reading at a tea for the Tuxedo Club in his honor. He had forecasted the event in his Apr. 22 to Jean. Fatout lists the talk but gives no particulars [MT Speaking 676]. Note: see May 5 NYT article. Lyon’s entry below reveals the tea was held at Mrs. Harry Rogers’ house in Tuxedo.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Here, 4 days late, we are able to go to Tuxedo and this afternoon there was a very nice reception in Mrs. Harry Rogers’s house. It was delightful to see the King and Mrs. Harry” [MTP TS 55].

About this day Sam sent a telegram to John Japp, Lord Mayor of Liverpool, England: “I THANK YOUR LORDSHIP SINCERELY BUT FIND TO MY REGRET MY SHORT STAY ALL OCCUPIED / CLEMENS” [MTP].

Did Sam also send a telegram to Milton Goodkind? See telegram in body of the May 5 Times article below [MTP].

Vivian Burnett wrote to Sam with plans “to publish a real children’s magazine with Frances Hodgson Burnett as editor.” Such a magazine would want Mark Twain to contribute, she argued, so she’d like the opportunity to talk with him [MTP]. Note: Frances Eliza Hodgson Burnett (1849-1924), English playwright and author, best known for her children’s stories, especially The Secret Garden, A Little Princess, and Little Lord Fauntleroy. See Gribben p.114.

May 5 Sunday – The NY Times included a telegram supposedly sent on May 4 by Sam to Milton Goodkind in a spoof article about Sam being lost at sea:

MARK TWAIN INVESTIGATING,

And If the Report That He’s Lost at Sea is So, He’ll Let the Public Know.

Mark Twain was hard ashore and pounding heavily on the front lawn of the Tuxedo Club last night. The people of Norfolk, Va., who had taken more interest in him than they had in the big naval review at the opening of Jamestown Exposition, were informed of the fact and were breathing easily again.

Mr. Clemens, given up for lost by the host of friends he made in Norfolk on his visit to that city with H. H. Rogers aboard the latter’s yacht, Kanawha, will be the hero of that Virginia community should he ever return there. The fact that the yacht slipped out of Hampton Roads during a fog and started north caused the report to spread through Virginia that the Kanawha had not been reported as having passed the Capes safely, and the friends of the humorist in the South feared mightily for his life. And all the time Mr. Clemens was safe in his rooms in Fifth Avenue.

Editor Harvey Wilson of The Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch sat up all night with an “extra” ready and with his heart in his mouth. He is an old-time admirer of Mark and has “read after him,” as they say in Virginia, these many years. In the Virginia Club in Norfolk, and in the Westmoreland in Richmond, the negro servants were kept busy rushing messages to the telegraph offices, while the most expert of the julepers [sic] of the Southland worked their arms off cracking ice and plucking the tender leaves of the fragrant herb in the preparation of a certain famous concoction guaranteed to dispel sorrow and lighten hearts that are heavy.

Mr. Clemens heard all this yesterday, but took it calmly.

"You can assure my Virginia friends," said he, "that I will make an exhaustive investigation of this report that I have been lost at sea. If there is any foundation for the report, I will at once apprise the anxious public. I sincerely hope that there is no foundation for the report, and I also hope that judgment will be suspended until I ascertain the true state of affairs."

To his friend, Milt. Goodkind of 121 West Forty-second Street, Mr. Clemens sent the following telegram as soon as he had read a report from Norfolk telling of the fear there that he was lost on the bosom of the briny deep:

Latitude 43 degrees 5 hours and 41 seconds west by southeast of Central Park West. Kanawha heading toward nowhere; terrific cyclone raging; all the houses down in our vicinity; trees and telegraph poles interfering with our progress; vessel leaking badly; passed a school of whales and several elephants at dawn. Fire Department badly crippled; extension ladder out of commission; water very low; two of our crew lost overboard last evening. Please send airship and some bock beer at once; crew starving.

Deny report that I am dodging Mrs. Eddy or Actor's Fund Fair. Ship sinking; send financial relief at once. MARK TWAIN.

Being slightly puzzled by the telegram and the dispatch from Norfolk, Mr. Goodkind in the afternoon sent to the newspapers a notice offering a reward of $50 for the capture of Mark Twain, alive, drowned, or half drowned. But the humorist had taken refuge at Tuxedo and his rescue from the cruel clutches of the sea was being celebrated there.

Note: Milt Goodkind's essay entitled, "All Around Newspaper and Advertising Man" (included in his book Illustrated East Liverpool, Ohio: The Pottery Center of America (1899)), shows him to be a devout and outspoken disciple of the power of advertising, and likely well known as such. Sam likely chose Milt for this telegram in order to achieve the maximum amount of advertising. See prior Goodkind entries. See also the New York American, May 5, p. 6 article "Twain Hesitates to Admit He's Dead" in Scharnhorst, p. 586, and the New York World article, same date, p. 9 " 'I'm Not Lost at Sea,' Says Twain," p. 587.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King likes this house [Tuxedo]. This morning he walked over to see Mrs. Harry and this afternoon he called on Dr. Rushmore" [MTP TS 56]. Note: Edward C. Rushmore.

Robert H. Callaghan wrote to Sam from Hebron, Ohio enclosing a dollar and a cryptic note "I will be sending you a dollar" [MTP]. Note: After May 5 Sam replied. "I thank you for the impulse that moved you to send me the dollar, but as it was not owing to me, I return it." The 1888 minutes of the annual conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Ohio Conference, lists Robert H. Callaghan as a "local preacher" elected deacon.

George Nathaniel Curzon wrote to Sam. "It gives me the greatest pleasure to learn from my friend Mr. Whitelaw Reid that you are willing to accept my invitation, and that I shall have the honour of conferring upon you the Hon. Degree of D. Litt. at the ceremony of my installation as Chancellor of Oxford University on June 26" [MTP].

Miss Minna D. Robie wrote from Rush City, Minn. to Sam, bemoaning the "dreary little village" at that time of the year, freezing, gale winds, a foot of snow, etc. Discussions of books led to FE and her question for Clemens—what was the correct pronunciation of Taj as in Taj Mahal? [MTP]. At the top of the letter Sam wrote: "Tell her 'todg.' SLC"

May 6 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) who had sent a note [not extant] with Harry Rogers.

To the Shah-in-Shah of Nieces— / Greeting & salutation:

Oh dear me! that I should have this ill luck—the only member of the family that can't be there. For I shall be in Maryland then, & shan't get back to Tuxedo until next Monday or Tuesday. I am sorry & disappointed; for I was counting on the pleasure of being present. Yes, & I was going to scrape acquaintance with Mr. Lackland on the basis of the fact that I knew a Lackland in St Louis 47 years ago—in the steamboat trade. Not that I knew him well, but only as a subordinate knows a superior, his rank being so much higher than mine as to forbid a nearer connection. I tell you, Etiquette was strict out there, Mary dear! Do please convey for me my cordial congratulations to the bride & groom.

When you are out driving, won't you call at my house or get a novel (published by McClure) by Marjorie Bowen, & read a part or all of it & tell me what you think of it? Please. I don't remember its name, but it is the only one there by M. B. You can read it without prejudice or predilection, but I couldn't, because it is dedicated to me. It is based on the Massacre of Glencoe, but it mercifully leaves out (or but gently touches) the main horrors. I think that is greatly to the girl's credit, for there would naturally be a strong temptation to do the other thing.

The Fair started well, this afternoon, & I am sure it is going to be handsomely successful. It would have interested you, & I was sorry you were not there.

If you will be so good, dear madam, as to present my humble service to your estimable daughter, & say that the tenderness which I—but of this anon. / Affectionately [MTP]. Note: The Master of Stair (1907) by Marjorie Bowen (pseud. for Gabrielle Margaret Vere Long). The individual Lackland he referred to here is not further identified; Sam served on the Rufus J. Lackland in either 1857 or 1859. See July 11, 1857 entry, Vol. I.

The NY Tribune, p. 8, "Money Flows to Fund" reported on Mark Twain's efforts for the actors' fund:

Actors' Benefit Defies Weather—President Pushes Button.

Everything was fair yesterday [May 6] at the Metropolitan Opera House when President Roosevelt, in Washington, touched a little gold button and set the chimes ringing the start of the biggest benefit ever planned for the Actors' Fund in a town noted for such fairs. Everybody who is anybody in the theatrical profession and who was in New York and could get away was there, to give the show a proper send-off.

There was only one absentee, and that was Mrs. Sydney Rosenfeld. Needless to say, Mark Twain was there, and so were his books, in the Century Theatre Club booth. Despite the late unpleasantness, Mark showed no hard feelings and won the heartiest kind of applause when he said, in speaking of the objects of the fair, that charity was a religion, broad enough for all to stand on.

The New York Times, p 5 also reported on the Fair:

ACTORS' FUND FAIR OPENS WITH VIM

Roosevelt Presses the Button and Then Mark Twain Makes a Speech.

SEEK TO RAISE $250,000

First Two Tickets Bring $1,500—Actresses Preside Over Many Attractive Booths.

At exactly 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon President Roosevelt, in Washington, pressed a button; the lights of the Metropolitan Opera House here, which had been extinguished, flashed on again; cannon boomed; the band played; Mark Twain made a speech; and the Actors' Fund Fair was declared open to the public. Even while the building was reverberating with the report of the canon a shower of tiny American flags fluttered from the roof down into the village street of Stratford-on-Avon, the central highway of the bazaar.

As soon as the sound of the cannonade had died away, the officers of the fund filed on to the platform at the western end of the Opera House. Daniel Frohman, President of the fund, made the opening address.

“Nothing is more appropriate than that we should begin with the playing of ‘The Star-Spangled Banner,’” said Mr. Frohman. “We intend to make this a banner week in the history of the fund. The Actors’ Fund is not a restricted institution. It takes a broad and sympathetic interest in every one on the stage—whether he be actor, singer, dancer, or workman. Since the time of the last fair at Madison Square Garden the fund has expended from $500 to $600 weekly in its charities. In other words, we have spent more than $40,000 a year.

Mr. Frohman, after briefly describing the nature of the fund and citing the necessarily precarious living of the actor, continued: “Charity covers a multitude of sins, and it also reveals a multitude of virtues. We are grateful for the help of Mr. Roblee, and his assistant, Mr. Price, and Mrs. A. M. Palmer, who has taken up the work that her husband would have done had he remained with us. We are grateful to all who have assisted in bringing preparations to a successful conclusion.

“At the opening of the former fair we had the assistance of Edwin Booth and Joseph Jefferson. In their place we have today that American institution and apostle of wide humanity—Mark Twain.”

Mark Twain’s Plea for the Actor.

Mark Twain, whose famous white suit and white hair made him a conspicuous figure from the minute he entered the hall, was received with general applause. He spoke tersely and deliberately.

“As Mr. Frohman has said,” the humorist began, “charity reveals a multitude of virtues. This is true, and it is to be proved here before the week is over. Mr. Frohman has told you something of the object and something of the character of the work. He told me he would do this—and he has kept his word! I had expected to hear of it through the newspapers. I wouldn’t trust anything between Frohman and the newspapers—except when it’s a case of charity!

“You should all remember that the actor has been your benefactor many and many a year. When you have been weary and downcast he has lifted your heart out of gloom and given you a fresh impulse. You are all under obligation to him. This is your opportunity to be his benefactor—to help provide for him in his old age and when he suffers from infirmities.

“At this fair no one is to be persecuted to buy. If you offer a twenty-dollar bill in payment for a purchase of $1 you will receive $10 in change. There is to be no robbery here. There is to be no creed here—no religion except charity. We want to raise $250,000—and that is a great task to attempt.

“The President has set the fair in motion by pressing the button in Washington. Now your good wishes are to be transmuted into cash.

“By virtue of the authority in me vested I declare the fair open. I call the ball game. Let the transmuting begin.”

Jean Clemens wrote from Katonah, N.Y. to Sam, letter not extant but referred to in his May 14 reply.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Today we came into town. The King opened the Actor’s Fund Fair” [MTP TS 56].

May 7 Tuesday – Sam wrote daughter Jean on May 14 after his return from Annapolis that he spent “the 7th to meet engagements.” He did not specify; no more is known.

Clemens gave Isabel Lyon power of attorney to sign checks for him [Hill 222]. The Lyon-Ashcroft MS contains the full text of this document, as follows:

Know all men by these presents, that I, Samuel L. Clemens, of the city and state of New York, have made, constituted and appointed, and by these presents do make, constitute and appoint Isabel V. Lyon of the same city, my true and lawful attorney for me and in my name, place and stead, to exercise a general upervision over all my affairs and to manage all my property both real and personal and all matters of business relating thereto; to lease, sell and convey any and all real property wheresoever situated which may now or which may hereafter at any time belong to me; to demand, collect and receive rentals of such property, to make repairs to any buildings thereon, to keep any and all dividends, interest and moneys due and payable to or become due and payable to me; to satisfy and discharge all mortgages; to sell, assign and transfer any and all stocks, bonds and mortgages belonging to or which at any time belong to me; to change any and all of my investments and to make investment of any and all of the moneys belonging to me or which may come into her hands, that she may deem advisable; to draw checks or drafts upon any banks, banker or Trust Company, or any financial institution with which or whom I have or may at any time hereafter have moneys on deposit or to my credit; to endorse either for deposit, collection or transfer any and all notes, checks, drafts or bills of exchange now or hereafter payable to me or to my order; to prosecute and defend, compromise and settle suits and legal proceedings and to retain and employ attorney and counsel for such purpose or otherwise, to protect my interests; to release and discharge as my attorney may deem proper any and all claims and demands in my favor of any kind or nature, and to make sign, seal acknowledge and deliver any and all receipts, acquittances, discharges, satisfaction pieces, transfers, assignments, agreements, deeds or other instruments under seal or otherwise which in the judgment of my said attorneys may be necessary, appropriate or proper, giving and granting unto my said attorney full power and authority to do and to perform any act or thing requisite and necessary to be done in and about the premises as fully to all interests and purposes as I might or could do if personally present, with full power of substitution and revocation, hereby ratifying and confirming all that my said attorney or her substitute shall lawfully do or cause to be done by virtue thereof.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 7th day of May, 1907.

Sealed and delivered:

(signed) SAMUEL L. CLEMENS.

In presence of:

(signed) Ralph S. Hull

State of New York :

County of New York : ss.

On this 7th day of May, 1907, before me personally came Samuel L. Clemens, to me personally known to be the individual described in, and who executed the foregoing instrument, and he acknowledged to me that he executed the same.

(signed) Ralph S. Hull.

Notary Public.
New York County.

Note: this would be revoked in March, 1909 during the controversy of embezzlement raised by Clara Clemens.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I spent an hour or more with J. Howells" [MTP TS 56]. Note: Lyon was directing the design of the Redding house with John Mead Howells, architect.

John Mead Howells wrote to Sam with results of the contractor bids on the proposed Redding house—Mr. Sunderland of Danbury Conn. won the bid, which was reduced further to $27,236. On Sam's notification they could commence work immediately [MTP].

Florence Duncan Jones wrote from Staten Island, N.Y. to ask Sam to return her manuscript on Christian Science that she'd sent for his opinion [MTP]. Note: Jones' letter was previously catalogued Sept. 7, 1907. Sam dictated to Miss Lyon who wrote on the letter: "Dear Madam: / I have read the first half of the article but it does not interest me, because, to me, reasonings (or attempted reasonings) from C.S. are as vain & empty & wearisome as are discussions of theology & other forms of gas. I have no reverence for theologies & I take no interest in them. I take a strong & indestructible interest in Mrs. Eddy. But this is merely because she is picturesque & unusual. I take the same interest in Satan." This reply also shows as May 27, with slightly different wording. It is likely Lyon and/or Sam edited the final letter from this copy. See May 27 to compare versions.

An unidentified person wrote on Writers Club stationery, London to urge Sam to write a life of Christ [MTP].

May 8 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam sent a cable to C.F. Moberly Bell, editor of the London Times: “I PERCEIVE YOUR HAND IN IT YOU HAVE MY BEST THANKS SAIL IN MINNEAPOLIS JUNE 8 DUE IN SOUTHAMPTON DAYS LATER. / CLEMENS” [MTP].

Note: Hill includes an excerpt from Isabel Lyon’s journal that it was late in 1906 when Moberly Bell was visiting from London and luncheoned with Sam. When asked when he might return to England, Sam answered “When Oxford bestows its degree upon me!” Isabel thought the award “cheapened” because it was asked for [166]. The exact luncheon date has not been determined, but Bell was in the U.S. and was awarded a doctor of literature degree on Apr. 13, 1907 by Western University of Penn. at the Founders Day exercises of Carnegie Institute [NY Times, Feb. 17, 1907, p.6 “Degrees for Foreigners”]. Bell was also present for the Apr. 14 to 17 National Arbitration and Peace Congress at Carnegie Hall [NY Times, Mar. 8, 1907, p.4 “Peace Congress That Meets Here”]. These events suggest the luncheon was also in April, and, as Hill points out, it was given by the New York Times for Bell; if the seed was planted by Sam then, it took only “two weeks to germinate” [166]. It is likely Lyon simply erred about the date. Still, to what extent Bell was behind Sam’s Oxford degree is open to speculation, yet Clemens thought it evident, and honorary degrees were certainly on Bell’s mind.

Sam also cabled the ship, Minneapolis, and June 8 sail date to Whitelaw Reid in London [MTP].

Sam also wrote to John Mead Howells concerning the construction contract on the Redding house, letter not extant but referred to in Howells’ May 9 reply.

Sam spent “4 solid & strenuous hours at the Fair” [May 14 to Jean]. Also Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Four hours the King spent at the Actor’s Fair in the Players’ Booth” [MTP TS 56].

The New York Times, May 8, p. 7, “Not a Dull Minute at the Actors’ Fair” included this short paragraph about Mark Twain’s appearance for May 9 (Sam only appeared on May 6 and May 8, so this is in error).

Mark Twain, in his white suit and wearing his white hair, is to appear to-morrow at the Players’ Booth. It is understood that he has not entirely recovered from the terrible shock of the recent Christian Science episode: he laughs about it all the time.

And in another article on this day, p.7, “Lost Her Pearls At The Actors’ Fair,” the New York Times included this paragraph about Mark Twain and Ethel Barrymore:

While Miss Barrymore was at the Fair she had a rival in popularity from the opposite sex. The rival was Mark Twain in all his resplendent garments of snowy whiteness. But there was no sign of jealousy between them. Miss Barrymore ran up to the perennially youthful humorist, and the greeting they exchanged made all the other men wish that they also were authors of funny books.

H.H. Rogers sent a telegram on board the SS Baltic to Sam: “HAVE JUST STARTED BY LAND MRS ROGERS PREFERS IT TELL THE GIRLS / ROGERS” [MTHHR 624]. Note: The captain of the White Star ship mistook an anchored Std. Oil tanker for an oncoming vessel and took extreme maneuvers to avoid it, thus going aground inside N.Y. Bay. See note 1 on source.

Carrie L. Headrick wrote to Sam from Gardnersville, Nevada. “Mr S. L. Clemens / Dear Sir—/ That certainly looks very circumspect,—and quite proper, after the years that have passed since we met, nevertheless all though you have climbed the ladder of fame, your old Carson friends think of you as—just Sam.” She mentioned Paine being there to gather info for a biography, and staying with Mrs. Sam P. Davis [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Ansd”

May 9 Thursday – At 9 a.m. [May 14 to Jean] Sam and Isabel Lyon took a train for Baltimore, Maryland, where he would be a guest of Governor Edwin Warfield (1848-1920) and deliver a benefit lecture in Annapolis. Warfield had been mentioned as a future presidential candidate. It had been in Sam's plans at least since Apr. 22, when he wrote of it to Jean. Though she did not know him, Emma Warfield (Mrs. Edwin Warfield), a member of the First Presbyterian Church, had written asking Mark Twain to speak for a church benefit. In his May 14 to Jean, he referred to his trip as "wiping out a debt on a Presbyterian church." The Baltimore Sun, May 10, p.14 "Mark Twain in Clover" reported his arrival:

A suit of light gray flannels, surrounding a man with heavy, wavy hair, almost white, and a beaming smile that took in everybody, emerged from the train that arrived from New York at Camden Station a little while before 3 o'clock yesterday [May 9] afternoon.

The man with the gray flannels and the sunny smile did not have to wait more than 20 seconds on the platform before he was met by a man of the real Maryland type—heavy, but not fat; dressed in good taste and his face bearing a short-clipped mustache and goatee.

He of the wavy hair was Mark Twain and he of Maryland's own type was Governor Warfield. The Governor will be the host of the premier humorist of the civilized world for the next few days.

Tonight [May 10] the humorist will deliver a lecture at the Executive Mansion in Annapolis for the benefit of the Presbyterian Church there. Mrs. Warfield is a member of the church, and the lecture given by the only real, quadruple-plate American funny man will help the good cause.

While he is speaking everybody will know him as Mark Twain and at the same time think of Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn. But after the lecture, when he begins to shake hands, nobody will think of calling him anything except Mr. Clemens.

[...]

The Governor and the first, last and all the time American humorist shook hands like two men who meet on a Mexican ranch years after they have separated. Their greeting was more than cordial. It did one's heart good to see it.

When the Governor and the humorist started from the station for the Annapolis train, they drew toward themselves as many cameras as a magnet would draw steel shavings. It seemed to have been a strange coincidence that such a large proportion of the waiting passengers in the station were armed with kodaks. All eyes seemed to be turned toward the distinguished pair as they walked arm in arm across the platform toward the train. [...]

Before the train pulled out Mark was interviewed by a reporter of THE SUN about his recent "drowning" and other topics [Note: See more of the article in MTFWE p.6-8; the Baltimore News gave 2:47 p.m. as Sam's time of arrival and noted Isabel Lyon accompanied him. On the platform waiting for a train for Washington was Senator from Maryland Isador Rayner (1850-1912) and Colonel E.L. Woodside: Scharnhorst 587-592. The Annapolis Short Line train was a thirty-mile trip].

Nolan and Tomlinson write of Sam's arrival at the Governor's mansion:

In Annapolis, Twain went to the Governor's mansion, where he had a cup of tea and a rest before the dinner given in his honor. That evening, the table, decorated in white lilies, had Governor Warfield presiding over it at one end and Samuel Clemens at the other. Twenty-six others filled the spaces in between. Among them were representatives of the schools in the area: Basil Gildersleeve from the Johns Hopkins University, Thomas Fell from St. John's College, and Capt. George P. Colvocoresses, representing the Naval Academy. The Baltimore contingent at the affair was large enough to journey to Annapolis in a special railroad car which, the papers report, returned at 11 p.m. [4]. Note: in his May 14 to Jean he told of the gathering running till midnight.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "We started for and arrived at Annapolis" [MTP TS 56].

Chatto & Windus wrote to Sam asking if JA, More Tramps Abroad (FE), and The Man That Corrupted Hadleyburg could be lowered from 6/ to 3/6 each, since they'd been published at the higher price for "a considerable period" [MTP].

Robert Fulton Cutting for the Robert Fulton Monument wrote to acknowledge Sam's plans to be present at the Jamestown Expo on Sept. 23; he discussed persons who would be there [MTP].

John Mead Howells wrote to Sam that they had rec'd his of May 8 and were by his instructions notifying William Webb Sunderland, contractor to build the Redding house for $27,236. They were preparing a formal contract for the work [MTP].

John A. Kirlicks wrote to Sam, enclosing a chapbook of poems in Twain's honor, bound by a red ribbon (in file) [MTP].

May 10 Friday – Annapolis: On the morning of May 10 Sam toured the Naval Academy, something he'd looked forward to. He was joined by three young ladies: Miss Carrie Warfield, and Miss Margaret Warfield, the Governor's daughter, and niece, respectively; and Mary Foxley Tilghman, daughter of the Secretary of State. The group heard the Naval Academy Band concert and afterward visited the commanding officer. The Superintendent, Admiral James H. Sands (1845-1911), was ill so they called on Capt. George P. Colvocoresses, the Commandant of Midshipman; the Captain had been at the dinner the previous evening.

Nolan and Tomlinson write:

When Mrs. Warfield arrived, there was a ride around the yard and a stop at Bancroft Hall, the largest building at the Academy and, among other things, the residence of the midshipmen. The group was shown the lead casket of John Paul Jones. "Here are the remains of John Paul Jones, lying right here in this casket," the Sun reported someone's exclaiming to Twain. "Is it possible," he commented flatly, confusing even the ever-present reporters about whether or not he mean to be funny.

In the afternoon there was a parade in Twain's honor, which he watched from the porch of the Superintendent's temporary quarters [see insert], a house which still stands at the corner of Worden Field, where today as in the past midshipmen parade regularly. The whole brigade did not march, but the Teddy Bears (so named because they were the guard when Theodore Roosevelt attended President's Day at the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition). Looking at the drill, Twain remarked: "That is a sight somewhat incongruous with the principles of the Peace Congress" (American 11 May: 15). Whatever his reservations, they did not deter his enjoyment of the spectacle. The Academy band played, and the Evening Capital reporter discovered Twain pretending to march in time with the music (11 May: 1).

He smoked his cigar on the Superintendent's porch, having received permission to do so from Mrs. Sands; but earlier in the day he had run afoul of the stringent Academy regulation banning all smoking in the yard, even by visitors [5]. Note: editorial emphasis on names. Sam referred to the National Arbitration and Peace Conference, which was held on April 14-17, 1907 at Carnegie Hall. See also the interview (which took place on May 10) of the Baltimore American, May 11, "As Mark Twain Watched Drill," p.15, in Scharnhorst p. 595-600; also other interviews and articles in source.

The New York Times, May 11, p.1 ran a special datelined Annapolis, Md. May 10:

OXFORD DEGREE FOR TWAIN.

University Will Make Humorist a Bachelor of Letter.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, May 10.—Samuel L. Clemens, Mark Twain, who is a guest here of Gov. Warfield, announced today that he was going to England to be honored by a degree.

"I got a cablegram from the other side telling me that if I went over to Oxford University, the degree of Bachelor of Letters would be conferred on me," he said. I wrote a telegram accepting the honor, and saying that I would said in the latter part of June."

The humorist visited the Naval Academy today in company with Mrs. Warfield and a party of friends.

The party went through the hall to where the body of Paul Jones lies flanked on one side by a pointing of the Revolutionary hero by Miss Cecilia Beaux.

"That," said Commander Dayton, "is the body of Paul Jones."

"Is it possible?" exclaimed Twain innocently. I know Miss Beaux, who made the painting, very well, and remember perfectly the day Jones sat for this picture. I met here later in London, and on the other side of the table—I was always eating in those days—was Whistler, the great painter. I was talking thirteen words to the dozen and Whistler was talking fourteen. Finally I got tired of his interruptions, and, turning to Miss Beaux, I said, 'Who is that noisy person over there?' 'That's funny,' she replied, 'he just asked me the same thing about you.'

While puffing a cigar and looking at two cannons captured from the French, the guard warned the humorist of rules against smoking.

"Arrested again!" Twain exclaimed, but he clung to his cigar behind his back. "Constituted constabulary will run this country yet." Then, as he thought it over, he said: "Still, that's right. I might set fire to this place, smoking around this stone and cannon and inflammable stuff."

Note: the May 3 cable from Whitelaw Reid that informed Sam of his Oxford degree nomination was sent in care of Harper & Brothers, N.Y. It may be that the cable was not opened or disclosed to Sam's publisher at that time, or that he swore them to silence so he might announce the news in Annapolis.

At 8:20 p.m. Sam arrived 20 minutes late and gave a talk at the Government House, Annapolis Maryland. Fatout writes:

In Annapolis to deliver a benefit lecture, probably a series of anecdotes, Mark Twain spent part of his leisure time rambling around the Naval Academy and getting caught smoking in a sector where, as sailors put it, the smoking lamp was out. Then he was feted at dinner by the governor, assorted politicians and other important people at the official residence. Called upon to speak, naturally the guest of honor responded in good form [MT Speaking 550]. Note: italics are Fatout's.

Nolan and Tomlinson confirm Fatout's above phrase, that Sam gave a "series of anecdotes," including a variation on the watermelon story. He also told of memories of going fishing as a boy, the story of the corpse in his father's office, the Mexican plug tale, and Grandfather's Old Ram [6]. Note: See also NY Times, May 12, p.4, "Mighty Mark Twain Overawes Marines". In his May 14 to Jean Sam gives the audience at 1000 to 1,200 people at $2 per head, "no expenses & not a word of advertising."

Afterward there was "an informal reception in the west parlor and drawing room of the Government House" and "he greeted visitors; at the end of the line were three girls who were house guests of the Governor and Mrs. Warfield. 'So entranced was he with their beauty,' the Sun reported, 'that the humorist tried to hug all of them at the same time.' When they sat down, he gathered them about him on a small settee and told them funny stories (11 May: 10)" [ibid.] Note: Sam put the crowd here to 200 and bragged of kissing "a few girls" [May 14 to Jean].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Isabel Lyon's journal: "When I went to the King's room at one o'clock, after the morning, he was in despair & said we've got to get away from here. I never could say until Monday" [MTP TS 56]. Note: it's possible that with all the newspaper men following his every move, Sam became over-tired. In his May 14 to Jean, he claimed he was "dead with fatigue." Perhaps he also did not look forward to being back in a Presbyterian pew.

May 11 Saturday – Though Sam's stay was planned for five days, including a tour of the bay on a special steamer, and a possible visit Sunday to the First Presbyterian Church, but Sam and Isabel Lyon cut it short, leaving this morning, and escorted as far as Baltimore by Governor Warfield [Nolan & Tomlinson 4, 6-7].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Home again, the King to Tuxedo, I to No. 21" [MTP TS 56].

John Y.W. MacAlister wrote a whimsical one-page letter to Sam from London about the recent reports of the Kanawha being lost at sea.

The news of your death by drowning gave me a happy thought. I know you will not misunderstand that, for we both know that no one, who knows you as I do, would ever believe it possible you could be drowned, for that is not the appointed means of your ending. But the happy thought was produced by observing that you are still a fidus Achates of Rogers, that princely prince of freebooters... [MTP]. Note: Fidus Achates: Latin for "Trusty Friend."

Albert B. Paine, in Hannibal, Mo., sent Sam a postcard picturing a cannibal cartoon. "If nothing further happens before tomorrow night, This Cannibal / From Hannibal / Will take his Eastward flight" [MTP: Cushman].

Lyman Pierson Powell wrote Sam a postcard (not mailed) headed "The Rectory / St. John's Church / Northampton, Mass. "The charge is seriously made against you in The American Queen for May, quoting the Oakland Herald of March 13, 1907, that your sole purpose in the publication of your book" CS "was to make money..." Powell was to write a book which would appear in Putnam's that would be more favorable to CS—could Sam write "in refutation of the subtle charge which needs no refutation in my mind"? [MTP].

Sam and Miss Lyon would have arrived back in New York about 6 p.m. In his May 14 to Jean he wrote that Miss Lyon stayed over at 21 Fifth Ave. "& talk 'house' with Hon Jowells," (John Howells, who was designing Stormfield) while he went "straight" to Tuxedo Park, "arriving at 7 p.m. & went to bed."

May 12 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Busy with Santa, sleep and packing in the afternoon" [MTP TS 56].

W.H. Helm wrote to Sam. "The act of writing a notice (I know your opinion of reviewers!) of your Christian Science for the 'Atheneum'—aroused my memories of Dollis Hill in August 1900, when I had the only opportunities that have come to me of hearing (& smoking the cigars of) an author whose books have meant a great deal to me from boyhood" [MTP]. Notes: After May 12 Lyon in Tuxedo Park, replied for Sam. "Mr. Clemens gone to N.Y to make some necessary preparations for his trip to Eng. & for what he regards as a very sane & lucid review of the book / He has read no review but that one but likes that one—". Helm has one book listed in Gribben, p. 306: Studies in Style, London (1900).

May 13 Monday – Sam addressed a letter from Tuxedo Park N.Y. "(Summer residence)" to Harry Windsor Dearborn.

As I have not heard from you I am taking it for granted that Mr. Vanderbilt, on behalf of the [Fulton] Monument Association, has invited Mr. Cleveland already, or will invite him as soon as he gets back from Europe July 1.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

And so I have today, by letter, invited Mr. & Mrs. Cleveland to be my guests in the Kanawha; I invite but one other guest.

I propose to sail for Jamestown about mid-afternoon Sept. 22 & arrive at 8 o'clock next morning. Will that be about the correct thing? [MTP]. Note: Sam added he'd just returned from the South where he was very busy. He then added a P.S. outlining the steps for inviting Mr. & Mrs. Grover Cleveland and delivering him via the Kanawha to Jamestown, Va.

Clemens' A.D. for Jan. 19, 1906 included an added paragraph with this date, concerning the duel and death of Felice Cavallotti (1842-1898), "poet, orator, satirist, statesman, patriot...lamented by his countrymen" and killed by Count Ferruccio Macola, editor of Gazzetta di Venezia [AMT 1: 302].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Shoes, Whiskey, Trunk, Ms. for the King who is in Tuxedo, and who telephoned a return message to me this morning when I was finding out the how of things out there. His voice has a sweet plaint over the telephone a timbre that is beautiful. Oh, it is dreadful to leave him alone out there, and to know that he is needing little things, and swearing, oh, swearing terribly at not getting them. I'll go home at 5:22 [train] this very day.

Went to the Morting Studio with Dearborn [MTP TS 57]. Note: Harry Windsor Dearborn was active in the Fulton Monument Association. Dearborn thanked Sam on May 17 for a "pleasant afternoon," likely this one.

Robert Lutz wrote from Stuttgart to Sam asking for serial publication of Sam's auto. In German [MTP]. See May 27 for Lyon's reply for Sam.

Rose Sherwood wrote from Portland, Ore. to ask if Sam would write more Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn books [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd May 27, 07"

May 14 Tuesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y., relating his stops since May. In part: (see prior references to this letter for text excised here).

Oh, you dear Jean, it shan't happen again. The next time I go to see you I shall select the train that will give me the longest time with you. Your letter has been lying here some 7 days—but I haven't been here.

Yes indeed, I certainly have been frisking around. I had to come out here for one day (May 4) to attend a tea & reception in my honor.

.... [see May 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 entries for what he summarized here]

But I am perfectly rested now, but haven't gotten up yet (noon.)

Miss Lyon arrived a month ago, but Clara isn't coming for a week yet.

Miss L returns to New York day after tomorrow, after answering tons of letters.

Oxford University invites (commands) my presence, June 26, to confer upon me the degree of Doctor of Letters. Of course I have to receive it in person—these mighty distinctions are not conferred by mail.

I sail in the Minneapolis June 8—so as to have time to see a few English friends & get my gown & hood made; & I re-sail June 29th & reach New York 9 days later. I take Ashcroft with me to look after me.

Be sure, dearheart, I shan't leave the country before I've seen you. If you were sound & well & there was time for some travel, you & I would go together; but I've got to get back as soon as I can, on account of engagements.

In Annapolis I wore white clothes day & evening. I talked in a snow-white full dress, swallow-tail & all, & dined in the same. It's a delightful impudence. I think I will call it my don'tcareadam suit. But I think I will always ask permission, first, saying "Dar madam, may I come in my don'tcareadams?"

Good-bye, dear child, & thank you for your good letter. With loving hugs & kisses— [MTP]. Note: although Sam's initial plans called for him to sail on the same ship from England on June 29, as mentioned above, he was persuaded to put off the return until July 13 and return on the Minnetonka.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "On train for Tuxedo I am, and Oh, so glad I didn't come on that 5.22" [MTP TS 57].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote from NYC to Sam with an idea that struck him this a.m.

“To prevent piracy in years to come, why not trademark now in the name of Samuel L. Clemens such things as the ‘Mark Twain Cigar’, tobacco, whisky, shirt, corset, hair restorer, etc., etc. / This would place the issuance or suppression of such things entirely in the hands of your own folks...It won’t cost very much” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Mr. Clemens likes that idea—How shall he proceed? No one here to ask”

Sister M. Dominis wrote from Skibbereen, Ireland to ask Sam for a copy of CS [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Mr. Clemens sent it & Sister Dominica sent a nice note of thanks.

Julia Langdon Loomis wrote effusive congratulations to her Uncle Sam—could she see him before he went to England? [MTP].

Delia B. Maxwell wrote from Brooklyn to compliment Sam on CS [MTP].

Robert P. Porter wrote to ask Sam if he would stay with them when he came to Oxford. “As the one American Editor (I believe) living in Oxford we are entitled to that privilege” [MTP].

Anne W. Stockbridge wrote from Providence, R.I. to ask Sam to write “a few words of introduction for our book” (Stockbridge and Miss Grace Donworth, had written the “Jennie Allen letters” about the San Francisco earthquake, one of which Sam read at the Assoc. Press Dinner in NY [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Very grateful for that attention. Don’t write introductions any way as it would be hard to say no one time & yes another.”

May 15 Wednesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam replied to the May 9 from Galveston, Texas Judge and poet John A. Kirlicks (1852-1923):

It is a beautiful poem & has touched me deeply. If might venture to suggest, I should say that the proper place for it is either in the “Century” or “Harper’s Monthly”—preferably the “Century,” because I am not connected with it, except by old ties of friendship, whereas I am connected with “Harper’s” commercially [MTP: Hannibal Daily Post, Apr. 24, 1910]. Note: Kirlicks wrote “To Mark Twain,” a poem in Writers and Writings of Texas, ed. Davis Foute Eagleton (1913).

Sam also sent a cable to Ambassador Whitelaw Reid, London: “LETTER RECEIVED. MANY THANKS. ANY NIGHT WILL ANSWER I REMAIN IN ENGLAND ONLY TEN DAYS. / CLEMENS” [MTP].

Sam also wrote Reid a letter, possibly on this day as well.

The dates are exactly right; they couldn’t possibly be righter. I wanted two engagements, and only two; and these are the choicest that could be imagined. {The other was to dine with the Pilgrims.} They and Oxford leave me seven days for private dissipation and last good-bying with old friends whom I shan’t meet again without their haloes. And there’s one or two whom I shan’t ever meet with them. I am sorry for that, for they are among the best of the flock [MTP].

David A. Munro wrote to Sam. “Col. Harvey sails for England on Wednesday, the 22nd inst. and I am giving him a dinner at the Players on Monday, the 20th —at half past seven in the evening. I am asking some of the members of the Franklin Square family to join us. Won’t you come? It would be a sorry party without you”[MTP]. Note: Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Will you accept dinner in your honor at the twon hall in Liverpool during your stay in England / Lord Mayor / Liverpool” John Japp.

Whitelaw Reid wrote from London to Sam, having rec'd his note of May 3. He hoped Sam had rec'd a letter from Lord Curzon, the new Chancellor of Oxford Univ. He understood Sam would sail on the Minneapolis on June 8 and arrive in England as early as June 19, "and so have a safe week before the Oxford ceremony," so that "it might be pleasant for you to dine with me here about Thursday, June 20th..." [MTP]. Sam wrote on the env.: "Had already engaged to the Pilgrims before this letter reached me May 24—then I cabled asking them to give me June 21 or 22—which would leave me free for June 20"

Lyman Beecher Stowe for Circle Magazine wrote to ask Sam for an interview for a series of sketches on "Unexploited Corners of History prior to the Civil War," and Stowe requested an interview on "Slavery As Seen from the Pilot-House of a Mississippi Steamboat" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "quite impossible / no interviews / Harper would object ; Answd. May 27, '07"

May 16 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "C.C. came and finds it charming" [MTP TS 57].

Frances F. Cleveland (Mrs. Grover Cleveland) wrote from Princeton to Sam.

We have had your letter. Of course it will require consideration—and Mr. Cleveland will write you when he can get his mind on it. He isn't very well, and it may be a little while before he can decide it, & notify you. But you must realize he is not forgetting. You are good to include me. I am so uncertain a sailor—(though why uncertain, when I am sure to be sea sick?) that I fear my courage won't come to the point—But we shall see. / Very sincerely... [MTP].

H.W. Grove for Univ. of Michigan Student Lecture Assoc. wrote to ask Sam to visit during the coming year [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd May 27, '07"

J.V. Holmes wrote from Walpole, N.H. to ask Miss Lyon if the Clemens family would be in Dublin again this year. What about the dog Prosper—would he remain there long and if not where would he go? Was the wagon and harness for sale, and if so how much? [MTP].

May 16 after – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Gerald Christie, of the Outer Temple, London. Sam had "ceased from lecturing permanently 9 years ago" [MTP]. Note: the Outer Temple is thought to have been one of the "Inns of Chancery" where law was taught in the 12th and 13th centuries. Today it is occupied by barristers.

May 17 Friday – Harry Windsor Dearborn, Asst. Secretary of The Robert Fulton Monument Assoc. wrote to thank Sam for "a pleasant afternoon" and gave more information on the Sept. 23 Jamestown Expo. [MTP].

John Mead Howells wrote to Sam with bills by Harry A. Lounsbury, dated Apr. 27, May 4 and May 11, totaling $297.37 for the use of men and teams in the construction of the Redding house [MTP].

Dr. Garrett Newkirk wrote from Pasadena, Calif. to Sam after enjoying CS with his invalid son. His neighbor told him in confidence that Science and Health was definitely written mostly by James Henry Wiggins, a Boston journalist and an ex-Unitarian minister [MTP].

Chapters from "My Autobiography—XVIII" ran in the N.A.R. p.113-22.

May 18 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "C.C. returned to N.Y. and AB arrived, much talk" [MTP TS 57].

Harper's Weekly ran a full page photo of Mark Twain in his white suit, with the caption, "Clothes and the Man" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide First Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1977 p. 334].

A.F. Bradley of Bradley Studios, NYC wrote to Sam. "We are sending you to-night by Wells-Fargo Ex., pre-paid the portraits you are to autograph and return to me, which I will then forward to Mr. James..." [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd May 27 '07"

M.H. Justice wrote before this day from Quincy, Ill. to Sam, referring to a clipping he'd sent about the Mark Twain Hotel in Hannibal, and was wondering if it reached him. Paine was now in Hannibal gathering information for an authorized biography, and Justice was going to see him [MTP].

Knickerbocker Publishing Co. wrote to Sam to "call attention to the sketch of your life which was handed to her [Lyon] by our Mr. Bixler several weeks ago for correction and any important additions.." [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd May 27, 07"

William Krut wrote for the Tuxedo Club to extend courtesies of the club to Sam during his rental of the Voss cottage [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Thank you very much for the courtesy extended"

Virginia Vaughan wrote to ask Sam if he'd be on a committee to "take charge of a fund for the benefit of Countess Eleanor Niebolus..." [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

May 19 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Much talk, tea down at the club. Oh, so stupid" [MTP TS 57].

May 20 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: King and I went to town on the 11:50. AB left earlier on the 8:30. King and I lunched at The Brevoort, lamb stew and beer, and such a good luncheon he found it. He dined at a David Munro Dinner at the Players for Col. Harvey who sails for England on Wednesday. In the afternoon we ran around to Marting's Studio to see the model for the Fulton Memorial. It is beautiful [MTP TS 57-58].

Charlotte Teller Johnson wrote on "The Broztell" stationery, NYC to Sam. In part:

My dear Mr Clemens—I am compelled to ask you and Miss Lyons to come in to see me in regard to a very serious statement which is reported to come from her with regard to my acquaintance with you. I should be glad to treat this with the silence which I felt to be my privilege when you and she told me of the gossip for the Players Club, but it is impossible for me [to] do so on the ground that it is merely rumor, for it has come so directly as her statement" [MTP].

May 21 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Today the King went to see Jean, making a day of it and came home weary at 7 o'clock. He had a talk with Dr. Sharp who said that only physicians know that the present Czar is an epileptic; people would pity him more if they knew of his terrible malady [MTP TS 58].

Ferris Greenslet wrote to Sam for Houghton Mifflin & Co., just back from "moist refrigeration in London and Paris" and finding Sam's note of Mar. 30. He would be grateful for whatever letters Sam could send within a month or two of the late Thomas Bailey Aldrich [MTP]. Note: Greenslet initially wrote Clemens on Mar. 26; Sam's reply is catalogued "after Mar. 27" by MTP; this note specifically puts Sam's reply to Mar. 30, so the change is made to that date.

May 22 Wednesday – Fatout lists a dinner speech in honor of George B. Harvey, Sam's publisher. No particulars are given and none were found, neither did Lyon mention it in her journal entry below [676].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today the King went to Tuxedo and I stayed on because Santa needed a chaperon and I needed to do a lot of extra things.

The King telegraphed me to call on Mrs. J. before I left town. After a palaver she consented to see me this evening, in her negligee. I went up to find that her demand to see Mr. Clemens and me was based on a report that Miss Doty had said that I said that Mrs. Johnson was an adventurer and planning to marry Mr. Clemens. I laughed with relief and amusement over the impossibility of such a thing and she didn't like it when I made light of the matter. She was grey and savage-looking when I left her and I think we'll hear from her again [MTP TS 58]. Note: the rumors were about Charlotte Teller Johnson's "designs" on Twain. See Oct. 22 IVL entry.

Elizabeth K. Harlon wrote from Naban, Mass. to Sam, enclosing a few extracts of a literary work by three ladies for him to consider. The publisher had told them it sounded like a copy of Mark Twain [MTP]. After May 22 Sam replied. "They have applied much too late. Many & many a girl has made the same application, but their work has in all cases been marred by a fatal defect—destitution of originality" [MTP].

Harry E. Brittain wrote on The Pilgrims, Savoy Hotel letterhead, London to ask Sam if he might join them for an informal luncheon, say Tuesday, June 25, during his London stay [MTP].

Oscar T. Crosby wrote for the New York Electric Music Co. to Sam. "Perhaps kind-hearted people should not have their suggestions remembered against them. I cannot however, forget the pleasant words you spoke to me about the Telharmonic System, when I had the pleasure of dining with you at the house of our mutual friend, the Benjamins." Crosby asked if Sam could offer "a word" to the city authorities, or to Mayor McClellan personally, in favor of the Co. wiring the city [MTP]. After May 22 Sam replied.

I do not know the mayor personally, & am therefore diffident about addressing him directly. But I should be willing, & not only willing, but also glad to have anyone convey to him my conviction which is this: that the telharmonium is destined to be an even greater benefactor to the human race than the telephone & the telegraph, since only a minority of the race can afford the ministrations of that majestic pair of public servants, whereas the whole race, excepting only its paupers, can afford the telharmonium [MTP].

Alice Minnie Herts wrote for the Educational Alliance to ask Miss Lyon if Clemens would set a date for their special performance of his play (P&P) before he left for England. They proposed Tuesday, Nov. 19 [MTP].

R.G. Inerwell wrote on Church of the Ascension Parish House stationery, NYC to Miss Lyon that the case of "Mr. J....was not a proper one for Mr. Clemens to assist." He referred to Lyon's note of May 14; and that Mrs. Alice McGregor Mueller "has the reputation of being a 'begging letter' writer..." [MTP].

John Y. W. MacAlister for Library Magazine, a London quarterly, wrote to Sam.

Herewith is the greeting of the Right Honble. The Lord Mayor of London, who commands me to say that your agent in advance must have made a curious mistake in saying that you propose to start back on the date he has fixed to entertain you at the Mansion House. Surely you can stay over for one more week. If you don't it will be a cruel disappointment to your Brother Savages [MTP].

George Thomson Wilson for Pilgrims NY wrote to Sam that he'd rec'd a cable from Harry E. Brittain, secretary of The Pilgrims, London, requesting Sam to be guest at a luncheon during his visit [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Cable & say to the Pilgrims, wont you consult Whitelaw Reid consulting a date. .. Not proper etiquette to place a ambassador in 2nd line / hastily said in cable..."

May 23 Thursday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam sent two telegrams to George Thomson Wilson, Secretary of the Pilgrim Club, N.Y. branch that he would be glad to be the guest of the London Pilgrims for lunch any date between June 18 and June 28; his second note asked Wilson to cable the London Pilgrims to pin the luncheon date to either June 21 or 22, and cable Sam their acceptance [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: ~~Nothing but shopping & buzzing & flying around doing or un-doing things.~~ Santa and I started for Redding today, but it began to rain before we reached Branchville and so she took train right straight back again. I went on with Mr. Coe and Mr. Turner, for J. Howells had missed his train and we found the place lovelier than ever, for the apple trees were in bloom and it was a day full of beautiful atmosphere. We ate a Brevoort luncheon, up on the hilltop, and then when J.H. did arrive at 2 o'clock we dug each a tiny shovel of earth on the appointed spot. I and J.H. and Mr. Coe and AB and Mr. Sunderland and Mr. Turner, and then they poured in some whiskey, I wonder why? While we were waiting for J.H. to arrive we wandered around over the place and found some exquisite building sites and quite out of the range of the King's house [MTP TS 58-59]. Note: Lounsbury was not included in her entry, but Coe and Sunderland were; compare to below.

John Mead Howells, Isabel Lyon, Albert Bigelow Paine, and Harry A. Lounsbury, contractor and Redding neighbor, held an informal ground-breaking ceremony for the Redding house that would become Stormfield. Hill writes they poured whiskey into the first shovel hole. Sam did not attend, and may have objected to such a use for a good drink; Mac Donnell calls it "prophetic" [Hill 172; Mac Donnell 4].

J.W. Kelley, President of the Denver Colo. Press Club wrote "a gushing request" for Sam's autograph. Allowing four days for postal service, Sam's reply is given here as ca. May 27 [MTP].

George Grantham Bain wrote from NYC to Sam that they had a request from the Strand Magazine "for photographs of yourself in your home, with your family, with your amanuensis, the exterior of your house or any photographs connected with your home life." Would he allow their photographer to take such pictures? [MTP].

George Thomson Wilson for Pilgrims of NY wrote to Sam having rec'd his "good telegram of to-day in response to my letter of yesterday, and of cabling to...Brattain of the London Pilgrims that you will accept their invitation to be their guest at luncheon on any day between June 18th and 28th" [MTP].

Thomas Wardle wrote from England to Sam, having heard of his upcoming visit, and expressing "that it will give me and my daughter the greatest pleasure to have you again at Swainsley..." [MTP].

Sixteen-year-old Floyd Wiedermann, and "very interested" in Mark Twain books, wrote from Harvey, Ill., hoping for a reply [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

May 24 Friday – Tuxedo, N.Y.: Isabel Lyon's journal: The King was glad to have me come home again, and said he had not been able to fraternize with his food because it isn't pleasant to eat alone.

I came home reeking with weariness at 10:45, and irritated at finding the front door locked. But there was cause for it, for a thief had been in the house the night before. He had entered the girls' rooms—had tracked his route with candle grease which showed that he had been to the King's very room and had opened the door and looked at him. We're nervous now and the sense of security is clear away. I found the girls in excitement, and the King calmly dictating about it. Then we had a splendid talk about my New York adventures and the King wasn't a bit concerned about the Boztell affair and he was interested in the Redding house. But I'm afraid there won't be neighbors enough there. It is beautiful [MTP TS 59]. Note: Boztell affair, if not the burglar, is not known.

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon, enclosing Miss Marbury's check for $75, the share rec'd from Ernest Hendrie for the Hadleyburg performances [MTP].

George A. Quimby wrote on The Continental Ins. Co. letterhead, NYC to Sam, marking the letter, "Personal." He was the son of Phineas P. Quimby who practiced the belief that illness could be "cured by a process of reasoning" long before Eddy saw him. "I have documents to prove, and whatever of this is incorporated in Christian Science, Mrs. Eddy got from him. Briefly, had there been no Phineas P. Quimby, there would never have been any Christian Science" [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

May 25 Saturday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam drafted a telegram to George Thomson Wilson, Secretary of the Pilgrim Club, N.Y. branch: "Please cable Secretary Brittain for me 25th suits me exactly" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Every morning the King tells me his adventures, or lack of them, of the night before. It's a dear trait and he takes you so into his confidence when he explains that 3 times his logs broke into a gaudy fire and 3 times he drenched them so with water that he feared the blue ceiling down stairs would be ruined. At first he used his full vocabulary of swear words, oh there never was such a profane pressure—it lessened and finally he hadn't a word to say. He is lovely in his white clothes these days. We are making plans for his sailing on the 8th. I've been ordering his clothes and attending to so many precious duties for him. He is the world wonder [MTP TS 60].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam advising that he'd rec'd a letter from "one of Liverpool's leading men," a friend of Ashcroft's, asking if Sam would "accept the freedom of the city, and a Lord Mayor's banquet, and all sorts of frills." [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Have already declined by cable"

Spectator ran an anonymous article, "Mark Twain" p. 825-6. Tenney: "An enthusiastic but rather superficial survey of MT's life and works for English readers when MT came to England to receive an honorary doctoral degree from Oxford" [43].

Andrew Lang's article, "At the Sign of St. Paul's," ran in Illustrated London News, p. 798. Tenney gives us the brief note, in full: "The great American humorist, who has just passed his seventieth birthday, comes to Oxford this summer to receive the degree of D.C.L." [44].

May 26 Sunday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam replied to daughter Jean, whose incoming is not extant.

It saddened me, too, dearest Jean, to go away from you, & it has saddened me since to think about it. But I hope this is the last far journey I shall ever have to take. And indeed I would not take this one if I could avoid it.

I have accepted only 2 public dinners in London, & it is my purpose to limit myself to those two. They are the Pilgrims & the Ambassador. I am declining by cable the invitation of the City of Liverpool & its lord mayor. I have declined house-hospitalities in London & shall stop at Brown's hotel.

I have a very kind letter from Lord Curzon, Chancellor of Oxford University, in which he says, "in persuading you to accept the degree I feel that in reality the honors will be paid to us, by one who has always set before himself the highest standards of literary work, & for nearly half a century has made and incomparable addition to the pleasure of the English-speaking race."

Yes indeed, I will send you a cable as soon as I reach London. I shall not forget, dear heart.

With heaps of love & hugs & kisses— [MTP].

Sam had learned of the death of James Norman Gillis (Jim) and used his A.D. hours to dictate a long piece—eulogy with stories attributed to him; Jim Gillis and the inedible fruit; Jim challenged a man to a duel; the segment was selected for MTE [358-72; May 27 to Hampton]. Note: Jim's brother William R. Gillis survived him and wrote a 1931 reminiscence, Gold Rush Days with Mark Twain. See entries Vol. 1.

Isabel Lyon's journal: We are having a tiresome time with Miss Hobby who does seem to be more kinds of an idiot than most stenographers are. When Mr. Clemens does not use her then I do, for my clerical work does not diminish as my other duties increase. She does not like to take my dictations, and is very sour. However — [MTP TS 60]. Note: Lyon ended this entry abruptly, as if interrupted.

John Quincy Adams (b. 1848) wrote on Hotel Marlton, NYC stationery to Sam, having heard of the Redding house construction. Adams recommended a landscape artist, John Nolen, who lived in Cambridge, Mass. [MTP]. Note: Adams was not shown as relating to the famous Adams family or his namesake in the 1906-1907 Who's Who in America. His residence is shown as 151 W. 117th NYC and office: Old Flag House, Phila. He was a Public School lecturer and candidate for Congress, 14th NY district, 1896, Democrat. One of the founders of Founders and Patriots of America; also Betsy Ross Memorial Assoc.

May 27 Monday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Marjorie Bowen (pseud. for Gabrielle Margaret Vere Long) giving his London address, Brown's Hotel.

"I shall be in England 10 days—June 18–28—and I think you will have to do as the American girls do: waive youth, sex, & the other conventions, & call on me. Yes, & telephone me when you are coming: otherwise we shall fail to collide, for I shall be a very busy person" [MTP: Cyril Clemens, Mark Twain: The Letter Writer, 1932 p.130].

Sam also replied to Crittenden Hampton in Sonora, Calif. (Hampton's not extant).

I dictated a long and admiring and affectionate chapter about Jim Gillis, yesterday, and some day or other, in the by and by, it will appear in my Autobiography. It will then be seen that I, and perhaps not another person in the world, knew Jim Gillis for what he was, namely: a man with a fine, and I may even say wonderful imagination, and that he was also a born humorist of the first order. Of course Jim must have known that he was a humorist, but I am quite sure that he never once suspected that his place was in the top rank of the guild.

I thank you very much for your letter [MTP]. Note: see Hampton's additional note of May 29.

Sam also replied to the May 11 from Lyman Pierson Powell.

Oh dear, no,—what the Oakland Herald and the American Queen may think about my motives is far from being a matter of importance to me. In these 40 years my motives have often been exposed by the press, but I have not minded it, & I do not remember ever having printed a word in reply or defence.

I do not mind revealing to you that ten years ago when I was penniless & owed a fortune I wrote a book purposely to get money wherewith to reduce that burden; but all my other books were written mainly & primarily to get pleasure out of writing them. When I carried the X Science book to the Harpers, 5 years ago, they asked me not to insist upon its publication, they being afraid it could hurt their house by antagonizing the Scientists. I did not insist, but left them to choose their own time—which they did. They have issued it now, without any urgencies from me. I do not believe that really pure people, like those Herald & Queen immaculates, would write a book merely to get money; but I would, if I were needy, because I am used to acting disgraceful, & don't mind it; but so long as I continue to dig $70,000 a year out of the Harpers on magazine stuff & old copyrights you will always find me acting respectable. Even to the verge of good grammar.

No, dear Dr. Powell, let me not interrupt those frolicky gents; they like to hear themselves talk, & it doesn't discommode me [MTP].

Sam also replied to the May 7 from Florence Duncan Jones in Staten Island:

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Dear Madam: / I have read the first half of the article but it does not interest me; because, to me, reasonings from Christian Science are as vain and empty and wearisome as are discussions of theology. I have no reverence for theologies and I take no interest in them. I take a strong and indestructible interest in Mrs. Eddy. But this is merely because she is picturesque and unusual. I take the same interest in Satan [Note: See also May 7. This copy varies from what was written on Jones' letter, a somewhat more colorful version. This is likely the final wording.]

Sam also wrote to Francis H. Skrine in London.

Indeed I have not forgotten my old friends & admirers & shall be very glad to meet them again.

....

I should be exceedingly glad to enjoy the shelter of your roof, but I shall have to go to a hotel (Brown's) instead, because I shall have to be on tap to a good many friends & shall be in England only 10 days [MTP: Silverman catalogs, No. 18, July 2000, Item 17].

Sam also cabled the City of Liverpool to decline an invitation of the Lord Mayor. The cable is not extant but announced he was "declining by cable" in his May 26 to Jean.

Isabel Lyon wrote instructions for a reply to Robert Lutz's May 13. "At the end of a month or so write to Col. Harvey F. Sq. who will be in American by the middle of July & he can discuss the matter with Clemens" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Went to town" [MTP TS 60].

May Cline wrote from Philipsburg, NJ to ask Sam for his help in getting the poems published—of her "chum—a dear fellow now in Japan—Raley Husted Bell—perhaps you know him..." [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd June 6, '07"

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to Sam. "I have bought the 400 Anaconda, as you requested—200 at 60 and 200 at 59, as per enclosed bills. I am returning you the balance of your money, namely, $6,150., having no further order. I will hold the stock until I hear from you" [MTP].

John Mead Howells wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: not found at MTP.

Florence Duncan Jones wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: not found at MTP.

Jervis Langdon II wrote to congratulate Sam on the Oxford honor, and asked for the balance ($2,500) for his stock subscription to the Hope-Jones Organ Co. Of course, prospects were good [MTP].

Miss Silly W. Silverstein wrote from Syracuse, NY to Sam. He was the owner of The Celebrated Jumping Frog published by C.H. Webb in 1868 and wanted to know if it was his first publication [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answrd July 30, '07"

Charles Warren Stoddard wrote from Monterey, Calif. to Sam having read of their "London life" experiences in his Autobiography chapters in NAR, which had made Stoddard famous there—everyone wanted to shake his hand which was somewhat embarrassing. He'd thought his reputation had been made many years before by the publication of South Sea Idles, but the NAR made it grow. He'd never made any money from his writings, and only a slight amount from Idles. The NAR issues were scarce there [MTP].

George Thomson Wilson for Pilgrims NY. wrote to Sam still trying by cables back and forth to Harry E. Brittain, to pin down a date for the luncheon in London with the London Pilgrims [MTP].

May 27 ca. – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam replied to the May 23 of J.W. Kelley of the Denver Press Club's request for autograph:

“Write on it: Mark Twain Dean of the planet's journalism; joined the guild in 1849, aged 14, & has not broken the connection in 58 years.” [MTP]. Note: this may have been instructions to Lyon.

May 28 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: “Went to town” [MTP TS 60].

Frederick D. Wardle wrote to Sam (c/o Chatto & Windus) on Town Clerk's Office, Guildhall, Bath stationery to Sam.

“We are anxious to make use of you when you come over to add to the renown and attractions of the City by unveiling a tablet to one or other of the famous literary men who have at one time lived in Bath...probably rest between Bulwer Lytton, Thackeray, Sheridan, Smollett or Dr Johnson”—did Sam have a preference? [MTP]. Note: Frederick was the Town Clerk and son of Thomas Wardle; see May 23 for the latter.

May 29 Wednesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Dear Admiral: / Why hang it, I am not going to see you & Mrs. Rogers at all in England! It is a great disappointment. I leave there a month from now—June 29. No, I shall see you; for by your itinerary you are most likely to come to London June 21st or along there. So that is very good & satisfactory. I have declined all engagements but two—Whitelaw Reid (dinner) June 21, and the Pilgrims (lunch), June 25. The Oxford ceremony is June 26. I have paid my return passage in the Minne-something, but it is just possible that I may want to stay in England a week or two longer—I can't tell, yet. I do very much want to meet-up with the boys for the last time.

Harry is getting along all right; I was there three or four days ago & saw him.

Mr. Vanderbilt is back in New York & doubtless has invited Mr. Cleveland in behalf of the Fulton Association. I have already invited him in behalf of the Kanawha.

I have signed the contract for the building of the house on my Connecticut farm & specified the cost-limit, & work has been begun. The cost has to all come out of a year's installments of Autobiography₁ in the N. A. Review.

Clara is winning her way to success & distinction with sure-steady strides. By all accounts she is singing like a bird, & is not afraid of the concert stage any more.

Jean will never be well, but is contented & happy where she is & does not want to see the city again.

Miss Lyon runs Clara, & Jean & me, & the servants, & the housekeeping, & the house-building, & the secretary work, & remains as extraordinarily competent as ever. Mr. Broughton—after his characteristically engaging & Broughtonian fashion—was elaborately courteous & courtly to her on sight (there at his office) & said he was intemperately eager to help her run my stock-affairs, & even threatened to take her out to lunch at his club some day. I think Miss Lyon is a flirt—& Broughton the same.

Tuxedo is a charming place; I think it hasn't its equal anywhere.

Very best wishes to you both [MTHHR 625-6]. Note: Sam's ship was the SS Minnesota. Cornelius Vanderbilt was the President and Sam the vice president of the Robert Fulton Monument Assoc. A celebration was planned for the Sept. 23, 1907 at The Jamestown Exposition in Virginia.

After May 29 Sam replied to Constance Clyde at the Writers Club in London, whose request is undated. “I should dearly like to write it, but I am too rusty on the facts now, & have forgotten where to look for them. But your suggestion is a high compliment to me, & I prize it & thank you for it” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Calls. Yes we made calls, and found the Ronaldses at home, just back from getting a new mobile. It's a lovely house. Mr. Clemens is carried away by the loveliness of this place. He says he has never seen so beautiful a place in all his travels. To me it is the expression of artificiality and great wealth; and I'm beginning to feel a hankering, a great quiet longing for Dublin and the upper pasture and the road leading to the Raynor Cottage. There I was almost-a-free creature of the hills. Here I am a gloved and card-cased thing [MTP TS 60-61].

Harry E. Brittain wrote to Sam confirming June 25 as the luncheon date with the Pilgrims, London [MTP].

Ralph Danenhower for Frank N. Doubleday wrote to Sam, sending six copies of "What is Man?" and furnishing Rudyard Kipling's address, Batesman's Burwash, Sussex, England [MTP].

Therese Girand wrote from Katonah, NY to Miss Lyon about Jean and doing errands for her when going to NYC [MTP].

Crittenden Hampton wrote to Sam shortly before this date. Hampton was an attorney in Tuolumne County, Calif. He wrote to advise of the passing of Jim Gillis and related that Jim's one letter from Mark Twain was the prize of his life [MTP].

Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam that Baron Tauchnitz asked if he could publish CS—would Sam give permission? [MTP]. Note: Sam answered the following day.

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam and John Mead Howells enclosed a handwritten note to Lyon—all concerning "the possibility of constructing the open veranda to the west with the extra bedroom and bath above" [MTP].

John Japp, Mayor of Liverpool, England, wrote to Sam, offering "the hospitality of our Town Hall, on your arrival here or at any time during your English visit," hoping regardless of Sam's prior cable, that he might reconsider [MTP]. Note: Sam enclosed Japp's letter and also Japp's June 14 in his June 19 reply.

H.L. Pangborn wrote (not extant) from 48 Wall St., N.Y.C. to Sam [MTP]. On or after this date Sam replied: "Your note about our lost hell is a refreshing breeze to me. It was the most valuable thing we had, & I do not think we have anything to live for now— / Sincerely yours" [MTP].

In his A.D. for this day Sam commented on John Burroughs (1837-1921), ed. Songs of Nature. Gribben: "Burroughs is 'a heavyweight' who intimates that 'he knows more about an animal than the animal knows about itself'" [117]. Note: See also May 30; Sam also mentioned William Joseph Long's nature books and observed that at least he wrote from his own observations, his only fault being a tendency to overestimate the intelligence of the creatures he described [419]. Sam's A.D. also included a remark about Theodore Roosevelt: "If he should die now, he would be mourned as no ruler has been mourned save Nero" [677].

Of the selections from Twain's A.D.'s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto's choices, was "Naturalist and Nature-Fakir," dictated this day, which criticized Roosevelt's attack of naturalist William Joseph Long, and of other criticism of Theodore Roosevelt, including Executive Order 78, which established military pensions for all veterans, disabled or not, between the ages of 62 and 70, at a cost of about five million per year. Sam saw the order as a naked grab for votes. Sam Clemens was no socialist [19-22].

May 30 Thursday – Sam replied to Harper's of May 29: Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "If the London people will just ask C&W [Chatto & Windus] they will find that they can let Harpers know. They transferred" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Days and weeks are passing and I am not writing a word about the most wonderful creature in the world, but I'll try to hark back. He is in love with Tuxedo.

Today, as well as yesterday, when we were driving around making calls, he was like a young creature who had been caged for years. At Mrs. Alfred Seton's today the talk plunged at once into the fact that there is no such thing as "will power" and the King waxed fine and strong, but they were bent on convincing him that he had not convinced them and couldn't convince them in 25 years. They cared so much for their own point of view that they couldn't comprehend his. Then we went to the Rogerses. H.H. has had a postprandial operation for some private thing that the King as forgotten the name of, but we found him well enough to be down stairs and so we went in and chatted, until a crowd of young creatures came in. Then home we came very tired and both of us in bed by 8:30 [MTP TS 61].

In his A.D. for this day, Sam referred to several notable naturalists: the extraordinary mind of Aristotle [Gribben 27]. Sam Also commented on John Burroughs, ed. Songs of Nature. "Burroughs...backs up his assertions merely by his 'say-so'" [117]. Note: See May 29 on Burroughs. Sam mentioned Also the 14th Century naturalist, Sir John Mandeville (pseud. of an unknown compiler); Sam's copy of Early Travels in Palestine (1848) includes Mandeville's account of his journey to the Holy Land [448]. Sam also asserted that "Natural history is ... not an exact science," and no naturalist can post as an "unassailable authority"—not even Aristotle, Pliny, or Sir John Mandeville [550].

Of the selections from Twain's A.D.'s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto's choices, was more on the Roosevelt/Long controversy, continued from his dictation of the previous this day [22-4].

May 31 Friday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Robert Underwood Johnson. "Mr. Clemens asks me to say that he cannot serve an active part in the Academy, & so regrets that he is not able to send in any nominations. He believed that his Silence would be an answer" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mrs. William Wooster in Crisfeld, Md. "I do not read my letters, they are all read to me by my Secretary. The replies that shall be sent are determined by me. I think they are never vague, but deal in straight & definite statements easily understandable" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Santa arrived and we had a dinner tonight. Oh, such a dinner. Father Fitzsimmons, Rev. Percy Grant and a tired bored King. So tired and so bored that he nearly exploded, but he made a fine fight, and talked about Jews, and filled us with admiration over his statistics. Percy Grant had decided to return home that night, which meant we had to sit up until 11:40 and we sweated, forcing talk. The King sat under the electric light, his face luminously tired, and his eyes black as coal under his great brows—the eyebrows every fool of a barber wants to trim, and the King quietly declines to have it done [MTP TS 61-62].

Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam. "Your letter of yesterday is at hand. / In reply, we beg leave to say that we are writing to our London house, in the line of your letter, in regard to Baron Tauchnitz's application for permission to publish" CS "in his Continental Library" [MTP].

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to Sam. "I think the enclosed check from the United States Steel Corporation for $350., Preferred stock dividend, belongs to you. Will you kindly have your Certificate made in your own name, so that your check will be sent direct to you" [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote on Hotel Manhattan, NYC letterhead to Sam, enclosing check for $25 to "cover one Atlanta Gas coupon, due Juen 1st, to the estate of Susie Clemens...Don't let those English boys over there get any the best of you. Remember that you are not Oliver Wendell Holmes" [MTP].

June – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean, who evidently was dissatisfied at Katonah, and also unhappy with Isabel V. Lyon.

Jean dear, if your mother were here she would know how to think for you and plan for you and take care of you better than I do; but we have lost her, and a man has no competency in these matters. I have to have somebody in whom I have confidence to attend to every detail of my daily affairs for me except my literary work. I attend to not one of them myself; I give the instructions and see that they are obeyed. I give Miss Lyon instructions—she does nothing of her own initiative. When you blame her you are merely blaming me—she is not open to criticism in the matter. When I find that you are not happy in that place I instruct her to ask Drs. [Frederick] Peterson and Hunt to provide a change for you, and she obeys the instructions. In her own case I provide no change, for she does all my matter well, and although they are often delicate or difficult she makes no enemies, either for herself or for me. I am not acquainted with another human being of whom this could be said. It would not be possible for any other person to see reporters and strangers every day, refuse their requests, and yet send them away good and permanent friends to me and to herself—but I should make enemies of many of them if I tried to talk with them. The servants in the house are her friends, they all have confidence in her: and not many people can win and keep a servant's friendship and esteem—one of your mother's highest talents. All Tuxedo likes Miss Lyon—the hackmen, the aristocrats and all. She has failed to secure your confidence and esteem and I am sorry. I wish it were otherwise, but it is no argument since she has not failed in any other person's case. One failure to fifteen hundred successes means that the fault is not with her.

I am anxious that Dr. Peterson shall place you to your satisfaction, and I have not a doubt that he will find such a place if it exists. God Almighty alone is responsible for your temperament, your malady, and all your troubles and sorrows. I cannot blame you for them and I do not.

Lovingly and compassionately, / Your Father [MTP].

Putnam's Magazine ran an article by John Mead Howells: "Mark Twain's House—to Be Built at Redding, Connecticut," p. 376. "From a drawing in red chalk by the architect, John Mead Howells" (Son of William Dean Howells). Tenney: "On pp. 377-378, there are a report of Albert Bigelow Paine's plans to live nearby, an extract from the New York TIMES on details of the house, and the report that MT does not plan to look at the house until it is complete and furnished, with the cat purring on the hearth before the fire" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Second Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1978 p. 175-6].

In late June Ernest A. Ebbelwhite for Worshipful Soc. Gardeners, London sent Sam an engraved invitations to meet the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs at Dinner at Fishmonger's Hall, London Bridge, Tuesday July 9 at 7 p.m [MTP].

Seumas McManus wrote to Sam. "I thank you, sincerely, dear Mr. Clemens, for your beautiful words, written in my autograph book" [MTP].

June 1 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Will came out today and there was very great music in the afternoon. The piano is down in hall and from my 3rd story I slipped down a flight, I had on a long thin black silk gown that made a little swish, just enough for the King who stood in his underdrawers in the 2nd hall, to hear and make him look up at me with his eyes shining with delight. He had come home from Mary Rogers's and had gone to bed tired. I was picking wild azalea up on the bank (for the great mass of dogwood on the table the night before had cut off his view of every face, and he wanted to pick it up and throw it out the window), when he came slowly up the hill, and went right to bed, so there he stood in the hall listening to Santa. He had slipped off his trousers and stockings and he had his yellow calabash pipe in his hand. It is so true, that the ruts people complain that I am in because I don't holiday more, are far higher than their greatest heights [MTP TS 62-63]. Note: Charles E. Wark, "Will" was Clara's touring pianist.

Athenaeum ran an anonymous review of King Leopold's Soliloquy, p. 664. Tenney: "Very brief review. Declares that 'Mark Twain is a serious writer of considerable courage as well as a humorist,' and his pamphlet is 'a trenchant satire'" [43].

Isabel Lyon gave Sam a copy of Puck of Pook's Hill, by Rudyard Kipling (1906), and he thought he saw resemblances in it to parts of his "Mysterious Stranger" manuscripts [Gribben 381: Lyon's journal].

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam about problems with the excavation of the Redding house [MTP].

June 2 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Santa left at 3:14 and I came back to build a fire in my study and to settle down and read Dr. Long's reply to Roosevelt's attack on his books of nature[.] I went to sleep in the chaise lounge and rested some weary things within me, and went down at 7 o'clock to a solitary dinner, for the King had lunched with the Rogers's. To my delight the King came wandering into the room with the salad, and then he talked steadily until after 10. He'd like to have Paine double column one or 2 of Long's books with one or two of Roosevelt's and he wants to write an article himself on this debate. After dinner we talked in the library. He wants to take the "Mysterious Stranger" MS over for Kipling to see, for parts of it are represented in "Puck of Pook's Farm" that I took down to the King last night. Then he talked about missionaries, with not much respect for them [MTP TS 63]. Note: The references here are to the Theodore Roosevelt-William Joseph Long clash over Long's nature books. Gribben gives Long (1867-1952) and lists his Beasts of the Field (1901) among Twain's library [419].

June 3 Monday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Chatto & Windus. "Mr. Clemens asks me to write for him & say that he must refer you to the London Harpers, and say to them that he has no objection himself to the cheaper edition of the three books you mention; but that as he is a sort of partner of the Harpers, he cannot give his consent without consulting them" [MTP].

Sam also wrote an invitation to H.H. Rogers, Jr. and Mary B. Rogers, also in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

The pleasure of the company of

Mr. & Mrs. H. H. Rogers, jr.

is requested at luncheon at the Voss domicile on Wednesday, 1.30 p. m. to meet Mr. Clemens, the celebrated humorist.

Informal

Dress not necessary.

Only clothes [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal quoted the above invitation: Here at 6:15 the King came slipping up to my room with just his silk underclothes on—such a beautiful man he is—with a little invitation for Mary and Harry Rogers to lunch here on Wednesday—"to meet the celebrated humorist" [quote of last 3 lines of above invitation here]. He said this morning that he'd like to have Miss Hobby hurry and finish copying the "Mysterious Stranger" ms., "like to have her pull off that job in a hurry as the prophet used to say."

He is my most complete delight. Evenings he sits in the living room under the great electric light and he seems to be all the colors of soap bubbles, for there is a great red shade that excludes the light from every one but the King [MTP TS 64].

John B. Downing wrote from Middleport, Ohio. to Sam, enclosing a clipping ("Londoner Remembers Old Times on the River" about John E. Rowland) sent to him from Daytona, Fla. By Dr. G.E. Watton.

On arrival at Baltimore, several took me by the hand calling me 'Mr. Clemens' etc, by which I learned you were being entertained by the Governor and wife. Col Latham, Wm R Hoel and Belden were with you on the Quaker City after which you wrote 'Innocents Abroad'—all from Cincinnati & all dead. Is this correct? I was a Cub under Hoel who with the others named went up in a balloon and had their ribs broke. On George Smiths farm near Waymouth Ohio. I was to go on Quaker City with above named party but got broke, on Poker and am reformed now; like Bob Taylor, Gov of Tenn occasionally speak a piece and play the fiddle. Of course, you remember Rowland, —Downing [MTP].

Ella McMahon wrote to Sam on a card pasted with an article from the NY Sun for June 3, “An English Opinion of Samuel L. Clemens. / From the Spectator.” The article recalled Sam’s involvement in the Batavia disaster, and spoke to the upcoming Oxford degree. “But he is above all, the fearless, upholder of all that is clean, noble, straightforward, innocent and manly...Mark Twain ...stands for all that Englishmen like best.” Ella wrote one sentence under the clipping “‘So say we all of us’ – an American echo voiced by yours truly” [MTP].

June 4 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: We dined with the Ronalds’s tonight. She was like a pretty marquise, and it was nice to fly along home in the electric jigger. The King was in behind a bank of green stuff and so I couldn’t see him at all, but he wore his white clothes, and was beautiful to look upon. I came home very much exhausted and threw myself on the bed in my evening gown to read a letter from Mother...[MTP TS 64].

Bliss Carman, wrote to Sam. “If you should meet Mr. [Mitchell] Kinnerly, who is to be a fellow passenger with you on Saturday, pray recognize him as one of the decent people of the world” [MTP].

Oscar T. Crosby wrote for the New York Cahill Telharmonic Co. to Sam thanking him for his kind words which would be helpful when transmitted to the Mayor [MTP]. See After May 22 for Sam’s earlier reply.

K. Minoura wrote from Tokyo, Japan on “Hochi Shimbun” letterhead (“The Oldest News Paper In Japan”) to ask Sam for “A few words from your pen” on any “opinion on things Japanese” [MTP].

June 5 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tonight we dined at the Mortimers in a very beautiful house, 16 of us. I sat between Dr. Rushmore and Mr. Pell, and had a very good time. They have wonderful pewter there and great stone carved fireplaces. It was a very formal dinner, and so the King wore black. Tomorrow we start for N.Y. [MTP TS 65]. Note: Edward C. Rushmore. The Tuxedo Club 1908 book lists five men named Pell; Herbert C. Pell as a founder of the Club.

J.W. Bothwell wrote to Theo. De Vinne & Co. [MTP]. (Previously catalogued as to Clemens).

June 6 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today we came into town to begin the preparations for England. It’s a good thing that Ashcroft can go with him, but it has been making me heart-sick I think. I drifted into a headache and staggered about the house, but went down to dinner. Mr. Wark was here, and Mr. Paine, and after dinner the King led the way at once to the billiard room. I sat with those 2 sweet children for awhile and they gave me a ring, a lapis lazuli, in a quaint setting. I went to the billiard room for a very little while to show my new ring and to watch that darling game, but I couldn’t stay long, for the fiery red snake was feeding its way up into my head, and my bed was the best place on earth [MTP TS 65]. Note: Charles E. Wark, “Will,” Clara’s pianist.

John A. Kirlicks wrote from Houston, Tex to Sam, somewhat upset that his poem had been returned by the Century Magazine. “I now enclose it to you to make such use of it as your judgment suggests in giving it the broadest circulation” [MTP]. Note: The poem is not in the file.

Lyman Pierson Powell wrote from Northhampton, Mass. to thank Sam for his letter, and to advise he’d send his book on Christian Science by Putnam’s when it came out. He claimed he’d gotten closer to Mrs. Eddy than any other critic [MTP].

June 6 after – Butterick Publishing Co. for Theodore Dreiser sent Clemens a printed card announcing that Theodore Dreiser “had taken charge of the editorial departments of The Delineator” [MTP].

June 7 Friday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote a dedication to Steve Gillis: “To / Steve Gillis / with the unabated love / of his oldest friend— / Mark Twain / New York, June 7, 1907” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today I'm ill, ill all day, the King went to lunch with David Munro and one or two or three or 4 others. Maj. Leigh and ABP. Before he left he came and sat with me, and when he came back and I was showing the packing of the King's trunk to Ashcroft he brought me a great pink rose that had been a part of the dinner decoration and AB brought me another. He had pounded out his feelings about Roosevelt and was great, so the applause was heavy. I got up in time for dinner, the King's last dinner before his sailing, and sat with him in his room as he smoked his long calabash pipe. Just sat there and pretended to talk, there were a few things to make an excuse over. It is always so peaceful in the King's room, there is something so soothing in his smoking [MTP TS 65-66].

Educational Theatre For Children sent a telegram wishing Sam a pleasant voyage & safe return [MTP].

Stephen Leacock wrote from Orilla, Canada: "Dear Mr. Clemens: The Monthly hasn't come yet; but I look forward to getting it..." [Univ. of Chicago Regenstein Library; copy by Tenney]. Note: evidently Clemens had written to Leacock; not extant.

J.W.T. Ley for Dickens Fellowship, London wrote to invite Sam to their Gallery, from July 19 to Aug. 28 [MTP].

Cornelius Vanderbilt for Robert Fulton Monument wrote to Sam acknowledging his "very interesting letter of May 20th regarding the passage of the Bill by the State Legislature of New York, granting our Association the two blocks of land under water on the Hudson River front, for the erection of the Water Gate and Memorial to Robert Fulton." He understood Sam had volunteered to ask Carnegie, while in London, for a liberal subscription [MTP].

Dorothy Butes began a letter to Sam from Alton, N.H. that she finished on June 8. She was having "a jolly time" camping in "a rustic cottage overlooking the lake" with 11 other girls. "I hope you will be glad to come back to 'Old New York,' after all your triumphs in London..." [MTP].

In his A.D. Sam recalled that his children greatly enjoyed "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" [Gribben 326].

Chapters from "My Autobiography—XIX" ran in the N.A.R. p.241-51.

June 8 Saturday – Clara Clemens' 33rd birthday. She saw her father off for England [MTB 1381]

Exactly 40 years from the day he sailed on the Quaker City, Sam and Ralph W. Ashcroft sailed on the S.S. Minneapolis for England [MTHHR 626n1]. Clara Clemens, Isabel Lyon, and Albert Bigelow Paine saw the pair off at the pier, Paine having returned from his information-gathering interviews in the West. Paine had heard of Sam's Oxford degree only upon reaching New Orleans on his return to New York [MTB 1377-9]. The New York Times, June 9, p.9 reported:

MARK TWAIN SAILS FOR OXFORD HONORS

To be Made a Doctor of Literature by the English University.

TELLS OF AUTOBIOGRAPHY

Humorist Says It Will Make Some Persons "Sit Up and Take Notice."

Samuel L. Clemens, known to everybody best as "Mark Twain," sailed for England yesterday on the Atlantic Transport liner Minneapolis. On June 26 he will receive from Oxford University the degree of Doctor of Literature, though, as he remarked, that did not mean that he intended to doctor literature.

Mr. Clemens did not wear his famous white suit, and there was a faint suspicion of moisture in his eyes as he declared that this might be his last visit to London.

"I may never go to London again," he said, "until I come back to this sphere again after I am dead, and then I would like to live in London. I spent seven years there, and I am going back to see the boys."

"Do you enjoy idleness?" he was asked.

"Splendidly. I put in two hours a day dictating my autobiography, but I don't want it published until after I am dead. And I want to be thoroughly dead when it is published. No rumors, but really dead. I have made it caustic, fiendish, and as devilish as I possible can. It might be what you call a sensation, for I have spared no one. It will occupy many volumes, and I will go right on writing until I am called to the angels and receive a harp.

"The story of my life will make certain people sit up and take notice, but I will use my influence not to have it published until the children of some of those mentioned in it are dead. I tell you it will be something awful. It will be what you might call good reading."

"Have you included all of Mrs. Eddy's friends?"

"Yes, you will find them all there all right."

At this point the author fished a dilapidated cigar from his pocket and finding it of no use threw it overboard, declaring that he would not smoke again. A moment later he begged a cigar from a friend.

A number of Mr. Clemens's friends hunted for him, quite overlooking him as he stood at the rail. Finally they caught sight of him, and after salutations had been exchanged said: "Where is the white suit? We had been looking for the suit and quite overlooked you."

"Well," said the author, "I have discarded the suit for the moment, but your fears may be set at rest, for I am going to wear it again. I am wearing this overcoat to keep out the heat which isn't here, and as for the style of my clothes they are always selected with due regard to my peculiar style of beauty."

Mr. Clemens will return on the Minneapolis.

The New York Sun bested the Times and other city papers by putting the story on the front page, June 9

TWAIN OFF TO BE DOCTORED.

Will Keep Writing His Terrible Autobiography Until He Joins the Angels.

Mark Twain sailed yesterday [June 8] aboard the Atlantic Transport liner Minneapolis for London to receive from Oxford University the degree of doctor of literature. He said he was glad to go over and greet his old college chums. He expected to receive his degree on June 26. He had booked himself to start back on the Minneapolis on June 29, but he might stay over a boat or two more if his energy held out.

"Are you doing any work now?" the youngest and most serious reporter asked.

"Work? I retired from work on my seventieth birthday. Since then I have been putting in merely twenty-six hours a day dictating my autobiography, which, as John Phoenix said in regard to his autograph, may be relied on as authentic, as it 'is written exclusively by me[']'. But it is not to be published in full until I am thoroughly dead. I have made it as caustic, fiendish and devilish as possible. It will fill many volumes and I shall continue writing it until the time comes for me to join the angels. It is going to be a terrible autobiography. It will make the hair of some folks curl. But it cannot be published until I am dead and the persons mentioned in it and their children and grandchildren are dead. It is something awful."

"Is Mrs. Eddy mentioned in it?"

"Yes, she's there, all right."

"Can you tell us the names of some of the notables that are here to see you off?"

"I don't know. I am so shy. My shyness takes a peculiar phase. I never look a person in the face. The reason is that I am afraid they may know me and that I may not know them, which makes it very embarrassing for both of us. I always wait for the other person to speak. I know lots of people, but I don't know who they are. It is all a matter of ability to observe things. I never observe anything now. I gave up the habit years ago. You should keep a habit up if you want to become proficient in it. For instance, I was a pilot once, but I gave it up and I do not believe the captain of the Minneapolis would let me navigate his ship to London. Still, if I think that he is not on the job I may go up on the bridge and offer him a few suggestions.”

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Saturday night and the King has gone. He sailed on the Minnesota at 4 o’clock. There were so many reporters about him that we could not stay very long and Santa wanted to come home. It seemed so strange and pitiful to have to leave him. I was lying weak and sick when AB came to tell me that he had seen the dear King surrounded by a hideous lot of people and a man ½ drunk threw his arm around the King’s neck and said he’d known him 40 years ago. I do hope Ashcroft will brace up and take care of him. AB made some photographs of him, and stayed to see the ship move off. It’s all wrong to let him go off like that. He is going for honors, but he ought to go with the proper protection too [MTP TS 66].

Dorothy Butes finished her June 7 camping letter. “We tried crossing the Brook again this morning, for our study-hour, but we fell in!” [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II sent a telegram: “Aunt Sue and all Langdons send love and best wishes for a splendid time” [MTP].

Julia Langdon Loomis sent a telegram: “Father and Edward join me in the deepest affection and best wishes to you” [MTP].

On the first page of the Lyon-Ashcroft MS, Clemens wrote “Major Leigh gave us the first case of Queen Anne whisky June 8/07” [L-A MS]. Note: the page contained a list of dates that cases had been acquired, intended as ammunition against Isabel Lyon. Frederick T. Leigh of Harpers. The dates: Jan. 8, Feb. 18, Apr. 15, July 22, Aug. 31, Sept., Nov. 3—all 1908. Also Jan. 18, 1909. The total of eleven cases.

The Reader (London) ran a review of “King Leopold’s Soliloquy,” on p. 146. In part:

Mark Twain never jested in grimmer earnest than he does in “King Leopold’s Soliloquy: A Satire” (Unwin, 1s. net). For some years past the administration of the Congo Free State has been a shame to the humanity of Europe, to say nothing of its Christianity; the King of the Belgians reaping an enormous personal profit from it, and wearing the dirty disgrace of it with a beautiful air of martyrdom.

June 8-17 Monday – On board the S.S. Minneapolis en route to England, Sam wrote to Carlotta Welles (whom he dubbed “Charlie”) on a calling card:

“Charlie, dear, you don’t know what you are missing. There’s more than two thousand porpoises in sight, & eleven whales, & sixty icebergs, & both Dippers, & seven rainbows, & all the battleships of all the navies, & me. / SLC” [MTAq 40].

Sam’s A.D. of July wrote of the voyage and of Carlotta (Charlie):

We had a lazy, comfortable, homelike, nine-day passage, over smooth seas, with not enough motion in a thousand miles to make a baby sick. The ships of that line are very large and very steady, and most satisfactorily slow and deliberate. They have spacious decks, and every passenger has a deal more room than he needs; they are freight ships, and have accommodation for only a handful of passengers. This one was full, with only a hundred and fifty-four. Fifty-one of them were college girls, with their protectors, going out on vacation to study Europe. This was pleasant to me, who am rather abnormally partial to young girls. I took care of most of these, and did it very well, as everybody conceded. The pick of the flock was a very pretty and very sweet child of seventeen who looked only fourteen, and who seemed only fourteen, and remained only fourteen to me to the end of the voyage. I selected her before we were out of sight of land, and borrowed her from her three elderly aunts and placed her at my side at the captain’s table, and from that time until the end of the voyage she had no occasion to miss her mother—if I do say it myself that shouldn’t. Her name was Carlotta but I changed it to Charley, which seemed to me to improve it. She was a gifted and cultivated little creature [MTFWE 11-12].

Also on board was Prof. Archibald Henderson of the University of North Carolina. Henderson was on his way to London to gather information on a biography of George Bernard Shaw whom Sam would meet on the dock at Tilbury, England. See June 18 entries. Paine also notes Rev. Dr. Francis Landey Patton, President of the Princeton Theological Seminary, Peter Richards, and some school-girls were on board [MTB 1380]. Note: see June 17 for more on Patton and Richards. Henderson would produce three volumes on Shaw, in 1911, 1932, and 1956.

Frederick T. Leigh sent a “Marconigram” telegram to Sam on the S.S. Minneapolis sometime during his voyage (June 8 to 18): “Overlooked asking about your favorite fairy story will you telegraph its name” [MTP].

The London Daily Mail also sent a “Marconigram” telegram to Sam on the S.S. Minneapolis sometime during his voyage (June 8 to 18): “Should like on business terms 500 words exclusive interview preferably written yourself on aspects American rush Europe and British attraction for yourself our representative meets you Tilbury / Daily Mail” [MTP].

June 9 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Ah, it was fortunate that Santa and Will [Charles E. Wark] and I went off for a holiday up to the Bronx and to drive at—I cannot remember where. I believe my little remaining reason would have gone for I was growing lonelier with every hour, if we had not had real and new diversion. I shall stay on here until Thurs. or Friday, for now that C.C. has put all the house-keeping into my hands I shall begin tomorrow with these upper rooms [MTP TS 66].

Alice Clinton wrote from London asking if he remembered her and her niece Muriel Elliot remembered him “most cordially”—would he “go a little trip on the river” with them sometime during his stay? [MTP].

W. Stillwell inexplicably sent a notice of “Lightning Fatality at Goring” with no other comments [MTP].

June 10 Monday – Peter Richards drew a sketch of Mark Twain sometime during the voyage. See insert, captioned: “Sketched from life by P. Richards.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Dusting books and cleaning Jean’s closet and thinking of a big plunging ship. A.B. came in to find me on a stepladder, and I so glad to see him, then he left, happily he missed his train and so he came back to go over instalments for the N.A. Review, but he grew tired of that—because he was tired already, so we went up to Boyagian’s [sic Boyajian Bros.] to look at mugs and bought one, a Khiva, I believe, for the new old house. At 5 o’clock le grand Howland came in to talk up an Italian trip—a debuting trip, for Santa. It sounds sweeter than anything that could happen to for a young singer, for his scheme, Will said he is afraid it is just that, so I had to use the word plan—is to go to Siena, Padua, Piacenza, Bologna, Venice, Brindisi, Pola and other little cities. Oh, the little cities of Italy. We are all excitement, but Santa is beginning a tonsillitis [MTP TS 67].

Ella M. Glynes sent Sam a luncheon invitation from the Society of American Women in London [MTP].

Louis M. Howland wrote to Sam from Paris, addressing him as “Brother Player.” The letter is an appreciation of JA with the last paragraph in French [MTP].

Tom Pechey wrote on a mourning card from Tonbridge, England: “Dear old friend. / Wouldn’t you like a chat over old Virginia City Times? My wife and I would be delighted if you would come down to lunch with us” [MTP].

Francis H. Skrine wrote from London to “implore” Sam “not to leave England without giving us a chance of shaking you by the hand, of only for the sake of old times” [MTP].

June 11 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: This morning a man name o’ Johnson came in to talk to me about the King’s first editions. He was sent by Cartoonist Oppen to AB, but not finding either he “bumped the bumps himself” and came along. He wants to make a bibliography of the King’s books. He sees money in it and wants to take me into a kind of partnership—“graft”—the King will say for I have written him a scrap of a note about it. I am so grateful for work, hard work, for now the loneliness is greater as Santa is ill with tonsillitis, really wretchedly ill. She is so enchanting a creature.

Jean got the King to promise that he would cable her and not Santa, upon his arrival in England, and Mr. Ashcroft was good enough to say that he’d cable his home office here and have them telephone at once to me. For Jean may or may not bother to let us know. Poor old Jean.

Poor Therese cried bitterly up on my room when she told me of Jean’s unkindnesses. A long, busy, monotonous day, cleaning the guest room.

Took Jean’s new maid Blanche up to her [MTP TS 68].

Lord Avebury (John Lubbock) wrote a short invitation for Sam to visit on the 25th or any day while he was there, and he would “ask a few literary & scientific friends to meet you” [MTP].

Cronin, Reading & Co., Tailors, Plymouth, England wrote to Sam: “Dear Sir / We have been anxiously waiting to hear from you in your account, kindly let us have remittance by return as we cannot possibly let it stand any longer” [MTP]. Note: found in Sept. 19, 1907 file from William M. Clemens.

Harry Windsor Dearborn wrote for the Robert Fulton Monument Assoc. that he was sending “two exact copies of the invitations to Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland, as well as to Mr. and Mrs. H.H. Rogers” for the Sept. 23 affair [MTP].

W.K. Halstead wrote a postcard from Terre Haute, Ind. appreciating Sam’s Autobiography [MTP].

Rudyard Kipling wrote from Sussex, England,

...so glad to get your note of 31st May and to learn that you are staying at Browns—our pet particular hotel. / My June engagements (which are thick) have obliged me to decline several opportunities of meeting you but I didn’t care so much because we have got to meet in long red gowns and mortarboard caps at Oxford on the 25th June. / It’s delightful to think of you on this side the water and I don’t despair of seeing you down here. You can’t be over for only eleven days... [MTP].

Henry W. Lucy wrote from London enclosing invitations he hoped Sam would accept. Lucy reminded that Clemens had “meanly left New York on the very morning—is it four years ago?—that Mrs. Lucy and I set foot on it’s marble wharfs. So you owe us some compensation” [MTP].

June 12 Wednesday – H.H. Rogers replied from Vichy, France to Sam, likely to his May 29 from Tuxedo Park. He’d rec’d Sam’s letter and thought they would meet in London as he was also invited by Lancaster of Liverpool to the Pilgrim’s Luncheon. Rogers family’s plans were to go to Paris on June 19 and to London on June 23, then on to Liverpool on June 27 and sail from Queenstown the next day. He announced if Sam wished to return with them they’d be delighted: “The only essentials this time will be drunkenness, profanity and sodomy” [MTP]. He also wrote about the upcoming Jamestown event:

That Jamestown show will come off as arranged. You and Cleveland and Harry are welcome to everything but if you take on board that fakir from Washington I'll have him dumped from a Water Closet. Where better dung is made. You remember Rice's yard about the Cheese and what was on it [MTHHR 627]. Note: fakir was likely T. Roosevelt. Interestingly, Roosevelt had referred to William Joseph Long, nature author, as the "nature fakir" [Gribben 419]; Sam was likely playing off of T.R.'s label.

Calverto's Entertainment Bureau, Glasgow, Scotland wrote to solicit "a short lecture tour" [MTP].

Lillie Planner asked if Clemens could "spare a few minutes" to talk with "a young woman journalist" whom he had met some years before when she was 12 [MTP].

Emilie R. Rogers replied to Sam's letter to H.H. Rogers, that he would be glad to see Sam, "even if it be for a short time, in London," as he expected to be there the evening of the 23rd and they would stay at Claridge's [MTP].

June 13 Thursday – After mailing his letter of the prior day to Liverpool and learning that Sam went to London, not Liverpool, H.H. Rogers wrote again from Vichy, France, essentially repeating his news and plans of the prior letter, signing "Admiral" [MTHHR 628].

Isabel Lyon's journal summary: Lyon went to Redding but refused to allow a female to drive her from Branchville to the new house site, as she'd been in two accidents prior with female drivers. Finally a male was there to drive her:

Lounsbury came along and we drove up to the site of the King's house, to find that the new one is a great blunder. Oh, dreadful. I stopped work until I could consult Santa and J.H. [John Howells] and next week we are going up again. AB came up and was as distressed as I was over the position. He took me down to his house for luncheon, a trout out of his brook, and then we went up to my house to meet Gene Adams and consult about the repairs and alterations in my house. Oh, it's so darling, and it is going to be beautiful. It was a day full of good things, in spite of "Bess" and the bad site of the house. I was taken there by Allah and just in time [MTP TS 69].

Professor John Rhys (1840-1915) "Principal of Jesus College, Oxford" sent a small card: "I am writing to the curators for the tickets for Lockyer's ladies and for Mr. Clemens's daughter: they will send them here I expect in time and we shall see that the one for Mr. Clemens reaches you [unknown person]. By the way, will you see about Mr. Clemens's gown for the degree?" [MTP].

On board the S.S. Minneapolis, Sam had his younger fans (unidentified). See insert: [Richards' 1912 Zeichner and Geseichnete].

The London Tribune, page 1, trumpeted Sam's upcoming arrival. In part:

MARK TWAIN'S VISIT.

HIS POPULARITY AMONG ENGLISH READERS.

The news that Mark Twain is on his way to this country to receive an honorary degree from the University of Oxford creates widespread interest and awakens many pleasing recollections. For nearly forty years the genial American humorist has been popular in this country, yet, although he is in his seventy-second year, and began his literary career before many of his competitors of the present day were born, he remains as brimful of fun as ever. His books, too, remain as popular on both sides of the Atlantic. Probably there is not a discount bookseller in England who does not keep some, at least, of his works in stock, alongside those of Scott and Dickens and Thackeray and George Eliot.

June 14 Friday – On board the Minneapolis en route to England Sam wrote an aphorism for German cartoonist Peter Richards, who was returning to Berlin after working for various US newspapers for two decades: “Taking the pledge will not make bad liquor good, but it will improve it. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / For / Mr. Richards / June 14/07.” [MTP]. Note: see June 16 for more on Richards.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: All day I have been thinking about the little Redding house, and it is a good thing again to have something to take my mind away from loneliness.

Santa is better and I spend every evening in her sitting room, near her. Oh the sweet flower-creature that she is—made all of fire and dew.

I’ve had the mail sent in from Tuxedo, for I cannot go out and stay there alone. I don’t really like the place, anyway, so terribly artificial [MTP TS 69-70].

John Japp, Mayor of Liverpool, wrote to Sam, still lobbying for a visit and encouraged by what Sam had said on the eve of his departure from NY, that his stay might be lengthened [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft replied for Sam on June 19.

Charles Lancaster, for Hughes & Lancaster, London, sent a letter with his son, Wilfred, from H.H. Rogers, in Vichy, France. Lancaster gave Rogers’ itinerary, arriving Sunday evening June 23 in London. At the end of the typed letter, Lancaster wrote by hand: “It is a great pleasure to have you in England again. I did not expect it when we parted on the Kanawha” [MTP].

Frank N. Doubleday, for Doubleday, Page & Co. Wrote from NY that one Sam Everett would be staying at Brown’s Hotel beginning June 24. Doubleday asked if Sam could say a word to him and cheer him up. “Perhaps you can advise him about Oxford which he wants to see.” He also hoped Sam had seen Kipling” by the time he read this [MTP].

Helen MacMillan (Mrs. Maurice C. MacMillan) wrote from London to Sam, recalling Sam’s last visit with Livy, and inviting him to join them and a few friends on Monday, June 24 or July 1, July 3, and to dine [MTP].

June 15 Saturday – On board the Minneapolis en route to England Sam gave a reading from his Autobiography MS, though it is not known just what he read [Fatout, MT Speaking 676].

Written across the top of the second and third pages of a concert program held in the saloon in aid of the Seaman’s Orphanage at 8:30 p.m.: “Please tell the story of the twins, one got drunk and affected the other” [MTP]. Note: Source gives this as to Carlotta Welles.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Busy all day in the King’s room, cleaning his closet, and his drawers of mss. and dear little clippings and pipes and things that he takes interest in. Usually the clippings are of the most violentest crimes. Oh terrible things that are “permitted by a just God.” and usually there is a comment in the King’s handwriting on the margin. ~~How I do love this life of mine—with Mother & the King & Santa.~~

Santa was bursting with glee tonight and called me Nan-Pan-Pete-Pan, and snuggled her darling head in my neck. I wish I would write of all the wonders that are occurring in all the lives about me [MTP TS 70].

Charles Lancaster for Hughes & Lancaster wrote to Sam about including H.H. Rogers in the Pilgrims Club luncheon given in Sam's honor [MTP].

Henry Anckefill wrote to Sam from Durban, Natal, S. Africa sending a satire essay [MTP].

Charles Frohman sent a "Marconigram" telegram to Sam on the S.S. Minneapolis, asking him to visit at the Savoy Hotel in London [MTP].

W.B. Northrop wrote from London to Sam, c/o Minneapolis. "I wonder if you still remember the NEW YORK WORLD reporter who saw you at Lake Saranac some time ago? I enclose a photo I took then which might refresh your memory. / A newspaper here has asked me to get a photograph of you and I am writing to ask if you would see me" [MTP].

Robert P. Porter wrote on Brown's Hotel, London stationery with invitations and a Memoranda of the various Oxford, Jesus College, events on June 25-30 [MTP].

Charles F. Taney wrote from London that he hoped to be able to meet the Minneapolis on her arrival, but if he could not to accept his welcome. Rogers was anxious to know where Clemens would stay upon his arrival—could Sam fill out the enclosed telegraph form? [MTP].

The New York Times, June 16, p. C1, datelined London June 15, announced London was "eagerly awaiting" Mark Twain's arrival. "Of all Americans he stands next to Roosevelt in the admiration and affection of the British people."

Spectator published an anonymous review of King Leopold's Soliloquy, p. 947. Tenney: "'While we are wholly in sympathy with Mark Twain's purpose, we cannot approve of his method. The literary strategy of the attack is not to our liking.' Fiction is not an appropriate means here, and 'it is not used with any great subtlety or art. The appendix is much more to the purpose'; in it a Mr. Morel provides details of the Belgian public relations cover-up.' It is especially deplorable to see that in America high-placed Roman ecclesiastics have taken the wrong side'" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Second Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1978 p. 175].

June 16 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: It’s a hot Sunday night and I’m sitting in Santa’s music room. The sounds from the streets would make one think of a terrible carnival; for the automobiles whirl along with toots and siren calls and trumpetings and now there is a motorcycle zipping down toward Washington Square and small boys are making whistles of grass blades and as I glance out of the window couples—and couples—forever saunter past. ~~It is I alone who sit companionless~~ [MTP TS 70].

Peter Richards, the German cartoonist who later claimed to have shared a cabin with Twain during the voyage to England on the S.S. Minneapolis, and to be his “personal caricaturist,” did several sketches of Twain, including a card with two sketches; Six postcards by Richards, whom Sam called a “jack-legged draughtsman” and signed by Clemens, were auctioned off on the last night of voyage. Paine notes one card brought $25, “perhaps a record price for a single Mark Twain signature” at that time [MTB 1381]. See insert [Zeichner und Gezeichnete 17]. Note: In a 1933 article, “Reminiscences of Mark Twain” in Library Review, p. 19-22, P. Richards claims his first meeting with Twain was in 1903, when Sam sat for Richards to do his pen-portrait for an unnamed “leading New York Weekly.” He further claims to have done “hundreds of caricatures of the great humorist.” He also forged an inscription and Mark Twain’s signature on the cover of his 1912 book, Zeichner und Geseichnete. Also, the Southeast Missourian (Cape Girardeau) for Sept. 22, 1927 printed this squib, though Sam was headed to Oxford, not a tour of Europe, and Richards shared a cabin with Ashcroft, not Clemens.

Mark Twain’s Hair Highly Cherished

Berlin, Sept. 22.—(AP)—A story about Mark Twain not widely known is told by Peter Richards, the newspaper artist now living in Berlin, who traveled with the American humorist as his personal caricaturist from New York to Liverpool on the former’s tour of Europe.

Both men shared a cabin into which Mark Twain was wont to rush at all hours of the day to vent his wrath against the many gushing young women, and others not quite so young, among the passengers who insisted upon having “just a lock of dear Mr. Clemens’ hair as a souvenir.”

Several photographs were taken of Mark Twain with various people during the voyage. One, dated June 16, 1907 by the MTP shows Sam in his white suit sitting with a dozen or so others in front of a deck shuffleboard (“horse billiards”) with one capped unidentified man holding a shuffleboard stick.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

J.W. Sloper wrote from Leadville, Colo. asking to be informed when Mark Twain's biography was expected to be completed, anxious to read it as he was working his way around the world [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd. July 30, 07"

June 17 Monday – The last night on board the Minneapolis en route to England, Sam wrote a poem on the back of a menu to Carlotta Welles:

There's many a maid that's dear & sweet,
In Paris, Versailles, Marly
But not one maid in any of those before-mentioned towns
That can compare with Charley. / M.T.

Front seat—don't forget [MTAq 41].

As was the usual custom for the last night on large steamers, there was a concert for the benefit of the Seaman's Hospital Fund. This concert was held in the dining room, and Sam's above reference to "Front seat" likely was for this event. Carlotta Welles played the violin.

Sam's A.D. of July recorded the event: On the last night out there was the usual concert.... Charley played a violin solo to admiration, and astonished everybody. She wasn't much bigger than her fiddle, but she made it talk a moving and majestic language. I made a speech; other excellent people sang songs, and punished the piano. Rev. Dr. Patton, that verbal and intellectual wonder, twenty-five years President of Princeton University, conducted the concert, then finished his services with a brilliant exhibition of what a university president can do when he turns himself into an auctioneer. There was a jack-legged draughtsman on board [Peter Richards] who made some unimaginably poor caricatures of me on six postcards; I autographed them, and Rev. Dr. Patton set himself the task of auctioneering off the six for eighty dollars [MTFWE 12].

Note: Francis Landey Patton (1843-1932), twelfth president of Princeton, was in the post until 1902 when Woodrow Wilson succeeded him; thereafter until his retirement in 1913 he was President of Princeton Theological Seminary. See postcard no. 6 insert under June 16.

Cooley writes of Carlotta Welles, whom Sam evidently met on board:

On the Minneapolis he attempted to establish another friendship with a young lady, but this time he met with less success. Carlotta Welles apparently reminded him of his daughter Susy, and consequently he showed greater interest in "Charlie," as he nicknamed her, than she did in him. Despite his charming advances and hyperbolic notes, Carlotta Welles was unmoved. Many years later she recalled her experience with the famous author: "I used to get restless and chafed at times at being expected to sit quietly with him when my inclination as to race around" (Carlotta Welles Briggs to Dixon Wecter, MTP, 4 November 1947)" [35].

Paine gives us some of Twain's speech in this last night's event:

He wore his white suit on this occasion, and in the course of his speech referred to it. He told first of the many defects in his behavior, and how members of his household had always tried to keep him straight. The children, he said, had fallen into the habit of calling it "dusting papa off." Then he went on:

When my daughter came to see me off last Saturday at the boat she slipped a note in my hand and said, "Read it when you get aboard the ship." I didn't think of it again until day before yesterday, and it was a "dusting off." And if I carry out all the instructions that I got there I shall be more celebrated in England for my behavior than for anything else. I got instructions how to act on every occasion.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

She underscored "Now, don't you wear white clothes on ship or on shore until you get back," and I intended to obey. I have been used to obeying my family all my life, but I wore the white clothes tonight because the trunk that has the dark clothes in it is in the cellar. I am not apologizing for the white clothes; I am only apologizing to my daughter for not obeying her [MTB 1381].

R.D. Blumenfield for the Daily Express, London wrote to Clemens:

I am sending our Mr. Coulander to rout you out early. I am doing this because I fear other reporters will try to do so first, and I want the best interview there is to be had with you.

I am emboldened to make this request, firstly because Col Harvey told me the other day that you wouldn't mind; secondly because of my acquaintance with you (you will have forgotten me) and thirdly because being the only American Editor in London I want to keep my countrymen to the fore. / Yours...[MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today the trinity of us, Will, Santa and I came out to Tuxedo. The air is delicious after the stiflingness of the city. I telephoned to the steamship office and found that the Minnesota is to pass the Lizard tonight between 8 and 9 and as we were entering the carriage Will said that the ship had been reported by wireless at Broro Head?

All last week Utah was down to 6½ and lower perhaps and this morning in despair I read that the bottom of that mine had been reached. I telephoned down to Mr. Broughton who said that the report was quite without foundation.

The peace of the country is great after the crash and bang and smells of the city [MTP TS 70-71].

Marjorie Bowen wrote from London: "Thank you so much for your letter—it is delightful of you to have remembered me and I am looking forward so much to the great honour and pleasure of seeing you." Even though she knew he would be "surrounded with people" at his hotel, could he have lunch with her and Miss Bisland at the Ritz, which was close to where he was staying? [MTP].

Louis Hillier wrote for The Foreign Press Assoc. in London, Salisbury Hotel. "I beg to enclose a programme of a Special Matinee which I am arranging in Aid of the ... Association in London." Could he come and give them "one or two little stories"? [MTP].

Sidney Lee wrote from London, congratulations in the tiniest hand. Did Sam remember when he met the Lee family in NY in 1903 at Carnegie's? [MTP].

W.B. Northrop sent telegram to the Minneapolis: "Hope you will see me on arrival" [MTP].

Kate Douglas Riggs, in London for 3 weeks, wrote she had rearranged her departure so as to see the Oxford ceremony on the 25th, but seats were so difficult to obtain—could he help? "...do you remember that I am a modest little Litt.D. myself of Bowdoin College?" [MTP].

W.N. Shansfield wrote for the Whitefriar's Club, of which Sam was an honorary member. Would Sam join them for "a quiet run down the River next Saturday"? Not one to be up on such things, Shansfield added after his signature, "I need not say that, if Mrs. Clemens is with you, we shall feel greatly honoured if she will come also" [MTP]. Note: Shansfield was not the only writer to make this error.

Mrs. K. Suart wrote having heard Clemens was in London, and offering some dates for him to come and visit. Was Clara along? [MTP].

Frederick C. Van Duzer for American Society in London wrote Sam an invitation for their Banquet at the Hotel Cecil, Strand, on Thursday July 4 [MTP].

June 18 Tuesday – The S.S. Minneapolis docked at Tilbury, England at 4 a.m.

Just after 10 a.m., Sam came down the gangplank and was roused by the lusty cheers of the stevedores. In a few minutes he first met George Bernard Shaw (1856-1950) on the dock. The Pall Mall Gazette, p. 7, reported:

“G.B.S.” AND MARK TWAIN.

FIRST MEETING OF TWO GREAT MEN

THE PALMIST’S PREDICTION.

A BIOGRAPHY AND AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

By our Special Representative.

Three of us were awaiting this morning the arrival of Mark Twain. The boat train was late in starting from Tilbury, the platforms at St. Pancras were dreary, and so much of the sky as was not obscured by engine smoke was overcast and cheerless. It was looking like the dulllest wait on record, when into the station there sailed the tall, picturesque figure of Mr. George Bernard Shaw.

Of course, Mr. Shaw had come to meet Mark Twain. There was no other possible conclusion. Now, indeed, would there be reward for the waiting.

“You have come,” I asked, addressing Mr. Shaw, “to meet Mark Twain?”

“Mark Twain?” he exclaimed in surprise; “no, I have not come to meet Mark Twain; I have come to meet Professor Henderson.”

“And who is Professor Henderson?”

“Professor Archibald Henderson, Professor of Mathematics of the University of North Carolina. He is writing my biography, and has come over to find out something about me. But you, you have come to meet Mark Twain, and you have got the advantage of interviewing me.”

[...]

Mark Twain Arrives

With Such pleasantries as these, the time passed quickly enough, and something after ten, as the boat train drew up, there stepped on to the platform amongst a little group of fellow passengers a trim little figure in a suit of light grey with a wonderful head of wavy hair, white and thick as snow. It was “the wittiest man in the world,” as he has justly been described, and all the burden of his seventy-one years he seemed to have left behind him, so alert and brisk was the impression he gave.

Presently, Mr. J.G.W. MacAlister, editor of “The Library,” was kind enough to introduce us to Mr. Clemens, who said the object of his visit was to receive a degree from Oxford University, and he would also take the opportunity of seeing the pageants, which he considered a very good idea.

“Have you,” he was asked, “anything similar in America?”

“Why, yes,” he replied, “when we were celebrating our one-hundredth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence every town that had in its history some events connected with the American Revolution, did what you are doing in reviving history and impressing it upon the people. But with us it did not take so long because there was not much of it. You have to concentrate in six days the history of a thousand years.”

At this point Mr. Clemens was told that Mr. Shaw was on the platform meeting a friend who had come by the same boat.

“Yes, I know,” Mr. Clemens said. “I want to see him.”

“In the meantime can you,” he was asked, “tell us what you think of Mr. Shaw?”

“I never give an opinion,” was the reply, “unless I have studied and formed an opinion from my own deduction, and not from any one else’s.”

[...]

By this time Mr. Shaw had been found, and the great American humourist and the distinguished English dramatist, meeting for the first time, shook hands very heartily, and showed how pleased they were to see each other.

“Whilst I have been waiting,” were Mr. Shaw’s first words to Mr. Clemens, “the representatives of the Press have been asking me whether you were really serious when you wrote ‘The Jumping Frog.’”

Mr. Clemens laughed very heartily, and Mr. Shaw said he hoped he had answered correctly in telling them that he thought it was meant to be amusing.

After a brief conversation, Mr. Shaw went off with Professor Henderson and Mr. Clemens said good-bye to his fellow travellers, and moved off with Mr. Ashcroft, who has come to England with him, and Mr. MacAlister. [...] [Note: Thanks to Tom Tenney for a copy of this article; also may be seen in MTFWE 18-20].

Note: The New York Times, Jan. 19, p. 1, also ran an article on this first meeting “SHAW MEETS TWAIN AND EXPLAINS HIM”, but got it wrong again by identifying Prof. Archibald Henderson as Prof. Victor H. Henderson. The former did not publish Shaw’s biography until 1956: George Bernard Shaw: Man of the Century.

After checking into Brown’s Hotel, Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam to Marjorie Bowen.

Mr. Clemens bids me say that he will be at the Ritz to-morrow, Tuesday, at one o’clock, for the purpose of lunching with you and Miss Bisland. If Tuesday does not suit you, please telephone us in the morning, and he will try to arrange another day.

He was delighted with the flowers, and we have had them put in vases to adorn the sitting room.

I hope to-morrow will suit you, as it will be difficult to arrange another day.

You will, I know, excuse Mr. Clemens from writing you personally, but he is tired out with the day’s work, and is now resting [MTP]. Note: Sam had poked fun at the rustic Brown’s Hotel back in 1900 during a stay there. Scott speculates “He had hoped for a peaceful retreat” as the reason why he chose Brown’s, but that his “resolutions to seclude himself were soon forgotten” [290].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Harry E. Brittain, Secretary of the Pilgrims Club, London, asking to change the date “to some other day than July 3d.” Sam would also be busy on July 4 and had asked another friend (likely MacAlister) to “reserve two dates out of July 1st, 2d, 5th and 6th, and would like to give him the choice of two of these four days also.” Would Brittain telephone in the morning? [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Sidney Lee. Sam was too tired to write, but said that any day in the first week of July, save the 3rd and 4th would suit for lunch. Would Lee telephone in the morning? [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Louis N. Parker.

[written on a telegram form:]

to The Most Hon the Marquis of Bristol
The Pageant House Bury St Edmunds.

Twice I saw at Oxford the reprodⁿ of bygone English life & achievement and was convinced that Pageantry is the most instructive & most impressive way of portraying history & I very much regret my inability to witness the Pageant at Bury St. Edmunds next week [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mother’s Birthday and The King has arrived in England.

They telephoned me from Ashcroft’s office and the terrible pressure is lifted from my mind. There are no particulars so far, and the cablegram reached N.Y. at 11 o’clock. Santa and Will have been working this morning, and she isn’t strong enough for it yet. What a child she is, and what pluck she has [MTP TS 71].

Charles Lancaster for Hughes & Lancaster wrote to Clemens [MTP]. Note: not found at MTP.

Mary Cholmondeley, whom Paine identifies as the “niece of that lovable Reginald Chomondeley, and herself an old friend, sent greetings and urgent invitations” [MTB 1383].

H. Walter Barnett, London photographer, wrote asking for a sitting. “...you will doubtless remember that I have had the privilege of photographing you on several occasions both here and abroad, during the last 15 years...” [MTP].

Harry E. Brittain, for London Pilgrims advising he was arranging to have an invitation sent to H.H. Rogers “if I have to be one of the five or six who do some standing near the door.” He and his wife looked forward to dining with Clemens on July 3, 8 p.m., Savoy Hotel [MTP].

Rev. H.G. Buehler for Hotchkiss School, Lakeville, Conn. wrote to invite Sam to make an address in 1908, June 15 at 10:30 a.m. “You may obtain further information from Rev. Joseph Twichell of Hartford who has been here repeatedly and whose son, though not a Hotchkiss boy, is much loved here...” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answrd July 30, 07”

Adele Chapin wrote from London, excited Sam was there—would he come to dinner Friday, July 5? [MTP].

The London Daily Mail wrote asking for a 1,200 word article on the English climate [MTP].

Jean MacDonald Gallup wrote; “I am a little American girl living in London, and have a very great favour to ask you”—she hoped he would autograph a photo of him she had [MTP].

Cecil Gray wrote from London on Brown’s Hotel stationery: “The last occasion on which I had the pleasure of meeting—and interviewing—you was at Columbo on Good Friday 1896—eleven years ago.” He was sorry Sam was too busy to repeat the favor but could he have just five minutes? [MTP].

Mary L. Hasbrouck wrote from London wishing Sam good health and long life [MTP].

John Henniker Heaton wrote on Bath Club stationery: “Will you come over here for a swim and Turkish bath and breakfast with me at 9.15 am tomorrow”? [MTP].

Mabel Howard wrote from London, sending verses and asking Sam’s opinion [MTP]. Note: verses not in file.

Charles Lancaster wrote advising he’d passed on by wire Sam’s address to H.H. Rogers in Vichy [MTP].

Eveleen Myers wrote inviting Sam to visit them in Whitehall on the 26th at 8:15 [MTP].

W.B. Northrop wrote asking if he might take photos of Clemens in his rooms this afternoon or at about 10:30 tomorrow. “They are wanted for a weekly” [MTP].

Lillie Planner wrote from London that it was “of no use to be—or try to be—a journalist if you are an absolute worry to the man you want to interview...I won’t say an interview, cos you’ll sit downtight & not see me—just a word or two” [MTP].

Robert P. Porter wrote, “I forgot to say that I have some excellent [illegible word] for the Pageant for the 27th and 28th of June” [MTP] Note: Porter was legibly challenged.

J.W. Ryckman wrote on The American Register, Piccadilly, stationery, merely asking after his voyage, his feelings and wishing him a “most enjoyable” visit [MTP].

Francis H. Skrine wrote to ask Sam to “name the day” he’d like to meet for lunch [MTP].

Dorothy T. Stanley (widow of Henry M. Stanley) wrote:

You know I want to see you- and join right hand to right hand. I must see your dear face again. So you will have to send me a line here...and let me know what hour next week I may just come for a moment—anytime—morning—noon or late... / You will have no peace—rest or leisure during your stay in London, and you will end by hating human beings—let me come before you feel that way [MTP].

Taylor for Bath Club wrote to inform Sam he’d been elected an Honorary Member of the Club during his stay. Situated just opposite Brown’s Hotel, Taylor hoped he would “look in & use it” [MTP].

Gertrude Tennant wrote from London: “We all want so much to see you again! Do come and dine with us on Wednesday, June 26” [MTP].

Beatrice M. Wallop (Countess of Portsmouth, d.1935) wrote Sam an invitation to dine with her and the Earl of Portsmouth, Newton Wallop, on Friday, July 5. “I am planning to have a small party later in the evening & I have no doubt you would meet many old friends, who—like ourselves—will be delighted to see you again” [MTFWE 200]. Note: her “small party” involved 300 guests [Daily Telegraph, July 6, p.12].

Basil Wilberforce wrote from London: “I am only a humble item among the very many who offer you a cordial welcome to England but we long to see you again and should like to change hats with you again! Do you remember.

Could you give Mrs Wilberforde and myself the pleasure of your company at luncheon on Friday June 28 at 1.45?" [MTP].

Lord George N. Curzon on June 18 or 19 sent Sam an engraved invitation to luncheon at All Souls College after the celebration of the Encoenia, Wednesday, June 26, Oxford [MTP]. Note: Ashford accepted for Clemens on June 19

Christ Church, Oxford sent Sam an printed invitation to dine with "The Dean, Canons, and Students...in the Hall on Wednesday, 26 June, 1907, at Seven o'clock" [MTP]. Note: Ashford accepted for Clemens on June 19

June 18-July 13 Saturday (the dates of the English visit) – Richard Barr wrote from Leeds: "I have some sympathy with funeral festivities, my own are in course of preparation. I intend being present. I'm a bit 'put out' that I can't sing at yours....The papers say you are to meet Paderewski. Please do not take any free lessons at the piano. I do not wish you to have a hasty funeral" [MTP].

Sometime during this period, Sam wrote to Robert Barr, "I would leave this out, Robert. I will explain when I see you" [MTP]. Note: the "leave it out" may or may not refer to Barr's above letter. Barr kept notebooks of his conversations with Clemens, and wanted to publish a warm appreciation of the Prince of Wales ending: "If Prince Albert Edward ever comes to the British Throne, he will prove the best and most popular King since the time of Alfred the Great." It is this pronouncement that Sam advised to leave out [Barr, Robert. "The Idler's Club." The Idler 37 (June 1910): 1013-1019].

Evan C. Ashford: "I am sorry you acknowledged taking the cup because I did put you down as being innocent" [MTP].

M.J. Bishop wrote from Surrey, "Hoping you will have a very good time in our Country (Mine, in truth is Ireland)" [MTP].

E.H. Brown wrote to Clemens [MTP] Note: not found at MTP.

M.J. Canham wrote from London: "Thinking they might be interesting to you I send some reminiscences of good Old Times in the nineteenth Century when we were boys together and used to go bumming around the Free Lunch [illegible word] and sometimes even glad to wheedle old Bummer and Lazarus out of their bones." [MTP] Note: Bummer and Lazarus were San Francisco dogs; see Vol. I.

Randal Charlton of the London Tribune had been requested by his editor to get Sam's views on a jewel robbery. Could he have a two minute interview? [MTP].

S.C. Duce wrote from Oxford, asking for Sam's autograph in a volume [MTP].

E.E.V. Duckenfield of Duckenfield & Son, Toolmakers, Northampton, sent Sam a gift of one of their new razors [MTP].

John Ward Hays wrote from London a rather over-the-top letter asking for Sam's help to play selections from his Opera "Comique" [MTP].

J.W. Leary of Brighton, sent Sam his printed "Comic Song / entitled/ The Motor & the Millionaire" [MTP].

Morton Loder wrote from Woodbridge, hoping he would "find good anchorage in all our homesteads" [MTP].

Ella Mackenzie wrote from Bracknell remembering the pleasure of meeting him at Government House in Ottawa, Canada [MTP].

Mortimer Menpes wrote from London asking for a half hour with him, as he was producing a series of small books called “Portrait-Biographies” and had already done Sir Henry Irving [MTP].

An unidentified widow wrote asking him to “accept a poor old widow’s Good Bye, and kindest wishes.” She had some of his books and a photo of him writing in bed [MTP].

June 19 Wednesday – Paine gives us Sam’s busy schedule the day after his arrival:

Sir Thomas Lipton and Bram Stoker, old friends, were among the first to present themselves, and there was no break in the line of callers.

Clemens’s resolutions for secluding himself were swept away. On the very next morning following his arrival [June 19] he breakfasted with J. Henniker Heaton, father of International Penny Postage, at the Bath Club, just across Dover Street from Brown’s. He lunched at the Ritz with Marjorie Bowen and Miss Bisland. In the afternoon he sat for photographs at Barnett’s, and made one or two calls. He could no more resist these things than a debutante in her first season [MTB 1383-4]. Note: editorial emphasis.

Fatout lists a talk for the Society of Women Journalists, London, but gives no particulars and none were found [MT Speaking 676]. Note: this was not included in Paine’s accounting of the day’s activities above.

Sam’s lunch at the Ritz Hotel was reported by London Daily Mail, June 20, p.5, “Mark Twain at Lunch”:

There was a disturbing element at the luncheon-table of the Ritz Hotel yesterday. Life runs very smoothly in that caravanseraï. The great ones of the earth come in to lunch and eat just like ordinary folk, and when a Serene Highness or so is pointed out people either yawn or say, “The fat man on the right or the little one on the left?”

But yesterday [June 19] the Ritz lunchers ate with one eye upon a table where, together with two ladies [Marjorie Bowen and Miss Bisland], a gentleman with bushy white hair spoke slowly with his companions. Somebody said, “That’s Mark Twain,” and it was the sight of the white hair and the sad face that brought home the fact that humour-making is hard work. [in part; See MTFWE 20-1 for the whole article].

T. Fisher Unwin wrote to welcome Sam to London. He enclosed a few copies of “your little book on the Congo...in its English dress” and would send more if advised. He also enclosed a copy of The History of the Savage Club, which he had published, and requested a meeting when he might “have a few words with you relating to the Congo question” [MTP]. Note: On this same day at Brown’s Hotel, London, Sam wrote instructions on Unwin’s letter to Ralph W. Ashcroft: “I have arranged this—He (Unwin) will breakfast with us tomorrow” [MTP].

Peter Richards’ cartoon ran in the London Daily Chronicle, p.8. Lathem writes “The cartoon had virtually concurrent publication in the United States, as an illustration (page 1054 for Sydney Books’s article ‘Mark Twain in England,’ which appeared in Harper’s Weekly on July twentieth (Volume LI, Number 2,639). It carried as its caption ‘How Mark Twain widened his “Sphere of Influence” while en route for England’ [MTFWE 139]; There were, however, two cartoons of the same scene, with some interesting variations, possibly for copyright considerations. The first, the lower insert [ibid.] ran in the Chronicle, the upper insert in Harper’s Weekly [Zeichner and Geseichnete].

A great many letters, telegrams, and invitations were at Brown’s Hotel when the two men arrived. Ashcroft and Sam began the job of answering them all [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Ashcroft wrote for Sam to the Bath Club Secretary, accepting their invitation [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to the Dean of Christ Church, accepting the June 26 dinner invitation [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to George N. Curzon, accepting the luncheon invitation of June 26 [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to John Japp, Mayor of Liverpool, having quickly changed his plans:

Mr. Clemens directs me to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 14th inst., enclosing the copy of your letter of May 29th, and to say that it will be his endeavor to visit your city during the week commencing July 7th, in order that he may have the pleasure of spending a day with you before he sails from London for New York on the 13th prox. He has announced to all, except a few intimate friends, that he will leave this country for home on July 6th, and does not wish it generally known, for the present, that it is his intention to remain in England one week longer—a change of program decided upon so that he may have the opportunity, if possible, to accept your most kind invitation. Please, therefore, treat the matter privately until a definite date is set upon for his visit to Liverpool.

Mr. Clemens expects to attend the dinner here on July 4th, and hopes to have the pleasure of meeting you then [MTP]. Note: Rogers was to be in Liverpool on June 27.

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Charles Lancaster, having rec'd three letters, June 14, 15 and 18.

He has arranged with the Secretary of The Pilgrims that a seat shall be found for Mr. Rogers at the lunch, although it is against the rules for a member to give up a seat even for another member's guest.

He will get into touch with Mr. Rogers on Sunday at Claridge's.

Mr. Clemens has decided to visit Liverpool during the second week in July, unless he feels too fagged out then. Publicly, he will leave for New York on July 6th; privately, on July 13th. He does not wish the press to know this until July 6th is nearly here.

You will, I know, excuse Mr. Clemens from writing personally, but he is in bed most of the time, conserving his strength as much as possible [MTP]. Note: Charles Lancaster was an old friend of H.H Rogers, and would sit opposite Sam at the Liverpool gathering [July 29 to Rogers].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to John Lubbock, (Lord Avebury). "Mr. Clemens was very sorry to have been out when you called this afternoon, and wishes to know if it will be convenient to you to have him breakfast with you at 9:30 on Saturday, July 6th" [MTP]. Note: See July 6 entry.

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Helen MacMillan (Mrs. Maurice C. MacMillan) in London to acknowledge her two letters, which "reached him almost simultaneously." He didn't see how he could "arrange to dine" with the MacMillans, but would try to call on them [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Kate D. Wiggin (Riggs), who was also in London.

Mr. Clemens has asked me to write to you, while he is resting his tired bones, and say that he has been trying to get a couple of extra tickets for the affair, but has been informed that even his request cannot be granted owing to limited seating capacity. If he is able to help you out before the event next Wednesday, he will gladly do so, but he does not think it likely that such an accident will happen.

We will be the guests of Mr. Robert P. Porter in Oxford [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Frederick C. Van Duzer, secretary of The American Society in London, accepting an engagement for an unspecified evening. He had another engagement that night however, so would be late [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Newton Wallop and Beatrice Pease Wallop (1866-1935), Sixth Earl and Countess of Portsmouth, accepting invitation to dine on Friday, July 5 at 8:15 [MTP]. Note: See Mar. 24, 1900 entry for Wallop.

Punch ran an anonymous comment on King Leopold's Soliloquy, p. 439. Tenney gives text in full: "We are glad to see MARK TWAIN taking part in the campaign agasint the owner of the Congo Free State. Mark II is ammunition which has done good service in the past" [43]. Note: see also Punch's humorous comment on June 26.

Sheila C. Allan wrote from Argyllshire, recently reading LM. "May I...remonstrate against your harsh treatment of that most noble gentleman...Sir Walter Scott." She hoped he would "venture forth" and see the land which had inspired Scott [MTP].

Arthur W.A. Beckett wrote invitation to come to an Annual Dinner at a salon. He included a postcard ad for his book, Recollections of a Humorist [MTP].

J.Q. Brant-Sero wrote to ask for an interview for the Daily Mirror [MTP].

Mrs. Joan Edwards had been commanded by her Editor (of The Throne) to gain ten minutes with Sam [MTP].

Sydney E. Engleman wrote asking for an interview for The Law Clerk, "a comparatively new paper" [MTP].

Mrs. A.F. Fargus wrote from Brighton to send a very long Eskimo word—if he wished the translation she'd be glad to send it on a postcard. Obviously an attempt to get a note from Twain [MTP].

An unidentified person in South Shields, England sent "a most sincere greeting from one who has derived unbounded enjoyment from your works" [MTP].

Isabel Inez Garrison wrote from London that Mark Twain had held her in his arms at the Lick House in San Francisco in the "latter days of the 60's" and had held her up to the chandelier [MTP].

Rose Goodwin wrote from Hackney N.E., London to offer an effusive but heartfelt fan letter [MTP].

P.P. Gieve wrote from London: "Sir, / I read on the newspaper placard this morning: — / MARK TWAIN ARRIVES / ASCOT CUP / STOLEN. / and shall be glad to learn if there is any truth in the rumor" [MTP].

Joseph Hatton sent a telegram from St. John's Wood, London: "Your first visit London among my happiest remembrances today I'll alas to do more than send you this message of affectionate greeting of old friends" [MTP].

Ellen T. Hopkins wrote from Herne Bay, Kent, England: "Apropos of your funeral! I am hoping to publish a small book entitled 'Our Friends & Foes in Space.' The opening incident tells how my step-father (the late Mortimer Collins—author) was seen, by a clairvoyant friend, talking to the guests at his own funeral. Naturally they did not answer him, & he was considerably cross! Am I too daring in asking if I may dedicate my little book to you?" [MTP].

Annie Howell wrote that "many years ago" she'd sent a MS. to him in America, "A Palmistry Story" and Sam had advised her that no editor would publish such a piece from a girl. Now she was older and suffering from an eye operation. "Would you advise me in the matter?" Several pages of hard to read troubles [MTP].

H. Percival Hulse wrote a letter than was sending a copy of the Sheffield Daily Dispatch containing an article by himself on Twain. He would be attending the Pilgrim's luncheon next Tuesday on behalf of the Sheffield Daily Telegraph and looked forward to paying his respects then [MTP].

W.H. Langhorne wrote from Norfolk, England. He claimed to be a kinsman of the man who Sam got his middle name from. "You may remember our correspondence on the subject some fourteen years ago." He was glad to see him "turning up at Oxford in such a conspicuous way" [MTP].

Sidney Lee sent a telegram from Picadilly, London: "Delighted dinner Monday or Tuesday first or second" [MTP].

Mrs. Henry William Lucy had a note hand-delivered that she would be "delighted to see you at luncheon tomorrow at 1.30 sharp" [MTP].

Helen MacMillan (Mrs. Maurice C. MacMillan) wrote, essentially repeating her previous letter sent to the Minneapolis, thinking he hadn't rec'd it. She solicited an evening for him to join them for dinner [MTP].

Mary R. Mason sent an invitation "At Home" for June 25, 4 to 7 p.m. with music." She cited a "somewhat ancient connection with the Norwood Literary Society at Mrs. Cabell's School, Washington, D.C.—of which you were once made honorary member!" [MTP].

James Milne, Editor of The Book Monthly, London wrote asking if Sam would give "a word...on volumes, old or new" [MTP].

Edmund D. Morel wrote from London hoping Sam would "strike another blow for those poor devils in the Congo," and noted that Mr. Landon of the Daily Chronicle hoped for an interview [MTP].

J.P. Mullins sent Clemens some post cards and asked for an autograph [MTP].

Donald Murray for National Liberal Arts Club, London invited Sam at their next House Dinner on a date convenient [MTP].

Eileen Newton wrote from Kensington West to appreciate his works, especially HF [MTP].

Louis N. Parker wrote to invite Sam to the Bury St. Edmunds Pageant, which ran from July 8 to 13. Parker recalled seeing Twain lecture on Fiji at the old Hanover Square Rooms in London [MTP].

Eden Phillpotts (1862-1960), British author, poet, and dramatist, wrote from Torquay, that it wouldn't be his good fortune to see Sam on this visit as he continued "to be a country bumpkin & more as far from cities as possible," but he was rejoicing in Sam's Oxford honor [MTP].

Mrs. Bennett Smith, a female journalist, asked for ten minutes of Sam's time [MTP].

Alfred Smyth-Pigott wrote offering a London theatre if he was contemplating a lecture tour [MTP].

Francis Reginald Statham wrote from London to advise that he'd asked his publishers to send Sam his book, The Religion of Consciousness and asked that Sam might receive it. "You will probably remember me as one of the people who protested against the South African War [Boer] and the policy that led up to it..." [MTP].

("Daisy") Evelyn Suart wrote to Clemens: "I couldn't summon up courage this afternoon to ask you to write in my visitors' book so I am sending it to you now with an addressed wrapper for it's safe return!" [MTP].

R.B. Sunbers for The Clarion: "My stern & unbending Editor has ordered me to get a 10 minute interview..." [MTP].

Kate Thayer wrote for the Lyceum Club, Piccadilly: "The American Circle of the Lyceum Club is giving an At Home tomorrow (3.30—5.30)..." would he come if only for a few minutes? [MTP].

An unidentified woman (signature illegible but for "Mary") wrote wondering if Sam remembered her from his last visit to England [MTP].

T. Fisher Unwin wrote from London sending copies of Twain's "little book on the Congo" and Unwin's The History of the Savage Club, recently published. He wanted a few words on the Congo question [MTP].
Note: Ashcroft wrote on letter: "I have arranged this—he (Unwin) will breakfast with us tomorrow"

Endre Vik sent a cartoon postcard from Kristianig, Norway and wrote: "My country is the country for you! Take a trip to us, We are all yours. Very truly..." [MTP].

Charles M. Wilson wrote from London applying once more about Sam's ancestry, such questions Sam usually ignored, as he had Wilson's prior inquiry when both men were in Vienna [MTP].

Israel Zangwill (1864-1926), British born Zionist and writer, wrote from Worthing, England, hastening "to join the chorus of welcome." If Sam got "wearied of honors & salons" Zangwill offered rest by the sea and a hammock [MTP].

Adele Chapin wrote wondering if Sam could get her two tickets for the Encoenia [MTP].

Back home, Americans could read all about the latest English worship of Mark Twain: The New York Tribune, June 20, p.1, dateline London, June 19:

Receives Many Invitations—Will "Break the Sabbath" with Archdeacon Wilberforce.

London, June 19.—Mark Twain is receiving as much attention as would a European potentate. The newspapers are devoting columns to his sayings and doings, and he has been overwhelmed with invitations, many of which he has reluctantly been forced to decline, as he is determined not to tire himself out. His engagement book is already filled with acceptances, chiefly for quiet luncheons and dinners with personal friends, while his afternoons will be spent resting and driving in the parks of London.

Mr. Clemens's engagements include a bachelors' dinner to be given by Ambassador Reid on June 21, the Pilgrim's luncheon on June 25, the Lord Mayor's dinner to the Savage Club on June 29 and the dinner of the American Society on July 4. He will give a dinner in honor of the Earl and Countess of Portsmouth on July 5.

Mr. Clemens will also be entertained by the Lord Mayor of Liverpool before his departure. He will go to Oxford on June 25, remaining there until the 29th. He will be the guest of the chancellor of the university at luncheon, after the conferring of the degree, and on the following day the dean, canon and students will give a dinner in his honor. On June 28 the Rhodes scholars will give a reception to Mr. Clemens, and he will spend the afternoon watching the pageant. In his own words he “will break the Sabbath” by spending the afternoon of June 23 with Archdeacon Wilberforce.

Isabel Lyon’s journal summarized Sam’s meeting Shaw at the ship dock, then related N.Y. happenings: Today Santa is not well. She is droopy and has pains in her head. Tuxedo is not going to be the place for her. It is going to be a strange summer. We remind ourselves of the water bugs, for we dart from N.Y. to Tuxedo and to Redding and to Boston and back again. It isn’t going to be a sweet and restful summer. But at all events as Santa mirthfully says, “It isn’t a treadmill.”

Damned if it isn’t a treadmill, we’ve got into the habit of shooting the shoots and can’t stop it [MTP TS 71-72].

June 20 Thursday – Sam pulled off a breach of etiquette at 8 a.m. that was widely reported, and one Livy would undoubtedly have scolded him for. New York Times, June 21, p.1, dateline June 20, London:

TWAIN STARTLES LONDON.

Strolls in Bathrobe and Bare Legs from Hotel for a Plunge.
Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES CO.

LONDON, June 20.—Mark Twain exhibited himself as an eccentric today, and every staid Londoner who witnessed the exhibition fairly gasped. A little after 8 o’clock this morning he appeared in the foyer of Brown’s Hotel garbed in a blue bathrobe and slippers, with about three inches of bare legs showing.

A slight, elderly gentleman, with bushy, white hair, in this unconventional costume, startled the patrons of the hotel and worried the employees tremendously, but Mark Twain coolly surveyed those who were staring at him, and accompanied by his secretary, R. W. Ashcroft, walked out of the front door of the hotel into Dover Street.

The sidewalks were thronged with pretty shop girls on their way to work. They stopped short and gazed in astonishment at the great American humorist as he made his way toward the Bath Club, nearly opposite the hotel.

After his bath Mark Twain returned to his hotel in his three-piece costume of one bathrobe and two slippers, and had the pleasure of making a lot more people open their eyes very wide. The manager of the hotel was aghast as he saw Twain enter the hotel, but didn’t make a fuss. His feeling was that a great man like Mark Twain must be allowed to do as he pleases.

Mark Twain professed to wonder at the excitement he had caused. “I simply wanted to take a bath,” he said, “and did the same thing I’d often done at the seaside. London is a sort of seaside town, isn’t it?”

Mark Twain tomorrow will renew his acquaintance with King Edward, having a special invitation to the King’s great garden party at Windsor. He met King Edward first a number of years ago in Homburg [sic], where the King had a jolly laugh with him over a passage in one of his books in which he commented on the fact that Edward, at that time Prince of Wales, had passed him on the strand without stopping for a chat with him. The Prince, he later explained, was in a carriage, while he was on top of a penny bus.

Secretary Ashcroft and two assistants were as busy as bees today answering communications from public bodies, public men, and personal friends of Mark Twain, who desire to entertain him. there could be no better evidence of his great popularity in England. [Insert: New York American, June 21].

Sam again ate breakfast with John Henniker Heaton; he lunched with Henry W. Lucy (“Toby M.P.”) and Mrs. Lucy; and took tea with Lady Stanley (Mrs. Henry M. Stanley) in the afternoon [MTB 1384].

Ashcroft’s notes: “Mr. Clemens called on Lady Stanley, widow of the explorer, in the afternoon” [MTFWE 32]. Note: Though Lathem puts this under June 23, in his A.D. Sam describes it as “one of my earliest calls,” so Paine’s date of June 20 rules here.

London Evening News, June 21, related the above luncheon with the Lucy’s and other Twain errands on page one:

Punch and Mark Twain

Mark Twain is to be given a dinner by the staff of “Punch” on a date not yet fixed. As Mark Twain has declared that he makes it a rule never to eat anything, the announcement may seem like a “Punch” joke.

But “Toby, M.P.,” whose other name is Mr. H.W. Lucy, has had the American humorist to lunch, and Mark Twain gave such an excellent imitation of an author encircling a square meal that his host has arranged for a repetition of the performance for the pleasure of the “Punch” writers and artists.

Mr. Clemens is delighted at the opportunity of meeting them, and intends to press them with the utmost cordiality to represent English Humour at the great Mark Twain funeral festivities.

He has called at the American Embassy and had an hour’s chat with Mr. Whitelaw Reid, partly about the dinner to which Mr. Reid has invited Mark Twain and many distinguished guests, including Lord Tennyson, the President of the Royal Academy, the Poet Laureate, and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

Mark Twain asks the “Evening News” to say for him that he cannot accept even a moderate proportion of the invitations he has received.

He is humane to his secretary. He does not keep him at letter writing all day, and the secretary is at present up half the night typewriting refusals.

Paderewski is also staying at Brown’s Hotel, and sooner or later the two great men may meet, if Mark Twain can tear himself from his bed before dinner-time.

The humorist says he could do with a few free lessons in playing the piano.

At Brown’s Hotel in London Ashcroft wrote for Sam to John Y. MacAlister.

Mr. Clemens directs me to acknowledge and to thank you very much indeed for your letter and the enclosed list of those who are to receive Degrees at Oxford on the 26 event.

....

P. S. / Excuse terseness & brevity, but we were up till 3 a.m. last night, answering letters [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Eveleen Myers, apologizing for not answering her and Mrs. Gertrude Tennant’s letters the day before; they were up till 3 a.m. answering letters. Sam’s schedule was completely full and they regretted being unable to spend a few hours or even to call [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal (NY): Today we went back to town in great heat of find the house stifling. I’m not sleeping any of these nights along here. I’m groping along to Something, with an indescribable loneliness. It’s the terrible loneliness that always comes over me with the King so far away.

Perhaps it’s wrong, anxiety too, I have full charge of the house in N.Y. now and I’m afraid perhaps I mayn’t fulfil the trust Santa puts in me. Then I have lots of ms. to read. The Orion Autobiography to finish, and the recent dictation of the King to read up and put into shape—consecutive shape. And I'm longing to get at it. Planning to go to Redding tomorrow [MTP 72].

Thomas Power O'Connor wrote to Sam [MTP]. On or after this date Sam replied: "Yes, I will go to tea at the House. / It is in Roughing It, I think" [MTP].

A.P. Macdonald wrote from London to Sam. "Permit me to hand you enclosed copies of my two little books, and as a humble tribute from a Scottish humorist (alleged—& if you can imagine such a thing) to the Great Master of the World's Humor" [MTP]. Note: See also Macdonald's June 22 and Sam's reply before June 30.

The Edinburgh Evening Dispatch, June 20, p.5 ran some Mark Twain interview humor:

MARK TWAIN AND HIS FUNERAL.

SEEKING HITS FROM THE OXFORD PAGEANT.

Mark Twain, whose arrival in England has already been mentioned, has been interviewed, as a matter of course. He talked of many things, including white suits, gramophones, Mrs. Eddy, cigars, Bernard Shaw, and himself, but through all these topics it was evident that there was one matter dearest and nearest to his heart—and that was his funeral. Every time Mark was coaxed away to another subject he sighed heavily, and, regarding his long cigar with a thoughtful, far-away look, said:—"But about this funeral of mine—" And then he started again.

A clairvoyant has told him that he is going to die in a foreign land ("May be England; may be New Jersey," says Mark), and so he is making arrangements for his funeral now, in case he is too busy afterwards.

One must see this big, boisterous man, with the red-veined cheeks of health, to appreciate why he can afford to joke even with death.

"I think this funeral is going to be a great thing. I shall be there," he drawled. "I'm stopping for the Oxford pageant, and I guess I shall pick up a few hints from it. I only wish I could make it last six days," he mused, ruefully. "Shall I have a band? Band! I shall have fifty bands falling over one another at every fifty yards, and each playing a different tune. It'll be a showy funeral, with plenty of liquor for all the guests.

"I shall issue invitation cards something like this:—"The late Mr. Mark Twain requests the pleasure of —'s company. Mourning dress.' I haven't decided on the route yet, but it will be somewhere in a parallel latitude.

"Why, there was a lady on board asked me to come to her wedding. 'Yes,' I replied, 'I will, if you'll come to my funeral.' I told her all about it, and now she's quite eager for it to happen."

Mark Twain was asked whether he was going to write a diary of Cain and Abel to follow the delightfully irresponsible diaries of Adam and Eve.

"No," he replied seriously. "You see Cain was an ancestor of mine, and I try to hush up that affair of his with Abel." It appears that the Twain family's chief business in the days of the past was assassination and such like things, but people began to remark on it, and now he says they devote their time to little burglaries and thefts. At one time they were noted for their piety, which is the chief characteristic of the family to-day.—Daily Express.

John Lubbock, (Lord Avebury) replied to Sam's note of the prior day, addressing the note to Ralph Ashcroft: "Please tell Mr. Clemens that I was very sorry to miss him. / July 6th will suit me quite well & I am very glad he can come to breakfast. I will ask a few literary & scientific friends to meet him" [MTFWE 201].

Marie Corelli wrote from Stratford-on-Avon to Sam with a "little word of welcome and affectionate greeting." She signed "Your life-long admirer and grateful friend." Sam couldn't stand the woman, but that came later [MTP].

Phillip L. Agnew for the Punch office wrote to Sam to invite him to dinner during his visit [MTP].

H. Walter Barnett wrote from London: “I beg herewith to send you, for your acceptance, a few prints of portraits which I have made of you at previous Sittings, and I shall hope to send the proofs of the Sitting of yesterday to you in a few days. ... I trust that you will not fail in your promise to come and sit to me in your Academical Robes...” [MTP].

Julian Stafford Corbett wrote from London, unable to catch him at his hotel the day before and to bid him welcome “in faint hope that I might shake your hand once more. Is there an chance of seeing you?” [MTP].

Evelyn B. Dickens wrote from London, “I am venturing to write to you knowing that my father—Charles Dickens the Younger—was a friend of yours. Perhaps you remember a visit he & my mother & sister paid you when he was in America some 18 years ago. She asked a favor, being a painter in a private school”—would he come and give away their prizes? [MTP].

Elliott & Fry wrote and asked for a new portrait of Twain for their Publishing Series [MTP].

W.H. Helm wrote from London:

I was glad to know, through your secretary, that you liked my review of Christian Science—it was kind of you to send me word. / On the 29th—unless my evening paper is more than usually ill-informed—I shall at least see you at the Lord Mayor’s dinner. But you promised me when last I called on you at Dollis Hill that you would “have a bicycle ride” with me when next you came to London [MTP].

Charles Lancaster wrote to Ashcroft, “delighted” to learn Sam had decided to visit Liverpool [MTP].

T. Mary Lockyer wrote for her husband, Sir Norman Lockyer, who was delighted Sam was in London and hoped to see him soon. Would Clemens lunch with them on Monday the 24th? Lockyer was looking forward to seeing Sam at Oxford. Lockyer was also getting a degree [MTP].

George Ian MacAlister wrote on Royal Societies Club stationery enclosing a handwritten list of “those who are to receive degrees on the 26th. It is even more variegated than I thought.”

Honorary Degree of D.C.L.

Prince Arthur of Connaught

The American Ambassador

Thomas Herbert Warren, Vice-Chancellor, Pres. Of Magdalen College

Lord Loreburn, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, Prime Minister

Lord Jersey (Late Governor New South Wales)

Lord George Hamilton (Late Secretary for India)

The Speaker of the House of Commons

Sir Edward Grey, Foreign Secretary

Lord Alverstone, Lord Chief Justices

Lord Sanderson (late under-Secretary Foreign Affairs)

Sir Antony MacDonnell (Irish Under-Secretary)

Admiral Lord Charles Beresford V.C., Commander in Chief of [Cha??] Fleet

Field Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood. V.C.

Sir John Strachey (late Governor N.W. Provinces of India)

Dr. Butter (Trinity College, Cambridge)

Dr. [Edmund] Warre – Late Headmaster of Eton

Professor A.V. Dicey

Auguste Rodin, Sculptor

G.F. Bodley, R.A.

Hubert von Herkomer, R.A.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

General William Booth, Salvation Army

Honorary Degree of D. Sc.

Sir Norman Lockyer, F.R.S.

Sir R. Douglas Powell, President Royal College of Physicians

Professor Sir William Ramsay, F.R.S.

Sir William Perkin, F.R.S.

Professor W. Watson Cheym, F.R.S.

Ludwig Mond, F.R.S.

Honorary Degree of D. Litt.

The Archbishop of Arinagh [sp?]

Canon H. Scott Holland

Professor Sayce (Assyriology)

Sidney Colvin

Sidney Lee

Samuel Langhorne Clemens

Rudyard Kipling

Honorary Degree of D. Mus.

C.C. [Charles Camille] Saint-Saëus [MTP].

Herbert W. Mansfield wrote from London that he was “not connected with the press” but wished to call and shake hands [MTP].

Robert McClure wrote from Glasgow, Scotland, hoping Sam would “find the time in the midst of your many engagements to give a look at my little ‘booklet’ on ‘Speling [sic] Reform’.” He sent best wishes [MTP].

Percy N. for Liverpool Lord Mayor (John Japp) wrote receipt of Sam’s June 19 letter. He would send it on to the Lord Mayor at Eastbourne and keep the contents private [MTP]. Note: May have been written to Ashcroft.

Thomas Power O'Connor wrote from London on T.P.’s Weekly letterhead.

“I hope you will give me an opportunity of having a few words with you before you leave our shore.” He offered “any night next week” for Sam to come to “a little dinner party in the House of Commons.” He asked about finding the passage of the man who went to Wash. D.C. “in pursuit of some claim, and then his disappointment and descent into beggary.” The passage had “haunted” him for years [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft wrote on the letter: “Yes, I will get to tea at the House. / It is in Roughing It, I think.” See June 29 from O'Connor answering.

Muriel M. Pears wrote from Ovington Gardens, London. “It makes me so happy to think of you in our midst.” She felt he couldn’t go away without seeing her, if “only for a minute—or at most, a minute and a half!” She wished that her brother, a soldier, could meet him [MTP].

Robert P. Porter scrawled the Oxford itinerary for Wed., the 26 of June [MTP].

Renee, an inventor “struggling for years, unaided” in London wrote to ask Sam if he’d speak to his friends in her behalf, as she was poor and others who had infringed upon her inventions owed her a fortune. “Don’t talk of funerals, live another 50 yars to gladden the world. I am, One of yr. Admirers” [MTP].

J. Samuel wrote from London, “victim of the most blackmailing plots” and asking for his assistance [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Helen Seton wrote from Chelsea: “I hope you have not forgotten us, for we always hold you in affectionate remembrance & are so delighted to have the regard. Always...” [MTP].

George Bernard Shaw wrote from London:

Will you lunch with us here at 1.30 on Thursday or Friday or Saturday next week? “Us” means my wife and myself; and there will be nobody else except perhaps Max Beerbohm...Or is there anybody you would like to meet whom I could get at for you? Make use of us as if we were a pair of old slippers: we feel like that about you [MTP].

Mrs. R. Haskett Smith wrote from Princess Helena College, London to welcome him. Life was dull since her husband died 18 months before. “He never forgot the happy evenings spent with you in New Zealand after your lectures were over.” She asked if Sam would come down and see her. They were having a “pastoral play on the 28th & 29th” if he cared to come [MTP].

An Unknown person in London sent a postcard with this verse of welcome:

A man of Mark, Mark you.
Named Mark, Mark that Two. (Twain)
He’s hit the Mark, Mark it!
Mark is here, with all his wit. / Welcome [MTP].

Frederick C. Van Duzer for American Society in London wrote their pleasure that he would attend the July 4 banquet and enclosed his ticket [MTP].

Frederick D. Wardle wrote from Bath, England: “I trust that no news is good news and that I am to have the pleasure of hearing from you in a day or two that you will come to Bath” [MTP].

Elizabeth Woodruff wrote a follow up to a letter sent to America asking Sam to “write something” for her forthcoming book, One Touch of Nature. Not gaining an answer then she felt he didn’t get the letter, and pumped her book with a list of contributors [MTP].

Henry R. Tedder for Athenaeum Club sent a full page of printed notice inviting Clemens to the clubhouse for a period of one month, and also enclosed a smaller printed notice of extract of their rules [MTP].

June 20 or 27 — M.A. FitzGerald wrote from Hyde Park asking if Sam could “spare a little time?” as he “must speak with you” about an unspecified matter [MTP].

June 21 Friday – When newspapers on both sides of the Atlantic reported on Mark Twain venturing out on the street in his bathrobe (Paine calls it a “heavy brown bath robe,” the papers called it “sky-blue”)

Clara Clemens cabled: “MUCH WORRIED. REMEMBER PROPRIETIES” [MTB 1384-5; IVL TS 75]. Sam replied by cable to Clara: “THEY ALL PATTERN AFTER ME. FATHER.” [MTP].

Mark Twain’s fourth day at Brown’s Hotel in London. On his July 25 A.D., Sam recalled how his schedule had changed from “a lazy sort” in New York to “a strenuous life” in London. Instead of breakfasting in bed at 8, reading newspapers and smoking till 11, still in bed, then dictation for an hour or two, then milk for lunch and back to bed at 3 p.m. to “read and smoke and sleep”, dinner at 7:30 p.m. and billards till midnight, etc.—in London:

I breakfasted in bed, then got up and breakfasted with somebody else somewhere else; then took luncheon at somebody's house, and tea and dinner at other people's houses, and was usually home again, and asleep, by half-past ten or eleven....The teas were accidental, and not by invitation. From four o'clock until six, every day, I returned calls. In all previous years the women of the family had attended to this duty, and I had been spared it, and was grateful; but I was alone now and had to carry out this formidable duty myself. The thought of it was irksome and distasteful, and for three days I made excuses and shirked it. I should probably have gone on shirking it but for a happy accident. In the hotel I stumbled upon one of those college girls [there were a bunch of them on the ship coming over]; I had not known before that she was in the house. She was a lovely creature of sixteen, and I borrowed her of her mother at once. After that I paid calls every day, and she went with me. She saw the inside of many beautiful English homes and got a world of petting homage, which pleased me as much as it pleased her. The next time I have a wilderness of calls to make it will have no distresses for me, for I will borrow another sweet Francesca [MTFWE 22-3]. Note: Sixteen-year-old Frances Nunnally (1891-1981), whom Cooley identifies as a "schoolgirl from Atlanta"; Sam would name her "Francesca." He adds, "She...became a faithful correspondent and loyal angelfish" [MTAq 35]. She would visit Stormfield with her mother Cora, Sept. 27 to 29, 1908.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam to John Japp, Lord Mayor of Liverpool. Sam accepted the proposed banquet in Liverpool as long as it might be on Wed. evening, July 10; there was no further need of privacy (see prior); he looked forward to meeting Japp at Brown's Hotel within the next few days and also at the July 4th American Society in London celebration at the Hotel Cecil [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Eden Phillpotts:

First the lovely letter & now this moving & beautiful poem! How proud they make me—& how humble! Yes, & how grateful. I prize your love, Eden Phillpotts, & glad am I to believe it is the "Voice of England" speaking! What a return this gold is, for the copper & silver I have been investing these 40 years! There—with the best love of / Mark Twain [MTP]. Note: see Gribben p. 544.

In the evening Sam attended the dinner at the Dorchester House, hosted by Ambassador Whitelaw Reid. 25 or 30 guests, all of distinction in their fields, attended. The New York Times, reported on June 22, p.4.

MARK TWAIN IS REID'S GUEST.

Ambassador Invites a Distinguished Company to Meet Him.

LONDON, June 21.—Ambassador Reid gave a dinner to Mark Twain (Samuel L. Clemens) at Dorchester House this evening.

The guests included John Hicks, the American Minister to Chile; Lord Tennyson, President of the Royal Literary Fund; Sir Edward John Poynter, President of the Royal Academy; Sir Ernest Waterlow, President of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colors; Sir George D. Goldie, President of the Royal Geographical Society; Lord Glenesk, President of the Newspaper Press Fund; Sir George Reid, ex-President of the Royal Scottish Academy; Prof. Hubert Von Herkomer, R.A.; Alfred Austin, the Poet Laureate; Lord MacNaughton, Treasurer of Lincoln's Inn; Edward Cooper Willis, Treasurer of the Inner Temple; Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Anthony Hope Hawkins, Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, Edwin Austin Abbey, Sidney Lee, Henry W. Lucy, ("Toby, M.P.,") August Belmont, Bram Stoker, O. J. W. Comyns Carr, Isaac N. Ford, Harry Brittain, John R. Carter, Secretary of the American Embassy, and the editors of several of the London papers.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

There were no speeches at the dinner. Later the guests inspected the pictures and other treasures of Dorchester House.

The staff of Punch is arranging a special dinner in honor of Mark Twain. The date has not yet been fixed [Note: Insert: Dorchester House in 1905, one of the most palatial buildings in 19th Century London; built in 1853, razed in 1929. See MTFWE 39 for a full list of guests].

Note: Fatout lists a dinner speech at the U.S. embassy, but this was not found elsewhere and would be in conflict with the above Dorchester House event [MT Speaking 677].

Sam inscribed a copy of Obiter Dicta (1896) by Augustine Birrell (1850-1933): “S.L. Clemens, 1907. London, June 21” [Gribben 71].

Isabel Lyon’s journal (NY): Claude the butler brought my breakfast to me early this morning, and with it the paper—The Times—which contained the astounding news of the King walking in a bathrobe out into Dover Street. But, anxious enough, I went on up to Redding where John Howells and Mr. Turner met me and we went up to the site of the King’s house and decided upon the first position selected by J.H. It will be beautiful. We lunched with AB, who scurried around and found cold beans and ham and bananas and other good things. Then we walked up to my house. John Howells has given it such a good name—Lyonesse “The magic land” that went down into the sea. But this has arisen—J.H. went over to Danbury with 2 deacons and Sunderland, which left little Turner to me and I do not like to be followed about by a colorless little man who can talk only drains and weather. He is very strong on drains, though. AB and I wanted to talk about the King and all sorts of things. But always there was Turner tagging.

When the King is on the ocean there is anxiety; but there is more anxiety of another kind when he is on the land. In this morning’s Times there is an account of his walking through the corridors and offices of Brown’s Hotel in his bath gown and slippers with his little bare ankles glinting; but he didn’t stop there, he went out into the street and across it to the Bath Club. But here is the clipping: [inserted TS of the Times clipping here] He “scares us to death”, with his inclination for the unconventional. We never can tell what he will do next, if he is not stopped and it is easy to stop him; a word, a bit of advice, and he will change his course and when he changes it he always says, “I am so glad you told me.” But now he is in London with no one but Ashcroft who is strong in one way but very timid in others, and his love for the King is not yet great enough for him to be brave enough to speak out and save the King from doing thoughtless things; things that are harmless enough in their way, but not so harmless as to prevent the King from being severely criticized [MTP 72-74].

A. Stewart Appleton wrote from the Hotel Continental in Paris to ask:

Does it not seem to you that any man crazy enough to go to the North Pole in a balloon ought to be given a proper send-off by his compatriots at the banquet of the American Society to be given to you at the Cecil Hotel on 4th of July when the American eagle will proudly be doing her level best by all things born of American soil? [MTP].

Charles L. Atchison wrote from West Hampstead: “Seven years ago a man (& dog on a ‘bike’) had the good fortune to see you, after an interval of 25 years, at Dollis Hill. The man called again yesterday, but failed, & this morning comes a letter saying that he may not hope to see you ‘this time.’” He sent greetings and good luck and goodbye [MTP].

Irving Blake wrote on Dorchester House stationery: “I have been directed by the Ambassador to send you the enclosed list of the guests at to-night’s dinner” [MTP]. Note: no list is in the file.

William R. Coe wrote from NYC, sending an enclosed (not in file) to help him in his speechmaking. Also, “I hope that you did not catch cold from parading in Dover St in a dressing gown” [MTP].

Louise Copeland wrote from London to ask for an interview, by which she might collect £300,000—though she did not explain how [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Harry Dagmar wrote from Hull, England to suggest he arrange to have his funeral take place during his lifetime! Doing so would “enable you to choose your own coffin, write your own epitaph, and, above all, would give you the pleasure and unprecedented experience of being your own chief mourner...” [MTP].

Dewar (John) & Sons, Distillers, London, wrote on Co. letterhead: “We duly received your telephone message, and have had much pleasure in forwarding you three bottles of our ‘Victoria Vat’ quality Old Highland Whisky...as our License does not permit us to send out quantities of less than 12 bottles, we would ask you go accept the small quantity with our compliments” [MTP].

L. Fritzengo wrote from the Hotel Eden House, Lucerne. An “admirer” the letter is rather dense and clearly English is not his first language. “Put me on plase to Mark Twain. I don’t know his number...I hear he is stranded in London in the street called Fleet,—there the interviewers are studying the pattern of his Oxford Mixture clothes.” {MTP] Note: Ashcroft wrote on the letter: “Is this anyone special? [MTP].

James Gow wrote from London to ask for “a few minutes during your stay...to the boysof Westminster School” [MTP].

H. Percival Hulse wrote for the Sheffield Daily Telegraph hoping to shake his hand at the Pilgrims Banquet [MTP].

John Japp Lord Mayor of Liverpool, was in London, and gratified that Clemens would come there to be entertained; he hoped to meet at the 4th of July banquet as well [MTP].

Katrina sent flowers and a note, “With affectionate greetings” [MTP].

John Y. W. MacAlister wrote on The Library letterhead: “Tonight there is a little Macalister Dinner at the Hyde Park Hotel, three minutes cab run from the Ambassadors; at 10 p.m. a little entertainment will be begun, which in view of your passion for pageants will probably interest you...” He also noted there would be “About a dozen very pretty young girls in appropriate costume...dancing” [MTP].

David A. Munro wrote from NY asking Sam to meet his “dear Sister” in London, Marjory Cowan Munro [MTP].

Charlotte F. Shaw for George Bernard Shaw. “My Dear Sir / We shall be delighted to see you at luncheon on Wednesday the 3rd July at 1.30” [MTP].

Mrs. Cuthbert H. Slocomb for the Fort Griswold Land Committee wrote from “the foothills of the Austrian Alps”, enclosing a printed circular from the DAR, “History of Movement to secure the outlying porton of Groton Heights Battle Field.” Would he read it and fill out their donor card? [MTP].

Cornelius Vanderbilt for Robert Fulton Monument sent a telegram: “Please accept best wishes from the Association for a pleasant evening regrds to our Ambassador and his guests” [MTP].

Joseph N. Verey wrote from London to ask he be allowed to pay his respects. He enclosed a list of recommendations as a courier [MTP]. Note: Verey had been the Clemens family courier; see Vol. I entries.

Ida Verner wrote from London. She'd read CS and observed "Ridicule seems the only weapon with which to fight some abuses, & I therefore appeal to you to use your powerful pen to help the unfortunate horses of England & America...in the matter of the inhuman fashion of docking their tails" [MTP].

Charles S. Walker, "a very old man," wrote from Worcester, England, "to join the shouting crowd," and to talk of his 18 year correspondence with Laurence Hutton of Princeton, though they'd never met. It is a touching letter of tribute [MTP].

J.S. Walter wrote from London, praising Sam's books; enclosing two drawings of sea shells [MTP].

Wright J. for London & North Western Railway wrote to Ashcroft at the request of Bram Stoker, the following reservations: "one 1st class smoker on 12.10 train, Euston to Liverpool, 10th July,' and "one sitting room, 2 Bed rooms, and Bath room (facing St George's Hall) in the Lime Street Hotel" [MTP].

Macleod Yearsley wrote from London—thanks for a past autograph, for his works and a welcome [MTP].

June 22 Saturday – Sam attended the Royal Garden Party at Windsor, which marked the end of Ascot week. Ten special trains were scheduled between Paddington and Windsor. The Lord Chamberlain issued the invitations. Mark Twain was accompanied by Ralph Ashcroft (left), and Mr. and Mrs. John Henniker Heaton. See insert photo [MTFWE 27].

Ashcroft kept a log for these days. His note for June 22:

Saturday, June 22. Mr. Clemens left at 2:45, with Mr. and Mrs. Henniker Heaton, for the King's garden party at Windsor; returned with the Heaton and Sir Thomas Lipton, and was motored from Paddington to the hotel by Sir Thomas [MTFWE 30].

In his Oct. 1, 1907 A.D. Sam recalled the Garden Party, those met, and the spectacle of the event. He first "chanced upon" Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, and "wandered through the crowds for an hour, shaking hands right and left with strangers," as well as a surprising number he knew, some from as long ago as his first trip to London in 1872. He ran into Ellen Terry, now 59, and her new husband, 34. He recalled first meeting Terry in St. Louis in 1858. Whitelaw Reid presented Mark Twain to King Edward and they talked of their meeting at Homburg years before. As it was beginning to drizzle, Queen Alexandra instructed him to put his hat on, which he did, after the second admonition. The Duke of Connaught introduced himself and his son the prince; later the King of Siam and his heir [MTFWE 31-2: MTAD 2279-84].

All the major newspapers, both English and American, reported on the event, which hosted over 8,000. The London Tribune called it "the greatest garden party on record" [June 24, p.7, "Royal Garden Party"]. The Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury reported that "The most interesting person presented to their Majesties was Mark Twain, who, indeed, was in some sort the hero of the occasion" [June 24, p.7]. The New York Times, June 23, p.C3, dateline June 22, London, reported:

TWAIN AMUSES KING AND QUEEN

Tells Jokes to Edward and Would Buy Windsor Grounds from Alexandra.

MEETS SIAM'S RULER, TOO

Offers to Speak for Bashful Prince Arthur of Connaught—Many Notables at Garden Party.

LONDON, June 22.—Mark Twain was the centre of attraction at the King's garden party at Windsor this afternoon, and besides meeting the King and the royal party, and a handshake with several hundred notables in the course of the afternoon. Upon his return from the garden party he declared that he was not a bit tired, and had thoroughly enjoyed himself.

He was accompanied to Windsor by John Henniker Heaton, the "Father of Imperial Penny Postage," who introduced him to many of the King's guests on his way to the party, including Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, Fridtjof Nansen, Sir Henry Mortimer Durand, and Ellen Terry. He heartily congratulated Miss Terry on her recent marriage, the two shaking hands enthusiastically.

After tea, which was served on the lawn, Ambassador Reid presented Mark Twain to King Edward and Queen Alexandra, and the King and the humorist spent a quarter of an hour in conversation, the King laughing heartily at Twain's jokes. The Queen also joined in the conversation, and was much amused when Twain jokingly asked if he could buy the Windsor Castle grounds from her Majesty. Then the King called on him to meet the other guests. He introduced Twain to the King of Siam, the Duke of Connaught, Prince Arthur of Connaught, and others.

Prince Arthur is to receive a degree at Oxford at the same time as the American humorist, and the Prince remarked that he would collapse if called upon for a speech. Thereupon Twain offered to undertake to speak for him.

Mark Twain wore the regulation frock coat and silk hat at the garden party. Speaking of his reception there, he said:

"His Majesty was very courteous. In the course of the conversation I reminded him of an episode sixteen years ago, when I had the honor to walk a mile with him when he was taking the waters at Homburg. I said I had often told about that episode, and that whenever I was the historian I made good history of it and it was worth listening to, but that it had found its way into print once or twice in unauthentic ways and had been badly damaged there. I added that I should like to go on repeating this history, but that I should be quite fair and reasonably honest, and while I should probably never tell the story twice in the same way, I should at least never allow it to deteriorate at my hands.

"His Majesty intimated his willingness that I should continue to disseminate that piece of history and added a compliment, saying that he knew good and sound history would not suffer at my hands and that if this good and sound history needed any improvements beyond the facts he would trust me to furnish these embellishments.

"I think it is no exaggeration to say that the Queen looks as young and beautiful as she did thirty-five years ago, when I saw her first. I didn't say this to her, because I learned long ago never to say an obvious thing, but to leave an obvious thing to commonplace and inexperienced people to say.

"That she still looks to me as young and beautiful as she looked thirty-five years ago is good evidence that 10,000 people already have noticed this and have mentioned it to her. I could have said it and spoken the truth, but I have been too wise for that. I have kept the remark unuttered, and that has saved her Majesty the vexation of hearing it for the ten thousandth and oneth time.

"All that report about my proposal to buy Windsor Castle and its grounds is a false rumor—I started it myself."

Mr. Clemens has announced that he will be a passenger on the steamer Minnetonka sailing for New York July 13. This prolongation of his stay abroad has enabled him to accept a few of the hundreds of invitations that are pouring in on him. The staff of Punch invited him to a dinner at the Savoy on July 9, but he intimated his preference to dine in the famous Punch Room at the Punch offices, and the dinner will be given there. Mr. Clemens considers this one of the greatest honors of his visit.

Scott points out that Sam and King Edward were acquainted from Bad Nauheim "in the early nineties" [290]. Note: Edward was then the Prince of Wales; see Aug. 21, 1892 entry for their first meeting.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

At Brown's Hotel in London, Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam to John Japp, Lord Mayor of Liverpool. Sam asked for his usual courtesy of being allowed to arrive for the July 10 banquet toward the end of the event.

While Mr. Clemens is remarkably vigorous for a man of his years, he easily tires; and I know that, if you will grant him the privilege he asks for, he will be in better form for addressing those present. He will go to bed as soon as he arrives in Liverpool in the afternoon, and remain there until it is time for him to join you at the Town Hall. We shall stay at the Lime Street Station Hotel, arriving there at 4:05 P.M. [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Yesterday morning Santa was so troubled about the account in the paper that she cabled to the King—"Remember the proprieties—am anxious."

He probably took that cablegram to Whitelaw Reid's dinner party last evening. We are in Tuxedo again. Santa Clara and I. I have been dreaming a wonderful love story in these days. A story all of beautiful colors, and it makes me so very lonely and so sad. Tonight came the King's cablegram to Santa. "They all pattern after me, Father." Before we left town this morning, in great heat we drove up to see Dr. Quintard, then Santa bought a new hat. Such a pretty hat all wreathed in roses—delicate roses with cream colored leaves—& just right for Santa. I felt like to perish from the heat [MTP 75].

Hugh Gilzean Reid wrote to invite Sam to some function [MTP]. Note: On or after June 22, Sam gave instructions to Ashcroft to decline [MTP].

A.P. Macdonald wrote to thank Sam for "not only accepting" his "humble little book, but actually reading it, and saying you liked it." He added best wished for "many, many years of earthly happiness" [MTP]. Note: See Sam's reply before June 30.

Clarence Rook's article, "Mark Twain, The World's Greatest Humorist, Who is Now on a Visit to this Country," ran in The Reader (London), p. 205. Tenney: "A lengthy, but conventional and derivative biographical account. 'It is curious that Mark Twain never discovered that he was anything but a "funny man" until he had come to middle age...and never found his real seriousness until he was old in years but still young in enthusiasm.' 'There are at least three Mark Twains: the man of fun, who joked about the Holy Land and even King Arthur; the man of character, who would not compound for less than a hundred cents to the dollar; and the serious man, who has turned the hose of humor upon the things that matter,' such as Belgian rule in the Congo" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Fifth Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1981 p. 166].

Victor Frestadius wrote from London: "Reading in the 'Evening News' that you have far more invitations than you can accept I suppose it is not a very great risk to send you a card for my 'At Home' and to assure you of a hearty welcome from your Swedish friends were we to have the pleasure to see you" [MTP].

Rose Goodwin wrote from London: "Dear Sir, / Your goodness has overwhelmed me! That you should notice my letter in any way was the very last thing that entered my mind. I shall not even try to thank you, but I believe you will guess how I am feeling. / Where other great men are esteemed and admired, you are beloved" [MTP].

James G. Hamilton wrote from St. Peter Port Hospital, to enclose a poem to Mark Twain, "as tribute to many happy hours spent with your humorous writings, sayings, etc." [MTP].

Rev. C. Silvester Horne, minister of a Congregational church of working class people in central London, wrote with the sentiments of his flock that they would like to see him [MTP].

Vaughan Horton wrote from London: "Noting your anxiety to arrange for a really unique thing in funerals," he offered to make the monument for £30 [MTP].

William T. Jones wrote from London enclosing three engravings, Washington D.C. in 1816, Albany N.Y. in 1818, and “a view of the ruins of Baalbec,” which Sam gave an account of in IA. Jones also thanked him for his books which had given much pleasure and relief during an illness.

Sidney Lee sent a small calling card with: “I do not think that I told you that the small dinner party, at which you are to be my honored guest, on Monday July 1st at 8 o’clock will take place at the Garrick Club” [MTP].

H.E. Luxmore wrote from Eton College, Windsor, recalling their paths had crossed “on the landing stage of the lake of Thurn steamers years & years ago,” which Sam had followed with a letter, in which he said he would some day give Luxmore “the chance of reparation.” Would he come to Eaton and spend the night? [MTP].

Mr. Ofenheim wrote on Brown’s Hotel stationery: “Sorry to have missed you. I would very much like to see you and give you personally all the love they have charged me with for you in Vienna” [MTP].

The Editor of The Reader, London, wrote asking for “a few lines on a Postcard (for reproduction in facsimile) commenting on any recently published book that you can recommend to the general reader” [MTP].

Hugh Gilzean Reid wrote from London upon a return inviting Sam to visit on any day 28 to 30th [MTP]. Sam wrote on the letter: “Explain to Sir Hugh, time all occupied / SLC”

Charles Rosher for Legion of Frontiersmen, London: “Although we have seen in the press, reports that your private secretary spends twelve hours a day in typing disappointing replies to countless invitations, we nevertheless venture to suggest that your presence at our first annual dinner, would be, as it were, the crowning of the edifice” [MTP]. Note: Fatout lists a talk for this group, though no particulars were found.

W. Milton Thompson wrote from London enclosing some of his printed poems and articles. “May I ask the favor of your acceptance of my Coronation Ode, which you may be pleased to keep as a little memento of your visit” [MTP]. Note: the poems are in the file.

T. Fisher Unwin wrote from London enclosing some reviews of his Savage Club history and “King Leopold.” He looked forward to meeting Sam again at the Pilgrims Banquet the following Tuesday [MTP].

Frederick D. Wardle wrote on Town Clerk’s Office, Bath letterhead, “sorry to hear...that your public engagements interfere with the possibility of your visiting Bath” [MTP].

Whitefriar’s Club sent a printed notice of “Pilgrimage to Marlow and Henley” for Saturday June 22 [MTP].

June 23 Sunday – At Brown’s Hotel in London, Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

I have been having a rather perfect good time since we reached England last Tuesday morning. The first greeting was a hail & a hurrah from the stevedores on the dock; & since then I have climbed all the rounds of the ladder & shaken hands with all the grades, from the stevedores on up to king & queen.

And Ashcroft has been wise. He has declined every night-invitation that could be declined without a breach of duty—with the result that in 23 days I am out at night only 6 or 8 times. All the other days are occupied by luncheons, breakfasts, & teas, & I am in bed by 8.30 p. m—also several times a day for a restful little while.

The pervasive cordiality is touching; & that of the king & the queen was as hearty as the heartiest. Yesterday in that vast multitude in the Castle grounds it was like being at home, for both sexes introduced themselves to me with a quick American freedom from ceremony. And I behaved myself to admiration, & made but one breach in Clara’s instructions: there was one young lady who was so phenomenally beautiful that I couldn't resist—so I shook hands with her & begged pardon; but she graciously said she had been trying to get up courage enough to make the first advances herself. So Clara will have to overlook that breach.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

We sail a long time hence—July 13th, in the Minnetonka. Goodbye, dearheart—have a good time! With even so many hugs & kisses— [MTP].

Ashcroft's notes: "Sunday June 23. In the afternoon Mr. Clemens visited Archdeacon Wilberforce, 20 Dean's Yard, Westminster. Sir William Crookes, Sir James Knowles, Mrs. Meyers (widow of author of 'Human personality and its Survival of Bodily Death') and perhaps seventy-five or a hundred others were there" [MTFWE 33-4]. Note: editorial emphasis on names.

Scott writes of an extraordinary event, which likely happened after his letter to Jean, since no mention of it was made there.

The day following the King's Garden Party there occurred another event which made a deep impression on Mark Twain. It took place at the residence of Archdeacon Wilberforce, a gentleman who had accidentally taken Mark Twain's hat after a luncheon back in 1899. At that time the two men had exchanged amusing notes. On the present occasion, the Archdeacon escorted Mark Twain into his library and introduced him to a Bristol merchant. The merchant, who struck Mark Twain as a man of integrity, was said to be clairvoyant. With great care Wilberforce now unwrapped a curious vessel of silver, ancient in appearance, and placed it reverently in Mark Twain's hands. This, said the Archdeacon, was the genuine Holy Grail. It was a moment of drama for Mark Twain. Although the Holy Grail was simply a poetic legend to him, he was moved by the sincerity and faith of his host. His romantic imaginings raced back to Christ on the cross, to old Nicodemus, to the stainless Sir Galahad and his quest, to the princely Crusaders who laid down their lives in efforts to find the Holy Grail. "I am glad I have lived to see that half-hour—" said Mark Twain, "that astonishing half-hour. In its way it stands alone in my life's experience" [291]. Note: Scott takes the story from Paine, MTB 1387-88, who identifies the grain merchant as Mr. Pole. The object in question was "a curious, saucer-looking vessel of silver, very ancient in appearance, and cunningly overlaid with green grass." [Note: Peterson Pole claimed that a week or ten days before Sam's examination of the Grail, he'd been told by an angel where to dig for the relic—outside the ancient Glastonbury Abbey—where he found the relic under four feet of solidly packed earth. MTAD Sept. 6, 1907].

In the evening, Sam saw Mr. and Mrs. H.H. Rogers at Claridge's Hotel [MTB 1389].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Sunday? and what did we do? Oh yes, all day I worked. I wrote 23 letters and drew a lot of checks, and read with delight the account of the King's presence at the Royal Garden Party. Every single day there is something in the papers about our wonderful Mr. Clemens, though he's always reported as "Twain."

We are talking up a plan of going to Halifax and Newfoundland, Santa and I. Will is going to investigate ships and things. It is very hot here in Tuxedo, and debilitating. So Santa must get away and so ought I, and here comes the chance. There was a burglary at the Dinsmore's last night. Over on the other side of the lake. The burglars escaped in boats and carried a great deal of valuable stuff with them [MTP 75].

G. Washington Bayard wrote from London asking Sam what "swapping lies" meant [MTP].

Marie Corelli wrote from Stratford on Avon with more lobbying for him to come—"you mustn't go back across the sea without coming to Shakespeare!" [MTP].

S.A. Evarts wrote from London asking Sam's help in getting in to the Oxford ceremonies. He'd talked to Doubleday a few days before sailing and was told Doubleday had intended to speak to Sam about it [MTP].

Anna Hamilton wrote a begging letter from London that she'd seen Ashcroft the previous night and asked for Sam's financial help [MTP].

Fanny P. Hapgood wrote from Seal Harbor, Maine to advise that her "beloved Aunt Fanny" passed away on June 15. Her aunt adored Livy. When her and her husband would be in NY in the autumn they looked forward to seeing him [MTP].

S. Harwath wrote from Hotel Curzon London, listing all the past famous persons in connection with Curzon Street. "The proprietor of the Curzon Restaurant hopes 'Mark Twain' will patronize his dining room before leaving England. He will know the Hotel as having called on Mr. Henniker Heaton there June 22nd before going to the Kings Garden Party" [MTP].

T. Mary Lockyer wrote to Ashcroft, asking him to accompany Clemens the following day when he came there for luncheon, at 1.30 [MTP].

Bertha A. Palmer (Mrs. Potter Palmer of Chicago) wrote from London that she'd tried to invite him to dine but he was engaged—would he come for lunch or dinner any day soon? [MTP].

Charles Rosher for Legion of Frontiersmen wrote his group was "delighted at the possibility" that Clemens would join them. But, if not, could he send them a message? "It will be a guarantee for a Guard of Honour on the Great Funeral Occasion. Wherever it happens, because the sun never sets on this Legion—reason why—they are not to be trusted in the dark" [MTP].

Helen Seton wrote from London, feeling "very unhappy at not seeing you," but that "Sir Bruce will have that pleasure at the Pilgrims Luncheon on Tuesday" Her husband? [MTP].

E. Wyndham wrote from London, enclosing his photo and recalling the time in the 1870s he met the Clemens family on the train to New York, including Livy and "a baby who could just toddle, whom you called 'The Modoc'". He also related showing Sam around Oxford on a previous visit, when Sam expressed a desire to give a lecture to the students. "Now you are going to receive the highest honour Oxford can give to anyone..." [MTP].

June 24 Monday – At Brown's Hotel in London Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam to Marie Corelli.

"Mark Twain thanks you for having saved him from the crime of high treason to literature & he will accordingly visit the tomb & house of the Bard of Avon & take luncheon with you—if it will be convenient to you—a Saturday June 29th which is the only possible date" [MTP].

Sam lunched with "old friends" Sir Norman and Lady Lockyer, then later took tea with T.P. O'Connor at the House of Commons [MTB 1389].

The London Daily Mail, p.5, June 25, reported Sam's visit to the House of Commons:

MARK TWAIN'S INDIGNATION.

Mark Twain, in conversation with a "Daily Mail" representative yesterday afternoon [June 24], affected righteous indignation because someone had sent him, without comment of any kind, the poster of an evening newspaper bearing the words:

MARK TWAIN ARRIVES!
ASCOT GOLD CUP STOLEN!

Yesterday evening, he visited the Houses of Parliament, took tea with Mr. T.P. O'Connor, M.P., Mr. Henniker-Heaton, M.P., and other members, and subsequently visited the lobbies, where he held an informal reception, being introduced to a large number of members, including Mr. Lloyd-George and Mr. Churchill. He also had a chat with the Prime Minister in his private room.

The London Tribune, June 25, p. 6, also reported the visit to Parliament.

MARK TWAIN'S VISIT.

Mark Twain visited the Lobby of the House of Commons yesterday under the friendly guidance of Mr. T.P. O'Connor. Members crowded up to be presented to the famous humorist, and for half an hour he was kept busy talking to them.

The conversation was a treat tribute to Mr. Clemens's mental agility. Every member who came up had seen him somewhere before, and they were all anxious to recall the celebrated incidents of that meeting. Mark Twain, having been in Royal company recently, remembered them all—even to a cold he caught somewhere in India ten—or twenty—years ago. The idea of the visit was tea on the Terrace, but being Midsummer Day, it was too wintry for that, so tea was taken somewhere else—beside a fire.

Mark Twain has accepted an invitation to a banquet in his honour at Liverpool Town Hall on July 10th.

See insert: Sam at House of Commons

Fatout lists a talk with the Legion of Frontiersmen, London [MT Speaking 676]. Note: he gives no particulars. See June 22 invite from Charles Rosher of the group.

Isabel Lyon's journal (NY): This day emerged out of darkness, wonderful, wonderful darkness and brought renewed heat,—a terrible sense of loneliness and Will's departure and Santa's pretty listlessness, and neuritis in my left neck and arm and shoulderblade, and tea and then all wrapped up I read from Wuthering Heights to Santa as she lay on the long sage green couch. The pain got worse and I went to bed so stiff necked as not to be able to walk without misery [MTP 75-76].

Edward L. Adams sent Sam a two-page poem on American Consular Service letterhead, Stockholm, Sweden [MTP].

Phillip L. Agnew and S.A. Andrew each wrote letters to Ashcroft about engagements, photographs, etc. [MTP].

Oliver Bainbridge wrote asking for "a few moments" with Clemens in connection with his "volumes of great men and great women of the world in connection with my work on education." At the top of his letter he pasted a Washington D.C. Times snippet about his being "cordially received" by the President, no date [MTP].

H. Walter Barnett, London photographer, wrote he was sending "a set of finished portraits" from Sam's sitting "some days ago." He repeated he was anxious to have Sam sit in his Academic robes, and he would come to Oxford [MTP].

Sydney Brooks wrote on Brown's Hotel stationery, "I wonder if I might beg from you a couple of your new photographs," one for himself and one for Harper's Weekly [MTP].

Louise Copeland wrote a “lengthy epistle” from London full of experiences and a £300,000 claim from a Vendenheim or Fentenheim family in S. Carolina during the Civil War. Copeland claimed Sam was close to the family and asked him to see Mrs. Vendenheim [MTP].

A.J. Hopewell of the National Bank of England sent a book of 25 checks for Sam to draw on £100 [MTP].

Cliff Keane wrote from London in a long, roundabout request to see Clemens [MTP].

W.H. Langhorne wrote to thank Sam for his note, and sent his book with compliments. He would be “pleased” to know of the American descendants of any Langhorne whom Sam was named for [MTP].

John Y.W. MacAlister wrote Sam on The Library letterhead heading his invitation “Congo atrocities.” He continued, “The Club that is doing so much to arouse public attention to this business realise what a help it would give, if, while you are here, you would say some things about it” [MTP].

Clarence W. Mcllvaine, vice-president of Harper’s London office wrote to pay his respects and offering any help Sam might need. He hoped to lunch with Clemens, and mentioned that years before his mother had met Sam and Livy while visiting a friend in Hartford, Miss Taintor [MTP].

George W. Morrison wrote from London: “My dear ‘Mark Twain’: / On my first visit to England you made me famous. / Why have you not looked me up on this trip—as I am still ‘Sir Boss’ as shown in your” CY “who posed for Dan Beard for all the illustrations of your book in 1887-88 in his studio, Judge Building, 5th Ave & 16th St. New York.” He also told of meeting Sam in Hartford when he was a boy [MTP].

Donald Murray for National Liberal Arts Club, London sent Sam a printed notice of being elected a Temporary Member with all privileges of the Club [MTP].

Mr. Ofenheim wrote to from London to Ashcroft: “I am much obliged to you for your kind note. I do not wish to take up too much of Mr Clemens’ time and only wish to shake hands with him.” What day after 5 p.m. could he find Sam at his hotel? [MTP].

Eden Phillpotts wrote from London to thank Sam for his note, which was now his heirloom [MTP].

Marian Robinson wrote from Herts, England to Sam to send “only a few lines of welcome,” and mentioned a mutual friend, Mrs. Paget of Ashley Place [MTP].

R.H. Slacke wrote “May I voice the feeling of the British people, congratulating you on your arrival again in the old country...and trusting it may be many years before that grand funeral comes off” [MTP].

John Whitehead wrote from Surrey enclosing his “one and only effort in Literature” for Sam to keep, an essay on great soldiers and sailors [MTP].

Captain H. Wiatt wrote from Acton, London. asking for permission to dramatize American Claimant [MTP] Note: Ashcroft wrote on the letter: “Miss Elizabeth Marbury The Empire Theatre Bldg”

Evelyn Suart wrote from London thanking Sam for “the charming composition you have written in my book” [MTP].

June 25 Tuesday – This day’s issue of Punch was dedicated to Mark Twain, and included a full-page cartoon, by Bernard Partridge (see insert); the original would be presented to Sam at the July 9 Punch dinner by little Joy Agnew. The New York Times, June 26, 1907, p. 5, ran a Special Cablegram article on the “certification” of Mark Twain as a humorist by the publication.

MARK TWAIN HUMOR APPROVED BY PUNCH

A Big Cartoon Dedicated to Him and the Staff Will Dine Him.

GUEST OF THE PILGRIMS

Notable Luncheon Given, to Which 1,000 Notable Vainly Ask to be Bidden.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES CO.

LONDON, June 25.—Mark Twain will go back to America duly certificated [sic] as a humorist. Punch, which regards Americans generally as lacking in the sense of humor, does not consider Mark Twain deficient in that respect. He is one of their own kind. The Punch people think, and they are kitting to him with their whole hearts. They exhibit their feeling for him in a full page cartoon in today’s issue, which is dedicated to him. Mark Twain appears seated at a table, on which stands a big steaming punch bowl. Mr. Punch, who is placed in the foreground, drinks to Mark Twain’s health, the toast being:

“Sir, I honor myself by drinking to your health. Long life to you and happiness and perpetual youth.”

Mark Twain expects to have a grand time at a dinner which The Punch people will give to him. They asked him which he would rather do, “Go to a hotel and have something decent to eat,” or dine at the famous Long Table in Punch’s office. He voted unanimously for the Long Table.

London literary folk are rather amused at the announcement that Mark Twain will dine on Saturday at Stratford with Marie Corelli, but I am told that he will find in Miss Corelli one of the his warmest admirers and most appreciative readers.

Sam was the guest of honor for a luncheon given by the Pilgrims Club at the Savoy Hotel. Paine calls this “one of the most elaborate occasions of his visit.” The Pilgrims had chapters on both sides of the Atlantic [MTB 1389-91]. The event was widely reported. The London Tribune observed the event gave Mark Twain “further material for his biography,” and that during the luncheon a band played music known on both sides of the ocean, such as Marching on Georgia, and Camptown Races, and The Stars and Stripes” [June 26, p. 8, “Mark Twain Tells a Hat Story”]. The Edinburg Evening Dispatch called it “A large and distinguished company assembled to do honour the the well-known American humourist” [June 26, p.5, “‘Mark Twain’ Among the Pilgrims”]. The London Daily Graphic observed “Mark Twain is enjoying himself,” while the London Daily Chronicle reported Sam’s “grave, grim face set in a stern mould, which could not conceal the creases that yield to the impule of laughter” [MTFWE 37].

Insert: luncheon program cover

Paine gives us his version:

At this luncheon the picture on the bill of fare represented him as a robed pilgrim, with a great pen for his staff, turning his back on the Mississippi River and being led along his literary way by a huge jumping frog, to which he is attached by a string. On a guest-card was printed:

Pilot of many Pilgrims since the shout
 “Mark Twain!”—that serves you for a deathless sign—
 On Mississippi’s waterway rang out
 Over the plummet’s line—

Still where the countless ripples laugh above
 The blue of halcyon seas long may you keep Your course unbroken, buoyed upon a love
 Ten thousand fathoms deep!

—O. S. [OWEN SEAMAN].

Augustine Birrell made the speech of introduction, closing with this paragraph:

Mark Twain is a man whom Englishmen and Americans do well to honor. He is a true consolidator of nations. His delightful humor is of the kind which dissipates and destroys national prejudices. His truth and his honor—his love of truth and his love of honor— overflow all boundaries. He has made the world better by his presence, and we rejoice to see him here. Long may he live to reap a plentiful harvest of hearty honest human affection.

The toast was drunk standing. Then Clemens rose and made a speech which delighted all England. In his introduction Mr. Birrell had happened to say, “How I came here I will not ask!” Clemens remembered this, and looking down into Mr. Birrell’s wine-glass, which was apparently unused, he said:

“Mr. Birrell doesn’t know how he got here. But he will be able to get away all right—he has not drunk anything since he came.”

He told stories about Howells and Twichell, and how Darwin had gone to sleep reading his books, and then he came down to personal things and company, and told them how, on the day of his arrival, he had been shocked to read on a great placard, “Mark Twain Arrives: Ascot Cup Stolen.”

No doubt many a person was misled by those sentences joined together in that unkind way. I have no doubt my character has suffered from it. I suppose I ought to defend my character, but how can I defend it? I can say here and now that anybody can see by my face that I am sincere—that I speak the truth, and that I have never seen that Cup. I have not got the Cup, I did not have a chance to get it. I have always had a good character in that way. I have hardly ever stolen anything, and if I did steal anything I had discretion enough to know about the value of it first. I do not steal things that are likely to get myself into trouble. I do not think any of us do that. I know we all take things—that is to be expected; but really I have never taken anything, certainly in England, that amounts to any great thing. I do confess that when I was here seven years ago I stole a hat—but that did not amount to anything. It was not a good hat it was only a clergyman’s hat, anyway. I was at a luncheon-party and Archdeacon Wilberforce was there also. I dare say he is archdeacon now—he was a canon then—and he was serving in the Westminster Battery, if that is the proper term. I do not know, as you mix military and ecclesiastical things together so much.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

He recounted the incident of the exchanged hats; then he spoke of graver things. He closed:

I cannot always be cheerful, and I cannot always be chaffing. I must sometimes lay the cap and bells aside and recognize that I am of the human race. I have my cares and griefs, and I therefore noticed what Mr. Birrell said—I was so glad to hear him say it—something that was in the nature of these verses here at the top of the program:

He lit our life with shafts of sun
And vanquished pain.
Thus two great nations stand as one
In honoring Twain.

I am very glad to have those verses. I am very glad and very grateful for what Mr. Birrell said in that connection. I have received since I have been here, in this one week, hundreds of letters from all conditions of people in England, men, women, and children, and there is compliment, praise, and, above all, and better than all, there is in them a note of affection.

Praise is well, compliment is well, but affection—that is the last and final and most precious reward that any man can win, whether by character or achievement, and I am very grateful to have that reward. All these letters make me feel that here in England, as in America, when I stand under the English or the American flag I am not a, stranger, I am not an alien, but at home [MTB 1389-91]..

Right after the Pilgrim Club lunch, Sam left for Oxford with Robert P. Porter of the London Times. Sam would be Porter's guest for the next few days [MTB 1392]. Sam arrived at Oxford at 7 p.m. and was soon trying on the scarlet gown for the tailor—it fit him well [MTFWE 54: MTAD July 26, 1907]

Isabel Lyon's journal: In bed all day with hot water bottle and Phenacatine [sic] to drive out this something in my shoulder, and it is going. I have been reading Orion's Autobiography and it is a pitiful story. He paints the King in his true colors, and himself in truer. Poor, poor creature. He wrote of Whitelaw Reid's enmity to the King; and here in this far distant day—35 years later—Reid is Ambassador to England and is entertaining the King. Dr. Quintard sputtered finely against Reid and called him splendid, bad names for not giving a better banquet for the King—"only painters and writers, when he might have had dukes there." For myself, I believe the men Reid invited were more acceptable to the King than the titled men would have been; for the men there were most of them men who have achieved from within themselves. Whereas a Duke is a Duke only by an accident. Not that the King is without appreciating the nobility of the earth; he is too much in favor of monarchical government to lose sight of the value of a man's high birth. But no matter. We plan to sail for Nova Scotia on Saturday to be away about 12 days [MTP 76-77]. Note: Phenacetin, introduced in 1887, was used mostly as an analgesic; one of the first synthetic fever reducers on the market.

Miss Helen Bywater wrote for the American Rendezvous Club, London, sending the Club rules and hoping Sam might call [MTP].

H. Walter Barnett, London photographer, wrote, deciding it best for him not to go to Oxford to take pictures of Sam in his robes but to have him sit upon his return—he would make an appointment for when it was convenient [MTP].

Laurence V. Benet, President American Chamber of Commerce in Paris wrote to invite Sam to a July 4 banquet there [MTP].

Grace Hodson Boutelle wrote from Chelsea:

“Yesterday I caught a glimpse of you at Hyde Park Corner that took me back years and years and miles and miles to a long ago June week at West Point, when you made the heart of a small girl glad for at least ten exultant minutes, by talking to her as if she were a person whose opinions were worthy of the most interested attention.” If Sam “could and would” make up his mind what he thought of George Bernard Shaw, and confide it to her, she promised “to repeat it only to the discreet ears of the Boston Transcript.” [MTP].

Evelyn Bigelow Clark, daughter of Poultney Bigelow, wrote from Paris that she would be in London on July 2 and 3—could he possibly lunch with her and husband? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Declined full up”

Marie Corelli telegraphed THREE times to Ashcroft trying to set a date for Sam’s visit to Stratford [MTP].

Fontaine, London correspondent for Le Matin, wrote to ask “a few minutes intercourse to discuss with you a private matter” [MTP].

P.P. Gieve wrote from London, glad to get his “letter of the 20th, with its humorous signature” [MTP].

Director Johann Glaw wrote a letter of congratulations in German on Sanatorium Johannisbad letterhead [MTP].

Hugh Hamber wrote from England to ask why it was that humorists like himself and Bret Harte “come amongst us and are so much appreciated by high and low?” Why was it Americans “basked in the sunshile of Royal smiles” and admire the “slightly superior style of ‘Noblesse Oblige’.” He thought the bit about George Washington never telling a lie was “bosh” [MTP].

F. Jerome Hart wrote from London asking if he could “find time to give Histed the photographer of 42 Baker Street a sitting?” He sent a specimen of Histed’s work, also recommended by Bernard Shaw [MTP]. Note: Sam did sit for Histed; see July 3 from Hart.

Maurice Hime wrote from County Donegal, Ireland asking Sam to accept “this little book,” A Plea for Cheerfulness, “for which you have done so much” [MTP].

R.W. Johnson, London, wrote a clever poem asking Sam to send a joke [MTP].

J.W.T. Ley for Dickens Fellowship inviting Sam to attend the celebration of the 70th Anniversary of the publication of the Pickwick Papers, July 19 to Aug. 28 [MTP].

John S. MacDonald wrote from Lee, S.E., London “Will you pity a Scotchman in dire distress? I have undertaken to prepare and deliver a lecture on American Humour. May I beg a word of sympathy by way of encouragement?” [MTP].

Frank Newnes wrote on George Newnes, Limited letterhead: “The bearer of this, Mr Charles Lavell, would greatly appreciate an interview...as we have asked him to approach you with a proposal for the publication of some of your books in this country” [MTP].

Margaret Osgood wrote an invitation for Sam to stay with them while he was in Oxford. Her husband was “dying to meet” him and her daughter, Mrs Fiske Morieu (sp?) would like to see him again [MTP].

An unidentified person sent Sam the following clipping from the Evening Standard of June 25:

Mark Twain's Reply.

Responding, Mark Twain said praise was well, compliment was well, but affection was the last and most precious reward which had been accorded to him. It made him feel when he was here in England that he was not an alien nor a stranger, but that he was at home.

Fanny S. Ware wrote from Exeter to beg for monetary help [MTP].

Elizabeth Woodruff wrote thanks for Sam's reply to her letter. Marie Corelli had consented to write the preface to her forthcoming book. Her deep regret was she did not have "a few words of some kind from" his pen [MTP].

Sir Benjamin Stone wrote confirming the acceptance of his invitation by Clemens and Ashcroft to lunch at the House of Commons Tuesday July 9 at 1:45 p.m. [MTP].

Gabriel Timmory wrote from Paris, France concerning dramatization of The Stolen White Elephant and also How I Edited an Agricultural Paper [MTP].

June 25-28 — C. Hempel, hairdresser, Oxford, asking for the honor of shaving him during his stay, adding him to the celebrities served [MTP].

June 26 Wednesday – The big day in Oxford, England: The Encoeonia (conferring of degrees) took place at the Sheldonian Theater in the morning.

Exactly one month later, Sam wrote of the affair:

At half-past ten the next morning [June 26] we assembled at All Souls College and marched thence, gowned, mortar-boarded, and in double file, down a long street to the Sheldonian Theatre, between solid walls of the populace, very much cheered and limitlessly kodacked. We made a procession of considerable length and distinction and picturesqueness, with the Chancellor, Lord Curzon, late Viceroy of India, in his rich robe of black and gold, in the lead, followed by a pair of little train-bearers, and the train-bearers followed by the young Prince Arthur of Connaught, who was to be made a D.C.L. [Doctor of Civil Law] The detachment of D.C.L.'s were followed by the Doctors of Science, and these by the Doctors of Literature, and these in turn by the Doctors of Music. Sidney Colvin marched in front of me; I was coupled with Sidney Lee, and Kipling followed us; General Booth, of the Salvation Army, was in the squadron of D.C.L.'s.

Our journey ended, we were halted in a fine old hall whence we could see, through a corridor of some length, the massed audience in the theatre. Here for a little time we moved about and chatted and made acquaintanceships; then the D.C.L.'s were summoned, and they marched through the corridor and the shouting began in the theatre. It would be some time before the Doctors of Literature and Science would be called for, because each of those D.C.L.'s had to have a couple of Latin speeches made over him before his promotion would be complete—one by the Regius Professor of Civil Law, the other by the Chancellor. After a while I asked Sir William Ramsey [sic Ramsay] if a person might smoke here and not get shot. He said "Yes," but whoever did it and got caught would be fined a guinea, and perhaps hanged later. He said he knew of a place where we could accomplish at least as much as half of a smoke before any informers would be likely to chance upon us, and he was ready to show the way to any who might be willing to risk the guinea and the hanging. By request he led the way, and Kipling, Sir Norman Lockyer and I followed. We crossed an unpopulated quadrangle and stood under one of its exits—an archway of massive masonry—and there we lit up and began to take comfort. The photographers soon arrived, but they were courteous and friendly and gave us no trouble, and we gave them none. They grouped us in all sorts of ways and photographed us at their diligent leisure, while we smoked and talked. We were there more than an hour; then we returned to headquarters, happy, content, and greatly refreshed. Presently we filed into the theatre, under a very satisfactory hurrah, and waited in a crimson column, dividing the crowded pit through the middle, until each of us in his turn should be called to stand before the Chancellor and listen to our merits set forth in sonorous Latin. Meantime, Kipling and I wrote autographs until some good kind soul interfered in our behalf and procured for us a rest [MTFWE 54-5: MTAD July 26, 1907]

Paine also writes of the spectacle and those being honored besides Mark Twain, and quotes from the London Standard:

It was a memorable affair. Among those who were to receive degrees that morning besides Samuel Clemens were: Prince Arthur of Connaught; Prime Minister Campbell-Bannerman; Whitelaw Reid; Rudyard Kipling; Sidney Lee; Sidney Colvin; Lord Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of Ireland [William Alexander]; Sir Norman Lockyer; Auguste Rodin, the sculptor; Saint-Saens, and Gen. William Booth, of the Salvation Army—something more than thirty, in all, of the world's distinguished citizens.

The candidates assembled at Magdalen College, and led by Lord Curzon, the Chancellor, and clad in their academic plumage, filed in radiant procession to the Sheldonian Theater, a group of men such as the world seldom sees collected together. The London Standard said of it:

So brilliant and so interesting was the list of those who had been selected by Oxford University on Convocation to receive degrees, 'honoris causa', in this first year of Lord Curzon's chancellorship, that it is small wonder that the Sheldonian Theater was besieged today at an early hour.

Shortly after 11 o'clock the organ started playing the strains of "God Save the King," and at once a great volume of sound arose as the anthem was taken up by the undergraduates and the rest of the assemblage. Every one stood up as, headed by the mace of office, the procession slowly filed into the theater, under the leadership of Lord Curzon, in all the glory of his robes of office, the long black gown heavily embroidered with gold, the gold-tasseled mortar-board, and the medals on his breast forming an admirable setting, thoroughly in keeping with the dignity and bearing of the late Viceroy of India. Following him came the members of Convocation, a goodly number consisting of doctors of divinity, whose robes of scarlet and black enhanced the brilliance of the scene. Robes of salmon and scarlet—which proclaim the wearer to be a doctor of civil law—were also seen in numbers, while here and there was a gown of gray and scarlet, emblematic of the doctorate of science or of letters [MTB 1392-3; editorial emphasis on names].

The London Daily Express of June 26, p.5 reported:

OXFORD'S NEW DOCTORS

The pageant and the Commemoration occurring together have brought people to Oxford from all ends of the earth. Every house in the town is filled with visitors, and those who have secured a camp bed in a sitting-room are considered lucky.

The pageant begins to-morrow; to-day Oxford once more holds Commemoration in the Sheldonian Theatre. There have been many famous scenes in the theatre, but to-day's promises to eclipse them all, for never before have forty new doctors been created in one day.
[...]

The London Daily Chronicle, June 27, p.5, proclaimed that "Oxford received him like a son," and that "this morning's ceremony has never been surpassed in brilliance, exuberance, and impressiveness" [MTFWE 49].

Mark Twain and Rudyard Kipling signed at least one printed program that survives, for the Oxford convocation [MTP: Sotheby's catalogs, Dec. 11, 1989].

The students in the gallery, by tradition, would yell out comments after each man. When Mark Twain rose to be presented to the Chancellor, someone hollered from the gallery, "What have you done with the Ascot Cup, Mark?" Cheers and laughter. "Have you got that jumping frog with you, Mark?" Waves of cheers. The professor who stood next to Sam and gave the speech in Latin was bald, prompting another call from the audience, “Couldn’t you spare him some of your hair, Mark?” Conferees were bound to silence during the ceremony, so Sam was forced to passivity during all of the shouts. At the proper time he advanced to the Chancellor’s rostrum, shook hands, and passed to a seat on the left of the stage, smiling. After all the presentations had been made the new Doctors filed out and went to lunch at All Souls College, people in the streets forming a cheering escort for Mark Twain. At lunch the Maharajah of Bikanir asked Kate Douglas Wiggin (Mrs. Riggs) to introduce him to Sam, which she did later in the quadrangle [MTFWE 57].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

That afternoon a garden party was given on the grounds of St. John’s. People pushed forward to meet Mark and shake his hand [ibid.].

In the evening Sam attended a dinner at one of the colleges, where his place was at the “high table” with the Chancellor, the heads of the colleges, Ambassador Whitelaw Reid, and other distinguished men. Once again Sam had received permission to come late, after the feasting was over and time for speeches. Without knowing what the dress was to be, Sam sent a messenger who returned with “evening dress,” which was in error—he arrived in a black suit to see “one wide and flaming conflagration of crimson gowns—a kind of human prairie on fire.” Everyone was wearing their Oxford gowns except Sam, who had to pass through the crowd to the high table and give a speech. He wrote that he “looked as out of place as a Presbyterian in hell” [ibid. 58-9]

H.H. Rogers wrote from London to Sam.

The enclosed cablegram has just come in and I forward for your decision. You know that Reick is now on the Times.

Sorry not to see you after the luncheon but I could not get around in time for your telephone call. Suppose you will have great times at Oxford and we congratulate you in advance. You made me prouder than ever yesterday, and I had as good a time as you did.

We are off at noon to-morrow, and I am glad enough to go.

Mrs. R. joins me in best regards, / Yours sincerely / H H Rogers

If you want to answer Reick you can cable Harrison Standard Oil New York Tell Reick —anything you damn please [MTHHR 629]. Note: William C. Reick (1864-1924), had been owner of the N.Y. Sun, and city editor of the New York Herald, was now with the N.Y. Times; his cable was dated June 27 (time difference; same day). It read: “Hope pleasant voyage ask uncle mark if he will give us characteristic interview his experiences in england he is creating great sensation” [n1].

Punch ran an anonymous comment on King Leopold’s Soliloquy, p. 451. Tenney gives text in full: “It is rumored that MARK TWAIN has received a communication from the King of the BELGIANS offering to defray the entire expense of the obsequies referred to by the American humorist upon his arrival in this country. The only provision that his MAJESTY makes is that the funeral shall take place at once” [43]. Note: the joke here is that Sam had told reporters he was much younger being in London again and would “postpone” his funeral.

The Tatler (London) ran an anonymous article, “Mark Twain and the Policeman,” p. 220. Tenney: “Recently in New York, the car in which MT was riding was stopped for speeding. ‘But when the quiet-spoken man in the tonneau incidentally remarked, “My name’s Mark Twain,” a summary smile stole over the official features at memories of Tom Sawyer, Huck Finn, and the rest. Mark got off” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Fifth Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1981 p. 165].

Isabel Lyon’s journal (NY): The Pilgrims of London gave Mr. Clemens a beautiful luncheon yesterday and today is his Oxford day. We are gaily proud of the King. His visit to England and his reception there they say are parts of History, for all the English world has thrown its arms wide open to welcome him and to hold him close to its heart.

He sent a cablegram to C.C. "Try not to be jealous. Father." for there is a gay little rivalry between them. We sat on the porch when the message came and Santa concocted a reply. "More worried than ever Doctor, Remember the proprieties." Late tomorrow we go in to town. But this evening's Sun had an account of the King's experience at Oxford and how fine he looked in his scarlet robe, and how he maintained silence when the undergraduates cheered him, and he didn't want to maintain silence, I know [MTP 77].

Grace Revere Osler wrote from Oxford: "It will give Dr. Osler and me so much pleasure if you will take luncheon with us tomorrow at 1.15" [MTP]. Note: after signature, "Wednesday," placing this as June 26. Previously catalogued as June 25-28.

Austin E.W. for National Lending Library for the Blind, Bayswater wrote anxious to have Extracts from Adam's Diary transcribed into Braille. Would he give permission? [MTP].

H. Drummond wrote two pages of all phonetically spelled prose, which amounted to congratulations [MTP].

M.S. Gifford wrote from the Arlington House, Oxford expressing "great pleasure that our kind friends, Mr & Mrs Porter lead us to hope that we may see you & your friend at dinner tomorrow. We have fixed the hour at 8.15, hoping it may be more agreeable to you not to be hurried after the Pageant..." [MTP].

Arthur Jule Goodman wrote from Nottinghamshire, "Glad to learn of your arrival in England in such good health and spirits. Many moons since you sat to me for your portrait" in Hartford [MTP].

B.H. sent Sam two picture postcards from Igtham, England with their thanks and congratulations [MTP].

Archibald Henderson telegraphed congratulations [MTP].

Elizabeth Holland wrote praise for Mark Twain's works [MTP].

H. Pearl Humphrey invited Sam to the Lyceum Club dinner on July 15 [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft wrote on the letter: "Declined"

Paul Jones telegraphed congratulations [MTP].

Joseph Jordan wrote from South Wales, England to congratulate [MTP].

Lafayette Ltd., London photographers solicited Clemens to sit for his portrait. Note: Ashcroft wrote on the letter: "Not answd"

Besse M. Leggett wrote an invitation to dine Saturday, June 29 Note: Ashcroft wrote on the letter: "Declined Lord Mayor's Banquet & also journey from Oxford."

Addie Lichten-Northman, an American born girl, wrote from Germany about growing up with Mark Twain books. If Sam was to go to the Continent soon, he was welcome to visit [MTP].

Fred Ludlow, Publisher, Bristol, to praise his works and to ask if he would accept a copy of his new book, Tales & Sketches of Old and New Bristol, to be issued in a few weeks. He had no object in view but that of offering his "little tribute of admiration." [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Alice Warren Skae Mauscaux wrote from London: “I wonder if you will remember my Father “Lucky Johnnie Skae” in old days Virginia City Nevada where I don’t think I was dreamed of yet—the Dad often spoke of you and once you mentioned him in “The Jumping Frog” [MTP]. Note: see The Galaxy Oct. 1870, Mark Twain’s “Memoranda, which included “Johnny Skae” Vol I, MTDDBD.

Annie Colt McCook (Mrs. Edward M. McCook) wrote from London to Sam:

Since reading your characteristic and beautiful speech to “The Pilgrims,” last evening, I cannot resist the pleasure of expressing to you my appreciation of its humor and tenderness—and I feel sure that every American in London shares my sentiments. It does not seem so very long ago, since I chaperoned your sweet daughter at Old Point Comfort. But the sorrow of my life has taken place since then—I have lived in London almost entirely since the General’s death, I could not face life without him in America!—Accept my sympathy in yr own bereavement, I know it was great—And believe me very sincerely yours...[MTP]. Note: see Feb. 18, 1903 for Sam’s letter to Mrs. McCook who watched after Jean at Old Point Comfort, Va. General Edward McCook was a Civil War hero. See index Vol. III.

Edmund D. Morel for Congo Reform Assoc. enclosed a letter from Dr. Rendel Harris (not in file) urging Morel to trouble Clemens for more on the Congo question [MTP].

Amy S. Parker wrote from London: “My husband delights me by telling me that you will come to us on Sunday evening to dine. I am putting the dinner hour at 7.45...” [MTP].

Henry Perevia wrote from London:

Forgive an unknown correspondent for suggesting that there was one sad omission in your delightful speech at the Pilgrims’ dinner last night. For the benefit of some of us impecunious curates, who have, from our sins, to sport a silk hat on occasion, you really might have given the name of the West End hatter who ‘never charges the Clergy!’” [MTP].

S. Pulman, after listening to Sam’s speech the night before, sent a printed poem tribute to his lost daughter [MTP].

John E. Rowland wrote from London in a shaky hand, recalling clerking on steamboats of the Mississippi under a captain named Bart Bowen. “I have often heard him and other ‘boat hands’ speak of you.” He offered “all good wishes” [MTP].

C. Spenser Sarle for the London Tribune wrote to Sam. He’d been brought up on Tom and Huck and had also met the Clemens family in Bombay when he was an editor of the Times of India. He related an incident in Bombay of securing a steam launch with a bunch of Twain fans, American flag on one end and the Union Jack on the other, with the American consul in the prow—all to fetch Twain and bring him back “in triumph to the Apollo Bunder.” The boat got there too soon and Mark had “sought refuge in Watson’s Hotel.” Sarle looked forward to seeing Clemens at the Lord Mayor’s Banquet to the Savages [MTP].

Samuel W. Smart sent Sam a postcard from Oxford, mostly scribbles about shaking hands with Gladstone and others [MTP].

Leonora Speyer wrote from London. She’d met him several times at the Gilder’s, Robert Underwood Johnson’s and Clarence Rice’s—could Sam come to dinner or lunch one day in July? [MTP].

Maud Stanley wrote from London: “Many years ago I made yr acquaintance in one of yr visits to England, of course you will not remember me, but I am venturing to ask you should you have ½ an hour free before next Saturday the 29th if you would come and say a few words to 1200 of our working girls in our Club...” [MTP].

Frederick C. Van Duzer for the American Society in London asking if Sam would speak to the toast given on July 4th’s Banquet, “The Day We Celebrate” [MTP].

Vicar of St. George, Brentford wrote a note to thank Mark Twain “for his most delightful speech at the Pilgrim’s last evening, reported in this day’s Times” [MTP]. Note: in 1907 the vicar of St. George was Thomas Selby Henrey (1859-1941).

J.J. Wilson wrote from Liverpool, an admirer especially of LM: “Please, oh please...more similar work” [MTP].

Alice L. Winterbotham wrote from London, “deeply touched by your gifts to the world” [MTP].

Editor of The Woman at Home wrote they proposed to have “an illustrated article in the Christmas number...entitled “My Ideal Woman in Literature.” Who was his ideal woman, and what were his reasons for the choice? [MTP].

Ida Ynnes, an “old devoted admirer” wrote from Gosforth, England asking about a book of witty quotations she’d been unable to find; friends visiting America had also been unable. She hoped someday he would “give us more views as to our doings in South Africa since you wrote ‘More Tramps Abroad’ [FE]. Your statistics & accounts in it were too funny for anything.” [MTP]. Note: she also wrote Ashcroft thanking for his “prompt reply.”

Mr. & Mrs. John C. Gordon (Lord & Lady Aberdeen) sent a telegram: “Felicitations and all good wishes come and pay us a visit at Vucrest Lodge Dublin if Possible / Lord and Lady Aberdeen” [MTP].

Thomas B. Strong wrote from Oxford: “May I venture to ask you to say a few words in answer to the toast of the Honorary Doctors at the Dinner here tonight? I am looking forward to welcoming you here” [MTP].

Tablotype Gallery per Elliott & Fry, London, sent proofs from a sitting Sam had done for them. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “On the table in Case”

Hallam Tennyson sent a telegram: “Much regret your inability to come and my inability to give luncheon in London” [MTP].

June 26-29 – Countess of Jersey sent her “AT Home” notice for June 29 and July 7 [MTP].

June 26–July 13 – E.B. Forbes Watson for The Student, Edinburgh University to ask for “some contribution for publication” [MTP].

June 27 Thursday – Sam attended the Oxford Pageant. The Oxford Chronicle, June 28, p.16, “Yesterday at the Pageant” reported Sam’s appearance at 3:45 p.m. The London Daily Express, reported on the gala event, (June 28, p. 1, “Pageant in the Mist”) and on Mark Twain’s attendance:

The first performance of the Oxford Pageant began yesterday [June 27] in a blaze of glory, and closed—amid cheers—in a Scotch mist.

The sun was gleaming through the threatening clouds when Mark Twain, Mr. Rudyard Kipling, and other new and eminent Doctors of the University walked along the front of the pageant ground, cheered by the thousands of spectators, and took their seats in the royal box.

Mark Twain, eager as he professed himself to get hints from the pageant for his own long foretold funeral, came in bright array—bright eyes, bright silk hat, bright grey trousers, and the brightest of smiles.

His cheery presence and the glamour of the pageant were needed to keep up the spirits of the immense audience, for as the pageant wended its way to music through the picturesque ages from the legendary Saxon times to the powdered wig era of George III, the mist came down—a thick, grey, clinging drizzle that cast a haze over the ground and wrapped the three and a half thousand pageant actors in its chilly embrace.

In spite of the rain during the last half hour the pageant was an overwhelming success. The thousands of spectators stood up at the conclusion with the thousands of players in multi-coloured costumes massed in groups before them, and the combined thousands sang in a mighty chorus, “O God, our help in ages past.”

Volleys of cheering followed the hymn, and thus a pageant of English life came to a typical English finish. [...]

Note: for Sam’s recollections of the Pageant, too long to include here, see MTFWE 62-70.

H.H. Rogers wrote from London to Sam.

The N.Y. Times man called me up last night to learn if I had received a cable from Reick. I told him that I had sent the same to you. I suppose that lets me out. At any rate Mrs Rogers and I are leaving in 5 minutes. You look well in your gown, and I am proud to see you in the front row as I had expected that W.R. [Whitelaw Reid] would ~~have~~ have the show [MTHHR 630]. Note: see Rogers June 26.

Pearson’s Weekly (London) ran an anonymous article, “This Week’s Hero: Mark Twain,” p. 905. Tenney: “A conventional and partly inaccurate biographical sketch of MT” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Fifth Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1981 p. 165].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today the papers are full of the King—and today we go to town at 11:50. We found the city very, very hot and I was weary when I dropped into bed at a late hour. My vitality is at a low ebb; I ought to be in bed every night at nine [MTP 77].

William H. Allen wrote a welcome to Clemens, “But do come more often whenever you can” [MTP].

F.I. Baker for The British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection wrote to inform Sam of the work they were doing. He added a PS that he was “glad to hear you had not stolen the Ascot Cup” [MTP].

Winifred V. Barnett, “a little girl admirer” wrote to thank Sam for his autograph sent [MTP].

Beatrice Batty wrote disappointment she’d been to see him twice and was not permitted the pleasure of shaking his hand. “Your secretary asked my address—I give it now” [MTP].

Frank Thomas Bullen wrote he had “a lump into my throat and dew into my eyes” when he recalled being sought by Twain and Rogers one day in New Bedford, “all unconscious of the joy I was missing...engaged upon some footy little expedition worth nothing.” He sent best wishes [MTP].

James Christison wrote on Public Library, Montrose stationery to express admiration for the speech Sam gave to the Pilgrims. He noted that Rev. Dr. McCrie, of the United Free Church quoted Sam’s bit about “Praise is well, compliment is well...” [MTP].

L.T. E. wrote sending a poem by Walter E. Grogan from the Pall Mall Magazine, Feb. 1907. L.T.E was inspired by Sam's Pilgrim Speech [MTP].

Hubert Giles, Bookseller, Oxford sent a note with cartoon of the Procession (not in file) [MTP].

George B. Harvey sent a trans-Atlantic cable to Sam after returning to NYC:

JUST ARRIVED THANKS FOR WELCOME CABLE CONGRATULATIONS FROM MY HEART UPON THE BEST EVER COMING INTO HIS OWN WHILE STILL IN POSITION TO APPRECIATE FULL RECOGNITION LONG PAST DUE IN THIS CLARENCE MACKAY WHO PROMISES TO HAVE THIS DELIVERED WHEREVER YOU ARE ASKS TO JOIN WITH SPECIAL FELICITATIONS / HARVEY [MTP].

James Knowles wrote from London to verify a meeting for Sam with Princess Louise Augusta for July 4 at 1.30 [MTP].

R. Howard Krause wrote from Kidderminster, England to invite Sam to visit. "Mrs. Krause would love to see you again." Note: Ashcroft wrote on the letter: "Declined"

J.N. L. wrote two sentences to Sam: "Wrinkles should merely indicate where the smiles have been". And so an extended definition of a wrinkle is a 'smile that won't come off.'" [MTP].

Arthur Marston sent a picture postcard from Dover, England: "All good wishes. Do you remember, in old times, the...camp at Condoover Park with Major C." [MTP].

Northern Newspaper Syndicate per James E. Lyons asked for "eight articles, each of about 2,200-2,400 words, " to be paid "One Hundred Guineas cash" [MTP].

Christabel Pankhurst for Women's Social & Political Union, "Votes for Women," wrote enclosing literature for the cause. Would he grant "a short interview"? [MTP].

Joseph Pennell for International Society of Sculptors, Painters and Gravers, Whistler Memorial, wrote asking for his help to get the Memorial "up." Auguste Rodin was doing the statue and Whitelaw Reid, Rudyard Kipling, and [Hubert von] Herkomer were helping out. "Won't you give us a lift?"

Francis H. Skrine wrote from London to say their only son witnessed the Oxford "reception from the undergraduate gallery, & felt proud that his parents should number you among their friends. We were very much disappointed by finding, on our return from the country on Monday, that you had called on the previous day" He offered congratulations [MTP].

George N. Strange wrote from Worthing, England, enclosing some "mortuary poetry" since he saw that Twain was interested in such. He apologized for intruding on Sam's privacy [MTP].

"A Yorkshire school boy" sent Sam a picture postcard of the Strand and Charing Cross Station, London: "Pleased to hear you are in London with the nobs. My father has been to London" [MTP].

An "Unknown friend" wrote Sam: "Will you permit one of your oldest admirers to send you a word of welcome to the old country where you are held in as much affection as in your own? It was a source of very great pleasure to read your speech at the Pilgrims," but disappointed he didn't mention the loss of Irving. Best wishes [MTP].

Frederick D. Wardle wrote from Bath, England, sorry that Sam “was compelled to say a final ‘No’ to” a visit to Bath. He hoped Sam would come next year [MTP].

Mary Yates Watson wrote from London wondering if he’d rec’d her book sent to America, “A Wealth of Remembrance.” She wrote of a new book that was coming of 76 poems for children [MTP].

E. Wyndham wrote from Sussex to thank Sam for his portrait. He added a P.S. about his long ago trip to Hartford: “...you took me, an unoffending Englishman, one day to a billiard saloon, and you made me play billiards with you, without an interval, or, drink, for six, or was it eight hours? That wa 30 years ago, and I have not touched a cue since” [MTP].

June 28 Friday – Though all 27 days Sam spent in England were busy, Sam labeled this day as especially so. From Sam’s A.D. for July 30:

One of the incidents of the 28th was a visit to the ancient, the vast, the illustrious University Press. Under the guidance of its superintendent, Dr. Hart, I went all over it. For seven years I had been feeling unkindly toward it, but when I found that it was flying the American flag from its staff, in compliment to me, my vanity was touched, and the same result followed that had followed my meeting with Henry VIII. [actor at the pageant]—a good deal of my prejudice was sponged out.

The University Press is not a thing of yesterday, it is an antiquity; it dates back to a time when there wasn’t any such thing as a printing-press as yet. In the long ago, learned monks made books there—made them on vellum with the pen and illuminated them with the brush.

One of the other incidents of the 28th gave me peculiar pleasure, and reminded me of the prized welcome extended to me by the stevedores at Tilbury. In Oxford I was the guest of Robert Porter and his family; he had a luncheon party that day, and the butler of an Oxford don volunteered his services and superintended the function in order that he might have speech of me. After the guests had retired to the drawing-room I returned and talked with him and found, to my large contentment, that he knew ten or fifteen times as much about my books as I knew about them myself. He was an evidence that to me has been granted that rare and precious prize which Louis Stevenson and I dubbed the Suppressed Fame; and so I highly valued his frank and earnest homage. ...

There was still another incident of the 28th of which I wish to make a note: in the evening, after dinner, I went down by invitation to talk to the Rhodes scholars at their club—the American Rhodes scholars, I mean. As I understand it, the American Club is made up of American students, and not exclusively of Rhodes American students. There are about ninety American Rhodes scholars on the foundation all the time, for each of our States is privileged to send two.

I have uttered nothing but praises in speaking of the Rhodes benefaction, but they have been wrung from me; they have not come easily and fluently, for I always detested Mr. Rhodes; I never saw him, either in South Africa or in London; I avoided his vicinity; I never met him, and never wanted to meet him; my praises of what he has done must at least be granted the merit of sincerity. In several ways he was a very great sinner, but I think there is not a saint in the endless Roman calendar whom he could afford to trade halos with [MTFWE 70-73]. Note: see source for full text.

In London Sam signed a copy of CS to Evelyn Gifford: “To / Miss Evelyn Gifford— / This: / to assure her that that evening is certainly not going to be forgotten by / hers sincerely / The Author / June 28/07” [MTP].

An authentic printed silk “keepsake” was printed in Sam’s presence and bearing this date. See insert [eBay: All Things Bought & Sold, Item 350241463920, Sept. 18, 2009]

The Stratford-Upon-Avon Herald, June 28, p.8 announced the coming of Mark Twain, under “Local News”:

“MARK TWAIN” COMES TO STRATFORD.—

“Mark Twain” (Mr. S.L. Clemens) will be the guest of Miss Marie Corelli at Mason Croft to-morrow (Saturday) to luncheon. The famous American author will arrive at the Great Western station at 10.45 a.m. by the train from Oxford, when he will be met by his hostess, who will drive with him direct to the Birthplace, thence to the church, and afterwards to Mason Croft, where a few of Miss Corelli’s friends have been invited to meet him. He will return again to London the same afternoon.

Marie Corelli arrived in London to make sure that Sam would keep his luncheon date for June 29 in Stratford. He had tried to cancel after accepting, when he realized that he needed to give a speech in the evening of June 29 at the Lord Mayor’s banquet. Sam related the meeting:

She came to Oxford on the 28th to make sure of her prey. I begged her to let me off, I implored, I supplicated; I pleaded my white head and my seventy-two years, and the likelihood that the long day in trains would stop every three hundred yards and rest ten minutes would break me down and send me to the hospital. It had no effect. By God I might as well have pleaded with Shylock himself! She said she could not release me from my engagement; it would be quite impossible; and added—

“Consider my side of the matter a little. I have invited Lady Lucy and two other ladies, and three gentlemen; to cancel the luncheon now would inflict upon them the greatest inconvenience; without doubt they would have declined other invitations to accept this one; in my own case I have canceled three social engagements on account of this matter.”

I said—

“Which is the superior disaster: that your half-dozen guests be inconvenienced, or the Lord Mayor’s three hundred? And if you have already canceled three engagements, and thereby inconvenienced three sets of guests, canceling seems to come easy to you, and it looks as if you might add just one more to the list, in mercy to a suffering friend.”

It hadn’t the slightest effect; she was as hard as nails. I think there is no criminal in any jail with a heart so unmalleable, so unfazeable, so flinty, so uncompromisingly hard as Marie Corelli’s. I think one could hit it with a steel and draw a spark from it.

She is about fifty years old [was 52], but has no gray hairs; she is fat and shapeless; she has a gross animal face; she dresses for sixteen, and awkwardly and unsuccessfully and pathetically imitates the innocent graces and witcheries of that dearest and sweetest of all ages; and so her exterior matches her interior and harmonizes with it, with the result—as I think—that she is the most offensive sham, inside and out, that misrepresents and satirizes the human race to-day. I would willingly say more about her, but it would be futile to try; all the adjectives seem so poor, and feeble, and flabby, this morning [MTFWE 73-74; MTAD Aug. 16, 1907]. Note: See prior and post-segments under June 29.

The Christian Age (London) ran an anonymous article, “Mark Twain, p.458. Tenney: “‘The name of Mark Twain years ago was the synonym for humor—humor of that pure, delightful quality which only America seems able to give us.’ He thought of himself only a ‘funny man’ until his middle years, when he discovered his real seriousness. ‘Recently he has attacked the Congo administration, and his burning words on that subject have proved him to be thoroughly in earnest.’ Unfortunately, reporters persist in seeking comic copy, as in their accounts of his return to England. ‘The reputation of being funny is a difficult one to shake off’” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Fifth Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1981 p. 165].

Public Opinion (London) ran an anonymous article, “ ‘Mark Twain’ as a Master of English,” p. 812. Tenney: “Summarizes accounts by Douglas Story in the TRIBUNE describing MT’s healthy appearance, and by William Archer in the MORNING LEADER praising him as a humorist, realist, humanitarian, psychologist, and above all, ‘a great master of the English language....If Mark Twain had never written anything but “Adventures of Huckleberry Finn ,” the honour [of an Oxford degree] would be amply justified” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Fifth Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1981 p. 165].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: It is hot, and Delia cleaned the King’s room.

Rev. Percy Grant came in at 6 instead of 5 and chatted with me about Bernard Shaw and Ibsen and some other things, but mostly of the King and so the house seemed less lonely. The Rev. Percy enjoyed that dinner in Tuxedo when talk was so labored, and will be glad to go again.

Will dines here every night. He has been so good in helping us to plan for our departure [MTP 77-78]. Note: “Will” was Charles E. Wark, Clara’s accompanist.

H. Algar wrote from London sending four poems (not in file) but each named on a note “with the compliments of the writer, The Revd H. Algar, BA, Oxd” [MTP].

Miss E. Katherine Bates wrote from Oxford that she had witnessed Sam receiving his degree. “My thoughts went back to an early spring morning in Florence, 3 years ago & to a sad talk we had then...by your kind invitation. ...A few minutes later, I read of your irreparable loss...She would have rejoiced in seeing the honor given to you & the sincere & deep affection shon you by our dear old Alma Mater” [MTP].

Henry Campbell-Bannerman sent Sam an engraved invitation with S.L. Clemens written in, to a celebration of the King’s birthday for this day, Friday, June 28 [MTP]. Note: Likely sent just before June 28

Andrew Carnegie wrote from London on Brown’s Hotel stationery:

Dear Saint Mark

Madam & I just in from hobknobbing with the Emperor feel the want, (I do, not Madam who is sinless) of my Father Confessor, feel it badly & all over—Hence this call.

We are off tonight for Skibo. When are you coming to see us there in your holy capacity, Sinner-Saint—We hope soon” [MTP].

Evelyn Gifford wrote on Arlington House, Oxford stationery: “The great pleasure of meeting you needs no remembrances but that you should have sent me this book with its most kind messag, is going to make me hold my head a bit higher all my life” [MTP].

Horace Hart, Controller (“printer to the University”) Oxford sent a set of the English Dialect Dictionary, as directed by Professor Joseph Wright. Hart also enclosed a hand written note: “Cannot you come down about 12 o’clock and spend half an hour in the University Press? It is full of your admirers and other things. / Always...” [MTP].

Aimee Headland-Stevens wrote on King Edward VII Sanatorium, Midherst stationery. A widow with a little girl, “all that was left to me” and a patient in the hospital, she remembered him when she was “quite young” [MTP].

John Henniker Heaton wrote on Carlton Club stationery to ask for ten minutes interview for the Rev. Isidore Harris, an old friend of his [MTP].

Archibald Henderson wrote on Hotel Victoria stationery, London to Ashcroft to convey thanks for the book and hoped that Clemens had received his telegram at the Pageant [MTP].

R. Hopkins wrote from Dublin, Ireland: “I beg to enclose this little crisp, magnetic, Dublin comic Journal,” since he was an admirer and reader [MTP].

Liverpool Chamber of Commerce sent a telegram requesting Sam's presence at lunch during his visit on July 12 [MTP].

H.E. Marshall wrote from Oxford to "Dr. Mark Twain" asking if he would "accept the enclosed small book from a very humble admirer? I think yours are the funniest ever written. Don't tell an Englishman—I am a Scotswoman) but my opinion is, Dickens isn't in it!" [MTP].

Lucian Oldershaw wrote from Fernley, Maidenhead: "You have so often made me laugh." Oldershaw expressed "a real debt of gratitude" [MTP].

Courtenay Pollock wrote from London, asking to call on him to "express more clearly...the details of a favor I would ask of you." She asked for sittings "to make a bronze portrait" of Twain [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft wrote on the letter: "lack of time"

Ernest A. Robinson, letterpress printer, Grimsby, England, sent "a copy of my small work, as a high appreciation of the pleasure myself and millions have derived from your efforts" [MTP].

J.L. Sleeman wrote from West Kensington to welcome him and to thank him for his remarks in "More Tramps Abroad" (FE) concerning the "Thugs" of India and his grandfather W.H. Sleeman. He was now the only descendant and wished to thank Clemens for portraying his grandfather's lifes work [MTP].

George W. Smalley wrote on Beefsteak Club London stationery to "introduce to you my friend Mr Leslie Ward of 'Vanity Fair'." If Sam would see Ward, Smalley would be "ever so much obliged" [MTP].

Mary Sonedon wrote from Suffolk to send best wishes for the pleasure his works had given her; years before she had heard him lecture [MTP].

An unidentified person wrote from Surrey to thank him for CS, and hoped tht it would "open the eyes of many in England who are now hypnotized by its pernicious teaching" [MTP].

A.H. Willoughby wrote from Oxford to apologize that her sister, Mrs. W.H. Langhorne had sent a copy of her husband's book in sheets, not realizing that there were bound copies remaining [MTP].

June 29 Saturday – The London Times on July 1, ran "Mark Twain and the Savage Club" about the Lord Mayor of London giving a dinner with Mark Twain as guest, Saturday night (June 29) at the Savage Club. But first, Sam had to travel to Stratford for a luncheon and be trapped by Marie Corelli. Sam's own words are the best account of the event, which he tried unsuccessfully to wriggle out of:

I met Marie Corelli at a small dinner party in Germany fifteen years ago [1891 or 2], and took a dislike to her at once—a dislike which expanded and hardened with each successive dinner-course until, when we parted, at last, the original mere dislike had grown into a very strong aversion. When I arrived in England, two months ago, I found a letter from her awaiting me at Brown's Hotel. It was warm, affectionate, eloquent, persuasive; under its charm the aversion of fifteen years melted away and disappeared. It seemed to me that the aversion must have been falsely based; I thought I must certainly have been mistaken in the woman, and I felt a pang or two of remorse. I answered her letter at once—her love-letter I may say; answered it with a love-letter [not extant]. Her home is Shakespeare's Stratford. She at once wrote again, urging me in the most beguiling language to stop there and lunch with her when I should be on my way to London, on the 29th. It looked like an easy matter; the travel connected with it could not amount to much, I supposed, therefore I accepted by return mail. I had now—not for the first time, nor the thousandth—trampled upon an old and wise and stern maxim of mine, to wit: "Supposing is good, but finding out is better." The supposing was finished, the letter was gone; it was now time to find out. Ashcroft examined the timetables and found that I would leave Oxford at eleven o'clock the 29th, leave Stratford at mid-afternoon, and not reach London until about half-past six. That is to say, I would be seven hours and a half in the air, so to speak, with no rest for the sole of my foot, and a speech at the Lord Mayor's to follow! Necessarily I was aghast; I should probably arrive at the Lord Mayor's banquet in a hearse. Ashcroft and I then began upon a hopeless task—to persuade a conscienceless fool to mercifully retire from a self-advertising scheme which was dear to her heart. She held her grip; any one who knew her could have told us she would. She came to Oxford on the 28th to make sure of her prey [See June 28 for this segment and description of Corelli].

So we [with Ashcroft] went to Stratford by rail, with a car-change or two, we not knowing that one could save time and fatigue by walking. She received us at Stratford station with her carriage, and was going to drive us to Shakespeare's church, but I canceled that; she insisted, but I said that the day's program was already generous enough in fatigues without adding another. She said there would be a crowd at the church to welcome me, and they would be greatly disappointed, but I was loaded to the chin with animosity, and childishly eager to be as unpleasant as possible, so I held my ground, particularly as I was well acquainted with Marie by this time and foresaw that if I went to the church I should find a trap arranged for a speech; my teeth were already loose from incessant speaking, and the very thought of adding a jabber at this time was a pain to me; besides, Marie, who never wastes an opportunity to advertise herself, would work the incident into the newspapers, and I who could not waste any possible opportunity of disobliging her, naturally made the best of this one.

She said she had been purchasing the house which the founder of Harvard College had once lived in, and was going to present it to America—another advertisement. She wanted to stop at that dwelling and show me over it, and she said there would be a crowd there. I said I didn't want to see the damned house. I didn't say it in those words, but in that vicious spirit, and she understood; even her horses understood, and were shocked, for I saw them shudder. She pleaded, and said we need not stop for more than a moment, but I knew the size of Marie's moments, by now, when there was an advertisement to be had, and I declined. As we drove by I saw that the house and the sidewalk were full of people—which meant that Marie had arranged for another speech. However, we went by, bowing in response to the cheers, and presently reached Marie's house, a very attractive and commodious English home. I said I was exceedingly tired, and would like to go immediately to a bedchamber and stretch out and get some rest, if only for fifteen minutes. She was voluble with tender sympathy, and said I should have my desire at once; but deftly steered me into the drawing-room and introduced me to her company. That being over, I begged leave to retire, but she wanted me to see her garden, and said it would only take a moment. We examined her garden, I praising it and damning it in the one breath—praising it with the mouth and damning it with the heart. Then she said there was another garden, and dragged me along to look at it. I was ready to drop with fatigue, but I praised and damned as before, and hoped I was through now and might be suffered to die in peace; but she beguiled me to a grilled iron gate and pulled me through it into a stretch of waste ground where stood fifty pupils of a military school, with their master at their head—arrangement for another advertisement. She asked me to make a little speech, and said the boys were expecting it. I complied briefly, shook hands with the master and talked with him a moment, then—well then we got back to the house. I got a quarter of an hour's rest, then came down to the luncheon. Toward the end of it that implacable woman rose in her place, with a glass of champagne in her hand, and made a speech! With me for a text, of course. Another advertisement, you see—to be worked into the newspapers. When she had finished I said—

"I thank you very much"— and sat still. This conduct of mine was compulsory, therefore not avoidable; if I had made a speech, courtesy and custom would have required me to construct it out of thanks and compliments, and there was not a rage of that kind of material lurking anywhere in my system [MTFWE 73-74; MTAD Aug. 16, 1907]. Note: Corelli's initial letter waiting at the Hotel is not extant, but her follow up letters of June 20 and 23 are; see entries.

The London Times, July 1, 1907, reported some of Sam's remarks to the military boys:

[Twain] "mentioned that he had once been a soldier for two weeks during the American Civil War, but his experiences were such that he did not care to remember them. Looking upon the budding warriors before him, he sincerely wished them a better liking for their lot than his had been and more of it. The mayor, he understood, had wished to award him civic honours, but his request was that his visit might be considered a personal one to Miss Corelli."

Sam returned to London, arriving at 6:30 p.m. "in a pouring rain". He went to bed for a few hours and later spoke at the Lord Mayor's banquet at the Savage Club. He called that speech "a botch" due to the "most hateful day my seventy-two years have ever known" [MTFWE 76; MTAD Aug. 16, 1907].

In the evening Sam met at the Mansion House with "The Savages" of whom the Lord Mayor (Sir William Purdie Treloar) was a longtime member. The London Daily Chronicle called the banquet "a genial reunion" [July 1, p.5, "Lord Mayor and the Savages"]. The London Daily Mail revealed that "The assembly sprang to its feet and shouted its welcome..." [July 1, p.5, "Mark Twain's Stories"]. The London Tribune reported "a touch of melancholy" in Sam's address that it "was unlikely...that he would ever see England again" [July 1, p.6]. The London Daily Telegraph, July 1, p.13 had perhaps the most complete reporting of the event including Sam's speech:

Mark Twain was the guest of the evening at a dinner given at the Mansion House on Saturday by the Lord Mayor to his fellow-members of the Savage Club. The gathering was a distinguished one, for in the company, which numbered close on 250, were "Savages" who had attained eminence in almost every profession. To the left of the Lord Mayor sat Mark Twain [...].

Giving the loyal toasts, the Lord Mayor reminded the gathering that until his accession the King was an honorary "Savage," and that they still had as honorary members the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Connaught.

Dr. [Fridtjof] Nansen, replying to the toast of the honorary life members, proposed by Mr. Mostyn Pigott [sic Piggott], remarked that he thought the club represented everything that made life worth living.

The Lord Mayor then called upon Mark Twain to respond. As he rose everyone instantly sprang up, and the cheering was loud and long. When "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" had been sung, the applause was renewed. This was the second wildly enthusiastic reception given to the great humourist during the evening.

When the cheering had subsided, Mark Twain said: "I don't make speeches—as I have no time to prepare them. I have been very busy since I landed in England trying to rehabilitate my character. I assure you that I am not as dishonest as I look. I began years and years ago to frame for myself a moral constitution that would impress the world. I was not as honest then as I am now—but I was reasonably honest. Since that time I have done nothing that has called my honesty into question. I had once an experience which I have ever used as a warning for myself, and the result is I have climbed step by step to where I am now—or to where I was before the Ascot Cup was stolen" [...See Fatout p. 564-5 for the Father Hawley story, and the christening story here] .

....

When the merriment which this anecdote provoked had ceased, Mark Twain continued in a serious strain. He felt that the nation had honoured him, and through him his country, and he was affected at saying farewell. He spoke with bowed head: "I am going from here in a week or two. I came to get an honorary degree, and I would have compassed seven seas for an honour like that. I cannot feel too grateful to the University and to Lord Curzon for conferring it upon me. I am sure my country must appreciate the honour, for of course it is first and foremost to my country. While I am in spirit young I am in flesh old, therefore it is unlikely I shall ever see England again, but I shall ever retain the recollection of what I have experienced here in the way of generous, most kindly welcomes. I took in the welcome you gave me when I entered the room, and I am duly grateful for it. And so I must say good-bye, and in saying good-bye I do so not with my lips, but with my whole heart." (Loud cheers.)

The Planet (London), June 29, 1907, p.18, ran a feature article by Raymond Blathwayt, "Mark Twain on Humour." This was a reminiscence by Blathwayt of an interview with Twain sixteen years before, or 1891, with Sam playing billiards and talking about humor. Thanks to Tom Tenney for this article. Also found in [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Fifth Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1981 p. 166].

London's Saturday Review, p. 809-10 ran "Humorists Twain," on the humor of Mark Twain and Augustine Birrell at the June 25 Pilgrim's luncheon [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Seventh Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1983 p. 170].

Isabel Lyon's journal: We sailed at 11, down Long Island Sound. The boat isn't attractive. The decks are naturally small and so we are crowded with me who smoke and women with harsh strident voices and there is no peace—no peace. We have the chief engineer's room, a cosy cabin, but no place to sit, and no bell. So I course up and down the corridors when we are in need of things and perhaps we find a steward—perhaps not. But I slept on deck from sheer exhaustion [MTP 75].

Frank Clements for Sunday School Union, with Children's Holiday and Convalescent Homes at Bournemouth and Clacton-on-Sea, wrote asking for "an article from your pen on these Homes" that they might use to help raise funds [MTP].

David Gilmore wrote from Belfast a rather tongue-in-cheek scolding while praising of Sam's works, specifically mentioning "Mrs McWilliams and the Lightening," which he'd read five times. "Don't imagine I read your works for pleasure—only to see the depths of your depravity I read them, and to find out how much superior morally I am to you, for one can't see his own goodness without a glaring example of wickedness in another, and you are the prime, the absolute example...Yours in righteous indignation..." [MTP].

Blanche Lindsay (Lady Caroline Blanche Elizabeth Fitzroy Lindsay) wrote from London sending two of her books, that he'd given her permission to do when they met at Arch-Deacon Wilberforce's [MTP]. Note: See Gribben p.410, which lists her two books with inscriptions to Clemens, though these are not specified in her letter. Sam signed his copies of From a Venetian Balcony and Other Poems of Venice and the Near Lands (1904); and Godfrey's Quest: A Fantastic Poem both by (Lady) Caroline Blanche Elizabeth (Fitzroy) Lindsay: "SL. Clemens / June, 1907. / London. / From Lady Lindsay" [Gribben 410-411].

Thomas Manden wrote from Bristol wishing Sam and family long prosperity [MTP].

Thomas Power O'Connor wrote on T.P.'s Weekly letterhead: "Don't worry. I found the passage. It was as I suspected in 'A Tramp Abroad'. Its in the story of 'The man who put up at Gadsby's' I hope I have not given you any trouble" [MTP]. Note: see June 20 for O'Connor's question on the sketch he sought.

Mrs. Edmund Routledge wrote from Coombe Lodge: "I should so like to see you again. I am sorry you cannot manage to come to our garden party on the 6th" Could Sam see him for a few minutes one morning next week? "Edmund was so good & true a friend, he was so fond of you. If you could spare his widow 5 minutes...it would be such a pleasure" [MTP].

Francis H. Skrine wrote again: "We were 'desolated' at finding your card, again, on our return from calling.If you had only sent us a post-card we would have stayed at home!" [MTP].

"Two sisters" middle aged, wrote from Southampton, "having but few pleasures in life; one of their greatest is to read anything written by Mark Twain" and "rejoice to know that he is so widely honored and beloved" [MTP].

Marianne Sullivan wrote from Hastings, England to ask if Sam "would contribute a book or photograph to aid the work of the Hastings...Branch of the 'National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children'" [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft noted a photo was sent.

Henry W. Taunt wrote on Henry W. Taunt & Co., photographer, Oxford letterhead wrote that he'd stopped by this a.m. but Sam was gone to the station. Taunt wanted to show his photo taken of Twain "among the worthies going to the Theatre, with Kipling and others" [MTP].

Hallam Tennyson wrote from Aldworth, Haslemere: "We shall be delighted to welcome you here on July 5th" [MTP].

June 30 Sunday – At Brown's Hotel In London Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

Jean dear, I have had a lovely time every day of the fortnight since we arrived, with not a thing to mar its delights except speeches. I hate making speeches except when I have some which I really want to say—a thing which does not often happen. I enjoyed talking to the Pilgrims here on the 25th & I enjoyed talking to the Rhodes scholars in Oxford night before last, but all the other speeches were cases of had-to—I don't like that kind.

I prodigiously enjoyed every hour of my 3 days in Oxford. When we moved, gowned & mortar-boarded, in a single-file procession to the Sheldonian between solemn walls of the common people, their hearty welcome deeply touched me all the way, & brought back to my mind the welcome of the stevedores when I went ashore at Tilbury dock. I enjoyed the noisy welcome of the undergrads when the degrees were conferred—& I was privately very vain of the common remark that it was the largest one of the day—for I was born vain, & can't seem to get over it.

I enjoyed all the fine old time-worn ceremonies, & the march back to All Souls, & the garden-party & the luncheon (ancient official name of it "gaudy,") & also the other gaudies of the succeeding nights & days—except the having to make speeches.

And then the pageant! But nobody can describe that. I saw two days of it, & it was far & away the most superb spectacle of massed & mighty and rhythmical movement & splendid costumes I have ever seen. Of the dramatis personae there were 3,500 men & women & boys & girls; & the pictures they made when they came marching out of the noble distances like gliding far-off flower-gardens, & came pouring down out of the forest trees, hundreds on foot & hundreds on horseback & lit up all the grassy stretches with kaleidoscopic [one word canceled] movement & color, made all the grand opera's efforts at the spectacular seem poor & small & cheap & fictitious. And then the final scene, when the whole 3,500 were present & mingling, marching before us—well, it was a fairy dream!

I was out late, last night, at the Lord Mayor's banquet, & must be out late again, on the 4th of July & at Punch's dinner to me (July 8 [actually July 9]) & at the Lord Mayor's dinner to me (Liverpool, July 10) but all my other engagements are daylight ones & will not fatigue me. The Viceroy of Ireland (Lord Aberdeen, you may remember him) has invited me to Dublin, to be his guest, & I do wish I could go, but I can't; I haven't a vacant moment till I sail (July 13, in the Minne-something,—Minnetonka, I think.)

I am glad I came, dearheart, very glad indeed.

Mark Twain is being lionized by King Edward.—News Item.

Goodbye, with love & kisses— / Father [MTP]. Note: After his signature he asked her to send the letter to Clara as he had run out of time; yet he did find the time to write the following letter.

Sam also wrote to daughter Clara in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Clärchen dear, I wrote Jean this morning about the wonderful pageant at Oxford, and asked her to send you the letter. There was an overlooked detail which I wish to speak of. I will precede it with the remark. The 3,500 men, women and children who acted in the living pictures reproduced historical episodes of ancient times which all took place within a couple of miles of where we sat looking on, & some of them on that very spot itself—a lovely meadow with a little river winding around it & surrounded by far-reaching park-vistas & glimpsed it through stately forest trees. Through all the turmoil of the vivid medieval day the birds flew all about us singing undismayed, & the swans paddled up & down unconcerned by the state-barges leaving kings, & war-barges bearing pirate-raids of the legendary days. It was just too touching for anything!

The episodes began with A. D. 710; then 1110; then 1284; then 1521; then 1587; then 1607; then 1641; then 1686; then 1790; then 1810.

The costumes were historically exact, to the last detail. Imagine the limitless variety!

And now I arrive at what I started out to say: all the 3,500 were people living in Oxford. At 2 p.m. daily they all swarmed out, in costume, & started for the meadow, outside the town, & went loafing down the quaint old lanes & streets of the venerable city—& dear me they did harmonise with the quaint & mouldy old buildings to perfection! Once I turned a corner & came suddenly upon an ecclesiastic of AD 710 & up went his two fingers in prelatric blessing, as he called me by name & made me welcome to his long-vanished day; & I met Charles I in the same way—oh, Charles to the life! And he also was cordial. And James I, & Henry VIII, & Friar Bacon, & no end of others—I came upon them everywhere, & always it was a charming & a thrilling surprise.

With ever/ so much love & kisses / Father [MTP].

Insert Cartoon: June 29, p. 1, Duluth News Tribune (Minn.)

Ashcroft's note: "Sunday, June 30th. Dined with Sir Gilbert and Lady Parker" [MTFWE 79]. Note: Sam's A.D. of Aug. 17, 1907 he wrote of the dinner, and of a later one on this day:

It was a large company, with a sprinkling of titles, and also with a sprinkling of men and women distinguished for achievement; but the whole scene is abolished from my memory by one wonderful face, just as the stars sparkling upon the horizon are swallowed up in the glory of the rising sun and extinguished. I am referring in this prodigious way to the face of a young woman. By the figure which I have used I have intended to indicate that this young creature's beauty was of the sort which is called dazzling; it is the right word; that face dazzled all the other faces to extinction....Lady—Lady something—but the name has gone from me; names and faces will not stay with me; that name has departed, but I should know the face again anywhere. The style was English, the features were English, the character was English, the dignity was English—all high-born English; but over it all, and pervading it and suffusing it with that subtle something which we call charm, was a friendly and outreaching good fellowship and an easy and natural and unstudied grace of manner and carriage which is American—rare everywhere, and infrequent, but most frequent among our people, I think. I explained to her what I thought of her, and said England ought to be proud of such a product; but she smiled like a complimented angel, and rippled out a musical little laugh, and said she was an American product and destitute of English blood.

It was a very pleasant surprise. Later, at another dinner party, this pleasant surprise was repeated, where I mistook a couple of titled American ladies for English women....These ladies had been living in England five years, and one cannot remain so long in an unaccustomed atmosphere without taking color from it.

There was talk of that soaring and brilliant young statesman, Winston Churchill, son of Lord Randolph Churchill and nephew of a duke. I had met him at Sir Gilbert Parker's seven years before...[MTFWE 79: MTAD Aug. 17, 1907].

The N.Y. Herald ran Sam's reply to A.P. Macdonald's June 20 & 22:

I have found time by stealing it from sleep to umpire the first four “squabbles,” and I find them fine both in spirit and in workmanship and just to my taste [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal (at sea): Foggy all day, but smooth and we slept through all the noise of the stokers and the one who swore at them as they came up from below. We are close to the engine room and we are sitting on the foghorn which does not shake us to pieces only because we are limp from fatigue. The people are uninteresting, very. Santa says, “They look as if they were obliged to come—as if they were on their way to take up a bookkeeping job.” The captain, Clark, is not interesting, either

Henry Dyke Aeland wrote from Oxford that he understood Sam was anxious to have his funeral “conducted in the same manner as that of Amy Robsant in the Pageant here,” and that it would be his honor to follow Sam’s directions to “fill the Roll of Lancaster Herald at your obsequies as I am now doing in Amy Robsants ...” [MTP].

Oliver Bainbridge wrote from Holland Park, W. “I am grateful for your kind letter and shall drop in next Tuesday morning at 11.45” [MTP].

R. Byrne wrote from Royal Hospital, Chelsea to “chide” Sam for getting home so late one night. “You promised to be good, when we invited you over and gave you a degree, & endeavored thereby, to make a respectable man of you, and what do we find? Read the enclosed cutting [not in file], you really should be more careful. They close the pubs here at 12...” [MTP].

John Henniker Heaton wrote on Carleton Club stationery. “You may find time to read page 27 and page 30 of the accompanying Red Book on Penny (2 cent) postage between America and England / If you will write some little masterpiece on this subject, in your own inimitable style, and in your own way it will do more than tons of memoranda and [illegible word] Blue books to carry the great reform” [MTP].

M.S. Jersey wrote a short note of invitation for Clemens to dine with them [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Declined”

Sidney Lee wrote small on a small card that he had “friends looking forward with delight to your dining with me tomorrow (Monday) night at 8 o’clock at the Garrick Club” [MTP].

Julian Moore wrote to suggest that before Sam left England “there are many who would be grateful” if he gave “at least one public lecture, but better of course several.” He suggested Mrs. Eddy or King Leopold as possible subjects [MTP].

Edmund D. Morel wrote from Hawarden, still lobbying for Twain to say something on the Congo questions, possibly in his visit to Liverpool [MTP].

Muriel M. Pears wrote from London, bemoaning “what a hard thing it will be to me if you return home without my having seen you.” But she was reading all the papers and collecting all the clippings. She asked for an hour for lunch [MTP].

Mrs. I.B. Simpson wrote from The Birches, Fleet, England. She had tried not to write but gave in. Seven years before Clemens had answered her letter asking his opinion of the S. African war. She enclosed his old letter and asked that it might be returned. Thanks for the “many happy hours your writings have given me” [MTP].

Henry M. Wells wrote from Thorncliffe near Manchester to ask for a NY Lawyer who might represent him in a copyright matter in his plans to establish a weekly journal there [MTP].

C. Louis de Wolff for Dickens Birthplace Fellowship wrote a postcard and a letter. The letter advised he'd sent yesterday's copy of the Portsmouth Times concerning a Memorial to Charles Dickens. The card: "Many thanks for your letter. But isn't there a little misunderstanding? We never imagined that Mr. Clemens could give us any personal help, but it he would give a little subscription (say half a guinea only) it would permanently identify him with this Memorial..." [MTP].

July to August – Sam wrote a sketch unpublished until 2009: "The Force of 'Suggestion'" [Who Is Mark Twain? xxvi, 51-54].

July – Sometime after his return to Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick [MTP].

In London Sam inscribed a photograph of himself in front of the House of Parliament, to I. Benjamin Stone [MTP].

After June An unidentified person "G" wrote a spoof to Sam about the stolen Ascot Cup. "Dere Mark / I return the Cup. You couldn't keep your mouth shut about it so I cudnt get rid of it. / 'Tis 2 pretty 2 melt as you wanted me 2. Next time I work a pinch I'll have a pard what don't make after dinner speeches / Your disgusted pal. G. / I changed the acorn atop for another nut wth my knife" [MTP].

Edmund Lester Pearson's article, "The Children's Librarian versus Huckleberry Finn: A Brief for the Defense," ran in Library Journal, p. 312-14. Tenney: "'Extreme Respectability' in the children's departments of public libraries is excluding TS and HF, which Pearson defends for honest portrayal: 'Not Henty's wooden heroes, nor golden-curled, lace-colored Fauntleroy's; but real boys'" [44].

Review of Reviews (London), ran "The Innocents Abroad and How Mark Twain Came to Write It," p. 167. Tenney: "Summarizes MT's own account in the installment of his autobiography in the July North American Review; also summarizes William Lyon Phelps, "Mark Twain" in the same issue, and includes comments on what MT could do at his best and most serious from the unsigned "Musings Without Method" (by Charles Whibley) in the August Blackwood's" [42-3].

Bookman (London) ran an anonymous review of King Leopold's Soliloquy, p.150. Tenney: "Brief, notes that 'There has not in our time been a fiercer satire or a finer instance of the value of humour as an instrument of reform'" [43].

M. Worth Colwell's article, "Making a Motorthusiast of Mark Twain," ran in Automobile and Motor, for July. Tenney: "Describes MT's growing enthusiasm while riding up Fifth Avenue in Colwell's car recently; he bowed to the attractive young women they passed, and said in answer to a question that 'I know it to be a positive fact, from my own exclusive observation, that the American girls are the prettiest, most lovable, most intellectual girls in the world!' Colwell was three when he first met MT in Elmira, N.Y.; MT called him "Filibuster." Photograph: 'Mark Twain riding in "The Crimson Dragon"' [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Second Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1978 p. 175].

Jane Cobden Unwin inscribed a copy of The Life of Richard Cobden by Richard Cobden (1905): "To S.L. Clemens, D. Lit., with grateful memories of his noble work for the downtrodden natives of the Congo. Jane Cobden Unwin." Both volumes were signed: "S.L. Clemens, London, July/07" [Gribben 149].

Sam signed his copy of The Hungry Forties, etc. (1904) by Mrs. Jane Cobden: "S. L. Clemens / London, July 1907. From Mrs. Unwin" [Gribben 721].

Sam signed his copy of The Churches and Modern Thought, etc. by Harry Vivian Majendie Phelps (pseud. Philip Vivian; 1860-1939): “S. L. Clemens / London, July 1907” [Gribben 542].

Sam inscribed a copy of the 1904 Life of Frances Power Cobbe as Told by Herself, by Frances Power Cobbe (1822-1904), “S.L. Clemens, London July 1907.” Marginalia on flyleaf: “To the pure all things are impure. S.L.C.” [Gribben 149].

July 1 Monday – Clara Clemens and Isabel Lyon were on board the Red Cross liner Rosalind from New York off the coast of Halifax, Nova Scotia when it collided with the coast steamer Senlac. The Rosalind was not damaged, but the other vessel was, all passengers escaping to the Rosalind. “Miss Clemens says that, instead of going to St. John’s, as she intended, she will return to New York” [NY Times, July 2, p.2, “Steamer Run Down by Liner Rosalind”]. See IVL’s journal entry below.

Ashcroft’s notes: “Monday, July 1. Dined with Sidney Lee at the Garrick Club, and called at Mrs. Macmillan’s, to see Lady Jersey, on the way home” [MTFWE 82].

From Sam’s A.D. of Aug. 19, 1907, he relates the Garrick Club dinner:

It was a distinguished company at the dinner, and once more I encountered J.M. Barrie; also once more he sat on the other side of the table and out of conversing distance. The same thing happened in London twice, seven years ago, and once in New York since then. I have never had five minutes’ talk with him that wasn’t broken off by an interruption; after the interruption he always dissolves mysteriously and disappears. I should like to have one good unbroken talk with that gifted Scot some day before I die.

The Garrick was familiar to me; I had often fed there in by-gone years as guest of Henry Irving, Toole, and other actors—all dead now.

Sidney Lee’s dinner was in a room which I was sure I had not seen for thirty-five years, yet I recognized it, and could dreamily see about me the forms and faces of the small company of that long forgotten occasion.

I arrived at Mr. Macmillan’s a little after ten o’clock, and found there a number of old friends besides Lord and Lady Jersey, and several strangers; one of whom had a special interest for me because he was of the blood of that fine creature and prized friend of forty years ago, “Charley,” tenth Lord Fairfax, citizen of Maryland by birth and rearing, citizen of Nevada and San Francisco by adoption, a man whom I have said many praiseful and admiring things about.... The handsome young gentleman at Macmillan’s was either English or had been away from America long enough to acquire the English stamp.[MTFWE 82-4]. Note: Fatout lists this as Dominion Day Dinner [MT Speaking 677].

Isabel Lyon’s journal (at sea): And a heavy fog. We have decided not to go on to Newfoundland, but to stay in Halifax until the Rosalind comes back. This afternoon we were creeping, creeping along in a dense fog, the water very smooth, and the 2nd mate, who was chatting with the stewards said he heard a fog bell and that we must be near a buoy. Santa and I were in our cabin when a jar shook our boat and a cabin boy said we’d struck a buoy. But it wasn’t a buoy it was a small wooden steam boat, the Senlac, and the Rosalind stove a hole in her side. It was the fault of the Senlac who came dancing full tilt out of her dock and scraped her side against the Rosalind’s bow. She sank in 15 minutes and as she went down in the fog and the water reached her engines the valves opened and she made her last long cry, as for help. It was pitiful and weird. We came to the Halifax Hotel and finally got comfortable rooms and some food and then a reporter, Mr. Bray sent up his card to Santa. Two Halifax youths Mr. Regan and Mr. Dennis appeared and Santa talked up like her father’s child. Then later came another reporter—from the Halifax Herald too, but he really wanted to see me, for a telegram had come from the N.Y. Herald linking the name of the King with that of his secretary. I told him the King would be as pained as his secretary to hear of any such report [MTP 78-79]. Note: this last “linking” of Lyon’s and Clemens’ name undoubtedly was romantic gossip.

William Alexander wrote on Constitutional Club, London stationery: "It has occurred to me that possibly you might, as a change from being entertained by clever people & celebrities, care to spend an hour in this club incognito" [MTP].

William Archer wrote from Herts, England inviting Sam to a dinner Sunday next. Lord Lytton, Bernard Shaw and Sir Oliver Lodge would be among the speakers. Sam didn't have to say a word "unless the spirit moved" [MTP]. Note: Victor Alexander George Robert Bulwer-Lytton, 2nd Earl of Lytton

E.W. Austin for National Lending Library for the Blind wrote to thank Clemens for his permission to have Excerpts from Adam's Diary transcribed into Braille [MTP].

Edith Blande wrote from London: "I wonder if you recollect = 'Edith Blande.' I was in your play 'Ah Sin' under Augustine Daly's management at the 5th Avenue Theatre in 1877 (July I think)." She was 17 then and was now 47. "I asked you if I was not as perfect as an angel? ...your reply (with a thoroughly 'Mark Twain' [illegible word] was—'yes! & you look like one' My dear mother (who has been dead nearly 6 years never forgot it" [MTP].

Elizabeth M. Chettle wrote thanking Sam for the "many delightful hours spent" with his books and asking, rather hoping he might "find time to go and look at this set of drawings," unspecified, nothing in the file but the letter [MTP].

Delegates of the University Press, Oxford sent this note: "The Delegates have great pleasure in presenting Dr. Clemens with a copy of 'The Oxford Degree Ceremony' by J. Wells" [MTP].

Joseph Dixon wrote from Dobercourt sent congratulations and an appreciation of his works, noting the first time he realized Twain would become such a famous author, was when he read in RI, "you spoke of going to the lodge at the house of a French lady named Bridget O'Flannagan!" [MTP].

Elliott & Fry, London photog. Sent a form letter in script asking for return of proofs submitted on June 26 [MTP].

Charles Fitch wrote for the Garriick Club to advise that Clemens had been unanimously elected as an honorary member for two months [MTP].

John Japp wrote from Liverpool that his idea of having Clemens stay under his roof during his visit, an idea discussed at Brown's Hotel with Sam earlier, "was not a practical one." He enclosed a letter copy from W.M. Turnbull of the London & North Western Railway about accommodations [MTP].

John Y.W. MacAlister wrote on The Library letterhead:

I quite forgot to tell you this morning that the Mayor and Corporation of Bury St. Edmunds are extremely anxious that you should honour their pageant with a visit this week, and if you will allow him to do so Sir Ernest Clarke will come at once to tell you all about it....I send with this a little booklet Sir Ernest Clarke wants you to look at in connection with the pageant... [MTP].

P.B. McLearn wrote from Londonderry, having heard he was in London. "I wish you would come over here to L. Derry to preach ... in the Guild Hall that holds 1500" [MTP].

William Miles wrote from London, S.W. "unable" to see him at any of the functions and to ask for "3 or 4 minutes" to express his gratitude [MTP].

Northern Newspaper Syndicate, Kendal, England per James E. Lyons wrote to thank him for his June 28 letter and regret that he couldn't undertake the series of articles on "Impressions of England" [MTP].

Harry Vivian Majendie Phelps (pseud. Phelip Vivian) wrote a small card from Canterbury: "I thought you might like to see the letters Mrs [illegible name] of the book which you are so kindly going to read. Please do not trouble to acknowledge" [MTP].

Clement K. Shorter wrote on "The Sphere" stationery, London, asking for his signature [MTP].

Henry W. Taunt wrote again from Oxford, to send him the photographs of the procession, asking only that he might put Sam's name down "among the list of subscribers to my 'Oxford Past and Present'" [MTP].

William H. Thompson wrote to Clemens [MTP]. Note: not found at MTP.

Charles S. Walker wrote from Worcester: "Your expressed desire to have a talk with me is the next best to its gratification. If I were not such an old invalid I would call at Brown's and claim the privilege, but 'Oh! Woeful me'. ...I have Helen Keller's portrait and her written signature—will you give me yours to place with it?" [MTP].

Elizabeth Woodhouse from London asking him to buy "one or two pairs of hand made woolen bedroom slippers," knowing he might want to take presents home with him [MTP]. Note: see July 3 from Woodhouse.

July 2 Tuesday – Ashcroft's note: "Lunched with Henniker-Heaton, M.P., at the House of Commons; dined with Mr. and Mrs. Harry Brittain at the Savoy" [MTFWE 85].

The London Evening News, July 2, p.1, reported on Sam's doings for the day.

MARK TWAIN AT WESTMINSTER.

Smoking the cigar which would seem never to go out, Dr. Mark Twain drove in a taximo to his photographer-in-ordinary, Mr. H. Walter Barnett, of Knightsbridge.

There followed him from the cab, wrapped in an old newspaper, the robes of a D. Litt. Oxon.

In the studio he robed himself, wondering as he did so whether he looked like a bishop new to the business or like a bishop who had been in business for some time.

That his appearance was essentially bishop-like he did not doubt, nor will our readers, to whom we are enabled to offer a print of the successful photograph.

Mark Twain paid another visit to-day to quite another kind of establishment.

He went to the great British debating chamber at Westminster, and viewed the various places of interest.

The cicerone of the "Innocent Abroad" was Mr. Henniker Heaton, who naturally took occasion to unburden his views as to penny postage on the distinguished humorist.

They afterwards lunched together, and Mark Twain cracked some of his best jokes, so that other M.P.'s envied the luck of Mr. Henniker Heaton.

Mr. Sydney Buxton, the Postmaster-General, was also at the lunch, and with him Mr. Twain had a long conversation about penny postage between England and America.

Mr. Twain was startled to-day by the news that his daughter had been in a steamer collision.

She was a passenger by the Rosalind, which, while entering the harbour at Halifax, collided with a coasting steamer.

The latter was cut down to the water's edge, but the Rosalind was able to rescue the passengers and proceed.

Sam's A.D. of Aug. 22, 1907 recalled the luncheon:

The luncheon had a purpose, and lasted two hours, but it didn't last long enough to get down to the purpose. The twelve or fifteen men present had been chosen with an eye to that purpose, which was political and commercial, and of international importance. Mr. Sydney Buxton, the Postmaster-General, was present, also T.P. O'Connor, M.P., also the Earl of Crawford and Balcarras. I think all the rest were M.P.'s. I understood that all present favored the scheme—or rather the two schemes, for there were two; I had a scheme and Henniker-Heaton had a scheme, and our idea was to join our strength and work for both schemes; both were to be freely discussed at the luncheon, and I was to have a private heart to heart talk with the Postmaster General afterwards. Henniker-Heaton has for years been the diligent, acute, and tireless apostle of cheap ocean postage, and in spite of all kinds of official and parliamentary opposition—except the intelligent kind—he has carried the bulk of his dream to a successful conclusion [MTFWE 85]. Note: David Alexander Edward Lindsay, 27th Earl of Crawford and 10th Earl of Balcarras (1871-1940)

In the evening Sam was given another dinner at the Savoy Hotel. The London Tribune, July 3, 1907, p.6, reported this event and a few others who had been at the above luncheon:

DINNER TO MARK TWAIN

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Brittain gave a dinner at the Savoy Hotel last night to Mark Twain. Those present were: Lord Curzon of Kedleston, Sir George Taubman Goldie, the Earl of Malmesbury, Lady Liangstock [sic Langatstock] , Professor Sir E. Ray Lankester, Lady Bigham, Lady Parker, Major General H.D. Hutchinson, Lady Woods, Lady Meyrick, Sir Robert Harvey, Sir John Gray Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Hope Hawkins, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Ingram, Mr. and Mrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Miss Teresa de Riego, Miss Marie Corelli, and Senator Chauncey M. Depew.

Mark Twain was entertained at the House of Commons at luncheon by Mr. Henniker Heaton, M.P., and among the guests were the Earl of Crawford, Mr. Sydney Buxton (Postmaster-General), Mr. Walter, Major-General [Hugh] McCalmont, Sir Charles Boxall, Mr. T.P. O'Connor, M.P. Mr. Mostyn Piggott, and Sir Benjamin Stone, M.P.

Isabel Lyon's journal (in Halifax): Foggy Halifax. Took a walk, but mostly we rested. It's a dreary little town, but it's on the land and we have fires in our rooms, and the Nova Scotians are sweet gentle souls. Mr. Dennis, owner of the Halifax Herald called on Santa and me. He is like a maimed bird, for some dread disease has paralyzed his hip bone and he is very little; as small as a swallow which he resembles. Today's paper had news of the King. Santa and I walked up near the citadel and we rest a lot. Halifax is built on a contracted cheap plan, and is very depressing on a dull day, after you have studied the squat architecture and gone through the shops and seen the few soldiers and driven in the very beautiful and natural park. But the air is good, and we can rest, and are too far from home to hurry back. The reporters made the most of Mark Twain's daughter being a passenger, so of course the King has heard of it in London and cabled over hoping Santa has suffered no harm. The dear wise beloved King [MTP 79-80]. Note: Sam's cable is not extant.
William Dennis (1856-1920).

H. Walter Barnett, London photographer sent a note with proofs, the "result of yesterday's Sitting" [MTP].

Wilfred Blakiston wrote for The Children's Country Holidays Fund, London to ask Sam to write "a short appeal" on their behalf which would help raise funds to send poor London children to the country for two weeks each summer [MTP].

Graham Buckley to ask if he might send a complete set of Twain's books to America for signing, since Sam had promised him in January 1901 he would do so. He had met Sam twice at the Lotos Club. He also asked Sam to accept an enclosed, privately published book, not specified [MTP].

Albert Chancellor wrote on Norfolk House, Richmond, Surrey stationery, listing off 18 famous persons whose signed photos he had. He would be glad to pay for a cabinet photo of Clemens [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Edward Fabes wrote from Westminster: “I was greatly amused when reading of your suggestion for your funeral arrangements. Thinking perhaps you would like one or two Epitaphs to choose from, I have taken the liberty of sending a few” [MTP]. Note: epitaphs, not too clever, in the file.

Max Fischer & Alex Fischer sent a telegram from Paris, in French, an invite to come there [MTP].

Lady Augusta Gregory wrote from Gort, Ireland to Sam:

Dear Mark Twain— / I am very sorry not to be in London during your short visit just to say a word of welcome—If any good chance should bring you to Ireland on your way home, it would be a great honour & pleasure to me to see you here, I need hardly say that—

I never forget that evening I spent with you & those dear to you, it was a beautiful hour & a great privilege—

I had put aside for you some time ago this little book I send, with legends of our saints—legends still living, for our people have never lost the belief in the invisible world, & even the passing & repassing from one to the other—If you come here I will show you some of the wells of healing—

Mr. Yeats who has just arrived here sends his best regards—& I am always sincerely yours...[MTP].
Notes: the “little book” she sent: A Book of Saints and Wonders Put Down Here by Lady Gregory According to the Old Writings and Memory of the People of Ireland (1906) not in Gribben. William Butler Yeats (1865-1939), active in societies that attempted an Irish literary revival; won the Nobel Prize in Literature 1923. With Lady Gregory he founded the Irish Theatre, which was to become the Abbey Theatre, and served as its chief playwright; see Gribben 790.

John L. Griffiths wrote from Liverpool on American Consular Service letterhead, asking if Sam could “spend the day, July 11th, following the Lord Mayor’s dinner in Liverpool, with us in our home in Cheshire” [MTP].

Mary Langdon wrote a marginally legible letter wondering if Sam was any relation [MTP].

L. Lind-af-Hageby wrote from London to ask for “a few minutes interview” on the topic of vivisection [MTP].

Ronald Maxwell wrote a letter pasting his article from the Glasgow Evening Times of July 2, “Mark Twain as Historian.” He wrote under the article, “Would Mr S.L. Clemens glance at a very few typed sheets, by post...and, if he approves, of the style, would he give the writer a CHANCE OF A START by recommending his work to some book publisher...These London publishers say they want novelty in style; but they are really afraid of anything original.” Maxwell had a book MS, “Desert Islands” to publish [MTP].

Marjorie P. Munro, sister of David Munro, requested a few minutes interview [MTP].

James Painter, an “Old Englishman” about Sam’s age, wrote from London enclosing “Ode to America” that he hoped would be read at the Lord Mayor’s Dinner [MTP].

Patterson & Co. wrote from London sending a box of their “Marich Cigarettes, though we are aware that Cigars are more favored by you...we owe you a great deal for...Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn” [MTP].

Mary L. Prichard & Theodora L. Adams wrote from London to plead for him to write a book about the horrors of vivisection. They enclosed an article, not in the file [MTP].

Arthur Salmon wrote from London to thank Clemens for “The Jumping Frog” and to praise other American writers [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Francis Reginald Statham wrote to ask for “a few minutes...to give you a call—you possibly remember that over years we were in correspondence, I think upon some object of the South African war” [MTP].

J.S. Willox wrote on Pearson's Weekly letterhead, London asking for “a single sentence” he could use under the heading “The proudest moment of my life” [MTP].

Bessie Strumer wrote from London asking if he would order scarves—she fed him a long sob story about her poverty, trouble with her eyes, and that Sir Henry Irving's last act was to send her ten pounds for a purse. “There is no room in the world for women over 40” [MTP].

July 3 Wednesday – Ashcroft's note: “Wednesday, July 3. Luncheon with George Bernard Shaw; dined with Moberly Bell” [MTFWE 88].

In London, Sam lunched with Mr. and Mrs. George Bernard Shaw at their flat in Adelphi Terrace. Also at the luncheon were Herbert Beerbohm Tree and Prof. Archibald Henderson, who had sailed over with Sam to gather biographical information on Shaw [London Tribune, July 4, p.6; London Daily Mail, July 4, p.5].

Sam's A.D. of Aug. 23, 1907 covered the Shaw luncheon:

George Bernard Shaw wrote from London to Sam:

My dear Mark Twain—not to say Dr Clemens (though I have always regarded Clemens as mere raw material—might have been your brother or your uncle)

Just a line to excuse myself for running away today. A domestic bargain was made to the effect that I should not keep you all to myself; so I cleared out to give Charlotte & Max a good turn. I had my reward at the dentist's.

I meant to ask you whether you had ever met William Morris. I won't ask you now, because it would put you to the trouble of answering this letter; so let it stand over until I look you up in America. But what put it into my head was this. Once, when I was in Morris's house, a superior anti-Dickens sort of man (sort of man that thinks Dickens no gentleman) was annoyed by Morris disparaging Thackeray. With studied gentleness he asked whether Morris could name a greater master of English. Morris promptly said “Mark Twain.” This delighted me extremely, as it was my own opinion; and I then found that Morris was an incurable Huckfinomaniac. This was the more remarkable, as Morris would have regarded the Yankee at the Court of King Arthur as blasphemy, and would have blown your head off for implying that the contemporaries of Joan of Arc could touch your own contemporaries in villainy.

I am persuaded that the future historian of America will find your works as indispensable to him as a French historian finds the political tracts of Voltaire. I tell you so because I am the author of a play [John Bull's Other Island] in which a priest says “Telling the truth's the funniest joke in the world,” a piece of wisdom which you helped to teach me. / yours ever / G. Bernard Shaw [Bernard Shaw: Collected Letters 1898-1910, ed. Dan H. Lawrence, (1972) p. 696-7]. Note: after Sam's 25 days in London, Shaw would forever more assert that America had produced only two geniuses—Edgar Allen Poe, and Mark Twain [Scott 289].

C.F. Wood wrote from Berks, England to Sam:

Dear Fellow Traveler of 35 years ago. You will remember our voyage in the “Batavia” from Liverpool to Boston. Our “battened down” existence for two days during the storm, our games of Euchre to keep up the spirits of the more rejected passengers, and our looking on at the rescue of survivors of the crew of the “Charles Ward.” I was on my way out for a cruise in the South Seas and you on our arrival at Boston, kindly took me to your home at Hartford. I know you are much engaged, but I sh^d like to call & see you & press your hand once more.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

I am coming up to London tomorrow to the best Central Hotel with wife & two daughters for a few days.

I got your address from my friend Sir Fred^k Bridge of Westminster Abbey [MTP]. Note: On his first trip to England, Sam returned on the Batavia, Nov. 12 to Nov. 25, 1872. See Nov. 26, 1872 for Wood's stay at the Clemens home in Hartford.

The Tatler (London) ran an anonymous article "Tittle-Tattle of To-Day," p. 2-3. Tenney: "Includes two photographs of MT in his academic robes at Oxford, where he received an honorary degree" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Fifth Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1981 p. 166].

Isabel Lyon's journal: We drove, but this morning when I went for a walk I found an auction room where tucked away in a far corner is an old high post bedstead, very lovely, solid mahogany, and $20. It belonged to Governor Jones of Nova Scotia. I shall have that bedstead shipped home if it is possible [MTP 80].

Marjorie Bowen wrote from London to thank Sam for a photo. "I want to thank you again, too, for the great pleasure you gave me by letting me see you—I do appreciate so much that you found time... [MTP].

William Gilkes wrote from Reading, England, congratulations and honour to Mark Twain [MTP].

F. Jerome Hart wrote from London: "I was glad to learn that you had decided to give Mr. Histed a sitting for your portrait to illustrate your biography in my book, "Living Men of Letters". He was sending a portrait done by Histed of George B. Shaw [MTP].

Marcelle Azra Hincks wrote from Kensington for her mother. They had not forgotten Clemens but had been ill with blood poisoning. Could she come give her respects personally? [MTP].

E.P. Hoey wrote from Kensington to ask his advice: "...do you think that a young, ambitious, energetic journalist, thoroughly knowing and loving the profession, not afraid of 'roughing it', but with neither influence or money, would have a fair chance of getting on in America? In London it is practically hopeless" [MTP].

Helen MacMillan (Mrs. Maurice C. MacMillan) wrote from London to thank him "for this charming photograph. It is so life like—it seems almost to speak. It will be treasured...Thank you for it & for the beautiful words you have written on it" [MTP].

Charles Macy wrote from Liverpool, sending particulars and extracts on one James Clemens, who was mayor of Liverpool in 1775 [MTP].

John Malcolm wrote from Wanstead, London "To Mark Twain, to me one of the noblest and the best of men, one whom I love as a brother, I beg to send my affectionate greeting/ May God bless him" [MTP].

Milly (not further identified) sent a song score and also a poem, both titled, "Mirth is King" [MTP].

Edmund D. Morel for Congo Reform Assoc., Liverpool wrote thanks to Sam "for returning Dr. Rendal Harris' letter back and for writing to him. / Much to my astonishment I have received an invitation to meet you at dinner on July 10th" [MTP].

I. Phillips-Dickson wrote from Shropshire, recalling meeting him in the Lake District and traveling in his company for two or three days "with a young clerical friend, Ingram Boynton." Did he wish to escape to the country before he left England? [MTP].

Mildred Watson wrote from Piccadilly, London enclosing Mrs. MacAlister's card as an introduction and invite him to an "At Home" "which Sir George & Lady Jibb are giving at Wimbledon on behalf of the Political Enfranchisement of Women" [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft wrote on the letter: "Declined"

Elizabeth Woodhouse wrote from London to acknowledge receipt of his "kind letter, together with Postal Order for one pound, for which I feel it impossible to sufficiently thank you..." [MTP]. See July 1 from Woodhouse.

Mary Thornburgh-Ropper wrote from Westminster: "I don't believe you have forgotten my father Wm B. Thornburgh of Virginia City Nevada & San Francisco, wh is my excuse for asking you to invent a little time & come here on the 3d-July (4 to 7.30)...you will find Mrs Tennant & other friends" [MTP].

"Una" sent a small drawing of Shakespeare? And a short poem [MTP].

Unidentified person (small env. only) postmarked Vierzon A Tours, France [MTP].

July 4 Thursday – London. Ashcroft's notes: "Lunched at Sir James Knowles's; attended the banquet in celebration of Independence Day at the Hotel Cecil" [MTFWE 91].

In the morning Sam wrote letters; among those surviving are the following three. He luncheoned with Sir James Knowles editor of the Nineteenth Century. In the afternoon he was unable to attend an annual reception for Americans at the Dorchester House, the home of Ambassador Whitelaw Reid. In the evening he was at the annual banquet of the American Society in London, which took place at the Hotel Cecil. First, the letters:

At Brown's Hotel in London Sam wrote to Andrew Carnegie.

Dear St. Andrew: / I was very sorry to miss seeing you, but glad to hear from you & Mrs. St. Andrew. B'gosh, (as St Peter used to say), dissipation is beginning to tell upon my strength a little, & I wish I could run up to Skibo & rest—but there's no rest for me this side of sailing-day, a week & upwards hence. But Liverpool's my last one-night stand, then I get aboard at once.

Good-bye till I see you at home—and love to you both [MTP].

In the morning Sam also wrote to daughter Jean.

Just a line, Jean dear, to say good-morning & howdjedo. I have been taking very good care of myself, in England. I do not often accept a night-invitation. When I do, (if it is a banquet) I do not go until speaking-time, & am home again by 11; if it is a private dinner I am back home by 10—which is much earlier than I like.

To-night & Liverpool (July 10) end my (public) night-engagements; the rest are all private. I go to luncheons every day, but they do not fatigue me. Yesterday the papers had the news of Clara's sea-adventure—she probably enjoyed the excitement of the collision.

Many hugs & kisses, dear! [MTP]. Note: See IVL's journal entry of July 1 for the collision at sea.

Sam also replied to the July 3 of George Bernard Shaw.

Between you & William Morris I find myself richer this morning than I have ever been before. For I have my vanities, & my English has been one of them, this long time, though for many a year I had my admiration of it all to myself. But you know good English, for you are a master of it; & Morris was a competent judge, too; & so, in perceiving, this morning, that I am at last discovered, I am very happy.

I never knew Morris, but I had just a glimpse of him once, in London, at the end of '73. He was pointed out to me as he passed by, in the street; & all in thirty seconds he flitted into my life & out of it again, not to return any more.

Good-bye, & good luck, to you & Mrs. Shaw, until we meet in New York [MTP].

In his A.D. of Aug. 26, 1907, Sam wrote of the luncheon with Sir James Knowles:

I perceived that at Sir James's I was upon familiar ground, for his house was situated just within the spacious court of the monster human hive called the Queen Anne Mansions, a caravansary which I and my family had helped to support and render prosperous during a fortnight or so, seven or eight years ago. Damn the place, I remember it well!

The luncheon at Sir James Knowles's was in honor of a Prussian princess of the blood. She was young and handsome and queenly, and was quite unroyally gifted intellectually; she seemed to know a good deal about everything, and to know it well; well enough to talk about it ably and entertainingly. She was an expert with the brush, and in music, and in designing and embroidery, and in several other fine arts; in fact in the matter of accomplishments she was a wonder, considering her place in the social world. ...

In his A.D. of Aug. 27, 1907, Sam wrote of missing an afternoon function:

I was not able to go to Whitelaw Reid's afternoon reception of the American contingent, and so my ticket, (No. 2384), remained unused.... Reid occupies the most palatial private residence in London, and a crush could be expected, for all the Americans would be eager to see it. It was indeed a crush, and half as many people were in it as were present at the King's great garden party at Windsor, which was attended by a multitude somewhat exceeding eight thousand; still the big house was equal to the emergency [MTFWE 91-93]. Note: See source for Clemens' lengthy opinion of Whitelaw Reid. The London Tribune, July 5, p.7, "INDEPENDENCE DAY" gave the humorous menu items prepared in honor of Mark Twain and America: "Filet de Sole Mark Twain," "potage Americain," "Volaille Farcie a l'Americaine," "Piece de Filet de Boeuf McKinley," "Chateaubriand Boston," and "Bombe Washington."

Sam arrived late, as was his preference, at the Hotel Cecil for the evening banquet celebration by the American Society in London. In his A.D. of Aug. 29, 1907, Sam wrote of the event and his speech:

The Fourth of July dinner that night was devoured in the great banquet hall of the Hotel Cecil. Every chair on the floor was occupied by men, and all the seats in the gallery by ladies. It was a fine spectacle.

....
...there were but four regular toasts and four speeches in response to them, and the function was over by about eleven o'clock. First the King's health was drunk, standing, and in silence, in accordance with ancient and invariable custom; next the health of the President of the United States was drunk. Sir Mortimer Durand, late ambassador to the United States, responded to it in a happy speech of considerable length; next, in a good and elaborate speech, Whitelaw Reid proposed "The Day we Celebrate." By appointment, I responded. ... [Here are a few excerpts:]

Once more it happens, as it has happened so often since I arrived in England a week or two ago, that instead of celebrating the Fourth of July properly as has been indicated, I have to first take care of my personal character. Sir Mortimer Durand still remains unconvinced. Well, I tried to convince these people from the beginning that I did not take the Ascot Cup, and as I have failed to persuade anybody that I did not take it, I might as well confess that I did take it, and be done with it. I don't see why this uncharitable feeling should follow me everywhere, and why I should have that crime thrown up to me on all occasions. The tears that I have wept over it ought to have created a different feeling than this—and besides, I don't think it is very right or fair that, considering England has been trying to take a Cup of ours for forty years [America's Cup; challenges by Sir Thomas Lipton and others], they should make so much trouble when I try to go into the business myself. ...

Our Ambassador has spoken of our Fourth of July and the noise it makes. We have a double Fourth of July; a daylight Fourth and a midnight Fourth. During the day in America, as our Ambassador has indicated, we keep the Fourth of July properly in a reverent spirit. We devote it to teaching our children patriotic things.... We honor the day all through the daylight hours, and when night comes we dishonor it. Two hours from now, on the Atlantic coast when night shuts down, that pandemonium will begin and there will be noise, and noise, and noise, all night long...there will be people crippled, there will be people killed, there will be people who will lose their eyes, and all through that permission which we give to irresponsible boys to play with firearms and firecrackers and all sorts of dangerous things. We turn that Fourth of July alas! over to rowdies to drink and get drunk and make the night hideous, and we cripple and kill more people than you would imagine [MTFWE 97-101].

Samuel F.G. Whitaker inscribed a copy of Abbey Brueys' L'Avocat Patelin: A Comedy in Three Acts, and translated by Whitaker: "To Mark Twain, this slight attempt at a presentation of 15th-18th century humor, with the Translator's profound yet affectionate respect. Independence Day, 1907" [Gribben 107].

Isabel Lyon's journal (Halifax): "Today Mr. McCurdy walked us through the Public Gardens and up over the Citadel. A young British soldier took us about, and it was interesting and peaceful and very warless. The gardens are beautiful. I made a lot of photos of Santa" [MTP 80].

American Society in London sent an 8 & ½ x 6 thick card, engraved invitation to the "Independence Day Banquet" Hotel Cecil [MTP].

Sydney Brooks wrote on Tarbat House stationery to thank Clemens for two photographs, some old talks and for his appreciation of the article Brooks wrote in the London Daily Chronicle upon Sam's arrival [MTP].

Graham Buckley wrote from London, hoping for a reply to his previous letter before Sam left England [MTP].

J. Cooke sent a begging letter, asking him to buy the enclosed so she might help support her delicate daughter [MTP].

Frederick Dixon wrote from Chelsea, England to ask to see Sam and "meet the representative of those you have attacked" in his CS book [MTP].

Fanny M. Elbourn wrote from Welborn near Royston to ask if Clemens "could possibly come down to this little village and give us an hour or so" [MTP].

John Japp wrote from Liverpool thanking him for Ashcroft's letter "approving and confirming my arrangements." He gave train times and the dinner schedule, etc. [MTP].

Blanche Lindsay wrote again from Kensington with "warmest thanks for the book which you so kindly sent...& perhaps most of all for your very welcome & much valued, though too flattering, words within the cover" [MTP].

John Y. W. MacAlister wrote from London that he'd just rec'd a wire from Bergheim in Vienna to say that "he is coming back to meet us on Monday, so now everything is fixed up, and for your convenience I am arranging that we shall lunch quietly in a private room at the Bath Club opposite. There will only be Sir Montague Nelson, Bergheim and Hoare, —I am not asking the others, and shall expect you and Ashcroft at 1.30 if that will suit you" [MTP].

E. Newell Marshall wrote from London: “Will you see for a few moments a young American artist who has struggled desperately and alone against the Christian Scienc Organization who needs a word of help...” [MTP].

Annie Colt McCook wrote from London: “I was so disappointed when I returned home & found you had been here! It was indeed kind of you...and this afternoon at the Ambassador’s, I looked for you, but in vain...I hoped we might have a little talk together, and you would tell me, who the young girl who accompanied you here, when you came—was!” [MTP].

Whitelaw Reid sent Sam an “At Home” engraved invite for Thursday, July 4, 4 to 6 p.m. [MTP].

Mrs. K. Suart wrote from London enclosing articles for him to read. Would they see him before he left? [MTP].

W.M. Treherne, “an old newspaperman” who used to report on Twain’s speeches, wrote from London, enclosing a maxim of Abe Lincoln [MTP].

Charles S. Walker wrote on a post card sent from Worcester, “Thanks / C.S. Walker / Independence Day / 1907” [MTP].

Samuel F.G. Whitaker inscribed his translated book, L’avocat Patelin, “The Famous Fifteenth Century Farce” : “To Mark Twain /this slight attempt at a presentment of 15th-18th Century humour, with the translator’s profound yet affectionate respect. / Independence Day, 1907” [MTP].

John Whitehead sent a curious pasted up chart titled “To the Glory of God And in Honour of the King” On a notecard he wrote: “Dr. Sir Kindly study enclosed chart & any good American can have it with great pleasure” [MTP].

July 5 Friday – Ashcroft’s notes: “Dined with Lord and Lady Portsmouth. Forty or fifty guests; two or three hundred came in afterward” [MTB 1399; MTFWE 108]. Note: Earl and Countess of Portsmouth (Newton and Beatrice Wallop). London’s Daily Telegraph, July 6, p.12, “LONDON DAY BY DAY” reported the event plus what the Countess had called a “small party” when inviting Sam.

The Earl and Countess of Portsmouth entertained to dinner last evening at 16 Mansfield street, Dr. Clemens (Mark Twain), the Earl and Countess of Wemyss, Earl and Countess Brownlow; Isabella Countess Howe, Lord and Lady William Cecil, Lady Reay, Lord and Lady Cheylesmore, Lord and Lady Eversley, Lady Rosamond Christie, the Right Hon. Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, the Hon. Theo. Russell, Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace, Sir Oliver and Lady Lodge, Mr. and the Hon. Mrs. Lane Fox, Mr. Runciman, M.P., Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey Baring, and Mr. and Mrs. Spender. Afterwards Lady Portsmouth held a reception, which was attended by 300 guests.

At Brown’s Hotel in London Sam wrote a short note to Ralph W. Ashcroft.

Ashcroft, the puzzle is beyond me. The two ds in the above words, also the two ds & the L on the envelop, were written by Charlie. I wonder why she suppresses her name & address. Send this to her: for it is of course just barely possible that my divination is in error. In which case I am ashamed, & I beg her pardon [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft in turn added to Sam’s above note, “You didn’t know he was a handwriting expert, did you?” sent and sent it to Carlotta Welles (“Charlie”) [MTP; MTAq 41].

The White Star liner Baltic docked in New York with H.H. Rogers and wife, returning from England [NY Times, July 6, p. 2, “H.H. Rogers Home and Says He’s Glad”].

William Lyon Phelps' article, "Mark Twain," ran in the North American Review, p. 540-8. Tenney: "Discusses the growth of MT's standing and declares him now 'our foremost living American writer,' not only for his humor, but for his literary art in the creation of characters and in his dramatic power" [44].

Isabel Lyon's journal (Halifax): Mr. Dennis drove us over to the Sangainy Club, [sic Saraguay Club] on the other side of the N.W. arm of the bay. It is very pretty. A Miss Foster went with us. It is pretty there, but the drive was too long. I am pining to go home.

This morning I secured the 4-poster and it is to go home on the Rosalind [MTP 81].

George B. Birdsall wrote from Manchester, England to Sam, noting he had the same surname as a character in IA. He sent compliments of various Twain works [MTP].

Ruth Gordon Bower, a "fortunate little girl" wrote from London to Sam, excited about meeting him the previous night, likely at the Hotel Cecil [MTP].

Annie Brisco-Garcia wrote from Manchester to ask Sam to buy through her the "Collected Edition" of Swinburn's works [MTP].

Saul North wrote from Leeds to Sam, including a poem about young George Washington, called "Hanky Doodle" [MTP].

D.J. Rider wrote from London to Sam, sending a copy of a parchment purported to contain Sam's signature—was it authentic? [MTP].

Florence A. Stoker (Mrs. Bram Stoker) (1858-1937) wrote from Chelsea to Sam, having missed his call. Would Ashcroft phone to arrange another meeting? [MTP].

Walter Sylvester wrote from Bayswater, Westminster to ask Sam on behalf of Miss Mora for permission to dramatize JA [MTP].

T. Fisher Unwin wrote from London to Sam advising that he was sending another book by Mrs. Craigie, which he was preparing to publish. Knowing that he was overwhelmed with visitors, Unwin wished, "good-bye, a happy and safe voyage, and au revoir" [MTP]. Note: Pearl Mary Teresa Richards Craigie, pseud. John Oliver Hobbes (1867-1906). Unwin published her book, The Serious Wooing: a Heart's History in 1907.

Chapters from "My Autobiography—XX" ran in the N.A.R. p.465-74.

July 6 Saturday – Ashcroft's notes:

Breakfasted at Lord Avebury's. Lord Kelvin, Sir Charles Lyell, and Sir Archibald Geikie were there. / Quarters at the hotel occupied by invasion of photographers and portrait-sketchers during more than two hours; sat 22 times for photographs and 4 times for crayons; too exhausting, will sit no more. 16 at Histed's. Savage Club dinner in the evening; white suit; "fake" Ascot Cup presented; Brennan monorail car exhibited in action [MTB 1399; MTFWE 108 composit of both sources]. Note: John Lubbock (Lord Avebury), Lord Kelvin (William Thomson; 1824-1907); Lyell was likely the son of the famous Scottish geologist by the same name, who died in 1875. Sir Archibald Geikie (1835-1924) was also a Scottish geologist and writer, influential in his time.

Paine writes of the evening's event—the Savage Club dinner:

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

The Savage Club would inevitably want to entertain him on its own account, and their dinner of July 6th was a handsome affair. He felt at home with the Savages, and put on white for the only time publicly in England. He made them one of his reminiscent speeches, recalling his association with them on his first visit to London, thirty-seven years before. Then he said:

That is a long time ago, and as I had come into a very strange land, and was with friends, as I could see, that has always remained in my mind as a peculiarly blessed evening, since it brought me into contact with men of my own kind and my own feelings. I am glad to be here, and to see you all, because it is very likely that I shall not see you again. I have been received, as you know, in the most delightfully generous way in England ever since I came here. It keeps me choked up all the time. Everybody is so generous, and they do seem to give you such a hearty welcome. Nobody in the world can appreciate it higher than I do.

The club gave him a surprise in the course of the evening. A note was sent to him accompanied by a parcel, which, when opened, proved to contain a gilded plaster replica of the Ascot Gold Cup. The note said:

Dere Mark, i return the Cup. You couldn't keep your mouth shut about it. 'Tis 2 pretty 2 melt, as you want me 2; next time I work a pinch ile have a pard who don't make after-dinner speeches.

There was a postscript which said: "I changed the acorn atop for another nut with my knife." The acorn was, in fact, replaced by a well-modeled head of Mark Twain [MTB 1399-1400].

The London Tribune, p. 9, ran "MARK TWAIN AT THE SAVAGE CLUB." The Pall Mall Gazette, p.2, ran "Mark Twain's Clothes"—both articles highlighted Mark Twain's "famous white suit." From the latter newspaper:

Feeling deliciously at home in a white suit, Mark Twain was able to discourse in his most genial strain to the members of the Savage Club on Saturday. He explained to them his science of clothes. As an ancient Briton he would not have been content with blue paint; he would have "bankrupted the rainbow," but as a twentieth-century humourist he is content with white inside his own house or in places where he is sure that a little eccentricity will be kindly viewed. Well, he may dress as he pleases over here. He has charmed us all by his wit, and we would smile indulgently at his philosophy of clothes even if it had more of the variety of the rainbow....

Living Age ran an anonymous article, "Mark Twain," p. 60-2. Tenney: "General praise: 'Mark Twain will always be remembered first and foremost as a humorist; but it is only because his claims as a humorist are overwhelming that he had not been acclaimed as a serious student of character, a novelist, and a charming writer of whimsical historical romance.' Praises many of MT's books, even CY as 'an extremely clever and imaginative tour de force'" [43].

Illustrated London News, ran an anonymous article "Social and Anecdotal" p.10, describing Sam's friendly meeting with a porter [Tenney 43].

The Reader (London) ran an anonymous article, "Mark Twain," p. 243. Tenney: "'Mark Twain's royal reception in England has been matter of universal congratulation. There is no more popular man in the world.' Citing early newspaper accounts, argues that MT is both distinctly national and universal" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Fifth Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1981 p. 165].

John Bull (London) published a brief item, p.3. Tenney: "Criticizes the cheap wit of Oxford undergraduates in the galleries when MT received his honorary degree: ' "Get your hair cut, Mark"; "Can't you spare some of that white hair to your bald-headed friend"; "Give 'me socks, old man."' Another edifying example of the Oxford manner! However, it is quite on a level with the latest specimens of Twain's humor" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Fifth Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1981 p. 166]. Also in the same issue, “Open Letters and Post-Cards: To Mark Twain,” p. 12. Tenney: “Comments on MT’s many jokes during his final visit to England, noting that ‘116 of your jokes as recorded by the reporters had reference to the pageant you have arranged for your funeral....Foolery apart, my dear Mark, I am sorry to hear you talk like this.’ Wishes MT a happy life and speaks of pleasure in his books, ‘but...don’t write any more. Leave well alone’” [ibid].

The Outlook published an anonymous article, “Mark Twain at Oxford,” p 489. Tenney: “A very general account of MT’s receiving his honorary degree; apparently his comments quoted here were in the cable dispatches of the time” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 191].

Isabel Lyon’s journal (Halifax): Today we decided to go home by rail. I flew out to the R.R. agent and we are to leave tomorrow night at 8:40. So we went to the leather shop and Santa got some things for folks and she got a lovely old pewter jug or mug for me [MTP 81].

J.T. Herbert Bailly wrote from London to ask if Sam “would communicate a line of approval of our efforts to appropriately unfold an old world story” for the Bury St. Edmunds Pageant [MTP].

Felix S. Berlyn wrote from Manchester to ask Sam for “a short contribution” for his “little journal” enclosed (not in file) [MTP].

Albert Chancellor wrote from Surrey to Ashcroft after receiving his letter and had “ordered a photograph to be taken to you for Mr. Clemens to...autograph” [MTP].

H.W. D. for Oxford Post Office wrote a note to an unidentified person (catalogued to Sam) about two telegrams from Tuxedo Park, N.Y. and Katonah, N.Y., with “3 /” owing [MTP].

T. Fletcher Fullard wrote from London for the Savages to invite Sam to a meeting that evening. He enclosed his card (in file), Excelsior College, Oxford [MTP].

John Henniker Heaton wrote from London, asking if Percy Spence, “a brilliant young artist” could “make a sketch” of Clemens. Could the artist see him for ten minutes? [MTP].

W.H. Helm wrote from London, expressing “a great delight...to see you & hear you again on the 29th, & to be able to shake hands with you, as you were going away.” He didn’t expect a reply [MTP].

Andrew Lang wrote from Kensington to Sam, sorry that he was out, and was fishing for non-existent trout. His hand is quite unsteady [MTP].

T. Harcourt Llewellyn wrote from Birmingham to welcome Clemens to England and to ask if he recalled a visit to Condover Hall, Shrewsbury “some years ago” [MTP]. Note: see Sept. 5-8, 1873; the Clemens family also stayed a week with Reginald Cholmondeley at Condover Hall from July 28, 1879. See Vol. I entries.

Robert P. Porter wrote from London to Ashcroft that he would see him Monday about 10 [MTP].

Mrs. Edmund Routledge sent an invitation card for a garden party on July 6, 4 to 7 [MTP]. Note: “Decline” written on card at top

The Savage Club sent Sam a photographed signed “Mark Twain,” a silver print bust portrait by Ernest H. Mills, in an elaborate mat with a profusion of printed signatures and a printed inscription “Mark Twain from his Brother Savages, July 6th 07” [MTP].

W.M. Treherne wrote from Mile End, London to Ashcroft, regretting Sam could not offer “one or two more” maxims, after seeing the one Treherne had previously sent; somewhat of a begging letter [MTP].

Carlotta Welles wrote from France to Ashcroft: “I didn’t expect any answer to that. It was meant for a joke. I heard him say that the liked that kind of thing to be brief, and to go straight to the point. I sent something which fulfilled these conditions. I thought it would please him, but evidently it worried him. I a,m sorry” [MTP].

July 7 Sunday – Ashcroft’s notes:

Called on Lady Langattock and others. Lunched with Sir Norman Lockyer

Except Linley Sambourne, the veteran Punch cartoonist, and Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge, whom I had known in Australia in ’95, all present were scientists.

Drove two hours and a half returning calls, with little Francesca for company and support [MTB 1399; MTFWE 108]. Note. Francesca was Frances Nunnally. Lockyer was an astronomer. Georgiana Langattock (Mrs. John Rolls 1st Baron Langattock) born Georgiana Marcia Maclean.

At Brown’s Hotel in London Sam inscribed on his photograph to Marjorie Bowen: “To Marjorie Bowen with the kind regards of / her friend / Mark Twain / July 7/07.” [MTP].

Sam also wrote a note to Frances Nunnally, sending his “Itinerary / (Subject to Frances’s approval),” which was an attempt to catch up on returning social calls.

2.30. Visit the Mac Alister family—a visit of some length.

3. E. H. Abbey, artist.

3.30 or 3.45. Visit Lord & Lady Llangattoch—15 or 20 minutes.

About 4. The Earl & Countess of Portsmouth. Formal.

Then Mrs. General McCook.

5, or a trifle later: tea with Lord & Lady Avebury [MTAq 42]. Note: Annie Colt McCook (Mrs. Edward M. McCook).

Isabel Lyon’s journal (Halifax): A dull, grey day. Letters from Ashcroft and a copy of a beautiful poem to the King by Eden Philpotts [sic Phillpotts]. I gave it to Santa to read and I think she lost it. Oh, fool that I am, ever to let a precious thing out of my hands.

We left tonight at 8:40 and Mr. Dennis came to the station to see us off [MTP 81].

S.A. Andrew wrote from a Nursing Home in Gateshead, England to thank Sam for his kindness [MTP].

Albert Bruce-Joy (1842-1924), Sculptor, wrote for the Arts Club London to Ashcroft about photographs of Clemens [MTP].

Albert Chancellor wrote from Surrey to Ashcroft, thanking Sam for autographing a photo sent [MTP].

Frederick Dixon wrote from Chelsea to Sam, having rec’d Ashcroft’s letter of July 5: “When a man deliberately goes out of his way to attack his neighbor’s religion, & to blazon this attack across the globe, he becomes bound, morally, by the law of noblesse oblige, to discuss the questions, even at the expense of his own convenience, with the official representatives of that religion when courteously requested to” [MTP]. Note: Dixon had requested an audience on July 4.

Mrs. Helen B. Jastrim wrote from London to Sam, having rec’d his calling card—would he be free any day this week to see her and Dr. Jastrim? [MTP].

Winifred L. Lockyer wrote from London to refer Sam to a portrait of Joan of Arc at The Royal Academy, Burlington House, Piccadilly by T. Blake Wingman [MTP].

McNewham wrote from London to Ashcroft re: “Hull Topics” wondering if Sam was pulling his leg. He wanted Sam assured that Hull was not a “place full of ‘stuff-uns,’ that “there are at least 3 live men in Hull, (but as it happens we are all away from the place at the moment).” Would Sam say something publically about Hull? [MTP]. Note: Kingston upon Hull, usually referred to as Hull, a city in Yorkshire with great history.

Ernest H. Mills, photographer wrote from Hampstead to ask Ashcroft to thank Sam for “his generous description of the Savage Club portrait”—did Clemens want more copies? [MTP].

Henry Rawcliffe wrote from West Kirby to Sam, thanking for the signed autograph and advising due to his health he would not be at the Lord Mayor’s dinner on the 10th [MTP].

F.A. Besant Rice wrote from Blackheath (an affluent London suburb) to thank Sam for his autograph [MTP].

John E. Rowland wrote a postcard from London to Sam about finding Mark Twain’s name in a scrapbook he bought, and observing that a baby had been given the name of Mark Twain so there was no telling how far the name would go [MTP].

Alfred T. Story wrote from St. Margarets-on-Thames (London suburb) a fan letter of appreciation [MTP].

T. Gordon Stowers wrote from London to ask Sam for “one short sitting for a portrait” [MTP].

Carlotta Welles (before July 8) added: “I’m being very good; you don’t have to worry about me at all, but just enjoy the trip back.” She rather liked him calling her a “rascal” but she actually thought she was very good [MTP].

July 8 Monday – Ashcroft’s notes: “Lunched with Plasmon directors at Bath Club. Dined privately at C.F. Moberly Bell’s” [MTB 1399]. From Sam’s A.D. of Aug. 30, 1907:

The luncheon with the Plasmon Directors was a business matter, and of a mutually congratulatory sort. Seven years ago I assisted in founding the Plasmon Company; I took five thousand pounds of its stock and paid par for it; it is worth eighty thousand dollars now, and will soon be worth more. Several years ago an American Plasmon Company was started, and in a little while was robbed, skinned, and reduced to bankruptcy by its own Board of Directors, one of whom—Henry A. Butters, a sharper hailing from Long Valley, California—swindled me out of my investment in it, amounting to thirty-two thousand dollars [MTFWE 94].

At Brown’s Hotel in London Sam wrote to Lady Augusta Gregory, expressing thanks and regrets:

I thank you ever so much for the little book of Saints & Wonders; it was most kind of you to show me by this token that you have not forgotten me.

My time is engaged up to the hour of my homeward departure next Saturday or I would go to Ireland. Good friends of mine, Lord & Lady Aberdeen, invited me by telegraph, June 26th; & to my deep regret I could not accept, because, even so early as that, all my days were mortgaged.... [MTP].

Note: A Book of Saints and Wonders Put Down Here by Lady Gregory According to the Old Writings and the Memory of the People of Ireland (1906); this edition was only 100 pages; the 1907 ed. was 212 pages; undoubtedly, then, Sam had been given the 1906 edition, of which only 200 copies were issued.

Sam also inscribed a photograph of himself taken by H. Walter Barnett to Lady Georgiana Llangattoch: “To Lady Llangattoch, with the homage & best wishes of Mark Twain. July 8/07.” [MTP: Argosy Book Stores catalogs, No. 329, Item 498]. Note: also Langattock.

Sam also wrote to Carlotta Welles.

Didn't I say you were a little rascal! Didn't I say it a dozen times? You wouldn't believe it then, but you believe it now. The idea of your playing jokes on an innocent old dilapidation that had such unlimited confidence in you! Well, it only shows that there are all sorts of criminals in this world; but never never never would I have taken you for one, Charlie dear.

However it did please me—your instinct was right. And you were right again in supposing I was troubled: I was; for I was not absolutely sure that you were the joker, therefore in making the charge I might be in error & you might not like it—then I should be sorry & ashamed; & not just a little ashamed, but a good deal. For there's nothing that bites & blisters a smarty's vanity like getting caught in the act of being over-smart—oh, yes, as I know by experience!

I am leaving London for home next Saturday the 13th. Be a good child, & send me a good-bye per post, you convicted little rascal! [MTAg 42-3].

F.I. Baker for the England Anti-Vivisection Society wrote to Sam, enclosing a “Resolution” which praised Clemens for “A Dog’s Tale” [MTP].

London Daily Mirror sent a telegram to Mark Twain, Brown's Hotel: "May we safely contradict the rumour that your presence in Europe and the robbery of the jewels in Dublin are not a mere coincidence" [MTP].

Edith Day wrote from her school in Germany to Sam. She was alone and reading TA and was lonely and homesick. Would he send his photo? [MTP].

John A. Kirlicks wrote from Houston, Tex. to Sam, enclosing a poem, “Mark Twain,” for which he’d met dead ends trying to have published [MTP].

Sidney Lee wrote from Kensington, N.W. to Sam, thanking him for calling on Saturday and was sorry he was away. He was leaving a photo of “our procession at Oxford”—could he exchange it for a signed one of Twain? [MTP].

George M. McLean wrote from Leicester, England to ask Sam for “a brief message” which he could include in his lecture of July 14 at Victoria Road Church, on “The Union Jack” [MTP].

David MacLaren Morrison wrote from London, as a “Brother Savage” to send “a little book I wrote some time ago,” Life’s Prescription [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben.

H.L. Simmonds wrote from Liverpool to Sam. On his annual business trip from Calif., Simmonds asked about a sign in the window of a shop on Luci Street opposite St. Luke's Church: "Dyers & Clemens to His Majesty." He understood why he and Sam had to get their pants cleaned but could not understand why King Edward would [MTP].

Godfrey Scott Smith wrote from Lancashire to Sam: “You made a very sympathetic reference to Mrs. Ewing in your speech at the Savage Club on Saturday.” Smith was her nephew, and thanked him. He asked if Sam could subscribe (donate) funds toward his parish [MTP]. Note: Juliana Horatia Ewing (1841-1885), English writer of children’s stories. Fatout mistakenly identifies the “English authoress, well known in her day” as “Possibly Anna Sewell (1820-1878) [MT Speaking 576]. This reference to the July 6 Savage club speech corrects the reference, unless Smith was mistaken.

Mrs. K. Suart wrote from London to ask Sam if he might spare ten minutes for a “little country woman from the Mississippi, brought up on a plantation” [MTP].

Newton Wallop wrote from London to Sam: “I presume I ought to hasten to bid you farewell. For with the disappearance of not only the Ascot Cup but the Irish Regalia I imagine you will be disappearing too!! Portsmouth” [MTP].

W. Holt White of the Daily Express, London wrote to ask if their photographer, Mr. Barry could shoot the Ascot Cup, “which was presented to you by the Savage Club on Saturday night? We guarantee that Mr. Barry will not steal it!” [MTP].

Ludwig Zissler wrote from London to ask Sam for “a few minutes” of his time—it wasn’t for money or an autograph, but Zissler didn’t specify the reason [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: It was a trial of a journey. All night in a rocking, banging, jolting sleeper and out of it at 6:25 this morning to take the day coach for Boston where we expect to arrive by 9:10, after traveling through a wearying country: the lumber country of Maine. Since leaving New Brunswick we haven’t seen a human who isn’t a “down Easter”—and the day is a long one. Now we are planning for Santa to stay in Boston where Will and Katie will join her and I will go on to my dear duties in N.Y. and Tuxedo.

4:15—Now we are traveling along the lovely Kennebec which is mainly a logging river now, and its surface is thick with slain trees. Logging camps are scattered along the shores, and groups of men out in midstream run along the tops of the logs and shift them into groups. The simplicity of the people is far removed from anything I have ever seen in America [MTP 81-82]. Note: “Will” was Charles E. Wark, Clara’s accompanist.

July 9 Tuesday – Ashcroft’s notes: “Lunched at the House [of Commons] with Sir Benjamin Stone. Many guests, chief among them Mr. Balfour, and Komura, the Japanese Ambassador, were the other guests of honor. Punch dinner in the evening. Joy Agnew and the cartoon” [MTB 1399; MTFWE 108 combined]. Note: the cartoon (by Bernard Partridge) referred to may be seen in June 25 entry. It is not the inserted one below by W.A. Rogers.

Punch gave Sam a dinner at their offices on Bouverie Street. The London Daily Express observed “the dinner was of a strictly private character” [July 10, p.5]. Note: The London Times listed those in attendance [MTFWE 106].

Paine writes of the Punch dinner as a unique honor:

Probably the most valued of his London honors was the dinner given to him by the staff of Punch. Punch had already saluted him with a front-page cartoon by Bernard Partridge....

Mr. Agnew, chief editor; Linley Sambourne, Francis Burnand, Henry Lucy, and others of the staff welcomed him at the Punch offices at 10 Bouverie Street, in the historic Punch dining-room where Thackeray had sat, and Douglas Jerrold, and so many of the great departed. Mark Twain was the first foreign visitor to be so honored—in fifty years the first stranger to sit at the sacred board—a mighty distinction. In the course of the dinner they gave him a pretty surprise, when little Joy Agnew presented him with the original drawing of Partridge's cartoon.

Nothing could have appealed to him more, and the Punch dinner, with its associations and that dainty presentation, remained apart in his memory from all other feastings [MTB 1400-01].

In his A.D. of Aug. 30, 1907 Clemens called the Punch dinner “the prettiest incident of my long life, I think, and I cannot think of it yet without a thrill at my heart and quickened pulse-beat. The little sprite was Joy Agnew, eight years of age, daughter of the editor in chief” [MTFWE 110].

At Brown's Hotel in London Sam inscribed on his photograph with Frances Nunnally: “To Francesca from S.L.C. / The title of this poem is / Sweetness & Light / London / July 9, 1907” [MTP].

Merton Russell Cotes wrote from Bournemouth to invite Sam to visit [MTP].

Louis Felberman for the Hungarian Society wrote from London to Ashcroft asking for “a few minutes visit” with Twain [MTP].

Harry Harper for London Daily Mail wrote from London to Ashcroft, asking if Sam had an alibi for the stolen Dublin jewels [MTP].

Charles A. Hazlett wrote from Portsmouth, N.H. advising Sam's election for establishing the Thomas Bailey Aldrich Memorial, Wallace Hackett, President; 28 names listed [MTP].

Adolf Herz wrote a postcard in German from Vienna to Sam [MTP].

Janet E. Reeve wrote from Hazlemere Upper School, London to ask Sam for “a short article or tale” for the school magazine [MTP].

An unidentified person wrote from “Seven Oaks” England to Sam: “Dear Doctor: / Please return Cup and jewels: no questions asked” [MTP].

W. Holt White for London Daily Express wrote to Ashcroft, thanking Sam for a photograph [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal (Boston): Headache. Boston late last night and I ill with a terror of a headache. It came boiling along and by 11 when we were finally settled in the Parker house, the pains in my head had robbed me of my sense of being human. All day in bed. Will roused me at 7:30. He having arrived by a night train. He brought letters and clippings from Ashcroft, but I was too ill to read anything [MTP 82]. Note: “Will” was Charles E. Wark, Clara's accompanist.

July 10 Wednesday – Ashcroft's notes: “Went to Liverpool with Tay Pay. Attended banquet in the Town Hall in the evening” [MTB 1399]. Note: “Tay Pay” was T.P. O'Connor.

Insert Cartoon. Caption: “Mark Twain and the Jumping John Bull Frog have been having a good time together” [The Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury, July 9, 1907, p. 9].

The Evening Standard and London St. James's Gazette reported on Sam's departure for Liverpool.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

MARK TWAIN

Mark Twain, accompanied by his private secretary [Ashcroft] and Mr. T.P. O'Connor, M.P., left Euston to-day by the Liverpool express.

Mr. Clemens will dine to-night with the Lord Mayor and Corporation of Liverpool, and will be back in town to-morrow.

The railway authorities placed at his disposal what was formerly the Prince of Wales's saloon, and had made in it a bed for him in case he desired to rest on the way down.

A large number of people assembled on the platform, but the famous humorist retired at once to his compartment, his secretary pleading that he had suffered a sleepless night and could see no one [MTFWE 106: July 10, p.9].

The London Morning Leader speculated that the Punch dinner was responsible for Sam's "sleepless night."

MARK TWAIN'S NEW JOKE.

....

It must have been the jokes. A humorist amongst humorists would have to stand a lot. If the guest of the evening could only be persuaded to repeat the chestnuts that were tried on him!

Some people said they were so bad that they provoked the "restless night," the very shame of which led our American visitor to take refuge in a railway carriage and draw the blinds; others (you can always find charitable people) declared that the jokes he heard at the "Punch" dinner were of such exceptional wit and brilliancy that Mark Twain rose from the table and sought his hotel overwhelmed and bewildered by them, and racked his brains the night long as to how he could work them off on the next interviewer.

Probably the truth is the author of "The Innocents Abroad" was feeling like the Colonial Premiers after they had been in the country a fortnight. He was looking very well, and wore a light dust-coat for traveling as a compliment to the summer, which was certainly not with us yesterday [MTFWE 107: July 11, p.3].

Sam, Ralph Ashcroft, and T.P. O'Connor reached Liverpool at 4 p.m. Sam remained in bed on the special rail car until it was time to attend the dinner; he did not attend the actual dinner with the Lord Mayor, John Japp. Sam wrote in his Oct. 2, 1907 A.D.:

The Lord Mayor was admirably hospitable; he sent his state carriage for me, with a most gorgeously clad captain and crew, consisting of coachman and footmen; and he received me at the municipal palace in his state costume, with his sword at his side and his cocked hat in his hand. The banquet was just over when he conducted me into the banqueting-hall, so the speechmaking began at once. After the usual toasts to the King and the President, and the reading of the usual letters and telegrams, the rest of the business of the evening was proceeded with [MTFWE 113].

The London Tribune, July 11, p.7 ran "Mark Twain's Visit to Liverpool," in part:

On entering the banqueting-room he received a great ovation from the 200 guests, amongst whom were the Bishop of Liverpool, Mr. T.P. O'Connor, M.P., the Hon. J.L. Griffiths, Mr. Robert Gladstone, and Vice-Chancellor Dale.

Mr. T.P. O'Connor, M.P., in proposing the toast of the evening, described Mark Twain as the most honoured and respected guest that England has had for many a year.

A telegram from Sir Rupert Boyce, in which the sender referred to the loss of the Ascot Gold Cup and the robbery of the regalia at Dublin, furnished Mark Twain with his first point when, amidst ringing cheers, he rose to respond. "I don't know," he said, "what will become of my reputation if I don't get out of the country. What is there to connect me with the robbery in Dublin Castle? I say nothing about the Ascot Cup. I was going to Dublin, but, fortunately for the rags of my reputation I could not get there. I should like to know if the Regalia were kept in a reliable safe, because, with the reputation I have now, circumstantial evidence should point to the fact that I would not merely have carried off the Regalia but the safe as well. (Laughter.)

"I hope you won't mind me being frivolous, because I have followed out my instincts this afternoon. I have slept and rested, and when I am rested and am feeling good I can't help being frivolous. It is when I am worn out, weary, and discouraged that the time comes for me to take hold of the great international questions and handle them. According to 'Tay Pay' I have been everything. At last I am an Ambassador. I like the position. I do not mind being so without salary, because salary limits your energies. I had rather be free and doing ambassadorial work after my own fashion. I intend to keep up this ambassadorial business right along, and whenever I see a chance to cement good feeling between the old Mother-country and its oldest child I shall put in my word and do my ambassadorial work."

Paine writes of the event:

Clemens was too tired to be present while the courses were being served, but arrived rested and fresh to respond to his toast. Perhaps because it was his farewell speech in England, he made that night the most effective address of his four weeks' visit — one of the most effective of his whole career: He began by some light reference to the Ascot Cup and the Dublin Jewels and the State Regalia, and other disappearances that had been laid to his charge, to amuse his hearers, and spoke at greater length than usual, and with even greater variety. Then laying all levity aside, he told them, like the Queen of Sheba, all that was in his heart.

. . . Home is dear to us all, and now I am departing to my own home beyond the ocean. Oxford has conferred upon me the highest honor that has ever fallen to my share of this life's prizes. It is the very one I would have chosen, as outranking all and any others, the one more precious to me than any and all others within the gift of man or state. During my four weeks' sojourn in England I have had another lofty honor, a continuous honor, an honor which has flowed serenely along, without halt or obstruction, through all these twenty-six days, a most moving and pulse-stirring honor—the heartfelt grip of the hand, and the welcome that does not descend from the pale-gray matter of the brain, but rushes up with the red blood from the heart. It makes me proud and sometimes it makes me humble, too. Many and many a year ago I gathered an incident from Dana's Two Years Before the Mast. It was like this: There was a presumptuous little self-important skipper in a coasting sloop engaged in the dried-apple and kitchen-furniture trade, and he was always hailing every ship that came in sight. He did it just to hear himself talk and to air his small grandeur. One day a majestic Indiaman came plowing by with course on course of canvas towering into the sky, her decks and yards swarming with sailors, her hull burdened to the Plimsoll line with a rich freightage of precious spices, lading the breezes with gracious and mysterious odors of the Orient. It was a noble spectacle, a sublime spectacle! Of course the little skipper popped into the shrouds and squeaked out a hail, "Ship ahoy! What ship is that? And whence and whither?" In a deep and thunderous bass the answer came back through the speaking-trumpet, "The Begum, of Bengal—142 days out from Canton — homeward bound! What ship is that?" Well, it just crushed that poor little creature's vanity flat, and he squeaked back most humbly, "Only the Mary Ann, fourteen hours out from Boston, bound for Kittery Point—with nothing to speak of!" Oh, what an eloquent word that "only," to express the depths of his humbleness! That is just my case. During just one hour in the twenty-four—not more—I pause and reflect in the stillness of the night with the echoes of your English welcome still lingering in my ears, and then I am humble. Then I am properly meek, and for that little while I am only the Mary Ann, fourteen hours out, cargoed with vegetables and tinware; but during all the other twenty-three hours my vain self-complacency rides high on the white crests of your approval, and then I am a stately Indiaman, plowing the great seas under a cloud of canvas and laden with the kindest words that have ever been vouchsafed to any wandering alien in this world, I think; then my twenty-six fortunate days on this old mother soil seem to be multiplied by six, and I am the Begum, of Bengal, 142 days out from Canton—homeward bound! [MTB 1401-2]. Note: see Gribben 172-3. See also T.P. O'Connor's write up of the speech and reaction cited in July 19.

Percy Spalding wrote from London to ask Ashcroft if he might see Sam on “two small matters” before he left England [MTP].

William H. Clemens wrote from Southampton to Sam, having the “same name” as Sam (not Will Clemens); could Sam send a brief letter to be auctioned for a new church [MTP].

John H. Barker wrote from Tottenham to Sam, offended by a paragraph clipped and pasted to his letter in the Morning Leader, “a mean & paltry rag published somewhere in London.” The paragraph conjoins the “craze for stealing exhibition jewelry” with Sam’s leaving London this day for Liverpool [MTP].

Mrs. Peter Brocklebank wrote from Cheshire to Sam: “Do you remember my husband & me at Florence where we own the little villa San Leonardo? Is every moment of tomorrow engaged?” [MTP].

Lily Forster wrote from Liverpool to ask Sam to send his autograph [MTP].

Joe Fuller wrote from Hastings to congratulate Sam on “winning the Harper Award of Merit” [MTP].

George J. Jolliffe for the Salvation Army, London wrote to invite Sam to a tea on July 15 at 4:45 p.m.: Crystal Palace, Sydenham [MTP].

Sidney Lee wrote from Kensington to thank Sam for the signed photo [MTP].

Georgiana Langatock wrote from Rutland Gate, S.W. to Sam, “quite in love with the photo you have so kindly sent...” Best wishes [MTP].

Francesco Pirazzini wrote from NYC to Sam: “I hope you have not forgotten your daughters teacher. I am now in New York...” He’d traveled to NY to see his father but he’d passed away. Would Sam recommend him to his friends? [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: I went to see Ferris Greenslet about the Aldrich or the M.T. letters. He said in the course of our pleasant chat, and apropos of the King’s wonderful reception in England and the love they bore him, that Howells too commanded a great deal of love that he is a rare creature and mellows like old wine. He showed me a great letter from the King written away back in the 70’s and said that not to be able to use that letter in his Biography of Aldrich would be as bad as to lose an eye or a tooth. I found a darling “old” shop there and got a porringer there and Santa gave me a big one. Boston is charming. In the evening we walked in the Common [MTP 82]. Note: a porringer is a shallow bowl or cup with a handle.

July 11 Thursday – Ashcroft’s notes: “Returned to London with Tay Pay. Calls in the afternoon” [MTB 1399].

In Liverpool, England Sam sent a telegram to Henry Rawcliffe Kirkland in West Kirby, England:

“VERY VERY SORRY NOT TO HAVE SEEN YOU PLEASE ACCEPT MY CORDIAL THANKS FOR YOUR KIND LETTER AND MY HEARTY WISH FOR RENEWED HEALTH AND STRENGTH FOR YOU / MARK TWAIN” [MTP].

Sam left Liverpool on the 11 a.m. train from the Lime Street station. Lord Mayor John Japp shook his hand in farewell at the station. Ralph Ashcroft and T.P. (Tay Pay) O’Connor again traveled with Sam [Liverpool Evening Express, July 11, p.6, “Mark Twain’s Departure”]. The London Daily Graphic reported Sam had collected so many souvenirs, letters, and photographs that he had to buy a special trunk to carry them home [July 11, p.9].

The Pall Mall Gazette announced Sam's Saturday departure from England:

MARK TWAIN'S DEPARTURE.

Mark Twain will have to do on Saturday what he has rarely done since his arrival in England, namely, to rise early. Usually, he likes to rest well into the morning, but on Saturday, the day of his departure, the special train which takes passengers to Tilbury who are sailing by the Minnetonka, leaves St. Pancras at 9.52 a.m. It is expected that there will be at the station a party of friends to see him off [July 11, p.8].

George B. Harvey's article, "Mark Twain's Prices," ran in the Journal of Education, p. 68-9. Tenney: "The text of an interview by James B. Morrow; this appears to be a transcription of Harvey's answers to Morrow's questions, which are not given. When MT returned from his world lecture tour, he 'barely could earn $6,000 a year,' but Harvey negotiated a contract giving MT 30 c per word for all he wrote, whether it was published or not. 'Mark Twain earns $50,000 a year. Indeed, I think his income in 1907 will reach $70,000.' He has learned to dictate to a secretary: 'Now he lights a cigar after breakfast, sits down in his library, and dictates for three hours on his autobiography. When he gets up he has earned $1,000'" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Second Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1978 p. 175].

Albert Bigelow Paine lost Orion Clemens' autobiography in Grand Central Station, N.Y. On the following day he advertised for its return [NY Times July 12, 1907].

H. Walter Barnett, photographer, London wrote to Sam, hoping he'd rec'd the prints sent [MTP].

Harry E. Brittain wrote from Westminster to bid Sam "au revoir" [MTP].

Graham Buckley wrote from London to Sam, wishing a bon voyage; Buckley was leaving almost simultaneously on a long journey for his health [MTP].

Prof. James Abram Cross wrote from Southport to ask Sam if he might make a medallion in honor of Sam's visit there [MTP].

Louis Felberman for Hungarian Soc. wrote from London to Sam: "Please accept my most grateful thanks for sending those beautiful lines in connection with the 40th Anniversary of the Coronation of the King of Hungary, which I feel will be read with delight throughout" the domain of "the Emperor-King" [MTP].

A. Francis wrote from Bucks to Sam, seeing that he wanted to arrange his funeral with a brass band, Francis offered the services of a band he was connected with—what country did Sam think of dying in? [MTP].

Histed photographers, London wrote to Sam sending "rough proofs"—which did Sam prefer? [MTP].

Muriel Cochran Jenkins wrote from London to ask Sam for his photograph. She enclosed poems on the deaths of Henry M. Stanley and President McKinley [MTP].

John Y. W. MacAlister wrote from London to Sam, sad that it looked like he would not get to see Clemens before he left—could Sam dine with him the next evening? [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Left Boston for New York and ran across Tino who was crossing Union Square. He dropped into my cab with a weary bang and told me of the calamity that had befallen him. He'd lost his big new handbag in G.C. Station—with nearly all his clothes in it, photos of the King, ms. of his own, and oh, everything; even the Orion letters he was carrying up to Elmira to read. I had told him: best not to take them away. He dined with me and we had a cosy time looking through old letters [MTP 83 Note]: “Tino” was a nickname for Albert Bigelow Paine.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

July 12 Friday – At Brown’s Hotel in London Sam wrote to daughter Clara, a letter which reveals his activities this final day in England:

Clärchen dear, we sail tomorrow in the Minnetonka (I think.)

We are due to arrive in 8 or 9 days.

I have been most mannerly & etiquetical. I have returned every call—card-calls by card, delivered by myself; personal calls in person.

I have buzzed around every day, & many nights—at breakfasts, luncheons, teas & dinners, & have never been fatigued, more than a hour at a time. Even this last day is not an exception. I spent two hours with the president of the National & Gallery this morning, then lunched with the earl & countess of Portsmouth (friends of 7 years ago)—where, among the company I found another old friend, a sister of the duke of Argyle, & several acquaintances, & had a rousing time. Dinner with friends to-night & in the morning—then sail.

Everybody has been very affectionate, & you will be spiteful & jealous.

With love & kisses / Father [MTP].

Note: Sir Charles Holroyd (1861-1917) was the director of the National Gallery from 1906-1916; 6th Earl of Portsmouth, Newton Wallop and Beatrice Pease Wallop; 9th Duke of Argyle was John George Edward Henry Douglas Sutherland Campbell (1845-1914) aka Marquess of Lorne prior to 1900, or “Earl of Campbell.” See earlier entries. “Among his other callers later in the day were Sir Thomas Lipton and Mr. [John] Henniker Heaton, M.P.” [London Tribune, July 13, p.7].

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

Jean dear, we sail to-morrow noon the 13th & shall probably arrive on the 21st—more likely the 22^d, perhaps. Steamer Minnetonka, I think.

I’ve had a powerful good time—and that includes Liverpool, night before last. Many people have given me messages for you & Clara—the latest ones were Bram Stoker & Mr. Farmer Hall [Farner Hall?] & his charming family. I have forgotten who the others were.

I know I ought to wait over a ship & go to Ireland—but I mustn’t—it is time to clear for home.

With love & kisses / Father / Mrs. Fitzgerald sends you great love [MTP]. Note: Mrs. Fitzgerald had recently written Clemens, but very little is known of her. The exact date of Sam’s luncheon with Bram Stoker is not clear, but could have only been the night of July 10 or 11, the prior evening. Shelden puts this last evening meeting to a “quiet corner of an old pub in Fleet Street,” “Ye Olde Cheshire Cheese [123].

Sam also wrote to Edward Russell.

Dear Sir Edward Russell,—I was deeply moved and gratified by that beautiful poem, and I could not trust myself to try to express my feelings concerning it there, that night, knowing my voice would fail me. I thank you for those welcome words, and am grateful for the impulse that moved you to say them. It was my last (public) night in England, and certainly no one has ever had a more uplifting night anywhere, nor one so easy to house and sacredly preserve in the memory. Good-bye—but not for always, I hope—Sincerely yours, ... [MTP]. Note: Sir Edward Russell (1834-1920), 1st Baron Russell of Liverpool, journalist and politician, he proposed the toast “The Health of Mark Twain” at the July 10 Lord Mayor dinner in Liverpool.

Sam also wrote to Carlotta Welles.

Indeed you are good—& although I do like to call you a little rascal, it is only because you are charming. I was afraid you wouldn't send me a good-bye, but you have sent me a lovely one, & by that gentle deed I know you are good.

You thought I couldn't trace my joker out, but I did. When I had been a day or so in this house I found that Mrs. Nunnally & Miss Frances were guests. Miss Frances had your address in her notebook, in your own handwriting. The d's & the Ls betrayed you. So I know what little rascal it was that was playing tricks upon her guileless old shipmate.

You are right, Charlie, I didn't steal the cup; & if I even tried to steal it, it wasn't for myself, I only wanted to give it to you. I wouldn't take a thing like that for a selfish reason.

We sail in the morning. Good-bye, dear, & continue to be happy in that beautiful foreign home of yours.
/ Doctor SLC [MTAq 43-45].

Sam also inscribed two photographs of himself to Frances Nunnally. First: "To Frances Nunnally, with the affectionate regards of her comrade / Mark Twain / July 12, 1907." Second: "To Francesca with love & best wishes / Mark Twain / London, July 12, 1907. (week-day)" [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a photograph to Cora W. Nunnally: "To Mrs. Nunnally, with the kindest regards of hers sincerely / Mark Twain / London, July 12, 1907." [MTP].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam to John Japp, Lord Mayor of Liverpool. "My dear Lord Mayor,—I shall to-morrow morning send you a photograph for the Lady Mayoress, which Dr. Clemens has signed. I am happy to tell you that Dr. Clemens says his visit to Liverpool was the most enjoyable feature of his visit to England—" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal (NY): Terribly busy all day getting ready to close the house, and to get ready for the King. Tino lunched with me, he dined with me, and again we looked through batches of letters, lovely interesting letters we find, but none from Aldrich. Tomorrow Tino starts for Elmira to visit Mrs. Crane and to collect biographical matter for the King's book [MTP 83]. Note: "Tino" = A.B. Paine.

H. Walter Barnett wrote from London to send two portraits of Clemens in his robes; he bid him goodbye and a pleasant journey [MTP].

Ruth Gordon Bower wrote from Kilburn to Sam: "How very sweet of you to write me such a lovely letter.... Saturday I am going down to St. Pancras Station hoping to see you off. ... Your affectionate little friend..." [MTP].

J.Q. Brant-Sero wrote from London to Ashcroft sorry he couldn't see Sam off [MTP].

Albert Bruce-Joy wrote from West Kensington to send Sam a photograph of his sculpture "The First Flight" (in the file) [MTP]. See insert: First Flight

W.H. Denny wrote on Savage Club notepaper, London, to request Sam's autograph on the Club menu enclosed [MTP].

John L. Griffiths for American Consular Service wrote from Liverpool to Sam, sorry he did not see Sam at the hotel the day before; pleasant voyage wishes [MTP].

John Henniker Heaton wrote from London on Bath Club notepaper wishing Sam goodbye [MTP].

Charles Howard wrote on National Gallery notepaper, London, to Ashcroft, “delighted to meet Mr. Clemens at 11.45 today” [MTP].

Cora W. Nunnally wrote from London to express thanks to Sam for his kindnesses and association with Frances Nunnally (“Francesca”) [MTP].

Frances Nunnally wrote from London to Sam [MTP].

You have done so much for me since I have been in London, and given me so much pleasure, that I just wanted to write a little note to thank you for your many kindnesses. ...

You must be sure not to forget to come to Catonsville to see those sixty girls next November. Wishing you the pleasantest of voyages over, I am / Your little friend, / Francesca [MTAq 45]. Note: Frances was a student at St. Timothy’s in Cantonville, Maryland.

Thomas Power O'Connor wrote from London to Ashcroft, enclosing an article for Clemens (not in file) [MTP].

Frank T. Searight for American Press Humorists wrote to Lyon enclosing a letter from Sam Davis of Carson, Nevada, whom Searight called “a chum of Mr. Clemens” [MTP]. Note: Davis thought of himself as such, but Sam didn’t care much for him. See other entries on Davis.

Frank T. Searight for American Press Humorists wrote to Sam asking for some article for a book being assembled for the Nye Memorial [MTP].

Bram Stoker wrote from Chelsea to offer goodbye wishes to Sam [MTP].

Frederick C. Van Duzer for American Society in London wrote to Sam enclosing “first proof” of the speech Sam made at the Independence Day Banquet, to be printed in a pamphlet form for members only [MTP].

S. Hartley Watson, for Savage Club wrote to thank Sam “for taking a ticket in aid of our Young Club Protégé Miss Marjorie Andrews” [MTP].

July 13 Saturday – The Pall Mall Gazette, announced the leaving of Mark Twain.

Mark Twain leaves us to-day, and has issued a kindly farewell message. He has had, he says, the most enjoyable holiday of his life, and is younger now by seven years than he was when he arrived. “If I could stay another month, I could make it fourteen,” he says delightfully; but in any case, after planning his funeral for some time past, he has changed his mind and postponed it. On our side, we are sorry that he is going, because he might have continued to jest for another month without being at all wearisome. There is a sort of breezy morality about his valetudinarianisms. They suggest the happiness of facing hard facts with serenity, and are quite of a piece with all his gay philosophy; for Mr. Clemens’s humour, apart from his earliest books of large buffoonery, may be strictly defined as the playfulness of common sense. May there be no reaction after the “violently gay and energetic life” of this farewell trip [July 13, p.2, “Mark Twain’s Good-bye”].

Sam and Ralph W. Ashcroft sailed for America on the S.S. Minnetonka [MTHHR 626n1].

Paine writes of Sam’s departure:

He sailed on July 13th for home, besought to the last moment by a crowd of autograph-seekers and reporters and photographers, and a multitude who only wished to see him and to shout and wave good-by. He was sailing away from them for the last time. They hoped he would make a speech, but that would not have been possible. To the reporters he gave a farewell message:

“It has been the most enjoyable holiday I have ever had, and I am sorry the end of it has come. I have met a hundred, old friends, and I have made a hundred new ones. It is a good kind of riches to have; there is none better, I think.” And the London Tribune declared that “the ship that bore him away had difficulty in getting clear, so thickly was the water strewn with the bay-leaves of his triumph. For Mark Twain has triumphed, and in his all-too-brief stay of a month has done more for the cause of the world’s peace than will be accomplished by the Hague Conference. He has made the world laugh again.”

His ship was the Minnetonka, and there were some little folks aboard to be adopted as grandchildren. On July 15th, in a fog, the Minnetonka collided with the bark Sterling, and narrowly escaped sinking her. On the whole, however, the homeward way was clear, and the vessel reached New York nearly a day in advance of their schedule. Some ceremonies of welcome had been prepared for him; but they were upset by the early arrival, so that when he descended the gang-plank to his native soil only a few who had received special information were there to greet him. But perhaps he did not notice it. He seldom took account of the absence of such things. By early afternoon, however, the papers rang with the announcement that Mark Twain was home again [MTB 1403].

Sometime during the voyage (July 13 to July 22) Sam inscribed a copy of The Jumping Frog to Robert Bell: “To / Mr. Robert Bell / S.S. Minnetonka/ with the compliments & best wishes / of / Mark Twain / July 13/22, 1907.” [MTP].

Harper’s Weekly ran an anonymous article, “Mark Twain, Doctor of Letters,” p.1010. Tenney: “Editorial comment on MT’s honorary Oxford degree, awarded not just because he is a celebrity, but because he is an able and recognized author.” The same issue also printed a photograph with the caption: “Mark Twain, En Route for Oxford to Receive the Degree of Doctor of Letters, Besieged by Reporters on His Steamship in England” without commentary, p. 1034 [43].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tonight dear Mother came in as I was dusting books in the Library, and it was fine to see her and to have her looking so well. It was terribly hot, so we drove in the park in a Victoria and it was a delight....

Today the King sailed from England. He comes away with a mighty cargo of love—English love and now that I’m in my old tracks again I have a feeling that I’m living again [MTP 83].

Paddy Madden wrote (after July 13) from America to Sam, “Cannot tell you how delighted I was to receive the postal cards. They are perfectly beautiful...how highly I prize them” [MTP].

Thomas Power O’Connor sent a telegram to Sam, S.S. Minnetonka: “Goodbye God bless you Taypay” [MTP].

July 14 Sunday – Sam and Ashcroft were en route to New York on the S.S. Minnetonka. This from a Mark Twain dispatch to the NY Times from London, July 17: “Left the Channel Sunday at 1:50 in doubtful weather and sighted the Scilly Islands ten miles off. At 6 o’clock ran into a dense fog, which broke into patches during the night” [July 18, p.4, “From Twain by Wireless”].

Harry E. Brittain wrote from Westminster to send Sam a photo that appeared in the Sphere; he asked Ashcroft if he could obtain Sam’s autograph on the photo [MTP].

Frederick Rathbone wrote from London to Ashcroft, advertising “the finest collection in the world of Wedgwood portraits of Americans & European celebrities” [MTP].

Dodd Lyons Tinsley sent Sam a telegram from London: “From great admirers wishing you pleasant voyage and safe return home always remembering Begum of Bengal” [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote from Hartford to Sam.

Dear Old Mark, / You will soon be getting ashore and I want to be on hand to hug you welcome

I should almost think you would rather see an enemy though;—for a change.

What is there that could give you a new sensation but a hostile person?

I am sure I never wanted to see you so much as now—which is saying a very, very great deal. You have such a lot of unprecedented things to tell!

This is to let you know that I am to be on the pulpit duty at Plymouth Church next Sunday (July 21) and that I can pay you a call either Saturday or Monday if you are anywhere accessible. I shall not be surprised however to hear that you are submerged in engagements, and that I’d best wait till another time. Harmony and I, you bet, have had our telescope on you sitting up there on the top of the world these last weeks—as you and I followed the lads going up Mont Blanc when we were in Chamouni.

Its queer—but somehow your conquering hero progress through England has revived our memories of the early days of you and our acquaintance—when we lived in Willard st, and we were all young.—and Harmony used to rant of sorry for you because you had no home.

Love to the girls and to Miss Lyon [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “We loafed today and rested and rested, but too I worked over the covering of books and furniture” [MTP 84].

July 15 Monday – Sam and Ashcroft were en route to New York on the S.S. Minnetonka. The ship struck a small French bark, the Sterling on this day. New York Tribune, July 20, p.7:

Steamer Minnetonka, at sea, July 20.

This sixtieth voyage westward of the steamship Minnetonka has been marked by an occurrence with will never be forgotten by those now on board. During the morning watch on Monday, July 15, the fog which had enveloped the ship more or less all night became very dense. Suddenly, without any warning note of horn or bell a towering mass of canvas loomed up on our starboard bow, and was borne swiftly toward us. It seemed impossible for a moment or two to avoid either cutting down or being cut down by the bark which carried it, but instantaneously arising to the emergency, Captain Layland, who had been on the bridge for nearly thirty-six hours, and his chief officer, Mr. Woolcock, were able, owing to our greatly reduced speed, to manoeuvre the Minnetonka so admirably that the bark, losing only her bowsprit and head sails, merely struck us a glancing blow and dragged along our starboard side without seriously wounding our ship.

Sam’s wire of the above incident ran in the N.Y. Times of July 18, p.4, “From Twain by Wireless.” Tenney sent what appears to be a partial draft copy collected from the University of Chicago Library:

3

Barque was coming for our broadside, but prompt action on both sides prevented direct collision. Barque quickly disappeared in fog. Cruised around hunting for her one hour and half. No success gave it up & resumed the home trail. / Clemens.

In his A.D. of Apr. 1908, Sam claimed to have “discovered her [Dorothy Quick] the second day out” which would have been July 15 [MTAq 127].

Eight-year-old Joy Agnew wrote a letter of thanks to Sam.

My dear Mr. Mark Twain, / Thank you so much for the beautiful picture you sent me. It was very kind of you to think of me. We have a lovely garden, full of a lot of flowers. We have also a good lot of pets too. I will tell you what they are. Mine are; three bantams, three goldfish, three doves, six canarys, two dogs and one cat. My brother Ewan who is at Eaton now has; nine goldfish, one cat, one dog, and a pony. My Daddy has one dog. Mummy has a lot of hens and some bees. We have a little garden of our own and Daddy is going to make us a see-saw. Of course this is all in the country. I am going to a wedding on Thursday. I hope you will remember me for I am yours ~~respec~~ affectionately / Joy Agnew [MTP; MTFWE 111].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Still in N.Y., but we went up to Redding to see "Lyonesse" in the summer-time. Oh it is so beautiful, so old, so hallowed with those who have been living there these many years, for it seems as if the spirits still lived on there, and mother loves it too [MTP 83]. Note: "Lyonesse" was later called "The Lobster Pot," Isabel Lyon's house in Redding.

London Daily Mail sent a telegram to Sam: "If you writing London will you give us first rights" [MTP].

Winfield Scott wrote from Los Angeles to Sam in reference to his use of "Mr Mac." in the NAR p. 469 (page cut out and enclosed). Scott suggested Sam use the name of McCrellish. Scott mentioned knowing Samuel E. Moffett and Sam P. Davis [MTP].

Isabel S. Wayland (Mrs. John Elton Wayland) wrote from Stony Creek, Conn. to Sam. Did he remember her invite of last spring for him and Miss Lyon to spend a week on their "little island"? She offered a range of possible dates [MTP]. Note: Wayland also wrote to Lyon just after this hoping her invitation would be accepted.

July 15 after – After July 15 (the day he met her) Sam also inscribed a copy of JA to Dorothy Quick: "To Dorothy Quick / with the love of / SL. Clemens / 1907 / 21 Fifth ave." [MTP].

July 16 Tuesday – Sam and Ashcroft were en route to New York on the S.S. Minnetonka.

Cooley writes of the time aboard ship and of a new acquaintance made with one of the younger of 129 passengers during the voyage, likely early on:

He was greatly impressed with his scarlet Oxford robe and academic hood and on the ship home strolled the decks displaying the new regalia, still glowing with the euphoria of London and Oxford. Thus embellished, Clemens met an eleven-year-old American girl named Dorothy Quick, who had been watching him for some time, fascinated by his robe and crop of snowy hair....Clemens and Dorothy talked about his writing and her desire to become a serious fiction writer when she grew up. ... To honor their new friendship, Dorothy and Clemens vowed to wear white all the rest of the voyage. For her skillful play at shuffleboard, which Clemens called "horse billiards," he gave her and inscribed copy of his recent book, Eve's Diary.

One day a ship's officer came to Dorothy and asked if he was addressing Mark Twain's business manager. Dorothy nodded and was informed that Mr. Twain had announced he would not perform in the ship's program, a benefit for the sailor's fund, unless she gave her permission. The printed program for the event even announced him as "Mark Twain (by courtesy of Miss Dorothy Quick)." Their growing friendship moved so many of the ship's passengers that a photo session was arranged. Dorothy stood between Clemens and Captain Layland, while dozens of passengers snapped their Kodaks. When the prints were developed by the ship's photographer, there were many requests for the inseparable duo's autographs. Once they arrived in New York, the process was repeated for newspaper photographers [MTAq 36-7]. Note: Dorothy Gertrude Quick (1896-1962). Dorothy was traveling with her mother, Emma Gertrude Quick, and her grandparents. In his A.D. of Apr. 1908, Sam claimed to have "discovered her the second day out” which would have been July 15 [MTAq 127]. The benefit program was traditionally held on the last night at sea, in this case July 21.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “And still in New York, doing finishing touches. Santa is getting on wonderfully in Boston” [MTP 84].

July 17 Wednesday – Sam and Ashcroft were en route to New York on the S.S. Minnetonka. Sam came down with another case of bronchitis on this day [July 29 to Rogers].

John Briggs, Hannibal boyhood pal, died near New London, Mo. (1837-1907) see entries Vol 1.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: But this afternoon we came out to Tuxedo. The city has been boilingly hot, and we were so glad to get into a jigger and come out home here. We took the 3:53 train which arrives at 5:12 when all Tuxedo is spreading itself in all kinds of stylish rigs and mobiles. There are feathers waving and whips flourishing and long veils sweeping out in the breeze and men climbing into vehicles and showing off their fancy stockings and there is such an over burdenment of fashion about it all, that you long for a jog-trotting old mare the will carry you along a country road and through fields—country fields. Here is an artificial electric jigger—along artificial roads, climbing up to an artificial house over an artificial lake. But I’m glad we’re here and away from the city [MTP 84-85].

Evert Jansen Wendell (1860-1917), Harvard alumnus and collector of theater memorabilia wrote from NYC to Sam, enclosing a clipping (not in file) from a Syracuse paper [MTP]. Note: After his return on July 22 Sam and Lyon wrote on Wendell’s letter to an unidentified person.

John Mead Howells for Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam: “As by our conversation with Miss Lyon, we have ordered two circular Della Robbia pieces from Cantagalli in Florence...” [MTP]. Note: Copy of Howells & Stokes’ letter to Cantagalli in file.

Margaret C. Japp (Mrs. John Japp), Lord Mayor of Liverpool) wrote to Sam: “I cannot tell you how much we have been congratulated on the success of that evening, and of the pleasure your presence gave” [MTP].

July 18 Thursday – Sam and Ashcroft were en route to New York on the S.S. Minnetonka. Sam inscribed a first English edition copy of AC: “Truly Yours / SL. Clemens / (Mark Twain) / July 18/07” [Christie’s London, 1 June 2009, Lot 203, Sale 5822]. Note: at an angle under Sam’s inscription are three more signatures: Mrs. J. Ian Ansdale, Josephine Watts, and Herbert Percy, likely shipmates on the voyage over.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mother stays on and we sew and read Bernard Shaw. I corner Mother so she can’t well get away, and read the preface to Shaw’s last book ‘John Bull’s Other Island.’ It’s a wonderful preface and mother is sweetly contented with it, and the place and life generally” [MTP 85].

Laura Hawkins Frazer wrote to Albert Bigelow Paine for a picture of Sam [MTP]. Note: several letters from Frazier to Paine for this period are in the file but are not included.

Harrie Roberts wrote from Kalgoorlie, Australia to ask Sam about a poem he’d read years before that had stuck with him. Where could he get a copy? [MTP]. Note: on top, Lyon: “Answd. / Sept 9”

Noah Wilson wrote from London to Sam after reading an article about Clemens wanting to arrange his own funeral. Wilson told of an old whaler, William Jenkins, who only wished as an old man for all his friends to join hands around his grave and sing “Auld Lange Syne” [MTP].

July 19 Friday – Sam and Ashcroft were en route to New York on the S.S. Minnetonka.

T.P. O'Connor's article, "Mark Twain as an Orator," ran in T.P.'s Weekly (London) p. 85. Tenney: "MT is a master of humor, pathos, and satire—witness his attacks on Christian Science and Belgian rule in the Congo—but he is also 'one of the great orators of his time.' After briefly describing MT's speech 'at the lunch over which Mr. Birrell presided,' T.P. writes at greater length on MT's speech at the Lord Mayor's Banquet in Liverpool, quoting his own words introducing MT and MT's speech, and describing the reaction of the audience" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Fifth Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1981 p. 166]. Also in this issue, O'Connor writes "T.P. in his Anecdoteage," p.76. Tenney: "Reprints stories by and about MT from Aaron Watson's THE SAVAGE CLUB" [ibid].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The Monadnock Day. A year ago today—with the same weather" [MTP 85].

Andrew Beatt for the Arbroath Health Congress wrote from Arbroath, Scotland to advise Sam that he'd been "installed as a Life Member," in their club, a bathing club "whose prevailing characteristic...is humour..."; flyer enclosed and in file [MTP].

John J. Hineson wrote from Lancashire to ask for Sam's autograph [MTP].

John M. Howells, for Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam, enclosing bills from Harry Lounsbury for general work on the Redding house, and two orders for William Webb Sunderland of $218.45 for the cost of relocating the house the second time and one for $224 for rock excavation [MTP].

The World, London sent a telegram to Sam: "The World congratulates you on remarkable trip abroad public would be greatly interested wireless message from you perhaps on funniest incident your voyage favour of reply ...greatly appreciated" [MTP].

July 20 Saturday – Sam and Ashcroft were en route to New York on the S.S. Minnetonka. The traditional last night at sea benefit program was held for the Seaman's fund, though when it fell on a Sunday such programs were likely moved to Saturday. Fatout gives this day for the program and concert and writes that Sam spoke for an hour, including the "sock-hunting" story [MT Speaking 678]. Dorothy Quick had given her "permission" as Mark Twain's "business manager" for him to take part (see July 16 from Cooley).

Sydney Brooks' article "Mark Twain in England," ran in Harper's Weekly, p. 1053-5. Tenney: "On MT's popularity, and his reception when he was there to receive his Oxford degree. Cartoons of MT from London Daily Chronicle by David Wilson (p. 1053) and P. Richards (p. 1054), and photograph of MT after receiving his degree (p. 1055)" [44].

Outlook ran an anonymous article, "Mark Twain in England," p. 578-9. Tenney: "On MT's warm reception, here attributed to admiration for 'two qualities in Mark Twain which have at least made him congenial to Englishmen—his stalwart moral integrity and his self-restraint" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 191].

An unidentified person sent the following poem on a postcard, postmarked London:

A man of Mark, Mark you.
Named Mark, Mark that Two (Twain)
Has hit the Mark, Mark it!
Mark is here, with all his wit.

Welcome

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

RG

Boston Herald sent a telegram to Sam: “American newspapers gleefully printed your splendid wireless message / give boston herald for your newengland friends bulletins of your voyage” [MTP].

George Iles sent a postcard from Tuxedo, NY to Sam, picturing a long barn with open doors at either end and one open in the middle, the left door shows the tail of a cow, the right the head, the middle a man milking it. Iles wrote, “This recalls your St. Louis dog story” [MTP].

Dr. William J. Long wrote from Stamford, Conn to Lyon, enclosing clippings answering Roosevelt’s attack, “taken from his ‘Wilderness Hunter’” [MTP]. Note: Heading: “President Roosevelt as a Critic and Naturalist.”

July 21 Sunday – Sam and Ashcroft were en route to New York on the S.S. Minnetonka.

London Evening World sent a telegram to Sam: “How do you feel approaching the land of the free after your pleasant experience with royalty and the nobility please answer our expense” [MTP].

Sydney Layland wrote from the S.S. Minnetonka at sea to thank Sam for his book and program with signature [MTP].

New York Times sent a telegram (before July 21) to Sam: “Welcome back please telegraph by Marconi our expense all about your trip how it feels to be a learned doctor” [MTP].

Captain Prehn sent a telegram to Sam: “Capt Prehn of the Grosser Kurfurst wishes to send his kind regards and best wishes” [MTP].

Norman Woolcock wrote on S.S. Minnetonka notepaper to thank Sam for his “splendid present signed by yourself” [MTP].

The London World sent a telegram to Sam before and on July 21: “The World congratulates you on remarkable triumph abroad / public would be greatly interested wireless message from you perhapson funniest incident your voyage favour of reply our expense greatly appreciated” [MTP]. The second telegram: “Favor of reply to message respectfully urged/ The World”

July 22 Monday – On the S.S. Minnetonka en route to New York City, Sam wrote an aphorism for Robert M. Curtis: “Truth is the most valuable thing we have. Let us economise it. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / July 22/07.” [MTP].

The Minnetonka reached New York in the afternoon. The New York Times reported his arrival:

MARK TWAIN HOME IN GOOD HUMOR

Had Dinner with the King and Is Sure That the King Enjoyed It.

HE'S DR. CLEMENS, PLEASE

Though the Dignity of His Oxford Title Doesn't Seem to Weigh Heavily—72, but Doesn't Feel Guilty.

Mark Twain came home yesterday after his six weeks stay in England. The dignity of his Oxford degree of Doctor of Literature, for which he went to the English seat of learning, does not appear to weigh heavily on him, although, with a merry twinkle in his eye, he said he wished that his American friends would understand that from now on he is Dr. Clemens, with the accent very strongly on the "Doctor."

"Just how my old friends are going to get away from calling me 'Mark' is something they will have to work out for themselves," he said, "and when they see me in my new cap and gown they will be bound to fall."

Mark Twain was, as usual, the centre of an admiring group of women when the reporters greeted him aboard the Atlantic Transport Company steamship Minnetonka at Quarantine upon her arrival yesterday afternoon. He came over in Cabin 23, but said it had no significance, and was a poor joke.

"How do you like America?" the reporters all asked at once.

"I was afraid I would be asked that question," began Dr. Clemens, but before he got any further another was fired at him.

"Have you seen the Statue of Liberty?"

"I decline to commit myself, young man; you cannot trap me into any damaging admissions."

Getting down to his stay in England, he was asked about his dinner with King Edward.

"Did you enjoy the dinner very much?"

"The King did."

"What did you think of the King? When Tim Sullivan returned a short time ago he said 'Ed's all right; I like him. He is the goods.'"

"I am not competing with Mr. Sullivan."

Dr. Clemens was asked about the handsome Ascot gold cup which had disappeared shortly after his arrival in England, and which the English reporters had humorously connected with his arrival.

"Oh, yes; I have the cup on board, and I hope some of you reporters are slick enough to help me smuggle is through the Custom House. It would be too bad to give it up after getting so close to home with it.

"But I didn't get the Dublin jewels. With the character they gave me over on the other side I should certainly not have left the case. I would have taken both," he said.

Dr. Clemens said that it was all a mistake that the English could not understand a joke.

"I had not the slightest trouble in getting mine through their heads," he said.

"What was the best joke you told them?"

"That will cost you 30 cents a word, and I am having no bargain days now."

"Did they laugh?"

"Why, surely; but if you want to hear it you must be prepared to pay heavily for it. At this time of life one must get all one can for one's wits.

"I have been interviewed a great deal while away, but many of the interviews, when they appeared in print, were grossly exaggerated."

Asked about his appearance in the lobby of Brown's Hotel, in London, in his pajamas and bathrobe prior to walking across the street to the Bath Club, he said:

"When a man reaches my age he has certain privileges that younger men cannot have. I did that, and there was absolutely nothing improper in it."

"Are the Englishwomen as attractive as those in America?" was another question.

"That is too leading, and I refuse to commit myself," was the diplomatic reply.

Dr. Clemens said that he had enjoyed his trip abroad immensely, and that the people had treated him royally.

Shortly after the Minnetonka left the other side the ship was in collision with a bark. Several of the plates of the big ship were dented and bowsprit knocked off the sailing vessel. Dr. Clemens said that he was not awake at the time, but that he was soon aroused, grabbed his bath robe, and rushed to the deck to see what the trouble was. Some of the passengers say that he thought he had grabbed his bath robe, but that in reality he had put on his Oxford gown in the darkness.

Mark Twain spoke at the concert last Saturday night. He chose to talk about the improvement of the condition of the adult blind, and repeated the story told in "A Tramp Abroad" of his having been caught with a companion in Berlin in the dark for an hour or more and of his great horror at not being able to see for even so short a time. He said that he would devote much of the rest of his life to the subject of aiding the blind, and the passengers promised their aid in anything he undertakes.

Coming over he was always the centre of a group of passengers listening to his stories with great interest. He made a particular pet of little Dorothy Quick, daughter of Mrs. E. G. Quick of Brooklyn, and during the time he was on deck would not let her out of his sight. When he landed he was dressed in white flannels and wore a black derby hat.

As the reporters were leaving one of them asked Dr. Clemens if he objected to telling his age.

"Not in the least. I shall be 72 in November. I do not mind it. Every year that I gain furnishes a new privilege, and all I want to dodge is second childhood.

"At 2 o'clock in the morning I feel as old as any man. At that time you must know that life in every person is at its lowest. At that hour I feel as sinful, too, as possible. But the rest of the time I feel as though I were not over 25 years old. You know one gets back both youth and courage by 6 o'clock in the morning."

Dr. Clemens spent the night at his Fifth Avenue home, and will go to Tuxedo this morning to spend the Summer. He has leased a cottage there.

H.H. Rogers suffered a stroke. The papers would report a simple indisposition, blaming the heat. See MTHHR 631n2. Also IVL TS 107 for Sept. 17, which claims "We have known nothing whatever about it." For some reason the Rogers clan kept the news from Clemens.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This morning I went to town, running no chances of having the Minnetonka be a slow boat and she wasn't. She arrived at four today. It was exciting to have telephone messages from Mr. Duneka and Ashcroft's office waiting for me.

The King has arrived! And already has given me a mass of wonderful talk about his doings and his adventures. The three bad adventures were the Marie Corelli, Mrs. Chapin, and MacAlister

The Minnetonka got in six hours ahead of what was expected of her, for she is the commodore ship and makes good time when the weather is good, so AB was about 4 hours too late. I went down to the pier early and stood with Mr. Duneka and Mr. Munro on the end of the pier when the "great brute of a ship" as Duneka said, came creeping, creeping in. The King stood along at the end of the long line of passengers on the lower deck, with a little girl snuggling up against him and then he came down to waiting us, Clara put him in a cab & I took him home to 21—in the carriage I had waiting for him [MTP TS 85-86].

Dorothy Butes wrote from The Webster Hotel, NYC to thank Sam for the "beautiful post-cards." She was in NY to sail in the Celtic on Thursday a.m. "If you are in New York, I should love to come and see you, either to-morrow or Wednesday—May I?" [MTP].

A.G. Cardew wrote from India to discuss Sam's CS book [MTP].

Robert Grau wrote from NYC to Sam recounting how he'd paid Adelma Patti a quarter million dollars for her American farewell tour, and how he needed an "extraordinary attraction" for the upcoming season. Would Sam be interested in $100,000 or more? [MTP].

Howells & Stokes wrote from NYC to notify Sam that an extension of the Redding house contractor had been granted, since the site had twice been relocated [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon per Jervis Langdon II wrote from Elmira to advise Sam of payment on Buffalo City taxes for the Genesee Street property, Sam's share being $270.03 [MTP].

Julia Langdon Loomis wrote from Short Hills, N.J. to express joy that Sam was home with all his "honors and glories" [MTP].

Douglas Malloch for the Press Club of Chicago, wrote to ask Sam if he'd tell a "five minute story" at their Dec. 13 Story Teller's Night [MTP].

July 22, after – After his return to New York, Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam on the July 17 from Evert Jansen Wendell:

Mr. Rogers sick man & is using yacht.

no occasion for him to turn it over to me. & I don't want him to do it. As vice P. I. must go down there in considerable style—or not at all. Therefore I cannot go down there on an ordinary steamer. In the circumstances I want to ask him to relieve me from going.

That could be considered after Mr. Vanderbilt has invited Mr. Clemens. Mr. Clemens cannot ask any one to provide transportation for him & cannot be a party to it [MTP]. Note: see July 17 from Wendell; this relates to the September festivities in Jamestown, Va.

July 23 Tuesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Butes at the Hotel Webster.

Your letter has arrived to night. Tried to telephone you but you are out. To-day mailed letter to you in New Hampshire. I have engagement here tomorrow or would go and see you. Please telephone me here first thing in the morning. Call 113 Tuxedo. I am unspeakably sorry you are going without seeing you. If I had known you were in town I would have called last night [MTAq 46].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "This morning at 10:45 we started for Tuxedo" [MTP 86].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to ask Sam if he'd agree to an interview [MTP]. On or after July 23 Isabel V. Lyon wrote on Duneka's letter how to answer: "not a newspaper in N.Y. that hasn't approached him on this subject. In every case has said no. Wants Duneka to say that it is violating the contract & to say no always—for he'll be damned if he'll will [sic] be interviewed again" [MTP]. Note: enclosed in Duneka's letter is a letter from Paul West of the NY World, July 23 to Duneka, asking if Roy McCardell, a reporter, could call "sometime this week" to "have Mark Twain tell ... a little about his trip to Europe." This letter is catalogued as to Clemens, but is to Duneka.

American Surety wrote from NYC enclosing a surety on bonds printed questionnaire for Sam P. Davis. The enclosed left blank; stamped env. Not used [MTP]. Note: Sam didn't care much for Davis.

George Grantham Bain wrote from NYC to ask Sam if their photographer could make "a few intimate pictures" as they'd requested before he left for England. The photog had called at Sam's NYC home and left copies of some pictures he made the day before that were in today's World and Journal [MTP]. Note: IVL wrote on the letter: "Answd July 24"

William H. Charnley wrote from Chicago to Sam—a fan letter hoping for a reply [MTP]. Note: IVL wrote on the letter: "Answd July 30, 07"

Charles M. Fairbanks wrote from Brooklyn to Sam. Charles was son Mary Mason Fairbanks, and mused over how proud she would be of Sam's "conquest to England" [MTP].

G.W. Franks wrote from Newark, NJ, recalling steamboats on the Mississippi [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Answd. July 30, 07"

Winifred Holt for Association for the Blind wrote from NYC to Sam, suggesting he might raise funds for them by talking to a Tuxedo audience [MTP].

Francis B. Keene wrote from Geneva, Switzerland to Sam. Keene had been US Consul in Florence during the Clemens family's stay there.

My dear Mr Clemens: / Hail, Oxford Don, Beloved of the Muses Nine.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

If you have recovered from the feasts of food and fondness with which you were regaled, if you have digested the roast beef of Old England that comes from Chicago, listen to the prayer that comes to me from Mr Charles Dean, correspondent of the Associated Press...Milwaukee, Wisconsin...

The Milwaukee Press Club is hugging to its heart a hope that it may get you to consent to lecture under its auspices some time during the late autumn or early winter...An autograph letter from you would, even if it brought desolation by declination, find a place behind glass, as the tender memory of a blasted hope.

Many a month has slipped away since I used to see you often in the Consulate at Florence. I have never ceased to be sorry that the dear old city by the Arno is a place to which your memory can only go back as the scene of your greatest grief.

I hear from Gregory Smith now and then. He visited us last year, and did me the favor of loaning me his colored butler for nine months. Thomas often grinned over the memory of some of your sallies at Bel Riposo. ...

I still keep the hat that you inadvertently honored by wearing one day from the apartment of the Rev. and Mrs Riggs. But my head has been too large for it ever since. Oliver Wendell Holmes said that "a man's mind is often stretched by an idea, and never shrinks back to its former dimensions." ...

It has been a pleasure to read about how John Bull loaded you with honors and evidence of affection.

May you live long to enjoy a green old age and deserved honors ...[MTP].

E.W. Meddaugh wrote from Chicago to Sam.

Dear Sir: / Several years ago I sent you the money to buy a hymn book with, which I believe you turned over to the Society for the Purchasing of Questionable luxuries for our Literary Poor. But as far as I can see our Literary Poor are just as poor as they ever were (with the possible exception of yourself), and therefore I must ask what became of the money...You deserve to live a thousand years without paying rent, from the fact that you have made so many people happy [MTP].

C.A. Wells wrote from Quincy, Ill. to invite Sam to a luncheon in Hannibal on Aug. 12 [MTP].

July 24 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: The King is lonely and so we make calls in the afternoons, but mostly people are out. We did see Mrs. Davies and Mrs. Ogden who gave us iced coffee and the King sat on their beautiful terrace and told about the Punch Dinner and the King's Garden Party, and those 2 ladies were very sweet and worshipful, Mrs. Davies was a little flustered when she glanced up at her window to see her undershirt hung on some kind of a wire and swinging cheerfully at us [MTP 86].

Charles Ferguson for The Municipal University wrote from Kansas City to Sam, asking him to "examine the Newsbook mailed to you today & tell us wither our kind of a University is your kind"—would he accept election as a Rector or would he prefer to be just one of the fellows? [MTP]. Note: IVL wrote on the letter: "Thank him very much / recognize that the compliment of offering the place to me is a high one & tell him that I stand in dread of being connected with any more causes because I have on my hands all that I can possibly do—and I don't like to be merely a name & an ornament & do a cause no more service than that"

Samuel E. Moffett wrote from Mt. Vernon, NY to Sam:

I have had hard luck making connection with you. I tried to see you off when you sailed, but went to the wrong dock....I expected to meet you when you came back, but thought the Minnetonka was a nine-day boat and was astonished when she sneaked in in eight. Then I went to see you the next day and found you had gone to Tuxedo for the season. / We have all enjoyed the accounts of your royal progress. With love... [MTP].

July 25 Thursday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote a note on a small card to Dorothy Butes, who was sailing: "Miss Dorothy BUTES / Steamer CELTIC. / Goodbye you dear child, and a happy voyage." [MTP].

Note: Lyon wrote on the verso, “The King was heart sick to have Dorothy sail away for England.” In her journal entry below, Lyon referred to the above message to Butes as a “wireless.” Likely this card survives but the telegram does not.

Upon reaching Tuxedo Park, Sam’s bronchitis hit him hard, and by the next night he had summoned Dr. Edward C. Rushmore of Tuxedo Park [July 29 to Rogers].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King has a little of the ship’s bronchitis hanging on and he has been so heart sick and disappointed because Dorothy Butes got away this morning on the Cedric, but he sent her a wireless message.

We called at the Kane’s and found Miss Dorothy Kane at home, and Miss Clinton. Out on the porch today the King asked if I had heard anything from Mrs. Johnson [Charlotte Teller]. No, I hadn’t, but I believed she was the cause of the report about the King’s marriage and the King said, he “knew it the instant the report reached him” and I think we shall hear more yet from that devil [MTP 86-87].

Isabel Lyon also wrote for Sam to Charles A. Hazlett.

Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him to say that he is very sorry that he will be unable to act as one of the directors of the Thomas Bailey Aldrich Memorial, for the reason that he does not approve of public memorials that have to be paid for by subscription. This does not in any way indicate that Mr. Clemens’s warm friendship & love for Mr. Aldrich has in any way abated; but that for many years he has declined to be sponsor for such memorials, & has repeatedly expressed himself as being most unwilling to have any such distinction paid to himself either living or dead [MTP].

G. Bonham Bird wrote from Biltmore, N.C. to Sam: “As a little boy in Heidelberg (Summer of ’77) I used to meet you on the Anlage and you would condescend to chat to this small Englander.” Would Sam read his short story, “The Test” which “shows up the discomforts of Christian Science”? [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd. July 31 ‘07”

John Larkin wrote from NYC to Sam: “I have Miss Lyon’s letter of the 24th enclosing letter to you from a Miss E. Van Deusen regarding phonographic record made at the Actors Fund Fair. I have written to Miss Van Deusen to the effect as asked by Miss Lyon” [MTP].

Robert P. Porter wrote from Oxford, England to Sam, cherishing the memories of their time together in Oxford [MTP].

In Sam’s A.D. he recalled meeting George Bernard Shaw, “that brilliant Irishman...I lunched at Mr. Shaw’s house a week or two afterward, and expanded the acquaintanceship” [Gribben 638]. See Aug. 25.

July 26 Friday – Jean Clemens’ 27th birthday. Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

Dr. Edward C. Rushmore attended to Sam; his bronchitis had worsened the day before upon reaching Tuxedo Park.

In Tuxedo Park, N.Y., Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Charles M. Fairbanks and Pauline M. Fairbanks in Brooklyn. Sam was home now and was “overwhelmed with mail,” and asked Isabel to write thanks for their message of welcome home [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “We take Miss Herrick to drive now. The King likes the ‘protection’ of it” [MTP 87].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam: “I have just returned from a fishing trip that I made with Mr. Archbold.... I was very sorry not to be able to get back in time to meet you at the steamer, but I am very anxious to see you. Could you put me up for a night or so if I can go up, say about Tuesday of next week? [MTP] Note: On or just after this date, Sam replied he'd be "very glad to see" him and expected him Tuesday. John Dustin Archbold.

Oone H. Ball wrote from Oxford to Sam: "I am venturing to send to you, by this post, a little book called 'Barbara Goes to Oxford.' I had the great pleasure of meeting you when you came to our party in St. John's Gardens after the Encoenia" [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote details to Isabel Lyon regarding dramatization of Twain's works [MTP].

July 27 Saturday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Clara at the Hotel Victoria, Boston.

Clara dear, Clara very dear, I am in bed with a bronchitis caught in mid-ocean, but am not going to stay in bed after to-day. Nein, I will get up & sail for Bermuda next Thursday, & take Colonel Harvey along for courier, if I can't shake off the cough in the meantime.

A jelmul in London gave me a very valuable trinket—a fine & genuine old Wedgewood locket—and I've brought it home for you. You can have it at any time. The jelmul is related to either the Wedgewoods or the Darwins, & that is how he came to possess it. It is valuable because it is rare.

I am very very glad you are profoundly absorbed in your art & your labors, & care for no other pleasures, no other dissipations. It is as I used to be with the pen, long ago, & it is life, LIFE, LIFE!—there is no life comparable to it for a moment. Genius lives in a world of its own, in palaces of enchantment, & has dominion over the slaves of the ring & the lamp, who do not tarry nor argue, when summoned, but came with fine & thunder and earthquake, & merely say, "I hear & obey!" & take the orders & pile more palaces, terrace upon terrace, tower upon tower, pinnacle upon pinnacle, into the sky, & tint them, & gild them, & mail them with jewels, & set them ablaze in the flooding sunlight; & whatever else is wanted, there those splendid hellious are, to fetch it. Everybody lives, but only Genius lives richly, sumptuously, imperially.

The Cleveland's can't go, so Mrs. Cleveland writes; but this was to be expected after such a summer as he has been having. But we can get Choate; he said he would come to the rescue if Mr. Cleveland failed us. So I am comfortable.

With best regards to Mr. Wark, & many & many kisses for you— / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J., about this day:

Dorothy, dear, will you come & make me a visit? Do you think your mother could spare you a week? Miss Lyon is 43 years old & quite able to take care of you. She would take the best of care of you, for she has been a governess, & knows all about it. I would send her to Plainville (or Plainfield) to fetch you; she would take you back at the end of your visit. Will you come? If you can't come for a whole week will you come for half a week? But I hope you can make it a whole one.

It is beautiful here—lakes, woods, hills, & everything! Yes, quite beautiful & satisfactory, but I miss you, all the same.

I hope you will remember me most kindly to your mother, & to your grandfather & grandmother; & that you will allow me to keep my place as / your ancient & / affectionate friend / SL Clemens [MTAq 45].

Sydney Brooks' article, "England's Ovation to Mark Twain," ran in Harper's Weekly, p. 1086-9. Tenney: "On MT's cordial reception when he received an honorary degree from Oxford, with an account of his speech at a Pilgrims' Club banquet. Includes sketch of MT chatting with King Edward at Windsor, and photograph of MT in the procession at Oxford just after the degree was awarded" [44].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Tino [ABP]. The King came stealing quietly up to my study after I was about to get into bed, to get a paper knife to cut the leaves of "The Golden Bowl" with. A woman, Miss Olney [sic Olney], came today asking to see Mr. Clemens, not for an interview, only to shake hands with him. She introduced herself to me with a card of Dan Frohman's, and with Chancey Oling's name written on it and begged for the privilege of seeing him. I took the card up to Mr. Clemens after telling her that he was not seeing strangers and probably would not see her. He looked at the card reluctantly said, “oh, bring her up, if she’s a friend of Dan Frohmans.” She was not without attraction and succeeded in interesting him when she said she was making a collection of the imprints of the hands of famous men and her collection would not be complete without his, and produced her prepared sheets of paper, chatting along and completely disarming him, and he talked a little while she made the imprints of his right hand. Mr. Clemens graciously allowed me to make 2 imprints of his hand [MTP 87].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

E. Grace Clark wrote from Lynchburg, Va. to ask if he would “stop over” in her city and “give a lecture” for the sick fund of the Graduate Nurses Assoc. since she learned from the newspapers that he would attend the Jamestown Exposition on Sept. 23 [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd. Sept. 4, 1907”

Katherine Leckie for The Delineator wrote from NYC to solicit a “Christmas sentiment” for their December number [MTP].

Chauncey Olney wrote from NYC to ask Sam to sign his picture from Science Magazine, enclosed, since she’d lost the earlier one [MTP].

Robert H. Sexton for the Robert Fulton Monument wrote having learned of Sam’s intention to attend the Robert Fulton Day celebration on H.H. Rogers’ yacht. He informed of Cornelius Vanderbilt’s intention to be there in his yacht, The North Star and a possible yacht race [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: noted that she was surprised to observe Sam “stealing quietly up to my study after I was about to get into bed, to get a paper knife to cut the leaves of ‘The Golden Bowl’ with” [Gribben 350]. Note: The Golden Bowl by Henry James (1905).

July 28 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tino [ABP]. King is bed with bronchitis and cancelling a luncheon with Mrs. Wolfe and tea with Mrs. Kane. AB and I worked over old letters, until we were limp. Long after midnight there was a thundering rumble of the King’s voice and a slam of a door and some good swears and there hadn’t been a thing in the King’s room. “No whiskey, no towels, no soap, no water.” and it was fine to hear him swear around and wake up everybody in the house. Oh, he’s a darling King. He had gone into AB’s room to get those things finally and tell him how for 2 hours he had made up his mind that he wouldn’t lose his temper. No, he wouldn’t—but happily he did, for he says he can resist everything but temptation[MTP 88].

The New York Times, p.7, “Sale of Cutter Curios – Mark Twain Expected to Attend” announced the sale of 3,039 articles from Bloodgood H. Cutter’s Little Neck, Long Island estate, on July 31 and Aug. 1. Cutter was Sam’s proclaimed “Poet Lariat” on the Quaker City excursion. Whether bronchitis or disinterest stayed Mark from attending the sale, a follow-up article by the Times on Aug. 1, p. 7, reported:

Artists bought the many costumes that the poet had collected in his travels, and one man, presumed to be an emissary of Mark Twain, bought the cocked hat and brown coat that Cutter wore when he was presented to the Czar during the famous trip of the Innocents Abroad. The cocked hat was knocked down for 25 cents and the coat for 75 cents.

Witter Bynner wrote from Windsor, Vt. to congratulate Sam on his degree, and to enclose a book of poetry [MTP].

July 29 Monday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to George Parsons, Mayor of Cairo, Illinois.

I thank you heartily for the high compliment of the invitation, & I would accept it at once if I could make the trip in a ship, but as that is not possible I am obliged to decline it. To me a land journey is the perfection of discomfort, & I am not expecting to try another one until I go in a hearse. A hearse with rubber tires, too, or I cancel the excursion. I hope you will have a good time: indeed I am able to predict that you will [MTP].

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Dear Uncle Henry— / I am in bed again and out of temper. Bronchitis. It is from the slightest of slight colds, caught at sea on the 17th & now a dozen days old. It almost disappeared when I reached Tuxedo, but it hit me hard Thursday evening, & by Friday evening I was in Dr. Rushmore's hands. He has modified it—the first time a doctor has performed that miracle.

Be it prudent or imprudent, I mean to get up tomorrow: There's company coming Wednesday, & Friday, & next Tuesday, & I wish to resume life.

Miss Lyon has been to town to-day & brings news from No. 26 [Rogers' address] that confirms Mrs. Rogers's telegram & discredits the exaggerations of the newspapers regarding your attack. Good. I was pretty uneasy at first.

Will you please tell Mary & Harry the Clevelands can't go, on account of Mr. Cleveland's half-wrecked health. And so the Choates will probably be our guests. Choate promised to fill the breach if Mr. Cleveland should fail us.

The enclosed note from the Lady Mayoress will prove to you—which my unassisted word could not do—that I obeyed your commands & went to Liverpool. I did most profoundly dread the journey & the banquet & the reception, but it came out all right, & I was very glad I went. Mr. Lancaster sat opposite me at table & was very pleasant & friendly, & I was glad of a chance to foregather with him.

Monday.

Harvey is coming this evening. He & I were going to sail to Bermuda tomorrow for a couple of weeks, but it turns out that he can't. He thinks Deal Beach will set me up, & so I am to go there, 7 or 8 days from now & stay a week or ten days.

With love to all the lovely tribe [MTHHR 630-1]. Note: Margaret C. Japp (Mrs. John Japp) was the Lord Mayoress of Liverpool who gave Sam a letter of thanks for speaking there.

Isabel Lyon's journal: I went early to town with AB and we talked hard all the way down.

I delivered to Ashcroft shares of U.S. Steel Stock to be sold.

I carried ms. (auto.) from Miss French to the Lincoln Safety Deposit Vaults.

I went to Boyagians to see my rugs & attended to the sealing up of the house, beside doing many other things and AB lunched with me at the Lafayette and we drove around together doing errands and at the station we met Long—Suchi Long [MTP 88]. Note: Long is not further identified.

Isabella Stotts Bohon wrote from Roseville, Ill. to ask for a personal letter from Sam [MTP]. Note: On or after July 29 Lyon replied for and also quoted Sam.

Mr. Clemens has been so very busy since his return from England that he has been unable to answer any letters, therefore he asks me to write for him & say that he is sorry he cannot grant your request. "but that by a very strict contract with my publishers I am not permitted to write that kind of note, because it could by accident get into print & cost $500⁰⁰ fine."

Then Mr. Clemens dictated further: "I escorted you to church once in Keokuk. I remember it very well. It was a trifle over fifty years ago, & you were seventeen. I believe it was the first time I ever went to church; it was either the first time or the last time, I don't know which. You were very good & lovable in those days, & I think you have remained so ever since." I

Mr. Clemens does not often have old books of his in the house [MTP].

H.A. Dann wrote from Buffalo, NY to ask Sam about a story of a dog—where could he get it? [MTP].

Note: IVL: "Answd. July 31, '07"

Johannes Hoops, Professor of English Lit. wrote from Heidelberg to ask Sam for a visit to his school, since Clemens (he thought) was still in Europe [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Answd Aug. 19, '07"

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Frederick Ohrenschall for The Children's Fresh Air Society wrote from Baltimore to ask Sam to give a lecture for their cause [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Answd Aug. 26, '07"

July 30 Tuesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y., Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam to Bowring & Co., N.Y.C., asking for $80 for the unused portion of the steamship Rosalind tickets by Clara Clemens and Isabel Lyon on the recently aborted trip to St. John [MTP]. Note: See July 1 entry.

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Albert Bruce-Joy, photographer/sculptor in England. Ashcroft had rec'd a July 12 letter from Bruce-Joy and photograph enclosed (likely "First Flight" photo of Bruce-Joy's 1879 sculpture). The letter had been sent on the wrong ship, the S.S. St. Paul. Ashcroft added he had seen the Histed photographs [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Dodd, Lyon, & Tinsley c/o Cunnard SS Co. in Liverpool, England. The company's wireless had been rec'd via the Lucana; Sam sent his thanks for the message [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam what seems a reply to John Y. MacAlister's July 11.

Miss Lyon had already, on our arrival heard from Washington about "The Death Wafer" and the Red Wafer, and had instructed Miss Marbury to give the matter her attention. As I understand it, Miss Marbury is in full charge of this part of Mr. Clemens' affairs, and her address is the Empire Theatre Building, Broadway, New York. I hope she will give the matter prompt and thorough attention [MTP]. Note: Ashcroft also mentioned the collision on the return voyage and thanked Mac for his assistance during their stay in London. A "Red Wafer" reference appears in TS4, ch. 5.

Ashcroft also replied for Sam to Captain Prehn, c/o North German Loyd Co., N.Y.C. Prehn's wireless message had been rec'd but Sam was unable to reply since the Minnetonka was out of range; Sam now sent his thanks [MTP].

Ashcroft also wrote for Sam to Frederick Rathbone. Ashcroft had Rathbone's July 14 letter and would forward it to Clemens. He thanked Rathbone for offering to "attend to any London matters," and would call upon him if needed [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Col. Harvey arrived tonight. The King & I went down to the train to meet him. We had previously taken Miss Herrick out for a very tiny drive—a thin drive, you might say, for the talk was that kind. It wasn't even that though—and the King smoked serenely on not talking at all—the placidest personality in the world, looking out into the beautiful woods, & at the splendid rocks. The King doesn't permit himself to be exhausted by Miss Herrick. I am the exhaust pipe for her talk to go through. Evidently the N.A. Review is on very shaky legs, for the Colonel asked Mr. Clemens to wait for the autobiographical monies that are due him; to wait until the first of the year, for funds are low & he must borrow if he pays. It annoyed the King, for it is, as he says, "doing business through sentimental channels" & he doesn't like it at all. And it isn't fair to the King. Col. Harvey is a strong man & the lower part of his face is very much like Lincoln's, but his short nose prevents him from being a great man. I think he never will be that. But he is fearless in his utterances about Roosevelt, so fearless that the speech he made last spring in the South, has hurt the Harper publications which the Colonel is directly interested in, the King thinks [MTP 88-89].

W.J. Phelps of the Phelps Co., electrical supplies, wrote to Sam, suggesting after long thought that the works of Mark Twain should be more readily available to common people who could not always get to a library; he thought they should be available at the newsstands, much like "Mr. Hearst's newspapers." He argued for a cheap edition of TS [MTP]. Note: See Aug. 5 for Sam's reply.

Dorothy Butes wrote on board the S.S. Celtic to Sam: “It was perfectly lovely of you to send me a wireless message when we were right out at sea. I never had one sent me before...” She’d finished reading CY and thought Sandy was “a brick.” “I laughed till I cried over her. You knocked the stuffings pretty well out of Merlin, didn’t you?” She wanted him to visit England in the spring instead of Bermuda [MTP]. Clemens wrote on env. “Answered Aug. 17 Dorothy Butes”

Frank Stobie wrote from Perth, W. Australia to Sam, enclosing an article from the West Australian (not in file) that expressed the good feelings all Australians had for Twain [MTP].

July 31 Wednesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam sent a telegram to Miss Dorothy Quick at the Turell Inn, Plainfield, N.J.: “Letter for you at your Inn I sent it several days ago. / S.L. Clemens” [MTP].

Dorothy Quick wrote from the Truell Inn, Plainfield, N.J. to Sam.

On my return from Long Island I found your telegram and letter waiting for me. I was so glad to get them and to know you missed me too for I have missed you so much, and will be so glad to see you again so soon. I have never been away from Mother at all but I have promised her to be very brave and not to get home sick if she would let me go to you so she has promised and will write you by this mail thanking you so much for wanting me with you. I am with lots of love and kisses, / Your little friend / Dorothy [MTAq 46].
Note: the letter from Sam was ca. July 27.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mr. & Mrs. Ogden & Mrs. Wolfe & Mr. & Mrs. Kane dined here with Col. Harvey & as tonight the King sat under the red lamp & read Wapping Alice to us. It’s intoxicating to write that. It’s like a line of strong moving poetry and it is strong & moving poetry for those who can see the King under the red light, & hear him read Wapping Alice, or anything under God’s heaven [MTP 88].

Emma Gertrude Quick wrote from Plainfield, NJ to Sam about her daughter Dorothy Quick staying with Sam and Miss Lyon. Dorothy had never been away from her mother, was a baby really, but if she got homesick or was too much trouble to let her know; A second letter from Dorothy, per her mother, that she had never been away from home but promised to “be very brave and not to get homesick” [MTP].

Clara J. Gordon wrote from “Paul Smith’s” in the Adirondacks to Isabel Lyon. Gordon had been promised a signed photograph when she saw Clara Clemens in concert at Norfolk, Conn. and asked if she might now receive one [MTP]. Note: catalogued as to Clemens but is to Lyon, who wrote on the top “Answd. July 31, 1907”

John Leary wrote (before July 31) from NYC to welcome Sam home and to praise IA [MTP].

Late July and August – Sam’s A.D. sessions continued weekdays, for two or more hours each day. During this time, after his return from England, his dictations dealt almost exclusively with his time in England and Oxford [MTE 320-46].

August – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote his aphorism about honors deserved to E.M. Bowney [MTP: Philip C. Duschnes catalogs, No. 183, Item 98].

On a Wednesday of this month in Tuxedo Park, N.Y., Sam wrote to daughter Clara. “Oh, Clara dear, I am so sorry your surgery isn’t over, & so glad its is imminently next-door to it. I hope you will soon be complete & perfect. We are paying fine tribute when we spare Maggie to you, but we do it with love & without a pang. / With hugs & kisses & plenty of them / Father” [MTP].

Sam also signed a copy of The Love Letters of Dorothy Osborne to Sir William Temple by Lady Dorothy Temple (Osborne) (1626-1694): “SL. Clemens / Tuxedo Park, / Aug. ‘07” [Gribben 691].

Dr. & Mrs. Gerrit S. Clemens of Joplin, Mo. visited Sam in Tuxedo Park. Mrs. Clemens mentioned the “pleasant visit” she and the doctor had at Tuxedo Park in August 1907 in her letter of Feb. 25, 1908 [MTP].

Samuel E. Moffett’s article, “Mark Twain, Doctor of Letters,” ran in Review of Reviews (NY), p. 167-8. Tenney: “General praise of MT on the occasion of his receiving an honoray degree from Oxford; no new information. Includes photograph of MT” [44].

Charles Whibley’s article, “Musings without Method: The Hilarity of London, etc.” ran in Blackwood’s Edinburgh Magazine, p. 279-86. Tenney: “A generally unsympathetic response to the adulation MT was receiving on his last visit to England; praises the beauty of LOM, but condemns CY as ‘such a masterpiece of vulgarity as the world has never seen. His book gives you the same sort of impression which you might receive from a beautiful picture over which a poisonous slug had crawled’” [45].

A.F. Bradley’s article, “Doctor Clemens,” ran in Current Literature, facing p.119: Tenney: “A photograph of MT, ‘made just before he sailed to England’ to receive an honorary degree from Oxford” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide First Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1977 p. 334].

Current Literature ran an anonymous article, “Our Foremost Living American Writer,” p. 163-5. Tenney: “A summary, with extensive quotation, of an appreciation by William Lyon Phelps; photograph: ‘Mark Twain in his Doctor’s Robes. A glimpse of the veteran humorist as he appeared in the streets of Oxford after receiving his degree’” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 191].

August 1 Thursday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam replied to the July 15 of Joy Agnew, daughter of Phillip L. Agnew, editor in chief of Punch.

Unto you greeting & salutation & worship, you dear sweet little right-named Joy! I can see you now almost as vividly as I saw you that night when you sat flashing & beaming upon those sombre swallow-tails.

“Fair as a star when only one
Is shining in the sky.”

Oh, you were indeed the only one—there wasn’t even the remotest chance of competition with you, dear! Ah, you are a decoration, you little witch!

The idea of your house going to the wanton expense of a flower garden!—aren’t you enough? And what do you want to go & discourage the other flowers for? Is that the right spirit? is it considerate? is it kind? How do you suppose they feel when you come around—looking the way you look? And you so pink & sweet & dainty & super-natural? Why, it makes them feel embarrassed & artificial, of course; & in my opinion it is just as pathetic as it can be. Now then, you want to reform, dear, & do right.

Well certainly you are well off, Joy:

“3 bantams;
3 goldfish;
3 doves;
6 canaryes;
2 dogs;
1 cat.”

All you need, now, to be permanently beyond the reach of want, is one more dog—just one more good, gentle, high-principled, affectionate, loyal dog who wouldn’t want any nobler service than the golden privilege of lying at your door, nights, & biting everything that come along—and I am that very one, & ready to come at the dropping of a hat.

Do you think you could convey my love & thanks to your “daddy” & Owen Seaman & those other oppressed & down-trodden subjects of yours, you darling small tyrant?

On my knees! These—with the kiss of fealty from your other subject— / Mark Twain

P. S. Won't you please be good & send me the lovely speech you made to me? [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Mrs. Emma Gertrude Quick in Plainfield, N.J. making arrangements to have Dorothy Quick visit from Monday Aug. 5 to Friday Aug. 9, when Sam had to leave to spend a week with Col. Harvey [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Clemens dined with Mr. & Mrs. Tams. The Poors were there, & Mr. Clemens hated Mr. Poor. Such a tiresome idiotic purseproud creature. But Mrs. Tams improves on acquaintance. Colonel Harvey went this morning. Yesterday he had a long talk about syndicating the Autobiography, for through the medium of the N.A. Review it has reached comparatively few people, and the world wants it especially as it is not to appear at all in book form. No one seems to read the little note at the head [of] each review instalment, which says that the present intention is not to issue the Auto in book form. Many people that I have been talking to about it, & who have not read it from the beginning are placidly waiting for it to be issued in a volume [MTP 89].

Thomas N. Miranda wrote from Norfolk, Va. to Sam. “I trust you will pardon my worrying you again over that curious accident ‘kid’ that came to light first under your pillow. You will remember that I wrote you about it last June, and received a very kind letter in return.” (This relates to the “optical illusion” of Sam’s photo with the imagined little girl leaning to his ear.) She was glad he was back in America [MTP]. Note: IVL wrote: “Answd Sept. 18, ‘07”

William M. Stewart wrote from Rhyolite, Nev. to invite Sam to be the guest of the ladies of Goldfield for the anniversary of Nevada’s entry into the Union on Oct. 31 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answd. Aug 9, ‘07”

Annie E. Wilkins wrote from Vooreesville, NY after seeing Sam’s picture with his “little ocean-mate” in the Brooklyn Eagle. She knew the girl (Dorothy Quick) when just a tot and related a humorous story of her on her grandfather’s knee [MTP].

August 2 Friday – Chatto & Windus wrote to Sam enclosing a check for £160:7:2 in royalties [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam after hearing from Harvey that Sam would give them a story for the Christmas Magazine [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Sent him Wapping Alice”

James E. Smith for The Business Men’s League of St. Louis wrote to invite Sam to join President Roosevelt, the mayor and Governor Francis on “a most enjoyable bit of travel down the Mississippi River” on Oct. 2 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answd. Aug 9, ‘07”; David Rowland Francis (1950-1907), Governor Missouri (1889-1893).

Chapters from “My Autobiography—XXI” ran in the N.A.R. p.689-98.

August 3 Saturday – John and Clara (nee Spaulding) Stanchfield visited Sam in Tuxedo Park, and stayed over through Sunday [New York Times, Aug. 4, p.7, “Tuxedo Park News”].

In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Joseph Hodges Chaote, ambassador to Great Britain, about speaking at the Sept. 23 Jamestown celebration of Robert Fulton inventing the steam boat.

Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, President of the Robert Fulton Monument Fund, has by this tiem invited you to be the Orator & guest of the Fair & Fund on Robert Fulton Day (Sept. 23), & we of the Fund are hoping you will be through at the Hague & will be able to accept.

In which case I, the Vice President, beg that you & Mrs. Choate will be my guests in the matter of transportation to the Fair & back. Mr. H. H. Rogers has placed the swift Kanawha under my orders, & also his son Harry, who will act as my Executive Officer & super-intend the Captain of the ship. And—incidentally—pay the bills.

Harry's charming young wife will be the only guest beside yourselves. There will be rooms for you & Mrs. Choate, & a room for Mrs. Choate's maid.

Commodore Vanderbilt will command the yacht-squadron escort. The King's Cup race & the President's Cup race will take place on the first & second days; there'll be a ball for you at that Old Point Comfort Hotel, & a banquet for you at the same place—by General Grant. There's going to be inebriousness, & general dissipation, & a Halifax of a time. I am hoping that this prospect will excite you & Mrs. Choate & make it easy for you to accept my invitation.

We shall sail about noon, Sept. 22 & arrive off the Fair at 8 next morning, parading in full force & properly beflagged, down between the battleships.

And we'll re-sail for New York whenever you say—the very next day, if such shall be your pleasure.

Unto the two of you, homage, salutation, & the piece of God! / SL. Clemens [MTP: eBay June 7, 1999; also Liveauctioneers.com Feb. 12, 2006 Lot 864]. Note: Major General Frederick D. Grant, son of Ulysses S. Grant.

Sam also wrote an aphorism to Lady Campbell Clarke: "To / Lady Campbell Clarke / greeting & salutation— / and these, to wit: / Let us save the tomorrows for work. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / New York, Aug. 3/07." [MTP: Sotheby's, London catalogs, Dec. 18, 1995, Item 171].

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Dear Francesca: if you sail Sept. 14 in the Minnewhatyoumaycallem you are due to reach New York on the 23^d, which is the day after I sail for the Jamestown Fair. I may have to be absent 4 or 5 days—I can't tell yet.

When you arrive will you telephone or telegraph your address

To R. W. Ashcroft,

The Kay-lo Co, 11 Broadway and to

S. L. Clemens, Tuxedo Park

—so that Ashcroft or Miss Lyon can let me know at Old Point Comfort, Va.

This because we have shut up 21-Fifth ave till November, put it on the General Burglar Alarm, over the telephone wires, & brought the servants here. So there will be no one there to answer a message, not even a care-taker.

I don't know how to reach you, but I will try by way of Atlanta & take the chances.

I hope you & your mother are well. / Affectionately ... [MTP].

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam with details of progress on the Redding house [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Lyon about "The Death Disk" drama [MTP].

Frances Nunnally wrote from Brown's Hotel, London to Sam.

By now I suppose you have become entirely rested from all the festivities you had over here, and I do not doubt but that you were very glad to get home, where you could find rest from luncheons, dinners, and such things. I hope you had a pleasant and smooth voyage over, and if the weather on sea was anything like it was over here the week you sailed, I am sure you did. I hear that the "Minnetonka" had a collision with a sailing vessel, but I was very glad to know that nothing serious came of it. I think if nobody was hurt, I should rather like the excitement of having such an accident.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

....

Hoping that you have not forgotten your engagement at St. Timothy's next fall, I am / with love / Francesca [MTP].

Alfred F. Symons wrote from Port Elizabeth, S. Africa to Sam:

Dear Mr. Clemens, / I muchly wish to add my congratulations to the man I suppose you have already received upon receiving the honorary degree at Oxford. I am a great admirer of your writings & have about 20 volumes by you on my shelf...As a great admirer of Republicanism I like "A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur" best, though it is hard to choose between them....at a meeting of a society of Mutual Improvement we have here I am to give a paper or address on "Mark Twain" & I only hope I may be able to do justice to the admiration of yourself...I have just a recollection of seeing you walk on the beach at East London when I was a boy of 10 during your visit to S. Africa....[MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "This is a letter which after I answered it (in the usual form for Mr. Clemens) I cherished, for the writer interested me more than he did Mr. Clemens. But it was the letter which inspired his remarks about the appreciation of the Englishman of today, against the thin skinned Englishman [illegible word] skin was pricked uncomfortably at the time of the publication of the Yankee / Aug. 1907"

August 4 Sunday – John and Clara (nee Spaulding) Stanchfield ended their two-day visit with Sam in Tuxedo Park, N.Y. [New York Times, Aug. 4, p.7, "Tuxedo Park News"].

Robert P. Elmer wrote from Wayne, Pa. to Sam, asking if the "Moult" in Chapter IV of IA was his grandfather Moulton, "Moult" being his nickname [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd. Aug 14, '07" and "Moult was a young fellow from Mo. quiet & rather diffident; he had not been away from home before. I have never heard of him since."

August 5 Monday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote the aphorism about improving bad liquor to Mr. Martin [MTP]. See index for other aphorisms or maxims.

Sam also replied to the July 30 from W.J. Phelps, by writing instructions to Lyon on the bottom and right margin of Phelps' letter.

a conversation with nearly any publisher would prob convince him that no person who is not a pub can teach a pub anything valuable about his trade or can furnish him an idea about it which is new & has not been prayerfully examined previously. It would take me too long to write out an explanation of why there is not a cheap Tom Sawyer, but if he will consult a publisher the publisher will be able to furnish the explanation by word of mouth at small cost in the matter of time [MTP]. Note: above Sam's writing are three lines of shorthand symbols.

Sam also gave an aphorism to Miss Dorothy Quick, who had arrived for a five-day visit with Sam: "Consider the proportion of things: it is better to be a young june-bug than an old bird of paradise. / Affectionately Yours...." [MTP].

Emily Ford for the Girls' Friendly Society Vacation House, Huntington, L.I. wrote a respectful begging letter to Sam [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam, acknowledging receipt of Sam's share of taxes on the Buffalo property; he offered congratulations on his English honors [MTP]. Note: Charley's letters were usually brief.

Carlo Paladini, journalist, wrote from Italy to send his article translating Sam's London speech, otherwise unspecified. He asked to hear from Sam and for an American flag, for which he'd reciprocate [MTP].

F. Rossi wrote from San Jose, Calif. to send Sam "a small photo of a document bearing the name of the Signorina America Vespucci, which you may recognize as an ancestor of Americus" Vespucci [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd. Aug 22, '07"; copy of the small photo is barely legible and in the file, dated 1266.

August 6 Tuesday – Dorothy Quick was visiting Sam in Tuxedo Park, N.Y. being brave not to be homesick.

Pardon B. Gifford wrote from New Bedford, Mass. to ask Sam "to express some little sentiment about our old city to assist us in booming old home week" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd. Aug 9, '07"

Howells & Stokes wrote to ask Sam if they should design a simple mantel for the music room of the Redding house, as the carved Scotch mantel might be a problem should Sam want to dispose of the house later [MTP].

Amy L. Muick wrote from Bremen, Germany to ask Sam to write her a line [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd. Aug 20, '07"

August 7 Wednesday – Dorothy Quick was visiting Sam in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Katherine Gregory wrote to Miss Lyon; this is miscatalogued as to Clemens [MTP].

Adelaide M. Lee (Mrs. Bruce B. Lee) wrote from Sacramento remembering Sam's lectures in Sacramento and also her late husband's lectures. She wished he would come to California for the National Irrigation Congress on Sept. 2-7 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: "Answd. Aug 20, '07"

Guillot de Saix wrote to Sam. (Only the envelope survives; postmarked from the Ivory Coast, Africa) [MTP]. Note: Leon Guillot de Saix (1885-1964), French playwright and translator would have been 22 years of age.

Baron Ludwig Wattman, German author wrote on Belvedere House, NYC paper to ask, "When may I have the honor of seeing you? Please advise day, times and place" [MTP]. Note: Ludwig Wattman Maëlcamp Beaulieu.

Elizabeth Westwood wrote to Miss Lyon; miscatalogued as to Clemens [MTP].

The ledger books of Chatto & Windus show that 5,000 final copies of More Tramps Abroad (FE) were printed (totaling 30,000 to date). The official English publication date was Nov. 25, 1897 [Welland 238]. See 1897: Aug. 12, Nov. 10, Nov. 25, also: Mar. 8, 1898, and Oct. 11, 1900 for other print run amounts.

August 8 Thursday – Dorothy Quick was visiting Sam in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam, advising that arresting work at the Redding house at this time would "make you liable for between ten and fifteen thousand dollars," and enclosed a letter from Mr. Carter of Carter & Haskell attys. [MTP].

Eleanor V. Hutton wrote from Glouster, Mass. that she was sending a photo she'd rec'd from London "which would be much more valuable if you would write your name and mine on it." She wished she could have seen the Oxford doings [MTP].

James A. Renwick wrote to Miss Lyons; miscatalogued as to Clemens [MTP].

August 9 Friday – In the evening at Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Miss Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J. some five hours after she'd departed from her Aug. 5 to 9 visit.

Dorothy dear, one of these days I am going to write you a letter the first time I write my other children, but not now, now I haven't time, because I haven't anything to do, & I can't write letters except when I am rushed.

I went to bed as soon as you departed, there being nothing to live for after that, & the sunshine all gone. How do you suppose I am going to get along without you? For five hours this has been a dreary place, a sober & solemn place, a hushed & brooding & lifeless place, for the blessed Spirit of Youth has gone out of it, & left nothing that's worth while. Aren't you sorry for me, you fresh breeze blown from fragrant fields of flowers? I thought this was a home. It was a superstition. What is home without a child? particularly a home that's had such a child as you in it. It isn't a home at all, it's merely a wreck. Now I hope you see what you've done by going away, you little witch.

It's odd: this morning I dated that "recommend" August 5. instead of 9. I think it is because you seemed to have been here only one day—just one short beautiful day, without a break in it. I am very grateful to your mother for lending you to me, you dear sweet child. I am aware that you can't come again in August, but I hope you can come after Sept. 2^d & stay a whole week, not a broken one. I mean to expect it & count upon it; & I do hope I shall not have to make any engagements that would interfere.

The Lioness is back, & has given me a nice long account of your journey down, & about the turtle; & has told me that she delivered you safe & sound & happy into your mother's hands—which is very good news for me.

Are you an idol? I suspect it; for I know you have left a lot of idolaters behind you in this house. Of which the very principallest one is the undersigned.

Please give my kindest regards to all your household. ... [MTAq 49].

Sam also wrote a glowing testimonial to Dorothy's mother, Emma Gertrude Quick, one any mother would be delighted to receive.

Certificate of Character from last place.

—————
To all to whom these presents may come, greeting:
This is to certify that I have been in the service of the enclosed Dorothy Quick

five days: & have found her sober, honest, willing, and unlazy; I desire to further testify that she is always good, & sweet, & thoughtful of others, & winning; also that she is gentle & considerate of her slaves, & never puts a burden upon them that they are not glad to bear. I wish to recommend her in the strongest terms to any worthy free person who is tired of his freedom & desires to exchange it for something better [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon declined for Sam to William M. Stewart in Rhyolite, Nev., who sent an invitation on Aug. 1 [MTP].

Hugh Beveridge wrote from Edinburgh, Scotland to enclose a copy of the Journal Scotia which contained his review of "Quater Centenary Studies. George Buchanan" on p. 257 [MTP].

Frederick T. Leigh for Harper & Brothers wrote to acknowledge receipt of "Wapping Alice" [MTP].

August 10 Saturday – Saturday Evening Post ran an anonymous article, "Boswellizing Mark Twain," p. 25. Tenney: "Samuel Johnson had his biographer, and now Albert Bigelow Paine has taken on the task with MT, who is amiable and kindly, and provides him with cigars” [MTJ Bibliographic Issue Number Four 42:1 (Spring 2004) p.9].

Elvelena W. Morford wrote from England to Sam, glad to know of his safe return; The Morfords were still touring England [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP as “pretended dictation.”

August 11 Sunday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam began a letter to Dorothy Quick he finished on Aug. 15.

This isn’t a letter, Dorothy dear, yet I know I ought to write you a letter, because I would write you every time I wrote the other children, & I’ve just finished a letter to Clara. But I never could keep promises very well. However, I shall certainly write you a letter before very long. I wrote to Clara:

“When Dorothy went away she took the sun & the moon & the constellations with her, & left silence & solitude & night & desolation behind her.”

And that’s a true word, if ever I’ve spoken a true word! [MTAq 51].

Baron Ludwig Wattman, German author, wrote to Sam that he would be living on Madison Ave. [MTP].

Note: Lyon wrote on the letter: “Answd. Aug 14, ‘07”; MTP gives “on or after Aug. 11” for Sam’s reply “The house at 21 Fifth Avenue is closed.”

August 12 Monday – Emilie R. Rogers wrote from Fairhaven, Mass. to Sam, feeling “a little neglected.” H.H. Rogers was “in worse shape than he cared to acknowledge to anybody” and had spoken of Clemens often [MTHHR 632].

Cronin, Reading & Co., Tailors wrote to Sam “We have been waiting to hear from you, re your overdue account £2-15-0. Kindly let us have it by return of post as it was quoted a low figure and dates back to last November [MTP]. Note: this was found in the Sept. 19, 1907 file from William M. Clemens, not Will M. Clemens but a private investigator in NYC. It is doubtful that the bill belongs to Sam.

Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers) wrote to Sam:

You have been a little neglected but not intentionally, I assure you, for I am sure you have no warmer friends than these at Fairhaven. Mr. Rogers came back here on the third of August, a week ago Saturday. He had really been in worse shape than we have cared to acknowledge to anybody. The rest, of the past week, has done a lot for him and he is much improved. He will remain here this week and I hope longer—He has spoken of you many times and, if you care to come, we should all be glad to welcome you to Fairhaven—The Kanawha is in at New York and if you can communicate with Harry he will tell you when she is likely to return. I presume the last of the week—The family sends kindest messages and Mr Rogers says he would like to see “Old Mark”—Yours... [MTHHR 632].

August 13 Tuesday – William F. Saunders wrote from St. Louis to Sam, offering more on the invitation to take a trip on the steamboat Alton with the party of governors [MTP].

Charles E. Wark wrote from Parker House, Boston to advise Sam of Clara’s continued improvement, weight gain of seven pounds and “great improvement” of voice. She was not overworking; no answer needed since Wark heard that Sam hated to write letters [MTP].

August 14 Wednesday

August 15 Thursday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam finished his Aug.11 to Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J.

Thursday, 15th. I have been away several days, but am home again—and no Dorothy! And so I go mourning around, like an old cat that's lost her kitten. But you are coming soon again, & that is large comfort to me. You are the best reader, of your age, I have yet encountered; & when I finish teaching you & drilling you you will read still better than you do now. It's a great accomplishment, a very great & rare accomplishment, & I'm the expert that knows how to teach it! There'll be grand times in my class of one pupil, Dorothy dear!

Thank you for your letter [not extant], which was very sweet & welcome. I am glad you arrived safe—you & the other butterflies. And the turtle with the warlike name.

A wonderful thing has happened here. You remember the central bed of nasturtiums—the round one. Well, Miss Lyon planted some seeds there, & raised a family of rabbits. She asked me to tell you that. The rest is under the nasturtiums in the middle of the bed. There are 3 little rabbits, & they are about the size of mice. Their eyes are not open yet. I hope they will still be there when you come. I have named them Dorothy. One name is plenty for all of them, they are so little.

Hugs & kisses—well, I am sending them—along with the love of your most devoted admirer & friend [MTAq 51].

Sam also wrote to Emma Gertrude Quick, Dorothy's mother.

It gives me great pleasure to know that Dorothy was happy here, & not homesick. I had no anxiety but the fear that she might fall a prey to nostalgia in spite of our best efforts to save her from it. It is a terrible malady, I remember the deep misery of it after all these 60 years & more.

Every day & every hour of her brief stay, Dorothy was a delight & a blessing, & every night it cost me a pang to let her go to bed. Hers is a most beautiful & lovable character, & she will never lack for adoring friends while she lives.

I thank you for lending her to me, & am grateful that you are going to lend her to me again. I am looking forward to the time. We want her as soon as she can be spared after the 2^d of September. Miss Lyon will meet her anywhere you say & escort her.

With the kindest regards— [MTP].

Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers) wrote to Sam.

I have just received your letter and we are all disappointed that you will not favor us. I read the letter to Mr Rogers and he could not quite understand as to what you call your colossal blunder. He bids me say that, as he recalls the matter of Ex President Cleveland's visit to Jamestown, it was understood that you were to have the Kanawha to invite Mr Cleveland for the trip, and the boat was to be in Harry's command. He understands that now Mr Cleveland is unable to make the trip, and you have invited Mr Choate instead. That arrangement has his entire sanction, on one condition, and that his you will understand that Mr Choate will accept. Of course the people of Jamestown understood that you were going to invite Mr Cleveland, and it would be proper to confer with them as to the substitution of Mr. Choate. That is the primal thing. Following it must be the acceptance of Mr Choate without any reservation or qualification. Between us Mr Rogers is of the opinion that Mr Choate might hesitate about going on Mr. Rogers' boat. That settled the whole thing is very clear. You are at liberty to go on and make the arrangements. Mr. Rogers joins me in love and the family all unite in kindest messages [MTHHR 632-3]. Note: text footnote points out that Choate and Rogers "were not on good terms."

Journal of Education ran an anonymous article, "Mark Twain in Academic Robes," p. 150-1. Tenney: "A general account of MT's development and recognition as a writer, providing no new information; sketchy, not documented, and not wholly accurate" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 191].

August 16 Friday – Dorothy Quick wrote from the Truell Inn, Plainfield, N.J. to Sam.

It's just a week since I last saw you and I miss you very much indeed I did not go to Long Island on Tuesday you see my Granpa wanted me this week but mother and I will surely go next week it is lovely down there but I like it much better here, the pictures I took did not turn out well but I am enclosing those that did there is one very good one of you and me which Miss Lyon took and I will send you one when I get it, I wish I could read to you a little while this morning: would you like it too? I am going to study very hard this winter for I want to write stories when I grow up if I do what do you think would be a good name to use? I forgot to tell you I have Mr. Roosevelt and Grover Cleveland signatures and I have written for lots of others with lots of love and a big hug and a great many kisses I am your / Little Dorothy / Lots of love and kisses for Miss Lyon [MTAq 52].

Ossian Lang wrote from NYC to Sam, suggesting that Lewis Elmer Trescott, a poet in Glenwood, Long Island, be included in Sam's hypothetical "Library of Literary Hogwash" [MTP]. Note: see Sam's reply on Aug. 21.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

August 17 Saturday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam began a letter to Dorothy Quick that he added to on Aug. 18, 19, 21 and 22. For this day, he drew a sketch of an insect:

Do you know what that is? It is a butterfly. Drawn by the artist. The gifted artist. I am the gifted artist. Self-taught.

No, I find it is a grasshopper. It is for your collection. Miss Lyon has nailed it to box, with pins. It took more chloroform than was good for it. And so it is sleeping with its fathers [MTAq 53].

H.E. Cole wrote to warn Sam that "These people are using your name for advertising purposes...Ever your grateful friend." Cole inserted a clipping advertisement for monuments (paper not specified) headed "Mark Twain" [MTP]. Note: Sam began the following answer, not published nor sent:

Many gay & lightsome humorous letters come to me, but they are never wholly free from certain little blemishes which—well, which oughtn't to be present. They are of a sort that give to the gaiety & the lightsomeness a labored look; the humor doesn't flow freely, carelessly, joyously, after the fashion of a rill which is dancing along in the sunshine thorough June meadows, bound for nowhere in particular & having an unsalaried good time, but has about it a suggestion that it is being pumped. That isn't pleasant. Fooling, just for fun, isn't good fooling nor welcome fooling except when it bubbles from its source without effort. But there are exceptions to all rules, & at last here is a letter which has not the blemishes which I have spoken of: [MTP]. Note: left unfinished. However, Cole wrote on Aug. 21 thanking Sam for his letter of Aug. 21, so evidently another reply or one similar was sent.

Howells & Stokes billed Sam $3,374.82 "under the terms of your contract with Mr. William Webb Sunderland" [MTP].

L.W. Opdyke wrote to Sam concerning a recent article in Nation about the authorship of the play of P&P being in error. He wrote the editor to secure credit for his friend, Abby Sage Richardson; Sam's name was not mentioned in the article, wrote Opdyke [MTP].

Elizabeth H. Sane wrote a short note from Lansdale, Pa. to ask Sam for his autograph [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

August 18 Sunday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam added to his Aug. 17 to Dorothy Quick.

We talk about you all the time. You are not a large subject, but a very entertaining one.

“Would I like to have you read to me?” Indeed I should. I couldn’t like anything better.

Don’t you be troubled about your hand, Dorothy. It is a good hand, & has the chiefest of all merits: that it is as easy to read as print.

Miss Lyon didn’t count right: there are 4 little rabbits. She can count horses very well, but not rabbits, on account of being near-sighted [MTAq 53].

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally.

I am very glad to hear from you, Francesca dear.

Mr. Porter wrote me of your visit, with your mother, & it was clear that he & his family enjoyed the visit very much. Very nice folks they are.

No indeed, I have not forgotten the purposed visit to St. Vincent’s in the fall. I shall be there.

It occurred to me that you might reach New York & telephone my house & get no answer & not understand why; so I started the enclosed explanatory note after you August 3^d. It may miss you, but the present one won’t, for I shall enclose it to Captain Gates before he sails for England the last day of this month & you will get it when you board his ship Sept. 14th.

You will be pretty sure to have a pleasant voyage: a little frosty, perhaps, but sunny & smooth.

With love to you & kindest regards to your mother— [MTAq 55].

Sam also wrote to Emilie Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

Then it is all right, & I am relieved. I must have had some groping dull instinct that I had been making a blunder, for when I did not get an answer at once from the Admiral I was distinctly uneasy, without knowing why. Very well, there’s one thing sure: I shall not make another blunder. Until next time.

I should have gone with Harry but for engagements. Particularly a dinner one—the others could have been canceled; but for the chief guest to fail of a dinner-engagement, even when dead, is apparently not permissible. However, as it turns out, there wasn’t any such engagement: it was a tea. The dinner is Tuesday night.

I thought I would have my surgical operation now, & get it done over again when the time should come to use it as a pretext—for Col. Harvey said he had tried it, & it was a trifling matter. So I asked Dr. Rushmore to proceed with it. But he declined. He said that at my time of life it could land me in the graveyard. So that’s off. It is a world of disappointments.

Clara is prospering in Boston, where she is studying. She has gained 7 pounds in two months, & is proud & fat. Also, she has ~~had a tonsil cut out, and thinks God arranged it for the summer season, so that she wouldn’t lose any time from concerting in the fall.~~ Mebbe so. One can’t most always sometimes tell what His game is.

Somebody sent that picture to me, but I could not have it around, because it was indelicate. So I sent it to the Admiral. In this I am plagiarizing the attitude of [the remainder of the letter is missing] [MTHHR 633-4].

Note: source suggests the possible operation was for a hernia suffered in 1893 [n1].

Selma Werner wrote from Ampersand, NY to ask Sam for “a little greeting” [MTP]. On or after Aug. 18 Sam sent her his “truth ...economise” aphorism [MTP].

August 19 Monday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. in the morning, Sam added to his Aug. 17, 18 to Dorothy Quick.

“Just a WEEK” since I saw you! Why, you little, humbug, it is over 3 months; even Miss Lyon, who never gets anything straight but corkscrews & potato peelings & things like that, concedes that it’s upwards of two months. What is the matter with your veracity-mill?

===

Night.

It is a good idea, to choose a name in advance, & then fit the literature onto it when the literature comes. I will keep on the lookout for a fortunate name, dear. Write another little story, now, & send it to me. It will take you several years to learn to do a story even tolerably well, & it will cost lots of good hard work, & patient thought, & sharp attention, & close observations, & ever so much tearing-up & re- writing—but no matter, it’s worth the trouble; & no trade is ever well learned on any other terms.

Good-night, it’s sleep-time [MTAq 53].

Thomas W. Hotchkiss for Town & Country wrote to thank Sam for the use of his photo for the weekly. Would he sign it if sent? [MTP].

Florence A. Stoker wrote from Chelsea, England, disappointed at not seeing Sam on his visit, but thanking him for the signed photo for her friend, Sally Campbell Clarke [MTP].

August 20 Tuesday – The New York Times, p.3, announced “on good authority” that Rudyard Kipling was chosen for the Nobel Prize in Literature for 1907, and that Mark Twain had been suggested for same.

Joseph T. Brown for Knickerbocker Trust wrote to acknowledge Sam’s “note of the 18th,” placing an order for 1,000 shares of Utah Consolidated [MTP].

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam: “The Head-of-the-House and myself propose to take the 3.53 train Thursday for Tuxedo....I have had letters from the Kiplings which tell me some interesting things, and we anticipate still more interesting things from you” [MTP]. Note: to the side of the letter Lyon wrote for Sam: “Have read the short poems not merely once, but several times, & yet have not exhausted their deep charm, nor even diminished it. I had about made up my mind that if I were going to try to choose one to place at the head, it would be the one entitled, “So Kind Thou Art”

Miss May H. Prentice wrote from Cleveland, Ohio enclosing a clipping from the Cleveland Press, containing a letter by Mary Baker Eddy. Prentice called her a “genius” [MTP]. Clipping not in file.

Charlotte Teller Johnson wrote from Staten Island, NY to Sam, having rec’d payment from Maude Adams meant for Sam, the second half of her option for performing JA [MTP].

August 21 Wednesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam added to his Aug. 17, 18, 19 to Dorothy Quick.

The Busy Bee

About to-morrow or next day there’ll be a note from the same, I hope, containing that picture of the same & me which the same Kodak’d when the same was here. I suppose you will return to Plainfield for your birthday?

If a parcel arrives there from Harper & Brothers in a day or two, it is for your birthday.

That thing the bee is chasing is a dog, or a rat, or something of that kind, I think, but there is room for conjecture. This does not settle it. What do you think it is, if you’ve got time?

You are coming Tuesday the 3^d. Now then, that’s settled, lassie. Shall you be welcome? There isn’t any doubt about it, dear.

Afternoon.

The Harpers have sent the books here. It's just as well: I will write my name in them, then forward them [MTAq 54].

Sam also replied to the Aug. 16 of Mr. Ossian Lang.

Dear Mr. Lang: / (See note at bottom of Trescott's letter) Apparently he does not claim to be the original Poet Lariat, therefore proceedings for his impeachment are not permissible.

But he is not a legitimate successor—his poem proves it. It lacks incoherency, it lacks idiotcy, it lacks windy emptiness, it lacks putrid & insistent bastard godliness—indeed it lacks every essential that goes to the making of a real Poet Lariat [MTP]. Note: see Gribben 711.

Florence Duncan Jones wrote to Miss Lyon asking return of her Christian Science MS [MTP].

Theodore I. Coe for Howells & Stokes wrote to acknowledge receipt of Sam's check for $3,374.82, which they would forward to William Webb Sunderland, contractor on the new Redding house [MTP].

August 22 Thursday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam finished his Aug. 17 to 21 to Dorothy Quick. "Thursday, 22. I'm collecting red cigar-belts for you against your coming—but I love you notwithstanding" [MTAq 54].

Sam also wrote to Charlotte Teller Johnson in Staten Island, N.Y.: "I am very glad, my dear Miss T. to learn that the option has been paid at last; & since you as desire, you can send your check for the small advance I made you, but do not do it if it can inconvenience you, for there is no hurry" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The Doubledays arrived. The Doubledays! we had such a rich evening full of talk that I couldn't ever begin to put it all down. First we had tea out on the porch and the postal check was talked over. The King would be willing to go to Washington to poll the house and he "would even squeeze a compliment for the President out of his system, if he had one in it—if an hour with him would do any good." He said he knew that a 30 minute talk with the President—with any of the House of Representatives—would do more good than bushels of pamphlets would, and so it's now arranged that the King is to go to the Doubleday Farm at Mill Neck which is only 20 minutes of mobiling from Oyster bay and the President—if Mr. Doubleday can get a mortgage on an hour with the President. The King, when he dropped off onto Copyright—told of his talk with Lord Thuring [sic Thring] in London. Lord T. had said that there was no such thing—or there was a law against property in an idea and that a book was an idea. The King wanted perpetual copyright and when Lord T. said "Impossible, impossible!" The King pointed out that a book was acknowledged as property because it was given a 14 year copyright. Then it was acknowledged a 2nd time, when 14 more years were added to it, and that "everything of value has an idea." Lord Thuring mentioned real estate and the King told him that "[] real estate had no value except as the idea of man made it valuable. Everything is the result of an idea—a flatiron—a washboard—a piece of furniture—a railroad, all are ideas" [MTP 89]. Note: Henry Thring (1818-1907) served in the House of Lords until 1905.

B.C. Forder wrote from Blanford, England to relate a short anecdote about a Christian Science woman having her purse stolen and the robber returning it [MTP].

August 23 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: We went over to the Deacon's for tea this afternoon. This is the 2nd Friday that she has had a "bridge party" and we have been bidden for tea.

The King cannot bear to write letters. He looks at a pen with a shudder in these days. The King is getting up a nom de plume for Dorothy who wants one for the literary work she is planning to do in the future. He roamed around in his mind and thought of "Nebraska Chesterfield", "Oregon Trail", and finally on "Oregon de Baragay". Sent in a note to her home, Jan. 15/35 with a snapshot of Dorothy.

This morning the Doubledays left, and Mr. Clemens said: "He is just a Doubleday, but she is a Double daisy" [MTP 91].

Myra P. Bray wrote from Gloucester, Mass. to Sam, relating a story told at a pharmacist's convention by Congressman Frank Cirrus of N.H. about Sam demanding a sleeper car on a train without one, and refusing to budge until one was supplied. Bray was a stenographer but didn't take down the whole story as it was long—where could she get the tale? [MTP] Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Sept. 18, 07"

Neltje de Graff Doubleday (Mrs. Frank N. Doubleday) wrote from NYC to thank Sam for the pleasure of their visit [MTP]. Note: A dowager writing in a hurricane has less lean to her handwriting than Mrs. Doubleday.

Nelson Gardner wrote to send Sam a book and to ask his opinion of "the dramatic poem" named "The Martyred Maid (Joan of Arc)" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Aug. 31 '07"

Frank T. Searight for American Press Humorists, Los Angeles wrote to offer Sam $2,000 for a series of eight lectures [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Aug 31 07"

August 24 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Lucia Hull came this morning to have a chat with the King and he kept her until luncheon time, talking his gospel to her. She held to her own philosophy like the staunch little maid that she is and she stayed to luncheon at my invitation and then we jiggered over to her house to see her mother... [MTP 92].

Harper's Weekly ran an anonymous article, "In His Hours of Ease," p. 1,223. Tenney: "In his white suit and with a cigar in his mouth, seated on a rock and looking at a kitten in his lap ('From stereograph copyright 1907, by Underwood & Underwood'). It was not considered necessary to identify the subject of the cover photograph as MT" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide First Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1977 p. 334].

Charles E. Cochrane wrote to Sam sending "another card I publish...for the counter sign card for Plasmon." He referred to his letter of the previous day (not extant) [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Aug 26 '07"

Anna Sterritt wrote from Ireland to Miss Lyon after receiving a letter from Jean who wished to visit there; Sterritt was coming to NY and asked if she might ship some of her trunks to Sam's house [MTP].

August 25 Sunday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam went to a luncheon and talked for two hours, as related by the following letter to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

Dearest Jean, I hope you & your pair of excellent lady friends are having good & satisfactory times. As to my own case I believe I haven't anything to complain of. I worked from 6 till 1 to-day—with a pen; the first time I have done literary work with that slow instrument for a very long time. Then we went to a luncheon—I do the like with great frequency; for it is a pleasant & companionable society here.

We have had a visit from the Stanchfields, & it was charming. Also, we have had the Doubledays—they are lovely.

I shall go to see them at their country place the middle of the month. I dread the journey, short as it is, but I must go—it is national business.

Dorothy is due to come here a week from now, & stay a week. I am droopy & lazy; I need the turmoil & tumultuousness of that tumultuous child, to wake me up—& wear me out.

What with writing seven hours to-day; & talking two hours at the luncheon; & driving & calling another couple of hours, with some more talking, I was weary when I got home, & so I went to bed without dinner. It is near sleep-time, now, & I am competent.

Be happy dearheart!

With love & hugs & kisses, /Father

The news from Clara is good. She is comfortably lodged at Norfolk, & the air is helping her [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King began work at 6 this morning and but for the interval of his breakfast, he kept it up until one o'clock. It is on the copyright question, and I have written to Sam Moffett to have him find out how many copyright renewals there have been in the last year – 2 years – 10 years –

We lunched with the Sampsons today. Mr. Sampson, his sister, his mother, Mr. and Mrs. Deacon, Mr. and Mrs. Townsend. It was very pleasant, for the house is lovely and the people agreeable. But they're not like the Doubledays.

After luncheon we drove to the Kents and sat on their great porch overlooking the lake and the big water tower over which was overflowing in great sprays. It troubled the King to see such a waste of water

It was sweet to drive along these lovely roads beside him, sweet to have him silent and smoking. He was tired, and the steady roar of the luncheon table exhausted him as I knew it would and as soon as we reached home he went to bed and after my solitary dinner, I found him lying with his beautiful feet uncovered and reading Macaulay's "Life & Letters". He dropped it on his breast and chatted for a few minutes with me about Walter Bynner's verses. I had just read Bynner's "Ode to Harvard", which I found lovely and touching and strong [MTP TS 92-93]. Note: See also Gribben, p. 712. Mr. & Mrs. Charles E. Sampson had recently leased the Tuckerman house in Tuxedo Park [NY Times Aug. 11, 1907, "Tuxedo Park Notes."]. The 1908 Tuxedo Club Book lists Harleston Deacon as a member since 1903..

In Sam's A.D. he again recalled George Bernard Shaw: "Shaw is a pleasant man; simple, direct, sincere, animated; quite destitute of affectation. I liked him" [Gribben 638].

August 26 Monday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam began a letter to Dorothy Quick he finished Aug. 27.

At last, you dear little tardy rascal! This morning I was going to stick up a notice on the back porch:

LOST CHILD!

===

Answers to the name of Dorothy.

===

Strayed, Stolen or Mislaid.

===

DISAPPEARED

On or about the 9th of August.

===

Anyone restoring this inestimably precious asset to the

SORROWING

will be richly

REWARDED!

—and right away this evening comes your letter, & takes every bit of the uneasiness out of me! I had gone to bed, but Miss Lyon brought it anyway, because she knew I would break her furniture & throw all her things out of the window if she delayed it till morning.

Very well. You have been having good times; so I am satisfied, & will go to sleep now.

But wait! Where is that picture of you & me? You have forgotten it, dear, but I must have it [MTAq 57].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Luncheon with Mrs. Clinton at the Club, with Mrs. Corthwait (I think that's the name) and the Ronaldses and the Deacons. We sat on the porch and chattered, only the King and Mrs. Deacon talked, but they were at one side. We walked home and were tired, oh so tired. So the King went to his room and to sleep and I to mine and to sleep. Again I had a solitary dinner. But after it was over I went to the King's room with a letter from Dorothy Q. [Quick] which he enjoyed and loved and then he talked for an hour and a half, smoking slowly and constantly. He was speaking of the power of breaking away from a habit and said that when he was a cub pilot he made up his mind not to chew tobacco any longer. He had the plug in his pocket, and he didn't throw it away and so burn his bridges behind him. No—he kept the plug in his pocket until it was in a powder, and he never chewed again. He said probably some outside influence was the cause of his reform. Then he decided to stop smoking, once when he was a young man in Keokuk, I should say, and he was firm in his resolve until he decided to resume again. Then just before he married he stopped again. Mr. Langdon had said that if he would stop smoking that he would give them a holiday in Europe at his expense but Mr. Clemens said no—he wouldn't be under pledge to anyone. But he stopped smoking and didn't resume for more than a year. Then he began to write "Roughing It" and wrote the first 6 chapters in agony. He knew what he wanted to say, but could not say it. Suddenly he realized what the trouble was and taking one of the cigars that lay near at hand he lit it and the thoughts began to flow into words. The words he wanted. Mrs. Clemens felt badly to see him smoking again; but he made up his mind that he would never again break the habit, for it would be because "invisible manacles" were placed about his wrists and that he could never stand [MTP TS 93-94]. Note: See Dorothy's letter below.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Samuel Byrne wrote to ask Sam if he had sailed from NY to California on Apr. 11, 1859 via Panama [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Sept. 4"; and "No I never sailed from NY for any port until eleven years later than that date"

Edward W. Foster for Home-Coming Week for Tennessee wrote to invite Sam to attend ceremonies any time from Sept. 23 to 28, since the Clemens family had Tenn.connections [MTP].

Archibald Henderson wrote a three-page, single-spaced typed letter to Sam, full of summaries of contemporary philosophers. He began:

I hope that by this time you have recovered from the effects of the magnificent ovation that was given you in England. Is it not Goethe who says that when a man becomes truly great, the world does everything it can to prevent him from doing other great things—with its receptions, dinners, and diversions of a thousand different kinds?

Henderson then disclosed he'd read Sam's What is Man? Observing that George Bernard Shaw agreed with Clemens—that "a man never does a single thing which has any first and foremost object but one—to secure peace of mind, spiritual comfort, for himself..." He continues to discuss Nietzsche, Ibsen and Shaw on this point, and closes with:

It has been a great privilege to read your book, and to find that you have given explicit expression to the most fecund philosophic conceptions of this age. You have made perfectly concrete many notions which are only implicit in certain great works of modern art. And your Admonition is beyond praise: "Diligently train your ideas upward and still upward toward a summit where you will find your chiefest pleasure in conduct which, while contenting you, will be sure to confer benefits upon your neighbor and the community" [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam enclosing draft for $66.50 "in payment of your one-third share of the rent on the Erie Basin property, Buffalo." He added a personal note: "I am getting desperately hungry to see you and sit down and have a visit with you. Julie has the same feeling and wishes you were where we could get at you more easily" [MTP].

Dorothy Quick wrote from East Rockaway, Long Island to Sam.

I have just gotten your letter I have been watching for it every mail the butterflys are grand I think I like your kind best because they don't have to die still I am very proud of my collection and I hope I can get some more when I come back Oh please Mr Clemens try and keep the little baby rabbits I love them so much it will be such fun to see them play around the flower beds We will take thier pictures yesterday I went on my first real picnic we went on a lovely sail boat the gentlemen got off and dug clams then we sailed up the beach and they got off again and cooked the clams while we got the lunch ready it was such fun of course I didnt like the clams I never like anything other people think is fine it seems to me but I enjoyed the picnic and had a very find day we left at ten and returned at eight oclock I shall spend my birthday here. / [MTAq 55-6]. Note: her birthday was Sept. 1. She also told of crying when she read The Dog's Tale; and of arrangements for her next visit.

August 27 Tuesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam finished his Aug. 26 to Dorothy Quick.

Yes, Wednesday will be perfectly convenient—and we'll have you a whole week, which is grand! Provided you don't get homesick—and we do hope you won't. We'll do our very best to keep you happy & content. Miss Lyon will arrange about the trains with your mother by telephone, if she can; otherwise by letter.

I've got a birthday [several words canceled] for you, [two words canceled] but I will keep it till you come, because it isn't the [two words canceled] & I shall need to [several words canceled]. Guess what it is. [Sam is playing with her here, omitting or canceling words that might reveal his gift].

You've written me a good letter: simple, lucid, straightforward, well expressed.

FLIGHT

Of the Rabbit Family.

Alas, they have deserted us, & I am so sorry. We were hoping to keep them for you, & we never dreamed that they would go away & leave us. I am just as sorry as I can be.

That big one that has 3 ears & looks like an angel, isn't an angel at all, it is the mother rabbit.

She isn't swimming, she is praying—praying for succor, I reckon: that is, I think that that is her idea . . . No, that isn't it: she is jumping—jumping over a rope-walk, or a stone wall, or something of that kind, & has bumped her stomach against it, poor thing. It is very difficult to tell what a rabbit is really trying to do, in a picture, because rabbits are so irrelevant. It is their nature when excited.

Do I mind? (that you read the dog's tale.) Indeed, no. I don't mind anything you do, because you never mean any harm; & you are a dear good child all the time.

You have written the very letter I was going to propose that you write: a letter telling me all about your activities & industries & enjoyments, all the things your busy hands & head find to interest themselves in. It is a good practice for you, in observing & remembering, & good entertainment for me, because I am fond of you, & so whatever you do, & think & feel, interests me.

AFTERNOON

The Lioness has just received good news by telephone: you are coming Tuesday. It's fine! You will reach this house at 5.30 p.m. You will most certainly be welcome.

DEER

There were several of them. They came down hill from the woods above the house, & stopped a while behind the kitchen to look at the cook. You can see by their eager expression & enthusiastic delight, that they had never seen a cook before. Sometimes they go down through the woods below the house to get a drink at the lake. If ever they come into the house you must be ready, for we will have them to luncheon & then photograph them in the act.

With love & good night, / SLC [MTAq 58-9].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Emilie R. Rogers.

Mr. Clemens would write this letter to you himself, but what with doing too heavy a day's work in a literary way, & with fretting over the complications of securing the right orator for the Fulton Memorial Day at Jamestown, he is very tired & has deputed me to explain everything to you.

Joseph Choate would be unable to return from the Hague to be the orator at the event. Sam wanted to withdraw and not attend, but since the organizers threatened to cancel, he was reconsidering. Could the organizers secure Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler as the day's orator? Would that be acceptable to Rogers? Sam wished to continue his dictations about the trip to England, and to take a break from his work for the Jamestown celebration would damage his momentum [MTHHR 634-5]. Note: See Rogers' reaction Aug. 30. Nicholas Murray Butler (1862-1947), was President of Columbia University for 43 years (1902-1945).

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Umbrella. Today came news that Miss Olney [sic Olney] had written a conspicuous interview with Mark Twain & published it in Friday's World" [MTP TS 94]. Note: Miss Olney had visited Clemens on July 27 and taken impressions of Clemens' hand; no mention of permission for an interview was given. Since she was unknown to him, it isn't likely he gave permission. Friday's NY Evening World was Aug. 23, but a search of the paper for that day turned up no interview. However, "My 'Hand Interviews' with Mark Twain and Thomas A. Edison / 'It's an Awful Thing to Get a Reputation for Being Funny,' Says Mark Twain," by Channez Huntington Olney (1873-1908). NY Evening World, Aug. 25, Magazine Section, p. 7. It's likely that Lyon simply got the day wrong for the "interview." Sam dictated a letter on Sept. 1 to Joseph Pulitzer, editor of the New York World, protesting that this interview had been obtained under false pretenses. SLC submits to having his palm read; comments on his current situation and age. Reprinted in Scharnhorst, p. 647-649.

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam, enclosing a letter (Aug. 25) from Edward Bok. "The President would be very glad to see you on Friday, September thirteenth. Mrs. Doubleday and I would be very glad to have you on Thursday, September twelfth, so that you can rest the day before and the day after being up against this human dynamo." He thought Sam would find the Bok letter of "interest." "I have also sent you the Dorothy Osborne letters..." and thanked him for their Tuxedo visit [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote a "to do" list on the bottom of the letter, things irrelevant to this letter.

Edward Lauterbach for the National Liberal Immigration League, NYC wrote to Sam, enclosing a summary of their work, and presuming him to be "in sympathy" with their aims [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter for Sam, "I can't conscientiously do what you ask without knowing a great deal about it, & am not situated now so that I can examine it & see"

August 28 Wednesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick: "Dorothy dear, I am writing you a real letter, and it will go to you in a day or two. But this is only just a line, to send you my love & say how glad we are that you are coming, and that we can have you one day earlier—which is delightful" [MTP; MTAq 47]. Note: MTAq erroneously puts this to "early August 1907," but there was no change of plans on the earlier visit to come one day earlier. MTP puts it at Aug. 28, which is judged to be correct.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King & I dined with the Davies – Ogdens tonight. Mr. & Mrs. Mason were there. Oh deadlies—and Mr. McKim and a young Mr. Baker, [George Barr Baker] a co-editor of Everybody's Magazine and a nice man. He it was who wrote [see Oct. 21, 1906] from the Players last winter to say that a little English girl wanted the joy of shaking the King's hand and that little girl was Dorothy Butes.

Today I spent some time going over a few of the old letters and found 6 or 7 from Mr. Aldrich. I don't believe they will be of much value to Mr. Greenslet, but they were a pleasure for the King for there was the first letter ever written by Aldrich to the King, and calling him "Dear Sir". Then the second letter calling him Dear Mr. Clemens, but addressing him on the envelope as Samuel C. Clemens. And the King said he couldn't imagine a time when Aldrich didn't know his initials. These 2 letters were written about an apology made to the King for crediting him with a poem about 3 aces. A poem about imitation of the "Heathen Chinees", and in a letter which Aldrich published in the little paper he was editing—Every other Saturday—the King said he wasn't in the imitation business. Then there were the letters Aldrich wrote after he had complained that the King hadn't given him any photograph of himself, and the King started in and sent him a photo a day until he had sent between 40 and 50. The vast bulk of them, though, going out with a New Year's mail. But the best thing was a postal card from Mr. Twichell. It must have been written about 1877 and it advised Mr. Clemens to read the verses that appeared in that morning's Courant—verses written by one Omar; verses that had moved Mr. Twichell, that he hastened to recommend to his friend. There were postal cards from Moncure D. Conway; one asking to have his overshoes sent on to him (he had been visiting the Clemens in Hartford) and another one asking for stray mail. The King said that Conway had been such a troublesome visitor—always behind time—always keeping them waiting when they'd start out for a drive. And when it came train time the King had to push him into a carriage; they reached the corner of Forest St. and Conway said "Oh wait, I've forgotten my umbrella". But the King told Patrick to drive right on, that the umbrella could be sent by express [MTP TS 94-96]. Note: Gribben adds for this day: Sam spoke to Isabel about "Dr. Lord's Lectures on Roman History—etc. took 200 subscriptions in Hartford in 12 days. Canvassed that book for 26 yrs" [Gribben 423]. Note: John Lord (1810-1894), Beacon Lights of History. 8 vols. (1884-1896); only Sam's vol. 1 survives; Sam also mentioned on Aug. 31.

Alice Von Versen (née Clemens) wrote from her estate near the Baltic Sea, after receiving Sam's letter by way of Mr. Schaffler as she was passing through Berlin. She asked for his picture [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

August 29 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Today I went to spend the day with Santa who appeared suddenly from Norfolk. She is beautifuller than she has ever been, for Boston agrees with her and her intense happiness in her life and in her art are making for her an existence that is ideal. It was a scurry to get off—a scurry to get my home train and to bed I am—exhausted. Mr. Baker went in on my train and he has a proper appreciation of the King. So we talked forever [MTP TS 96]. Note: George Barr Baker.

Charles E. Cochrane wrote from NYC to Sam that he had forwarded his Plasmon card to Ashcroft, but was told no advertising would be done till Jan. 1908; so asked for return of the cards [MTP].

Theodore I. Coe for Howells & Stokes wrote to bill Sam $225.01 from Harry Lounsbury [MTP].

Alice Minnie Herts wrote to Isabel Lyon [MTP].

Charles P.G. Scott for the Simplified Spelling Board wrote to ask Sam if he was ready to return the paper, "Some Proposed Improvements in Spelling"? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, "To be frank about it / never look at the lists as I am thoroughly interested in other things—while I could become strongly interested in a simplified alphabet, cannot take any further interest / Every time I think on it I still leave off the ughs & that was all I engaged to do"

August 30 Friday – H.H. Rogers wrote from Fairhaven, Mass. to Sam.

My Dear Clemens: — / Mrs. Rogers received your letter of the 28th inst. and has handed same to me. I note that you are getting into trouble in that Jamestown matter. I think you make a mistake in trying to advertise a man like [Dr. Nicholas Murray] Butler. People of Virginia don't want to see him. They want Mark Twain. If you cannot see that, I can. Why not make short work of the whole matter by saying that Mr. Rogers writes you that he would be vry glad to send you and your friends down to Virginia, and now since Mr. Cleveland is unable to attend, why not make it a “Clemens” Day? If you do not want to speak, just get into the background, and take along with you such good fellows as W.J. Howells [sic], Peter Dunne and Geo. Harvey.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Rogers told Sam to consider himself “under orders at once,” and harangued him a bit more. Then he invited him to the house on Sunday when the new Coe baby would be there (Henry Huttleston Rogers Coe, b. June 30) [MTHHR 636-7].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Savagely ill all day. Crashing, crackling pains in the back of my head. I’m paid up for the scurrying day in town. Little Katie has been a motherly angel to me and tried to rub the pain away. About half past eight the King came up to my door to ask how my pains were and to express his entire dissatisfaction in my condition. Richard Mansfield died early this morning of a cancerous malady. A great artist has gone out of this life [MTP TS 96]. Note: Richard Mansfield (1857-1907), English actor best known for his Shakespearean play performances, Gilbert and Sullivan operas, and for his portrayal of both roles in the Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, which was so good that Mansfield was suspected of being Jack the Ripper.

H.E. Cole wrote a short note of thanks from New Haven: “Allow me to acknowledge receipt of your kind letter of the 21st inst., and, thanking you for your courtesy to a stranger, accept your invitation with avidity” [MTP].

John Larkin wrote to Sam, enclosing his check for $182.82 collected by Power Banking Co. of Texas from Samuel Wilson for his note of $100 due June 10 (payment for Archer Co. Tex. Property) [MTP].

In his A.D. Sam recalled having luncheon with Sir Norman Lockyer, astronomer, on July 7 [Gribben 415].

August 31 Saturday – Sam sent a telegram to Dorothy Quick:

I tried to get some elephants for your birthday but they charge ten thousand dollars apiece or 3 for twenty-five thousand. I can get one elephant and sixteen hundreds monkeys for the same money if you prefer. Telephone answer. / S. L. C. [MTP]. Note: Cooley assigns Sept. 1, Dorothy’s birthday [MTAq 60]. He also gives a letter this date to Dorothy from Isabel Lyon, asking her to bring “one or two letters Mr. Clemens has written you since you ran away from us...” as there was “something I want very much to see in one of them” (likely the drawings).

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today I’m up again and just as I was about to write Ashcroft to write to the American Society in London, for another copy or so of the speeches given on July 4th, the mail came in and with it—3 copies of that very book. The King came slipping down stairs while I was at luncheon and after I’d finished we went out on the porch and stayed there all afternoon. The King talked about copyright, and figured out that the number of books that would survive the 42 year limit and there won’t be many. He talked about Dr. Lord’s lectures and the great subscription sales they had in ’79 or so—and we hunted around in the backs of our heads for the authors, the copyrights on whose books are dead, but the authors of them are living right along without the income which the publishers are gobbling now. And he told how the Grant Memoirs killed the subscription trade.

The King dined with the Ronaldses tonight. My collapse of yesterday made me stay at home but he stayed in the dining room while I ate and speaking of Mr. Whitmore he said, “How the years have sweetened Whitmore, they have humanized or dogmatized him or something.”

While he was waiting for his “jigger” he told me how he didn’t sleep last night. I knew that, for at 2:45 I heard him tapping his pipe against the chimney piece and so I knew he was wakeful. His sleepy hour passed—for he had to interrupt the beautiful pink veil all traced with fine like veins, that slips before his eyes just before he drops into sleep. He had to interrupt it because he had to scratch his white head [MTP TS 96-97]. Note: see Gribben, p.423 on John Lord, Beacon Lights of History. 8 vols. (1884-1896); see also Aug. 28 entry.

Arthur W. Barber wrote from Lake George, NY to ask Sam if he'd autograph two of his books if sent? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Sept. 4"

Thomas F. Gates for Atlantic Transport wrote to Sam that he'd be happy to look after Mrs. Nunnally and daughter Frances, include them at his table and see that Sam's letter would be delivered to them as soon as they came on board [MTP].

Antoinette L. Morgan for Thrall Hospital, Middletown, NY to invite Sam to visit on Sept. 7 and help them raise funds for a new building [MTP].

W.H. Russe and James S. Warren for Lakes to the Gulf Deep Waterways Assoc., Memphis, Tenn. wrote to invite Sam to be their guest at a convention on Oct. 4-5 [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

September – Bookman (NY) ran a sour article, "Mark Twain's Publicity R.I.P." p. 9-10. Tenney: "'Mark Twain's work,' said one British writer when British applause was at its loudest, 'has absolutely no connection with literature,' and some of it 'has for sheer concentrated vulgarity never been beaten'; and it was a pity, said another, that Oxford did not honor Henry James instead. The American press reported only England's praise when MT visited. The trouble with these journalistic orgies of praise is that they 'always look the week after like public funerals of common sense'" [43].

Sam inscribed a copy of The Immigrant Jew in America, by Edmund James (1855-1925), et al: "S.L. Clemens, Tuxedo Park, Sept. 1907" [Gribben 349].

September 1 Sunday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Albert Langen.

Mein lieber Herr: / Im namen Gottes (if that is echte Deutch), do please continue those admirable pictures, "Nach alten Meistern." I have never liked St. Sebastian before, but this time he is a deep satisfaction to me. I have always had an aversion for the Mona Lisa before, but I think this one is just a Darling. She is gone, now, to be framed. With many thanks, I am / Truly Yours [MTP]. Note: What Sam approved of was a caricature of Mona Lisa in the German humor magazine, Simplicissimus ; See IVL's Journal item at bottom of this entry.

Sam also wrote to Joseph Pulitzer, upset about a fake "interview" published in the N.Y. World.

Dear Mr. Pulitzer: / I suppose your son is busier than you are, so I will spare him, & bother you with this complaint & prayer. This morning's World says: 'Last week the Sunday World printed "Hand Interviews" with Mark Twain & Thomas A. Edison, by Miss Channez Huntington Olney.'

I want to beg that my name shall not be bracketed with that of this adventuress, in the above way or any other way again.

Under cover of lies this alphabetical wench got access to my room & had a private conversation with me & went away & betrayed my confidence. There was no interview.

And there was one sign by which any journalist (or indeed any other person) would know that this rubbish was a fake—the fact that it made me speak in the first person. None but a stenographer can carry away a man's own phrasing. On its face, therefore, this alleged interview was a lie & I ought to have been asked about it over the telephone before using it.

It places me in a shabby position—that of a man who, after refusing interviews to the New York papers for weeks together, upon subjects of some importance, submits to an interview at last, upon an utterly trivial & contemptible theme. The Herald had just offered me an extravagant sum for an interview upon a respectable topic, & I had declined.

This scurvy drab came here disguised as a lady, & bearing what purported to be an introduction from Dan Frohman, & so my secretary was deceived. I enclose herewith her account of the matter.

I contend that the World should not have been deceived by this cheap swindle, for it knows that I do not fall easily to the interviewer.

With my kindest regards to you & Mrs. Pulitzer & the family, I am / Sincerely yours / I am satisfied that this woman stole those other interviews also [MTP]. Note: it's not clear why Scharnhorst included this article (p. 647-9); he may not have Sam's declaration "There was no interview" in this letter. Interestingly, quotations taken from this made-up interview are sometimes seen, along side the many "attributed" and the documented from Mark Twain. The "scurvy drab" reporter was Channez Huntington Olney. See Aug. 27.

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

In my dream the archangel exclaimed—

"Jesus H!"—

"Excuse me, sir," I said, coldly, "you are deceived by a resemblance; I am only a poor author, nothing more."

And then he went on, & on, & on, & became ever more interesting—but it is a long tale, there is not time to tell it now. I will save it for later. For Jamestown, if they like religious things there.

No, sir! no literary ragtag & bobtail for me—on a gala excursion. Why, Uncle Henry, down there there's going to be fireworks, & balls & banquets & receptions & all kinds of light & frolicsome goings-on, & the elderly people you have mentioned would be quite out of harmony with it. And besides, I don't like the society of old people, anyway; I am not suited to it, I am not used to it, —Never mind, this is Sunday, & no proper time to discuss such a such an— ~~Oh, let it go! I never heard of such a goddam~~

Noon. I have read a chapter, & oh, the healing of the perturbed spirit that is in the Good Book.

There is no occasion for any old dried fruit, Mary & Harry know an abundance of young people, & can fill up the ship without any difficulty with an unstaled young product much more satisfactory to God than any of these mouldy, antiquities you are recommending. Praps you are trying to crowd in, yourself. Don't do it; it's no place for the aged.

I told Miss Lyon, 3 or 4 days—no, Friday—to make Mr. Dearborn definitely understand that there would be no human freight in the Kanawha but young people—not a single orator, nor anybody connected any way with an orator. I will introduce orators to their audience if it be required, & I & the other young people will line up with them in the New York Building & help them receive & shake hands with the population, & will also agree to be on hand & furnish youth & charm & grace & beauty to any function they choose to get up, & thereto as much respectability as shall be needed; [two words illegible] you had already made him understand that all I ever wanted any where was a chance to show off, & no responsibility.

Now I conclude that the terms of the Excursion are settled, if they are satisfactory to Harry & Mary. Otherwise, not even God can settle them, with all His talents.

Oh, keep on dodging & dodging around, & the first thing you know, you'll make a slip of the pen & actually invite me to Fairhaven for a weekend—I never saw such a surreptitious old animal! Tell me—however, a Clemens has arrived. I have never heard of him before, but I will rush this letter to the mail & put on some clothes & see him.

With love to all—including the Coe baby, if there really is one, for you are such a—well, so unbelievable! [MTP; not in MTHHR].

Sam also inscribed a copy of Eve's Diary with an aphorism to Katy Murray: "The main difference between a cat & a lie is, that the cat has only 9 lives. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / Katy Murray's birthday. / Sept. 1/07." [MTP].

Sam also inscribed copies of HF and JA to Dorothy Quick on her eleventh birthday [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King slept right through last night without whiskey or other aids. And this first day of September has been a sweet kind of a day. Only one grimey thing happened. I was busy writing when the telephone rang and a Dr. Clemens said he would like to call on the King. With the King's permission he came—he and his wife. She was a neat little woman, but he was fat and pudgy and impossible and rasped the King pretty badly. The surrey which was to take us to the Mortimers for tea was waiting and the King shouted up to me twice to say that we must go. He had been having a deadly time—for there wasn't anything to say to that “damned Jay from the backwoods of Mo.” At the Mortimers we had a pleasant hour—no, less. This morning the King had discovered a marvelous Mona Lisa in Simplicissimus—the only satisfactory Mona Lisa he has ever seen. Of course it was in caricature, and he was so happy over it, that he carried it over to the Mortimers, and they were very much amused by it. The talk ran onto Matthew Arnold and Mrs. Mortimer spoke of her dislike of him as a personality. And the King told of his only talk with Arnold when they chatted in a serious way of Dr. John Brown (for the King had visited him in Edinburgh). After the little chat Arnold was heard to say “Can't Clemens ever be serious?” He was a malicious and illbred creature and when he was over here found fault with everything. He had been invited to dine with the Aldriches who at that time lived out in Cambridge—Howells was there, and Dr. Holmes was there too, and was so apologetic because he was 3 minutes late. But the chief guest of the evening didn't arrive for half an hour, and came blustering in making no excuse for his tardiness.

Yes—it's fine to go to the Mortimers—with the King—it would be terrible to have to go without him, even if their house is full of very beautiful things, & rugs [MTP TS 98; also in part, Gribben 644]. Note: Gribben also cites a letter from Sam [to Albert Langen] praising Ragnvald Blix's comic drawings of old masterpieces, then appearing in the German humor magazine Simplicissimus [ibid.] Gerrit S. Clemens, M.D. and wife from Texas. The wife wrote an appreciative note on Feb. 25, 1908 referring to this visit. See entry.

September 2 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: The King had been up in my study telephoning to Dorothy [Quick] this morning, & when we went back to his room to go on with the morning business we found the smell of tobacco pretty strong & he said it smelt “as if a stuffy old archangel had been in there”. I told him that Santa & I love the smell of an archangel. He said “yes, the smell of young ones, but not the stale old ones.”

Yesterday came word that the young woman Mrs. Oley [sic Olney] had written a conspicuous interview with Mark Twain published in the Sunday World August 25 with the imprint of his hand as illustration, also one of Mr. Edison's. Mr. Clemens in a rage dictated a letter to Mr. Pulitzer [MTP TS 99]. Note: In her Aug. 27 entry, Lyon had reported that Channez Huntington Olney's NY World article appeared on Friday, Aug. 23, but this was “news” received and incorrect.

William L. Alden wrote from Augusta, Ga. to ask Sam about a discrepancy he noticed between LM and the Feb. issue of NAR with Sam's autobiography segment—did he pay Horace Bixby $500 as in LM or $100 as in the NAR segment? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, “The big part was the 100 which I had to pay in advance / made at a time when I could still remember / The statement in Life on the Miss. is worthier credit than a statement made from memory 31 years afterward”

Virginia Frazer Boyle wrote to invite Sam to the Memphis Waterways convention Oct. 4-5 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answer her some how or other”

Charles E. Cochrane wrote on Brighton Beach Hotel, NY notepaper to Sam: “Last week acting upon your suggestion I submitted my double acrostic card for Plasmon's success to your Mr. Ashcroft, who having stated the company would not likely do any advertising till Jan '08, I asked to return my card. He did so.” But Sam had not returned the other two cards sent [MTP].

J.E. Kerr, M.D. wrote from Lilesville, N.C. to ask Sam for 5 minutes interview during Kerr's upcoming trip to NY [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Sept. 9 '07”

F.H. Meserve for Deering Milliken & Co. wrote from NYC to Sam. Meserve had a negative from which a portrait was made in his Collection of Americana. Who were the two men with Sam? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “David Gray on the left—Geo. Alfred Townsend right.” The picture was taken in 1870 in Washington, D.C. see Meltzer, p.126 .

H.J. Seiferth for The Daily Picayune, N. Orleans, wrote to ask Sam if he might use “Editorial Wild Oats” in a planned column. Siefert was the City Editor [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd. Sept. 9 ‘07”

William M. Stewart wrote from Bullfrog, Nevada to Sam. (Only the envelope survives, postmarked Rhyolite, Nev.) [MTP].

September 3 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Dorothy arrived. / Such a very very nice dinner at the Sampsons. Mr. [Charles E.] Sampson is the head of that house, for even the fine beautiful table linen is exquisitely marked with his initials & the silver too, has his lettering. He was very delightful. He told me how when he was a boy he crossed from Europe on the steamer with Emerson & how dear Emerson was, waiting on his sister who was an invalid [MTP TS 99-100].

H.H. Rogers sent a telegram from New Bedford, Mass. to Sam. “Letter received we can never settle matters by coresspondance [sic] the Kanawha will be coming to Fair Haven the latter part of this week Broughton can give you details at his office please come here and arrange the virginian matter pleas advise” [MTHHR 637]. Note: the “Virginian matter” was their trip to Jamestown on the Kananha; see IVL Sept. 4 entry.

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to clarify a telephone message that Sam could not come to his house on the 12th nor lunch with President Roosevelt on the 13th as hoped [MTP].

Daniel Frohman wrote from NYC to Sam: “Thank you for your notification about what Chanez Olcott [sic Channez Olney] is doing with the card of mine. I never gave her this card, and she is sailing under false colors. / I am sorry you have been caused inconvenience by her wrong doing, and I shall take instant means to stop her from using this card further. ...P.S. After next week, you must come to the Lyceum and see Miss Illington in “THE THIEF”, some time” [MTP].

F.F. Gilmore for Our Country, Louisville, Ky. wrote to send Sam a copy of their magazine and to ask if there was a real person named Col. Sellers. Also, “It may be of interest to you to let you know that Will. S. Hayse, who recently died in this city, had agreed to give us an article recalling ...Mark Twain, where he and you met so often on the river. / Will you not send us a photograph of yourself and allow us to use it?” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Sept. 9 ‘07”

September 4 Wednesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to William Webster Ellsworth.

Looks as if he is going to have that boy on his hands permanently & he thinks of course he must draw on the fund. But if he will go personally & talk to one person a day for 30 days he can get 30 men in a month to contribute an average of 15 dollars a year. & if he is willing to try another month, he will probably get as many more. Mr. Clemens has tried raising funds but has never found it successful. It will be necessary to talk to the men or women themselves & you can raise a pension of any amount you choose. & for any object. But people do not pay attention to letters. When you have captured 20 of those 15 dollar people you can add Mr. Clemens for 15 dollars [MTP].

William Webster Ellsworth wrote to solicit Sam to help the Pond boy (James B. Pond, Jr. “Bim”) see Sam’s reply above [MTP].

In the evening Dorothy Quick arrived for a week’s visit [Sept. 5 to Clara].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "We have the plans nearly made to go down to Jamestown on the 22nd for the Robert Fulton Day. Mr. Clemens expects to go on Mr. Rogers's yacht and Mother and I are going on one of the old Dominion boats" [MTP TS 100].

Ralph S. Tebbutt wrote from Sandusky, Ohio to solicit Sam to accept a painting [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "No Ans."

In Sam's A.D. for the day: "I have not read Nietzsche or Ibsen, nor any other philosopher....Nietzsche published his book, and was at once pronounced crazy by the world—by a world which included tens of thousands of bright, sane men who believed exactly as Nietzsche believed but concealed the fact and scoffed at Nietzsche. What a coward ever man is!" [Gribben 508].

Sam's A.D. of this day titled "What is Man?" covered the Hartford Monday Evening Club's objections to the philosophy behind this piece; it's anonymous publication by DeVinne and the preface; the segment was selected for MTE [239-43].

September 5 Thursday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Clara, now at the Hotel Victoria, Boston.

I, also, should have been disappointed dearheart, at your not coming, but that I am aware that there is no occasion to expect you until you arrive. And so while I knew you might come, & was strongly hoping you would, I was not really expecting it. Paine's conundrum fits you as well as it fits me: "Why is Mr. Clemens's mind like a time-table?"

"Because it is subject to change without notice."

However, I knew you hadn't any business to add the journey to your other & necessary fatigues, therefore I thought it likely [Dr. Robert] Halsey would stop you, as it was his duty to do. You were not in any shape to come among tonsillitis germs safely; & I am glad you kept away from the danger.

Oh yes, I'm very prominent. In the matter of dethroning me you will find you've got your work cut out for you, my dearest.

I want to hear the song. I hope it will meet your highest expectations. Also I want to hear you sing that haunting ballad, "Loch Lomond."

I was intending to go & visit the Doubledays & the President (on business) ten days hence, but have given it up, the business being not ready.

I shall probably run up to Fairhaven for a day, a week hence, on the Jamestown business.

Dorothy arrived yesterday evening, to stay 6 days, & is the same Dorothy—which is high promise.

With lots of hugs & kisses, & hoping that you are still improving— [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "We drove over the Long Pond to call on Mrs. Townsend" [MTP TS 100].

Charles, for Boyajian Brothers, Oriental rugs wrote to advise Sam that one of his rugs had a large hole, which would require cutting and resizing the carpet to fix [MTP].

Harper & Brothers wrote to advise that they'd written to Miss Jackson "declining her adaptation of" P&P; that the publication by another house would be copyright violation. "In this connection, we would say that there might be a field some time for an adaptation of this and other of your works for schools" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Their decision as regards Miss Jackson is entirely correct"

September 6 Friday – In his A.D. of Oct. 5, Sam wrote of having Dorothy Quick this week as a guest.

...we had her delightful society during seven days and nights. She is just eleven years old, and seems to be made of watch-springs and happiness. The child was never still a moment, when she wasn't asleep, and she lit up this place like the sun. It was a tremendous week, and an uninterruptedly joyful one for us all. After she was gone, and silence and solitude had resumed their sway, we felt as if we had been through a storm in heaven.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Dorothy is possessed with the idea of becoming a writer of literature, and particularly of romance, and it was a precious privilege to me to egg her on, and beguile her into working her imagination. I never betrayed myself with a laugh, but the strain which I had to put upon every muscle and nerve and tendon in me, to keep from breaking out, almost made a physical wreck of me sometimes. She is swift with the pen, she is hampered by no hesitations when she is dictating, and she is even a more desperate speller than ever Susy was. We began our mornings early—as early as half-past eight and from that time until nine in the evening there were no breaks in our industries. I say our industries because I always assisted her in them until I broke down at noon; then Miss Lyon stood a watch till about three; then I resumed my watch. In order to save myself from perishing, I usually persuaded Dorothy to devote this half-afternoon watch to literature. By grace of this subterfuge, I was enabled to lie down and perform; I lay on one lounge on the back porch and she on another one at my side; then she dictated her stories glibly, and I set them down. When a story was finished I dictated it to her from my manuscript, and she wrote it down. I got around telling her why I observed this practice; I didn't want her to know my reason, which was that I wanted the tale in her own brisk and tumultuous handwriting, adorned with her own punctuation—I mean the absence of it—and steeped in the charm of her incomparable spelling. [...] One day she dictated an Indian romance, and I set it down. The little rascal was all innocence and candor, and was seldom suspicious, but it cost me many lies to keep her so, because every now and then as the sentences fell felicitously from her lips they hit me hard, and my suppressed laughter made my body shake; and when she detected that, I could notice a vague suspicion in her voice when she would ask what was the matter with me. The answer which came nearest to satisfying her was that I was feeling a little chilly; but that also had another effect, which was not a happy one for me, for it aroused her affectionate solicitude and she would not rest until I had taken some whisky to keep me from catching cold. Before we got through with the brief Indian tale...the loving little creature had inflicted so many whiskies on my that my efficiency as an amanuensis was a little damaged and rickety; and if the tale had gone on a little longer I should have been incapable.

[Sam inserted her tale here]

After this she reeled off this masterful tale just as she had punctuated it—without a pause anywhere, and just as if Henry's adventures were passing before her eyes at the moment and she was simply setting them down according to facts. I was glad when "Margearet" got her young man safely out to the edge of the forest where they lived happily ever afterwards—without the formality of a marriage—for I thought for a moment that she was going to furnish the pair a family without any superfluous preliminaries and I would get another whisky-drench by consequence [MTAq 73-5].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I've made some superb photographs of the King. They are as active and as spirited as battleships. Have made some with Dorothy too" [MTP TS 100]. Note: Dorothy Quick was visiting.

Thomas Raynesford Lounsbury wrote from New Haven to secure Sam's photo and autograph for Mrs. Frank Hyde, a Kentuckian, second wife and now widow of Frank Hyde, Hartford lawyer [MTP].

Samuel E. Moffett wrote to Miss Lyon on Collier's letterhead; it would be some time before he could go to Washington [MTP].

September 7 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Dinner at the Deacons, and it was very lovely. I sat between Mr. Deacon and Mr. Condert, the latter is very interesting, and we bored each other to a nicety. But Mr. Deacon always has some good prosy interesting thing to talk about. He was telling me about Vernon Lee, and her extreme plainness and her delightfulness; and about her half brother Mr. Hamilton. He met them in Florence years ago, at a time when Hamilton was a great invalid; so great an invalid that the doctors could do no more for him. He was in his room with his nurse and his private secretary waiting for death; knowing and saying that it was in the room; when with great suddenness he sat up in his bed, and said "I am well. I am perfectly well!" and he was. When I asked Mr. Deacon to explain the wonder of it, he said that there had been a lesion of the brain, and that when it cleared, the blood forced its way to the diseased part, so a healthy condition ensued immediately [MTP TS 101].

William Lamb wrote from Norfolk, Va. to invite Sam to the 9th Triennial Council of Phi Beta Kappa in Old Williamsburg next Thursday, Sept. 12 [MTP].

In Sam's A.D. "Three days ago the [NY] World newspaper convicted Mr. Roosevelt beyond redemption of having bought his election to the Presidency with money" [Gribben 507].

Of the selections from Twain's A.D.'s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto's choices, was "The President as Advertiser," dictated this day, comprised of commentary on news article allegations of bribery in T.R.'s election and criticism of his self-serving showmanship [14-19].

September 8 Sunday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote his june-bug...bird of paradise aphorism to Dorothy Quick [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Baker, . Miss Baldwin, Mr. Ogden and Mr. McKim sauntered in for tea this afternoon. They were wise and left before we were ready to have them go. Santa has written that she wants to give a concert here for Mary Lawton. The King was upset by the suggestion, for as he truly says it would be a "bidding for reluctant courtesies" to have a concert here. If these people were to ask C.C. to sing here that would be one thing—and the King said "if she comes here to sing in public, then I must leave Tuxedo. (A lovely stray kitten is sitting here on my table and disturbing this writing. Reaching out a white paw to give my pen a dab) [MTP TS 101]. Note: George Barr Baker, Gertrude H. Baldwin, Robert C. Ogden, and Charles Follen McKim.

Florence Macalister wrote to point out an error of genealogy in Mary Baker Eddy's work, and referencing p. 109 of Sam's CS book about her grandfather, Sir John McNeill [MTP].

Chapters from "My Autobiography—XXII" ran in the N.A.R. p.8-21.

September 9 Monday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Samuel E. Moffett. "Mr. Clemens asks me to thank you for sending to Washington for the lists for him. It was a pity you missed him so frequently, but we shall be back in New York about the first of November, not before I believe" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Tablecloth. / Colonel Harvey came again to spend a night and talk. But Dorothy was here and made an interruption to everything it seemed to me, who am now a little tired. But he got the King's consent—his glad consent—to syndicate the autobiography in newspapers throughout the country and so the King will reach his "submerged clientele". It will not bring him in a penny though. If anyone gets anything it will be the Harpers and they will not get much for newspapers do not pay much for matter—no matter how great—which has already been published. It will be a good advertisement for the King's books though [MTP TS 101-102].

F.W. Baumhoff & C.M. Keys & Mrs. F.W. Biebinger wrote for Missouri Old Folks Sunshine Home to solicit support from Sam [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Sept. 16, '07"

George W. Keates, Interior decorator per E.W. Ward wrote to solicit Sam for their services on his Redding home [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote from Elmira, NY to Sam having rec'd Lyon's letter of Aug. 31 inviting him and Edward and Julie Loomis to visit the first week of Oct. Since Julie could not make it then he felt it best to postpone, as he claimed to be "a mighty poor visitor myself" [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II wrote a letter full of details about the Hope-Jones Organ Co. and stock [MTP].

Hugh Gordon Miller for NY State Commission to the Jamestown Exposition wrote to invite Sam to a banquet at the Exposition grounds, Sept. 23 at 7 p.m. [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the back of the letter, “Will take the admiral Waterbird himself / Has no land connections”

Anna R. Shourds wrote from Buffalo, NY, one-line of admiration for Twain’s books [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Sept. 9 ‘07”

September 10 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “No. C.S. advertisements” [MTP TS 102].

Kate B. Lee wrote to ask Sam to write a piece on seasickness, as she suffered from it for two whole days and couldn’t explain it to friends [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Sept. 16, ‘07”

Hugh Gordon Miller for Jamestown Exposition wrote to Sam with plans and program for the Sept. 23 ceremonies, where Sam had agreed to speak [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on another slip dated Sept. 16, ‘07: “Write to Miller: Consound—I must be speaker No 3 at the banquet—then I can always say privately to speaker No 2, would you mind changing places with me?”

Lucia Shepardson wrote from Pacific Grove, Calif. to ask Sam if the Sheppherdson of the Grangerford feud in HF was taken from her relative Elija Shepardson [MTP].

Margaret H. Steen wrote to ask Sam if there was a chance he might give a lecture for the Alpha and Phi Kappa Societies of Smith College [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Sept. 16, ‘07”

September 11 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: I had what the King calls “an adventure” this rainy morning. A Mr. Ullman, a man who does writing for newspaper syndicates came out by appointment to see me and so write an article about the way the King spends his day. He was planning to make it seem as if he had really had “a day with Mark Twain” and only after continued determination on my part would he consent to have the interview come through me. He is to submit his ms. to me. When that was promised I could and did talk freely and we had a very good time. He is full of a fine and just appreciation of the King, and when I went up and told the King about it after Ullman had gone, he was pleased. The King was playing with Dorothy; playing games, and having her go on with her part of the Authors’ League [MTP TS 102]. Note: Albert E. Ullman.

I.L. Baëza wrote from NYC to Sam looking to find his “Beef Contract” article [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Sept. 30”; “In Sketches Old & New / Facts in the Case of the Great Beef Contract”

Walter Sands Mills, M.D. for The Homeopathic Medical Society of the County of New York wrote to invite Sam to appear for their charity on Nov. 11 to celebrate their 50th Anniversary [MTP].

David A. Munro wrote to Sam enclosing the proof of his 23rd chapter Autobiography [MTP].

September 12 Thursday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam began a letter to Dorothy Quick who had left with Miss Lyon for New York City. Clemens added to the letter on Sept. 13 and 14. “Dorothy dear, you are gone, & I am dissatisfied” [MTAq 62].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today I took Dorothy to New York and went on up to Redding to see Lyonesse and the King’s house. But before I left Tuxedo the King said in substance “I see that Robert Porter is coming in on the Lusitania, we’ll send him a wireless and have him here for over Sunday. He won’t come, but we’ve done our duty when we send that message.” William met me on the N.Y. side, put me on my train and I was met by Lounsbury at the little Redding station. As we drove along L pointed laconically to a height in the distance, and there the King's house stood, supreme and lovely, for he outlines are all up and it is going to be beautiful. But Lyonesse is my delight. Eugene Adams is working away at it. The triple windows are in and the shingling is 2 parts done and when Adams tore off the plaster from the ceiling in the long room he revealed what will be a most beautiful old oak ceiling, for the beams are splendid and the flooring above is a darling color. It is going to be glorious. The bed from Halifax is stretched along on its side up stairs (they had to put it in the house while the side of the house was open). It's posts are 7½ feet high, and the ceilings are 6¾ feet, so it must be cut down and I'll use the cut out part for little table legs. I climbed up into the King's house, and the scaling of those ladders and the descending by way of them was a night-mare-like journey for me [MTP TS 103]. Note: Robert Percival Porter.

George Grantham Bain wrote to ask Sam if Charles Duprez, their photographer, could take some pictures of Clemens at home in Tuxedo. Bain reminded Sam of his promise to extend the courtesy [MTP]. Note: Bain syndicated articles for ten US papers and several in Europe.

William Webster Ellsworth wrote on Century Co. notepaper to thank Sam for $50 sent in support of the Pond boy. "S.L. Clemens Esq., —I mean Doctor of something, but I can't remember just what, —deserves to be Doctor of Everything" [MTP].

Howells & Stokes wrote to enclose a bill of $209.35 from Harry Lounsbury for materials [MTP].

Florence Duncan Jones wrote from Boston to ask Sam about some mss. she'd sent on Mrs. Eddy. Lyons had asked "about a month ago" if "she could keep thme a little longer." She'd used "G. Mann" as a pseudonym [MTP].

Julia Langdon Loomis wrote regrets to Sam that it was "near impossible" for them to get away this fall [MTP].

John W. Postgate wrote from Cambridge, England to Sam. Postgate was a stranger to Clemens; a lecturer on comparative syntax in Greek and Latin. Postgate recalled as a student ordering the Select Works of Mark Twain and having it pass by "father's ignorance" as a "classic." Congratulations on his degree. Postgate was interested in dramatizing JA [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

September 13 Friday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam added to his Sept. 12 to Dorothy Quick.

You are still gone, & I am still dissatisfied.

Subsequently.

You are still gone, & I am still more dissatisfied than ever. This is a long day.

Homeward the bandit plods her weary way and leaves the world to darkness & to me.

I will to bed [MTAq 62]. Note: Cooley points out Sam is parodying Thomas Gray's "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard": "The plowman homeward plods his weary way, / And leaves the world to darkness and me." Sam signed one of his photographs for Dorothy with this date.

Dorothy Quick wrote from Plainfield, N.J. to Sam.

My Dear Mr. Clemens / I have arrived safely of course I always do. I find it very hot here. to hot for me I miss you very much but I can write to you and have letters which will be very very nice I hope Miss Lyon got home safely. I am afraid I can not write any more but send lots and lots of love to you and Miss Lyon / your very loving / Dorothy [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Isabel Lyon's journal: I stayed all night at the Brevoort. Will came back with me for luncheon and after he left the King and I took a placid drive around the lake. We didn't talk a bit, we were just happy, resting [MTP TS 103-104]. Note: "Will" was Charles E. Wark, Clara's accompanist.

Bowring & Co. wrote to Ashcroft about a refund check for Clara's unused passage [MTP].

Robert Percival Porter wrote to Sam on The Buckingham Hotel, NY letterhead. "It was such a joy to get your Marconi ... on the Lusitania & then to find Mr. Ashcroft on the dock. I shall be so glad to come on the train Mr. Ashcroft suggested but so sorry that I am coming without Mrs. Porter" [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

September 14 Saturday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam finished his Sept. 12, 13 to Dorothy Quick.

Which I did [go to bed]. But a cricket was hiding somewhere in the room, & continuously & monotonously shrieking. I endured it an hour (until 10), then removed to another room. I returned at 11, at 1, at 4, but was driven out each time.

Last night he drove me out at 9.30, & I returned no more. To-night Miss Lyon will occupy my room, & capture him if possible.

===

Meantime your letter has come, you very dear child, & I think it is the best typewritten handwriting I have ever seen. I would not have believed a type-machine could spell so well. I'm a-missing you, Dorothy.

[Sam sketched a cricket and an axe here]

(Anyway, I think it's an axe, but some think it's a bonnet.) But it's for that cricket when I get him—I am quite certain as to that.

I'm going to Fairhaven, Mass, day after tomorrow—Monday—and return Thursday night.

I sail for Jamestown three days later, to be several days.

===

I've had a misfortune, dear: a page of the Indian story is missing. I shall find it, but meantime I want you to rewrite it—it's good practice—and send it here.

With lots of love, you dear little rascal— [MTAq 62-3]. Note: Cooley points out that Dorothy's clear and regular script is the point of Sam's reference to her "typewritten handwriting."

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Porter did arrive. He did accept the King's wireless invitation and will be here until Monday. He is a sturdy, chunky Englishman, and very agreeable and hearty. He enjoyed his food and the house and Tuxedo and seemingly everything. He is a nice guest to have.

The King was up here in my study waiting for something, and the telephone rang. Mrs. Kane was at it to say that Mrs. Walker had "pre-punctually" presented her with a grand-daughter and then the King went down stairs to write a note to that baby—rebuking her for arriving ahead of time and spoiling all the fun of preparing a mammoth birthday party for her [MTP TS 104]. Note: Robert Percival Porter (1852-1917), Englishman by birth, founded and edited the New York Press in 1887 and left it in 1894. He was chosen as Superintendent of the 1890 Census under President Harrison. He authored several books on protectionism and Japanese history.

Albert E. Ullman for Underwood & Underwood wrote to Lyon about an article on Twain [MTP].

September 15 Sunday – Sam inscribed a copy of IA with his "truth....economise" aphorism to Miss Josephine S. Hobby, his stenographer for his autobiographical dictations [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: I wrote a poem for T.

Such a depression I have after people have been dining here. It's lovely to have them, but I perish over them, too. Mr. and Mrs. Sampson and Lucia Hull have been here this evening. The King has been so troubled over publishing Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven that he has been collecting opinions. Tonight he read parts of it to the guests, but they have no comment to make save one of approval. I am glad. This morning I had an hour with the King. He hadn't slept over well because there is a cricket in his room, but he was full of sweet words and savage ones too, and he finished all by reading the recent dictation about meeting Lady Stanley in London and the recent finding of the Holy Grail. It is a good piece of dictating. We drove around the Nigger Pond Road this afternoon, and Mr. Porter does take a lovely and wholesome interest in the place. I am so glad we asked for Lucia Hull, for Mr. Porter liked her, and after she left paid her the vast compliment of saying that you can hunt the world over and not find another girl like her for frankness, etc. [MTP TS 104-105]. Note: Robert P. Porter of Oxford England was visiting.

Alma Parker Harvey (Mrs. George Harvey) wrote from Deal, NJ to Sam. "I sent you two nightshirts like same George said that you liked. I hope that you will receive them and ... they are really like the one you wore the night that you were here. It gave us great pleasure to have you with us even for one night. Our only regret was that you could not stay longer "[MTP]. Note: it is not clear just what night prior to this Sam spent at Deal with the Harveys.

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam. "I am quite sure you have forgotten me and I am very unhappy it is ever and ever so long since I got a real letter from you I was delighted with our skeletons I tried and tried but could not do it at all in fact we all tried you will have to show me how[.] I do wish you would come and spend some Saturday and Sunday with me[.] I miss you so much...I am in love with my school and the teachers. / With lots and lots of love and a hundred kisses" [MTP]. Note: in file a staff note informs that Dorothy started school in Plainfield this day; also that "skeletons" mentioned in Quick's book, Enchantment, p. 149

September 16 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: This morning the King went away on the 11:50 train to be met by Ashcroft and go by the New Bedford boat "Maine", up to Fairhaven to see Mr. Rogers, who has been a very ill man. The King looked very handsome in his pale grey travelling suit. I was left as I always am, with a great sense of loneliness, as the jigger went noisily away.

Just as I was about to sit down to dinner I was called to the telephone and a Mr. Thomas of the N.Y. Journal wanted to see Mr. Clemens to get an expression from him as to the snags the president would be apt to meet in the Lower Mississippi. When I told him the King was not home he asked to see me and came out. He had more than the usual difficulties in getting out here from the station—the police wouldn't let him pass without first telephoning to me, and when he arrived, although he said he was the brother of Augustus Thomas he didn't really look as if he could be the brother of a man of note. But he was interesting, and we had a talk of over an hour. He has a place in Ridgefield and when I told him we half expected to be in Redding next summer he said he was going to give me a present—2 game cocks. "More graft", the King said when I told him [MTP TS 105-106].

Florence Duncan Jones wrote to Isabel Lyon [MTP].

C.F. Stromeyer, Furniture and Upholstery, NYC wrote to Lyon About moving a table [MTP].

September 17 Tuesday – Sam left on the steamer Maine for New Bedford, Mass. to be a guest of H.H. Rogers at his Fairhaven home. Rogers was quite ill after a stroke [NY Times, Sept. 18, p.1].

H. H. ROGERS DRIVES AUTO.

Has Mark Twain as Guest—Said to be Crippled by Apoplexy.
Special to The New York Times.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Sept. 17—Henry H. Rogers and Samuel L. Clemens, "Mark Twain," were the cynosure of all eyes as they drove about the center of the city today in Mr. Rogers's electric victoria, with Mr.

Rogers steering the machine. Mr. Clemens arrived on the steamer Maine this morning to be the guest of Mr. Rogers at his Fairhaven residence.

Mr. Rogers and the author made a stop at the First National Bank to call on Walter P. Winsor of the bank, who is a close personal friend of Mr. Rogers. They remained there for about fifteen minutes and then proceeded a short distance up the street, stopping again at a store where Mr. Rogers purchased a newspaper.

Mr. Clemens was left alone in the car and in an instant it started to move, for Mr. Rogers had failed to turn the switch fully off. Mr. Clemens hesitated a moment and then he hopped out and chased Mr. Rogers into the store.

"She started and I got out," he said.

Mr. Rogers laughed and rescued his machine, which has a speed limit of about six miles an hour.

Mr. Clemens was attired in his customary suit of white, and which his black derby formed a sharp contrast.

Mr. Rogers shows the effect of his illness in his face, which is white and drawn. He showed no signs of inability to use his limbs, however, and managed his car with seeming ease, though in alighting and walking about he moved with deliberation and his step was less brisk than formerly.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King has arrived at New Bedford. The morning papers are full of the news of Mr. Rogers's illness being caused by a stroke of apoplexy on July 22nd. We have known nothing whatever about it. When I telephoned Mrs. Rogers, she said he was in his usual condition when he had a stroke that muffled his speech so that he could not be understood at all for a week, and his left arm and leg were affected. A rumor ran out into the world that Mr. Rogers was dead, a few weeks ago, and there nearly was a panic in Wall Street. That was denied, and then came the great demand, I mean to law suits of the Standard Oil which demanded Mr. Rogers's presence as a witness. The Doctors say it would kill him to go on the witness stand and they have to hedge one way or another continually.

Miss Herrick came in to say that she is going away and I asked her to stay for dinner. I was glad of a human being besides a servant, for I have been having a hellish time with Delia [MTP TS 106].

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam. "I have not yet received the marked passages respecting Colonel Sellers that you want to have left out of the newspaper printing. To make sure that there shall be no slip, I think that it would be well to pass the pages down as soon as convenient. ... / The time is growing short for the Christmas number of the Magazine and the boys are after me constantly to know about your decision. The number is going to be so big and involves so many kinds of printing that a lot of extra time has to be given to it. Please post me about this as soon as you can" [MTP].

William H. Hill for Israel Putnam Camp Ground Commission wrote from Redding, Conn. to advise Sam that he'd had two insurance policies written on the new Redding house during construction, each for $15,000 [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote twice to Lyon on dramatization contracts and matters [MTP].

September 18 Wednesday – Sam was in Fairhaven, Mass. visiting the Rogers family.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "T replied to the poem" [MTP TS 106].

Helen M. De Muth wrote from Crofton, Pa to Sam, sending him a photo of her (which also included Dorothy Quick) taken on the Minnetonka, [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Sept. 18, '07"

Robert W. Vonnoh wrote from NYC to interest Sam in the cooperative owning of a NYC building. He enclosed a letter from Howells, which was returned [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Mr Clemens thanks you for your letter & wishes he were able to make plans for a city home etc. Presently will return Mr. Howells's letter"

September 19 Thursday – Sam, in Fairhaven, Mass., wrote the date and his signature in a book for blottings, “The Ghosts of My Friends”—possibly to General and Mrs. Edward McCook [MTP].

Isabel Lyon wrote to Dorothy Quick

Dearest Dorothy: / This is just the beginning of the photographs that I am to send you. The others have not yet arrived from N.Y. Mr. Wark developed the Indian Princess & cut down the photo a little, but I think that it improves it and isn't it lovely? Mr. Clemens is away & will not be home until some time on Friday. It is very desolate without him. But to relieve the situation a beautiful young grey & white cat followed Claude & Katie home one night not long since, in fact since Mr. Clemens went away, & the beautiful creature has spent a lot of time with me.

Thank you very much too for the little photos you sent; they are nice, but do not forget that you are going to send me the whole batch of negatives. I quite forgot to give you the sixty-cents, or the roll of films for the one I am having developed, so here is the check for 60 cents dear.

Mr. Robert P. Porter of Oxford who spent last Sunday here, gave me these English cigar bands; have you any like them?

With much love to you dear, & warm regards to your mother, & to your grandfather I am yours always...[MTAq 64]. Note: Sam was in Fairhaven visiting the Rogers clan.

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam: “Perhaps you will be interested in reading this letter from Mr. Lockwood Kipling. At all events, I send it on.” He also had a friend, Herbert Plimpton, who had been after him for five years to get an autographed portrait of Twain [MTP].

William M. Clemens wrote from NYC to Sam: “Enclosed bill and dun reached me from Plymouth, England. As I do not wear English clothes, I think perhaps it may be intended for you and am sending it to you” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “This is that Will M. Clemens who was born a fraud—will remain one”; but this was not the Will M. but another Clemens, William M. Clemens, a private investigator in NYC.

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Lyon asking if Miss Andrews of their Paris offices could arrange for the dramatization of “Aurelia's Unfortunate Young Man” [MTP].

Hamilton Wright, Ed. Overland Monthly, S.F. wrote to Sam, “very anxious to get an article” [MTP].

James B. Sutherland wrote from Montreal to congratulate Sam on his Oxford honors and to send two letters he thought might interest, one from a “Scholarly Scotchman.” George Iles a mutual friend [MTP].

September 20 Friday – Sam left Fairhaven, Mass. early in the morning on the Kanawha. H.H. Rogers did not accompany him, but Harry and Mary Rogers did [NY Times, Sept. 21, p.18]. Sam arrived in Tuxedo Park, N.Y. in the evening and wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

Jean dear, I am back from Fairhaven, & shall leave early in the morning for New York & Jamestown, to be gone until midnight of Monday, when we shall get up the anchor & sail back home. But before I address myself to sleep I must answer your question about mare's milk. It is the chief food of the peasants along the Volga. They drink it warm from the animal. The American & English physicians employ vast quantities of it (artificially manufactured) in their practice. It will stay on a stomach that refuses all other nourishment. It quickly & wonderfully restores the strength of the patients perishing of weakness & starvation. Kumiss is its name. I remember 2 cases in Hartford—Miss Williams & our neighbor Holbrook: it raised them from their deathbeds.

I'm very very sleepy; Good-night dearheart. With love & kisses— [MTP].

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

I hope you are ever so much better to-day, & I do also hope that it was not the billiards that sent you to bed with that pain—though I very much fear that it was, & I am so sorry.

Harry sails tomorrow night—I shall go on board in the afternoon. We shall hurry through, at Jamestown, as quickly as possible, so that we can return the yacht to you. Mary thinks we can sail homeward at midnight Monday—so that is what we shall do.

It may interest Mrs. Broughton to have the latest news from that cricket. After I left for Fairhaven Monday, Miss Lyon instituted a search for him and kept it up, off & on till midnight—no success. Then she went to bed there, & he kept her awake until 3, then drove her out.

The entire household continued the search on Tuesday & Wednesday & Thursday, & on each of these nights the butler tried to sleep in the room, but was driven out. I suppose I shall be driven out to-night.

No that news is all for Mrs. Broughton—there isn't any for you, at all, for not anything has happened here since I went away, except that cricket.

So I send my love ... [MTHHR 637-8].

In Tuxedo, Sam also signed a copy of HF with this date to Mrs. Cutting [MTP: Parke-Bernet catalogs, No. 1201, Nov. 27, 1950, Item 152]. Note: the 1908 Tuxedo Club Book lists three Cutting men with membership years: R. Bayard Cutting (1898), R. Fulton Cutting (1885) and Wm. Bayard Cutting (1885).

William DeMuth, Pipes & Smokers articles wrote sending a Wellington Pipe, which he thought “is about the nearest to the one” described by Twain as “ideal” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, “I am acquainted with the Peterson pipe & for many years have considered it the best pipe there is & I thank him heartily for the very pretty pipe”

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens / I spent Saturday and Sunday with my uncle and just received your letter and was very glad to get it I am very glad you had such a nice time at Jamestown My uncle invited Mother and I to go down last week but Mother thought it would be too much for me so we did not go I am going to see Robert Mantell in King Lear to-night I know he will be fine in it we have a very nice theater out here and all the best actors come out here I enclose some pictures for you I also sent Miss Lyon a lot I am having a lovely time at school and like it very much I must close now as it is dinner time.

with lots and lots of love hugs and kissed I am your loving little / Dorothy [MTAq 65].

September 21 Saturday – Early in the morning Sam left Tuxedo Park for N.Y.C., where he boarded the Kanawha and left for Jamestown, Va. with Harry Rogers and his wife Mary Benjamin Rogers, to attend the Robert Fulton Day celebration. Sam would preside at the ceremonies.

Isabel Lyon's journal: We started for town at 9:24, the King to go to the yacht (Ashcroft met him) and I down to the old Dominion Line to meet mother. We lunched at a queer little restaurant on West Street, walking blocks to find some place besides the sailor saloons and such places, and then we went back to the Hamilton where we made ourselves comfortable and waited for her to sail out at 3 o'clock. We left a crashing thunderstorm behind us, and sailed into another one and later the moon sailed serenely up over her glorious track in the sea. The Captain who had been given a letter about me found me by accident, and he was a delightful long lank man of 60-odd. He took us to his cabin, and we had a darling time with him, for he has a keen sense of humor and talked about the King and the King's books, for he has read and reread them all [MTP TS 107].

Frances M. Hoyt wrote from Tuxedo Park, NY to invite Sam and Miss Lyon and “a few friends” for tea on Saturday afternoon Sept. 21 at 5 p.m. to meet her niece, Mrs. Henry Ludlow Beadel [MTP].

George Thomson Wilson for Pilgrims of the U.S. sent a printed invitation for a banquet on Sept. 21 in honor of the Lord Bishop of London. Tickets $12 each [MTP].

September 22 Sunday – The New York Times, “Mark Twain Skipper of Rogers’s Yacht,” p.9 reported the Kanawha and Cornelius Vanderbilt’s steam yacht North Star leaving for Jamestown.

The North Star and the Kanawha are expected to arrive back in New York early Thursday morning, and it was rumored yesterday that Mark Twain was anxious to test the speeding qualities of the two vessels on the return journey. Whether Col. Heistand will consent to try conclusions with the Kanawha is another question. The North Star is a larger vessel than the Kanawha, her gross tonnage being 818 tons, while that of Mr. Rogers’s boat is 475 tons. The Kanawha was built at Morris Heights in 1899 and the North Star in England in 1893.

Mark Twain’s participation in the ceremonies will not require very much of his time, it was said yesterday. He had been asked to make a speech at the banquet in Norfolk tomorrow evening, but he declined. Rear Admiral Purnell F. Harrington, retired, U.S.N., is to be one of the speakers at the banquet, and Mr. Clemens agreed to introduce him, as is shown in the letter from his Secretary to Hugh Gordon Miller, who will be the toastmaster at the Fulton banquet

September 23 Monday – Norfolk, Va. Sam introduced Rear Admiral Purnell Frederick Harrington (1844-1937) at the Robert Fulton Day ceremonies. The New York Times, Sept. 24 covered the event:

HONOR FULTON AT JAMESTOWN\

Inventor’s Use of Steam in Navigation Shown in Marine Parade.

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 23.—Elaborate ceremonies marked today’s observance of Robert Fulton Day at the Jamestown Exposition. Of the many historical events commemorated by the tercentennial, none has been of greater importance and deeper significance than the celebration of the practical application of Robert Fulton’s inventions to the needs of the world.

While the exercises were under the direction of the exposition officials, added prominence was given them by the participation of the Robert Fulton Monument Association. The orator of the day was Martin W. Littleton of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, the President of the association came from New York on his yacht North Star, and Dr. Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) came on the yacht Kanawha, each being accompanied by a party of guests. Rear Admiral P. F. Harrington, U. S. N., retired, headed the committee appointed to receive the distinguished guests.

A spectacular feature of the celebration was a typical representation of what the inventions of Robert Fulton meant to the world. It was the assembling in Hampton Roads, just off the exposition grounds of every sort of craft propelled by steam. The vessels, of all sizes and description, all ablaze with flags and bunting, formed a marine parade which was reviewed by the guests from the decks of the visiting yachts.

The day’s programme included the award of the cups presented by President Roosevelt, King Edward, and Sir Thomas Lipton for the winners in the various classes of yacht races.

The formal exercises in the Auditorium were called to order by Robert Fulton Cutting of New York in a brief address, which concluded with the introduction of Mark Twain as Chairman and master of ceremonies. Following remarks by the Chair, and preceding an oration by Mr. Littleton, there were addresses by President Tucker of the exposition, Lieut. Gov. Ellyson of Virginia, Hugh Gordon Miller of New York, and Rear Admiral Harrington, U. S. N., in charge of the navy’s participation in the exposition.

A dinner was held in the New York State building at night. Pyrotechnic displays closed the celebration.

Paine writes of Sam making a new friend, the orator of the event, Martin W. Littleton:

He was invited to be a special guest at the Jamestown Exposition on Fulton Day, in September, and Mr. Rogers lent him his yacht in which to make the trip. It was a break in the summer’s monotonies, and the Jamestown honors must have reminded him of those in London. When he entered the auditorium where the services were to be held there was a demonstration which lasted more than five minutes. Every person in the hall rose and cheered, waving handkerchiefs and umbrellas. He made them a brief, amusing talk on Fulton and other matters, then introduced Admiral Harrington, who delivered a masterly address and was followed by Martin W. Littleton, the real orator of the day. Littleton acquitted himself so notably that Mark Twain conceived for him a deep admiration, and the two men quickly became friends. They saw each other often during the remainder of the Jamestown stay, and Clemens, learning that Littleton lived just across Ninth Street from him in New York, invited him to come over when he had an evening to spare and join the billiard games [MTB 1406]. Note: Martin Wiley Littleton (1872-1934), attorney, became a NY Congressman, holding office 1911-1913.

Sam inscribed a picture of Fulton's steamboat Clermont to Harry Windsor Dearborn. At the top of the picture he wrote: "Mr. H.W. Dearborn with the affectionate regards of Mark Twain, Sept. 23/07"; below the picture he wrote his aphorism about taking the pledge improving bad liquor [MTP: Am. Arts Assoc. Galleries catalogs, No. 4180, 8-9 May 1935, Item 68].

Robert Underwood Johnson wrote to Sam asking about a story of a boy who ran away from home for only a few hours, then sneaked back into his kitchen and said to his mother, "I see you've got the same old cat!" Was this one of Sam's tales? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, "I am acquainted with the story but it is not a story of mine"; "Answd. Sept. 30, '07"

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Lyon, thanking for permission to dramatize "Aurelia's Unfortunate Young Man"; Twain's tales were "all the rage in Paris" [MTP].

Charles Pfeifer from Baltimore wrote a long, rambling letter to ask Sam's advice about his writing, and a begging letter asking for work around Sam's house with which he might support his father [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Sept. 30, '07"

Edwin L. Sabin wrote from Denver, Colo. to ask Sam for some accounts of his recent visit abroad, which might help Sabin fulfill a discussion for an article of "the merits and characteristics of the American style of humor" contrasted with the British [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Sept 30, '07"

Christine Brown Wheeler wrote from Boston to appeal to Sam for the homeless, to talk with him the next time he was in Boston [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Would like to be able to grant her request"

September 24 Tuesday – Near Norfolk, Va., for the Jamestown Exposition at Sewell's Point on Hampton Roads, Sam inscribed a portrait drawing of him to Mrs. Hugh Gordon Miller: "To Mrs. Hugh Gordon Miller / With the affectionate & grateful remembrances of / Mark Twain / Jamestown Exposition, / September 24/07. / (the day after the struggle)." [MTP]. Note: the Exposition was typical of many world fairs and expositions popular in the early part of the 20th Century; it ran from Apr. 26 to Dec. 1, 1907 and commemorated the 300th anniversary of the Jamestown colony, the first English settlement in America.

Jessie M. Bell for the YWCA wrote to ask Sam if it would be possible for him to lecture in Kingston, Ontario Canada to help the YWCA in their building fund [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Oct. 3, '07"

Henry Tyrell wrote for the Milwaukee, Wisc. Press Club to ask Sam for a 200 word "estimate of the newspaper hustler as you view him" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Sept. 30, '07"

September 25 Wednesday – At the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in N.Y.C. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Dear Francesca: / I have just come ashore from the yacht, & am passing by to take the 12.55 Erie RR train for Tuxedo Park. You & your mother are out—naturally, at this time of day. I would have telephoned in advance, but there wasn't time.

Won't you & your mother come out to Tuxedo Park on Saturday & stay over Sunday? I hope you can & will. There's a good train, with parlor car leaving the New York side at 12.40 p. m (only on Saturdays.)

Mr. Ashcroft (11 Broadway) can give you all needful information if you will call him up. And I shall want to know when to meet you at Tuxedo station & pass you by the guard. / With love [MTP]. Note: Frances and her mother were staying at the Waldorf. See Sept. 26 or 27 to Frances.

C.S. Vantassel for the Twentieth Century Publishing Co., Toledo, Ohio wrote to ask Sam if they could include some of his speeches in a planned 10-volume work [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Oct. 8, '07" and "Refer him to Harpers"

September 26 Thursday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Dorothy dear, I hear that you are at school, & that you greatly like it& are very busy—all of which is good to hear, & naturally is a great pleasure & comfort to your mother.

I am back from Jamestown & am glad. Still, we had reasonable weather & a swift voyage & altogether a good time. Miss Lyon & her mother went down on another boat & enjoyed the trip. Meantime the cricket has joined the union & cleared out. This room is quiet now.

Delia's gone. She meant well, but she wasn't of much account & was a troublebreeder with the other servants, so Miss Lyon discharged her. Maggie is back, & now it's a model household. I think you knew Maggie. In about a week Catherine will be back from Ireland—she's a bird!

It is milking-time, now. I mean I am taking my noonday glass of milk. Several drops have gone down the wrong way. Try-it—it is ever so much fun.

I miss you, dear—I miss you a lot. If I had you here we would start the Author's League again. And now Miss Lyon has come up to say some ladies are calling & I must go down & see them. You remember Miss Lyon? You remember how she looks?

The way she looks.

Good-bye, I love you very much [MTP].

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers, giving his "official report" of the trip to Jamestown. He praised Harry and Mary Rogers for taking care of him during the trip, seeing him ashore "on that stormy 23^d." He thought Robert Fulton Day was "the completest & perfectest fiasco in history, & worth going a thousand miles to see." He wanted to "run up to Fairhaven soon, for a day or two, if I can be of any use to you" [MTHHR 638-9].

Sam also wrote to Frances A. Nunnally: “I hope note I left at Waldorf Wednesday will persuade you both to come to Tuxedo Saturday till Monday please name your train can meet you at station” [MTP].

Frances Nunnally replied to Sam from the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, N.Y.C.

I received your note yesterday and was so sorry that we missed you, for I should like so much to have seen you.

It is lovely of you to give Mama and I that kind invitation and we appreciate it ever so much. We shall be delighted to accept it, and as you suggested we shall come to Tuxedo on Saturday by train which leaves the New York side at 12:40 p.m. I hope you enjoyed your trip to Jamestown and I am glad you did not stay down there too long, so that we can have the pleasure of seeing you before we leave for Baltimore.

Thank you again for the invitation... [MTAq 67].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: It has been a long and busy day with letters and telephonings as usual. Last night the King didn’t sleep very well, and I think it was because he went to bed early—too early—so after a good rest and his morning’s dictation (it’s about the Jamestown trip, now) he went down stairs early, and then we had a lot of music, with chat thrown in. Dinner came in too, and so we didn’t go up stairs until 10:30. ~~I was pretty nearly exhausted~~ [MTP TS 107]. Note: diagonal strike through lines appear on the TS for this entry.

N.L. Guy for U.S. Naval Constructor’s Office, Norfolk, Va. wrote to Sam c/o H.H. Rogers. Could Sam come to Norfolk and lecture for the benefit of the “United Charities”? [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Lyon to ask about McAllister’s claims of having rights to a play from Twain [MTP].

George F. Walker wrote from Naugatuck, Conn. to offer Sam praise and congratulations without asking for anything [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Well, I suppose you can thank him for it”

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

September 27 Friday – Sam also wrote two letters to J.E. Edmonds, of the Daily State Times of Baton Rouge. A trip down the Mississippi was planned by Theodore Roosevelt, with a suggestion that Mark Twain be the chief pilot. Sam turned down the offer; Edmonds wrote an editorial about it. Sam then wrote these letters, the first a cover letter and the second a blast: “I am often against [President Roosevelt] politically, but this has not affected the friendship existing between us these twenty years.” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tonight the King went to dine with the Poors & others. When the King goes out you wander around through the empty rooms & stand with your head to one side to listen if there is a bearable sound to be heard. And there isn’t any perfume of his pipe & some of your senses seem quite quite gone [MTP TS 107].

Arthur W. Barber wrote from Orange, NJ to ask Sam where he should send the books Sam had “kindly consented to autograph” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Sept. 30, ‘07”

Frances Nunnally sent a telegram to Sam: “Note received will leave her twelve forty train Saturday” [MTP].

John B. Stanchfield wrote to Sam offering stock in a “bath establishment” by Fleischman, the florist [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, “If I were situated to do that I would take the stock, but that all my stocks are down & I have to buy those stocks now that they’re down”

September 28 Saturday – Frances Nunnally and her mother visited Sam. They played hearts [Oct 2 from Nunnally].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Santa decides to come to town on the 11th.

I don't know if it is significant of 72 years or if the King has always done it, but he loses track of the hours of the day like this. Mrs. Nunnally and Frances arrived today, and after tea at 5 we began to play Hearts. We played until nearly 7 when the King called for his whiskey and apollinaris—his night cap, and thought to save time by drinking it before getting into bed. He is so gay and sweet and pretty in his ways with "Francesca", who is a dear grave girl of 16, with the most wonderful little slender hands. I think that as I look around in my head and remember people's hands, that the people with the broad thickish hands have an entire lack of silence or delicate speech, or of an eloquent silence. They have to make a noise of some sort most of the time certainly they have no reservations [MTP TS 108].

Kurt Aram wrote from Munich, Germany to ask Sam for an article [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "I could not deliberately send anything for publication of course the contract will not allow me to...Simplicissimus gives me pleasure 52 times a year. Send over a copy of the reproductions of Old Masters"

W.B. Hennessy wrote from St. Paul, Minn. to invite Sam to come for a lecture, offering $1,500 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, "You can just thank him & say that if I make no land journeys, unless compelled to, that if I made them in any other circumstances I'd be very glad to accept"

William J. Lonn wrote from LaPorte Ind. to ask Sam if he was open to an engagement for the Elks Lodge this winter [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Oct. 3, '07"

September 29 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: A rainy day, and so a stop was put to the plans for entertaining Francesca and her mother. Late in the morning we assembled in the living room and played Hearts. I wonder what dear spirit put Hearts in my head yesterday, for otherwise we had been at a loss. It is hard to entertain brand new people [MTP TS 108-109].

Edward Anthony wrote from Cleveland, Ohio to Sam. "I am a boy collecting cigar bands." Could Sam send some for his collection? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Oct. 2, '07"

A. Gavin wrote from Buffalo, NY to ask Sam on behalf of his daughter, Miss Alberta Gavin, if he could send one of his books and write a line or a little verse in it [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Oct. 8, '07"

September 30 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Francesca went this morning, the King went down to the station with them, and since his return he has been at work all day with the pen. He has been writing and writing and dropping the little leaves of paper from his small pad, around him on the floor. Most of the work was done with him sitting on the extreme edge of the bed. For 5 hours he must have sat there, and I am longing to see what the outcome of this day will be. He came back so full of his ideas that he has never taken off his shoes to replace them with his comfortable slippers. A little after 3 Miss Herrick came into say goodbye, for she goes down to Southampton for 2 months. I had to go and tell the King she was here and he felt obliged to break away to bid her that adieu; though he did it saying it was "Hellish" and "God damnable!" and only half his mind was on her when he stumbled into and out of the room. At 5:30 he finished the day's work. I went down to find him gathering up his bits of ms. and well satisfied with the fact that he put in the whole day at getting the ideas out of his head and into compact form on paper. He has gone to bed to rest for 2 hours before going down to dine with Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey Depew, who are staying at the Club. Evening—and now I can't get away from the misery of letting the King walk away from me out into the darkness alone, and down to the Club. In his black evening clothes, and with his little grey overcoat, and a lighted cigar, he walked away into that black road. I asked if he didn't want Claude to go with him, only three words in reply, "no—goodbye" and I've wanted to cry ever since [MTP TS 109-110].

James Barton wrote from Chorley, England to solicit information from Sam about the martyr, Richard Langhorne, d. 1649 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, “Mr. Langhorne was merely a stranger whom our family knew for a while & greatly liked, but about him are known absolutely nothing”

George Grantham Bain wrote again to ask Sam when their photographer might take a portrait [MTP].

Ella C. Cauman (Mrs. Herman H. Cauman) wrote from Merrick, Long Island to thank Sam for his address on Sept. 23 at Jamestown about Robert Fulton. Cauman was Robert Fulton’s granddaughter [MTP].

Edwin W. Chubb wrote on Ohio Univ. notepaper to ask Sam if he might use “some short selection” from his autobiography in a book he was making, Stories of British and American Authors [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Mr. Clemens is not able to tell whether the Harpers would object or not / must refer you to them. Has no objection himself”

Anna M. DuBois wrote from S. Bend, Ind. to Sam. She related the story of her husband loaning IA to a German professor, who marked it up with all the “exaggerations and lies” he found, evidently having a complete absence of humor [MTP].

James E. Gallagher wrote to Sam asking if his views on Christian Science was in book form yet? He sent under separate cover an illustrated article, “A Day With Mark Twain” from the Chicago Sunday Tribune of June 29 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 2, ‘07”

Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam, sending revised proof of “Extract from Captain Stormfield’s Visit to Heaven,” which they wanted back in a hurry to make the Christmas edition [MTP].

John H. Hawley for Assoc. Sunday Magazines telegraphed Lyon to ask if Clemens had ever used a Waterman fountain pen [MTP]. Note: Lyon replied, by telegram, “Mr Clemens has never used a Waterman pen”

Howells & Stokes wrote to bill Sam $2,201.06 for William Webb Sunderland on the Redding house [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon to verify the go ahead to dramatize “Mrs. MacWilliams and the Thunder” [MTP].

C.B. Shepard wrote from Melrose Highlands, Mass. to ask Sam if he could lecture at the Melrose Highlands Congregational Church in Jan. or Feb. [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 2, ‘07”

Herbert C. Warren for the Chamber of Commerce, New Haven wrote to invite Sam to speak at their annual dinner sometime during Nov. [MTP].

September 30 after – Sam wrote on a Sept. 30 letter from Ashcroft to Lyon, “Please never correct a misprint with a damned machine—leave it alone.” [MTP].

October – Possibly this month Sam wrote a poem to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) [MTP].

BUTTER WANTED

===

Any Kind:

New; Old;

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Salted; Unsalted;
 Odorless; Fragrant;
Real preferred, but Oleomargarine not turned away.

Apply at the old stand,
 21 Fifth av.,
 at the Sign of the Butterfly.

===

O Anisodactylous was his name,
 And dactylous ~~was~~ his ~~nature~~ morals
 Holopothal his ~~moral~~ ~~daily~~ constant state
 And ~~given over to~~ Diversified by quarrels

CORRECTED FORM

O Anisodactylous was his name,
 And dactylous his morals,
 Holopothal his constant state,
 Diversified by quarrels.

To be continued by the Shah-in-Shah
 (Anglice, the Pal of Pals) at her convenience

P. S. I seem to be always asking favors of you—still I have to ask one more: Won't you please try Mr. Paine's Christian Scientist? He cured Paine's agonizing headaches permanently, after years of torture. He has helped some kind of ailment of Clara's, & has greatly modified Miss Lyon's chronic & dreadful headaches—not personally, but through Paine. He will do you no harm, Mariechen, if he does you no good. You may gain, & you can't lose. Will you try him? Say you will. Put aside prejudice—prejudice is nobody's sure friend.

P. P. S.

That same man restored John Howells to good & sound health when he had long been a wreck & just of museum of pestilent-maladies. John doesn't like this to be known, but he confesses the truth of it. / Monday, 10.50 a.m. ...[MTP].

Sam also inscribed in a copy of Eve's Diary to an unidentified person: "Let us save the to-morrows for work. {Adam.} / Truly yours / Mark Twain / October 1907." [MTP].

Chapters from "My Autobiography—XXIII" ran in the N.A.R. p.161-73.

Paine writes about Sam's new friendship with Martin Wiley Littleton and billiards, which he and Littleton played often after their return from the Sept. 23 Jamestown celebration for Robert Fulton.

So it happened, somewhat later, when every one was back in town, Mr. and Mrs. Littleton frequently came over for billiards, and the games became three-handed with an audience—very pleasant games played in that way. Clemens sometimes set himself up as umpire, and became critic and gave advice, while Littleton and I played. He had a favorite shot that he frequently used himself and was always wanting us to try, which was to drive the ball to the cushion at the beginning of the shot. He played it with a good deal of success, and achieved unexpected results with it. He was even inspired to write a poem on the subject.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

“CUSHION FIRST”

When all your days are dark with doubt,
 And dying hope is at its worst;
 When all life's balls are scattered wide,
 With not a shot in sight, to left or right,
 Don't give it up;
 Advance your cue and shut your eyes,
 And take the cushion first.

The Harry Thaw trial was in progress just then, and Littleton was Thaw's chief attorney. It was most interesting to hear from him direct the day's proceedings and his views of the situation and of Thaw [MTB 1406-7]. Note: Mrs. Littleton was Maud W. Littleton. The Harry Thaw trial was the “Trial of the Century.” See Aug. 15, 1905, Mar. 23 and Oct. 15, 1907.

October-December – Sometime during this period Sam wrote a short note to the editor of the St. Louis Republic: “May my namesake follow in my righteous footsteps, then neither of us will need any fire insurance” [MTB 1424]. Note: Sotheby's auction Apr. 3, 2008 Lot 29 sold this note and commented: “In 1907 a new boat was built for the St. Louis Harbor and christened ‘Mark Twain.’ The editor of a local paper wrote to Clemens and asked for a comment.”

Isabel Lyon's journal: Clemens told Isabel Lyon to make a note of the fact that “Harper paid Du Maurier 50,000 for the Martian” [Gribben 207]. Note: The Martian (1896) novel by George Du Maurier (1834-1896).

October 1 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Last night I stayed awake waiting for the King to come home, and full of anxiety until he did.

I am purged of anxieties, purged of discontents and I think it may be in part the exodus of Delia. Little Ashcroft came out and spent the night; as he arrived Father Fitzsimons arrived too and made arrangements with the King to talk before the villagers on the evening of the 22nd. They had some Scotch and the King told stories of his first meeting with the Prince of Wales and Gen. Grant, and we had a very cosy & gay time [MTP TS 110].

Katherine Gregory, maid, wrote to Miss Lyon about doings at 21 Fifth Ave. [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

October 2 Wednesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam on Edward Anthony's Sept. 29: “Mr. C[lemens asks me to] write for him and say that he has given all the cigar bands from his imported cigars to a little friend who asked for them; and he regrets that he has none” [MTP].

Sam also began a letter to Dorothy Quick that he finished on Oct.3.

It is a very good photograph, Dorothy dear, & I am very glad to have it. I wish I could have you here, too—I miss you all the time. Goodness! what makes you think I have forgotten you? Indeed I haven't, but I have been so busy lately that I haven't to my daughters, & they are scolding me. I hope to do better, now, & be good, for a while. It will attract attention. I like that.

I wish I could go & see you, dear, but I know you couldn't save me from the reporters—they would find me out in spite of all you could do to prevent it, you dear child. But I'll be back in New York just at the end of this month & then I hope you can come to us on Saturdays & stay over.

We can have very good times together.

Mr. Ashcroft is here to-day [MTAq 68].

In the afternoon Sam took a ride over the “bigger-pond road” around the lake. In the evening Sam, Ashcroft, Lyon, and possibly one of the servants played hearts (best with at least four players) [Oct. 3 to Quick].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: My joy is so much the heaviest part of me, & yet it makes me as lightsome as this the [illegible word] in my spirit, & in my flesh. It’s the great wash from the shores of the soul of the King, that cap over in little waves & come to the shores of my soul. Perhaps the shores of my soul would be quite barren, quite bleak & alone, but that they can sometimes catch the overlappings from the darling ones of the earth. We drove this afternoon. In 2 afternoons we have made 8 calls with never anyone at home. But the air was divine and the King cuddled down into his great coat, and buttoned it up under his chin, with the collar turned up under such an enchanting frill of white curling hair. Oh, terrible, terrible that his children cannot come under the spell of his glories, his subtleties, his sweetnesses. For this morning there was a cruel letter from Jean, damning me—finding fault with him—with him. Always he says that she is not to blame, it is the God who can create such natures, such maladies as hers, and in the creating, run them into a mould as inflexible as bronze. But later we got ready to go dine with Mr. [Charles E.] Sampson and Miss Sampson (they are so lovely). I went down to the King’s room to find that he had put on his heavy white canvas shoes, and that he had folded his necktie over in his own way and struck a pin in it. It’s lovely to see it that way ordinarily, and when I offered to change it for him, and gave him his white slippers to put on and he underwent the changes; he sighed gently and said, he thought it was better [MTP TS 110-111].

John J. Craven wrote a fan letter to Sam, requesting “just a line or two to acknowledge this letter” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 8, ‘07”

Harry Windsor Dearborn for Robert Fulton Monument wrote to invite Sam to a meeting of the Robert Fulton Monument Assoc. [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Tell him I never attend Committee meetings”

Frances Nunnally wrote to Sam, thanking him for their visit on Sept. 28; they had lots of fun playing hearts with him. Frances and her mother reached Baltimore the day before and she entered St. Timothy’s [MTP].

On this day or Oct. 9 Joe Twichell wrote to Sam.

Read (if you haven’t) the extracts from Omar Khayyam on the first page of this morning’s Courant. I think we’ll have to get the book. I never came across anything that uttered certain thoughts of mine so adequately. And it’s only a translation. Read it, and we’ll talk it over. There is something in it very like the passage of Emerson you read me last night, in fact identical with it in thought.

Surely this Omar was a great poet. Anyhow he has given me an immense revelation this morning. Hoping that you are better / J.H.T. [MTP].

George F. Walker wrote from Naugatuck, Conn. to thank Sam and Lyon for their “favor of Sept. 30” [MTP].

October 3 Thursday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam finished his Oct. 2 to Dorothy Quick.

Last night we played “hearts”—a very good game, I think, because it is simple, & doesn’t require any mental labor. I wish we had thought of it when you were here. But next time we’ll play it. It is more interesting than those other games.

You should see our cat. It is half grown, & is gay & wise & courteous, & very handsome. It has a tail at one end, & two sets of legs, one at the bow & the other at the ster, & is just as astonishing in other ways.

This cat is trying to look like Miss Lyon, but I think it does not succeed very well—& won't, until it has had more practice.

It sits up like this. Always on the same end. Everybody admires it & thinks it is full of talent.

We drove over the Nigger-pond road & all around the lake, yesterday afternoon—remember that road? It is very beautiful, now. We'll make a longer drive today; I wish you were here to go with us.

Evening

==

Your letter & the pictures have come, dear. The one where you are standing by my chair is the very very best one of you I have ever seen, & you are next best in the one where I am a nice old whiteheaded nigger.

That little cat caught a bird to-day & brought it in, & it got away & flew out of the window.

There is a heavenly dog here, but he is not ours; he came down the hill on a visit, & will have to be sent back. He is the long kind.

With love &
Lots of kisses — SLC
[MTAq 68-9].

H.H. Rogers in New Bedford, Mass. sent a telegram to Sam: “DELIGHTED TO HAVE YOU COME TO FAIR HAVEN YACHT LEAVING ON FRIDAY COMMUNICATE WITH 26 BROADWAY REGARDING HOUR” [MTHHR 639].

Sam replied to H.H. Rogers’ telegram, probably also with one of his own: “VERY MUCH DISAPPOINTED CANNOT GO. VISITORS CLARA EXPECTED HERE SATURDAY, OR COULD I SAY CLARA EXPECTED SATURDAY. I EXPECT HER SATURDAY AS MUCH AS ANY TIME” [MTHHR 641n1].

Walter G. Holmes for Matilda Ziegler Magazine for the Blind, NYC wrote to Sam enclosing the winner of a “best bit of humor” prize for the blind reader. It is not in the file [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 8, ‘07”

William Dean Howells wrote to Sam.

I saw Harvey yesterday, and he said you were wondering the last time he met you why you never heard from me: so here goes. I would like to come see you, for I understand you are now an elderly man, while I still feel my green oats. But you are in Tuxedo, and I cannot go there, for I have only a day or two before returning to Kittery Point.

Howells related a “busy summer,” and of revising Venetian Life. He wrote of seeing Francis Millet “at the Club last night and he said he had lately been visiting the people who have your old Hartford house. What memories his say conjured up! I pass it along to you, for I think it does you good to suffer. If not, Litt. D., Oxon., cure thyself” [MTHL 2: 825-6].

Rhea Monfort wrote from Chambersburg, Pa. to invite Sam to be speaker of the day at the Founders Day for Wilson College [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 3, ‘07”

J.H. McKeen wrote from Moline, Ill. to ask Sam for a joke to be used at a charity event for an orphanage [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 8, ‘07”

Maria L. Souther wrote to ask Sam to lecture for the Jamaica Plain Tuesday Club, early in Apr. [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 8, ‘07”

David P. Steele wrote inviting Sam to join the newly formed Bumpkin Club: “Its sole object is to be recreation and pleasure, to drive the cobwebs from the brain wearied by business cares....Please reply immediately and I will call at your convenience and give you further particulars, or if you can have sufficient confidence in me, mail to me your check for Five dollars and leve it to me to give you value received. When I choose to close the list of membership no one can get in for love or money, as a full fledged member” [MTHHR 641n3]. Note: Oct. 4 to HHR.

Sam’s A.D. of this day untitled related the 1867 story of selling Gen. Nelson A. Miles a dog that Sam didn’t own, “the three-dollar dog”; the piece was selected for MTE [351-8]. Note: Sam also told this tale on Mar. 5, 1908 at the Princess Hotel, Bermuda for a hospital benefit.

October 3 or 10 Saturday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka that proofs for A Horse’s Tale be sent to Tuxedo Park before Oct. 17 or to 21 Fifth Ave. after Nov. 3 would get his “immediate attention.” He wanted to “sit in judgment” on the illustrations before they were accepted. Sam confessed that “the heroine is my small daughter Susy, whom we lost” [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote the 17,530-word story after Sept. 1905 from a suggestion of Minnie Maddern Fiske. Harper’s Magazine published the tale in two installments, Aug.-Sept. 1906 using illustrations by Lucius Wolcott Hitchcock. These and other illustrations were used in Harper’s 153-page book later in the month [MTP].

October 4 Friday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote a great spoof to William Dean Howells, and sent the same note to daughter Jean (perhaps the first part of the letter is lost).

P. S.

Jean dear it is an outrage the way the govment is acting so I am sending following complaint to N. Y. Times with Howels name signed because it will have more weight:

To the Editor

Sir to you, I would like to know what kind of a goddam govment this is that discriminates between two common carriers & makes a goddam railroad charge every body equal & lets a goddam man charge any goddam price he wants to for his goddam operabox / W D Howels [MTP; MTHL 2: 827]. Note: source explains that Sam “never ceased to have fun in imagining Howells acting or talking like Pap Finn” [n1].

Sam also replied to the Oct. 2 of Frances Nunnally, who had traveled to her school, St. Timothy’s, in Cantonsville, Md..

Thank you very much, for letting me know you arrived safely, dear Francesca. It was hard for us to let you & your mother go; however it wouldn’t have been any easier if the visit had been many times longer than it was.

I hope Governor Warfield really has a daughter that’s coming out. I don’t know. But he said he had. I hope so; & that it will happen in November, & not in the holidays, so that I can see you. If you please, dear, give my kindest regards to your mother, & thank her again for the visit / With love/ SLC/ Ashcroft came, & we played the game. When it was through he was about bankrupt, & Miss Lyon owed 94 buttons [MTP].

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Didn’t Mary promise to write me a line (before Oct. 3) & tell me if the yacht would be sailing to-day or tomorrow?—so that I wouldn’t be making obstructing engagements. Yes, I think she did, if I didn’t dream it.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

I'd have postponed Clara, which would have been just as well, for I think she has postponed herself. She was due here hours ago & isn't here yet, & hasn't telegraphed.

Will you please examine the enclosed & correct the spelling & then mail it to the N. Y. Times. I believe it will help Howells with worldly people.

Now as to this Bumpkin Club. If you will draw the check to my order & send it here, I will endorse it over to Mr. Steck & see that he gets it. I will see to it personally. Please send it right away, because as you can see by his letter that you cannot get in after he closes the list, at any price at all, & he is liable to close it any minute. He evidently has great power in the Club. Would you like to be an officer? I believe I can fix it for you for $3. Send the money right now, or it may be too late. Harry has been accepted; I proposed him. I should wish to have the money soon. Could you speak to Winsor about this—and Broughton & Benjamin? I will get them in if I can. Let them send the money now. Would the like to be officers, think? $9. / Love to all./ SLC

P. S. Hurry!

P. P. S. He will call on you, if you wish further particulars. But hurry! [MTHHR 640].

Note: Sam's plans to visit Fairhaven had been changed due to Clara's expected visit. The enclosed was undoubtedly the spoof sent to the Times by "Howels" (see Oct. 4) and shared with Howells and Jean. The Bumpkin Club had been proposed by David P. Steele, in a letter dated Oct. 2. Sam clearly enjoyed spoofing it to Rogers for comedic effect. See Oct. 2 from Steele.

Katharine B. Clemens wrote from NYC to invite Sam to meet her and their mutual cousin James Brent Clemens, at Delmonico's on Oct. 9 or 11. She would only be in town for ten days and then return to St. Louis [MTP]. Note: James Brent Clemens' lineage was not found.

Myron H. Phelps wrote to enlist Sam in the cause of exposing the "disgraceful exploitation" by the British in India, and also in the cause of allowing Indians to study in America.

I address you, Mr. Clemens, as the man who can probably do more for this cause than any other in the United States, and perhaps in the world; whose trenchant pen can uncover those living lies and compel to its revelations the attention of the world, can make Englishmen blush for the things which have been done in their name, and perhaps set right, under the lash of the world's scorn, if need be, the shameful wrongs which have been thus inflicted upon a gentle and long-suffering race... [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter: "Tell him I tried to awake our people in behalf of the black folks that Leopold has been robbing and butchering for 15 years & thoroughly satisfied myself that it is quite impossible to interest the average human being with suffering that is beyond his sight & immediate touch. We know a valuable thing when we see it & this is precious beyond the dreams of avarice"

October 5 Saturday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to the Oct. 4 from Katharine B. Clemens (Mrs. James Ross Clemens), now in N.Y.C. Yes, Sam had rec'd the photographs of Katharine's "two charming little children"; Lyon had written her thanks, and they'd waited for them until the last train "on that Saturday."

Then he wishes me to say now, that he will be ever so glad to lunch with you next Wednesday the 9th, at Delmonico's and meet Mr. Brent Clemens. Half past one will suit him very well, & give him plenty of time to catch the 3:53 train back to Tuxedo, as that is the train he must take.

The daughters are neither of them in New York, or near it. Clara is in Boston studying, & Jean is in her sanitarium, & cannot make trips away from it [MTP].

Sam also wrote to George B. Harvey.

Dear Uncle George: / The Pilgrim invitation has come, & as the matter started with you originally, etiquette requires that I reply to it to you, its source. I have thought it all over, &—I am 72. I would rather speak at this dinner than at any other, because it is given to a distinguished Englishman & naturally I am drawn toward our cousins, these days, with renewed warmth, because of the honors & generosities heaped upon me lately by Oxford & by the English people of all grades, but—I am 72. I attended no banquets last year. That was a restful & blessed year! I will duplicate it this season; & will begin by declining the only invitation I shall decline at cost of regret [Sotheby's auction, June 19, 2003, Lot 119, p.101].

Note the Pilgrims, U.S. chapter had sent an invitation to a dinner on Oct. 15 honoring Rev. Winnington-Ingram, lord bishop of London, who had arrived in America to present the King's Bible to Bruton Church of Williamsburg, Virginia, the oldest Anglican in continuous use in the U.S. [Fatout, MT Speaking 590]. Sam did not attend the Oct. 15 dinner, although he wrote a speech for the event; he may have sent a letter, possibly this one, in it's place. The speech contained a great deal of controversial criticism of American culture, and if it had been sent, the press would have had a field day. See source, p. 590-595 for the text of the MS, "Bishop Speech," which is in the MTP.

John Hendersen Miller wrote from Kansas City, Mo. to Sam, enclosing a review of his book, which he felt Sam would enjoy, being also from Missouri [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

October 6 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: This afternoon when the Masons were here for tea and the subject of Geography came up, the King said that he had no sense of it himself, and that when they were living in the Villa Viviani, Oscar Wilde's little wife went out to call and to ask the best way to get back to England, the King said he gave her instructions which if she had followed would have landed her in China. Chat seemed to drivel along until the King said to Mrs. Mason who is a Christian Scientist and who has been planning a debate with the King—"Well, Mrs. Mason, when are we going to have our quarrel?" I think that Mrs. Mason felt she had launched herself into a very big subject with a very competent opponent, for she asked him what his objection to C.S. as a religion is. He told her that he had no more objection to that than to any other religion invented by man, or a God invented by man that could lay any claim for the respect of thinking people. But people don't think anyway. They only feel. Then Mrs. Mason tried to bring in the stock phrases of "affirmation" or "negation" as part of C.S. but that didn't trouble the King any either, and when she finally made the great C.S.'s statement winding up "God is good"—then the King really talked and asked her to prove that God is good. He pointed out how God isn't good in a single instance and those two Masons sat amazed and enchanted and horrified. He said things the like of which they had never imagined a person could say. Such an attitude of mind was a revelation that could only be wrought by a magician greater than God. I have been wondering if it made any impression upon those people; but most likely not. They went away admiring him and thinking of him more than ever, and I told the King that there wasn't another human being in the world who could say such things and remain entirely beloved, and the King said, yes, he had said those dreadful things about her God, and right in her God's presence too.

Then we went back to Hearts [MTP TS 111-112].

Dorothy Butes wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr Clemens. / I was so glad to get your lovely long letter, and the snapshot of yourself. I think the Kodak is splendid of you. I keep it on my writing-desk, and look at you lots of times during the day. Somehow, it reminds me of the day you told me that funny story of the solitary aseophegus (I couldn't find it in the dictionary, so I hope you won't mind the spelling!) hovering in the azure sky"! That was one of the best things I ever heard. My Kodak is being repaired just now, but as soon as it comes home I will send you a snapshot of myself.

We are going to Paris a week from to-day. I am looking forward to it very much indeed. We shall be there for four or five weeks. I am going to take French lessons every day while we are there, and play "Diabolo"! London is becoming quite wild over it, now, and Paris has "been gone" on it for some time! [MTP]. Note: Dorothy told also of school impressions, visits in England, of having her teeth straightened, and wrote praising C.S.

Eugenia Schumann wrote from Sanna, Sweden to Sam remembering the pleasure of his stay in Sanna, and sending sympathies about Livy's passing; Kellgren would be 70 on Nov. 24, and he had not been fully acknowledged by science for his contributions [MTP].

October 7 Monday – Isabel Lyon wrote to Dorothy Quick [MTAq 75-6].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Ashcroft went at 8:15 and I went to N.Y. to see about getting the house in order for C.C." [MTP TS 113].

Howells & Stokes wrote to Miss Lyon requesting a new check be drawn in the name of William Webb Sunderland since both Howells and Stokes were out of town [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote a short note, enclosing draft for $44.33 on the Buffalo property [MTP].

Cora W. Nunnally wrote from Atlanta, Ga., an appreciative letter to Sam for their visit and how Frances had been helped by his friendship [MTP].

Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) wrote to Sam.

Father Rogers has asked me to return your scurrilous literature, and to say, that as for him, he will have nothing to do with persons who indulge in anonymous postcards, however he might feel himself in sympathy with their sentiments.

He hopes that having enjoyed yourself, by taking away your own character, so openly you are ready to suffer the penalty, with meekness, which the law inflicts on those who are caught sending opprobrious remarks through the mail....Father Rogers says the aforementioned "penalty" is waiting for you down here and he wants you to come and get it" [MTHHR 643n2]. Note: On or after Oct. 7 Sam replied:

Read this & grit your teeth, Mariechen dear. Yesterday you were sending me that cunning post-card picture of a brother of mine, with the unrighteous purpose of "taking me down a peg"—as you slangers phrase it—and this morning comes this nice buttery card from a just & judicious shipmatess, & antidotally sets my self-complacency up again, a whole peg higher than it was before! Grit your teeth & try again—maybe you'll score next time. Henry will sail at 10 tomorrow, & I am tied up & out of luck. / With love [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

October 8 Tuesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

Jean dear, I hear that Dr. [Frederick] Peterson is exceedingly well pleased with your year's progress, & certainly I am. It is a wonderful advance. How fortunate it was that fortune put you into his hands. He expects this improvement to go right along.

I am taking walks, now. For exercise. I make them through the woods—half an hour each way. I took one about 12 days ago & another one day before yesterday. This is just the time for walking; for the forests are beginning to blush, the air is bracing & fine, & the sunshine is dazzling. I begin to feel the benefit of the exercise already; I sleep better than I did before, & my appetite is improved. Also I have gained 4 pounds, my step has gained in springiness, & my breast-measure has added 3 inches; I can jump nearly 3 feet further than I could before, & my hair is not as long as it was. My cough is entirely gone, & I can stand on my head without effort. Formerly I had to be very careful about my diet, but I can eat anything, now—when people are looking I eat rocks. Everybody is astonished, I am the surprise of the whole region. And, so, of course, everybody has gone to exercising. (With bad results, for they overdo it.) / Heaps of love & kisses, dearest Jean, / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

I'm coming up next Friday per New Bedford boat or Kanawha—or maybe Saturday or Sunday per Kanawha. I can't tell which till I found out dates & terms. Will you telegraph me when you get this?

Oh, well, there's different kinds of postcards, they're not all alike the one you sent, thanks be! Mary wrote that one, I recognized her hand through the disguise, without any trouble. Another thing: you told her to return my scurrilous literature, along with your indignation. Very well, she sent the indignation, but kept the literature for her scrap-book. I knew she would admire it. I will ask you to give her my love, & thereto my thanks for her appreciation of that literature. And it is good, you know. Mighty good.

Do you know, wonderful are the ways of Providence. I mean, in suggesting the path of His own. For the enclosed postcard came yesterday, to soothe the sorrows to be caused by the one that comes from you to-day, & to soothe some that arrived day before yesterday—which was like this:

Some ladies called, & told an anecdote, all upside down & wrong—oh, altogether incorrect—& said it was drifting around Tuxedo & being believed—thus:

That a lady called me on the telephone & said:

“Will you come & dine with us to-night?”

“Oh, I am unspeakably sorry, but I have an imperative engagement.”

“It's too bad. Can you come tomorrow night?”

“I do wish I could, but I have to be in New York.”

“Well, then, make it Thursday.”

After a reflective pause:

“Oh hell, I'll come to-night!”

It is all wrong, I give you my word. It didn't happen in Tuxedo at all: it was New York. And more than a year ago, at that. And it wasn't a lady, it was a man. A man whom I detest. / Yrs Ever [MTHHR 641-2]. Note: the “scurrilous literature” (Mary Rogers' phrase) was Sam's spoof “Howels” note to the Times of Oct. 4.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King has what he calls a “body cold”, he says “the whole edifice is dull and heavy.” He came down for luncheon a somewhat unusual thing for him, and ate quite heartily of eggs with a truffle sauce, and creamed chicken with bits of carrot and peppers in it, but he wouldn't eat fruit—sliced; he wouldn't eat it “untamed” even, as he didn't need it [MTP TS 113].

Jessie B. Conklin wrote for the Huntington, L.I. Colonial Society. to invite Sam to lecture [MTP].

N.D. Phillips of the Tuxedo Park Fire Dept. wrote to send Sam five tickets for their 7th Annual Ball, date not specified [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 8”

October 9 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: “King and I went to N.Y. on the 8:15. He dined with Mr. Jim Clemens and Mr. Brent Clemens at Delmonicoes” [MTP TS 113].

John J. Craven wrote from Phila. to thank Sam for Lyon's letter of Oct. 8 with signed photo [MTP].

October 10 Thursday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Headache. / Mr. and Mrs. Deacon, Father Fitz [William Fitz-Simon], Mr. and Miss Sampson dined here and all day I was so ill, but I wouldn't give in. I saw Mr. Willing who has charge of the syndicating of the autobiography; Mr. Ashcroft arrived at 3 o'clock; I secured a notary public to come out with the Plasheon lawyers who came at 5:30. I superintended the decorating of the dinner table. I gave the King all of my presence that he required, I played Hearts for an hour, just as I was going up to lie down for that hour. I never slipped a cog all day long, with that supreme pain in my head and careening down my spine. But at dinner I did think I could and would gladly perish. Mr. Deacon on my right was so blatant and prosy and terrible. He won't give the King a chance to talk, but will interrupt and try to give the conversation the course that he wants it to take, and oh, he is dreadful [MTP TS 113-114]. Note: Miss Gertrude Sampson.

George Grantham Bain wrote to Lyon enclosing something he requested be re-addressed to Dorothy (Quick?) [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Alice Minnie Herts for the Educational Alliance wrote to Lyon asking when she might receive Sam's list for invitations [MTP].

Sidney Lee wrote to introduce to Sam two friends visiting the US: Mr. & Mrs. Cobden Sanderson, whom he said Sam was familiar with [MTP].

In Sam's A.D. Sam's A.D. of this day titled "Platform Readings" recalled seeing Charles Dickens read and meeting Livy; compared lecturing and reading; his use of the pause in recitation; the piece was selected for MTE [213-28]. Sam also mentioned the high lecture price of abolitionist, Wendell Phillips (1811-1884) [Gribben 544].

October 11 Friday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam replied to the Oct. 7 from Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.).

Mariechen dear, Flower of Nieces, it was my purpose to thank you for your letter in person, bu the court had a more different story about it, & it forbade Fairhaven, & furnished me a couple of days' testifying to do.

Ah, you ought to see the baby! I have seen the baby. It is beautiful, but not so beautiful as the mother. It looks wonderfully young, but that is a Kane specialty, they all look that way. I did not get its good opinion, but I think that was my own fault. It overheard me say it looked like Bryan. I meant it as a compliment, but I would have chosen some one else if I had known it was prejudiced. I am always doing the unfortunate thing, & always meaning the opposite. The child did not say anything, but I know by its expression that the next time I call I shall not get in. Yet I give you my word of honor, I wouldn't have wounded it for anything in the world. I want to write it a letter, if you think that would do any good.

I walked every step of the way out there & back, except that a lady carried me up the hill in her brougham & left me at the door. I mean to take a walk every year—it does me good. Down in the road, coming away, I met Grandmother Kane, looking as girlish & handsome as ever, & with her was another girl, her daughter.

You will find your sloping lawn satisfactorily green & comely, when you arrive; & there's a fine crop of tall yellow flowers down by the water—crocuses, I reckon.

I don't know what the penalty is that's hanging over me, but I know the anfractuositities of the Admiral's temper well enough to know that he will forget all about it before he gets a chance to inflict it. Come along home, please. To my most affectionate niece—

These, from her most affectionate / Uncle Mark

P. S., 5 p. m. Telephone from Mrs. Broughton, Great Neck:

"The yacht left for Fairhaven to-day to bring all the family home on Sunday."

Including you & your triplets, I hope. Instead of burning this I will allow myself the privilege of mailing it to your home here as a Welcome [MTP].

Note: the testifying may have been in Ralph W. Ashcroft's lawsuit against John Hays Hammond, who had sent a telegram about the American Plasmon Co. to Sam with words Ashcroft deemed libelous: "I strongly oppose turning over the company to Ashcroft's Board of Directors. He had been identified with the administration of Cook & Wright and is incompetent, or worse" [NY Times, Oct. 16, 1907, p.7, "John Hays Hammond Sued"].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I've been telephoning to a Miss Eualabee Dix, who has written to ask if the King would lunch with the Countess of Warwick and it is arranged for tomorrow" [MTP TS 114].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I told him [Clemens] that I had picked up a little clipping in the hall & it voices—in part—his own feelings [about Roosevelt]. I'll copy it for he wants it again. Henry Watterson wrote it" [Gribben 749].

George G. Ball for the Harvard Union wrote to invite Sam to address a student gathering on Nov. 5 at 8 p.m. [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd”

Cara L. Broughton sent a telegram from Great Neck, N.Y.: “The Yacht left for Fairhaven today to bring all the family home on Sunday” [MTHHR 642n1].

George M. Payne, news editor of The Washington Times wrote to invite Sam to lecture to “A small group of Washington newspaper men” [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

October 12 Saturday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam inscribed a copy of JA to Frances E. Greville: “To / The Countess of Warwick / with the warm regards of / her latest & most / devoted admirer / Mark Twain / Tuxedo Park, N.Y. / October 12, 1907.” [MTP]. Note: see IVL below.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: (Clipping here) / Miss Dix of 57 West 57 St. will entertain the Countess of Warwick and S.L. Clemens today at luncheon at Delmonicoes. / (June 1937—nearly 30 years later, and I am giving the clipping to Eulabee Dix) [MTP TS 114].

J. Pease Norton for the American Health League wrote to invite Sam to serve in the “Authors’ League of the Committee of One Hundred.” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “In declining to serve my answer is that I am 72 old & have a sufficiency of compulsory activities without adding to them”

Lewis Elmer Trescott (Poet Lariat) wrote from Glenwood, L.I. to advise Sam, that the “poet lariatship which you conferred upon Mr. Cutter, has been perpetuated and that I am his successor.” Several poems were enclosed [MTP]. Note: Trescott’s photo is on several poems; he’s a young man of about 25-30.

In Sam’s A.D. he recalled Charles Dickens reading David Copperfield. Dickens “did not merely read, but also acted. His reading of that storm scene in which Steerforth lost his life was so vivid, and so full of energetic action, that the house was carried off its feet, so to speak” [Gribben 188]. Note: MTP lists this A.D. date as “conjectural.”

October 13 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: All day except when we went to Mrs. Hoyt’s for luncheon we have been playing Hearts and using Coffee beans for counters. Ashcroft makes a pleasant, bright, considerate and properly appreciative third hand. The King won everything, with occasional streaks of very bad luck, and on one occasion when he picked up a bad hand he said, “This would be a hell of a hand even in the Kingdom of Heaven.” He is so sweet and winsome to play with, and shouts with delight when I pile Hearts upon Mr. Ashcroft who makes such a good butt for our villainies [MTP TS 114-115].

J.B. Houghton wrote from Shoals, Ind. to urge Sam to print the entire Autobiography [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, “Tell him there’s too much of it to print. There’s 6 or 7 times as much as appeared in the North American Review”; Houghton would have to wait 100 years.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP. Note: MTP lists this A.D. date as “conjectural.”

October 14 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal:

I’m dumb with my pen when it comes to trying to write of the King. But this afternoon we were talking—he was talking about religions, and “first causes” and he said that he was not built so that a religion could be of any use to him; he got away from the husk of it ages ago but no one could say how much he may be influenced by the religions of those who are around him. He is not conscious of it, and it would seem as if the line of conduct were due to his own development (and so it is, let him say what he may) but it is all due to the influences about him. (It is he who is the influence.)

Just then Father Fitzsimon and Mrs. Price of Sterlington came in and we had a very jolly time. The Prices took Lawrence [sic Laurence] Hutton's house in Princeton after Mr. Hutton died and they did enjoy it so much. In the library hung the framed letter and envelope that Mr. Hutton received from the King once when he was in Venice and the King had inscribed it "Keep till the cuss comes." We talked about our collecting instincts and the King said that he is collecting school girls, and Mrs. Price is collecting little Prices. Mrs. Price told such a cunning little story about her little girl of 6 who is just learning the notes on the piano. Mrs. Price told her that when she is old enough she will be able to read music. After a little the child say "Where is the T on the piano, mamma?" "There isn't any T, dear." "But there will have to be for I've found the C and the A, and if I'm going to read how can I spell cat on the piano without a T. When the King and I went to dinner, I explained with delight over the centre piece of flowers that Claude had provided—but on one of the delicate sprouts I discovered a biggish spider. With a shudder I showed him to the King who said "God made him, and will see that he suffers". Just then Claude snipped off the sprout and the spider and dropped it into the open fire. We heard him sizzle and pop, and the King smiled, oh he smiled rarely [MTP TS 115-116].

Alice E. Bartlett for Detroit Women's Press Club wrote to ask Sam for an autographed book for their sale in order to erect a new club house [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Sent Eve's Diary"

Charles R. Lamb for the Municipal Art Society (NY) wrote an invitation for Lyon [MTP].

Elvelena W. Morford wrote on Baldwin School, Bryn Mawr, Pa. notepaper to thank Sam for his visit to the Jamestown Fulton Day and for a welcome home telegram sent by Sam/Ashcroft to Miss Howard [MTP].

Mrs. Charles T. Parsloe, widow wrote from NY Sam to reconfirm her authorization to use and modify the play Ah Sin, as per a letter from Clemens she still had. Since her son had died of a heart attack, and was her only means of support, she hoped the play might bring her income [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter for Sam:

You will see by the letter written & what Mr. Clemens's position is, that he is glad you have an opportunity to make the trial, but Mr. Clemens says merely protect yourself & him & Bret Harte by inserting that line in the advertisements. That if this play can be rewritten by a competent person, it ought to make a success in these days when every one's doubtful eyes are on China & Japan. That when the piece was put on the stage originally in NY the miners in it were so unnecessarily coarse & vulgar that they were revolting. The miners that were in these characters were drawn from were not dressed for the part, but at the same time they were not brutes, yet nevertheless...Ah Sin was so good that it would have made that play succeed so handsomely if all the critics had not been after Bret Harte. They had waiting a long time for their chance to square with him. He had said you can buy any critic for cash, & he wasn't going to do any buying. My comment is, which was thoughtful & judicious on his part, since he hadn't a cent to buy anything or anybody with....

An unidentified person wrote from Washington, D.C. to Sam. (Only a large, brown envelope survives with a pasted return address: Manager, LONGEVITY / 242 North Capitol Street / Washington, D.C.) This likely contained a copy of the modified Ah Sin play which Mrs. Parsloe was directing [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote a long reply on the envelope:

Ought to have put up with the rest of the piece which was bad. He was always busy & people would interrupt him & he'd say "you go hella." I might dictate a blast about Bret H. & put this in about the play in such a way that if she can get this play on the board that this might be worth something. When B.H. brought out this play with Ah Sin it it was then that he brought out the indiscreet remark—which was partly true. ... Cost Mr. Clemens 3000 to put play on state. He died owing Mr. Clemens 3000 [MTP] Note: Lyon wrote more but in a seeming rush—much is illegible or difficult to make sense of.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP. Note: MTP lists this A.D. date as “conjectural.”

October 15 Tuesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Theodore A. Bingham.

Dear Bingham: / Here is a far-wandering breath from over the fields of Long Ago. Ten days ago we found this letter among relics & mementoes of Susy & her Mother. It is from Susy to her Mother. It was an eager message out of a beating heart then; it is compliment, affection & gratitude uttered from the grave, now.

Yours sincerely

S. L. Clemens

[note by IVL on transcript: “Phelps always teased & distressed Susy & Clara before company, & they dreaded his sarcastic attentions”; MTP]. Note: see Bingham’s reply of Oct. 24.

Fatout lists a reading at an unidentified function in Tuxedo Park for this day [MT Speaking 678]. Note: Sam did spin a few of his standard yarns on Oct. 22. See IVL entry.

The Pilgrim Dinner for Rev. Winnington-Ingram, lord bishop of London was held this evening, but Sam had declined to attend, though he wrote a speech for the event (see Fatout 590-5), which criticized the US political system and President Roosevelt, whom he called “President of the Republican party,” and not the US; that all patriotism was lodge in the Republican party, and “All others are traitors; though Americans might mock royalties, they loved to look at pictures of them and even envied them: “An American girl would rather marry a title than an angel.” Sam compared the slaughter of railroad and automobile deaths in America with a relative few in England, and pointed to the Thaw trial as scandal that Americans decried yet couldn’t take their eyes from. He criticized everything in America from their International Yacht races to potholes in their highways. He closed on a positive note hoping that the Lord Bishop would be treated as well by America as he had been in England for the Oxford degree and honors [Note: this speech probably was written shortly after Sam wrote Harvey on Oct. 5 that the invite had arrived, and no later than a few days before the event on Oct. 15; just why Sam did not deliver the speech may be speculated upon; he may have felt the time wasn’t right for another dollop of controversy].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: We drove up to the Douglasses this afternoon. Mr. D. is an ex-clergyman. The King looked him over and said he was a clergyman for revenue only. “He stood the chief mate’s watch in Grace Church; he looked the flock over and picked out the government bonds,” and it proclaims itself at every turn. The house is splendid, and beautifully planned, but Mrs. Douglas is long and lank and lean and purely of the spinster type. Not one attraction about her.

I was to go into town today to help C.C. buy a concert gown—but the kitchen range is broken—the floor wet and Katie Laundress has a cold, and so it has been deferred to the end of the week. I was just on my way down stairs last evening to tell the King that the trip was off, and he said “and I was just on my way to call up to you that I’d go in with you and go down to Broughton’s office to see about Utah. (stocks are very, very low just now). The King cannot bear to stay alone in this house or any house. If I stay away the night he cannot eat, for it is solitude, and he says that he will not try to ever again. He will stay in bed and take a glass of milk [MTP TS 116-117].

Edwin P. Parker wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: letter could not be located at the MTP.

Frances A. Ramsay wrote asking Sam for a letter of recommendation as a stenographer [MTP]. Note: Sam answered on Oct. 17.

Robert C. Richardson, Jr. for West Point sent tickets to “various football games to be played at West Point”; also a schedule for 9 home games for 1907 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, “I should thank him very much”

A.E. Sunderhauf wrote from NYC to Sam, representing Mrs. Parsloe (see above) for the play Ah Sin, to be renamed “Where the Trail Divides”—did her authorization include the use of Twain’s name? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “In the case of Mrs Parsloe they must use the line [“]revised & reconstructed by consent of Mark Twain from a play written by Bret Harte & Mark Twain, called Ah Sin.[”] / This is necessary both on Mrs. P’s acct & mine. This states the fact & could be taken hold of by the critics & damage done to the interests of the play. It would not be fair to leave Bret Harte’s name out because he constructed the scenario mainly. He furnished the main character, & he wrote fully half the play. therefore the bulk of the play is Bret Harte’s, not Mr. Clemens”

October 16 Wednesday – The New York Times, Oct. 17, p.18, ran an article about humor in Ashcroft v. Hammond libel case, and a deposition of Sam’s read in court this day:

SWORN JEST BY MARK TWAIN.

Humorist Says He First Met John Hays Hammond in Jail—Ashcroft’s Suit.

A touch of humor enlivened the otherwise prosaic deposition of Mark Twain, which was read to the jury yesterday afternoon in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, where the suit of Ralph W. Ashcroft against John Hays Hammond for $25,000 libel damages is being heard.

The humorist explained that the first occasion upon which he met the defendant the latter was in jail. Mr. Clemens referred to the time when Hammond was a military prisoner in Pretoria under sentence of death for participating in the Jameson raid. The sentence was afterward commuted to a ransom of $125,000. The ground for the suit lies in a certain telegram sent to the author by the defendant Sept. 15, 1894, at which time both Mr. Clemens and Hammond were stockholders in the Plasmon Manufacturing Company, of which the plaintiff was manager. The telegram criticised Ashcroft as “incompetent, if not worse.” Mr. Clemens admitted that the telegram had been sent.

Several letters written by Hammond belittling the plaintiff were also read. The case will be continued to-day.

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam.

This is a paragraph from a letter just received from Dr. Hart, Controller of the University Press, Oxford, England:

“We were all very much interested in Dr. Clemens. In saying good bye to him, I told him to observe that we had not asked him to be funny, or make any speech, or to do anything but enjoy himself in a quiet way. If you meet him again you can tell him that as to the protection of the copyright of the Bible, it has practically no copyright protection but an extraordinary sentiment in the public mind which prevails as much in America as in England; that it has to be accurate, absolutely accurate, and accurate every time, and that although there is a license to the Privileged Printers, in my opinion that license would not hold the copyright for a day if it were not for the confidence felt by the public that the three Privileged Presses print correctly, and Oxford Press most correctly of all. In addition, I believe I am correct in saying that, while the Privileged Printers of the Bible in England chiefly, but in Scotland also, hold their own nominally because of that privilege, but actually because of accuracy, no difficulty is ever made if the Bible is printed in polyglot or diglot, or with the notes and annotations, or in any way which makes it, or attempts to make it, simpler or more acceptable to the public.”

I know you are interested in this, so I pass it along.

Mrs. Doubleday and I plan to sail on the LUSITANIA on Saturday, and take a breath of the London fog, and return on November 15th....[MTP].

Clarence E. Leonard wrote to invite Sam to speak at the Annual Banquet for the Society of Mayflower Descendants on Nov. 21, 1907 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 17, ‘07”

Hamilton W. Mabie for The Outlook wrote to ask Sam for two hours of his time on Oct. 21; he'd arrive on the train to Tuxedo at 10:33 a.m. [MTP].

Anna S. MacDonald wrote to Sam. She was sending her "small volume" Columbia; The Land of the Free which included a poem Sam had advised her on "some years ago." She had friend in Oxford who witnessed the ceremonies and said it made Americans very proud [MTP].

October 17 Thursday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote a short note of recommendation for Mrs. Frances A. Ramsay as a stenographer "To whom it may concern": I take the pleasure in saying that as a stenographer I found Mrs Ramsay competent & in all ways satisfactory" [MTP].

Sam inscribed his photo to "Dear Miss Bessie." (Miss Bessie Holloway wrote thanks to him on Oct. 29 and this is likely the same Bessie). "Dear Miss Bessie, Even if an agent should take your scoldings on a commission, I doubt if he would get much of a living out of it. Sincerely yours, Mark Twain, Oct.17/07" [Adam Adrusier Autographs, Ltd. London] Notes (from seller's listing): "It seems likely that Twain is making reference here to his story 'Little Bessie' (with whom the recipient of this photo presumably shared a first-name), an irreverent story in which Christianity is ridiculed, written in the year of signing this photo (1907). The story was suppressed until well after Twain's death, when it was published in 1972."

The New York Times, "Theatrical Notes," Oct. 17, 1907, p.9 :

Mark Twain will be a guest on Tuesday evening next when the New York members of the American Press Humorists will have a theatre party at the Casino to witness "The Gay White Way," with Jefferson De Angelis, Blanche Ring, and Alexander Carr [Notes: Jefferson De Angeles (1859-1933), comic actor; Blanche Ring (1871-1961), singer and actress in Broadway productions; Alexander Carr (1877-1946), Russian-born silent-filmactor.

Robert Erskine Ely for the Economic Club of New York sent Sam a membership list, and a request for annual dues of $15 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, "Too many of these taxes & they aggregate too much / must withdraw"; Sam hated paying any club dues.

Harry Windsor Dearborn wrote to Lyon asking for a Twain photo for Mr. Walter Scott [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Oct. 17, '07"

October 18 Friday – Joseph B. Gilder for Putnam's Monthly wrote to again request Sam allow their sketch artist to draw Sam for the magazine; they'd done Choate and Howells; the artist didn't require Clemens to sit but could walk around the room [MTP].

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to Lyon reminding of Sam's promise to give her a photo of himself in his white suit. "He was in the office yesterday and told me if you could remind him of it, it would be attended to." She was also "anxious" to have the newest volumes of the De Luxe ed. In Buckram—would she kindly send her name to Harpers for it? [MTP].

In Sam's A.D. he quoted from "this morning's news" in the NY World [Gribben 507].

Of the selections from Twain's A.D.'s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto's choices, was "The Hunting of the Cow," dictated this day, told of "Two colossal incidents" of the day before, the opening of business by the Marconi Co. with wireless messages [radio] sent "entirely across the Atlantic, straight from shore to shore”; and “the President of the United States for the fourteenth time came within three miles of flushing a bear” [7].

October 19 Saturday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J.

Dorothy dear, it is perfectly lovely here, now—with brilliant skies, brilliant water, sleek as a mirror, & all the brilliant colors of the hills painted on it like a picture. And there’s rabbits—oh, no end! They’ve got a nest in that tree that leans over the nasturtium bed, & they scamper up & down it all day long & jabber. And as for squirrels, & deer, & Italians & other game, they’re everywhere. And nobody shoots them, for it isn’t allowed, I don’t know why. And there are owls, & cows, & bears; & nights you can hear them hooting. Sometimes they make the kind of a noise a preacher makes. It is awful, but I am not afraid. The others are afraid, but I am calm, & go down cellar.

I believe that is about all the news there is, except that we leave Tuxedo the 31st, to live in town—21-Fifth ave—where you must come & stay over Sundays every time you can be spared.

Dear heart, you mustn’t send stories to St. Nicholas, yet, it is too soon. You must learn the trade first, & nobody can do that without a long & diligent apprenticeship—not anything short of 10 years. Write the stories—write lots & lots of them, for practice—and when the Literary League gets together again, we’ll examine into your progress & take note of such improvement as we find.

We have a very nice thoughtful little cat, & it catches snakes & brings them into the house for Miss Lyon to play with.

3.30 p.m. time to get up / With love & many kisses... [MTAq 76, 78].

Mr. & Mrs. Lockwood De Forest sent Sam an invitation to their daughter’s wedding [MTP].

Mrs. M.E. Hill wrote from Washington, D.C. to Sam. “To the acquaintance of my youth, years have passed and to day I find myself reading one of your best books, so I thought I would take the liberty to find out if you were the little Sammy Clemens the author of Innocents Abroad that used to run in nearly every day to see us in the old historic city of Georgetown when a boy and I was a little girl Mary Bateman” [MTP]. Note: she had it partly right, but Clemens was never a boy in Georgetown. Sam often got letters from fans swearing they’d known him in one place and time or another.

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

I have been watching the mail for a long time while expecting a letter every day I feel very lonesome for you when you don’t write for so long Mother says you are a very busy man and I should have patience but I cant. Please write me soon if only a tiny little letter I had a reply from the St. Nickolas yesterday they said my story was very good but too long so I think I will take your advice and wait until I am older before I try again I copied a lead in the Ladies Home Journal and it was so good I won the prize please write to me very soon. I am well and happy but I miss you very very much with love to Miss Lyon and lots and lots of love and kisses for you I am / Your fond little / Dorothy [MTAq 78].

October 19 ca. – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam (on the Oct. 19 invitation from Mr. and Mrs. Lockwood De Forest to the wedding of their daughter) to Marion Piepel at 75 W. 92nd Street: “Mr. Clemens is glad you have been able to finish the story. I could have done it once, but it is too difficult now” [MTP]. Note: Piepel is unidentified, but the reference may be to a translation of one of his stories.

October 20 Sunday – Alice Minnie Herts wrote for the Children’s Theatre to Miss Lyon, correcting a prior invitation [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 23”

October 21 Monday – A run on the Knickerbocker Trust Co. bank in N.Y.C. caused panic elsewhere, and the bank was forced to close its doors the next day. Sam had deposits of about $51,000 at the bank. J.P. Morgan would gain the help of fellow bankers, including John D. Rockefeller, to raise funds and import $100,000,000 in gold from Europe to restore confidence. See Oct. 22. H.H. Rogers and Katharine Harrison had originally recommended the Knickerbocker Trust Co. to Sam. A business slowdown from the resulting spreading panic lasted for months.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Daniel Frohman wrote to Sam: “Mrs Frohman is giving a little dinner party next Sunday night at 8 in a private room at Martins at which she is to have Mr & Mrs. John Drew, Mr & Mrs. Francis Wilson, Henry Miller, also Elinor Glyn the English author, likewise Mme Nordica, and, we expect the Russian actress Mme Mazimova. Mrs. Frohman wants you” [MTP].

Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, “I take it as a high compliment & shall be there, but it would alter the complexion as I am a professional myself”; Alla Mazimova (born Miriam Edez Adelaida Leventon) (1879-1945), Russian Jew at one time thought to be the “World’s greatest actress.” A precocious child who played the violin at age 7. She moved to NYC in 1905 and began a Russian-language theater with Pavel Orlenev, actor and producer. Her 1906 Broadway debut brought her critical and popular success. She would later be a silent film star, then back to Broadway. In the 1940s she appeared in a few films.

Charles Ross Keen for Dickens Fellowship, Manhattan Branch wrote to ask Sam for his autograph [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Oct. 23”

Of the selections from Twain’s A.D.’s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto’s choices, was further comic commentary on a news report of Roosevelt’s bear-hunting expedition [10].

October 22 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Oh, it’s too dreadful. Every penny the King has, fifty one thousand dollars, is in the Knickerbocker Trust Co. and it has suspended payment. It has gone crashing into a terrible state. I was in town and read of the panic in the Times, and Ashcroft and I went to the bank, at 30th st and Fifth Avenue to see crowds of people there, with bank books in their quivering hands. And then I came back to Tuxedo to find the King in bed and so cheerful and beautiful and brave, and trying not to show his anxiety. He had telephoned in to me to withdraw the money, but by the time I could do anything it was too late. At the time I didn’t know it was too late, but Ashcroft telephoned the news out to me this afternoon. This evening the King went down to the Town Hall to talk to the Villagers. The great swells of the park didn’t know it, but if they had and had tried to enter they wouldn’t have been admitted. The King talked about memory and morals and told the stolen watermelon story and the old ram story and General Miles, and the dog story and found the murdered man on the floor. He was so gay and delighted those people so much that you wouldn’t ever have thought that the Knickerbocker had suspended payments [MTP TS 117].

Shelden writes of the bank run on Knickerbocker Trust, and on Sam’s actions when learning of it:

...he promptly telephoned Isabel Lyon, who happened to be at 21 Fifth Avenue preparing the house for his return the next week. He gave her instructions to withdraw all his money immediately.

She hurried to the trust company as fast as she could and was stunned by the sight that greeted her outside. The streets were jammed with cabs, private automobiles, and “finely appointed carriages” belonging to Park Avenue widows and other wealthy depositors living nearby. With “bank books in their quivering hands”—as Lyon later put it—the crowd stood on the wide sidewalk and stared blankly at the Knickerbocker’s locked doors. Lyon had arrived too late. Police reserves, called in at the last minute, were standing at the entrance and were trying to hold back some of the depositors who were demanding to be let in. Everyone was told the company had run out of cash and would be closed indefinitely [MTMW 149-50]. Note: the cause of the bank’s problems were millions of dollars worth of bad loans made by the President, Charles T. Barney, to foster a stock scheme. Barney later committed suicide. For a full account of the Bank failure and what led up to it, see source. Ultimately, Sam’s funds were restored; plus, his seemingly placid reaction to the crisis can be explained in large part by his guarantee of $25,000 annual income from Harpers.

Charles E. Warren for Lincoln National Bank wrote to advise Sam that “The two checks aggregating $50,000 deposited by you this day on the Knickerbocker Trust Company are not paid, the company having suspended payment. We shall make further attempt to secure payment...” [MTP].

October 23 Wednesday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to “Miss Anonyma.”

Dear Miss Anonyma: / This is to express my joy in the fact that you are able to go fishing, & to thank you very heartily for letting me share in the result. It is my purpose to call & say these things orally this afternoon, & so I am merely uttering them with the pen as a precaution, since it often happens—as you will have noticed—that the things we propose to do get interfered with & do not occur.

Also a part of this note's purpose is to say good bye to your mother—not to you, dear, for I shall see you later. At the ball. Where, with your kind permission, we will do the Virginia Reel together, & try to attract some attention. You will wear your new things, of course, & that will help. Next morning early, I return to 21 Fifth Ave for good, there to discard crime once more & lead an upright life again. This will attract attention. It is what we live for. Besides, such changes are often salutary [MTP]. Note: “Anonyma” was slang in the 1860s for “a fashionable whore.” Whomever Sam crowned with this name, if they knew of the old meaning, would have been a lady who could take a joke. Sam moved back to 21 Fifth Ave. the next day, Thursday, Oct. 24, according to his Oct. 28 to Nunnally; the Annual Cotillion of Tuxedo Club was held on Friday, Oct. 25, so that he must have traveled back to the club for the ball, referred to in his above letter to Miss Anonyma, not further identified, though it may have been Mary Rogers, whom Clemens loved to joke with.

Isabel Lyon's journal: This morning the financial outlook was a bad one. Yesterday's paper said aid would be given to Knickerbocker, but it wasn't forthcoming. This morning when I went to the King's room his face looked grey, but he was brave and cheerful and talked over what we must do. Sell the steel bonds a few at a time to build the Redding house with, for the autobiography money is in the Knickerbocker, and live on what comes from the Harpers. Clara's expenses this summer have been extremely great. We thought they were heavy other year, but this year has exceeded the others, and she has all her plans made for another costly concert tour.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman lunched here and before they arrived the King went down on the porch and walked up and down, singing the kind of song that means his heart is very heavy and oh, he does need some one to love him and pet him. He has decided to go to N.Y. tomorrow and the house here is to be closed on Saturday [MTP TS 118].

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam a bill for $2,732.56 “in favor of Mr. William Webb Sunderland”; they wanted Sam to pay sunderland direct [MTP].

Sam attended a ball in Tuxedo Park on his last night at the exclusive neighborhood [Oct. 23 to “Miss Anonyma”].

October 24 Thursday – Sam returned to 21 Fifth Ave. for the winter. Clara Clemens had been “domiciled in the house several days”; Isabel Lyon and servants would follow on Oct. 26 [Oct. 28 to Nunnally].

Isabel Lyon's journal: At 7:20 this morning I went down to the King's room to find him huddled under all the blankets he could collect and wanting his coffee, so I went to the kitchen to hurry it up. He left at 7:50 and Ashcroft met him and they went up to the Lincoln Bank. Ashcroft telephoned me tonight and said that the King was gay and seemed very well. ~~But oh the desolation of this house without him. It is lucky for me that I have a week's work to do in 3 days else I never could get over the [illegible word] wave of misery that swept over me when the jigger rolled away & I turned back to my breakfast in that [illegible word] green living room~~ [MTP TS 18-119]. Note: Lyon's strikeouts may have been added many years later, for her own reasons.

Harper's published A Horse's Tale as a book. Sam wrote it in 1905 in response to a letter by Minnie Maddern Fiske in Sept. of that year. Harper's Magazine published it in two parts for Aug. and Sept. of 1906, with five illustrations by Lucius Wolcott Hitchcock.

Theodore A. Bingham wrote to Sam that on Oct. 18 he rec'd Sam's of Oct 15: "What pleasant days those were in Berlin! & what dears your girls were!" [MTP].

H.D. McKnight wrote from Lawton, Okla. He'd been told he had a "Mark Twain head of hair," and felt proud of it. The letter is one of appreciation with no request [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Nov. 6, '07"

Cora W. Nunnally wrote from Atlanta, Ga. to Sam. "Your letter, with the postal enclosed, I enjoyed very much. It was a very curious thing the way the little girl was created, by your merely pushing the pillows comfortably under your head. ... Frances seems quite happy at school, and is looking forward with much pleasure to your promised visit" [MTP]. Note: Cora referred to the "mystery girl" photo.

October 25 Friday – The annual Cotillion Ball of the Tuxedo Club was held and the New York Times reported the event, Oct. 26, p.11. If Sam attended, as his letter of Oct. 23 to "Miss Anonyma" shows, he would have had to have returned from 21 Fifth Ave. for the event, since he moved back on Oct. 24. No mention of him was made in the Times article, though H.H. Rogers, Jr. (Harry) and wife Mary were listed, so he likely canceled plans to attend, returning to his N.Y.C. house. Possibly the events at the Knickerbocker Trust Co. led to the changed plans. Also in his Oct. 28 letter to Nunnally he wrote that Miss Lyon and servants returned to Fifth Ave. "late Saturday," or Oct. 26.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today over my solitary tea I read a very interesting article on Energy by William James" [MTP TS 119].

Howard O. Wood wrote from NYC to invite Sam to speak at the Brooklyn Union League Lincoln Birthday dinner the next year [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, "I don't go"

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

October 26 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: I don't know how I got through all of it—doing 9 days' work in 3 days, but it is over and I am in New York. Arrived at 3 to find the King and AB at billiards. I brought in the pretty little cat and the King was glad to see it. Myron Whitney came in to rehearse his concert program with Clara for the 11th. His voice is superb. They had to have the King come in to hear it, but the King was much annoyed, and hated to leave his billiards, even tho' he had to concede that Whitney's voice was wonderful. Receivership for Knickerbocker Trust [MTP TS 119].

Evangeline Booth for the Salvation Army wrote to advise Sam that her father, General William Booth (1829-1912), founder of the Salvation Army, would lecture in Carnegie Hall on Nov. 4, and, since he was 79, it would likely be his last visit to America. Sam could sit on the platform—and could they put his name on their list of attendees? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Thank you very much[.] Remember momentary meeting with General Booth in Oxford with much pleasure / Have stopped having name used" William Stone Booth was a different gentleman.

Joseph B. Gilder for Putnam's Monthly wrote to Sam.

I told you after dinner at my brother's house last winter, or longer ago, that Baroness Elizabeth de Nolde had asked me to try and get you to write a brief introduction to the book on Madame de Stael and Benjamin Constant. With that amiability and indecision for which you are noted, you replied that you wouldn't write a damned word. I never told your love, but let concealment like a worm i' the bud. If I had quoted you, the beautiful lady would doubtless have suggested that some other kind of word would do as well. / I enclose the Baroness's letter, which has been in my hands for many a long moon [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter: "I wrote yesterday, Oct. 28 & told her that Mr. Clemens doesn't write a line for publication for any one but his own publisher."

October 27 Sunday – The Sunday Magazine of the New York Tribune featured "Mark Twain's Autobiography" and a full page portrait of him. An identical cover was published in the Sunday Magazine of the St. Louis Republic, as well as many other newspapers. See insert.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I sat with the King a long time this morning. He said he couldn't do any phrasing in answer to a note from someone, because he and Paine had played billiards until nearly 3 o'clock. / Knickerbocker coming along—perhaps" [MTP TS 119].

J.E. Caldwell wrote from Ottawa, Canada to "discharge a debt of gratitude" to Sam for helping him from "a financial embarrassment" in 1906 [MTP].

Frances Nunnally wrote from St. Timothy's School in Catonsville, Md to Sam.

Dear MR. Clemens, — / I was so glad to get your letter and have been trying to find time to write to you ever since, but something is planned for us to do every minute of the day, and I do not have any time to myself. We have to study awfully hard, but then we have to take a certain amount of recreation every day, so that we keep in good health. We are outdoors almost all the afternoon, playing basket ball, or tennis, or some game like that. I have never been better in my life and my appetite is perfectly enormous, so that I am really getting fat.

It is almost November now and I hope you know positively that you are coming down to Annapolis, and you must be sure to stop by Baltimore. I should so love to have you come out here to our school, and all the other girls are crazy to have you come too. So if you find that you really can come down, please let me know, and come out to see us. The girls here are just as nice as they can be and I am sure you will like all of them. [MTAq 79].

October 27 ca. – Sam wrote to the Editor of the New York World, who evidently had requested he write something appropriate for Thanksgiving.

To the Editor of the World.

Sir: you ask me for a sentiment which shall state how much I have to be thankful for, this time. For years it has been a rule, with me, not to expose my gratitude in print on Thanksgiving Day, but I wish to break the rule, now, & pour out my thankfulness, for there is more of it than I can contain without straining myself. I am thankful—thankful beyond words—that I had only fifty-one thousand dollars on deposit in the Knickerbocker Trust, instead of a million; for if I had had a million in that bucket shop I should be nineteen times as sorry as I am now. Trusting that this paean of joy will satisfy your requirement, I am / Yours truly / Mark Twain [MTP].

Sam took his above letter to the President and Directors of the Knickerbocker Trust Co., N.Y.

I expect nothing out of you—at least, nothing but your disapproval of me for publishing the above, along with this letter. You discriminated against me by accepting two deposits from me after some had been warned to take their money out. Instead of putting your hands in your pockets, & paying your debts, like the Lincoln Trust & other respectable concerns, you have been shillyshallying for a month trying to escape your obligations & find some more economical & less reputable way to resume. Why do you wish to resume? Do you suppose any one will risk money with you again? Next time you will bring up in jail, where you probably ought to have been many & many a year ago. At large, you are a common danger, whereas in jail you would be useful—useful, as an example. Also happy, for you would be at home; at home, & among sympathetics, sympathetics, & all harmonious, all wearing the same handsome stripes. Oh, you must not think of resuming, it would make the people to laugh, as the French say. And they would say the most sarcastic things about you, just as they are doing now. They would remember that the government & the capitalists hastened to rescue the Lincoln & the other reputable trusts, but hadn't a kind word for you, nor a dollar. I am your friend, & I assure you it will be a mistake for you to resume. / Affectionately, / M. T. [MTP].

October 28 Monday – In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Now, dear Francesca, this is to admonish you—& please remember: your studies, & your outdoor & indoor amusement activities are very important, in fact are essentials, & any time filched from them for a courtesy's sake means a loss not warrantable & not justifiable. You are a dear sweet Francesca, but you must not write letters to people on those costly terms. Neither must you filch time to read letters from people, except when they are very brief. Read part of this one: that will be sufficient.

I perceive, with pleasure, that you are having a very prosperous time down there, both mentally & physically. Let it continue! I came home last Thursday, Miss Lyon followed late on Saturday, with the Tuxedo servants. My daughter had already been domiciled in the house several days.

Dear me, I must stop making November engagements, right away! For there is Annapolis to be thought of. Of the five or six already made I can excuse myself from all but one—Nov. 19th. I will make only conditional ones henceforth.

Yes, indeed, as soon as we hear from Gov. Warfield I shan't fail to let you know. Also I shall allow myself time to kiss you & the rest of the 70. You, anyway, shipmate! / With love ... [MTP].

Margery H. Clinton wrote from Tuxedo Park to Sam, “delighted to have your autograph.” They were disappointed not to see him at the Autumn Ball [MTP]. Note: letter not mailed; likely delivered.

W. Emory Wardell wrote from Worcester, Mass. to ask Sam if the tale about Cecil Rhodes in FE finding a newspaper in the stomach of a shark was true, as he could not find it anywhere [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Tell him that it will not be found in any biography of Cecil Rhodes because Rhodes was of a jealous nature / Merely a romance which I made up for my own amusement”

October 29 Tuesday – John C. Gardner wrote from Toronto. Gardner denied being a “crank” yet sent 10 pages typed double-spaced relating his life long exposure to Twain's books and the fall from his estimation caused by the frustration of reading Sam's Autobiography in serial form in a magazine. While trying to be humorous, Gardner became tedious (this is a rare editorial comment dedicated to Tom Tenney) [MTP].

Miss Bessie V. Holloway wrote from London to thank Sam for the photo sent: “Father says I am a very lucky girl, to be so favoured. / I am sending you a Christmas card with best wishes. I know it is rather early to talk about Christmas but better early than never, I think” [MTP].

John Japp wrote from Liverpool to thank Sam for sending a signed copy of JA [MTP].

A. Raphael, S. Raphael, E. Ciner, and I. Neuwirth wrote to Sam. “We are about to organize a literary society in your honor.” Their four charter members each had full sets of Twain’s works and asked that one book from each set be autographed [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Nov. 18” and “Mr. Clemens will be glad to autograph the 4 books if they were sent here to 21 Fifth Ave.”

October 30 Wednesday – Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam: “Can we arrange for a dramatization of your story [?]Our Italian Guide[?] with Mr Timmory in Paris” [MTP].

October 31 Thursday – Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon about dramatizing progress [MTP].

November – In N.Y. Sam had invitations printed for the Nov. 19 Children’s Educational Theatre performance of P&P.

Mr. Samuel L. Clemens
(Mark Twain)
invites you to inspect the work of The Children’s Educational Theatre
Educational Alliance, 197 East Broadway on Tuesday evening, November 19th at 8,15
When a special complimentary performance will be given of “Prince and Pauper” dramatized from his book for the Children’s Educational Theatre
R. S. V. P. 21 Fifth Avenue
Upon receipt of your acceptance
Mr. Clemens will send two reserved seats
[MTP].

In Tuxedo Park, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon wrote notes on the back of one of the above invitations.

Miss Herts to make an explanation of the work & its needs
Mr. Clemens could introduce Miss Herts
Mr. Clemens has asked me to give an explanation of the work done by these people—the number in the casts—etc. & uplift it has given & it was the suggestion of the children that Mr. Clemens be the inviter of the Guests [MTP]. Note: Alice Minnie Herts. See prior incoming letters from Herts.

William Dean Howells’ article in the Dec. issue of Atlantic Monthly, “Recollections of an Atlantic Editorship,” recalled Mark Twain’s contributions from “A True Story” to “Old Times on the Mississippi.” Howells gave credit to the magazine’s owner, Henry O. Houghton, who “always believed that Mark Twain was literature” [Wells 27].

“...originally of Missouri, but then provisionally of Hartford, and ultimately of the Solar System, not to say the Universe. He came first with ‘A True Story,’ one of those noble pieces with which the South has atoned chiefly if not solely through him for all its despoilment to the Negro...It was finally decided to give the author twenty dollars a page, a rate unexampled in our modest history” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Seventh Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1983 p. 170].

Mark Twain was on yet another magazine cover, this one for the Nov. issue of World Events. In spite of the flashy cover, no articles on Twain are in the magazine, and only one reference to him and “pemmican sentences” can be found. See insert.

Sam’s article “Mental Telegraphy?” was written in Nov. 1907 and not published until 1970 in Mark Twain’s Quarrel with Heaven [Camfield’s bibliog.].

Chapters from “My Autobiography—XXIV” ran in the N.A.R. p.327-36.

November 1 Friday – Overland Monthly ran a sketch of Mark Twain by Alice Resor, accompanied by excerpts of IA reprinted from the magazine’s Oct. 1868 issue [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 192].

Robert H. Chase wrote from Phila. after reading the Autobiography in NAR about the “early trials of Innocents Abroad.” Chase related an 1839 tale of knowing a “poor young woman” from the South who, stricken by the war had come to Phila. He advised the woman to canvass for IA and from the start she had good success, making over $40 in one day; finally she saved up $500 from the book, took it West, married well and was never poor again [MTP].

Robert J. Collier wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens:- / Sallie and I are delighted to know that you are back in town and we are looking forward to a family dinner soon again. I hope the summer surrounded you with as much affection as Sallie seems to think your proper portion, and as I have heard that Tuxedo is the home of many beautiful young female persons, I have not been able to allay her jealousy.

Norman has given me a little fable called “Jocko and the Parrot,” whose authorship he did not know, but which emanated from you. It is an able and entertaining allegory, but with a moral pointed with so much venom that I don’t want to print it anonymously. As your personal view, it would be tremendously interesting, and if you will stand for it, either by signing it or sending with it a letter of commendation,—in it goes at once: Otherwise I am afraid that we shall have to give up the idea of printing it [MTP]. Note: Collier continued on to disagree generally with Twain’s opinions of President Roosevelt, taking a position with his weekly that “he is being unjustly blamed for a catyclsm not of his causing,” or, the financial crisis. Since they took that view “it would be almost dishonest for us to publish so clever (and bitter) an anonymous arraignment of him.”

Harper & Brothers for Frederick T. Leigh wrote to Miss Lyon enclosing a check for $1,000 on account of payment due this day of $2,083.33 [MTP].

Dorothy Quick wrote from Plainfield, NJ to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens / I just simply love the pictures Miss Lyon sent me they are all so good of you I wished I was back again at Tuxedo when I saw them Grandpa and Grandma and everyone in fact say they are the very best Kodak pictures they ever saw I read in the paper that you were down town I think you were very brave I should have been frightened to death you dont know how I miss you or how I long to see you we play cards every night and have lots of fun please tell Miss Lyon I will write to her very soon with lots and lots of love kisses and hugs your very loving / Dorothy [MTAq 80].

Of the selections from Twain’s A.D.’s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto’s choices, was “The Panic,” dictated this day, which compared the financial struggles of 1907 to prior panics [4-7]. Note: MTP notes, “Re-uses story in AD 5 Mar 1906 (‘...just my God damned luck’).”

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

November 2 Saturday — Emma N. Warfield (Mrs. Edwin Warfield) wrote to Miss Lyon: “Dr Clemens and you have interested me delightfully and I am so pleased that such a busy man should stop even for a moment to think of me” [MTP].

November 3 Sunday – Linnie M. Bourne wrote from Washington D.C. to relate a “slip of the tongue” she’d made as a girl going with her grandfather to see Twain and Cable read in Washington. When asked where they were going in such a hurry, she replied, “We’re going to hear Cain and Able read” [MTP].

Emma G. Mottrane wrote from to Sam that she possessed a “Fancy Black Comb, such as Ladie’s wear, which originally belonged in your family” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Nov. 15, ‘07” and “Thank her for her good intentions but I do not take [illegible word] interest in such things”

Alice Hegan Rice wrote from Louisville, Ky. to tell Sam of something her “very small nephew” said in her Sunday school class when asked to name the Apostles: “Matthew, Mark, Twain, Luke, and John” [MTP].

November 4 Monday – Thomas B. Doolittle wrote from Minneapolis, Minn. to Sam. “I wish that you would quit looking like me. It annoys me very much and besides, it appears by the enclosed anonymous verse that I am handsomer. / Yours truly” [MTP]. Note: clipping enclosed with Doolittle’s picture, “Inventor of Telephone Exchange Apparatus and Telephone Wire.” Also the picture of Twain on the Sunday Magazine, Record-Herald, Chicago.

Ferris Greenslet for Houghton Mifflin & Co., Boston wrote to Sam. “I find that my chapters on Aldrich in New York are going to take me over there the latter part of this week to stay a week or ten days...I should like very much to have the advantage of a talk with you, and to show you a letter or two of yours written back in the 70’s, which I should like with your permission to print...” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Have to arrange by telephone”

Belle R. Parsons wrote from Soldiers Home, Calif. to suggest and urge that Sam dramatize JA for Miss Maude Adams, who she felt was “the very embodiment of your Joan” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Dramatizing is not among my achievements” and “No one seems to be able to put any action into a Joan of Arc play”

November 4? Monday – An unidentified person (J.E. Williams?) wrote to Sam “Dear Twain / You will have the block on Saty without fail / yrs ...Send for it [MTP].

November 5 Tuesday

November 6 Wednesday – William Dean Howells saw Sam often during the fall and early winter of 1907-08. “I am going down to see old Clemens this morning,” Howells wrote his wife on Nov. 6 [MTHL 2: 827].

Charles J. Langdon wrote enclosing a draft for $137.50 to Sam for payment of bonds from Duvall Co. Fla.

I trust you are in the best of health and that the Knickerbocker Trust Co.’s suspension has not caused you any serious inconvenience. Ida, Eda and I had more money in there than we wish we had, but are not seriously injured, and I hope in time we will get our money back.

I trust Aunt Sue reached you safely and in good condition last evening. I am sure that you and Clara and Jean and she will have an enjoyable time together [MTP].

Anna Harris Smith for the Animal Rescue League, Boston wrote to ask Sam if he could autograph “some of your books” for their fair and she had a buyer for 25 copies of either “A Dog’s Tale” or “The Horse’s Tale” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Nov. 18, ‘07” and “Mr. Clemens will Autograph them”

November 7 Thursday – James C. Barr wrote on Cunard Steamship Co. notepaper, while in port in NYC. Barr enclosed a letter to Clemens from John Japp, Lord Mayor of Liverpool, and though there's been some delay in Japp getting the book Sam sent, Barr confirmed that Japp now had the book,[MTP].

Kate Douglas Riggs for the Literary Committee, Colony Club, NYC wrote to Sam not to “let anything happen to prevent your being the guest of honor at the Colony Club next Tuesday the 12th as you have agreed” [MTP].

November 8 Friday – Clinton B. Fisk wrote from NYC to ask Sam when he might “confer...regarding a matter of theatrical literary return that may prove mutually to our profit” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Nov. 11, ‘07”

Thomas Commerford Martin for the Engineer’s Club wrote to invite Sam to the inaugural banquet of the opening of their new club house, at which Andrew Carnegie would be guest of honor. They were limiting speakers to two or three—and hoped he might “help us voice our sentiments” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Nov. 11 1907”

Edward T. Devine for Charities and the Commons, a weekly journal, wrote: “May we have your signature to the enclosed letter [not in file] to be sent to department stores, newspaper editors and executives of women’s clubs in all parts of the country?” [MTP].

Polly Porter sent a cartoon postcard from Oxford picturing “The High, during Pageant Week” with a queen and a nun riding bicycles. Porter wrote: “Here is your vision! Your letter was deeply appreciated / Polly Porter” [MTP].

November 9 Saturday – Captain James C. Barr sent a telegram from the SS Lucania to Sam: “Big fish landed / thanks it was. / Captain Barr” [MTP].

John Bigelow wrote from Highland Falls-on-Hudson to advise that though he was at an old age, he would be at the Educational Theatre with one of his daughters on the 19th, and please send the tickets to an address he furnished in Gramercy Park [MTP].

Perry Bliss for Atlantic Monthly, Boston wrote to give permission for Sam to read Miss Hert’s unpublished paper for the Children’s Theatre [MTP]. Note: he signed his name as “Bliss Perry,” so this may be miscatalogued.

John Japp wrote from Liverpool to “double his thanks” to Sam after reading the JA sent [MTP].

George C. Riggs sent a small notecard to Sam: “It is with great joy that I learn from Albert Paine of your willingness to meet a few of us at the Players on Wednesday Evening, November twentieth, at seven thirty. My dear lady’s heart is sorry that our good club is only given to men and envies me every moment I will have with you but, I tell her to keep a brave spirit. You may come here anon” [MTP].

November 10 Sunday – Poultney Bigelow sent a postcard to Miss Lyon: “...accepts with delight for Tuesday Nov. 19th” [MTP].

John A. Joyce wrote from Washington, D.C.. Joyce broke down when reading in the NAR of Susy Clemens’ last words, because it brought the memory of his own daughter’s death 20 years before [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Nov. 13, ‘07”

J. Van Vechten Olcott wrote from NYC to thank Sam for letting him know what the Tribune supplement published this day [MTP].

C.C. White wrote from Milford, Mass. to express love to Clemens over the NAR segment about Susy's death [MTP].

November 11 Monday – Fatout lists a dinner speech for Sam at the Homeopathic Society, N.Y.C. but gives no particulars and none were found [MT Speaking 678].

Howard Kyle wrote on Players notepaper to ask Sam if he might bring a photo taken of Clemens in the Players Booth at the Actors Fund Fair last May, for his signature [MTP].

An unidentified person wrote to Sam (only the env. Survives; Sam wrote on it, "Invite the Laffans") [MTP].

November 12 Tuesday – The New York Times, Nov. 13, p.9, "Reception to Mark Twain," reported:

Reception to Mark Twain.

Author the Guest of Honor at the Colony Club.

The officers and members of the Colony Club gave a reception yesterday afternoon [Nov. 12] in honor of Mark Twain.

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, the President of the club; Mrs. Richard Irving, and other club officers received.

There was a large attendance, and Mr. Twain made a felicitous little speech. After the official programme tea was served [Note: Fatout lists the speech but gives no particulars; MT Speaking 678].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Miss Lyon about plaster busts of Twain; also could the seats provided for the 19th be together? [MTP].

Thomas Commerford Martin for the Engineer's Club wrote to Miss Lyon—was Sam's decision final? [MTP].

Owen Oliver wrote on NY Herald notepaper to ask about Sam's Autobiography in the NAR to explain the "Beriah mystery" and why the Col. Sellers name was Beriah in his copy of GA when it was Mulberry then Eschol and back to Mulberry in the Autobiography [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Didn't know that name had ever been used. Originally used Mulberry"

November 13 Wednesday

November 14 Thursday – Sam took a walk up Fifth Ave. to 42nd Street. At 4 p.m. at the Church of the Ascension, Sam attended the wedding of Miss Marjorie Rice, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Clarence C. Rice, to Gordon Means of Boston [NY Times, Nov. 13, 1907, p. 9; Nov. 15 to Jean: Nov. 21 to Mary Rogers].

In the evening he played billiards till midnight [Nov. 15 to Jean].

Frank Fuller wrote to Sam to condemn those who used Mark Twain's name for advertising, enclosing slips of examples (not in file) from the US Patent Office's "Official Gazette" [MTP]. Note: see Nov. 19 by Loveland.

Thomas Commerford Martin for the Engineer's Club wrote to Miss Lyon, sorry that Sam could not make the banquet honoring Andrew Carnegie on his 70th—could Sam send him “a few words” to read about Carnegie? [MTP]. Note: Sam did attend, so changed his mind.

November 15 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Katonah, N.Y.

Jean dear, you may return that unpleasant book & we will put it out of sight. It lacks the ring of truth; lacks it so prominently that it fell flat, & made not a ripple on the surface of the human sea; whereas if its statements had been believed it would have created a cyclone. Evidently the world saw in it only an expression of the spite of some disgruntled small persons of the servant class, who had suffered from blighted little ambitions & were drunk with the spirit of unreasoning revenge. I think it is nothing but a hotch-potch of libels & slanders, & not worth anyone's serious attention.

I am exercising, now—not for my health, but for pleasure's sake. After 4 p. m., 5th avenue is a most interesting & enlivening show—even more than is Hyde Park in its show-hours. Yesterday at 2 p. m., I walked up to 42^d street—slowly, leisurely—then back home again, loafing along & gossiping with the police & other strangers; arrived at 4, & went to the wedding of Marjory Rice. Then billiards till midnight.

To-day I shall repeat; then dine out at 7.30.

With great love & many kisses— / Father [MTP]. Note: the “unpleasant book” is unknown.

Moncure D. Conway, longtime friend of Sam's, died in Paris [American National Biography, Vol. 5 p.362].

November 16 Saturday – Alice Minnie Herts wrote to Miss Lyon the “final plan” for next Tuesday (19th) evening [MTP].

Julia Marlowe wrote on The Plaza, NYC notepaper to Sam. “I am eager you should see this reprint of an article by Arthur Symons which appeared in London...Do you not think it superbly written?” [MTP].

November 17 Sunday – Rudolphine Scheffer Ely wrote from NYC to Sam inviting him to the opening meeting of the Civic Forum on Wednesday, Nov. 20 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Mr. Clemens has engagement”

H.E. Wallace, Jr. wrote from NYC a letter of appreciation for “Huck and Jim” [MTP].

C.C. White wrote from Milford, Mass. to Miss Lyon, touched by the NAR segment with the death of Susy [MTP].

November 18 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Francesca dear, I am so disappointed! We are due in Annapolis 7 days hence—25th—& I have to be in Boston that very day, & remain 2 days & probably 3. And so we are writing to Governor Warfield to explain. But although I've got to be in Boston I am not sure that I can go; because I have had a cold ten days & cannot manage to get rid of it; if it continues I can't risk traveling in draughty trains, lest I bring on the bronchitis again. I wanted to see you, you dear child, & it's a great disappointment. It would be a charming change to look at you—a change from watching the stocks go down!

This isn't a bright day—it is the other way: my daughter is leaving to-night, to be gone a good while, & she will be missed—nobody left but Miss Lyon & me.

Goodbye—& good health—& all sorts of happiness to you, dear! /With love ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Why you sweet little rascal! don't you suppose I am doing any longing? Indeed I am. I'm longing to see you. Of course you've got a lot of other lovers, & of course they pine to see you—Bache & the rest—but when they pine it's only an individual pine, whereas when I pine for you it's a whole forest! Now then, try & remember that, dear.

I think it is very nice—the faithful industry you are devoting to your studies & the gymnasium. And the drawing lessons—that's a great thing. Drawing will educate your eye, & give you a correct perception of forms & proportions which you couldn't get in any other way. I've never had a drawing lesson myself, but I know the great value of that art in training the eye to observe—also to see things as they are. Go on with your pleasant labors, dearheart, you dear little Dorothy.

This with the love of / SLC

Just think—71 years from now you'll be 72. It seems impossible. Why, I am only that old myself [MTAq 82-3].

Note: Sam's math was off: Since Dorothy was 11, he should have said "61 years."

Elliott & Fry, photographers, London wrote to Sam with a printed order form and proofs [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Dec. 18, '07" and "Like those not marked No ever so much & if they want to compliment me with a copy or 2 I should like them for my collection"

Henry Hahn wrote from Copenhagen, Denmark to send Sam birthday wishes [MTP].

Miss Ingeborg Jensen wrote to Sam, mistaking the 18th for his birthday and mentioning Hahn (above) [MTP].

November 19 Tuesday – Sam gave a curtain speech at the P&P performance by the Children's Educational Theatre, directed by Alice Minnie Herts. The New York Times, Nov. 20, p.9, reported on the event:

UPTOWN AUDIENCE AT CHILDREN'S PLAY

Society Folk, as Mark Twain's Guests, See "The Prince and the Pauper."

HOST'S SPEECH CUT SHORT

Miss Herts, Founder of the Theatre, Says the Object is to Develop Latent Dramatic Talent.

It was said last night that $25 was vainly offered in the course of the evening by some east side folk for a ticket of admission to the Children's Theatre in the Educational Alliance Building, where Mark Twain was entertaining a host of guests, including Gov. Hughes and District Attorney Jerome, with a special performance of his "The Prince and the Pauper."

The company was the regular one of the Children's Theatre. Soon after 8 o'clock East Broadway and the intersecting block of Jefferson street seemed a Broadway in everything except the background and the white lights.

Cabs, coupes, automobiles, and carriages drove up to the Jefferson Street entrance and deposited many of the well-known residents of the town, men and women in evening dress, while footmen lined the lobby, exciting a quite respectful murmur from the crowd kept at a distance by alert policemen.

Of course, every one expected a speech from the author. In the entre-act Mr. Clemens came before the curtain. As he began some of those in the audience recalled that on a former occasion when he had attempted to speak, the play then being the same, he had been cut short in the midst of a story by the management. So these persons waited to see what would happen.

Mr. Clemens expressed the pleasure the occasion held for him. He said that as the ambassador of the children who played in the theatre and who usually made up its audiences, he had invited those present, "the hearts and the brains of New York," to see the work done in the theatre.

“The Children’s Theatre is a great educational feature,” he said. “The time ought to come when a child’s theatre will be a part of every public school in the land. I am apt to be quite plain—”

At this point a muffled whistle sounded behind the lowered curtain.

“That whistle was the signal agreed upon that I should stop,” said Mr. Clemens, “and I have not yet started. I shall now do the especial thing that I am here to do. I introduce to you Miss Herts, the founder of the theatre.”

He led Miss A. Minnie Herts to the centre of the curtain line, and then stepped down into the orchestra. Miss Herts spoke with fervor of the work being done in the theatre. She told how plays and scenery had been obtained from managers.

“Then we had no players,” she said, “so that we had to make them. There were a number of dramatic clubs of the district which had been hiring this very hall for their entertainments. Some young man would like to see himself as Hamlet, or wished to play in ‘The Bells and ‘Ghosts.’ He would gather about himself a little company of friends, sell the tickets to other admiring friends, and then give his performance. So we—”

The whistle that had checked Mr. Clemens now blew rather insistently. But Miss Herts, well intent upon her subject, paid no attention to it.

“The young people enter into the spirit of the thing fully,” she said. “The scene-shifter or member of the crown enters just as heartily into the performance as those who play the principal roles. And these young women and young men work the better for it in their department store or shop. They—”

Again the whistle.

“—have a fine spirit about it. We are endeavoring to develop the elemental dramatic impulse latent in every human being from the cradle to the grave.”

A final blast from the whistle, and Miss Herts bowed and retired.

The performance itself was fully up to the best standards of amateur acting. But there was about the stage management a deftness that was professional. The whole moved in obedience to routine stage discipline. The Governor, who entered while an act was in progress, and so escaped notice for the time, was in time to see the set of that act struck and another set in place.

None of the amateur actors and actresses faltered. If any or all of them had been unable to continue, their places could have been readily filled from the two complete casts waiting upstairs, known as the understudy and the emergency casts.

In addition to the Governor and the District Attorney some of those in the audience were President Eliot of Harvard, Andrew Carnegie, Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew, Robert Collier, John Burroughs, Commissioner Bingham, Dan Beard, Richard Harding Davis, Mrs. John Drew, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob H. Schiff, Dr. Thomas R. Slicer, Frederick A. Stokes, Hamilton W. Mabie, Brander Matthews, Morris K. Jesup, James J. Hill, John Bigelow, Poultney Bigelow, A. F. Eno, Walter Damrosch, Col. George Harvey, and Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Corey.

Note: See Scharnhorst, p.655-9 for an interview by Frederick Boyd Stevenson on the play, Brooklyn Eagle, news special Nov. 24, p.1; Also, see a first hand account by one of the players, MTJ 11.1 (Summer 1959): 4-5. Although not listed above, William Dean Howells is included in the audience by Alice Minnie Herts in the Dec. issue of Atlantic Monthly, p. 803 [Wells 27]. Zwick also included Samuel Guggenheim among the guests. He claims that “Twain spent many afternoons at the Theater doing routine office work” for the Children’s Theater, though he offers no dates or evidence and none has yet been found [“Mark Twain and the Children’s Theater” <http://wenku.baidu.com>].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Prince and Pauper” at East Side Theatre. / Miss Minnie Hertz Mrs. Emma Sheridan Frey [MTP TS 119].

Arthur Kellogg for Charities and the Commons wrote to Sam. “I enclose a copy of the press story sent out to over 750 newspapers asking their co-operation in reducing the hardships incidental to late Christmas shopping. The letter on pages three and four is the one which you kindly signed for us” [MTP]. Note: letters in the file.

John W. Loveland, attorney, NYC wrote to Sam. “I have observed in a recent issue of the Official Gazette of the United States Patent Office certain trade-marks bearing your nom-de-plume of Mark Twain and showing your portrait..." If these were unauthorized, Loveland offered his legal services [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Nov. 21, '07"; see Nov. 14 by Fuller.

William Webb Sunderland, contractor, Danbury Conn. wrote to Sam acknowledging receipt of his check for $2,000. He added regret if Clemens would "in any way be annoyed by the present business conditions" (suspension by Knickerbocker), but that "these same conditions ...make it impossible for us to carry accounts" [MTP]. Note: evidently Sam had delayed payments.

November 20 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: A reporter from the Brooklyn Eagle has been here. / Frederick Boyd Stevenson. So far the best man to represent the press. Mr. Clemens was willing to see him [MTP TS 120]. Note: F.B. Stevenson (1859-1938) retired in 1930 after editing and writing a Sunday column, "Top of the News" for the Eagle. He was author of The Amalgamated Americans and a contributor to magazines of economics and political subjects. He specialized in national, international and civic affairs.

Fatout lists a dinner speech for Sam at the Players Club, N.Y.C., but gives no particulars [MT Speaking 678].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam, praising his play of last night as "all splendid" [MTP].

Delle W. Perry wrote from Ann Arbor, Mich. to congratulate Sam on his Autobiography. Perry thought it would be his masterpiece [MTP].

Julia Barnett Rice for the Society of Suppression of Noise wrote to Sam concerned about deaths and accidents from fireworks every July 4, many to small boys. She included a letter for the cause by Richard Watson Gilder [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "If you can send a copy of Mr. Howells article with Mr. Gilder's so that Mr Clemens can read them & say that he heartily agrees with what these men say, he will be very glad to sign it"

November 21 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam began a letter to Mary B. Rogers that he finished on Nov. 29.

Well, dear, you are a brilliant little rascal, & the flashes spurt up all along your sentence-wires, interval by interval, & if I had a mile-perspective on them I should think it was a trolley, blue-sparking its way down the distances——but

You haven't any principles & I was never able to teach you any; & so you'd rather tell what ain't so than what is. I haven't been mobiling at all. And besides it wasn't a mile, it was only a quarter of a mile; & you were not paddling alongside, for a mile, nor / a quarter of a mile, nor for even 3 yards—for you couldn't come within 3 yards of me, in dark or daytime & I not know it——& so, those two foundationless statements of yours are blown to Uranus; & besides she was not in the mobile, & I was not saying anything to her anyway except—at any rate nothing that would instruct you any, since there wasn't a word nor an art that I hadn't learnt of you, you small humbug, at Jamestown on Coontz's Day. And You?—why didn't you hail me? You would if I had been there; & you would anyway, if you had been there yourself.

And as for the Rice wedding, I was there. But you were not, or I should have seen you. I entered with St. Clair McKelway's wife, & set down in a corner, close by a side-door—port side, as you enter. I saw everybody that entered by that orifice, & you were not among them. There, now——all your statements have fallen by the wayside, like the tares that were sown in Sodom & Gomorrah by David & Goliath & took not root because the ram's horns of Jerichoh blew them on the wings of the morning to the uttermost parts of the Sea. Mary dear, dear sweet niece——reform! I will help you.

Didn't I tell you not to come to town again without calling on me? Haven't I any authority at all? Why didn't you come & take me mobiling? But I know—it was because Coontz was around, & you could do better. I think it's scandalous! [MTP].

Mary H. Allen wrote to Sam after reading “with interest and sympathy the chapter of your autobiography which tells of the loss of your daughter” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Nov. 21, ‘07”

Educational Theater for Children wrote to Sam, sending “heartfelt affection...gratitude in appreciation of the great service he has rendered to the movement” [MTP].

Ferris Greenslet for Houghton Mifflin, & Co., Boston wrote to Sam that he was sending copies of Clemens’ three letters to Aldrich, since Mrs. Aldrich didn’t want to let go of the originals [MTP].

David Starr Jordan wrote on Murray Hill Hotel, NYC, notepaper to regret he had not arrived in time to see the P&P play [MTP].

Emma N. Warfield (Mrs. Edwin Warfield) wrote regrets that Sam could not be with them in Maryland for the 26th [MTP]. Note: Edwin was Governor of Maryland.

November 22 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a short note to Kate D. Riggs. “It was a noble feed & a noble company, and you are a dear. Heaven bless you! / MARK” [MTP: Nora Archibald Smith, Kate Douglas Wiggin as Her Sister Knew Her, 1925 p.139]. See Riggs’s Nov. 24 reply.

November 23 Saturday – Hamilton W. Mabie’s article, “Mark Twain the Humorist,” ran in Outlook (NY), p. 648-53. Tenney: “A general, admiring discussion of the man and his works, generally uncritical though noting the ephemeral quality of some of his writing. On p. 648, full-page photograph of MT” [44].

Joseph B. Gilder for Putnam’s Monthly wrote to Miss Lyon about Sam sitting for a portrait [MTP].

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam, billing him for $3,464.06 for William Webb Sunderland, and enclosing (in file) a breakdown of the first four payment amounts [MTP].

J. Hardup McLeod wrote from Yukon Territory to Sam—in part with “original” spelling intact:

My Dear Mark;- / It is with feelings of deepest regret that I am compelled to pen these few lines to you, for know you therefore, that no later than last night a lecturer on “Wit and Humour”, added a new luster to the world wide fame of the old Mississippi River pilot, by making your name conspicuous by its absence, or to use a saying so prevalent amongst our amateur Bridge Whist players of this city, you were “passed up like a white chip”. ...

The lecture was an able one, and greatly enjoyed by all, yet Mark for some unexplicable reason, the Author of Huckleberry Finn, Tom Sawyer, and a few others, was omitted. ...

Slowly and in a semi dazed condition...I betook myself sadly home...I mused and meditated on the uncertainty of Fortune’s smile as depicted in the waning fame of one, who so suddenly sprang into the public’s gaze, on account of a recent trip to the old lands; and musing thus Mark, I decided to write to you and invite you to visit this hot old City of Dawson in the Klondike; visit our creeks, view our dust gathering machines, known to the Chechaco and the unsophisticated as dredges, See and observe the manner of the falling of that very rarely and little known element known as “Blue Snow,” which is only found falling in its natural state, after the glass lingers in the neighborhood of 70° below zero. And you may also if you are a true epicure, indulge in the national dish of the Yukon, i.e. the succulent juicy dish of Ice Worms. Come and see us Mark old boy, and after our people have viewed you close at hand so to speak, why your name might once more ring out through the length and breadth of these old Artic regions as fit to be mentioned with several contemporaries of yours, and with us as Abou Ben Adhem was with the Angel, your name will sure lead all the rest. / Yours at 60° below Zero. / P.S. Bring your pocketbook along when you visit as charity [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Dec. 20, ‘07”

Frances Nunnally replied to Sam's Nov. 18:

Dear Mr. Clemens, — / You don't know how sorry I am that you can not come down here to school, for I had looked forward to your visit with a great deal of pleasure. I wish your engagement in Boston had been just a little later, so [you] could have made the Annapolist trip too. I sincerely hope that your cold is entirely over now, so that you will not be deprived of both these trips, and that you will not have bronchitis again [MTAq 83]. Note: she finished the letter with activities at her school.

November 24 Sunday – Mary L. Brady wrote to thank Sam for the P&P play; she also praised Mrs. Fry and Miss Herts [MTP].

Richard Conried wrote from NYC to ask to include Clemens' name on the list of patrons for their Jan. 7 Benefit Entertainment, Manhattan Trade School for Girls [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Use the name"

Kate Douglas Riggs wrote a verse in reply to Sam's thanks for the "noble feed & noble company" note of Nov. 22 [MTP]. Note: see the poem in MTJ, 21:3 (Spring, 1983).

Bernice Young wrote from LeRoy, Minn. to Sam. "My papa is at this time reading your biography and as you were my favorite author I thought of writing to you before but had not done so. I am eleven and am in the sixth grade." She told of 2 Twain books in the LeRoy Library [MTP].

November 25 Monday – Julia Barnett Rice for the Society of Suppression of Noise wrote to Sam: "Dear Mr. Clemens / We both thank you—the small boy and I. / Gratefully yours..." [MTP]. Note: Rice was crusading against fireworks that injured and killed many small boys each July.

Frederick Boyd Stevenson of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle wrote to Sam. "I enclose copy of Brooklyn Eagle containing your 'talk.' I hope I got the spirit of your conversation. I want to again express to you my thanks for the pleasure I received, and the instruction I received on that visit" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Nov. 27 '07"

November 26 Tuesday – Nelle R. Eberhart, Oscar Eberhart, Charles Wakefield Codman, and Blanche K. Knowlton wrote from Homestead Pa. to Editors of Harper's. "We have just finished reading 'Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven.' / Give us more on the same plan. We have been reading advanced thought for fifteen years and rarely find much that is congenial in the magazines" [MTP].

John H. Johnston wrote to Sam.

The last time I wrote you I sent you the Clemens Family crest or Coat of Arms, for which you thanked me—but now its another matter I bore you with.

A multi-millionaire friend met me on a 4th Ave. car one day awhile ago, and beckoning me from the end to the middle of the car alongside of him he exclaimed "Mr. Johnston why don't you lop off your side whiskers, it will make you ten years younger—look at me, I'm a boy compared to you" "All right" I said, "I lop right away"—and I did—Reaching my office after my visit to the barber, a friend exclaimed "Why what's happened to you? You look like Mark Twain!" This was several weeks ago, and since then I have been taken for you 28 times—I began to number them after No. 5, and there's no guesswork about it—I of course tell my friends that I could write just as good stories as you do if I had a mind to, but so far nothing has panned out in that line. I have no white suit to wear, nor have I tried to fix up to make a Mark—but the way I am stared at wherever I go would make a modester man either blush, and start his beard again—Say: would you mind letting your beard grow and give your new portrait to the world, and so relieve me?

Seriously: My wife and family to whom I read aloud the new history of the Universe last night—all think that you have done a great service to Humanity in writing this, and I hope a lot of addle pated preachers will pitch into you and or make a million more readers of it. The idea that our planetary system is only a wart compared to the whole Universe is enough to make any orthodox lunkhead stop a minute and thing and wonder if our forbears were not all Theological Damphools—The pith of the whole Bible I find in the first 4 verses of the 10th Chapter of 1st Corinthians...[MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam at the top of the letter: “Gosh—L’al mighty—you can tell him that that’s the first gun, & I enjoy it for I expect the other guns will be less enjoyable & less penetrating”

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Hamilton Wright Mabie for The Outlook wrote to Sam, sending a copy of the last week’s edition containing an article on “The Great American Humorist” [MTP].

Samuel E. Moffett wrote to Sam, verifying entries sent from his research that were novels. He added that it was a great time at the P&P play and that his wife Anita “found it one of the events of her year” [MTP]. Note: Sam had enlisted his nephew some time back to research all the copyrights bestowed for a few years.

November 27 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam sent a telegram to Frances Nunnally, at St. Timothy’s School, Catonsville, Md: “I HOPE YOUR TEAM WILL WIN FRANCESCA DEAR I COULD NOT GO TO BOSTON” / SL CLEMENS” [MTP].

Sam also sent a telegram to Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Warfield, Governor of Maryland: “BEST THANKSGIVING WISHES TO YOU ALL, BY NO MEANS FORGETTING MISS LOUISE” [MTP].

Chauncey M. Depew wrote regarding Sam’s letter on the Robert Fulton Monument Assoc, that he was “very happy to serve in any body over which you are the presiding genius” [MTP].

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

I was so glad to get your letter and to know you are well I often see your name in the paper so I suppose you are very busy My Grandpa and Grandma expect to sail for Europe next Saturday on the new boat I shall be lonely without them especially Grandpa for as you know we are great chums I wish I was a big girl and all through school so I could go with him I have been very well so far and have only lost a few days at school which is doing very well for me our Sunday school class has gotten up a League and we have to make clothes for poor children it is lots of fun please write me very soon with lots of love to Miss Lyons and lots of hugs and kisses for you / lots of love / Dorothy [MTAq 84].

Walter Thorn wrote to Sam, expressing apologies for his joke about being handsomer than Twain, since no reply had been made to his letter of Nov. 6 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Thanks for note. Has no remembrances of former letter he speaks of. Thanks for very kind wishes” and “Answd Dec 11, 07”

November 28 Thursday - Thanksgiving – Sam lunched at H.H. Roger’s home where he likely saw Mary B. Rogers, and thought her “very delightful” [Nov. 29 to Mary Rogers; Dec. 1 to Jean]. He dined out in the evening and returned home at 11 p.m., with a neighbor (unspecified), played billiards until 4 a.m.

Helen Campbell wrote from Camden, NJ to beg a loan of $500 from Sam [MTP].

November 29 Friday – Sam finished his Nov. 21 to Mary B. Rogers.

Mariechen, I didn’t say sins, I said it covered a multitude of charms. And it is perfectly true. I wish you wouldn’t be always misquoting me & discouraging all my attempts to learn how to be veracious. For I do so want to learn how, dear.

I don’t know where you are but I am guessing that you are in Tuxedo. You were very delightful yesterday./ Affectionately / Your Uncle Mark [MTP].

Alice Minnie Herts for The Children's Educational Theatre wrote to Sam updating him on her efforts in the Children's Theatre movement including her visit to President Charles William Eliot of Harvard, and President G. Stanley Hall of Clark Univ. She felt Andrew Carnegie would be interested in supporting the movement, since he requested tickets for the 19th performance, though he didn't show [MTP].

Frances Nunnally replied to Sam's Nov. 27 telegram:

Dear Mr. Clemens,— / This is just a note to say that I hope you will have many very happy returns of the thirtieth.

I received your telegram, and I can't tell you how much I appreciate your thinking of our game, and so do all the girls of our team. I think it must have brought good luck to us, for we won with a score of seven to three. We are so happy over our victory that we don't know what to do, and we have sung and cheered ourselves hoarse over it. ...We had an awfully nice Thanksgiving day, and I hope you did too.

I was sorry to hear that you were not well enough to go to Boston, and I certainly hope you are all right now. / Wishing you a very happy birthday. / I am / With love, / Francesca [MTP].

November 30 Saturday – Sam's 72nd Birthday. The New York Times, Dec. 1, p. 1, "Mark Twain 72" reported "Hundreds of congratulatory letters and telegrams were received during the day from points all over the world. Many friends called a the house to congratulate him."

In N.Y.C. Sam inscribed an aphorism in a copy of Eve's Diary to an unidentified person: "With the love of the Author. November 30, 1907. Clothes make the man, but they do not improve the Woman, Truly yours, Mark Twain." [MTP].

Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers) sent a bouquet of roses for Sam's birthday [Dec. 2 to Emilie].

Miss Florence Benson of 165 Madison Ave., N.Y.C. wrote birthday greetings:

My dear Mr. Clemens:

I have seen in the New York Tribune this morning that to-day is your birthday—and it is mine too!

I am writing to wish you many happy returns of the day and to tell you that I think Tom Sawyer is the nicest boy I have ever known.

Sincerely Yours,

Florence Benson

(Written in my best handwriting)

[Courtesy of: Concord Free Public Library Letter File, Vault A55, Unit 1, William Munroe Special Collections, CFPL.

Printed by permission of the Concord Free Public Library Corporation.] Note: see Sam's Dec. 1 reply.

Sam walked to the osteopath, Dr. George J. Helmer, corner of Madison Ave. & 31st Street, for a treatment [Dec. 1 to Jean].

In the afternoon, Sam went to see a play: The Toymaker of Nuremburg; a Play in Three Acts and Two Scenes, by Austin Strong (b. 1881). Paine, who was there with a friend, writes:

We did not play billiards on his birthday that year. He went to the theater in the afternoon; and it happened that, with Jesse Lynch Williams, I attended the same performance—the "Toy-Maker of Nuremburg"—written by Austin Strong. It proved to be a charming play, and I could see that Clemens was enjoying it. He sat in a box next to the stage, and the actors clearly doing their very prettiest for his benefit.

When later I mentioned having seen him at the play, he spoke freely of his pleasure in it.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

"It is a fine, delicate piece of work," he said. "I wish I could do such things as that."

"I believe you are too literary for play-writing."

"Yes, no doubt. There was never any question with the managers about my plays. They always said they wouldn't act. Howells has come pretty near to something once or twice. I judge the trouble is that the literary man is thinking of the style and quality of the thing, while the playwright thinks only of how it will play. One is thinking of how it will sound, the other of how it will look" [MTB 1413-14].

Margaret Illington (Mrs. Daniel Frohman) sent a telegram to Sam. "Many happy birthdays heartfelt wishes for lovely flowers and a precious book hope soon to take you out / Margaret Frohman" [MTP].

Gertrude Natkin sent a telegram to Sam: "My Sincerest wish for many bright and happy years / Marjorie" [MTAq 85].

December – Sometime during the month Sam attended a private dinner hosted by Daniel Frohman. At that dinner he met Elinor Sutherland Glyn (Mrs. Clayton Glyn) (1864-1943), British novelist and scriptwriter, the sister of Lucy, Lady Duff-Gordon. She led the way in erotic fiction for women, marketed to the masses, and had arrived that fall after the release of her first successful novel, Three Weeks (1907) which had been a hit in England. The book (she worked "fast" completing the book in six days) dealt with adultery, and had shocked sensibilities on both sides of the Atlantic; it was banned in Canada. Glyn called herself "a high priestess of the God of love." (So much for humility.) Glyn's prior books had been for a younger audience. She arrived in New York on Friday, Oct. 4.

Shelden writes of the evening of the dinner and their supposedly first meeting, not yet pinned down to a specific date:

Twain's first encounter with this remarkable woman was suitably dramatic. It took place at the end of 1907 while he and Isabel Lyon were attending a private dinner hosted by the producer Dan Frohman in the luxurious upstairs ballroom at Delmonico's Restaurant on Fifth Avenue. At the beginning of the event everyone's attention was focused on Frohman's young wife, the popular actress Margaret Illington, who made a grand entrance wearing a new gown that accentuated her statuesque figure. "But, suddenly," Lyon would recall, "she was eclipsed by a woman with milk-white skin, tawny red hair & green eyes; her gown a sea-green soft silk & she wore a strange oriental chain, as her only ornament" [189].

Note: Shelden cites a 1937 account given by Lyon, and it should be remembered that accounts made decades later (as many of Lyon's were) are suspect in at least a few respects. In his notes (p.451n20), Shelden interprets Anthony Glyn's remarks to suggest that that his sister and Mark Twain had met previously. But as I read Elinor Glyn by Anthony Glyn (p.143-4) it seems the Frohman dinner of December was mistakenly placed after Clemens' Jan. 24 to Elinor; no meeting prior to her trip to America is suggested. Glyn puts John Barrymore at the dinner and claims "Mark Twain made a kind and most entertaining speech about Elinor," hard to believe if he had just met her. Perhaps Anthony Glyn refers to a meeting later than Jan. 24, though no record was found. Elinor, feeling that the British public had misunderstood Three Weeks, and so wrote a preface for the American publication by Duffield publishers. Glyn had friends in New York and Newport, R.I. Her trip was thus a kind of quest to kick off publication of an American edition of her notorious book; she would solicit Sam's help in doing so.

"Extract from Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven" first appeared in two installments in Harper's Monthly this month and for January, 1908. It was published by Harper as a book in Oct. 1909 as Extract from Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven. Budd points out that Twain worked on various versions of the story at multiple times—in 1869, 1870, 1873, 1878, 1881, 1883, and 1893 [Budd Collected 2: 1013]. Note: the tale was inspired by Captain Edgar (Ned) Wakeman, and supposedly the earnings from the story finished paying for the new house at Redding, which was called, ultimately, Stormfield.

Bookman published a brief comment on Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven p. 323. Tenney: "If MT has grown didactic in his later years, there is no evidence in his style: 'The manner is exactly that of'" CY, "even of" IA [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Second Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1978 p. 175]. In the same issue, Christmas Supplement, ran an anonymous and brief review of A Horse's Tale. "A pretty story of a charming child and a lovable horse...a beautiful little tale." And "It is not a book of humour, but it is a book written by a humorist who knows the natures of children and horses" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 191].

Sam's article, "The Story of a Speech" ran in the North American Review [Camfield, bibliog.].

Sam inscribed his copy of Favorite Fairy Tales; The Childhood Choice of Representative Men and Women (1907): "S.L. Clemens, 21 Fifth Avenue, Dec./07." Sam was one of the "representative men" who nominated the standard tales, which included "Jack the Giant-Killer" and "The Ugly Duckling" [Gribben 227].

Robert Reid wrote from NYC to invite Sam to join him and a few old friends on New Years Day [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Can't go anywhere New Years Day, for people are coming here."

Chapters from "My Autobiography—XXV" ran in the N.A.R. p.481-94. Note: excerpt from this segment often has been reprinted as "The Story of a Speech."

December 1 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Nov. 30 from Miss Florence Benson.

Dear Florence:

Thank you for your nice note.—

(Private.) I have always concealed it before, but now I am compelled to confess that I am Tom Sawyer!

[MTP]. See Florence's Nov. 30 letter.

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean.

Oh, Jean dear, it is a lovely work of art, a beautiful work of art! It reminds me of the metal work your mother took such delight in in India. She would delight in this fine piece of yours still more, both because these frogs are better done than those elephants, & because you did them. I thank you deeply for my birthday-remembrancer, dear child.

I lunched at Mr. Rogers's in 78th street, Thanksgiving Day, & dined out that evening. Returned home at 11 p. m., with a neighbor, & played billiards until my birthday was 4 hours old. I slept 3½ hours, then began the day half an hour earlier than usual, so as to get the [most] possible out of it. I went to a matinée.

I was in bed by 9, last night, & have had an uninterrupted sleep, & am ready for my breakfast, which will arrive presently. Also, I walked up to the osteopath at noon, yesterday, & had a treatment.

With many & many hugs & kisses / Father [MTP]. Note: Thanksgiving was Nov. 28, so the dates do not quite line up here. It's possible that Sam confused the day he lunched at Rogers' with the day after Thanksgiving, Nov. 29, for then playing billiards after midnight would have taken him into his birthday.

December 2 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean.

Dear Jean I will attend to the matter regarding translations, even if the pay be very small in money it will be large in entertainment for you & well worth the labor it will cost you.

The more I examine the copper plate, plaque, platter, or whatever its name may be, the more beautiful it grows & the more I am charmed with it. You have put a world of patient & careful work upon it, dear child, & the result is a high credit to you. How delighted your mother would be with it if she could see it!

We have the right backing for its copper splendors—the dead red of the billiard-room paper.

Good-night, & lots of love & kisses [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Margery H. Clinton.

Dear Miss Margery: / I thank you so much for the beautiful remembrancer, & for the accompanying good wish.

I am glad to know that you got home safely. If I had piloted you all through as inefficiently as I began, I am afraid you wouldn't have reached home at all.

Greeting, & salutation, & good night! [MTP]. Note: Margery was a friend and neighbor of Mary Rogers; likely Sam was thanking her for a birthday gift, a "remembrancer," being likely a photograph.

Sam also wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers). "Dear Mrs. Rogers: / It helps to reconcile me to my antiquity to have it recognized and approved in this lovely way. I thank you for the roses, and for the remembrance, dear Mrs. Rogers" [MTHHR 643].

Robert Erskine Ely for the N.Y. Economic Club wrote to Miss Lyon about Sam's resignation from the Economic Club of New York; they wanted him to pay dues in order to resign [MTP].

M. Samnis, "a poor woman, sixty five years old," wrote from Newark, NJ to send birthday wishes to Sam [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Dec. 6, '07"

Of the selections from Twain's A.D.'s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto's choices, was a sketch on Andrew Carnegie dictated this day; Sam underlined Carnegie's vanity about flattery, and debated with Carnegie the inclusion of "In God We Trust" on U.S. currency [36-51].

December 3 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to W.H. Powell, editor of the Hannibal Courier-Post.

Dear Sir: / Next spring it will be 59 years since I became an apprentice in the Courier office under Joseph P. Ament, along with William T. League, Wales McCormick & a Palmyra lad named Dick Rutter. Two of the group still survive: viz, the Courier & the undersigned. Surreptitiously & uninvited, I helped to edit the paper when no one was watching; therefore I was journalist; I have never been wholly disconnected from journalism since; therefore, by my guess, I am dean of the trade in America.

I hope the Courier will long survive me, & remain always prosperous [MTP]. Note: Sam crossed out a paragraph cautioning Powell to keep the missive private, as he was under a possible $500 fine for infringing the Harper agreement if he published anything elsewhere without their permission.

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam enclosing Harry Lounsbury's bill for $123.70 for work and materials [MTP].

Woodbury G. Langdon wrote from NYC having read in the Sunday Herald that Sam wanted to live to be 100. He was glad and then asked Sam to answer his letter of Apr. 16, 1906! [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "No Ans"

Sybil Kane Walker (Mrs. Alexander Steward Walker) wrote to Sam that she'd left "so hastily the other afternoon that I did not get a chance to thank you properly for a perfectly delightful afternoon." She enjoyed every minute as well as the play (likely the 19th). She asked for his photo [MTP].

December 4 Wednesday – William B. McGann, who was President of the American Plasmon Co. to Apr. 30, 1906, wrote a salary claim to Sam, now acting President and Vice-President. The letter is not extant but is referred to in a New York Times article of Dec. 21, 1907, p. 6, (below). Shortly after Dec. 4, Sam replied to McGann, his letter reprinted in the Dec. 21 article:

MARK TWAIN CONCERN GIVES UP THE GHOST

Plasmon Company of America Unable to Meet Obligations and Receiver is Named.

LIABILITIES ARE $27,000

"Take Plasmon into Your Stomach and Trust in God," Said Humorist Before He Bought Stock.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed yesterday against Plasmon Company of America which Mark Twain is Acting President. The petition is likely to end the business life of a concern in which the humorist became interested while in Europe through testing the merits of the company's product.

Mr. Clemens first wrote a testimonial to the effect that if you took plasmon into your stomach and trusted in God you were all right. Then he bought some stock in the English Company, afterward going into the American company.

The petition was filed by three former officers of the company. William B. McGann has a claim for salary as President to April 30, 1906, amounting to $2,500; William T. Robson, former Secretary and Treasurer, has a salary claim amounting to $1,000, and Ralph W. Ashcroft claims $855 for salary as General Manager and for money lent.

The petition alleges that the company was insolvent in December, and that its inability to pay its debts was admitted in the following letter signed by Mr. Clemens and addressed to Mr. McGann:

Dear Sir: Replying to your letter of the 4th inst. regarding your claim of $1,000 against the Plasmon Company of America, I beg to state that the company is unable to pay the same, as it has not sufficient funds to do so. Its available bank balance is $13.08. It has $902.49 on deposit with the Knickerbocker Trust Company, but, as you know, this will not be available for some time to come. Its accounts receivable amount to but $30.46, and it owes you and other creditors $27,023.69. Its nominal assets are $10,596.19; as follows: Patent rights, &c., $7,487.60; stale casein, $1,162.56; machinery, $1,000; cash in bank, $915.57; accounts receivable, $30.46. In other assets, furniture, &c., were this day sold by the Sheriff under execution. The company is therefore hopelessly insolvent, and it is willing to be adjudicated a bankrupt on that ground. Yours very truly,

PLASMON COMPANY OF AMERICA.

S. L. CLEMENS, Acting President and Vice President.

The Sheriff's sale referred to was in execution of a judgment for $1020, in favor of William Kermish, and realized $250. There has been a contest on between the English and American stockholders for some time and much internal dissension in the company. The concern went into bankruptcy in 1905, but the proceedings were dismissed a year later. Mark Twain has been acting as an officer and harmonizer since April, 1906. The company was incorporated in 1902 with a capital of $750,000.

Judge Hough, in the United States District Court yesterday appointed Charles L. Brookheim receiver and fixed the bond at $500. The company's plant is at Briar Cliff Manor.

At Mark Twain's house last night his secretary said that the author was only nominally the Vice President of the company. Mr. Clemens was then asked if it was true, as reported by some of his friends, that he had been swindled.

"It is," said Mr. Clemens.

"Out of how much?"

"Oh, about $32,000. I held $25,000 worth of the stock, and one of the members of the company swindled me out of $12,500 later. No, I won't say I was swindled out of the $25,000. The company failed because of bad management. I ought not to say I was swindled out of all the money. Most of it was lost through bad business. I was always bad in business.

"Please don't confound the bankrupt company with the English-Plasmon Company," went on Mark Twain. "That company is paying 5 or 6 per cent., which pretty good for an English company. I hold about $80,000 worth of the stock of that company."

Daniel C. French, sculptor wrote from NYC to ask Sam for a card of introduction to Harrison Grey Fiske (1861-1942) manager. Fiske was a journalist, playwright and Broadway producer who leased the Manhattan Theatre on 33rd Street in 1901. His wife was Minnie Maddern Fiske [MTP].

Edward L. Morris wrote from Boston to Sam, noting in the Patent Office Gazette of Nov. 12, 1907 that Ashcroft had filed registration for trademark with Mark Twain's name and portrait, for whiskey and smoking tobacco—had Sam approved? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Dec. 9, '07"

Rev. Dr. E.F. Strickland wrote from Rock Island, Ill. to ask a clarification in Sam's Autobiography. About that "problem of navigation" driven by a friend around a flower bed. "I can't see where the problem comes in at all, and I am sure if dear little Susie were here to set it down, she could make even you understand it, and prove Mr. Whitmore wrong" [MTP]. Note: return env. unused in file.

December 5 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Billie Burke, actress.

It was lovely of you, dear Billie, to say those approving & affectionate things to me out of the good heart & the sweet spirit which are special graces of your nature & they are very welcome.

It is healing & refreshment to the sui-sodden crime-worn soul to see you & John Drew in that bewitching play,—I am coming again to gloat & admire.

With the love of / S.L. Clemens [MTP]. Note: at this time John Drew was starring in My Wife at the Empire Theatre, Broadway and 40th Street. Burke is not listed in advertisements.

Independent Magazine printed an anonymous review of A Horse's Tale, p.1377. "We feel the throb of the kindest heart in the world beating for the helpless, whether brute or human, in this book, as in its long line of predecessors" [Tenney: "A Reference Guide Sixth Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Spring 1982 p.10]. Also Nation, p. 519 ran a brief review of A Horse's Tale: "A magazine story printed as a thin book, this will interest both children and grown-ups" ["A Reference Guide Third Annual Supplement," American Literary Realism, Autumn 1979 p. 191-2].

December 6 Friday – Thomas Commerford Martin for the Engineer's Club wrote to Miss Lyon that he was sending his son and carriage for Clemens on Monday (Dec. 9) for the Carnegie's 70th banquet, and according to sam's wishes Martin would introduced him third on the program [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam.

Dear Mark; / I am just setting out with Charley Clark for Buffalo, where we are to be on duty at a Yale Alumni Dinner tomorrow night.

My present intention is to leave Buffalo Sunday evening and to arrive in New York Monday morning—in which case you may look out for a call from me rather early Monday forenoon—say 9 o'clock or so.

But, if at that hour you are busy with your stenographer you will not let me interrupt you. Who am I that I should deprive the Human Race &c &c? I can put in the little time I stay agreeably with Miss Lyon. / Yrs aff.
... [MTP].

December 7 Saturday – Eustace D. Conway, son of Moncure Conway, who had died in Paris on Nov. 15, sent Sam an invitation to the funeral service on Dec. 14 at 10:30 a.m.[MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "I'll go to it"

Charles J. Langdon wrote from Elmira, N.Y. to Sam, enclosing a draft for $25 for a coupon of Atlanta Gas Light Co. He had rec'd no acknowledgement of his Nov. 6 draft for $137.50 [MTP].

December 8 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a postcard (picturing himself in bed and labeled “Mark Twain’s Muse”) to Annie E. Trumbull. “I thank you dear Miss Annie, & wish you a happy holiday season” [MTP].

Thomas Bray wrote from Phila. to suggest that Sam include an endorsement he once gave to Frederick Douglass’ application for the position of Marshall in D.C. written to President Garfield. Bray felt it was a gem [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Dec. 17, ‘07” and “Would incorporate it if I knew but I don’t does not remember what it was”

December 9 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Helena G. Paderewski. “I am glad to have the honor, by grace of Madam Paderewski of standing once more in the presence of my old friend Leschetizky / Very truly ...” [MTP: Heritage Book Shop, Nov. 29, 1960].

In the evening Sam spoke at a dedication of the new clubhouse for 400 members of the Engineers Club (Society of Engineers). Fatout writes of the event:

The Associated Societies of Engineers gave a dinner honoring Carnegie for his gift to the Engineers Club of a million-dollar clubhouse on Fortieth Street, New York. T.C. Martin, president of the club, who introduced Mark Twain, referred to a passage in the latter’s autobiography in which he wrote of arriving in New York as a young man with three dollars in his pocket and a ten-dollar bill sewed into his coat. Several speakers had praised Carnegie so lavishly that Mark Twain evened the balance somewhat by poking fun at him and at simplified spelling [MT Speaking 597].

The New York Times, Dec. 10, p. 2, reported the event.

MARK TWAIN JEERS AT SIMPLE SPELLING

Has Fun with Mr. Carnegie’s System at the Dedication of the Engineers’ Club.

PUTS HARD WORDS TO HIM

One of Them is Pterodactyl—The Ironmaster Elected to Honorary Place in Club for His Gift.

After three or four hundred members of the Engineers’ Club had given over their voices and ears last night to sound and hear the praise of Andrew Carnegie, who gave them their million-dollar clubhouse in Fortieth Street, Mark Twain took it on himself to relieve the ironmaster of the embarrassment of a superfluity of laudation. The occasion was officially the christening of the new home of the Engineers’ Club.

“I have been a guest of honor myself,” said Mark Twain, “and I know what Mr. Carnegie is experiencing now. It is embarrassing to get compliments and compliments and only compliments, particularly when he knows as well as the rest of us that on the other side of him there are all sorts of damnation.

“Just look at Mr. Carnegie’s face. It is fairly scintillating with fictitious innocence. You might think that he had never committed a crime in his life. But no—look at his pestiferous simplified spelling. You can’t any of you imagine what a crime that has been. Torquemada was nothing to Mr. Carnegie. That old fellow shed some blood in the Inquisition, but Mr. Carnegie has brought destruction to the entire race. I know he didn’t mean it to be a crime, but it was, just the same. He’s got us all so we can’t spell anything.

“The trouble with him is that he attacked orthography at the wrong end. He attacked the symptoms and not the cause of the disease. He ought to have gone to work on the alphabet. There’s not a vowel in it with a definite value, and not a consonant that you can hitch anything to. Look at the ‘h’s’ distributed all around. There’s ‘Gherkin.’ What are you going to do with the ‘h’ in that? It’s one thing I admire the English for; they just don’t mind anything about them at all.

“But look at the ‘pneumatics’ and the ‘pneumonias’ and the rest of them. A real reform would settle them once and for all, and wind up by giving us an alphabet that we wouldn’t have to spell with at all, instead of this present silly alphabet, which I fancy was invented by a drunken thief. Why, there isn’t a man who doesn’t have to throw out about fifteen hundred words a day when he writes his letters because he can’t spell them! It’s like trying to do a St. Vitus’s dance with wooden legs.

“Now I’ll bet there isn’t a man here who can spell ‘pterodactyl,’ not even the prisoner at the bar. I’d like to hear him try once—but not in public, for it’s too near Sunday when all extravagant histrionic entertainments are barred. I’d like to hear him try in private, and when he got through trying to spell ‘pterodactyl’ you wouldn’t know whether it was a fish or a beast or a bird, and whether it flew on its legs or walked with its wings.

“Let’s get Mr. Carnegie to reform the alphabet, and we’ll pray for him if he’ll take the risk.”

Mr. Carnegie made two speeches, in which he told the engineers how much he thought of them and what a fine thing it was for them to have such a club, and what a fine fellow an engineer was, anyway. This was after T. C. Martin, President of the club, made his speech presenting him to the members.

John Fritz, the 80-year-old engineer who is the Nestor of the engineering contingent in New York, presented to Mr. Carnegie a framed certificate of honorary membership in the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. Mr. Carnegie said he had received many honors in his life, but this honor was one that touched his heart.

Some of those present were the Rev. Wilton Merle Smith, John Foord, David J. Hill, Charles MacDonald, Lynde Belknap, Robert C. Clowry, James Cruickshank, H. L. Doherty, James Gayley, John Hays Hammond, Frank Hedley, Alexander C. Humphries [sic Humphreys], Frederick R. Hutton, Charles Kirchhoff, Emerson McMillin, Rear Admiral George W. Melville, John Reid, Joseph E. Schwab, Melville E. Stone, and H. H. Westinghouse.

Julia B. Rice (Mrs. Isaac L. Rice) for Society of Suppression of Noise wrote to Sam, enclosing five of the many letters from famous people supporting her crusade against fireworks to protect small boys. Howells, Gilder, and others in file [MTP]. Note: enclosed in Rice’s letter was an undated notice, without a named recipient, from Dr. Eugene Rice, also on the Society’s letterhead, explaining the anniversary of 1291 kept by the Swiss. :

December 10 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick about his amazement at touring the Jewish Technical School for girls.

I am very sorry you didn’t see Peter Pan, you dear child, but you will see it yet. Meantime we can hunt up something else when you come.

Saturday after next? Can’t you come then—& stay over till Monday? We hope you can; & that is why I am writing now, at sleep-time, instead of waiting till tomorrow, when I am going to be busy & could be prevented.

I’ve been all over the Jewish technical school to-day, & have seen 400 girls, 14 to 16 years old, at work in the class-rooms, at all sorts of handicrafts. I think it’s a wonderful school. I wonder if we can match it anywhere. The pupils do not have to pay anything.

They make good fine gowns there, at half the price the big stores charge. Miss Lyon & my daughter are going there to drive a bargain. The girls that make the clothes get all the money, the school takes care of it. They could make clothes for you & your mother, Dorothy. The school-term is a year & a half; then the girls are able to earn their living in many commercial ways. Some of the graduates earn $1500 a year; 700 of them earn an average of $600 a year, which is an aggregate of about $400,000. But for their gratuitous training, they couldn’t earn the half of it. Every one of them has to learn how to cook, & make beds, etc.

Oh, it’s very late!

Good-night, dear, & sleep well! [MTP]. Note: this letter misdated as 10 Dec. 1908, and thus landed in MTAq p.242 instead of 1907, which is correct.

Sam also wrote to Julia B. Rice, active in the Society of Suppression of Noise.

I am with you sincerely in your crusade against the bedlam frenzies of the Fourth of July.

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

Will you mind my going a little deeper—a good deal deeper—into this matter? If I may speak frankly I will say that while I detest the noises & the grotesque insanities of the Day, my main quarrel is with the Day itself.

Why should Americans, of all people in the world, bow down to the Fourth of July & worship it? It is purely an English institution, no American had any part in the events it commemorates. It is as purely, & utterly & comprehensively English as is Guy Fawkes's Day; & that Americans should claim it & celebrate it & magnify it is the largest joke the ages have produced.

.... [MTP]. Note: Sam felt it should be abolished as it was “an annual horror.”

David Dodge for American Esperanto Journal wrote to Sam [MTP].

Edgar P. Holdridge, Real Estate, NYC wrote to Sam to send the “high tribute” paid Twain by Rev. Dr. Charles F. Aked at the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church: “In his sermon on ‘Humor, the fourth of the Christian virtues’ he said, ‘I thank God for such men as Mark Twain, who has written some wonderful truths’...” [MTP].

The National Clarion Cinderella Club, London wrote to Sam. (Only the envelope survives) [MTP]. Note: Sam wrote on the letter, “Compliments as a text / My selected 5 perfect ones: Oxford, Howells, Paine, Mabie, little girl. Contrast Red Dog Miner’s introduction”

Clemens’ A.D. for this day included: Dinner to Andrew Carnegie given by the Associated Societies of Engineers—the speeches, & Mr. Clemens’s remarks about Carnegie’s simplified spelling [MTP: Autodict 4].

Of the selections from Twain’s A.D.’s, DeVoto selected about half of the materials not chosen before by Paine to be included in Mark Twain in Eruption (1940); among DeVoto’s choices, was a continuation of his Dec. 2 dictation on Andrew Carnegie. Sam told of banquets and speechmaking and his strategies to avoid them, including a banquet honoring Carnegie. He also describes his talk on the difficulties of spelling [51-60].

December 11 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon wrote to John A. Kirlicks: “Mr Clemens asks me to write for him & thank you very much for your pleasant letter & the poem & the little pamphlet. He wishes me also to say that such messages as yours are always welcome” [Gribben 384]. Note: Gribben cites from a letter of 7 June 1977 from Kevin B. Mac Donnell, who he says “speculates” that the publication referred to was I’ve Got the Blues Tonight & Other Troubles (1896) by Kirlicks. See other entries on Kirlicks.

John R. Chamberlin for the American Plasmon Co. wrote to Sam [MTP]. On or after Dec. 11 Isabel Lyon acknowledged receipt of his letters; Sam was unable to attend the latest board meeting and was also unable to visit his office to inspect the minutes, and would “esteem it a favor” to receive copies [MTP].

Issac H. Blanchard, printers, NYC wrote to Sam: “The book entitled ‘The Fonetic Speller’, sent you under separate cover, is such a result of the life of Professor Story, recently deceased, as to have induced me to publish the work” [MTP]. Note: he included several “Ifs” should Sam like the work and want to praise it.

John R. Chamberlin for the Plasmon Syndicate wrote to Sam. “Our secretary called you up yesterday with a view to making an appointment with you as Vice-President of the Plasmon Company of America to confer with Mr. J.D. Campbell, with regard to the vacancy still existing in the Board of Directors, and which we understand you desire to have filled by Mr. R.A.M. Hobbs.” He referred to being told by Miss Lyon that this matter should be handled by Ashcroft but Chamberlin objected to Ashcroft being in that position [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote a reply on separate sheet:

Dear Sir: / I acknowledge receipt of your letter, & would say, that owing to an engagement I was unable to be present at the Board Meeting & am not now able to visit your office in order to inspect the minutes you kindly offered...would esteem it a favor it you would send me a copy of the minutes. The books of the Co have been balanced & are at 24 Stone St. Will you kindly address all communications at 24 Stone St. instead of 21 Fifth Ave. / Very Truly Yours...[MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam enclosing a newspaper clipping (not specified but likely from the Courant) about Miss Ellen M. Case bequeathing $10,000 of her fortune to Rev. Twichell.

Dear Mark / Congratulate us. By what other peoples wealth has brought us all along, we have certainly been the richest poor folk I ever heard of.

Harmony wants me to tell you that she has just received a letter from a lady—an Englishwoman, Miss Riddell—a nurse-founder of a leper hospital in Japan—friend of Mitzukuri from whom she brought a most hearty introduction to us (she was here six months or so ago) saying that she (Harmony) promised her that if and when she (Miss R.) should ask for it, she (Harmony) would give me a note to you;—and will she please do so now. Harmony says that probably she made the promise, but wishes we hadn't. However, she is going to keep it to the extent of sending Miss R. her card with your name and Miss Riddell's on it.

So be on the lookout for her. She is a fine woman though. We liked her ever so much. / Yours aff... [MTP]. Note: on top of the clipping, Lyon wrote for Sam: "No one could be more gratified than Sam, for part of that money was mine. Old Case stole it from me". Miss Case may have been the daughter of Newton Case; see vol I entries.

December 11-24 Tuesday – Sometime during this period at 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y., Sam wrote to Ignace J. Paderewski (Ignacy Jan Paderewski; 1860-1941), Polish pianist and composer, later Prime Minister of Poland.

My excuse for asking you to come down here to my house for an informal luncheon on Friday at one o'clock, is that I shall have here Mr. Howells, dean of American Literature; Col. Harvey, Editor of Magazines & head of the great Harper corporation; Mr. Robert Porter, chief representative of the London Times in America; Mr. Augustus Thomas, the play-wright; Mr. Martin Littleton a distinguished member of the bar, and Albert Bigelow Paine, my biographer. You may enjoy meeting these men, & of course I know it will give them great pleasure to meet you,

With my best respects to Madame Paderewski, I am Sincerely Yours

P. S. Don't trouble to write, but use the telephone: 3907 Gramercy. It is not in the book [MTP].

December 12 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to the Plasmon Co. of America to tender his resignation as Vice-President and Director of the Plasmon Co. of America [MTP].

Clemens' A.D. for this day included: Andrew Carnegie continued — he gives two additional millions to Carnegie Institute—Everybody likes attentions—Prince of Wales once showed Mr. Clemens a match-box and told him it was presented to him by King of Spain [MTP: Autdict. 4].

Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam enclosing statement of his account (not in file) for year ending Nov. 1, 1907, showing due on next Mar. 1 of $22,974.37 [MTP].

Frank Cavendish Lascelles (1875-1934), English actor (born Frank William Thomas Charles Stevens) sent a telegram from London to Sam: "Great London pageant next July has been initiated best wishes cabled from you would help much / Frank Lascelles / Pageant office savoy london" [MTP]. Note: Lascelles was a leading light at Keble College in undergraduate dramatics. After becoming a professional actor he changed his name to Lascelles and appeared in 1904-1906 in His Majesty's Theatre where Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree was actor-manager. At that time pageants for national pride were popular and Lascelles made a name for himself by directing them. He was known as "the man who staged the Empire." Sam's Oxford trip took in the great pageant. See other entries for Lascelles, and a visit to Stormfield in 1909.

Albert E. Ullman for Authors Editorial Assoc. wrote to Sam to introduce, at the request of James Keating, Assoc. editor of Broadway Magazine, Mr. M.L. Hanson [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Request / He wanted Mr. Clemens to go lecturing in Canada"

Sam's A.D. for this day, approximately 709 words, included a Dec. 10 clipping:

The Carnegie Institute will be Carnegie's best monument. While he was performing at the engineers' banquet on the 9th, he was once more his very self as heretofore described by me— his very self in that he was eagerly and delightedly advertising an inconsequential attention which had, been paid him, and at the same time overlooking, forgetting, holding of small consequence and leaving unmentioned, a very handsome and public-spirited act of his which almost any other man, in his place, would have found some moans to bring to the notice of those banqueters. But Andrew was Andrew – to give away millions upon millions to splendid causes cannot excite him, cannot accelerate the pulse of his vanity by so much as three beats per minute; his great achievements are nothing to him, the only events in his career that are really important in his eyes, and memorable and caressable, are the attentions shown him by his fellowmen. I clip the following telegram from the newspaper:

Washington, Dec. 10 — Andrew Carnegie has added $2,000,000 to the $10,000,000 endowment fund of the Carnegie Institute. The announcement was made at a dinner given to-night by the Board of Trustees at the New Willard. Mr. Carnegie was unable to attend, and sent this letter from his home in New York to President R.S. Woodward:

"Dear Sir — I have watched the progress of the institution under your charge, and am delighted to tell you that it has been such as to lead me to add two millions of dollars more to its endowment. It has borne good fruit, and the trustees are to be highly congratulated. In their hands and yours I am perfectly satisfied it is going to realize not only our expectations but our fondest hopes, and I take this opportunity to thank one and all who have so zealously labored from its inception."

The dinner followed a business meeting of the trustees. For scientific research next year, $529,940 was allotted. The trustees decided to erect an administration building at Sixteenth and P streets, Northwest, to take the place of the present rented quarters.

We all like attentions. Mr. Carnegie is not any fonder of them than are the rest of us; he differs from the rest of us only in this: that while we try to advertise our accumulation of attentions while not seeming to be advertising them, he spreads his attentions on a thirty-foot hoarding with a long-handled brush, so to speak. No, I am all wrong; that is not the difference. The real difference is that Andrew's art in advertising his attentions while pretending that he is mentioning them for quite other reasons, is less delicate than ours, less subtly surreptitious. Even the purple is human—even the purple is pleased with small attentions under certain conditions. [handwriting:] For instance,

Seventeen years ago, in Germany, I was one of the guests at a small dinner party of six men and two women, and I sat at the left of that excellent and very human man who was then Prince of Wales and is now king and emperor. He had a small silver match-box, and he kept picking it up and handling it in a preoccupied way and then laying it down again. Gradually the impression was built up in my mind that he wanted to say something about that box and didn't know how to get at it. The impression was correct. Eventually he passed the box to me to look at, and mentioned with the artful casualness which we are all so well acquainted with in our own persons, that it was given to him by the King of Spain. It was a startling and light-throwing incident. It seemed almost unthinkable that the heir to the colossal British Empire could prize an attention and hold so precious a compliment from any human being in this earth, but it was so; that seventh-rate king was still a king and ranked the prince; therefore the prince prized an attention from that source.

I have several times said that I could live upon compliments alone, if I could get no other sustenance, and I think that in this I do not differ from the rest of the race, even the members of it that wear the purple [MTP].

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

December 13 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Champ Clark (James Beauchamp Clark):

I thank you ever so much for your kind offer, but I want to get an extension on it until some later day—indeinitely later—so that I may finish a dialogue which I began last September, & which I may not take up again for a good while.

The purpose of the dialogue is to instruct Congress in copyright, & explain the reasonableness of what the bill asks. Of course the usual method—a deluge of printed documents—could instruct Congress if Congress would (& could) read them, but Congress can't and won't commit suicide in any such way. But Congress will read real literature, for the pastime of it & the love of it, & it will read that dialogue.

And so by & by I will finish it. / Thanking you again, ... [MTP].

Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Emma Gertrude Quick. “Thank you so much for your good news about that comfortable box.. Mr. Clemens asks me to tell you that he is glad you have secured it & that it was lovely to see Dorothy to whom he sends much love as do I, & regards to you” [MTP]. Note: this may have been Dorothy and her mother seeing the play Peter Pan, as Sam promised Dorothy in his Dec. 10.

Dorothy Butes wrote from London to wish Sam a “Merry Xmas and Happy New Year!” She related exams in college being forced to stay the full two hours whether finished or not, and making verses about her professors to fill out the time. “Lady Northclife gives a large party at her country place in Surrey every year, just a few days before Christmas to all the children of the countryside, and I am going down to help her. / The snapshot will be ready to send you by Wednesday, I think” [MTP].

George Haven Putnam for G.P. Putnam's Sons, NYC wrote to Sam that they had just published An Analysis of Christian Science by Rev. Lyman Powell, and were sending a complimentary copy. The author would appreciate any word Sam might offer [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Glad to have that book no doubt a long time before he reads it for he is at work and no doubt it will be a long time before he can find time to read it”

December 14 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Dec. 12 telegram from Frank Cavendish Lascelles, by sending one of his own to: Pageant office, Savoy, London: “Best wishes for the greast London pageant it will be the event of the year” [MTP].

Eustace D. Conway finished his Dec. 7 letter to Sam [MTP].

John R. Chamberlin for the Plasmon Co. of America wrote to Sam: “We hereby demand that you deliver to our representative, the bearer hereof, all of the books of accounts, papers, vouchers, and other property belonging to the Plasmon Company of America, which are in your possession” [MTP].

Rudolphine Scheffer Ely wrote from NYC to Sam. “You have probably read that Tchaykovsky and Mme Breshkovsky are in a Russian prison[.] Their friends here are all busy doing what they can. The enclosed petition [not in file] is going to be presented to Baron Rosen signed by as many influential names as they can get.” The names would also be telegraphed to Washington, where two representatives would see the President [MTP]. Note: in the file a note from MTP staff: “Catherine Breshovsky [1844-1934] was arrested in Russia Sept. 1907 / see New York Times 13 Sept. 1934, p. 23

December 15 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Prof. Sloane and his daughter Margaret (debutante) came in today for tea. The talk ran onto Washington and the political rottenness of the place. “No man can be himself there.” Mr. S. said. “Mr. Cleveland alone shook his fist in the faces of the corrupt politicians and made himself hated. Pres Arthur went down, McKinley had to protect himself by a great and intricate system of wire-pulling; he was suave (a pious man always) and discreet, but he went under.” And then the King said that Roosevelt had disintegrated until he had become a heap of sand. Prof. Sloane spoke of the splendid man he had started out [as], and said that Senator Spooner in summing up the present moral state of Roosevelt called him a “rope of sand.” Then they talked about various world powers and Mr. Sloane told of how the “Kitchen Cabinet” at Berlin had [entry unfinished] [MTP TS 120]. Note: William Milligan Sloane was a professor at Columbia University. John Coit Spooner (1843-1919) Republican senator from Wisconsin (1885-1891) and (1897-1907); a foe of fellow Wisconsin Senator Robert M. LaFollette, whose progressive politics inflamed many conservatives.

W.T. Larned wrote from NYC to remind Sam of his interest shown in Tuxedo a month back, when in the company of George Johnathan Bain, in Larned’s “deadly parallel” between the works of Mrs. Eddy and the meditations of Manus Buselius [sp?]. Larned had obtained a back issue (not specified) of Life, which contained his remarks on the subject, and enclosed a copy for Sam (not in file) [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Dec. 23, ‘07”

E.O. Vaile wrote from Oak Park, Ill. to express her “gratification” to Sam for his “hit at Mr. Carnegie’s hydrophobic frenzy against even any discussion of reforming our alphabet” [MTP].

December 16 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “And this day?” [MTP TS 120].

Hélène Elisabeth Picard wrote a long letter in a tiny hand.

My dear Chief Servant, / A hearty wish for a blessed Christmas to you and your family, and for many happy returns of the day is leaving my desk to start westward in the direction of your home. May those terrific tempests and angry winds allow my wishes to find your door in time, that you might know your French Member has also thought of you.

I was more than sorry not to know where to reach you, while you were in Paris; I did so want to send you a welcome to my dear country! If only I had known six weeks before about your coming to Paris! I should have gone later myself, so as to have the great honour and pleasure of seeing you in reality (and not on photos) and of shaking your hand, the one who has written so many books that I have read, reread and shall read again...

I am reading now your autobiography; a friend sends me the St. Louis paper. Unfortunately it can give me but little information for a serious literature lesson I have to prepare before next Friday on O.W. Holmes, Stanley and “Mark Twain” [MTP]. Note: evidently Picard was under the misapprehension that Sam had gone to Paris during his sojourn to England.

Joe Twichell wrote a short note to Sam. “Here is a photo of R.L. Stevenson’s house at Samoa, given me by the man who took it—Mr Merry, a Canadian, a traveler, at present a tuberculosis patient at Saranac Lake and lodging in the house next to Dave’s [Joe’s son]. As you well knew Stevenson it has seemed to me that the picture will be , not only interesting to you, but better placed in your hands than in mine. I am glad to give it to you. / Yrs Aff. ...” [MTP]. Note: copy of photo in file of a two story house with ornate porches and a sign, “Villa Vailima”

December 17 Tuesday – Charles R. Morris wrote from Washington DC to ask Sam if he would include his July 4 oration delivered at Aurora, Nev. When he was a miner there [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “He has quoted the only sentence of the speech that I remember, & I don’t know anything about the rest of it.” See Dec. 18 for Sam’s reply.

George Grantham Bain wrote to Miss Lyon to ask which photos Sam wanted copies of and enclosing a ms. for her to return [MTP].

A.R. Simmons wrote from Cocoanut Grove, Fla. to Sam that he’d read CS and concluded that Mrs. Eddy had a “large ‘claim’ of Monomania, of which even C.S. cannot disabuse her mind” [MTP].

December 18 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to George L. Beam of the Denver & Rio Grande R.R. Co, Denver, Colo. “Mr. Clemens asks me to write for him & thank you for sending him the photograph & pamphlet. And to use his own words, he said, “Tell him I think it is a good strong clean-cut face & I hope it looks like me as that is the way I should like to look”[MTP]. Note: Beam’s photo and pamphlet are not extant.

Isabel Lyon also replied for Sam to the Dec. 17 of Charles R. Morris: “He has quoted the only sentence of the speech that I remember, & I don’t know anything about the rest of it” [MTP].

John Larkin wrote from NYC to Sam. “In reply to the inquiry made of me by Miss Lyon, the payment of $25,000. to be paid you by Harper & Bros. under the contract made ... on the 23rd of October 1903 continues for five years from that date, after which you will receive a royalty of 40%. So far as I know there has been no change in the contract in this respect” [MTP].

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon about the Hadleyburg contract with Mr. Hendrie; Mr. Marburg had no rights to the play [MTP].

Eden Phillpotts wrote from Torquay, England to ask Sam if he might dedicate “another Volume of Schoolboy stories entitled “The Human Boy Again”” [MTP].

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens / I am waiting for Saturday when I shall see you most impatiently but it will soon be here please write to me when you have time my Teddy Bear is sitting on top of the dressing table and he has just fallen down and is hanging on with one leg and is in danger of falling on the floor any minute it is snowing here now I have been to Bache and am waiting for an answer I have not been to school for one week and am not going this week as I have a cold and mama is afraid to let me go to school for fear I shall take more cold hoping to see you on Saturday with lots of love / I am / your loving / Dorothy / P.S. Please give my very best love to Miss Lyon but keep some for yourself [MTAq 86].

December 19 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: I am hearing the very first words of the King’s Biography. AB is sitting here and reading them to me. The background of the book. The days that passed four months before the King was born. (He says 5 months before the King was born.) [MTP TS 121].

Thomas Bray wrote to Sam, referring to his prior request (Dec. 8) that a letter from Twain to President Garfield in behalf of Frederick Douglass be included in future segments of Sam’s Autobiography. To the reply that Clemens did not remember the letter, Bray enclosed “a copy of a copy” of it which he’d had for 26 years [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Jan. 7 ‘08”

December 20 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

I suppose you are about to leave for home, dear Francesca, so I am hasting to wish you a happy holiday-time before you get away down there out of my reach. Indeed you are much too far out of my reach even when you are in Catonsville. I wish you were going home by way of New York, so that I could have glimpse of you, you dear little rascal.

It is hard times, now; still I am going on, with the house I am building in the country, & there’ll be plenty of room for you, & you must come & see us next summer, & stay as long as you can. That Tuxedo visit was much too short.

Please remember me to your mother when you get home. You are going to be a glad child soon! [MTAq 86-7].

December 21 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean.

Dear Jean this is John Howells's wedding-day. I do not know who it is he is going to marry, I only know the sex. The sex is the main thing, & this time it is the right one.

The Howellses sail for Europe Jan. 4; on the 2d all the Harper staff, to the number of 60, go down to Lakeville by special train & give him a send-off. Miss Lyon & Mr. Paine are included, by my desire, upon the argument that they are my aides & guards, & also upon the argument that they are co-biographers with me. When I break into hellfireworks of speech, Miss Lyon sets down the words in a book. Mr. Littleton says it takes three historians to record me: a biographer, an autobiographer, and a naughty biographer—Paine, myself, & Miss Lyon.

Christmas is coming. However, we can't help that. Also Dorothy is coming today, to take me to the hippodrome.

Goodnight, dear heart—many hugs & kisses. / Father [MTP]. Note: Martin W. Littleton, neighbor across the street, whom Sam met at the Jamestown Fulton celebration.

Dorothy Quick arrived for a visit. Not aware that Sam had “canceled” Christmas after the death of Livy,

Dorothy handed him a gift to open. It was a smoker's jackknife, according to Cooley, and he “reciprocated by presenting Dorothy with an illustrated edition of Joan of Arc, thus allowing Christmas into his life once again” [93]. Note: if Sam's plans held, the pair went to the Hippodrome, which was a theatre from 1905 to 1939 on Sixth Ave. between 43rd and 44th Streets. Called the largest in the world by its builders, it seated 6,000. See inserts for postcard view, and for the program they enjoyed, either the matinee or the evening:

Miss H. Riddell wrote from NYC to Sam, having rec'd an introduction from Harmony Twichell. She requested “the privilege of meeting” him. “...it will be a great delight to take back to Japan with me” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Tall woman [illegible two words] in hospital for lepers in Japan ”

December 22 Sunday – Sam gave a dinner speech at the Pleiades Club, Hotel Brevoort, which was literally next door to his house at 21 Fifth Ave., N.Y. Fatout introduces the event:

At the Pleiades Club dinner for Mark Twain, menus were decorated with illustrated quotations from his books. Carter S. Cole, chairman, introduced the guest of honor by paying tribute to his eminence in American literature, praising so lavishly that Mark Twain began his speech with a mild protest [MT Speaking 600].

The New York Times, Dec. 23, p.5 reported the Pleiades Club speech:

HOW MARK TWAIN ‘WORKED’ GEN. MILES

Sold Him Another Man's Dog, He Tells Pleiades Club, Because He Needed the Money.

STARTED FIRST SYNDICATE

While He Was Writing “Innocents Abroad” In Washington—Thinks He’s Comparatively Honest.

Mark Twain was the guest of honor at a dinner given by the Pleiades Club at the Hotel Brevoort last night. In his talk, which he described as being wholly unprepared, he told how he first met Gen. Nelson A. Miles by selling him for $3 a dog that belonged to another person. He explained the transaction by saying that at the time he was in sore need of funds, as he and a friend were then running the first newspaper syndicate in this country at salaries of $12 a week.

The dining room of the Brevoort was filled with about 200 guests, who all rose and applauded when the aged humorist made his entrance after the meal was over. The menus were covered with illustrated quotations from Mr. Clemens’s works. Carter S. Cole acted as toastmaster. He introduced the guest of the evening with a high tribute to his place in American literature, saying that he was dear to the hearts of all Americans.

“It is hard work to make a speech,” began Mr. Twain, “when you have listened to compliments from the power in authority. A compliment is a hard text to preach to. When the chairman introduces me as a person of merit, and when he says pleasant things about me, I always feel like answering simply that what he says is true, that it is all right, that as far as I am concerned the things he said can stand as they are. But you always have to say something, and that is what frightens me.

“I remember out in Sydney once having to respond to some complimentary toast, and my one desire was to turn in my tracks like any other worm—and run for it. I was remembering that occasion at a later date when I had to introduce a speaker. Hoping then to spur his speech by putting him in joke on the defensive I accused him in my introduction of everything I thought it impossible for him to have committed. When I finished there was an awful calm. I had been telling his life history by mistake.

“One must keep up one’s character. Earn a character first if you can, and if you can’t, then assume one. From the code of morals I have been following and devising and revising for seventy-two years I remember one detail. All my life I have been honest, comparatively honest. I could never use money I had not made honestly. I could only lend it.

“Last Spring I met Gen. Miles again, and he commented on the fact that we had known each other thirty years. He said it was strange that we had not met years before, when we had both been in Washington. At that point I changed the subject, and I changed it with art. But the facts are these:

“I was then under contract for my ‘Innocents Abroad,’ but did not have a cent to live on while I wrote it. So I went to Washington to do a little journalism. There I met an equally poor friend, William Davidson, who had not a single vice, unless you call it a vice in a Scot to love Scotch. Together we devised the first and original newspaper syndicate, selling two letters a week to twelve newspapers and getting $1 a letter. That $24 a week would have been enough for us if we had not had to support the jug.

“But there was a day when we felt that we must have $3 right away, $3 at once. That was how I met the General. It doesn’t matter now what we wanted so much money at one time for, but that Scot and I did occasionally want it. The Scot sent me out one day to get it. He had a great belief in Providence, that Scottish friend of mine.

“I had given up trying to find the money lying about, and was in a hotel lobby in despair, when I saw a beautiful unfriended dog. The dog saw me, too, and at once we became acquainted. Then Gen. Miles came in, admired the dog, and asked me to price it. I priced it at $3. He offered me an opportunity to reconsider the value of the beautiful animal, but I refused to take more than Providence knew I needed. The General carried the dog to his room.

“Then came in a sweet little middle-aged man, who at once began looking around the lobby.

“‘Did you lose a dog?’ I asked. He said he had.

“‘I think I could find it,’ I volunteered, ‘for a small sum.’

“‘How much?’ he asked. And I told him $3.

“He urged me to accept more, but I did not wish to outdo Providence. Then I went to the General’s room and asked for the dog back. He was very angry, and wanted to know why I had sold him a dog that did not belong to me.

“‘That’s a singular question to ask me, Sir,’ I replied. ‘Didn’t you ask me to sell him. You started it.’ And he let me have him. I gave him back his $3 and returned the dog, collect, to its owner. That second $3 I carried home to the Scot, and we enjoyed it, but the first $3, the money I got from the General, I would have had to lend.

“The General seemed not to remember my part in that adventure, and I never had the heart to tell him about it.”

Mr. Clemens left the Breevort after his speech. There followed a mixed programme of music and recitations.

John Brown, Jr. (“Jock”) wrote from Edinburgh to Sam. “I hope you got the copy of Dr. Brown’s letter which A.C. Black sent you, at my request, and still more do I hope you were not disappointed with them.” Jock was also glad to see how Clemens was received in England [MTP].

John N. Ryan wrote to Sam. “Referring to our conversation on 5th ave on Friday afternoon when you promised to come to the Pleiades Club—we have set Sunday evening Dec. 22nd and hope that date will be convenient for you. I will write to Mrs. Quick and I am sure that she and Miss Dorothy will be on hand on that evening...Please advise me of your acceptance” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Yes. I guess that’s so”

December 23 Monday – Elmer Z. Burns wrote to Sam, enclosing a photograph of Twain’s cabin at Aurora. “Some of your admirers have placed decorations on this cabin in your honor, but I am sure, if all who would like to do so, could, the cabin would be buried beneath the load” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, “The hillside & the sagebrush look just as they did before, but I think the house looks better than it did formerly”

Miss Beryl Morse wrote Merry Christmas wishes “In memory of a pleasant afternoon spent in the Century Club booth at the Actor’s Fund Fair, where a happy little girl was entertained by a distinguished author” [MTP].

B.W. Taylor wrote from El Paso, Tex. to Sam, not receiving a reply to his letter of Dec. 7 (not extant) This is essentially a begging letter, long and drawn out; Taylor was trying to sell some verses [MTP].

December 24 Tuesday – William Henry Bishop, American Consul in Palermo, Italy wrote a four-page typed letter to “My dear Mr. Autobiographer”:

It is known that when one gets in front of most any kind of an Auto he is apt to be hurt, so I am not much surprised, after the impact of your current Autobiography (page 487 of the December number of the North American Review), to find myself a corpse.

I too remember that famous dinner of the Atlantic Monthly and the presence of the Olympian gods of the region. But what happened was different from the way you represent it. I have no intention at all of trying to amend your good story, and this is one of those things that is “not necessary for publication”; furthermore I should be almost as well pleased to be yoked with you in an alleged calamity as with most other people in their abounding prosperity. I am merely yielding to the impulse to give a little “back talk”, after the lapse of so many years and across the rolling ocean [MTP]. Notes: the dinner referred to by Bishop who also spoke at that event, was the infamous Whittier Birthday dinner in Boston, where Clemens’ story about the three vagabonds named Longfellow, Emerson, and Holmes, fell flat. Bishop also disclosed that the next time he spoke before Clemens was in Milan “about 1890” when he spoke in French before the International Copyright Congress. Lyon wrote on the last page of the letter for Sam: “He’s a consul—Jesus! Yes tell him he has forgotten all about the dinner. I was there & I am the only reliable historian, but he’s right about the copyright meeting. I didn’t know that I had said anything at that meeting.”

Samuel E. Moffett wrote one sentence to wish Sam “Christmas greetings” [MTP].

Alexander C. Humphreys for the Lotos Club wrote from Hoboken, NJ to invite Sam to be the guest of the Club for the last dinner in the old house on Jan. 11 [MTP].

December 24 after – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Alexander C. Humphreys and the Lotos Club. “I was not intending to go out again for a year to come, but this invitation unsettles me. I would like to talk with you or with Lawrence about it, if either of you can do me the kindness to call here within a few days. If so, please telephone me, day & hour so that I can be sure & be at home" [MTP].

December, last week – The estimated time of Elinor Glyn's follow-up 90-minute visit with Clemens at his NY home. This estimate is based on Clemens' Jan. 13 A.D. See Jan. 13 entry, which also includes Glyn's description of the meeting, and Anthony Glyn's Elinor Glyn: a Biography, p. 143-4 which states, "She stayed for an hour and a half and for most of the time they discussed Three Weeks, which he greatly admired, both in matter and in style." Glyn here neglects Sam's opinion that publishing such a book was a mistake—a fact that got duly noted in the Sept. 27, 1908 interview of Clemens by Charles Henry Meltzer of the NY American. See entry.

December 25 Wednesday – Christmas – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam sent a telegram to Dorothy Quick, now at 63 8th Ave. "Merry Christmas and do not forget Friday" [MTP]. Note: the Friday engagement is not specified.

Sam also inscribed the verso of a photo of himself lying in bed to an unidentified person: "Now that the horse-shoe is mounted as a pin, it has become useful as well as beautiful. Truly Yours, Mark Twain, Xmas, 1907" [MTP: City Book Auction catalogs, No. 355, 16 Nov. 1946, Item 103].

Edith F. Connally sent a signed colored floral Christmas card [MTP].

W.S. Croll sent a small, engraved Christmas and New Year card to Sam [MTP].

M.S. Gifford and Evelyn Gifford wrote from Oxford, Englad to wish Sam "a Happy Christmas" [MTP].

Mr. & Mrs. R. Howard Krause sent a small printed Christmas card to Sam [MTP].

Marion Peak Mason (Mrs. George Grant Mason), NYC wrote "Merry Christmas" on her calling card to Sam [MTP].

Mr. & Mrs. Edward Scott, Finsbury Park, London sent an unsigned Christmas card to Sam [MTP].

Mr. & Mrs. Benjamin Stone sent an embossed Christmas and Nw Year card to Sam [MTP].

Thomas Wardle and Miss Wardle sent a printed Christmas and New Year card to Sam [MTP].

West Point Military Academy sent a printed Christmas and New Year card to Sam, signed, "West Point Army Mess" [MTP].

Alice Westrult signed a Christmas card to Sam [MTP].

December 26 Thursday – Harper & Brothers wrote to Miss Lyon replying to hers of Dec. 23 and would be "very glad to communicate with Miss Katharine I. Harrison in regard to the 24th and 25th Voumes of Mr. Clemens' Works" [MTP].

Ethel Newcomb wrote to Sam, hoping she might see him before going back to Europe, as she'd missed him at Brown's Hotel in London when he was there. Regards to the girls [MTP].

December 27 Friday – Sam and Dorothy Quick had some unspecified engagement for today; see telegram Dec. 25 to Quick.

The New York Times ran “Want Tchaikovsky Free” on p. 8, and included Samuel L. Clemens in a list of about 500 names signed to a petition plea to liberate Nicholas Tchaikovsky (Nikolai V. Chaikovsky), recently arrested for complicity in the Russian revolutionary movement.

Jervis Langdon II wrote to Sam about progress selling the Hope-Jones organs—their first order being for “ten or twelve thousand shouting Methodists” in Ocean Grove, NJ [MTP].

December 28 Saturday – In his Dec. 29 to Nunnally, Sam wrote: “Yesterday I went with 70 other slaves of Harper & Brothers to Lakewood to lunch Mr. Howells out of the country & give him God-speed. The distance was greater than I was expecting it would be.” On Dec. 21 he had written to daughter Jean: “The Howellses sail for Europe Jan. 4; on the 2d all the Harper staff, to the number of 60, go down to Lakeville by special train & give him a send-off. Miss Lyon & Mr. Paine are included, by my desire, upon the argument that they are my aides & guards, & also upon the argument that they are co-biographers with me.”

Evidently the date for the Harper staff and friends to see William Dean Howells off had been moved up to Dec. 28, and Sam was correct in his first letter above, it was Lakewood, N.J., not Lakeville. Interestingly, MTHL p.828 also gives Jan. 2, 1908 for a luncheon. The New York Times, Dec. 29, p.9, reports a dinner speech Sam made on Dec. 28 as a farewell honor. Fatout does not report this speech.

DINNER TO W. D. HOWELLS.

Mark Twain Makes a Speech for the Guest of Honor.

Special to the New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Dec. 28.—A brilliant gathering made up of representatives of the various Harper publications and their most prominent literary contributors, attended a dinner given to-day at the Laurel House by Col. George Harvey in honor of W. D. Howells, who will soon sail for Europe. Among the seventy guests present were “Mark Twain,” Henry M. Alden, David Munro, Albert Bigelow Paine, Van Tassel Sutphen, and Dennis O’Sullivan, well known as a singer in London opera.

After dinner Col. Harvey called on Mr. Howells, who said that as he and Mr. Clemens had long ago made a pact that if he would write Mr. Clemens’s books, Mr. Clemens would make his speeches, he would leave him to make the speech now if Mr. Clemens thought he could remember it.

Mr. Clemens rose to the occasion, and kept the room in a gale of laughter for some time, revealing the details of his literary collaboration with Mr. Howells for some years. He said the Mr. Howells had started by expurgating his books for him till he had attained his present reputation, and that had Mr. Howells continued the process he had no doubt it would have brought to him a reputation for literary purity such as had never been before known, but unfortunately Mr. Howells was not content with merely expurgating Mr. Clemens’s books, he soon began to interline.

“And then,” concluded Mr. Clemens, “I released him from the contract and have edited my own books ever since.”

Note: the luncheon at Lakewood, N.J. resulted in a short article with a full page photograph in Harper’s Weekly for Jan. 18, 1908. See entry.

Julia Barnett Rice for the Society of Suppression of Noise wrote to thank Sam for his “kind lines of encouragement” [MTP].

December 29 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally; his letter informs of a short trip he took the day before, and of his dinner plans for this evening.

Ah, you dear Francesca, you & your mother gave me a pleasant surprise in that beautiful & valuable addition to my winter comforts, & I thank you cordially ; & I wish also to thank you, dear, for the fine album of Rembrandts. I am the better, bodily & spiritually, for these welcome remembrances.

Yesterday I went with 70 other slaves of Harper & Brothers to Lakewood to lunch Mr. Howells out of the country & give him God-speed. The distance was greater than I was expecting it would be: multiplied by 2 or 3 it would have reached Baltimore, & so if you had been in Catonsville I would have gone on. But you had already escaped South; you had probably already started before I wrote you the other day.

If you see Uncle Remus Harris you must give him a good hearty Xmas hand-squeeze for me, for I am very fond of him.

Half-hour later. I wish you were here, so that I could have you at dinner this evening & show you off, as I did to those admiring families in London. It's a small dinner, for stage friends: John Drew & his wife, Will Gillette, & Billie Burke—excellent folk, & Billie is as good as she is pretty. And Gillette is such a bright talker. He has just gone from the room, it is 1.30 p.m.; & now I will get up & play billiards with Mr. Paine.

I may have to go to Washington by & by, & then I will fall off the train at Baltimore & have a glimpse of you.

With my kindest regards to your mother, & my love to you, dear, ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Happy New Year, Dorothy dear!

I miss you so, you dear child—I miss you all the time, you little rascal.

Your mother said you could come again, before the end of January—you will be very welcome, honey [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam. (Only the envelope survives maked “Personal” on each side) [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote several names on the env., which may or may not refer to the missing letter: “Walkers, Marjorie [sic Margery] Clinton, Fluffy, Guinesses, Sampson, Riggses, Colliers, Doubledays” and “Masons / Templetons / Waylands” and “Miss Herts / Sunday P.P.” and “Miss Burbank, J.Q. Adams, Doubledays” – guest lists?

Alex Sinclair wrote from Toronto to Sam, having enjoyed reading CS. He enclosed a clipping “Going to Church in Toronto” (in file) from the Toronto News of Dec. 28 which he thought might interest [MTP].

December 30 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Carlotta Welles.

Your letter has just arrived, & is a very pleasant & very welcome surprise; I thought you had forgotten me long ago. The xmas holidays have this high value: that they remind Forgetters of the Forgotten, & repair damaged relationships.

Yesterday afternoon when I was breaking the Sabbath over the billiard table, word was brought up that “Doangivadams” were downstairs, waiting. We had a very pleasant time together, & some day I’m going down to Bryn Mawr & return the visit.

You remember Frances Nunnally? I had xmas letters from her & her mother day before yesterday, from their home in Georgia. They visited me in Tuxedo in September. Frances (whom I call Francesca for short), was very good to me in London, & drove with me two hours every afternoon, returning calls. Her school is near Baltimore; I am going down there by & by.

Dispeptic? Dear me, I do pity you Charley, for I was walking that vale of tears & exasperations for many months, & I know all about it. I cured it two months ago, & I will tell you the process. So that you can duplicate it? Indeed no!—so that you can avoid it. For what cures one person always kills another. I stopped drinking milk—that was the main thing. I stopped dieting. That was the next mainest thing. I dine chiefly on radishes & celery now (I am not joking), following these with all kinds of deadly food, & always finishing with two pears. My health is at last perfect. But don’t you venture that road, you little rascal!

Many letters catalogued to Clemens during 1907 were to Lyon or Ashcroft; some omitted here

With love & Happy New Years ... [MTAq 89-90]. Note: source: “Carlotta was attending the Baldwin School in Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania; the three visitors were probably school friends.”

John Larkin wrote to Sam about the Knickerbocker Trust situation. Larkin advised the best thing for depositors to do is to “consent to the Satterly plan...of which Mr. Parsons is chairman and Mr. Satterly is counsel.” He had followed the situation and felt as did Harvey, that the bank might reopen [MTP]. Note: Herbert L. Satterly, also seen as Satterlee, was the son-in-law of J.P. Morgan. Hinsdill Parsons (1864-1912).

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens / Here I am safe in Plainfield. Grandpa and Grandma came yesterday and I was so glad to see them I had over 40 Christmas [presents] when I counted them all up It is raining here and is dark and dreary I have not heard from Bache but expect a letter every day will let you know when I get it with lots of love / your loving / Dorothy / P.S. Please give lots of love to Miss Lyon from me [MTAq 88-9].

Oscar M. Voorhees for Phi Beta Kappa wrote to Sam, enclosing a bound copy of the “report of the recent Phi Beta Kappa Council” (in file.) [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Jan. 6, 1908” and “Thanks for report”

December 31 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote on a card picturing a woman in a hat to Maud W. Littleton: “Happy New year / to / Mrs Littleton / from / SL. Clemens” [MTP]. Note: Martin W. and Maud W. Littleton, across-the-street neighbors.

Sam hosted a New Year’s Eve Luncheon for six. The Boston Daily Globe, Jan. 2, 1908, p.8, “One on O’Sullivan” reported that the guests included Dennis O’Sullivan (1868-1908; sometimes seen as Denis), Irish actor and singer, Finley Peter Dunne, George B. Harvey, and George Woods. Sam’s talk included a dream of Clara Clemens’ about William Dean Howells, who was also likely present (he would sail for Europe on Jan. 4). The event was also reported by the Washington Times, Jan. 2, 1908, p. 8:

MARK TWAIN JOKES FRIEND ABOUT JOKE

Humorist Raps Howells and O’Sullivan at One Fell Swoop.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—Dennis O’Sullivan, the Irish singer, carried a wide grin yesterday when he boarded the Twentieth Century Limited for Chicago, where he is to open Sunday night in a new comic opera, “Peggy Machree.” With him he took Mark Twain’s latest story, and the tale tickled him so that he giggled like a school girl.

Mr. O’Sullivan and six guests, among whom were Finley Peter Dunne, Col. George Harvey, of Harper’s, and George Wods [sic Woods], were invited by Mark to a New Year luncheon Tuesday noon. Each was asked to “meet the human race,” and after they met it there was much hilarity and good cheer.

Mr. O’Sullivan is a devotee of the game of billiards, and when he was called upon to say something his mind turned to his favorite amusement. He spun several good yarns concerning the elusive ivory balls, and then branched into a complicated description of a new variety of the game he has been perfecting for upward of two years.

The description was in fact so complicated and technical that no one except the singer had the slightest idea what the story teller was talking about. When he had finished Mr. Clemens, himself a billiards expert, arose.

“I have greatly enjoyed the account of this new game,” he said, “because it reminds me of a story my daughter Clara told me this morning. Clara doesn’t often dream, but she dreamed last night, and she told me about it. She said she thought she heard William Dean Howells telling a funny anecdote, the gist of which she could not catch. The tale, however, was followed by a perfect Niagara of laughter and handclapping. Therefore she was provoked because she had lost the point.

“ ‘Now, I can just tell you all about that story,’ said I. ‘How is that?’ she asked. ‘Well,’ said I, ‘Mr. Howells has but one funny story, and that hasn’t a point to it. But, of course, one must applaud.’ ”

Everyone roared, and when Mr. O’Sullivan again spun a yarn it had nothing to do with billiards.

Note: O’Sullivan was born in San Francisco to a prominent banker. He traveled to Europe to study voice under Karl Formes, and Ugo Talbo Vannucinna in Florence and under Sbriglia in Paris. He made his debut in 1895 in Dublin as part of the Carl Rosa Company. He then performed in London. He arrived back in New York on November 22, 1907 and was a major headliner for a few short months. He performed to great acclaim in Chicago’s McVicker’s Theatre, then moved on to Columbus, Ohio where he had an appendectomy on Feb. 1, 1908 and died on Feb. 20, at the too-young age of 39.

William Arnold Rowland wrote from Montreal to Sam, “Having read in the Tribune of he 10th instant (I waited 21 days to encourage my thought to mature) your remarks on the Pterodactyl and Reformed Spelling, permit me to hand you a clipping of my little skit on the same subject, introducing the dog” [MTP]. Note: clipping dated Apr. 28, 1906

Marquis d’ Equilles wrote Sam “best wishes & sincerest wishes for the New Year” on his calling card [MTP].

Year of the Angelfish – “A Good Place to Live in, a Good Place to Die In”
“Autobiography House” becomes “Innocents at Home” becomes “Stormfield”
Doe Luncheons – Elinor Glyn – Knickerbocker Crisis
Bermuda Trips: Margaret, Maude & Reginald; HHR – Children’s Theatre
Jubilee City College – Aldrich Memorial– Commodore Dow – Moffett Drowns
Guests, Guests, & More Guests – Redding Library “Tax” & Dedication
Burglars! Staff Quits – Requies Cat in Pace – Elizabeth Wallace Visits

1908 – Hill notes that of known 1908 letters by Clemens, “nearly half” were to his Members of the Aquarium, or Angelfish. “Almost always they were long, chatty, childlike letters, frequently composed over a number of days. All pleaded for visits.” Hill, as others have done, also makes a connection from the Angelfish to the late Susy Clemens [195-6].

Sometime during the year Sam inscribed an illustration pasted on the front cover of Richard Le Gallienne’s The Old Country House (1905) to Isabel V. Lyon: “S.L. Clemens, 1905, to J.V. Lyon, 1908.” [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben.

Sometime during the year, likely in December, Elizabeth Wallace inscribed for Sam a copy of Aspects of the Earth: A Popular Account of Some Familiar Geological Phenomena (1904) by Nathaniel Southgate Shaler (1841-1906): “To the King / with / the affectionate homage / of Betsy.” Sam signed the half-title page: “SL. Clemens / 1908 / from Betsy Wallace.” Clemens wrote a note on the top of page 69, and dated it Dec. 29, 1909. See entry [Gribben 636].

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a short reply to Brander Matthews (whose incoming is not extant):

“Would I like to have that MS? Indeed I would!

I reckon it is a good idea, to collect the speeches. I will speak to the Harpers” [MTP].

A section in American Literature, “American Humor” (1908), by Julian W. Abernethy, p. 465-72: Tenney: “The book is a broad survey, intended for use in schools, and the treatment of MT is superficial, though laudatory (except for regretting his frequent coarseness). TS and HF are ‘astonishingly clever studies of the American bad boy, and LOM is ‘his best autobiographic narrative,’ a product of the river which inspired him. Abernethy appears to be guided primarily by Brander Matthews and H.R. Haweis, both of whom he quotes in praise of MT (the attributions are unclear, but the sources seem to be Aspects of Fiction, Harper, 1892, and American Humorists, Funk, 1883, respectively) [45].

The Life of Henry Irving (London; 1908) by Austin Brereton contains accounts of Clemens. Tenney: “MT a guest at a dinner given in Irving’s honor at the Somerset Club by Charles Fairchild and James R. Osgood; Howells and Aldrich were also present 1884 (p. 37); Irving a guest at MT’s home in Hartford, 1884 (p. 42). MT’s name was among over a hundred signatures on a letter dated 14th March, 1885, inviting Irving to a banquet in his honor at Delmonico’s, April 6 (p. 68)” [45].

The Life of Thomas Bailey Aldrich (1908) by Ferris Greenslet contains letters by Clemens: Tenney: “Includes the correspondence with MT that followed Aldrich’s attribution in Every Saturday of the ‘Carl Byng’ and ‘Hy Slocum’ sketches in the Buffalo Express to him, with MT’s tribute to Harte’s influence as literary mentor, although their friendship had ended (pp. 94-99); correspondence in which MT deluged Aldrich with photographs in response to a request for one (pp. 112-17, including a self-portrait sketch, facing p. 114); anecdote on their comparative popularity in France (p. 117A); quotes MT declaring ‘that if he was a fool, he was at least God’s fool, and entitled to some respect' (p. 192); on MT as so well known that 'little donkey-boys on the Nile...will tell you that they were "Mark Twain's" donkey boys"' [45-6].

Life of Bret Harte (1908) by Edgar T. Pemberton contains references to Mark Twain [Tenney 46].

The New American Type, and Other Essays (1908) by Henry Dwight Sedgwick contains a section, "Mark Twain" (p. 281-313). Tenney: "On MT as the embodiment of a democratic, American spirit in literature" [46].

Reminiscences of Senator William M. Stewart of Nevada (1908), ed. George Rothwell Brown. Tenney quotes: "'Chapter XXIII. Mark Twain becomes my secretary—Back from the Holy Land, and he looks it—the landlady terrorized—I interfere with a humorist's pleasures and get a black patch—Revenge!—Clemens the hero of a Nevada hold-up' (pp.219-24). An unsympathetic portrayal of MT, who briefly was Stewart's secretary in Washington. Concludes: 'Clemens remained with me for some time. He wrote his book in my room, and named it The Innocents Abroad. I was so confident that he would come to no good end, but I have heard of him from time to time since then and I understand that he has settled down since then and become respectable ["]' [46].

Patrick Cooke published a 63-page pamphlet of criticism of Twain's "Concerning the Jews": Our Misunderstanding Concerning the Jews, etc. (1908). Tenney: "...arguing that although MT claimed to be unprejudiced he shared the racial, caste, and sectarian prejudices of his time; MT's essay 'Concerning the Jews,' though kindly mean, serves to perpetuate bigotry" [Tenney, ALR First Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1977) 335].

The Wine of the Puritans: A Study of Present-Day America (London 1908), by Van Wyck Brooks. Tenney: "On pp. 105, 109, 114, briefly mentions MT as simply one more of the popular humorists, sharing their deficiencies" [Tenney, ALR Second Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1978) 176].

Sometime during 1908 Louise Freeman and Mary E. Freeman (mother and daughter) wrote to Sam, thanking him for the pictures and sending love [MTP].

On a Thursday in 1908 Polly Porter, daughter of Robert Porter, Oxford, wrote on The Buckingham Hotel notepaper to Sam:

Dear Dr. Clemens: / The fascinating cards you so kindly sent us are greatly appreciated, and more still your thought of us in this, the busiest of seasons. Thank you many times for them.

"Peter Pan" is still a vivid and delightful dream to me, which will never fade.

After leaving you and Miss Lyon at the theatre Miss Clinton and I have a pleasant tea together and walk home. I missed her call today, but am going to her "At Home" in Monday. She is a charming acquaintance, I think, for which I'm grateful to you as for many other pleasures.

With sincere regard from us all, / Polly Porter [MTP]. Note: Clemens first saw Peter Pan on Nov. 15, 1905.

Also sometime during 1908 A.J. Schortkapp (Mrs. Walter Schortkapp) of Buffalo, NY wrote from Baden Baden, Germany while traveling in Europe. This is a fan letter. She urged him to travel and write more travel books [MTP].

Sometime in 1908 Zene Spurrier wrote from Kingman Kansas to send a poem titled "Mark Twain" done for his 70th and "mailed to the author at this late date on the impulse of the moment" [MTP].

Mrs. Esther Ogden Sturgis (Mrs. Richard Clipson Sturgis) wrote on a Tuesday from Kingston, NY: "It is very kind of you to ask me to go to you with Dorothy [Sturgis] , & I should like so much to do so, were I not very much of an invalid & still in the clutches of a trained nurse" [MTP].

Dorothy Sturgis (1891-1978) wrote sometime during 1908 after Apr. 13:

My dear Mr. Clemens / I got the photographs the other day and I was awfully glad to hear from you, because I was beginning to think you didn't love me any more, you hadn't written for so long!

The photographs are really very good, aren't they? Especially of you.

It was so very sweet of you to be so hospitable about my coming to you next time I come to New York, but I should hate to give you the bother of having me on your hands in that way.

I know I shouldn't revert to subjects which I have dropped, but I forgot to say that those pictures you sent me do not quite fit my picture frames as the opening is a circle, and I wish that if it isn't too much bother you or Miss Lyon could send me a nice big picture of you, all alone, just head and shoulders, if you have one. (The diameter is 4 inches.)

Have you taken those dancing lessons yet? Don't forget that you are reserving a dance for me in the Princess Hotel, on the first Friday in January of next year!

With oceans, and seas, and rivers of love to you and Miss Lyon, / Dorothy [MTP].

John Vanderbilt, NYC, sent a long printed poem, "Lake Mohonk" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, "Oh, damn this poet!"

Helen M. Turner wrote from Cincinnati sometime during the year with this ditty:

Life's a game each one must play,
Humor shines forth night or day;
In the game when brains are wit
I must remark Twain, you are "it" [MTP].

Elizabeth Wallace also sent a little tale on Princess Hotel notepaper, including stick figures inserted at various points of the poem. The poem related the walk with Maude the donkey, her master Reginald, "a kind gentleman" (Twain) and others. "When they came back...the kind gentleman was so very tired that he did not come to dinner" [MTP].

An unidentified person sent a postcard: "In reply to yours of many and some recent dates, let my eloquent New Years Greeting attest an appreciation which—alack—must be voiceless as well as nameless. [other side:] I always thought that old Dean Howells as a muck-raker—& a slush slinger—don't let him defile you!" [MTP].

George Harvey wrote on Hotel Touraine, Boston, notepaper to Sam: "The name of that hotel in Portsmouth is the Wentworth. I knew all the time. / Uncle William was enchanted with the selections from the motor—I mean the Auto. / But he has doubtless written you / Yours" [MTP] Note: staff note: "end of June 1908 SLC went to Portsmouth for Aldrich Memorial."

January – "Extract from Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven" first appeared in two installments in Harper's Monthly for Dec. 1907 and for Jan. 1908. It was published by Harper as a book in Oct. 1909 as Extract from Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven. Budd points out that Twain worked on various versions of the story at multiple times—in 1869, 1870, 1873, 1878, 1881, 1883, and 1893 [Budd Collected 2: 1013].

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam drafted a telegram to Robert J. Collier at 752 Park Ave., N.Y.: "WILL MAMMA GO WITH YOU & ME TO BERMUDA IN FEBRUARY? SAY YES. / CLEMENS" [MTP].

Hill writes of the antagonism between Isabel Lyon and Albert Bigelow Paine, and of Samuel Moffett's call at 21 Fifth Ave. sometime this month, when she told him (quoting from Isabel Lyon's diary):

When I said the King was distressed to know that Paine had copied quantities of the King's early letters, that Paine gave him to understand that it was the King's particular wish that he should have them. The King said last night that the next thing Paine would be getting letters from Howells, and he proceeded to write Mr. Howells asking him not to comply [Hill 201].

Note: Sam wrote Howells on Jan. 22 telling that Moffett had been giving his letters to Paine, and asking Howells not to give Paine the letters he had; Howells replied on Feb. 4 that it was too late; he'd already done so. See entries. Given the date of Sam's request to Howells and his concerns, it would seem that Isabel's entry and Moffett's visit would have come around mid-January at the earliest. See also Feb. 26 for Lyon's account of telephoning Paine about missing letters.

Sam inscribed a copy of TS to J. Freeman Lincoln: "To J. Freeman Lincoln—Happy New Year, Mark Twain" [MTP].

Carlotta Welles ("Charlie") wrote from Paris to send New Year wishes. She often thought of him and his kindness on the S.S. Minneapolis and doubted she could come back to America in the spring [MTP].

January 1 Wednesday – In N.Y.C. Sam attended a farewell dinner for William Dean Howells at the Metropolitan Club, thrown by Col. Harvey. According to Lyon's datebook for Jan. 2, Sam spoke last after six speeches [MTP: IVL TS 1]. See entry.

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Robert Underwood Johnson. "Dear Mr. Johnson: / Mr. Clemens asks me to write for him to say that he is not sufficiently interested to vote on coming membership" [MTP]. Note: Lyon dictated this to Josephine Hobby.

Sam also wrote to Eden Phillpotts.

New Years Day, 1908

My dear Friend;

There above I have tried the new date for the first time—& most strange & impertinent & intrusive it does look! However, this is not a novelty: 65 of its ancestors have affected me in the same way. In offering to dedicate the book to me you do me high honor, & I accept your "select party of rascals" gratefully. This is the best New Year's Gift I have received.

What an unforgetably lovely time I had in England! It can never be duplicated in this world, & there are some who think it wont be in the next. Your sincere friend & persistent admirer these many years [MTP]. Note: Gribben p. 544 identifies the forthcoming book dedicated to Mark Twain as The Human Boy Again (1908); see Sam's 26 Apr 1908 to Phillpotts, when the book arrived.

Sam also wrote a "Happy New Year to my dear Whitmore from the 'great White Brer'" postcard to Franklin G. Whitmore and Harriet E. Whitmore. The other side showed Mark Twain reclining in bed, and a poem by L.J. Bridgman to Mark Twain [MTP].

* John W. Postgate wrote to inquire about dramatizing JA [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Refer him to Miss Marbury / 1430 Bway"

Dorothy Quick signed a Happy New Year card "With love from Dorothy" [MTP].

John M. Warbeke wrote from Williamstown, Mass. "We are in need of some of your spirit in Williams College"—would he visit "on some auspicious occasion"? [MTP]. Note: "H" (Hobby) wrote on the letter, "ans Jan 4"

January 2 Thursday – The New York Times, p. 9 ran this brief squib of an upcoming gathering:

Lotos Club Dinner to Mark Twain

A jollification dinner is announced at the Lotos Club on Jan. 11. Mark Twain is to be the guest of the evening.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Loose jointed & weary I am in bed all day. Not doing much thinking—not doing any work but reading Daniel Deronda with greater delight than ever.

The King signed some kind of a document that pertains to the settling of the Knickerbocker Trust Co's depositor claims, and Ashcroft came to help him do it. It is claimed that in 2 yrs & 4 mos. all depositors will receive the full value of their moneys.

He told me about the farewell dinner to Mr. Howells, that he went to last night at the Metropolitan Club—"the millionaires' club." Col. Harvey gave the dinner & the food was fine—"delicious terrapin—2 rounds of it"—the King hadn't eaten anything for 24 hours so his appetite was good & even if he hadn't the big dish of radishes that he eats every night for dinner, he had no heart burn. The Colonel asked him to speak last & to go after 6 speeches, one of them by Alden, who droned away [before] the King talked—"Just talked," which is so wonderful. Like a dream edifice, for you don't know what is coming next, & his talks build into exquisite towers & pinnacles & when he sits down the wonderful structure he has built fades away & you have only an imperishable memory of a hauntingly beautiful thing that you can never remember and never forget [MTP: IVL TS 1].

Mrs. Augusta Quimby Frederick wrote to Sam from Belfast, Maine, having just finished CS and regretted that it ended.

"My knowledge of Mrs. Eddy dates back prior to 1866, before she had mounted the Eddy throne, in all her war-paint and feathers. She was then plain Mrs. Patterson in more ways than in name, but her ability to circle round the truth and not touch it, dates back to her first breath." She wrote she was the daughter of the late Phineas P. Quimby [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Jan. 22, 08"

Harper & Brothers wrote to ask Sam's permission for a Louisville, Ky. high school to give "two or three performances of" Pe&P [MTP].

January 3 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam inscribed an aphorism on a calendar page for Jan. 3, 1908 to Mr. Randall: "We ought never to do wrong when people are looking. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain" [MTP: Profiles in History catalogs, No. 1, Item 55].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Dear Santa [Clara] comes in to sit by me because I'm in bed to get rid of the gripe & when I said it was such a wonderful place to stay in that I'd do it often, she remarked, "Yes, we certainly have got the bed bug habit."

I went down for dinner, & I had the King all to myself. I was so glad—so very glad for he was sweet, very delicate & like his old self before warring outside things came in to harshen him up and make him rude to me. But I do not really care. He had many things on his mind to exasperate him, & as Tino says, he had to explode to someone. So I'm glad I've been his safety valve [MTP: IVL TS 2]. Note: "Tino" was Albert Bigelow Paine's nickname.

Susanna Deacon wrote to Sam. "How delightful! Indeed yes, I will go to the 'Doc' party, don't put it off too long however for in the interval I shall be unable to settle my mind to any thing serious...So Mrs Riggs has thrown the gauntlet? May she not be defeated! But secretly between you and me, the Doc is too flattered..." [MTP].

Neal Champ, age 78, wrote to Sam from St. Louis, relating people he'd known 50 years before in Hannibal, and writing of the time he pulled Sammy Clemens from the river [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Deer Creek Life Saved several times"

HUDSON 44th St., near B'way. Eve. 8:30.
Mats. To-morrow & Wed. 2:30.
ETHEL BARRYMORE in her new play,
HER SISTER.
By Clyde Fitch and Cosmo Gordon Lennox.

January 4 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King sent up an irritated message to me by Katherine this morning. “Was I ill? If not, then some telephoning.” I hopped out of bed, and put on wrapper and a shawl and went down. He was crossish—as the King has never been before—and pounded the bed. Dan Frohman must be telephoned to at once for a box for Ethel Barrymore’s play today—But Dan Frohman is never at his Lyceum office until after 11. I had my little campaign laid out for the King but he didn’t suspect it & he imagined I was just loafing. However, he reached for Kipling’s “Five Seas” and he read aloud, “The Bell Buoy.” Gradually his mood changed to sweet naturalness again. All the harsh edges gone & at 2 he set out for the matinee. He has been resting of late. Resting & sleeping a lot, & so is less nervous—The Templetons came over for billiards, & the King was sweet & gay. Mr. T. said that the King’s name had been down as a jurymen for the Thaw trial & the King told how when he was in Riverdale, he was drafted; he got Tom Reed to get him off and then when he was drafted again he got Mr. Rogers to get him off & then when he was drafted a 3rd time he went down to see Judge Seabury & had a nice little speech prepared. The place was full of people trying to get off & when the King reached Judge Seabury he began, “Your honor if you will allow me to explain my incompetency to act as jurymen, and the great inconne-.” Judge Seabury broke in “Mr. Clemens, you want to be let off, and certainly you shall be.” So the King’s little speech was never made. He had high praise for Judge Seabury as a handsome creature, & very courteous [MTP: IVL TS 3]. Note: Ethel Barrymore in Her Sister, playing at a 2:30 p.m. matinee. See insert.

Robert J. Collier wrote to reassure Miss Lyon that Sam’s presence at the meeting of the Educational Theatre was not required; that his duties were “purely honorary” [MTP].

Reuben P. Hallack wrote from the Male High School in Louisville, Ky to gain formal permission to give three performances of P&P [MTP]. Note: see Jan. 2 from Harpers on this issue.

January 5 Sunday – H.H. Rogers and wife paid a call on Sam at 21 Fifth Ave.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Mr. Lawrence, president of the Lotos club were here today to talk up the dinner that is to be given next Saturday evening in the King’s honor & the Oxford degree is to be made the feature of it. All day the King was in bed & he is resting up from these long fearful billiard nights, when he played so nervously from 8:30- until 12-1-2 & even 4 o’clock—that time—

He dined with the Colliers & Mr. and Mrs. Dan Frohman. Ethel Barrymore, Mr. & Mrs. Dooley, R.H. Davis were there and he said it was a “kissing bee”. Everyone of course wants to kiss him, for his the lovablest creature.

Mr. and Mrs. Rogers came in too. I tried to find a change in Mr. Rogers since his stroke last July. But there are no effects of it visible now [MTP: IVL TS 3-4]. Note: Richard Harding Davis.

January 6 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: A.B. came in for a few minutes this a.m. but not to give any chance for billiards. The King was sorry. Miss Nichols arrived. The King is interested because Will Gillette speaks of buying a “Jay Farm” up in Redding.

Mr. Howells told the King a dear little story about a little girl who had a baby brother. She watched her mother bathing him one day, she had never seen him in his tub before, and she said to her mother, “Isn’t it good that it didn’t come on his face” [MTP: IVL TS 4]. Note: Miss Marie Nichols.

S.R. Benjamin wrote to Sam soliciting automobile insurance [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Thanks for the letter, but Mr. Clemens does not expect to own an automobile” and “Ans Jan 12, inst.”

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam. “We enclose our certificate #1043 for $2784.37 covering the fifth payment in connection with Mr. Sunderland’s contract for your new residence” [MTP]. Note: William Webb Sunderland and Son was the contractor on the Redding house.

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam enclosing a draft for $2,120.00 for Minneapolis Electric Co. bonds which matured Jan 1 [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam, forced to decline an invitation by the Lotos Club for a dinner in Twain's honor next Saturday evening. Saturdays were "near impossible" for him anyway, but had a long standing appointment to preach at Williams College on that day [MTP].

January 7 Tuesday – Clara Clemens gave a recital at the 21 Fifth Ave. house.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Santa's Day, really. And I wish all the world could have heard her sing this afternoon when about 14 people were gathered in the drawing rooms and Miss Nichols played her violin. The King didn't come down until the music was over, for he doesn't like a drawing room performance, but he listened over the balusters, & I heard him gently clicking the billiard balls around in between times. Then I slid up & got him. He cannot endure Mrs. Under Shirt Johnson [Underwood], says she is a damn fool & doesn't like to be misquoted by Mrs. Day, who said, "Yes I know she is foolish but—"

Sunderland came in to say that the King's house is getting on nicely but that they must have more money for it. Tomorrow, I shall send a check for $2700. The king is beginning to feel that he wants to live there [MTP: IVL TS 4-5]. Note: Miss Marie Nichols, Boston violinist. William Webb Sunderland, Danbury Conn. Contractor.

January 8 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: The King walked up to the Irish exhibition at Madison Square Garden this morning and saw Miss Yeates [sic Yeats], the poet's sister.

Santa sang again today. A great crimson rose nestled close to her heart and she was like a wonderful flower nestling in the ether of the world. The very air must love to caress her as she passes through it [MTP: IVL TS 5]. Note: William Butler Yeats (1865-1939) Irish poet, dramatist. His two sisters, Elizabeth and Susan Mary, were known as Lolie and Lily. Which sister Sam met is unclear.

Booker T. Washington wrote to Sam.

I had a talk with Mr. H.H. Rogers yesterday, and told him that Col. Henry Watterson is coming here to speak at a meeting for us in Carnegie Hall on the 17th. Mr. Rogers expressed the wish, in which I heartily join, that you be present at the meeting. Also I very much wish that you would consent to sit on the platform with Col. Watterson. It would help our cause greatly [MTP]. Note: see also Rogers' letter of Jan. 16 about this event.

After Jan. 8 Sam wrote the following reply on Washington's letter:

Ah, I'd just as soon sit on the platform & be looked at, as not. But it would mean a speech—and I don't want to make one. But I could sit there & be a target for bouquets. It might be a chance to heave in a word for the durned blue laws. But I don't decline & I don't accept. I leave it open [MTP; MTHHR 644n2 (&'s replaced in latter)].

Clemens acquired another case of Queen Anne whisky [L-A MS]. Note: see June 8, 1907 for the full list of acquisition dates of whisky, intended as ammunition against Isabel Lyon.

Eulabee Dix wrote to Miss Lyon asking her to phone "in regard to a desire of Mr Clemens," which she would explain [MTP].

Henry W. Lucy wrote from Kent, England to Sam, advising him that he'd replied to Edward Verrall Lucas, the biographer of Charles Lamb, addressing him as "My dear lady...I trust Lucas in his acknowledgement of your letter, lived up to the distinction inadvertently conferred upon him. / And how are you? How are the burglars? I hope that when they looked in they did not take your breath away" [MTP]. Note: Clemens to Lucas is not extant.

George Thomson Wilson for Pilgrims of the U.S. sent a printed notice of their annual business meeting on Jan. 22 in the Lawyers Club, NYC at 3 p.m. [MTP].

January 9 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J. (Only the envelope survives) [MTP].

Sam also wrote to the Knickerbocker Trust Co. Depositors' Committee:

Jan. 9, 1908

To the Committee:

Gentlemen: I am in receipt of the plan for the resumption of the business of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, and I willingly yield my assent. My interest in the matter is strong, since I measure it by my deposit, $51,199, which is a large one for me.

I believe in your plan. In my judgment it will succeed, and I hope the other depositors will view it in the same way and will give in their adhesion to it. Very truly yours, / S.L. CLEMENS. [New York Times, Jan. 10, 1908, p. 1, "MARK TWAIN ON BANK PLAN." The article identified the Committee as the "Satterlee-Parsons committee of depositors." Also seen as "Satterly."

Though no extant letter deals with Jean's desire to move from Katonah to Greenwich, Conn. Hill uses Lyon's datebook and claims Jean was "adamant she must be allowed to leave Katonah.":

On January 9, 1908, she and two sisters, Edith and Mildred Cowles, who were to serve as nurses, moved into a house at 57 Maple Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut. They were accompanied by Jean's young friend Marguerite Schmidt [or Schmitt], who may also have been a patient at Katonah. Miss Lyon and Clemens went to meet the quartet at the New York City station en route to the new cottage. "Poor Jean looks very very ill," Miss Lyon recorded. "She is so white and her once beautiful face is so drawn; her fingers have a curious movement. She is like a drooping lily" [196]. Note: In a letter on Feb. 11 to Charles Langdon, Sam reported Jean was happier at Greenwich, but by Mar. 23 she was dissatisfied there, and Sam wrote Jean that day that he hoped she would find another place close to NY and near Dr. Frederick Peterson, who recommended to Lyon that the four girls might find Gloucester, Mass. more attractive [197].

Isabel Lyon's journal: It is dreadful to have such a dearth of amusement for the King. Today—this evening at dinner he said "My life is so empty, it seems a pity that I cannot have a game of billiards when I want it—" Mr. Littleton [neighbor] is submerged in the Thaw trial & has to work every evening; and ABP's is submerged in his work & has to stay up in the country, for he cannot compose anything in town. We went up to the station to meet Jean who left Katonah today for Greenwich where she is to stay with the Cowles girls. 4 of them have taken a house together. Poor Jean looks very ill. She is so white & her once beautiful face is so drawn & her fingers have a curious movement, & she is like a drooping lily. The King walked down 5th Ave with Tesla, who he said once gave promise of being a mighty man. He had a wireless telegraph method all ready for demonstration years ago but a disastrous fire destroyed all the devices & years of research notes & all formulas & he has never rallied his forces [MTP: IVL TS 5-6].

Chatto & Windus wrote from London to send a statement and check £284 8/8, for the last six months ending Dec. 31. They hoped they would see him in England during the spring or summer [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Yes, thank him & say I'm grown too old to travel but I'm hoping to see them on this side"

D.B. John Roosa wrote to confirm Sam's acceptance to be at the New York Post-Graduate Medical School dinner at Delmonico's on Apr. 16 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Jan. 10, '08"

January 10 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Cackle Madame. / Jean ill.

Eulabee Dix has been in to show the King some miniatures, & before she gets married, Sat. the 18th—she wants to & plans to paint a miniature of the King in his Oxford robe. The King says of her that she is "beautifully architected" and she is. Slim, tallish, beautiful upper lip, long almond finger nails. Everything is right. It is dreadful that life has to be made up of extremes, either the King's life is a blurr with too much billiards or it is bleak with none.

Mme. Nordica stopped at the house this morning with an invitation to a Sunday evening party at her house. The King was just going out for a walk and got into her mobile with her for a ride. Dear, great, lonely King.

Ashcroft came for dinner & cards. We played until 11:15, then the King went for a walk of 2 blocks. He said his vitality was very low because he can have no billiards. I believe it.

Will told a story that Otto Roth told at a luncheon today. A teacher asked a small boy the gender of Father. "Masculine"—Then she asked the gender of Mother. "Feminine," the boy said. Then she asked the gender dog & the boy said "Show me the dog" [MTP: IVL TS 6-7]. Note: Lillian Nordica (1857-1914) Am. Opera singer. Otto Roth, native of Vienna was a Boston violinist. Hill adds, "The games, and card games, too, often lasted into the early-morning hours, and the 'blur' was not always billiard-induced" [Hill 194].

Harper & Brothers wrote to Miss Lyon about her Jan. 9 letter referring to the Musson Book Co.'s Canadian edition of HF; They were meeting with the management of that company this week [MTP].

Misses Winifred Holt and Edith Holt sent Sam their calling card for Wed. afternoons after 4 p.m., 44 E. 78th St. NYC [MTP]. Note: this was similar to the English "At Home" cards.

January 11 Saturday – In the evening Mark Twain was the guest of honor at a Lotos Club Dinner. The New York Times reported the event on Jan. 12, p. 2. Sam was obviously in his element:

MARK TWAIN NOW AFTER COMPLIMENTS

Says at Lotos Club Dinner He's Collecting Them as some Others Do Stamps.

NAME DISHES FOR HIS WORKS

Author Took a Nap Between Courses Because He Was Going to be Up So Late.

Through Innocent Oysters Abroad, Roughing It Soup, Fish Huckleberry Finn, and Joan of Arc Filet of Beef, which the menu of the Lotos Club's dinner to Mark Twain told the guests they were eating last night, the guest of honor in his white suit, sat in an armchair at the speaker's table. But when Jumping Frog Terrapin had been reached, the author, the names of whose works had been perpetuated in the dishes, thought he would be out of bed pretty late for him, and consequently he would like to take a nap.

While the guests cheered him and he waved his hand to them, he was escorted to the upper floor. Those left in the dining room continued with Punch, Brothers, Punch; Gilded Age duck, Hadleyburg salad, Life on the Mississippi salad, Prince and the Pauper cakes, Puddin'head cheese, and White Elephant coffee. Toward the end of the menu, Mark Twain reappeared.

When his turn to speak came he announced that he had discovered a new idea. People collected postage stamps, cats, dogs, and autographs, but he was collecting compliments, he declared. He had a number of specimens and he would read them. He did. And then he added his appreciation of their authors' sincerity. The paying of compliments was an art by itself, he said.

At the speakers' table with Mark Twain were Frank R. Lawrence, President of the club; Col. Robert P. Porter, Andrew Carnegie, Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, Hamilton W. Mabie, James M. Beck, Col. George M. Harvey, Col. William C. Church, Gen. Steward L. Woodford, H. H. Rogers, Chester S. Lord, Dr. Alexander C. Humphreys, and William H. McElroy. Near the close of the dinner Gov. Fort of New Jersey entered.

After Mark had taken his armchair again and the other guests had sipped their White Elephant coffee, President Lawrence as a prelude to the introduction of the guest of honor pointed out one significant feature of the occasion.

The first club dinner in the present clubhouse, at 558 Fifth Avenue, held fourteen years ago, had been in honor of Mark Twain. Seven years later, "on his return from diverse and irregular wanderings," he was the guest at another dinner.

At that time it had been jokingly proposed that at regular intervals of seven years dinners should be held for the author. Last night was the night. It was possible, Mr. Lawrence said, that this dinner might be the last given in the hold house. (The new house, 110 West Fifty-seventy Street, may be ready on Jan. 15.)

Mr. Lawrence then called upon Col. Robert P. Porter, who had accompanied Mr. Clemens to Oxford on the occasion of the conferring upon him of the degree of Doctor of Literature, to tell something of the author as he appeared then.

Dr. Porter said among other things that he had been impressed abroad at the number and kind of persons who knew Mr. Clemens. The people on the street—even the London policemen who had been sent down to the university town to help their comrades of Oxford with the pageant knew him.

Then after a toast had been drunk to him, Mr. Clemens began in his drawling gentle way:

"I wish to begin at the beginning, lest I forget it altogether," he said. "I wish to thank you for your welcome now and for that of seven years ago, which I forgot to thank you for at the time, also for that of fourteen years ago which I also forgot to thank you for. I know how it is; when you have been in a parlor and are going away, common decency ought to make you say the decent thing, what a good time you have had. Everybody does it except myself.

"I hope that you will continue that excellent custom of giving me dinners every seven years. I had had it on my mind to join the hosts of another world—I do not know which world—but I have enjoyed your custom so much that I am willing to postpone it for another seven years.

"The guest is in an embarrassing position, because compliments have been paid to him. I don't care whether you deserve it or not, but it is hard to talk up to it.

"The other night at the Engineers' Club dinner they were paying Mr. Carnegie here discomforting compliments. They were all compliments and they were not deserved, and I tried to help him out with criticisms and references to things nobody understood.

"They say that one cannot live on bread alone, but I could live on compliments. I can digest them. They do not trouble me. I have missed much in life that I did not make a collection of compliments, and keep them where I could take them out and look at them once in a while. I am beginning now. Other people collect autographs, dogs, and cats, and I collect compliments. I have brought them along.

"I have written them down to preserve them, and think that they're mighty good and exceedingly just."

Then Mr. Clemens read a few. The first, by Hamilton W. Mabie, said that La Salle might have been the first man to make a voyage of the Mississippi, but that Mark Twain was the first man to chart light and humor for the human race.

"If that had been published at the time that I issued that book ('Life on the Mississippi') it would have been money in my pocket," he said. "I tell you it is a talent by itself to pay complements gracefully and have them ring true. It's an art by itself.

"Now, here's one by my biographer. [Loud laughter.] Well, he ought to know me if anybody does. He's been at my elbow for two years and a half. This is Albert Bigelow Paine:

"Mark Twain is not merely the great writer, the great philosopher, but he is the supreme expression of the human being with its strengths and weaknesses."

Mark Twain looked up from the paper which the compliments were written.

"What a talent for compression!" he exclaimed.

W. D. Howells, Mark Twain said, spoke of him as first of Hartford and ultimately of the solar system, not to say of the universe.

"You know how modest Howells is," he commented. "If it can be proved that my fame reaches to Neptune and Saturn, that will satisfy even me. You know how modest and retiring Howells is, but deep down he is as vain as I am."

Mark Twain said Mr. Howells had been granted a degree at Oxford, whose gown was red. He had been invited to an exercise at Columbia, and upon inquiry had been told that it was usual to wear the black gown. Later he had found that three other men wore bright gowns and he had lamented that he had been one of the black mass, and not a red torch.

Edison wrote: "The average American loves his family. If he has any love left over for some other person he generally selects Mark Twain."

"Now here's the compliment of a little Montana girl," continued Mark Twain, "which came to me indirectly. She was in a room in which there was a large photograph of me. After gazing at it steadily for a time, she said:

“We’ve got a John the Baptist like that.”

When the diners’ laughter allowed him, Mr. Clemens added:

“She also said: ‘Only ours has more trimmings.’

“I suppose she meant the halo. Now here is a gold miner’s compliment. It is forty-two years old. It was my introduction to an audience to which I lectured in a log schoolhouse. There were no ladies there. I wasn’t famous then. They didn’t know me. Only the miners were there with their breeches tucked into their boot tops and with clay all over them. They wanted some one to introduce me, and then selected a miner, who protested that he didn’t want to do on the ground that he had never appeared in public. This is what he said:

“ ‘I don’t know anything about this man. Anyhow, I only know two things about him. One is he has never been in jail and the other is I don’t know why.’

“There’s one thing I want to say about the English trip. I knew his Majesty, the King of England, long years ago, and I didn’t meet him for the first time then. One thing that I regret was that some newspapers said I talked with the Queen of England with my hat on. I don’t do that with any woman. I did not put it on until she asked me to. Then she told me to put it on, and it’s a command there. I thought I had carried my American democracy far enough. So I put it on. I have no use for a hat, and never did have.

“Who was it who said that he police of London knew me? Why, the police knew me everywhere. There never was a day over there when a policeman did not salute me, and then put up his hand and stop the traffic of the world. They treated me as though I were a Duchess.”

Andrew Carnegie, who followed Mr. Clemens, said that the English public had made much of the author’s literary attainments but there was another Mark Twain—Mark Twain the man. He eulogized Mark Twain at length, and referred to his action in paying every cent of the debts of the publishing firm with which he had once been connected.

Other speakers were Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, Hamilton W. Mabie, James M. Beck, Col. George M. Harvey, Col. William C. Church, and Gen. Stewart L. Woodford.

The menu card was a large sheet rolled as a diploma or degree with its central feature a picture of Mark Twain in his Oxford doctor’s robes. The margins contained small pictures of scenes and characters from the author’s books.

There were also shown the old homes and the new of the Lotos club. A woman below the Mark Twain portrait held in one a scroll with Mr. Clemens’s various degrees, and in the other a mask whose features were those of Mark Twain. Near the bottom in the centre was the menu with its book and character names and titles.

Here is what the diners ate:

Innocent Oysters Abroad.
 Roughing It Soup.
 Huckleberry Finn Fish.
 Joan of Arc Filet of Beef.
 Jumping Frog Terrapin.
 Punch Brothers Punch.
 Gilded Duck.
 Hadleyburg Salad.
 Life on the Mississippi Ice Cream.
 Prince and the Pauper Cake.
 Pudd’nhead Cheese.
 White Elephant coffee.
 Chateau Yquem Royals.
 Pommery Brut.
 Henkow Cognac.

After it was all over President Lawrence told the company that while this might be the final gathering in the old quarters, the Lotos spirit must be made to burn brightly in the new quarters.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The Lotos Club Dinner is tonight, in honor of the King. ABP came in to go” [MTP: IVL TS 7]. Note: in IVL’s Jan 12 she revealed that Sam and Paine played billiards till 3:30 a.m.

Martin W. Littleton wrote regrets to Sam that he would be unable to attend the Lotos dinner [MTP]. Note: the Littletons were neighbors of Sam's at 21 Fifth Ave.

Asa K. McIlhaney wrote from Bath, Pa. to Sam. Arbor day there would be celebrated by public school students in the planting of a tree dedicated to Mark Twain—would he send a letter of encouragement to the students? [MTP].

Robert Murray wrote a fan letter to Sam from Dundee, Scotland. "I am now well up in years and you are a trifle ahead, (due largely to the fact that you started before I was ready)." He related his son had spent time in Syria and that was thrilled in Jerusalem to have touched the sword of Godfrey de Bouillon, "which was once touched by Mark Twain" [MTP].

George Wade wrote on Hotel Belmont, NYC notepaper to Sam. "I wonder if you will remember me at all? Some years ago you came & honoured us with your charming wife at luncheon. We then made an excursion to the Tower of London. You also came and saw my studio, & were appreciative of my efforts" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Jan. 14, 08"; No prior listing for Wade or the visit to the Tower of London.

Henry Watterson wrote from Louisville, Ky. to announce he would "hold forth next Friday evening at Carnegie Hall under the auspices of our great fellow-countryman, Booker T. Washington." Wouldn't Sam "make an effort and accept the seat on the stage which will be sent to you? I want to see you anyhow" [MTP].

January 12 Sunday – The New York Times, p.9, reported another event for this evening, where Mark Twain would be in attendance:

INVITED BY NORIDCA.

Mark Twain, Dr. Butler, Edison, and Sir Purdon Clarke to be Singer's Guests.

There will be a veritable herd of social lions at Sherry's to-night, when Mme. Nordica gives her musicale for more than 400 guests. She has engaged the entire second floor suite for the occasion.

Among the celebrities in various walks of life, who have accepted invitations are Mark Twain, Thomas A. Edison, Richard Watson Gilder, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Gustav Mahler, James Russel Soley, Karl Muck, Mme. Eames, Mme. Homer, Mme. Sembrich, George Munzig, Clyde Fitch, Frederick Townsend Martin, Sir Purdon Clarke, and Brander Matthews.

Society will be represented by Mrs. Styvesant Fish, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. George Jay Gould, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Orme Wilson, Mrs. Henry Clews, Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, and Mrs. I. Townsend Burden.

Isabel Lyon's journal: AB has a talent for early rising. A little note left at my door said that his train left at 7:30 and he played billiards until 3:30 this morning after he & the King came over from the Lotos Dinner. The morning the King said that they stopped playing only because he "was weak from loss of profanity."

Eulabee Dix came in & made the first sketch for the King's miniature.

Minnie Maddern Fiske said a good thing: "Most women love with their nerves."

[written on separate, undated scraps inserted at January 12, 1908]

As I may be in jail next week—would like to see him—brought a proceeding to attempt.

So Ashcroft at 3? Thursday?

"1601" author or publisher?

If Mr. Orr or his heirs would but put this letter up for sale! Perhaps it will happen [MTP: IVL TS 7].

Irving Bacheller for Camp Fire Club of America wrote from Riverside, Conn. to invite Sam to the annual ladies night [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, "I never liked an annual lady at all—I like a permanent one".

Thomas Coupe wrote to ask Sam if he was the gentleman who, on Christmas morning about 11 a.m., rode on a 42nd Street crosstown car, giving the conductor 15 cents and telling him to keep the dime for himself? Coupe was that conductor, and the rider was said later to be Mark Twain. He wanted to know so he might cherish the dime [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Jan. 17, 08”

Dorothy Quick wrote from Plainfield, N.J. to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens

Thank you so much for your letter I shall be so glad to come in next Saturday and stay until Monday don't bother about taking me to the theathre [sic] unless there is something you especially want to see and I shall be perfectly satisfied to stay home with you and play pool I hope you are well with lots of love to Miss Lyon and a hundred hugs and kisses for yourself / I am / your loving little / Dorothy [MTP:MTAq 95].

January 13 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Jan. 12 of Dorothy Quick:

You are just a dear little Dorothy, & I am ever so glad you are coming Saturday morning. We'll have a fine holiday together. I wish a person could rent you or buy you, just as he would other choice real estate, then I wouldn't let you go back any more.

Love & good-night, dear [MTP; MTAq 96].

In his A.D. of this date, Sam wrote about a follow up meeting with Elinor Glyn, whom he had met at a December private dinner at Delmonico's given by Daniel Frohman. In part:

Two or three weeks ago Elinor Glyn called on me one afternoon and we had a long talk, of a distinctly unusual character, in the library. It may be that by the time this chapter reaches print she may be less well known to the world than she is now, therefore I will insert here a word or two of information about her. She is English. She is an author. The newspapers say she is visiting America with the idea of finding just the right kind of a hero for the principal character in a romance which she is purporting to write. She has come to us upon the stormwind of a vast and sudden notoriety.

The source of this notoriety is a novel of hers called Three Weeks. ...
[Sam then summarized, in several paragraphs, the plot line and characters]

Mme. Glyn called...and she was a picture! Slender, young, faultlessly formed and incontestably beautiful—a blonde with blue eyes, the incomparable English complexion and crowned with a glory of red hair of a very peculiar, most rare and quite ravishing tint. She was clad in the choicest stuffs and in the most perfect taste. There she is, just a beautiful girl; yet she has a daughter fourteen years old. She isn't winning; she has no charm but the charm of beauty and youth and grace and intelligence and vivacity; she acts charm and does it well, exceedingly well in fact, but it does not convince, it doesn't stir the pulse, it doesn't go to the heart, it leaves the heart serene and unemotional. ...

I talked with her with daring frankness, frequently calling a spade a spade instead of coldly symbolizing it as a snow shovel; and on her side she was equally frank. It was one of the damndest conversations I have ever had with a beautiful stranger of her sex, if I do say it myself that shouldn't. She wanted my opinion of her book and I furnished it. I said its literary workmanship was excellent and that I quite agreed with her view that in the manner of the sexual relation man's statutory regulations of it were a distinct interference with a higher law, the law of Nature. ...

Of course what she wanted of me was support and defense—I knew that but I said I couldn't furnish it. I said we were the servants of convention; that we could not subsist, either in a savage or a civilized state, without conventions; that we must accept them and stand by them, even when we disapproved of them; that while the laws of Nature, that is to say the laws of God, plainly made every human being a law unto himself, we must steadfastly refuse to obey those laws, and we must as steadfastly stand by the conventions which ignore them, since the statutes furnish us peace, fairly good government and stability, and therefore are better for us than the laws of God, which would soon plunge us into confusion and disorder and anarchy if we should adopt them. I said her book was an assault upon certain old and well-established and wise conventions and that it would not find many friends, and indeed would not deserve many.

She said I was very brave, the bravest person she had ever met (gross flattery which could have beguiled me when I was very very young), and she implored me to publish these views of mine, but I said, "No, such a thing is unthinkable." ...

....

Some days afterward I met her again for a moment and she gave me the startling information that she had written down every word I had said, just as I had said it, without any softening and purifying modifications, and that it was "just splendid, just wonderful." She said she had sent it to her husband in England. Privately I didn't think that was a very good idea, and yet I believed it would interest him. She begged me to let her publish it and said it would do infinite good in the world, but I said it would damn me before my time and I didn't wish to be useful to the world on such expensive conditions [Neider 353-7].

Elinor Glyn's account of this 90-minute meeting:

He is a dear old man with a halo of white silky hair and a fresh face, and the eyes of a child which look out on life with that infinite air of wisdom one sees peeping sometimes from a young pure soul. To find such eyes in an aged face proves many things as to the hidden beauties in the character. Mark Twain was dressed in putty-coloured—almost white—broad-cloth, very soigné and attractive looking. We sat on a large divan, and he gave orders that we were not to be disturbed [Glyn 143].

Note: unless further evidence is found, the afternoon call by Elinor Glyn is placed in the last week of Dec. 1907. The private dinner by Frohman is estimated at mid-Dec. 1907. Thus, Sam's above A.D. of Jan. 13, 1908 thus allows time for both events.

Notes of Glyn's travels, appearances: Elinor Glyn came to the U.S. on Oct. 4, 1907, staying at the Wolcott Hotel. The New York Times, p. BR604 under "What Authors Are Doing" ran a squib announcing her arrival on the Cedric. The paper ran a feature article on her arrival on Oct. 6, p.X12 "Elinor Glyn Talks About Her American Critics." On Oct. 13, p. SM1, an article appeared under Glyn's byline, "How New York City Appears to Elinor Glyn." On Nov. 16, page 1 of the Times reported her in Philadelphia, commenting on the critics as idiots; her book reportedly had sold 50,000 copies during October. On Dec. 3, p.9, the Times headlined Glyn as a guest at the Bagby Musicale, guest of Mrs. Francis R. Leggett, at the Waldorf; and on Dec. 8 a feature article on fashion detailed her outfit at the Bagby Musicale. The Times further reported her appearance on Dec. 9 for the prior night's gathering of Bohemian Clubs at the Hotel Astor (p. 2; "Bohemian Clubs Hit By Blue Law"); she was quoted in the article as having written Three Weeks "in precisely six days." She was the subject of a tiff with the actress Mme. Alla Nazimova over her promise and renegeing to play in a stage version of Three Weeks [NY Times, Dec. 15, p. 1, "Mrs. Glyn Serves an Ultimatum"]. Her talk to members of the Pen and Brush Club on the afternoon of Dec. 17 was covered by the Times in a Dec. 18, p. 2 article, "Mrs. Glyn On Her Own Books." The Dec. 20 arrival in New York of Elinor Glyn's sister, Lady Duff Gordon, was mentioned in a page 1 squib, "Consult Burke's Peerage." Elinor Glyn was quoted at the Hotel Plaza. The Dec. 21 luncheon attendance and subsequent snub of Glyn by the Pilgrim Mothers was duly reported in more than one article, the first being "Pilgrim Mothers Cold to Mrs. Glyn" on p. 3, Dec. 22. A Dec. 21 tour of Chinatown by Glyn, her sister and eight others was also reported by the Times on Dec. 23, p. 9, "Lady Duff Gordon Sees Chinatown." See also the Sept. 27, 1908 interview of MT by Charles Henry Meltzer of the New York American. Elinor Glyn returned to England the last week of June, 1908, arriving in early July [Glyn 159, 163].

George M. Case, James R. Case, Earl B. Holmes, Frank Sicor, Dwight H. Wickwill, and James E. Standish wrote from Colchester, Conn. to Sam: "Dan Beard, the founder of S.D.B. wished us to write to you & tell you that we have elected you an Honorary Member of Fort Roosevelt No. 1. Will you kindly send us your signature so that we can paste it in our Constitution?" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Jan. 20, '08"

Alice H. Westovelt wrote from NYC to Sam. "Pardon a hasty line. You never came to my party & disappointed to[o] many." Could he come Sat. next, the 18th? [MTP].

Irene Fredericka Rau wrote from Boston to thank Sam for his signed photo. His Autobiography had been a “constant source of pleasure” [MTP].

January 13, after – A short time after Elinor Glyn’s visit and Sam’s A.D. of Jan. 13, he had another visitor, and added this A.D.:

Sure enough, her report came! It came several days ago, not by her hand but by the hand of another—by the hand of an American lady who is Mrs. Glyn's closest friend and most ardent admirer, a lady whom I know and like. She is young; she is beautiful; she has faultless taste in dress, and, I know she would be charming if she hadn't a hobby; but often a hobby so possesses its rider that it sucks all the juices out of the rider's personality and leaves it dry and feverish and hot-eyed and unwholesome, unspiritual, unwinning, unpersuasive, and I may even say repellent. As a rule, a person under the dominion of a hobby cannot be satisfactorily dealt with. It is the hobby-rider's conviction that his own reasonings upon his subject are the only sane ones; it is his conviction that your counter-reasonings are either insane or insincere; they make not the least impression upon him, if he even hears them, which he generally doesn't for while you are talking his mind is commonly busy with what it is going to say in reply to these reasonings which it has not been listening to—busy with what it is going to say when you make a temporary halt for breath and give it a chance to break in.

The lady had not been sent by Mrs. Glyn; she had come of her own accord, and without Mrs. Glyn's knowledge. She had studied Mrs. Glyn's report of our conversation, with Mrs. Glyn's permission, with the result that she felt it to be her duty to come and urge me to let it be published. The sense that it was her duty to do this was so commanding, so overpowering, that she was notable to resist it, but was obliged to surrender to its mastery and obey. She added that she was thoroughly convinced that it was my duty—a duty which I could not honorably avoid—to allow this conversation to be published, because of the influence it—would have upon the public for good.

I said I was sorry to be obliged to take a different view of my duty, but that such was the case. I said I was so habituated to shirking my duty that I was able now to shirk it fifty times a day without a pang; that is, that I could shirk fifty duties a day without a pang if the opportunity to do it were furnished me; that I did not get fifty opportunities a day, but that I got an average of about that many a week, and that I had noticed a peculiarity, a quite interesting peculiarity, of these opportunities—to wit, that the opportunity to do a duty was always furnished me by an outsider, it seldom originated with me; it was always furnished by some person who knew more about my duties toward the public than I did. I said I believed that if I should become the champion of every cause that was brought to my attention and shown by argument that it was my duty to take hold of it and champion it, I shouldn't ever have any time left to punch up the China missionaries or revel in any of the other duties that were of my own invention and that were occupying all the spare room in my heart. “And yet, “I said,” if you leave out the China missionaries, and King Leopold of Belgium, and the Children's Theater I am not working many duties of my own invention, but am mainly laboring at duties put upon me by other people.” I said, “I am really quite active in fussing at other people's good causes—by request. Let me show you—let me give you a list. At present my duty-mill is pretty persistently grinding in the interest of these several matters—to wit:

The Fulton Memorial Fund, which has imposed upon me two voyages to Jamestown, several appeal-letters for publication, half-a-dozen speeches and one lecture;

The movement propagated by Miss Holt for raising a large fund to be devoted to the amelioration of the condition of this State's helpless and unsupported adult blind persons;

The American movement in the interest of those Russian revolutionists whose hope is to modify the Czar and his blood-kin menagerie, and make life in Russia endurable for the common people.

However, the full list would take up too much room. Let the rest go. It is only noon now, yet between yesterday noon and the present noon I have had more opportunities of offered me in the way of assisting good causes than I could utilize, even if I should do my very best. For instance:

Speech at the impending banquet in the interest of that great society which is endeavoring to promote more intimate relations between America and France than now exist. I had to decline it;

Invitation to take a prominent part in another impending function in that same interest. I had to decline it;

Invitation to take a prominent part in still another impending function in that same interest. I had to decline it;

Invitation to attend a public meeting whose object is to obstruct the progress of Christian Science in the land. I had to decline it;

Invitation to make a speech at a public meeting whose object is to raise funds in aid of another polar expedition. I had to decline it;

That isn't the whole list—but never mind the rest. It is a sufficient indication that you have arrived late with your opportunity for me to do my duty toward the public in this matter of yours, and it will suggest to you that when a person gets so many chances, every twenty-four hours, to do good, he is bound to become callous eventually, and feel not a single responsive throb in his heart when a new chance, or a hundred of them, are offered him. You are very strongly interested in the matter which has brought you to me aren't you?"

"Yes, my heart is in it."

"Your whole heart?"

"Yes, my whole heart."

"It is the same with Mrs. Glyn, isn't it?"

"Yes, just the same."

"Both of you have been approached by people whose whole hearts were in other large causes and who wished to secure your sympathy and help in those causes—isn't it so?"

"Yes, that is true—there have been many instances."

"I don't need to ask you if you declined. I always know you did. It isn't human nature to feel a working sympathy in every good cause that is brought to one's attention, and without that warm sympathy in a person's heart he is not going to take hold of such things merely because somebody whose whole heart is in them wants him to do it. Now no part of my heart is in this matter of yours and Mrs. Glyn's, and I long ago stopped engaging my mouth in either good or bad causes where my heart was indifferent. You and Mrs. Glyn think it strange that since I have an opinion about this matter of yours I yet refuse to make that opinion public; you do think it strange, don't you?"

"Yes, we do."

"You think that if you were in my place you would consider a private opinion a public one as well, and that it was your duty to publish it, and that you could not refuse to publish it without being guilty of moral cowardice—isn't it so?"

"You have stated it in perhaps harsher terms than necessary, but substantially it is what we think."

"Don't you believe that there are often cases where you would do things in private which were without offense and yet which you would not be quite willing to do in public? For instance: you are the mother of three children."

"Yes" [MTP]. Note: the identity of the lady referred to is unknown.

January 14 Tuesday – After giving several luncheons for his close male friends earlier in the "season," Sam gave the first of his "Doe Luncheons" on this day, at the suggestion (perhaps urging) of Kate Douglas Riggs. Twelve ladies plus Twain were included in the luncheon, including Riggs, daughter Clara, Isabel Lyon, Geraldine Farrar, Henrietta Barnes Farrar (Mrs. Sidney Farrar), Mrs. Harleston Deacon, Mrs. Frank N. Doubleday, Mrs. Robert Collier, Miss Emily W. Burbank, Dorothea Gilder, Geraldine Farrar, Mrs. Farrar, Ethel Barrymore and Clara Stanchfield [Jan. 16 to Julia Olivia Langdon; MTP: IVL TS 8]. Note: Thanks to Victor Fischer for supplying some missing names.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King, Mrs. Riggs, Mrs. Deacon, Mrs. Stanchfield, Mrs. Doubleday, Mrs. Collier, Miss Burbank, Dorothy Gilder, Geraldine Farrar, Mrs. Farrar (who is impossible) Santa [Clara Clemens] & I at the 'doe luncheon' today. The King drew pictures of deer for the dinner cards" [MTP]. Note: Isabel did not mention Barrymore. Geraldine Farrar (1882-1967), soprano opera star noted for her beauty. She had a large following with younger women, who were called "Gerry-flappers."

Sam then inscribed his photograph to Kate Douglas Riggs (aka Wiggin): “To Mrs. Kate D. Riggs, with the love of / Mark Twain Jan. 14/08” [MTP: Profiles in History catalogs, No. 31, Item 165]. Note: the 8x10 photograph was of himself with a kitten, and sold on eBay by Frogtown on Feb. 5, 2010, item # 330400331578.

Sam also inscribed his photograph to another guest of the “Doe Luncheon,” Mrs. Farrar: “To Mrs. Farrar, with kind remembrances of hers very truly—/ Mark Twain / Jan. 14/08” [MTP]. Note: Farrar was included in the above “Doe Luncheon.” This photo’s inscription is sometimes seen as “1905,” but Victor Fischer reports that “the ink on the photo inscription is so faded that it looks very much like 1905 rather than 1908, but it closely matches the 1908 on the photo signed to Kate Douglas Riggs the same day.” Other photos were likely signed at this luncheon.

Winifred Holt for Assoc. for the Blind wrote to ask permission to use Sam’s name on a list of those interested in a French Fete to be held in benefit for the Assoc. [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Jan. 20, ‘08”

John Mead Howells wrote to lobby Sam for the annual dinner of the Architectural League [MTP].

Julia Langdon Loomis wrote to Sam hoping to be in NYC in three weeks and “wanting a long, satisfying gossip with you” [MTP].

Samuel E. Moffett wrote to Sam.

I called to see you to-day, but missed you, The other day I received a bunch of manuscript from Champ Clark, offered as a series of articles for Colliers. I am having it examined by the editors, but I don’t think it will be possible for Collier’s to use it, and it will be up to me to tell Clark so. Consequently it would probably have a better effect for you to write to him about the copyright bill than for me to do it. You don’t need to know anything about this manuscript, but if I wrote he might not be able to separate the two subjects in his mind. / Affectionately... [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote for Sam on the letter, “That copyright bill doesn’t need to be meddled with by me, nor by anybody else at present. Therefore I shant write to Champ Clark at this time. The Supreme Court decision may be slow, but it will not be as slow as the Copyright bill in Congress”

Carlotta Welles wrote from Paris to Sam.

My Dear Mr. Clemens:— / I was very happy to hear from you. I should certainly have written you long ago if I had thought that you cared to hear from me, but you must have so many friends, so many people to remember you affectionately, that I didn’t think you very much wanted me to tell you that I hav’nt forgotten you. I’m afraid you’re joking when you say that, anyway!

Of course I remember Frances Nunnally. We exchanged Xmas cards. If I go to College next fall we shall be in the same class—and I hope you’ll come to Bryn Mawr then, and see the whole bunch of us, the three “doangiva-dams” and Frances and me, and, incidentally, the College.

I am getting on all right now. The lake in the “bois de Boulogne” right near us, has actually frozen up so that you could skate on it and I have been improving my opportunities, so you see I’m not very sick. Yesterday they had a sort of band there and you had to pay to get in, so it was quite stylish. I paid and went in and staggered around (not to mention the tumbles) and had a good time watching the fancy skating.

I have been reading a book called “Fraulein Schmidt and Mr. Pustender” by the author of “Elizabeth & her German Garden” which I like ever so much. I hope your radishes still agree with you, and keep you in perfect health. / Very affectionately / Charley [MTP; MTAq 96-7]. Note: in her entry for Jan. 2, 1908, Miss Lyon wrote that Sam had a “big dish of radishes...every night for dinner,” to alleviate heartburn.

January 15 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Where are you, dear? At school? I suppose so, but you haven’t told me.

What I am anxious to know is, can't you steal a day or two & run up & see us? Miss Lyon & I will go down & board your train at Philadelphia & escort you up. Or, we will go all the way to Baltimore if you prefer. And gladly.

Can you come, dear? And will you? If it isn't possible to come now, will you name a date & come later? Don't say no, dear, say yes. / With love, SLC [MTP; MTAq 97].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I went around to see Charlie Boyogian today and he gave me a wonderful Persian tray" [MTP: IVL TS 8]. Note: Boyogian's was a NYC rug importer.

In the evening during billiards play, Sam felt chilled and by the next morning he was in bed with a bad cold [NY Times Jan. 20, 1908, p.9 "Mark Twain No Worse"]. Note: The "engagement" that Sam rushed to, mentioned in the article, was not identified.

Rev. Washington Gladden wrote from Columbus, Ohio to ask Sam if he still lectured or read in public because the women of his church "have it in their heads that they want to hear you, here in Columbus" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Ansd."

Joe Goodman wrote from Alameda, Calif to Sam.

I learned to-day, through a letter from Sam Davis and a conversation with Tufts, that they, unknown to me, have been pestering you in different ways with solicitations in my behalf. They meant well, beyond doubt, and I suppose I should be grateful to them; but I'm not, by a damned sight, and I don't want you to pay any attention to their requests, or anybody else's, concerning me. If I should ever wish a favor of you, I shall walk up to the captain's office myself and ask it.

It is true that I've encountered a financial typhoon—just as you have, I see. But I shall weather it through; or, if not, I will go down without a signal of distress. The thing that really worries most of my friends is that I have called upon them to repay a part, at least, of what they owe me. But Tufts is not in that list.

Hoping this may help you out of a lot of annoyance, / Yours ever ... [MTP].

N.W. Halsey of N.W. Halsey & Co. Bankers, NYC wrote to Sam. "The family cheerfully forgives you for almost anything,—including the sin of having $51,000. cash, that isn't cash in the eyes of anybody but the assessor., but when it comes to embracing a stronger-lady in broad daylight in Fifth Ave it is another matter and would seem to require a word of explanation" [MTP].

John D. Williams wrote to send to Sam, at the request of Daniel Frohman, tickets for the Criterion Theatre next Saturday matinee [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Jan. 17, '08"

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon, sending a circular by John W. Postgate for dramatizing JA [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Mr. Clemens would suggest that Miss Marbury let him make a contract for 6 months"

January 16 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Julia Langdon Loomis (1871-1948), daughter of Charles J. and Ida Clark Langdon.

Jan 16, I think.

Julie dear, it is 10:30 a.m., & time for the dictating to begin; but it wont for I am half full of whisky—& not yet finished. I have discovered a cold, & this is to break it up; for with my bronchital tendencies I dread a cold as the Presbyterian burnt child dreads perdition.

Don't worry about the appeal in behalf of the poor in the South. Miss Lyon will squelch that without placing it before me—she does the like every day, & through habit & long experience, it costs her neither time nor pangs.

(Intermission of 5 minutes for whisky) But what delights me is that your letter has come just in time! For I am thinking out another “doe-luncheon” for about Feb. 10.

No unbrilliant person is admitted to the sacred function called the “doe-luncheon.” Brightness conceded, character be damned! You are eligible, Julie dear.

Two or 3 times, this season, I have called to 21 Fifth Ave. a stag-party luncheon—Howells, Harvey, Augustus Thomas & so on—the bright lights of the sex, none others admitted. Then comes that rare bird & darling of mine, Kate Douglas Wiggin Riggs, & says reproachfully, “The brilliance, is not limited to the stags—give a doe-luncheon & you will see.”

And she was right. I summoned the does for the 14th & by God she was justified!

(Brief interval for additional whisky.) There were about 8 invitees, & not one of them failed to accept! A high compliment, nicht wahr? I was the only lady of my sex present. Ethel Barrimore [sic], & we captured Aunt Clara Stanchfield by telephone in her place, the peer of the best doe present. About the 10th of Feb, I mean to repeat, leaving out 2 or 3 of the first gang, & putting in 2 or 3 new ones in their places. I want you; & in due time Miss Lyon will notify you & we shall hope you will be able to come.

With love to you & Edward & the posterity, ...[MTP].

Dr. Edward Quintard paid a sick call on Sam and ordered him to stay in bed. Sam was suffering from a bad cold which developed into bronchitis, a chronic health problem for him, especially in winter [NY Times Jan. 20, 1908, p.9 “Mark Twain No Worse”].

In the evening Ralph W. Ashcroft came by and played hearts with Sam and Isabel Lyon until 2 or 3 a.m. [Jan. 17 to Quick; IVL entry below]:

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King says that the Almighty is looking after him a little better than usual, or else he is punishing Mrs. Broughton by giving the King a snuffly cold in his head, so that he can’t go to her reception today. The King was going to dictate, and then he decided to fill up with whiskey and stay in bed, to try to get rid of the cold in him.

(My bell rings)

The King has written brilliant letter to Mrs. Loomis under the inspiration of the whiskey and as I sat beside his bed and we discussed the inspirational qualities of whiskey he said that there is something in it that strips off the artificialities of man, and brings out the real creature. They are the cobwebs that cover our brains & hearts & they are made by the conventionalities.

But that doesn’t mean in my mind that we must strip off our conventionalities by means of whiskey. (Later) Ashcroft came to dine and for cards. We played Hearts until after 3 in the morning, and the King got drunk. He sailed around the room trying to reach the door & landing up in the corner by the Joan of Arc. He cast a gay little eye over at me in his unsteady gait, & said “I’m just practicing,” as he sailed with light footsteps over to the door & up to the bath room. Ashcroft began to spill his cards on the floor and I picked up a discard of 27 cards and tried to arrange it as my hand. So much for the whole quart of scotch they—we—drank [MTP: IVL TS 8-9; also in part, Hill 194]. Note: Hill begins at “Ashcroft came to dine,” and inserts commas, and changes many “&” marks to “and.”

H.H. Rogers wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam.

The enclosed letters will explain themselves.

Lest you do not understand, I beg to inform you that Henry Watterson evidently is going to attend the Booker T. Washington Meeting on Friday evening, and you are invited to the platform or a box. If you want my company, I will go in a box with you, provided I can wear a veil. I think, however, that Mrs. Rogers is going to ask you and Stone to dinner Friday night. If you want to go to the Washington Meeting, we can take Stone along with us and have cards at another time.

Please let me hear from you by telephone or messenger what you will do. / Yours truly...[MTHHR 643-4]. Note: See Washington’s Jan. 8 to MT and his reply shortly after.

J.H. Friedlander for Groupe Architectes Americain, NYC sent Sam a typed invite to a dinner at the University Club on Jan. 28 to honor NYC's mayor, George B. McClellan, Jr. with a medal [MTP].

Elinor Glyn wrote on Plaza Hotel, NYC notepaper to Sam.

I am sending you my report of the interview we had, so I think you will be amused to find what an accurate 'reporter' I am! Even if you feel you would rather I did not publish it, I shall always keep it in memory of a delightful afternoon with a delightful American gentleman....P.S. I wonder if you knew how charming you were that afternoon?! & if you remember what wise things you said? [MTP]. Note: TS of her "interview" in the file.

Howells & Stokes wrote to Miss Lyon about Harry Lounsbury's bill [MTP].

Eden Phillpotts wrote from Torquay, England to Sam. "Very hearty thanks for your good letter. Now that you have granted my suit I am violently impressed with the inadequacy of the offering. / Yet you, who have written of the human boy as nobody else has, will not object to extend your friendship to my little company. / The book will appear anon & a copy shall reach you at the earliest moment. / Meantime receive the dedication; & if there is so much as a syllable that does not please you, order its alteration ...[MTP]. Note: enclosed the title page and dedication to Mark Twain of The Human Boy Again by Phillpotts (1908); see Gribben 544.

January 17 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Julia Langdon Loomis.

Julie dear, I wrote you a day or 2 ago, but I don't remember what I said because I was sober at the time. But this not is to say—to-wit:

The next Doe-Luncheon will happen at the above address on Tuesday, Feb. 11 at 1 p.m.

You are hereby invited. Don't fail to come, dear.

[in left margin]

Not one declined before! [MTP].

Sam also wrote to the Other Depositors of the Knickerbocker Trust Co.

To the Other Depositors.

The time is very short. It expires to-morrow. Mr. Grover Cleveland, a depositor, has approved the Satterlee plan for resumption, & it seems to me that that ought to satisfy every depositor that that plan is safe & wise. If we accept it we shall lose no part of our money; if we do not accept it the Knickerbocker will be delivered over to a permanent receivership. I have already tried a permanent receivership once, & did not like the results. It costs more to keep a permanent receiver than it does to keep a harem. Anybody who has had experience in these matters will endorse this statement. In the long run—in the very long run—we got some of our money, but not enough of it to keep a harem with. All the depositors said so, & were disappointed, & there was much regret. If we accept the Satterlee plan, & do it immediately, it will be well for us; if we refuse, we invite & insure a shrinkage which the patients will not find enjoyable. I have not been invited to say those things, still it has seemed worth while to say them. / Very respectfully / Mark Twain[MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J.

Oh you dear child, I am so sorry for you, and also so sorry for myself! It is such a disappointment. I have been sick abed with a cold all day, but I was resolved to be up & dressed & ready for you tomorrow morning. We've got a box for a matinée tomorrow, and—well, we've got to bear these disappointments, so I may as well get at it; it's the best way & the only way.

Dear heart you must come next Saturday, if you are perfectly well & strong by that time; but if you aren't, we'll put it off still another week.

Ashcroft was here last night, & we played hearts till two or three hours after midnight—with the beautiful cards you gave me. I captured all their chips, & more besides.

With lots & lots of love, / SLC [MTP; MTAq 97-8].

Sam also sent Kate Douglas Wiggin (aka Riggs) an invitation for the next “Doe Luncheon” on Feb. 11 at 1 p.m. “Please don’t fail to come” [MTP].

Sam did not attend the Booker T. Washington Meeting to sit on the platform as invited by Washington on Jan. 8. As recently as Jan. 16, H.H. Rogers asked if Sam was going would he like to share a box. Ralph Ashcroft came again to Stormfield to play billiards with Clemens.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: All day the King was in bed but the whiskey had helped the cold and he is better. Mrs. Toy came in at 5:15 to talk with the King about the children’s theatre, which has been closed on Sundays by the Blue Laws, & then Paine came in for dinner & billiards. Billiard! I watched the game until 11. Early the King began to feel chilly in his little white silk coat, & I got a white serge coat for him, & at 11 I came up stairs to go to bed and read D. Deronda until sleep came. At 2:30 I wakened to hear the billiard bang and went down to find the King playing in a drunken haze. He was trying to drown out the chill, and couldn’t move without reeling. It was a great thing to see. P. was furious with me & told me to clear out, but I sat down & said I’d stay until the King started for bed. P. didn’t like me—but I didn’t care. It was wonderful to see the King pick up a ball and fondle it, & then try to hit it with his cue & be unable to touch it; but he swore splendidly. AB left the room & I gently took the King’s cue away & led him up to his room. He staggered & hit his head against one of the little angels on his bed post, & grabbed his dear head with a volley of oaths. Then I left the room but waited to hear his shoes drop [MTP: IVL TS 9-10]. Note: Hill quotes part of this (with his own edits).

Edith Anderson Logan wrote from NYC to Sam. “Will you do me the honour to dine with me on Thursday Evening January 23rd at Eight o’clock? / General & Mrs. F.D. Grant are to be with me & it would add greatly to our pleasure if you would...” [MTP].

Emma Gertrude Quick sent a telegram to Sam. “Dorothy sick with bad cold sorry cannot come this week / Mrs Quick” [MTP].

January 18 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “King is really ill today” [MTP: IVL TS 10]. Note: bronchitis.

In the afternoon Edmund Clarence Stedman (1833-1908) died of a heart attack in his NYC apartment. He was 74 [NY Times Jan 19, 1908, p. 1, “E.C. Stedman Dies of Heart Disease.”]

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to a reporter from the N.Y. Times, who solicited his response to the news of Stedman’s death. Sam’s dictated response ran in the Jan. 19 paper.

MARK TWAIN STUNNED.

His Loss Unfits Me to Speak, He Says—Mr. Gilder Mourns Him.

Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) dictated the following last night from a sick bed, to which he has been confined with a heavy cold since last Thursday, on learning of the death of Mr. [Edmund Clarence] Stedman:

“I do not wish to talk about it. He was a valued friend from days that date back thirty-five years, His loss stuns me and unfits me to speak.”

Asked by a TIMES reporter for a tribute to his dead friend, Richard Watson Gilder said:

“Mr. Stedman was for a lifetime like an elder brother to me, and it is difficult to respond to your request for a work about him to-night. As poet, critic, leader in all matters pertaining to the interests and honor of literature, and as a helpful, loyal and generous friend of men of letters, his position was unique. He will be greatly missed and widely mourned [MTP]. Note: in Sam’s dictated draft he struck out after the above sentences, “~~I’m sick myself~~”, evidently thinking the line was unseemly.

D. Hoffman writes of Stedman’s death and of the two men’s respective opinions of each other:

In dictating more of his autobiography on the following July 3, he said Stedman was a good fellow but “believed that the sun merely rose to admire his poetry & was so reluctant to set at the end of the day & lose sight of it, that it lingered & lingered & lost many minutes diurnally & was never able to keep correct time during his stay in the earth.” Stedman, in turn, had complained twenty years earlier that so far as an author making a decent income, “not every one can be, like Mr. Clemens, his own Harper & Brothers, and his own Edwin Booth” [88].

Sam also sent a telegram and an inscribed photograph of himself with a note to Dorothy Quick.

To Miss Dorothy Quick
You are ill in bed so am I. With Bronchitis. But I am sending you a very nice picture. / SL Clemens [MTP; MTAq 98]. Note: on the photograph, Sam inscribed: I think this is the best of the Tuxedo pictures save one, Dorothy dear. Mrs.Ogden made it. I have the bronchitis, & am barking at you affectionately.

Sam also wrote to an unidentified person, referring to the Jan. 18 death of Edmund Clarence Stedman: “I am grieved to the heart, for we were close friends for more than a generation. Lord grant me his good fortune: to slip suddenly out of the tragedy of life unwarned!” [MTP].

Harper’s Weekly, p. 13 ran a full page photograph and short anonymous article about the Dec. 28, 1907 luncheon at Lakewood, N.J., “Four Distinguished Americans. From a Photograph Taken at Lakewood, N.J. , Where a Luncheon was Given to Mr. Howells to Bid Him Godspeed on his Journey to Europe.” Tenney: “Full-page photograph of Howells, MT, Henry M. Alden, and Mayo W. Hazeltine” [45].

Frederick S. Dellenbaugh wrote from NYC to invite Sam to a dinner given by the Author’s Club on Feb. 11 in favor of Andrew Carnegie [MTP]. Note: on the letter, “Ans Jan 19, Inst H” (likely Josephine Hobby)

Julia Langdon Loomis wrote to Sam. “Well, dear Uncle Sam, I can without embellishment say that I could swear or cry, that it is impossible for me to go to you February eleventh” [MTP].

Frances Nunnally wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens,— / That certainly is a lovely invitation you have given me, and I only wish I could say “yes”. Miss Carter never allows us girls to go away from the school, so I can’t possibly come to see you, though I surely wish I could. As I cannot persuade Miss Carter to let me come, I wish you would come down to Baltimore so I could see you. I know you don’t like traveling on the train, but if you should come to Washington or any where in this direction, do stop by here.

I came back to school on the ninth after a perfectly fine holiday at home. I had had such a lovely time and I did not want to come back to work a bit. I might as well get used to it, though, as I will have to study hard now until Easter, when we have about a week or ten days holiday.

I would give anything if I could come up to see you some time soon, but as I can’t, I hope I will see you down here. / I am / With Love, / Francesca [MTP; MTAq 98-9].

Clyde Potts wrote from Morristown, N.J. to Sam. “Dear Sir: / Have just finished my first reading of ‘The Jumping Frog.’ I bought the copy at one dollar net. I consider that I beat you on the deal and enclose herewith my ck for fifty cents. / Respy / Clyde Potts” [MTP]. Note: likely a ploy to gain a signature from Sam’s endorsement. Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Feb. 5, 08”

January 19 Sunday – In the morning Dr. Edward Quintard checked on Sam’s condition again, noting that he was “no worse” [NY Times Jan. 20, 1908, p.9 “Mark Twain No Worse”].

The New York Times, Jan. 18, 1908, ran a squib under “City Brevities” p.9:

Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) and Supreme Court Justice Greenbaum will address the annual meeting of the Hebrew Technical School for Girls to-morrow morning at 10:30 o’clock [Jan. 19] in the school building at Fifteenth Street and Second Avenue [Note: Sam was in bed with bronchitis and did not make this event. He sent a letter, not extant, to the group, expressing his regrets for not being present –New York Times, Jan 20, p.6 “Praises Teaching of Girls to Cook.” [Note: Samuel Greenbaum (1854-1930), was appointed to the NY Supreme Court in 1901 and served until 1923.]

The New York Times ran an article which included Mark Twain’s Jan. 17 letter to “Other Depositors of the Knickerbocker Trust Co.”

THE KNICKERBOCKER GETS 2 WEEKS MORE
Additional Assents to Satterlee Resumption Plan Coming in Rapidly.
MARK TWAIN’S WARNING

Tells Fellow-Depositors Who Are Holding Back to Hurry Back, as Does Justice Clarke Also.

Cheering news for depositors in the failed Knickerbocker Trust Company came from more than one quarter yesterday. At the hearing before Justice Clarke on Staten Island yesterday the announcement was made that $34,600,000 of deposits have already assented to the rehabilitation plan of the Parsons-Satterlee committee and that the present Directors had finally sent in their resignations, making possible the immediate consideration by the Voting Trustees of the long list of new Directors and officers tentatively selected by the committee. Justice Clarke granted a further extension of two weeks in which to get full assents to the resumption. Later a cheerful appeal, and at the same time a warning, from Mark Twain to the backward depositors was made public by Attorney Herbert L. Satterlee, counsel to the depositors’ committee.

Mark Twain, who has something like $50,000 tied up in the company, has already sent in his assent to the plan. He is afraid that enough of the others will stay out to hold up the reorganization and leave the company to the mercies of a permanent receivership, which he says would be more expensive than a harem. His letter read: [See Jan. 17 for letter].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: A long crazy heedless kind of day as far as I’m concerned, but full of the goodness of life where the King is concerned. Mrs. Mother Hapgood came in & talked a good deal about Mrs. Clemens & poor Jean, & the way she was criticised in Dublin when no one knew of her incriminating malady. I was terribly tired. The King slept a lot. Mrs. Littleton telephoned over to say they were sending some extra large oysters from the Manhattan Club for the King for his dinner, and when I asked him if they were good, he said, “No, they looked and tasted like a foetus.” Dear wonderful original King [MTP: IVL TS 10-11].

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam. “I received your telegram yesterday I am so sorry you are sick too, did you have to miss the matinee too. I hope I can come next Saturday” [MTP; not in MTAq].

January 19 Sunday ca. – Kate Douglas Riggs (aka Wiggin) wrote to Sam, heading the note, “Acceptance to Mark Twain’s Doe-Luncheon No 2 / February 11th 1908 / Air: ‘Believe me if all those endearing young charms!’” and drawing a musical scale, followed by 8 lines of poetry, followed by this note: “N.B. A lady who is invited to, and attends, a Doe Luncheon, is of course, a Doe! The question is, if she attends two doe-luncheons in succession is she a doe-doe? If so she is extinct—and can never be asked to a third” [MTP].

January 20 Monday – The New York Times, p. 9 reported on Sam’s health, as “No Worse”:

MARK TWAIN NO WORSE

But Still In Bed Nursing His Cold—To Go to Bermuda Soon.

There was at least one sore man in the city yesterday, and he was sore in two places at once—in his chest and in his mind. The man was Samuel L. Clemens, whom almost everybody knows best as “Mark Twain.”

At this time last year he was enjoying the sun in Bermuda. To-day his is miserable and in his bed at his home, 21 Fifth Avenue, with a bad cold. If only he had gone to Bermuda, as he did last year at the beginning of January, he and Miss Lyon, his secretary, are certain that all would have been well with him. However, just as soon as he is able, the first steamer cannot take him to the West Indies too fast for Mr. Clemens’s liking.

It was on Wednesday that Mr. Clemens contracted his chill. In hurrying to keep an engagement he got very warm, and then he cooled off too quickly. Nothing more was thought of it until Friday evening, when, dressed in a thick white china silk suit, he was playing billiards at home and complained of feeling cold. He changed into another white jacket of thicker texture and continued playing, and before going to bed had a strong “hot Scotch,” but he slept badly and the next morning there wasn’t any doubt about his having a cold.

They gave him a mustard bath and Dr. Edward Quintard was summoned. He ordered Mr. Clemens to stay in bed, and that’s where he is now.

Yesterday morning the doctor said that Mr. Clemens was not any worse, but at 72 one cannot be too careful. By careful nursing it is hoped that an attack of bronchitis may be staved off.

Mr. Clemens is still keeping up his friendship with little Miss Dorothy Quick, daughter of Mrs. E.G. Quick of Brooklyn, whom he met on board ship last July while returning from England. Since his return Miss Quick has twice visited with him at Tuxedo, and is often a caller at his Fifth Avenue home.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Henry Watterson called to see his kinsman, the King” [MTP: IVL TS 11].

Robert Underwood Johnson for American Copyright League wrote to Sam respectfully requesting him to be “one of the representatives of the Council at the funeral of Edmund Clarence Stedman at the Church of the Messiah, Jan. 21 at 3:45” [MTP].

Rossiter Lines wrote to Sam, pasting a newspaper clipping from the Milwaukee Free Press, “Mark Twain Ill at Home.” The clipping ended with: “Dr. Quintard, his physician, said tonight that he apprehended no serious results,” to which Lines quipped that at least the bronchitis had not made Sam serious [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Jan. 23, ‘08”

George Lockitt wrote from Queensland, Australia to ask for Sam’s autograph in a letter [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Feb. 21, ‘08” and “Too busy to write letters”

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon that she was sending John W. Postgate’s scenario and felt Lyon should read this before deciding to give him a 6 mos. option [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Returned the scenario”

Marion Peak Mason (Mrs. George Grant Mason) wrote from NYC to Sam. “When my two children came down to breakfast this morning they brought the inclosed and announced that it was for ‘Mark Twain.’ So at their solicitations I am sending it to you.” She hoped it would provide “an immediate cure” for him [MTP].

Polly Porter wrote to Miss Lyon enclosing a report from her father of the Oxford ceremonies [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Jan. 20, ‘08”; See earlier letter of Polly’s under 1908 entries.

Frank P. Stockbridge for the NY Herald wrote to Sam. He'd called this day but was told Sam was too sick to see him. He wanted "a few words" on vivisection as there was "a good deal of agitation over the matter just now" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Mr. Clemens not able to see anybody before sailing for Bermuda"

January 21 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Francesca dear

I wish you were here

And had 2 weeks to spare. Then I would pack you & Miss Lyon aboard ship & sail for Bermuda Saturday. Now you see what you are robbing her of—& she needs that trip very much. I shall take nobody but Ashcroft—yet he hasn't any use for a voyage.

You are going to spend those ten Easter days here, aren't you, dear? We'll come to Catonville & fetch you.

Two hours ago I didn't know I was going to Bermuda—and I can't swear to it now. But Ashcroft has secured the staterooms, & I fully expect to be out of bed by Saturday.

Good-bye, dear. With love. ... [MTP; MTAq 99].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Tuesday evening

Dorothy dear, tell your mother that the wisest way for her to spend money on your health will be to take you to Bermuda for a week or a fortnight; & you must tell her that the best TIME is next Saturday. (That is because I am going, then, & so is Ashcroft.) It's the big ship (the "Bermudian"). She makes the passage across in 45 hours.

In Bermuda a sick person gets well in 3 days, & strong in a week. I expect to be gone from New York till Feb. 11, but I may be back earlier. I tried the trip twice last year, & I know—the change made me well in 3 days.

The doctors say I shall be well enough by Saturday to sail—so Mr. Ashcroft has secured the staterooms.

I hope you are well by this time, dear. You only need the Bermuda air to make you weller than ever you were in your life before.

With lots of love ...

[MTP; MTAq 99-100]. Note: D. Hoffman writes that Sam had tried to interest Robert Collier and wife to join him on the Jan. 25 excursion to Bermuda, but "reverted" to Ashcroft [88].

Sam also wrote to Joe Twichell.

Dear Joe:

Miss Lyon told me the contents of Sam Davis's first letter, & I told her to pay no attention to it, he being a mere—VERY mere—acquaintance of mine, & his venturing to pass the hat to me on behalf of the oldest & proudest friend I've got in the world is damned impertinence, & properly an insult to both you & me. I said Davis was all ass; that there was nothing to him BUT ass; & that whenever he does a thing it is because he has an axe to grind; not for gain, but the mere axe of a busybody, a meddler seeking to advertise himself & seem to be on familiar terms with people who care not a godam about him.

When your letter came, a minute ago, Miss Lyon explained that there had been another letter from Davis on this matter, but none from Tufts. She or Paine answered Davis's letter—without my permission, (which would not have been granted.)

I am in bed bronchially & struggling with two doctors, but in 3 days I expect to be up & at sea—for Bermuda. I hardly know what I am writing, because my head is dizzy with drugs. My hand, too; but there's nothing trembly about yours.

With love / Mark [MTP].

Note: Samuel Post Davis (1850-1918); Davis' tale, "The First Piano in Camp" appeared in Mark Twain's Library of Humor (1888) [Gribben 179]. Davis was considered one of the talented writers in the "Sagebrush School” of literature. A journalist all over the west he arrived in Virginia City in 1875, some eleven years after Mark Twain left. Davis also wrote poetry and sketches, including “The Typographical Howitzer,” a witty tale in the tradition of Twain. Perhaps his major achievement was the 1913 publication of History of Nevada in two volumes. Joe Goodman had written about Davis to Twain a few times (see Vol. I), but exactly when or if Twain ever met Davis is not clear. See the following readings for more on Davis:

Berkove, Lawrence I. Samuel Post Davis in Nineteenth-Century American Fiction Writers, Vol. 202 of the Dictionary of Literary Biography. Detroit: Gale Research, 1999.
 ———, ed. Insider Stories of the Comstock Lode and Nevada's Mining Frontier, 1859-1909. Lewiston, NY: The Edwin Mellen Press, 2007.
 ———, ed. The Sagebrush Anthology. Columbia: University of Missouri Press, 2006.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The King is going to Bermuda. / Wandering Jew. A psychic day. Howells letters” [MTP: IVL TS 11].

Thomas Hastings for the Architectural League wrote to Sam, enclosing an engraved invite to the annual dinner on Jan. 31, and mentioning John Mead Howells’ urging of Sam to attend [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Jan. 27, ‘08”

Jervis Langdon II wrote from Elmira to announce to Sam that the organ at St. James Church, NYC will be “practically finished the latter part of this week.” He’d read Sam was ill and going to Bermuda—would it be possible for Sam to go and hear the organ before he left? And, if he liked it would he help plot to get Andrew “Carnegie to hear it as we have already talked of doing”? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “As soon as Mr. Clemens comes back from Bermuda we’ll arrange for Mr. Carnegie to go & hear it when I go”

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens / Thank you so much for our picture it is lovely and I am glad to have it I hope your cold is better now I am better but have not been to school yet the doctor is giving me a tonic and in another week I expect to be all right Mother say she dont think I will be able to come this Saturday but I hope surely the Saturday after I can come if you want me with much love to Miss Lyon and lots and lots and lots for you I am your loving little / Dot [MTP; MTAq 100]. Note: Dorothy hadn’t quite mastered the period, but did (sometimes) put several spaces between her sentences.

January 22 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Andrew Carnegie.

Dear St. Andrew:

I have had to decline this mission a couple of times in the past year or two, & the most I can do now is to forward the letter—which I do, & leave it to take its chances.

That whisky came very handy. I had a very wild & exasperating cold, but a pint of the whisky tamed it in 3 minutes by the watch & I did not wake up again for ten hours.

I shall be out of bed tomorrow, I think, & I’ll break straightway for Bermuda [MTP].

Sam also wrote to William Dean Howells.

I find that Sam Moffett has been lending old letters of mine to Mr. Paine without first submitting them to me for approval or the reverse, so I’ve stopped it. I don’t like to have those privacies exposed in such a way to even my biographer. If Paine should apply to you for letters, please don’t comply. I must warn Twichell, too. A man should be dead before his private foolishnesses are risked in print.

I’m sick abed, these days, but shall be out & off for Bermuda Saturday.

Yours ever— / Mark

[MTP; MTHL 2: 828]. Note: Moffett at this time was on the staff of Collier’s. See Howells’ reply Feb. 4.

Isabel Lyon's journal: I am loving life very much. The King got up this afternoon & dined downstairs. He talked wonderfully about astronomy, a favorite topic, & then about morals, the moral quality, intellect, & temperament. I got mixed up in my mind of course.

Mr. Moffett came today & told me when I said the King was distressed to know that Paine had copied quantities of the King's early letters, that Paine gave him to understand that it was the King's particular wish that he should have them. The King said last night that the next thing Paine would be getting letters from Howells, and he proceeded to write to Mr. Howells asking him not to comply. When the King spoke of the Howells letters my heart stood still, for my anxiety had projected itself into his mind and he said the thing he should have said.

[undated pieces of notepaper inserted at January 22] Note: this appears to be draft of a letter to Albert Bigelow Paine. It may or may not have been sent. Isabel identifies the day as "Friday," which is likely Jan. 24, since Clemens left for Bermuda on Jan. 25.

The King has been talking about the volume of letters that Clara is going to compile, & asking for some old letters. I went up to the trunk tray that was in your room & found that some of the letters are gone. Have you taken them? & some of the Orion ms. too. If you haven't got them, then I'm terribly worried. I'm worried anyway. I should not have left them there. I wanted to speak about the matter to Mrs. Paine over the telephone this morning, but someone was listening. I know just about what was in that trunk tray, & now it seems to me that I saw you going down the hall with a bundle of letters, but I felt you wouldn't take any without telling me. I am becoming extraordinarily psychic lately. It must be that yogi philosophy, for within the last week several unusual things have happened. I see things—when I was making that call to Redding, & by the way I tried for an hour to get you, & central kept saying that it was a party-line & some one was talking. 3 times she rang me up to say "They're still talking." So you can see how impossible it would be for the King to be on a party line. But as I was saying, when I called for long distance, & you, I suddenly saw Mrs. Paine standing at the telephone, so I corrected Central telling her to be sure & call for Mrs. Paine too. I was absolutely certain that you wouldn't answer it. I have been pretty anxious over the King (& other matters too.) & have tried to have some one to cheer him, for he seems depressed & lonely. Terribly lonely. He got up at 10:30 yesterday (It is 5 o'clock Friday morning) & began billiarding, longing for a companion. I tried to get one, but of course everyone was busy & it made me so sick to hear him say that the Almighty was particularly attentive to him, denying him even billiards. I shall go to bed for a couple of days after the King goes, for I think I must be a little exhausted. I have taken sole care of the King which means an hourly attention from 8 a.m. until 12 midnight, in order to rout out a very tenacious germ, but we routed it. There is to be a Doe party, Feb 11th. I think life is very wonderful & extravagant in its interests. The King & CC are perfect companions for me, but when the King goes I shall be like a lonely grey smoke-woman. Can I endure it for 12 days. I'm so glad Ashcroft could take him, for he needs the change badly. / Sincerely IVL. / Please tell me 'bout the letters. I've just been thinking that perhaps I put those letters elsewhere. I'll look today.

[The journal continues for Jan. 22:]

Heavy snow over this beautiful wonderful world. The King is becoming very much interested in the house & C.C. is too. Oh very much. I'm another woman now & my new name is Madame Naud [MTP: IVL TS 11-14].

Edward John Bing wrote from Budapest, Hungary to ask Sam for his autograph [MTP].

Frances Nunnally wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens,—

I surely do wish I could go to Bermuda for I cannot imagine anything nicer, and I should love to have a holiday like that with you. It certainly is lovely of you to ask me to spend my Easter vacation with you, and there is nothing I should like better, but I cannot promise anything now, as I don't know what Mother has planned for me.

I only have a very few minutes before I shall have to go to bed, but I just wanted to write you a line to wish you the very best of trips. So hoping you will enjoy your two-weeks voyage very much, I am / With love / Francesca [MTP; MTAq 101].

January 22-25? Saturday – In N.Y.C. Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Capt. Frazier.

Dear Capt Frazier

By Mr. Clemens's direction I write to say that Mr. Chas J. Langdon is his brother in law, & he hopes that you will arrange the weather in such a way as to make it as pleasant for Mr. Langdon as possible, & when the opportunity offers, Mr. Clemens will be glad to reciprocate in kind [MTP].

January 23 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote his aphorism about honors, deserved and not deserved, to Miss Eulabee Dix [MTP]. Note: Eulabee Dix (1878-1961), American artist who painted watercolors on ivory for miniature works of art. Born in Illinois, Dix moved to NYC in 1899 and studied under various artists. She did commissions for well known persons, including Ethel Barrymore. In 1908 Dix did the last painting of Mark Twain from real life. Note the Oxford gown in insert of miniature: It is now in the National Portrait Gallery at the Smithsonian Institute. In Looking for Eulabee Dix by Jo Ann Ridley, Twain is quoted as saying he had only previously sat for one miniature portrait in Italy.

Sam also wrote to Marcella Sembrich:

Dear Madame Sembrich:

Eight or ten ladies will assemble at tables at the above address at 1 p.m. February 11

to partake of what Mrs. Kate Douglas Riggs calls my “doe luncheon,” & which I call my “dear-luncheon.” I am the only animal of my sex present on these solemn occasions. And I am in command: Clara is only a subordinate.

Will you do me the honor to come? I hope you will. / Sincerely yours [MTP].

The New York Times, p. 4, “Pilgrims to Dine Reid” announced a dinner in honor of Ambassador to England Whitelaw Reid to be held sometime in February. Mark Twain was noted as having agreed to speak at the dinner.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Englishman. / The Bermuda tickets have come, & Ashcroft is to take the King. He will be away 12 days. Mother must come back to me.

Today I telephoned out to Redding telling AB that the King is going to Bermuda & that he needn't come down. Somehow all my confidence is gone, & I do not greatly want to see him. My anxiety over the Howells letters incident seems almost to be making me ill. My philosophy is gone.

We had a glorious snow storm last night. & Today the King has spent a good deal of time at the windows, for he loves to watch the snow & its affects.

I played tonight to the King, his favorites, Chopin Nocturn Op 37 [.] No. 2 Schuberts Impromptu.

The adagio movement of Beethoven Sonata Pathetique, the Lohengrin Wedding March, and then he went gently up to his room, with a green woolen afghan falling from his shoulders. ~~I found my heart & soul flooding over with the tears that have been moving too heavy for me all day~~ [MTP: IVL TS 14].

Emily W. Burbank wrote from NYC to express her joy at being summoned to the Doe Luncheon [MTP].

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon that she rec'd her letter and would inform John W. Postgate to go ahead and try to make a play out of JA [MTP].

Edmund Stedman's female cousin (unnamed) wrote to Sam relating the last moments of Stedman's life, realizing "what an irreparable loss you feel in his sudden 'going home'" [MTP]. Note: Stedman was not one of Sam's favorites and this editor speculates the loss was not quite irreparable.

Martha Thompson wrote from Bonaire, Houston Co. Ga., to ask Sam if she could write to him again for advice [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Jan. 28, '08"

January 24 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Jan. 16 from Elinor Sutherlin Glyn. The letter below was Sam's protest of the publication by Glyn of a pamphlet (Mark Twain on Three Weeks) which included a purported verbatim account of a conversation between the two discussing Glyn's novel, Three Weeks (1907), which had shocked sensibilities (and gained many sales) for its unabashed account of an adulterous relationship.

Dear Mrs. Glyn—it reads pretty poorly. I get the sense of it, but it is a poor literary job. However, it would have to be that because nobody can be reported even approximately except by a stenographer. Approximations, synopsisd speeches, translated poems, artificial flowers and chromos all have a sort of value, but it is small. If you had put upon paper what I really said it would have wrecked your type machine.

I said some fetid and over-vigorous things, but that was because it was a confidential conversation. I said nothing for print. My own report of the same conversation reads like Satan roasting a Sunday school. It, and certain other readable chapters of my autobiography, will not be published until all the Clemens family are dead—dead and correspondingly indifferent. They were written to entertain me, not the rest of the world. I am not here to do good—at last, not to do it intentionally. You must pardon me for dictating this letter; I am still sick a-bed and not feeling as well as I might. / Sincerely yours / S.L. Clemens [MTP].

Notes: Glyn's pamphlet is dated as 1908; it would have predated this letter by at least a few days. See also Dec. 1907 entry and others on Glyn; Gribben 262; Scharnhorst 673-4, quotes the N.Y. American for Sept. 27, 1908, sec.2, p.1 (see Sept 27 entry for this short interview). Glyn would coin the term the "It Girl" for Clara Bow in 1927.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Headache. Such a busy day, planning for the King's departure, looking after him to see that he does not get into drafts when he stands at the leaky loose windows to watch the snow & the children & the dogs & things frolicking in the beautiful white storm. Ashcroft came after dinner & while Mrs. Littleton was here to say goodbye to the King & to bring him a great basket of pears I slipped away to talk with Ashcroft about the letters episode, & he approved of my method of procedure with Mr. Howells for I wrote him of the fact that the King is quite unaware that Paine sent for the letters. / ~~Ashcroft is so good—~~ [MTP: IVL TS 15]. Note: See Lyon's journal for Jan. 22 which included a letter to Albert Bigelow Paine written this day about the letters taken.

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon, again about John W. Postgate's efforts to dramatize JA [MTP]. Note: Marbury wrote many notes to Lyon or Clemens on every detail with regard to dramatizing Twain's works.

F.J. Neil wrote to Sam, at least the second reader to catch that in his Autobiography he wrote he paid Horace Bixby $100 while in LM paid him $500. "There is yet time to repair the wrong & so save your reputation to future generations" [MTP]. Note: Was miscatalogued as "F.J. Weil." Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Jan. 28, 1908" and "Mr Clemens does not carry these small details in his mind. And the probabilities are that the statement in Life on the Miss is the correct one"

Dorothy Quick wrote from Plainfield, NJ to Sam on the SS Bermudian. “I am so glad you are over your cold and able to go away....I have a new book called Ozma of Oz by L. Frank Baum it is awfully nice, and awfully funny I am going to send this to the steamer for I am afraid you wont get it otherwise” Dorothy hoped to go to Bermuda in the spring [MTP].

Marcella Sembrich wrote to Sam, sorry she could not attend the Doe Luncheon on Feb. 11 due to a singing performance in Syracuse that day [MTP].

Stephen Terry wrote from Surbiton, Herefordshire to thank Sam for “Soldier Boy” and to ask him to read his articles in The Animal World for “April to Sept last year, which I am sending for your kind acceptance.” He wished he’d met Sam at the Savage Club in London [MTP].

Harry P. Wood left Sam his calling card: “With earnest wishes for your early and full recovery.” He also wrote a full letter from Washington, DC that when in NY he’d left photos and pamphlets describing Hawaii—a place he felt would bring Sam back to good health” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Jan. 27, ‘08”

January 25 Saturday – Sam left for Bermuda on the Bermudian. The New York Times, Jan. 26, p. 4 noted his departure and added:

“Mr. Clemens has been ill at his home for some days, and when he arrived at the vessel went direct to his stateroom and did not emerge while the vessel was at her pier. He was ordered south by his physician because of an attack of laryngitis.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King left at 8 this morning in Margaret Frohman’s beautiful big motor car. Yesterday when she telephoned that she wanted to send it & I told the King, he was very glad, because he’d been wanting to go to the boat in mobile. He has been very beautiful these 2 or 3 days past, deintalized by his illness. At 7:30 I found him up & dressed in front of the fire in his room. I dropped on my knees beside him & he chatted for a moment, saying he hadn’t slept very well. Then came his breakfast, then his departure, & then the empty house. All day I’ve been on my couch, this afternoon going to bed, faint with anxiety, exhaustion, & loneliness. Santa had a wireless to say that the weather is good, sun shining & that there is what appears to be a good ships’ company [MTP: IVL TS 15-16].

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon asking her to have Sam sign the enclosed contract with John W. Postgate (not in file) [MTP].

January 26 Sunday – After traversing stormy seas, the Bermudian docked in Hamilton Harbor, Bermuda in the morning [D. Hoffman 89]. Note: The passage took 45 hours; Sam left shortly after a ten-inch snowstorm in NYC [A.D. of Feb. 12].

Woodrow Wilson, at that time President of Princeton, arrived in Bermuda on Jan. 20, and wrote his wife, Ellen Axson Wilson on Jan. 26:

Now I am cut out by Mark Twain! He arrived on the boat this morning, and Mrs. Peck at once took possession of him. They are old friends. Indeed, she seems to know everybody that is worth knowing. She has been coming down here a great many winters, and everybody turns up here sooner or later, it would seem. I have not yet found out where Mr. Clemons [sic] is staying. I hoped he was coming to the Hamilton, but he went off in the other direction. I did not get a chance to speak to him, and do not now whether he would remember me or not [D. Hoffman 95]. Note: Mary Allen Hulbert Peck (Mrs. Hulbert). Of course Clemens would have remembered attending Wilson’s inauguration as Princeton’s President on Oct. 25, 1902, and possibly Wilson’s honorary degree at Yale’s Bicentennial on Oct. 23, 1901.

Wilson later became the subject of rumors about Mrs. Peck, with whom it seems evident that he had a brief extra-marital affair. Mrs. Peck's Bermuda residence was a sort of social hub for luminaries who visited the islands. Theodore Roosevelt, in a political battle with Wilson, refused to use the scandal or to question Wilson's morals. Roosevelt said that using such rumors wouldn't work—"You can't cast a man as Romeo who looks and acts so much like the apothecary's clerk." [Edith and Woodrow: The Wilson White House, by Phyllis Lee Levin (2001), p. 131].

D. Hoffman writes of the habit of children at the hotel to leave for the harbor whenever a cruise ship was docking, and quotes from Elizabeth Wallace's memoir, Mark Twain and the Happy Island.

The road to the hotel wound upward, and on either side of it palmettos rustled noisily beside still and somber cedars.

Out from under their shadows stepped a gray figure with a crown of glistening white hair. He walked lightly and looked about him with an air of interested and unconscious expectancy. As he came nearer the hotel veranda we recognized the shaggy eyebrows, the delicately arched nose, the drooping moustache...

As a usual thing Margaret [Blackmer] and I felt but a languid interest in the passengers who came, for they did not invade our world. But on the morning that Mark Twain arrived, we felt an unusual thrill...

Margaret's table was not far from ours, and that day she was sitting alone. Presently Mark Twain came in, and as he reached her table he stopped and spoke to her. He not only spoke to her, but had a conversation with her. I knew, then, that he had recognized her as one of the choice souls of the earth [90-1]. Note: Margaret Gray Blackmer (1897-1987), "a lovely looking child of twelve," was traveling with her invalid mother. She would become an Angelfish in Sam's collection. Wallace was a professor of French literature and dean at the University of Chicago [89]. See Jan. 27 entry.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today I got out of bed to call up Tino [Paine] in Redding & to ask about letters that I am missing & that the King & Santa would hold me responsible for. He was cross & answered in a burst of ill temper that he had many letters & would take them when he wanted to. This is not quite right of Tino—& is a new & regrettable attitude, ~~& my anxiety over it is making me ill~~ [MTP: IVL TS 16].

January 26 to February 2 — Sometime during the short stay in Bermuda, Sam traveled to Somerset to see 29-year-old Upton Sinclair, who had arrived on the island on Dec. 20, 1907 for a six-month stay. In 1906 Sinclair sent a copy of his best-known book, The Jungle, to Clemens (see Gribben 644). At this time Sinclair was collaborating with fellow socialist Michael Williams on a book about health. The Royal Gazette of Feb. 8 reported on Sam's trip to Somerset. D. Hoffman writes, quoting the Gazette:

...the carriage ride to Somerset took so long they had no time for a vegetarian dinner. Although he did "not go to the length of declaring himself a vegetarian," the paper said, Clemens was "in the habit of curing occasional ailments by total abstinence from meat during periods of a week or more at a time" [98-9].

Also during the trip, day undetermined:

His A.D. for Feb. 14 concerned his discovery of a new photographic process called Lumiere, and of a photograph he had taken with Margaret Blackmer. This may have taken place any time during the stay.

One's first contact with a fresh, new, thrilling novelty is for him a memorable event. I still remember quite clearly the wonder and delight that, swept through me the first time I ever saw a daguerreotype; and alone with it was the sense that there wasn't any reality about this miracle; that it was a dream, a product of enchantment—beautiful, astonishing, but impermanent. I still remember my first contact with the electric telegraph, and with the phonograph, and with the wireless, and with the telephone, and with the Hoe press—which with my own eyes I saw print twenty thousand newspapers on one side in an hour, and couldn't quite believe it although I was actually seeing it. Oh, compare that wee marvel with to-day's press! In Bermuda an addition was made to the list of these great first contacts, these splendid impossibles: it was the autochrome. I had never seen a sample of that lovely miracle before. A gentleman amateur there had half-a-dozen pictures, made by himself by the Lumiere process, of Bermudian scenery, and a picture of his little girl reposing in the midst of tapestries and vases and rugs, and flowers, and other things distinguished for variety and beauty of coloring, and I was carried away with them. I was glad to have lived to see at last that old, old dream of the photographer come true—the colored photograph painted by the master, the sun.

How many wonderful inventions have had their birth since I was born. Broadly speaking, it is an interminable list. I was born in the same year that the lucifer-match was born, and the latest link in this great chain is the dainty and bewitching Lumiere.

The amateur whom I have spoken of was preparing an article about the lumiere process for one of the great magazines, and he wanted a picture of me for use as one of the illustrations. I was quite willing to sit, but said Margaret must be put into the picture with me. The picture was notably successful. I was in white, and so was Margaret. Her frock was a very white white, and her white jacket had broad lapels of an intense red; also she wore a red leather belt. My white clothes were of three slightly differing shades of white, and in the picture those shades were exactly reproduced—the coat one shade of white, the shirt-front a slightly whiter white, the necktie a slightly whiter white than the shirt-front. The Lumiere had a sharper eye than myself; I had not detected those differences until it revealed them to me

One day Miss W. [Wallace] betrayed to me one of Margaret's sweet little confidences. Margaret said to her,

"Is Mr. Clemens married?"

"No."

Margaret after a little pause said, with a dear and darling earnestness, and much as if she were soliloquizing aloud,

"If I were his wife I would never leave his side for a moment; I would stay by him and watch him, and take care of him all the time."

It was the mother instinct speaking from the child of twelve; it took no note of the disparity of age; it took no note of my seventy-two years; it noticed only that I was careless, and it was affectionately prepared to protect me from my defect [MTP].

January 27 Monday – At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to daughter Clara .

Clara dear, we arrived early this morning, after a voyage which began in good form but soon degenerated into storm and turmoil.

We are very comfortably located, in the new addition to the Princess, with private bathroom, etc. The weather is balmy and sunny and altogether satisfactory. The hotels are full of people, and a shark has been seen in the Bay. There is no other society-news, therefore nothing further to report to you. I am getting ready to catch the shark, and will send him when I get him. / With love and kisses, / Marcus [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean.

Jean dear, we have arrived, & have been housed in the hotel an hour. There are many tourists here, & I know some of them—among others, Woodrow Wilson, Admiral Upshur, & Miss Sloan, of Long Island. The sun is brilliant & the temperature soft & balmy.

A beautiful dog has come in, uninvited, & has gone to sleep in a chair. He is a bow-legged brindle, & his underjaw sticks out so far that it breaks the fall of his tears when he weeps.

There isn't anything to write about, dear Jean, so I close with love & kisses / Father [MTP]. Note: Admiral John Henry Upshur (1823-1917), veteran of the Mexican War and Civil War.

Sam's A.D. of Feb. 13 revisited this first full day in Bermuda:

My first day in Bermuda paid a dividend—in fact a double dividend—it broke the back of my cold and it added a jewel to my collection. As I entered the breakfast-room the first object I saw in that spacious and far-reaching place was a little girl seated solitary at a table for two. I bent down over her and patted her cheek and said, affectionately and with compassion,

“Why you dear little rascal—do you have to eat your breakfast all by yourself in this desolate way” She turned up her face with a sweet friendliness in it and said, not in a tone of censure, but of approval,

“Mamma is a little slow, but she came down here to get rested.”

“She has found the right place, dear. I don’t seem to remember your name; what is it?”

By the sparkle in her brown eyes, it amused her. She said,

“Why you’ve never known it, Mr. Clemens, because you’ve never seen me before.”

“Why that is true, now that I come to think; it certainly is true and it must be one of the reasons why I have forgotten your name. But I remember it now perfectly—it’s Mary.”

She was amused again; amused beyond smiling; amused to a chuckle, a musical gurgle, and she said,

“Oh no it isn’t, it’s Margaret.”

I feigned to be ashamed of my mistake, and said,

“Ah well, I couldn’t have made that mistake a few years ago, but I am old now, and one of age’s earliest infirmities is a damaged memory; but I am clearer now—clearer-headed—it all comes back to me; I remember your whole name now, just as if it were yesterday. It’s Margaret Holcomb.”

She was surprised into a laugh this time; the rippling laugh that a happy brook makes when it breaks out of the shadow into the sunshine, and she said,

“Oh you are wrong again; you don’t get anything right. It isn’t Holcomb, it’s Blackmer.”

I was ashamed again, and confessed it; then

“How old are you, dear?”

“Twelve, New Year’s. Twelve and a month.”

“Ah, you’ve got it down fine, honey; it belongs to your blessed time of life; when we get to be seventy-two we don’t reckon by months any more.”

She said, with a fine complimentary surprise in her innocent eyes,

“Why you don’t look old, Mr. Clemens.”

I said I wasn’t, except by the almanac—otherwise I was only fourteen. I patted her dainty brown hand and added,

“Good-bye dear, I am going to my table now; but after breakfast—Where are you going to wait for me?”

“In the big general room.”

“I’ll be there.”

We were close comrades—inseparables in fact—for eight days. Every day we made pedestrian excursions—called them that any way, and honestly they were intended for that, and that is what they would have been but for the persistent intrusion of a gray and grave and rough coated little donkey by the name of Maude. Maude was four feet long; she was mounted on four slender little stilts, and had ears that doubled her altitude when she stood them up straight. Which she seldom did. Her ears were a most interesting study. She was always expressing her private thoughts and opinions with them, and doing it with such nice shadings, and so intelligibly, that she had no need of speech whereby to reveal her mind. This was all new to me. The donkey had always been a sealed book to me before, but now I saw that I could read this one as easily as I could read coarse print. Sometimes she would throw those ears straight forward, like the prongs of a fork; under the impulse of a fresh emotion she would lower the starboard one to a level; next she would stretch it backward till it pointed nor’-nor’east; next she would retire it to due east, and presently clear down to southeast-by—south—all these changes revealing her thoughts to me without her suspecting it.

She always worked the port ear for a quite different set of emotions, and sometimes she would fetch both ears rearward till they were level and became a fork, the one prong pointing southeast the other southwest. She was a most interesting little creature, and always self-possessed, always dignified always resisting authority; never in agreement with anybody, and if she ever smiled once during the eight days I did not catch her at it. Her tender was a little bit of a cart with seat room for two in it, and you could fall out of it without knowing it, it was so close to the ground. This battery was in command of a nice grave, dignified, gentle-faced little black boy whose age was about twelve, and whose name, for some reason or other, was Reginald. Reginald and Maud—I shall not easily forget those names, nor the combination they stood for once I reproached Reginald. I said,

“Reginald, what kind of morals do you sport? You contracted to be here with the battery yesterday afternoon—on the Sabbath Day, mind you—at two o’clock, to assist in the usual pedestrian excursion to Spanish Point and Paradise Vale, and you violated that contract. What is the explanation of this conduct—this conduct which in my opinion is criminal?”

He was not flurried, not affected in any way; not humiliated, not disturbed in his mind. He didn’t turn a feather, but justified his course as calmly and as comprehensively as Maud could have done it with her ears:

“Why I had to go to Sunday school.”

I said with severity,

“So it is Bermudian morals, is it, to break contracts in order to keep the Sabbath? What do you think of yourself, Reginald?”

The rebuke was lost; it didn’t hit him anywhere he said, easily and softly and contentedly, “Why I couldn’t keep ‘em both; I had to break one of ‘em.” I dropped the matter there. There’s no use in arguing against a settled conviction.

The excursions party always consisted of the same persons: Miss W., [Wallace] ~~Mr. Ashcroft~~, Margaret, Reginald,

[in handwriting: Misses Elizabeth Wallace.]

A bright and charming lady with a touch of gray in her hair, head of a college in the University of Chicago, Margaret’s most devoted friend, if I except myself, Maud and me. The trip, out + return, was five or six miles, and it generally took us three hours to make it. This was because Maud set the pace. ~~Sometimes she kept up with her own shadow, but mostly she didn’t.~~ She had the finest eye in the company for an ascending grade; she could detect an ascending grade where neither water nor a spirit-level could do it, and whenever she detected an ascending grade she respected it; she stopped and said with her ears,

“This is getting unsatisfactory. We will camp here.”

Then all the vassals would get behind the cart and shove it up the ascending grade, and shove Maud along with it. The whole idea of these excursions was that Margaret and I should employ them for the gathering of strength, by walking—yet we were oftener in the cart than out of it. She drove and I superintended. In the course of the first excursion I found a beautiful little shell on the beach at Spanish Point; its hinge was old and dry, and the two halves came apart in my hand. I gave one of them to Margaret and said,

“Now dear, sometime or other in the future I shall run across you somewhere, and it may turn out that it is not you at all, but will be some girl that only resembles you. I shall be saying to myself ‘I know that this is a Margaret, by the look of her but I don’t know for sure whether this it is my Margaret or somebody else’s; but no matter, I can soon find out, for I shall take my half shell out of my pocket and say ‘I think you are my Margaret, but I am not certain; if you are my Margaret you will be able to produce the other half of this shell’”.

Next morning when I entered the breakfast-room and saw the child sitting solitary at her two-seated breakfast-table I approached and scanned her searchingly all over, then said sadly,

“No, I am mistaken; she looks like my Margaret, but she isn’t, and I am so sorry, I will go away and cry, now.”

Her eyes danced triumphantly, and she cried out,

“No, you don’t have to. There!” and she fetched out the identifying shell.

I was beside myself with gratitude and joyful surprise, and revealed it from every pore. The child could not have enjoyed this thrilling little drama more if we had been playing it on the stage. Many times afterward she played the chief part herself, pretending to be in doubt as to my identity and challenging me to produce my half of the shell. She was always hoping to catch me without it, but I always defeated that game—wherefore she came at last to recognize that I was not only old, but very smart [MTP; D. Hoffman in part, 93-4].

Note: Elizabeth Wallace, dean of women at the University of Chicago on vacation, saw Sam’s love of girls between ten and sixteen as a desire to retrieve the loss of daughter Susy [94]. Margaret Gray Blackmer (1897-1987) was the daughter of lawyer and financier Henry Myron Blackmer and his first wife Helen Kerr. Henry had made his wealth financing railroads, and in banking and oil. He was known as a free-spender.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King throws such a new strong light, such a delighting original light on every subject that is brought up that when he is away we move through letter parade of conversation in darkness.

Lounsbury came in today to talk about the telephone line & poles & closing up the gates that let the cattle in to wander over the King's land, & the cess pool & the gas. Some of those men have been so slow. He says that the 3 big windows out of the dining room are outlined in red stucco—and that they don't quite like it. Lounsbury is touching, for his devotion to the King's place takes up all his thought & he sat here with the tears running down his cheeks when he told how he had sat up all night to keep the furnaces going so that the plastering wouldn't freeze. The men take turn about. Then he said that when Sunderland came up to figure up for the speaking tube that runs from the King's room to the kitchen & found the cost of it, because it isn't in the contract, then struck his pencil through the figures saying, "It's the only thing he has asked for, & I guess we can make him [a] present of that" [MTP: IVL TS 16-17].

January 28 Tuesday – Elisabeth Marbury wrote to bug Miss Lyon to return the contract with John W. Postgate ASAP [MTP].

January 29 Wednesday – M. Howard wrote from Richmond, Ind. to Sam, having been "very much entertained" by CS. He disagreed that Christian Science would spread over the world and mentioned past religious fanatical women whose movements failed [MTP].

Homer Saint-Gaudens wrote from Windsor, Vt. on "Estate of Augustus Saint-Gaudens" letterhead to ask Sam for any letters to his late father. He was planning a book and added:

What started me in writing to you was a remark of my Uncle Louis Saint-Gaudens who said that my father had seen a good deal of you when he was in Paris in the early seventies, and that it used to amuse him greatly to watch you smoke cigar after cigar in endless sequence [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Tell him with pleasure we let him have the letters which are prize, & that we shall like to have the originals back"

January 30 Thursday – Capt. John W. Crawford, "The Poet Scout" (1847-1917) wrote to Sam, enclosing a poem "To Mark Twain," and two printed sheets, one picturing Crawford in a Buffalo-Bill-like outfit, and the other "Poems and Songs of the Poet Scout." He also enclosed two post-card sized copies of a poem "A Sunshine Boomerang," and the following note:

Say Mark / Let's meet and shake before the parting—Sam Davis said to me in 1877, while sitting at my bedside when I was laid up with a leg on a strike, "if you ever get near where Mark Twain is, send your card and say 'by order of Sam Davis'"—and I've wanted to do it lots of times, but knowing you were a busy, strenuous worker, I hesitated to break in on you, but just lately I have had a great desire to meet and swap a few with you if only for a moment—I will be at the Hoffman till about the 5th or 6th of February, and I hope you will order me up, and believe me you are enshrined in my old Broncho heart low these many years—and I am your friend in clouds or sunshine

[MTP]. Sam's reply after Feb. 5 and his return to NY: "Answer/ Dear Captain: / It is sorrow to me that you got away so soon. I arrived the very night that you escaped westward. / The next time you are coming, I beg you to give me a few days' notice, so that I can be clear of engagements. / Sincerely Yours / Mark Twain". Note: see also Sept. 19, 1908 from Crawford.

Sam's A.D.: "It takes a Cromwell...ten years to raise the standards of English official and commercial morals to a respect-worthy altitude" [Gribben 129].

The New York Times, p. 8 reported:

Receiver Wants to See Mark Twain.

Armed with an order signed by Judge Holt of the United States District Court, Charles L. Brookheim is looking for Mark Twain to get from him the books of the Plasmon Company, of which the humorist was President prior to the recent bankruptcy proceedings against it. Mr. Brookheim was appointed receiver of the company. Mark Twain is at present in Bermuda.

January 31 Friday – Sam was in Bermuda.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Such a delightful two letters from Ashcroft about the King & his journey down to Bermuda" [MTP: IVL TS 17].

John W. Crawford wrote on Hoffman House, NY notepaper to Miss Lyon after learning Clemens was gone to Bermuda. He asked if she might make sure Sam saw his Broncho Verse and asked for an autograph [MTP].

February – Clemens signed his copy of Collected Verse of Rudyard Kipling (1907): "SL. Clemens / Feb. '08 / from Doubleday" [Gribben 376]. Note: Sam would read from the volume in Bermuda in March.

February 1 Saturday – Sam was in Bermuda.

February 2 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Stevenson makes Gilbert in Urir falter mislon say he'd 'had great gale of prayer upon my spirit'—& it's a perfect expression" [MTP: IVL TS 17].

James D. Macnab wrote on Plainfield High School, NJ notepaper to ask Sam "the title of the composition and its location which contains the rhyme: 'Punch, brother, punch, punch with care'" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 5, '08" February 3 Monday – Sam left Bermuda on the S.S. Bermudian [D. Hoffman 100].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Homer Saint-Gaudens has written to ask if the King has any of his father's letters, & there are some" [MTP: IVL TS 17].

Gertrude W. Arnold wrote to Sam (not found at MTP).

Charles J. Langdon wrote from the Hotel Maryland in Pasadena, Calif. where he had evidently gone for his health. He apologized for being quoted regarding Clemens "being no businessman" in the NY Tribune and that Langdon had not agreed with Sam putting his money in the Knickerbocker. Although true, he didn't understand "How the statement ever got out." He also mentioned an inaccurate article in the Pasadena paper "of Saturday stating that I was stopping at this hotel and was telling jokes and stories..." Everything is in the first person, as if he is alone. He ends with, "I think I am doing as well out here as could be expected. I am very much better than when I came, but I don't rest well nights, which makes me rather weak and nervous during the day" [MTP].

February 4 Tuesday – William Dean Howells, in Rome, replied to Sam's Jan. 22:

My dear Clemens: / Your wish about your letters comes, I am sorry to say, two months too late. When a biographer asks me for the biographee's letters, I always give them, if I can find them, which sometimes I can't; and I saw Paine on such intimate terms with you that I should not have hesitated to offer him all your letters. I could only, as I remember find ten or twelve, from those you had written me during the last five or six years. He said he would have them copied and returned to me, but he has not done so, for I think I told him there was no hurry. You get them of him, and see for yourself how little their tenor could annoy you if they were published after you were gone. The vast bulk of your letters are at Kittery Point, where no one but I could find them, even if I could. I don't think Paine could abuse the confidence put in him, or would make an indiscreet use of them; but I no more thought of asking you whether I should give them than I thought of asking Mrs. Aldrich whether I should give Aldrich's very intimate letters to his biographer, when he asked for them. Of course Paine will do exactly what you say about them; he spoke to me with entire judgment and good sense.

We are having a gay time here in a week's wet. My wife has not been out of the house since she came into it ten days ago, and Pilla has been three days in bed with the sorest throat in history. She bemoans her absence from Bermuda, where I hope we shall go with you next winter about bronchitis time.

I suppose we shall like Rome when we get round to it. Meantime, nothing could be more comfortable than this hotel. The nice quiet Americans in it don't speak above their breaths because the nice quiet English won't speak at all.

We join in love to each of you. Yours ever / W. D. Howells [MTHL 2: 829-30]. Note: source gives Ferris Lowell Greenslet (1875-1959) for his Life of Thomas Bailey Aldrich (1908). At this time he was associated editor for Atlantic Monthly. See also Gribben 276.

David Bruce Conklin wrote from Brooklyn to ask Sam for his endorsement, "a few lines touching upon the sentiment depicted in the enclosed illustration of the fine photogravure that is being placed on the market." The illustration, referred to as "the Library picture" is not in the file [MTP].

Richard S. Graves wrote on St. Joseph News-Press, (Mo.) letterhead after receiving a magazine containing pictures of "Some of the Leading Humorists of America," and noting he was shown as well as Mark Twain. Graves bet Sam had never heard of him and observed that he'd acquired the title in 38 years while Sam had taken 70 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 21, '08"

Woodrow Wilson in Bermuda, wrote again to his wife about Mark Twain:

"Mark Twain has been down here between boats, and I have seen a good deal of him. He seems to like being with me. Yesterday Mrs. [Mary Allen] Peck gave him a lunch at her house and gathered a most interesting little group of garrison people to meet him. He was in great form and delighted everybody" [R. Baker 268].

February 5 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mother & I went to see Margaret Illington [Frohman] in The Thief. She was very fine & we went to talk to the dear impulsive creature after the play. Dan Frohman tried to find a cab for us, for ours didn't stay for us & so we had to get home by trams in a driving snow storm" [MTP: IVL TS 17].

February 5? Wednesday – On the S.S. Bermudian en route to N.Y.C. Sam, Ralph W. Ashcroft, and Margaret Blackmer wrote on an engraving of the ship to Elizabeth Wallace at the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda: "We all send our grateful remembrances and kindest regards to Miss Wallace, Maud[e] & Reginald." [MTP]. Note: Maude was the donkey they used for excursions, directed by the 12-year-old black boy, Reginald. See Hoffman's Mark Twain in Paradise p.91-2.

February 6 Thursday – In the evening, the S.S. Bermudian arrived in N.Y.C. with Sam and Ashcroft [Feb. 8 to Nunnally].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The Bermudian is just slipping up along side the dock" (here at 8:15) and "the gang plank will be laid in minute" the man at the telephone at Pier 47 tells me.

And now the King is home, with pink cheeks & a beautiful "spring in his hind legs," & full of health again & happiness too. For he found a ten-year old, Margaret Blackmer, who was his little companion constantly during his stay in Bermuda. The King found her alone at the breakfast table the morning after he got there, and the friendship began. They hired a donkey named Maude, with a tinier black master called Reginald, & with a Miss Wallace to couple up with Ashcroft, they'd go for long walks. After a while the King & Margaret would climb into the cart, while Ashcroft & Miss Wallace would push it along for Maude was a lazy beastie.

Up and down the long rooms the King and I walked while he told me the sweet story of his doings there. Dear God who made the rocks, the seas & the skies & the King, it is so wonderful to have him home again for it's a hell of a place without him.

Major Leigh & Mr. Chandler went down to the boat to meet the King, for I couldn't go and it seemed fittingest that some nice man creature would be there. So the King tumbled into the house just as Santa & Will were leaving to go to the Scribners' where Santa & Mark Rogers sang. Ashcroft came up & spent the night, but before bed time we 3 sat down stairs & talked over everything we could think of about the trip [MTP: IVL TS 17-18].

The New York Times, p. 7, reported that Clara Clemens and Francis Rogers sang for guests at a musicale given by Mrs. Arthur H. Scribner at her NYC home. Isabel Lyon called him Mark Rogers. Sam had just arrived from Bermuda so did not attend.

John Mead Howells wrote twice to Sam. The first enclosed "a list of the rooms and halls on the ground floor and Miss Clemens' room on the second floor," with square footage and other details. The Living room was 846 square feet with 9 foot ceilings. The second letter enclosed a certificate billing for $2,071.54 for William Webb Sunderland, being the sixth payment on the contract [MTP].

Manley D. Hudson for the Harvard Missouri Club wrote from Cambridge, Mass. to invite Sam to address the club sometime during the current school year [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 10, '08"

Rennetts C. Miller for the Int'l Reform Bureau, Hartford wrote to Sam. Miller had been a student for many years of Oliver Wendell Holmes and planned a book on him; what was Sam's favorite poem of Holmes? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 10, '08"

Wiley J. Patrick wrote in a shaky hand from Bowling Green, Mo. to ask Sam what he knew of Col. John Ralls of New London or Rev. John Johnson [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 10, '08"

C. Ryder for Ryder & Protheroe, druggist wrote from Emporia, Kans. to thank Sam for the Captain Stormfield story; Ryder was a Unitarian and stated his views [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 10, '08"

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Scribner sent an engraved invitation for a musicale featuring Clara Clemens and Francis Rogers, Thursday evening Feb. 6 at 39 E. 67th Street, NYC [MTP].

February 6 on or after – Sam replied to John W. Crawford's Jan. 30, by writing on Crawford's letter:

Dear Captain:

It is a sorrow to me that you got away so soon. I arrived the very night that you escaped westward.

The next time you are coming, I beg you to give me a few days' notice, so that I can be clear of engagements. / Sincerely Yours [MTP]. Note: Crawford is mentioned by Sam in a Spokane, Wash. News article on Aug. 7, 1895 which lists Crawford as a Western Humorist. From this note, it's clear that Sam regretted not seeing Crawford. Sam did not return from Bermuda until the evening of Feb. 6, so this reply could not have been made until then. See Crawford's incomings.

February 7 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam sent a reminder invitation to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) to attend the "Doe-Luncheon" at 1 p.m. Feb. 11 [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: I telephoned for Dorothy [Quick] today and she will come tomorrow to stay over Sunday. The King went to lunch at the Lawyer's Club with Col Harvey. Tino [Paine] came in at 5, had tea with mother & me, & then later billiards. We talked about the Howells letters & I told him that I had tactfully informed the King the night before, that he had the letters; but I couldn't quite tell him of the scowl on the King's face. But oh the King is back so beautiful, so younger-than-ever, so full of happiness, that the house has burst into sunshine [MTP: IVL TS 18-19].

William Butler Duncan wrote to invite Sam to a Pilgrims dinner for Whitelaw Reid on Feb. 19 at Delmonico's [MTP].

D.W. May wrote on US Dept. of Agriculture notepaper to lobby Sam to consider a trip to Porto Rico (older spelling) and stay with them [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 20, '08" and "Not planning to make any more journeys—but thank him"

February 8 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Francesca dear, I (and Ashcroft) got back from Bermuda night before last, after a pleasant absence of 13 days. I've brought you a Bermuda jewel & Miss Lyon will presently dispatch it to you when Ashcroft sends it to the house. It is decorated with an image of Bermuda's pride, the angel-fish. It is utilitarian—this jim crack. I think it's a hairpin, but other authorities think it's a safety.

But never mind, that isn't what I sat down to talk about. No, but to thank you & your mother again for that shawl, which has been a most handy & competent friend in time of need—that is to say, Illness. For three weeks it protected me night & day against fresh colds; & was also the only bed-covering I used on shipboard & in Bermuda.

Good-bye, dear. /With love, ... [MTP; MTAq 101]. Note: "jim crack," or gimcrack is a cheap and showy object of little or no use, possibly alteration of Middle English gibecrake, small ornament.

According to Lyon, Dorothy Quick arrived on Feb. 8 for another weekend visit.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Dorothy arrived today & the King was so impatient, pacing up & down the big rooms & going to the front door whenever the bell rang, & standing there in his white clothes in an icy blast of wind. An orchestrelle expert was here & I had to leave him constantly to rush after Mr. Clemens & beg him to keep away from that windy door. Up & down the rooms he went & once he said, "a watched Dorothy never boils." The expert was so happy & laughed so within his clothes to really hear something humorous. The King's interest in children increases—his interest in little girls. He can spend hours & hours with them & finds them such good company [MTP: IVL TS 19].

Sam also wrote an invitation to Dorothea Gilder for the Feb. 11 Doe Luncheon, that included a drawing of a sailboat with two figures on deck and one falling overboard: "Ship sinking—man overboard / SLC" [MTP].

Sergeant Hamilton Fish Camp, U.S.W.V. No. 46 (US War Veterans) sent an engraved invitation and calling card for the Yorkville Casino, a reception on Saturday evening Feb. 8 [MTP].

Duke E. Stubbs for the Chauffeurs' Club of America wrote to Sam. "We are preparing the yearly copy of our Manual for our membership, and as we are all 'Pilots,' who are 'Roughing It,' we hope you will send a message of good advice..." also a photograph [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 10, '08"

Major Wolfgang Goetz, M.D. wrote to ask Sam to be on the board of directors of a new publishing company set up to publish two books by Goetz [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 10, '08" and "Cant do it"

February 8? Saturday – Sam and daughter Clara sent invitations to the following for Clara’s music recital on Thursday, Feb. 13 at 9 p.m.: H.H. Rogers and Emilie R. Rogers; Benjamin S. Guinness and Bridget W. Guinness; and Melville E. Stone. Also on the short program: Miss Marie Nichols, Violin, and Mr. Charles Wark, Piano [MTP].

February 9 Sunday – Dorothy Quick was spending the weekend with Clemens. She left the next day.

February 10 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: All day the King has been playing with Dorothy, & when she left this afternoon he went upstairs quite lonely, but tired too & so he slept. I was having a long interview with a Dr. Beal who is a friend of the Col. Ingersoll family and surreptitiously he is trying to interest some rich people to buy the house Mrs. Ingersoll is now living in. And the man told me how he had been the one to start the fund for Mr. Clemens when he met with his failure through the Webster Company. Beall spoke of it as a smart thing to have done, & I said, “But of course neither Mr. nor Mrs. Clemens could consent to that, etc.” Such a long winded creature. Tonight after I had played the Tannhauser overture to Mr. Clemens & he said in the front room he said that little Margaret Blackmer asked Miss Wallace if Mr. Clemens were married and when she said no, the child said that if she were Mr. Clemens’s wife she would never leave him an instant, but would take care of him and watch him & look after his comforts always [MTP: IVL TS 19-20].

Harry Brook for the Los Angeles Times Mirror wrote to send Sam a copy of his 70th birthday speech from yesterday’s paper. For 30 years he’d been told he looked like Twain. He offered a page of his personal history and enclosed his photograph and asked for Sam’s photo [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Thanks for letter. / Has a photograph etc”

Herweigh von Ende wrote from NYC to ask Sam for “an hour of your time in the near future” to gain his opinion on “an educational matter” [MTP]. Note: staff note in the file asks why this, dated only Feb. 10, is 1908.

Jervis Langdon II wrote to arrange for Sam and Andrew Carnegie to visit the St. James Church, NYC sometime this week or next to hear the new Hope-Jones organ just installed [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Name the date & telegraph me so that I can see if it will meet Carnegie’s convenience”

Jennie Pomerene for the College Women’s Club, NY wrote to invite Sam to their annual benefit on Feb. 10 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “My engagements cover that day very strongly—you can express regret but not grief”

February 10 Monday ca. – Bridget W. Guinness (Mrs. Benjamin S. Guinness) wrote to Sam, replying to Clara’s recital invitation [MTP].

February 11 Tuesday – Sam hosted his second “Doe Luncheon” at 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. [Feb. 7 to Mary Rogers; IVL TS 20].

Sam also sketched drawings to Dorothea Gilder and Helena Gilder (Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder), guests of the luncheon. To Dorothea he drew a sailboat with two figures on deck and one falling overboard, then wrote, “Ship sinking—man overboard / SLC.” To Helena he wrote a lady with an umbrella in the rain and wrote, “Lady out in the rain / SLC.” [MTP].

For Kate Douglas Riggs (aka Wiggin), Sam also drew a cow, drawn sideways, with the caption, “A cow is a dern hard picture to make. / SLC” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to William Butler Duncan. “I am confined to the house again, but shall be out by the 19th without doubt & glad to be present at the dinner in honor of his Excellency our well-deserving Ambassador” [MTP]. Note: this refers to the Whitelaw Reid dinner at the Pilgrim’s Club on Feb. 19.

Sam also wrote to Charles J. Langdon, at this time in Pasadena, Calif.

There is good news from Julie; also from Jean, who has taken a house in Greenwich, Conn., & is much happier than she was in that desolate sanitarium; Clara is fat & prosperous; my own condition is quite satisfactory. I spent 9 days in Bermuda & beat the bronchitis for once, anyway. But you did well to stay away from there, for Bermuda is not for you. You would find it deadly dull & you couldn’t endure it, whereas dulness & nothing doing is good & satisfactory medicine for me—much the best I know of. I am glad Pasadena is treating you so well; & glad, too, that you are young enough not to mind that awful land-journey. It would kill me, I think.

Jervis is going to invite Mr. Carnegie & me to visit the new organ, & I am waiting with high anticipations.

With very best wishes for your continued improvement, Yours with love, / Saml [MTP]. Note: See Jan. 9 for Jean’s move to Greenwich.

Sarah S. Collier (Mrs. Robert J. Collier) wrote to accept Sam’s invitation for the Doe Luncheon this day [MTP].

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Miss Lyon sending the signed John W. Postgate contract [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Feb. 18, 08”

Kate Douglas Riggs wrote to Sam: “At the first Doe Luncheon I sat at Mr. Clemens’s end of the table, & at the Second at the other end. Am I therefore to be regarded as a sort of Innu-End-doe?” [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “You can tell her she mustn’t bother her head with these difficulties—She’s merely to be regarded as the sweetest think there is”

The New York Times, p. 7, “Pink Ball At Plaza To Help the Blind” announced that on Mar. 2 at the Plaza, “One of the novel entertainments of the season” would take place, “the bal de rose, or pink ball, a subscription affair,” with proceeds going to the New York Assoc. for the Blind. Mark Twain was headlined along with the French Ambassador, President Butler of Columbia as patrons. Tickets were $5 each. Note: Nicholas Murray Butler (1862-1947), President of Columbia 1902-1945.

February 12 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Jan. 16 from Eden Phillpotts about Phillpotts’ proposed book dedication to Mark Twain:

My dear friend: / Indeed there is not a single syllable to be altered. The dedication pleases me “to the limit”—it could not be improved. I am anticipating a good time in the society of that book.

I have been disputing with bronchitis again, but I went down to Bermuda & quickly settled it my way. / Always & cordially yours ~ SL. Clemens [MTP]. Note: See Jan. 1 to and Jan. 16 from Phillpotts, and also Sam’s reply when the book, The Human Boy Again, arrived.

Sam’s A.D.

I suppose we are all collectors, and I suppose each of us thinks that his fad is a more rational one than any of the others. Pierpont Morgan collects rare and precious works of art and pays millions per year for them; an old friend of mine, a Roman prince, collects and stores up in his palace in Rome every kind of strange and odd thing he can find in the several continents and archipelagos, and as a side issue—a pastime, and unimportant—he collected four hundred thousand dollars’ worth of postage-stamps. Other collectors collect rare books, at war prices, which they don’t read, and which they wouldn’t value if a page were lacking. Still other collectors collect menus; still others collect playbills; still others collect ancient andirons. As for me, I collect pets: young girls—girls from ten to sixteen years old; girls who are pretty and sweet and naive and innocent—dear young creatures to whom life is a perfect joy and to whom it has brought no wounds, no bitterness, and few tears. My collection consists of gems of the first water [MTAq xvii]. Note: also from the A.D. of this day (not in Cooley) Sam reviewed his trip to Bermuda with regrets he had not taken Livy there instead of Italy: "...for climate Florence was a sarcasm as compared with Bermuda."

Isabel Lyon's journal: Col. Harvey came in this morning, & toted the King off for luncheon with Mrs. Clarence Mackay. I stayed with him while he finished his dressing & seeing that he hadn't fastened his trousers, told him so. Darlingly he cocked his head at me & said, "I don't always; but since you're so particular I'll do it this time." He went along with the Colonel & had a very good time.

Now he is playing billiards with Mr. Riggs.

We've been sending notices to the Times & other papers of Santa's big musicale tomorrow, and then I peeped in to see a tired monarch with exquisitely chiseled features & a cigar between his teeth & that beautiful head nestling against his pillows and Quackenboses [sic] book on Natural Philosophy in his hands.

[entry continued on an earlier blank page]

Feb 12—At the King's request I wrote Mrs. Thayer to ask if she would send down the letters the King wrote her many years ago just after the Quaker City Expedition, for the King & Paine to see. Copies can be made there or here. Every day I am reminded of all the Thayers for by my desk is a framed photograph of the beautiful woman, picture that is in the Metropolitan Museum. However could Mr. Thayer express so marvelously the strong, yet warm woman that he gives us in that picture. She is the comforter of women and men, ~~for in a supremest agony I could put my head against that heart & find Solace~~ [MTP: IVL TS 20-21].

Note: George Payn Quackenbos (1848-1881). A Natural Philosophy, etc. (1899) [Gribben 565].

February 13 Thursday – In the evening at 21 Fifth Ave. Clara Clemens gave a musical presentation to about 140 persons, accompanied by Miss Marie Nichols of Boston, a violinist, and Charles E. Wark, pianist. The NY Times, Feb. 14, p 7, "Miss Clemens's Musicales" lists the following 60 guests. See also Sam's Feb. 14 to Jean.

Mr. & Mrs. H.H. Rogers
Mr. & Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.
Mr. & Mrs. John E. Cowdin
Mr. & Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder
Mr. & Mrs. Edward Loomis
Mr. & Mrs. John Alexander
Mr. & Mrs. Schuyler Schieffelin
Mr. & Mrs. H.W. Poor
Mr. & Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting
Dr. Cleveland Dodge and Miss Dodge
Mr. & Mrs. Andrew Carnegie
Mrs. John Rutherford Matthews
Mr. & Mrs. John Howells
Dr. & Mrs. Edward Quintard
Mr. & Mrs. Albert Herter
Mrs. Laurence Hutton
Mr. & Mrs. Frank N. Doubleday
Dr. & Mrs. G.M Tuttle
Mr. & Mrs. Norman Hapgood
Mrs. Henry Draper
The Misses Thursby
Mr. & Mrs. R.M. Johnson
Mr. & Mrs. Henry Holt
Mr. & Mrs. J. Newton Perkins
Mr. & Mrs. Howard Van Linder

Mr. & Mrs. Carroll Beckwith
 Mr. & Mrs. Boudinot Keith
 Dr. & Mrs. Clarence C. Rice
 Mrs. John Day
 Mr. & Mrs. Myron W. Whitney
 Mr. & Mrs. Daniel French
 Mr. & Mrs. Clarence C. Buell

At midnight until 4 a.m. this day, Sam enjoyed a big supper and ball at Sherry's Restaurant, NYC given by Robert J. Collier [Feb. 14 to Jan]. The New York Times reported the event:

COLLIE BALLET FOR COLLIER.

At a Dinner at Sherry's Dogs and Dancers Amuse Guests.

Robert Collier gave an elaborate dinner last night at Sherry's entertaining some thirty of his friends, among them many of the most prominent socially in town. Details about the dinner were not circulated, just because the affair was intended to be informal and an exceptionally cozy little matter.

It was not only a dinner; it was dinner and theatrical entertainment combined, for while the guests dined they were also amused with various novelties.

The dinner and entertainment last night was given in two of the rooms on the second floor at Sherry's. The two apartments had been arranged in Spanish fashion, one representing the Maison de Madrid, and the other the Court of the Royal Palace.

In the outer room the thirty guests sat at tables, surrounding the apartment on three sides. On each table were roses, and in the centre of each was an outspread Japanese parasol. The effect, with the soft lighting, was very beautiful.

At the further end of the room at the most prominent place sat Mark Twain, in ordinary evening dress. On his right was Ethel Barrymore, and near by were Mr. and Mrs. Collier and Richard Harding Davis. Alla Nazimova was at a table on the left side of the apartment as one faced Mark Twain. Among the others present were Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Astor, Mr. and Mrs. William Waldorf Astor, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney.

The sensation of the evening, however, was the Collie ballet from "The Top o' th' World." The dance never went better. And yet the dogs were hungry. When it was all over, and each girl had asked her pet whether he would be her little doggie dear, King, forgetting all decorum, ran to the centre table, where Mark Twain had sat, and there helped himself to ice cream. He stood on his hind legs and licked away complacently.

It was curious to see the guests, men and women, smoking cigarettes and watching the girls and the dogs. Not all the women smoked, but many of them did. The other chief entertainment introduced into the dinner was the dancing of a prima ballerina from the Manhattan Opera House.

Sam's A.D. of Feb. 19 gave comment on Collier's party:

The party at Sherry's was continuously interesting, from the beginning to the end. It was given by Robert Collier. He, and that sweet and beautiful girl, his wife, were at Clara's musicale, and we departed for Sherry's in their automobile at midnight. It was a large company, and was made up of well-known names. Among them was John Hay's poet-daughter, Mrs. Payne Whitney. I had not seen her since she was a little child. Neither her mother's nor her husband's limitless millions have smothered her literary gift or beguiled her into neglecting it. Among them, also, was her sister-in-law, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, who is likewise staggering under weighty millions, but slaves daily and enthusiastically and faithfully at her statuary work, like the loftiest minded poor devotee of the great arts in the land. Twice, under the concealment of fictitious names, she has carried off the first prize in important public competitions. Prince Troubetskoi was there, a fine man and diligent and successful artist. I have known him some time. His wife is Amélie Rives, the poet. The dear ~~and~~ lovely Ethel Barrymore, actress, was there. She is the sole support of her widowed mother's family, and has been working hard and making and saving a deal of money these many months, and now misfortune has befallen her. A few nights ago, when she was absent at the theatre, a burglar entered her apartment and carried off every valuable thing she had in the world, including her accumulated money, which she kept at home because in these disastrous and panicky days she was afraid to trust it in a bank.

Nazimova, the illustrious Russian actress was there, a most interesting character; I had not seen her before, either on the stage or elsewhere. She talks in easy and flowing and correct English, and she was playing in it acceptably two and a half months after her tongue's first contact with it. She said she was born and reared in Switzerland, and at eleven didn't know a Russian word; then she took lessons and acquired her native tongue by the same laborious processes required in mastering a foreign one.

I was at home by half-past four in the morning, in bed at five, asleep at six, and ready for breakfast at eight—refreshed and ready for more activities. They were liberally furnished, and have been industriously carried on ever since [MTP]. Note: Paul Prince Troubetskoy (1866-1938), Russian sculptor b. Italy, son of a Russian nobleman and an American woman.

Sam's A.D. for this day recounted the eight days on Bermuda with his latest Angelfish, Margaret Blackmer, a donkey named Maude, and a little black boy, Reginald. See Feb. 1 for excerpt.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King has a wee blood vessel broken on his eyeball, & it is inflamed.

Santa's concert was a great success. Mr. Melville Stone told me that anything in the world that he can do for her he will. There were some lovely people here. 140 I should say, & after everything was over I understood the hitches that occurred—the waiters got drunk.

Mrs. Riggs [Kate Douglas Riggs] recommended a book for the King, 'Uncle William' by Jeannette [sic] Lee [MTP IVL TS: 21-22; Gribben 404]. Note: Jennette Barbour (Perry) Lee, Uncle William, The Man Who Was Shiftless (1906).

Jerome Lynch wrote to praise Sam's last Autobiographical segment. Lynch knew all about the men of the Enterprise; his father was buried at Gold Hill. He also urged Sam to answer in a "permanent way" Senator Stewart's article in this week's Saturday Evening Post (see Feb. 15 entry for review of ex-Senator William M. Stewart's account.) [MTP]. After Feb. 13 Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam, writing on Lynch's letter

Mr. Clemens is much obliged but haven't heard of it. "I [am] much obliged for the reason that while I don't think that so insignificant a person as Mr Senator Stewart could provoke me to reach down & hit him I have a strong curiosity to see his article because I knew him so long & so well, both the inside of him & the outside of him. Of course I don't answer such things. This policy I learned a long time ago with that ancient Stewart was a young creature ["] [MTP].

William Augustus Croffut wrote from Washington, D.C. to ask Sam if he should start a movement to help him in his financial difficulties, which he'd read about in the papers. He disclosed that he was born in the house next to the one Sam was building in Redding [MTP].

John F. Mills wrote from West Point, Ind. to Sam. For 30 years Mills had wanted to thank Clemens for his books and now his Autobiography was at hand. Each book from IA on had made him "eager for more." He'd pasted 'every scrap' that came his way about Twain. His 13 year old daughter cried over the account of Susy's death. "Twenty five years ago, in Dakota Territory, I met a man who said his name was Charles. Y. Redmond, and who claimed to be the original of 'the dissolute author' in 'Roughing It.' ... He gave his own version of the fake 'hold up.' To-day I read in this week's issue of the Philadelphia 'Saturday Evening Post,' Ex-Senator Stewart's account. It is time for him to go away back—yours sincerely..." [MTP]. Note: See Feb. 15 entry for review of ex-Senator William M. Stewart's account.

George L. Robinson wrote on NY Sewage Disposal Co. letterhead to Sam, acknowledging with thanks receipt of Sam's letter of Feb. 11, "enclosing check for $100., at the request of my father, Mr. George M. Robinson" [MTP].

Homer Saint-Gaudens wrote to Miss Lyon about the letters from his late father to Clemens [MTP].

February 14 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Greenwich, Conn.

Dearest Jean, I must snatch a moment to tell you about Clara's musicale of last night [Feb. 12]. It was very rainy, but no matter about 140 of the 160 guests invited came to the show—& very choice people they were, too, bright, & cultivated. Clara was beautiful to look at, & her voice was in great form. She was a picture of grace, & ease, & conscious mastery of the situation. Sometimes she was playful & cunning. Sometimes she was sweetly & eloquently moving & pathetic, sometimes she was a storm, sometimes she was a majestic tragedy queen; & in all her moods she was an expert in expression, & carried the house! It was a splendid triumph. Everybody praised her singing, praised it with enthusiasm, & praised her acting in the same measure. They couldn't talk about anything else. Melville Stone, head of the Associated Press, was present, & he told Miss Lyon to furnish him any chance that might occur for him to be of service to Clara, & he would spread her merit from one end of the country to the other.

Miss Nichols played divinely, & she & Clara did a duet that so delighted the house that they had to do it all over again. And there were other encores. It was a great night.

At midnight I went to a big supper & ball at Sherry's, & enjoyed it thoroughly till 4.05 a.m., when I came away with the last of the rioters.

I have been dictating, this morning, & am going to play billiards all the afternoon.

I hope you are well & happy. With ever so much love, dear Jean / Father [MTP]. Note: at Sherry's, Sam met John Hay's daughter, Mrs. Helen Payne Whitney, a poet [Gribben 765]. See his A.D. of Feb. 19.

Sam's A.D. for this day continued to describe the Bermuda trips and give Angelfish accounts [Hill 209].

Robert J. Collier wrote from NYC to Sam "Wont you let Sadie steal you away after the music to-night for half an hour? We are giving a little Valentine supper party at about twelve o'clock and we can bring you and return you in the motor at whatever time you want to leave" [MTP]. Note: see IVL below; Sam got in at 4:30 a.m.

Isabel Lyon's journal: It was 4:30 this morning when the King came in from Valentine party at Sherry's. He went up with Mrs. Collier after the Musicales here. I heard the mobile come down the avenue like a tragic giant June-bug & so I went to look over the balusters & see the King come running up the stairs like a happy exhilarated boy. He told me that something happened up at Sherry's to make him sorrowful just after he arrived & that he told Robert Collier that he wanted to go to the urinal. R.C. said he's just come from home, too. But the King said that he only wanted to cry this time, & his tears was too many to be disposed of in any other way.

The King's eye is so inflamed that Dr. Hadley came down to look at it. I washed it out with ½ teaspoon full of boric acid to ½ glass of water [MTP: IVL TS 22].

Charles Harvey Genung and Frederick Burr Oppen for the Player's Breakfast Committee wrote to Sam that they'd just been informed by George Riggs that Sam would come to their "little breakfast at the Players on Sunday the 23^d at one o'clock P.M. / This is good news...and all hands will be delighted" [MTP].

February 15 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Such a sweet comfort of an evening I have had with the King, after a busy & fluttering kind of a day. Mr. Rogers came in for a long talk this morning. Brio left at 12:45, leaving a baddish taste in Santa's mouth. At 2:15 C. Teller called up asking if the King would come to the telephone, but he wouldn't of course, & then she sent in a note asking him to go to the Brevort (where she is stopping) in order to do some work which he alone could do. I called her up telling her that she'd have to talk to me & what she wanted was to have him make a speech at a big mass meeting to be held in aid of the 20,000 unemployed in this city. She isn't alone in her belief that the King is the only one in the world best calculated to advance a cause, but she stands quite alone in being willing to sacrifice him in order to fulfil a whimsy of hers. Later we went to a little tea at Mrs. Dearborn's & then home to dinner—we two, & then I to play for him. The Erlkonig or "konig Suhl", & Schubert's Impromptu I played, but they didn't fit his mood, & finally the Lohengrin Wedding March, I played 5 times for him. Then to the billiard room, where he gently knocked the balls about making some beautiful shots, and we both smoked [MTP: IVL TS 22-23].

Addison C. Harris, attorney in Indianapolis, Ind. wrote to Sam. "I have not forgotten your good fun over a very long word which I heard you play off in Vienna. / I therefore make bold to send you one; and claim for my Hoosier State..." The clipping contained the word: "Pappatheodorokoummountourgiotopoulos" [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 21, '08" and "Thank him for sending the clip"

Charlotte Teller Johnson wrote from the Brevoort Hotel, around the corner from Sam.

My dear Mr Clemens—I am quite sure that I am right—in the biggest sense—in ignoring the personal pride dictated by social prejudice—and in asking you to do a very great thing, which will cost you little effort. I am right because I know and share to a certain extent—your bitterness against the scheme of things as we have been born into it. I count upon what I learned of your attitude to help in promoting true passion for justice—in a concrete undertaking [MTP]. Note: she pleaded a convalescence and therefore couldn't come in person. This one thing she wanted to accomplish before she died; he might bring Miss Lyon or Clara with him if he chose. See IVL entry this date for what Teller was grinding on about.

"A Senatory of the Sixties," ran in Saturday Evening Post, with references to Mark Twain [Tenney 46: The Twainian June 1943]. Additionally, Tenney quotes William M. Stewart: "In Nevada, MT 'went around putting things in the paper about people, and stirring up trouble. Naturally he was not popular. I did not associate with him.' Stewart's account of the mock robbery of MT ... is violent: the boys overturned the stage, threw MT in a canyon, broke up his portmanteau, and threw the pieces afer him. A few years later, he dropped in on Stewart in Washington, 'in a seedy suit,' 'a sheaf of scraggy black hair leaked out of a battered old slouch hat....He had a very sinister appearance.' MT asked for a cash stake to finish IA, but Stewart countered by giving him a job as a private secretary and a room in his boarding house. MT repaid this kindness smoking cigars in bed, pretending to be drunk, and frightening the genteel landlady, and Stewart had to threaten him with a thrashing to make him behave" [Tenney, ALR Third Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1979) 193].

February 16 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to William Augustus Croffut.

My dear Croffut:

You will see by this morning's clipping that there is hardly any likelihood that the Knickerbocker will resume business. My deposit is $51,199, & I am not expecting 15 per cent of it to escape alive.

It is lovely of you to want to have a foreign Ambassadorship conferred upon me as a refuge—with the usual salary, which pays part of the house-rent but doesn't include board & clothes—but no, although the Knickerbocker hasn't hurt me much I am a candidate for increased gain, increased luxury, augmented pomp & show. I want to be made a Permanent Receiver. Then I can live beyond my means for ten years & still come out a millionaire at the end.

Yours ever, / Mark

~~Private. Publish it if you can. Every little helps, in this Knickerbocker fight. / SLC~~

Later: One of the Satterlee committee has called. He read this, & was appalled! And said—

"Oh, for goodness' sake, don't think of publishing it. Everything is going well; we are absolutely not going into the hands of a permanent receiver, & so you mustn't antagonize anybody. Keep still; everything is as right & sure as any one could wish" [MTP].

Adele Burden wrote to invite Sam to luncheon on this day at 1:30 [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King's eye is still very much inflamed. He lunches today with Mr. Burden. He dines tonight with the Coes.

Friday the King got a letter from W.A. Crofutt [sic Croffut; see above letter to] suggesting that he be made an Ambassador to some big foreign country, because probably the Knickerbocker is going into a permanent receivership. Oh hell, it makes me so sick, but the King never winces.

Later & Mr. Lauterbach came in to say that the articles in the paper are put in for a purpose and the Knicker seems to be promising all good things.

Tonight the King dined with the Coes & when he came home I went to his room to find him seated on the edge of the bed & figuring with the calendar. He said that he was going to Bermuda on Saturday with Mr. Rogers if it could be arranged & of course it can be, & best of all I am to go with him to Bermuda, that darling island way from this cold, but heated, fretted dusty place [MTP: IVL TS 23-24].

February 17 Monday – Sam inscribed a copy of Eve's Diary to Kim

C. Tabley: “To / Mrs. K.C. Tapley / with compliments of / The Author. / Clothes make the man, but they do not improve the woman. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / Feb/08” [Nate D. Sanders, Autographs, eBay # 170659440080 June 26, 2011]. Note: evidently Twain thought her last name was “Tapley,” though the incoming (below) clearly shows “Tabley.”

Isabel Lyon's journal: “Yes, we are to go to Bermuda on next Saturday” [MTP: IVL TS 24].

Mrs. Kim C. Tabley wrote from St. John, New Brunswick to Sam: “Will you accept the enclosed remittance for an autographed copy of your ‘Eve's Diary’? [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Please address & weigh”

Adolph Fuchs for the Progressive Literary Society, NYC wrote to ask Sam to spend an evening with them some Sunday [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, “Answd. Feb. 18, ‘08”

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam discussing estimates for adding the “north wing, including the open loggia and Miss Clemens's suite of rooms above”—the wing was est. $4,100; loggia $2,250 [MTP].

February 18 Tuesday – Sam's A.D. of Feb. 19 discloses his activities for the day and evening:

Yesterday I spent two pleasant and exciting hours witnessing a Ben Johnson masque performed at the Plaza hotel by about twenty young and attractive creatures of the two sexes, and it was wonder for rich and beautiful costumes, for excellent singing, and for acting which I had not seen approached before by amateurs. I dined out in the evening at the Doubledays'; and went from there to the Guinneses, in Washington Square. By eleven a great throng had gathered. There was fine instrumental music and fine singing. The illustrious Caruso was present. I had not seen him before, off the operatic stage. It was a highly fashionable company, but I went in white clothes, because that is my custom, and because everybody approves it. That bright and engaging and untamed young Virginian, a distant cousin of mine, Mrs. William Waldorf Astor, who is over from England on a visit to her people, was there, and at midnight she dragged me into the middle of the room and commanded the music to strike up and then she required me to dance with her. I was willing; I had never danced, but I always knew I could do it if I wanted to. Our performance brought down the house, as the phrase goes, and I privately thought it was rather unusually good myself—and I knew there was a sufficiency of life and activity in it, for one thing. We got an immense encore and responded to it, adding several fresh and hitherto unattempted and finely artistic variations. I promised to visit her in England next summer, and spend a few weeks at Cliveden. I probably can't go, but I would greatly like to see that wonderful place. Shortly after midnight I came away with Prince Troubetskoy and Peter Dunne (“Mr. Dooley”); many were departing, but many were arriving to take their places.

It is as I said, I am not leaving for Bermuda to build up my health, for there is nothing the matter with it; I am going because a change of scene and climate is absolutely necessary for H. H. Rogers, and he won't go unless I go too. I have divested myself of engagements until the 16th of April [MTP].

Notes: Mrs. William Waldorf Astor (1879-1964), wife of 2nd Viscount Astor, born Nancy Witcher Langhorne (insert photo). Sam's reference to the lady as "a distant cousin" is likely fanciful, as the Langhorns of Virginia were reported only to be friends of Sam's parents; Enrico Caruso (1873-1921), perhaps the greatest opera tenor of all time; Caruso made about 290 commercial recordings from 1902 to 1920. All of these recordings, which span most of his stage career, are available today on CDs and as digital downloads, while we have not a single recording of Mark Twain, either singing or talking. Tolstoy, Rodin, Anatole France, and George Bernard Shaw sat for Troubetskoy.

Clemens acquired another case of Queen Anne whisky. On this particular listing he put "1 case $20" but did not put a price on other entries [L-A MS]. Note: see June 8, 1907 for the full list of acquisition dates of whisky, intended as ammunition against Isabel Lyon.

Isabel Lyon's journal: A turmoil—for many things must be adjusted before I can leave with the King. After a racking day the King & I dined with the Doubledays. That queenly creature Neltje Blanchan Doubleday, talked to me again bout Kipling, & said that he never puts a poem down on paper until he has gone over & over it in his head, & eliminated every superfluous word. When they were visiting him last summer in Sussex & motored about with him, his head was full of delightful verses that went in time to the rhythm of the mobile wheels & he would recite them as they sped along. The King put me down at the house & he went on to Mrs. Guinness's where he stayed until past midnight [MTP: IVL TS 24-25]. Note: Bridget W. Guinness (Mrs. Benjamin S. Guinness) of Washington Square.

Edward John Bing wrote from Budapest, Hungary to thank Sam for his letter. Bing enclosed his photograph (in the file; Bing is estimated at 10 or 11 years old) [MTP].

W.J. Hughes wrote from Minneapolis, Minn. to Sam, thinking the description of all the good things Sam had to eat as a boy in Hannibal "struck me just right" as he also was a boy there from age ten [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 21, '08"

John Larkin wrote to advise Sam that his taxable personal property was assessed at $5,000 and the tax on it was $79.77 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Check sent to Mr. Larkin Feb. 20, '08"

A.W. Lines for Eastern High School (Detroit) wrote to ask Sam for "a few lines" from Sam's "ample pen" for their first literary quarterly [MTP]. Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 20, '08"

Dorothy Quick wrote to thank Sam for his "lovely valentine" and the "lovely belt" he brought her from Bermuda. She'd read in the papers about Clara's musicale. Dorothy still eschewed periods in her letters [MTP].

February 19 Wednesday – In the evening Sam attended the Pilgrim's Club Dinner at Delmonico's in honor of Ambassador to England, Whitelaw Reid. The New York Times, Feb. 20, p. 3 reported:

AMBASSADOR REID THE PILGRIM'S GUEST

Tells Them Talk of War with Japan is Silly and That England Wouldn't Aid Her.

CHEER KING AND PRESIDENT

Ex-ambassador Choate Presides In President Duncan's Absence—Mark Twain Speaks.

The Pilgrims of the United States obtained much information last night. They learned from Mark Twain that it was taking from the coins the motto, "In God We Trust" that caused the recent financial panic; they learned from Joseph H. Choate what a poor embassy this country has in London, and they learned from Whitelaw Reid, the present Ambassador to England and the guest of honor, how very remote the possibility of war with Japan is, and how still more remote is the possibility of England's supporting Japan in such a contingency.

In every respect the dinner was a typical Pilgrim dinner; a "hands-across-the-sea affair," with a joint toast to the President and the King, and more people singing "God Save the King" than "The Star Spangled Banner," because the words are easier to remember. The dinner was held in Delmonico's big dining hall, and the decorations consisted of English and American flags intertwined about the walls. The musical selections were not only Anglo-American, but also very reminiscent, the diners joining, at one point, in singing the chorus of "Annie Rooney."

President Duncan III

Unfortunately the President of the Pilgrims' Society, William Butler Duncan, was unable to be present owing to illness. Instead Mr. Choate was toastmaster, and sat next to the guest of honor, Mr. Reid. Others at the guest table were J. P. Morgan, Levi P. Morton, Gen. Theodore Bingham, Ogden Mills, Col. Hugh L. Scott, Lieut. Col. B. R. James, Alton B. Parker, Rear Admiral Caspar Goodrich, Seth Low, Samuel L. Clemens, Bishop Potter, Esme Howard of the British Embassy at Washington, the Right Rev. William Lawrence, Andrew Carnegie, Major Gen. Frederick Grant, Courtenay Walter Bennet, British Consul at New York; J. Edward Simmons; St. Clair McKelway, and Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke. There were altogether about 300 guests.

Isabel Lyon's journal: English. Tonight Mr. & Mrs. Robert Collier dined here. Just the 2 for Robert read aloud a play he has written. It is very good & brilliant in parts. The King got close to him to catch Mr. Collier's modest reading of it. He really is a little deaf.

Mr. Shaugnessy has given me a wonderful old cashmere sofa cushion. It is rare, & a study in design and coloring. I took it to bed with me tonight, to get acquainted with its wonders [MTP: IVL TS 25].

John W. Crawford ("Capt. Jack") wrote from Chicago to Sam. "I don't know how to thank you for your autograph letter." Crawford planned on notifying Bob Davis of Munsey's the next time he came to NY so that "a few congenials" might be gathered for Crawford to don his buckskins and entertain [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Thank him for letter & clipping & say that Mr. Clemens sales again for Bermuda"

William Augustus Croffut wrote from Washington, D.C. that no of course he wouldn't publish anything. He praised Sam and thought he should be an ambassador. When he talked with ex-Gov. Morgan Gardner Bulkeley the day before the Governor "laughed and answered that he didn't believe you would accept any diplomatic mission. I said probably you wouldn't, but Conn might do herself the honor of offering you your pick." Croffut ended by saying he'd been "very lucky in my investments since" he'd seen Twain [MTP].

Samuel Major Gardenhire for Gardenhire & Jetmore wrote to invite Sam, his daughter, and Mr. Paine to a dinner with Governor Joseph W. Folk of Mo. on Feb. 26; he heard of the event from Eugene Christian [MTP].

Gribben offers part of Sam's A.D. for this date having to do with Ben Jonson (1572-1637):

Though Mark Twain alluded to Jonson several times in print, it was not until 1908 that he mentioned seeing and enjoying one of Jonson's dramatic works—a masque performed at the New York Plaza Hotel (19 February 1908 AD). Jonson's praise for Shakespeare is one piece of evidence that Mark Twain must overcome in proving his thesis of "Is Shakespeare Dead?" (1909): in Part 3 he notes that Jonson "waited seven years" before he penned his encomium; in Part 5 he reiterates that it was only in 1623 that "Ben Jonson awoke out of his long indifference and sang a song of praise and put it in the front of the book" of Shakespeare's plays; in Part 10 Mark Twain quotes from Timber (1641) Jonson's laudatory remarks about Francis Bacon's oratorical speech [360].

Also from this day's A.D., Clemens met "John Hay's poet-daughter, Mrs. [Helen] Payne Whitney. I had not seen her since she was a little child. Neither her mother's nor her husband's limitless millions have smothered her literary gift or beguiled her into neglecting it" [765]. See also Feb. 14

Note: For more of Sam's A.D. of Feb. 19, see Feb. 13, and 22.

February 20 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J.

Wednesday

An hour after Midnight

I got your dear Valentine, which I prize, & today I got your letter, & I thank you for it.

And you didn't take a single prize! Oh, you dear little rat, it was a shame, & I am sorry.

Clara was very busy, or she would have sent you a Valentine. She is grieving, now, because she forgot it.

I've been to a banquet, to-night, [Pilgrim Club Dinner] & got away at 11, which is blessedly early, for a banquet. I played billiards an hour, & now I have gone to bed. I sail for Bermuda in the "Bermudian" Saturday morning, with H. H. Rogers, his son-in-law Benjamin, a man-servant, & Miss Lyon. It is for Mr. Rogers's health. We shall stop at the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, & stay a month or two. You dear child, I wish you were going. /Most lovingly / SLC [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Julia Barnett Rice (Mrs. Isaac L. Rice):

Dear Mrs. Rice. / I have an abundance of sympathy for this movement for the protection of children. If I were younger I would like to work for it. But now I thank you for the compliment you pay me, & shall be happy to have my name used as President of the Children's Hospital Branch [MTP: The Forum, 39:564].

Note: This letter was included in a NY Times article, Feb. 27, p. 2, "Anti-Noise Society Reivews Progress."

Julia Barnett Rice (1860-1929) was a physician but never practiced; she was involved in medical issues and is credited with the creation of quiet zones around NYC hospitals. She was the founder of the Anti-Noise Society. Her husband Isaac Leopold Rice (1850-1915) was a manufacturer, lawyer, writer and chess expert who founded the school of political science at Columbia, founded The Forum magazine in 1885.

Raoul W. D'Arche wrote from Hartford to invite Sam to lecture for a benefit for the Spanish War Veterans. Twichell had told him they couldn't get Mark Twain for $2,000 [MTP]. Note: Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. Feb. 21, 08" and "Mr. Clemens thanks him very much for his cordial invitation, but Mr. Twichell is right, he does not expect to ever again speak in Hartford as he has retired from the platform"

Frances Nunnally wrote from St. Timothy's, Cantonsville, Md. to Sam, surprised to get his letter since she thought he might still be in Bermuda. How she wished she could have been there with him. She had just finished her mid-term exams [MTP].

February 21 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a letter of introduction to Albert Bigelow Paine for Joe Goodman [MTP: Am. Art Assoc-Anderson Galleries catalogs, 11-12 Nov. 1937, No. 4346, Item 88]. Note: Paine would travel in the West gathering information for the Mark Twain biography.

MANHATTAN OPERA HOUSE.
34th St. near 8th Av.
TO-NIGHT at 8. (11th appearance of MME. TETRAZZINI) – RIGOLETTO.
Mmes. de Cisneros. Severina. MM. Bassi,
Sammarco, Arimondi. Glibert. Mus.
Dir., Campanini. WED. at 8. (1st time in America) – PELLEAS ET MELIS-
ANDE. (in French) – MARY GARDEN,
Gerville-Reache. Sigrisi. MM. (Debut)
Hector Dufranne. (Debut) Jean Perler,
Arimondi, Crabbe. Mus. Dir., Campanini.
FRI. at 8. (12th appearance MME.
TETRAZZINI) – LUCIA DI LAMMER-
MOOR. Mlle. Severina. MM. Zenatello,
Sammarco, Arimondi. Mus. Dir., Campanini. SAT. MAT. at 2 – PELLEAS ET MELISANDE. MARY GARDEN, Ger-
ville-Reache. Sigrisi. MM. Arimondi,
Dufranne, Perler, Crabbe. Mus. Dir.,
Campanini. SAT. NIGHT at 8. pop.
prices. (75c.-$3) – SIBERIA. Mlles.
Agostinelli, Trentini. MM. Zenatello,
Sammarco, Crabbe, Cazauban, Gianoli-
Galletti. Mus. Dir., Campanini. SUN-
DAY. Pop. Campanini Concert with Cavalleria Rusticana Complete, 50c.-1.50.
MON. Feb. 24 – LOUISE. (MARY GAR- DEN).
Seats for all above now selling.

In the two-volume copy of Studies in the History of Venice (1907) by Horatio Robert Forbes Brown (1854-1926), Sam put his name and the month and year, then wrote on the front free endpaper of vol. 1 a lengthy note dated Feb. 21, 1908 of his meeting with Brown in Venice thirty years earlier [Gribben 87].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King went to hear Tetrizzini tonight. When he came home I went in to see him as he lay in bed smoking, & he said that he was enchanted with her singing. Here she is with her great fame to come after her after her 45th year. For years she sang in San Francisco & elsewhere, at a modest salary, & in London she burst upon the world in her great glory.

Mother is standing by me working for me, doing errands. Copying letters & today she bought tobacco for the King. I could not go without her wonderful & sympathetic help [MTP: IVL TS 25]. Note: insert ad of Feb. 17, 1908 shows this day's performance (Friday) was Lucia Di Lammermoor, a tragic opera in three acts by Gaetano Donizetti, running about 3 hours 40 minutes at Oscar Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera House. Luisa Tetrazzini (1871-1940), Italian soprano of great international fame. Her 1907 debut in London's Covent Garden as Violetta in La traviata was a sensation, and in 1908 she played the same role in New York.

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam to enclose a copy of William Webb Sunderland's letter agreeing to complete the loggia wing at $4,100 by June 1, weather permitting [MTP].

John Larkin wrote to Sam enclosing a receipt for payment of personal property taxes of $79.77 [MTP].

Frances Nunnally wrote again from St. Timothy's, Catonsville, Md. to Sam.

About two hours after I mailed that note to you the postman brought me that lovely pin. It certainly is pretty and you don't know how much I appreciate it. The angel-fish surely must be a beautiful fish if it has all those lovely colors. ...What has become of that trip to Washington you thought you might make? I certainly wish you would take it and stop by Baltimore [MTP].

Miss Lula Phillips wrote from Monticello, Va. to Sam. "In looking thru an old trunk of my mother's I came across this photo of your mother and thinking that you would like to have it I take pleasure in forwarding it to you. / The late Dr. J.M. Clemens of Louisville was a relation of mine (our Mothers being sisters) and I presume this is how the picture came to be in her possession" [MTP]. Lyon wrote on the env., "Important / contains photo of Mr. Clemens's mother / Answd. Explaining etc."

Dorothy Quick wrote from Plainfield, NJ to Sam. "I am glad you are going back to Bermuda because I know you love it there but I shall not see you for so long I wish I could go too / Will you write me when ever you have time and tell me all about the beautiful lilies when they come out / With lots of love and kisses your loving /Dorothy" [MTP].

February 22 Saturday – Sam, Isabel V. Lyon, H.H. Rogers, and William Evarts Benjamin sailed again for Bermuda. Rogers brought along his valet. Lyon noted in her journal that "Mr. Rogers came feebly onto the boat, a sick sick man" [MTHHR 645n1; D. Hoffman 102].

In his A.D. of Feb. 19, Sam had said:

"It is as I said, I am not leaving for Bermuda to build up my health, for there is nothing the matter with it; I am going because a change of scene and climate is absolutely necessary for H.H. Rogers, and he won't go unless I go too" [D. Hoffman 103].

The New York Times, p. 6, "H.H. Rogers Off to Bermuda" reported the departure on the Bermudian of Rogers and Twain for a Bermuda vacation of "two or three weeks." They actually stayed 47 days.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Headache / We sailed at 10:30. A full cargo of folks & I'm musing over a fellow cabiner. But she has proven herself a sweet & gentle Bermudian, a Mrs. Williams, who lets me alone. I must not forget that AB came to my rescue by first packing the King's trunk last night & then soothing my spine & then helping me out of the house with a seething head. Mr. Rogers came feebly onto the boat, a sick sick man. AB came up to me to say that Maurice one of the editors of the Bookman was aboard with what he called a "jag" & he introduced him to me that I might keep him away from the King. After luncheon I went to my cabin & slept for 4 hours, weak from headache, weary from my sleepless nights [MTP: IVL TS 25-26].

February 23 Sunday – A somewhat longer article on H.H. Rogers and Twain leaving for Bermuda ran on the front page of the New York Times.

ROGERS AND TWAIN SAIL

Exchanging Jests on the Pier—Financier Thinks the Outlook Bright.

"This is what I get for being in bad company," said Mark Twain, humorist, pointing to H. H. Rogers, financier, when a host of interviewers descended upon him yesterday morning on the deck of the steamship Bermudian, previous to their departure for Bermuda.

"My methods," responded Mr. Rogers quickly, "are no worse than your jokes, and they are bad enough."

Mr. Clemens is going to Bermuda to continue the stay which certain social and business obligations cut short. Mr. Rogers is going away for a rest and recreation. The former wore a light suit of gray and looked like a fashion plate. Mr. Rogers was in sombre black.

Mr. Rogers smilingly declared that there was no truth in Mr. Clemens's story that he was going to Bermuda to keep the financier straight. He added that his own reason for making the trip was because of Mr. Clemens's offer to stand treat.

"That's true," said Mark Twain, "but I'm $2 shy of the amount, and I'm going to shake him down for it when we get to sea."

At this Mr. Rogers laughed and said that Mark Twain's remark might be taken as a fair sample of his jokes, but he doubted if it was worth the $2.

Mr. Clemens said he expected to remain in Bermuda until April. When Mr. Rogers asked about the financial situation he smiled and, looking out across the river, said that the horizon was bright and he believed that the same thing could be said of the financial horizon.

On the Bermudian also sailed Mr. and Mrs. George Keegan. Mr. Keegan is assistant manager of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company. Two days ago he married Miss Mary Brennan of 2 West Seventy-fifth Street. When the bride and groom arrived at the steamer their friends fell upon them with rice and confetti. They found their stateroom appropriately decorated with signs announcing that they were "newlyweds."

Isabel Lyon's journal: Its' a lovely voyage. Calm & a lot of people there must be for every cabin is full, but I do not see anything but young Dr. Ditman who is bright & charming, & today Maurice came & sat down for a chat about books & automobiles & methods of work. We sit at a corner table with a Commander & Mrs. Burdick. Today it was a little rough & the racks on the table protected everybody's lap but Mr. Rogers's. A roll sent a cup of coffee that the King had been protesting about, into his lap, & the King suggested that I take that place, as I didn't object to holding such things in my lap. He said it with gravity & we took it in the same way [MTP: IVL TS 26]. Note: Dr. Norman Ditman (1877-1944).

February 24 Monday – The Clemens party arrived in Bermuda and Sam checked into the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda where he wrote two postcards to Frances Nunnally.

Francesca dear, I got your letter just as I was leaving New York—thank you dear.

I am writing now because I suppose that the linchpin got lost in the mails; & if that is so, I want you to drop me a line here, so that I can replace it with another.

I suppose I shall [continued on the back of a second postcard] be here some time—possibly until toward the middle of April.

It is very pleasant. I hope / we are to have you with us in New York at Easter. / Goodbye, dear [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: We sighted land very early this morning & before ten sailed up the wonderful tiny channel between the tiny islands into Hamilton Bay. I took Dr. Ditman to the farthest most point forward that he might see the wonders of it, & he had the enthusiasm of a poet.

The Hotel is full & we are scattered. Oh, so scattered, until it seems as if one of my legs were in #70 & the other in 166. 166 is the King's room & is so small that the King says "it was intended for a cigar box, in fact it was a cigar box once." But little rooms are nothing, for here we are in this darling place. Miss Wallace is here, the Dean of Woman at Chicago University. It is raining & so we cannot go over to Mrs. Peck at Shoreby to see Mr. Woodrow Wilson whose last day it is here [MTP: IVL TS 26-27].

D. Hoffman writes of Sam's arrival with Rogers:

The most public of all Clemens's visits to the Islands began slowly. He found his room so small he declared it a former cigar box, and because the day was rainy, he and Rogers abandoned their plan of riding to Shoreby to see Mrs. Peck and Woodrow Wilson, who was spending his last day on the Islands. Miss Wallace, still on holiday, found it a mooted question whether Rogers was taking care of Clemens, or Clemens of Rogers. She also wondered about the relation between Clemens and his secretary. Miss Lyon was a "black eyed black haired Italian looking little woman," she wrote in her Bermuda journal, "who hovers about him with the tender care of a mother and daughter combined." Surprisingly, the two women became friends. Miss Wallace nevertheless made certain that the King found company with Irene Gerken, a pert little twelve year old from West Seventy-fifth Street, in New York. (She had not cast her net wide. Clemens played billiards with Irene in January, he said, and was amused to watch her seize advantage by freely repositioning the balls. He took to calling such a maneuver an "Irene") [103-4].

Elizabeth Wallace recorded in her diary Sam's arrival with Lyon and Rogers. On the earlier 1908 arrival by Clemens she had nicknamed Ralph Ashcroft "The Pilot Fish." He wasn't along on this extended stay:

no Pilot Fish conducted him but instead a black eyed black haired Italian looking little woman who hovers about him with the tender care of a mother and daughter combined. This is the Little Secretary of the King and my heart's doors were open for her to come in and she came in and will remain forever as Caranana. With Mr. Clemens and Caranana came a tall distinguished looking man with a fine cut profile and clear young complexion. It was Mr. Rogers [Hill 203].

Margaret Blackmer wrote from Misses Tewksbury's School, Briarcliff Manor, NY to Sam.

I received your nice letter, and I was very glad to hear from you.

We had a play a few nights ago. Mother came up and stayed all night.

I wonder how Maud [donkey] is. Do you miss the rides we used to have?

I am very happy and I hope you are also.

Miss Tewksbury is going to take us into New York today to go to the aquarium and to the metropolitan art museum. We are coming back sometime today.

I hope you will see mother soon.

With lots of love...[MTP].

Amy C. Hayes wrote from Pukoo, Molokai, Hawaii to Sam, working a description of the natives he'd described there in his writing so many years ago, into a request for an answer with autograph [MTP].

John M. Howells for Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam: "The house has now reached a state where it will be advisable to take up very shortly the question of mantel pieces. No fewer than 7 mantels were in the new house, the billiard room to be made as per the original contract, the living room mantel "is the carved Scotch mantel piece now in the attic of the Fifth Avenue house," so that the other 5 needed to be specified. John offered various options [MTP].

John Larkin wrote to Miss Lyon that he had her letter with Sam's check for $5,000 on the Knickerbocker Trust and would follow instructions [MTP].

February 25 Tuesday – In Bermuda, Sam made another excursion in the donkey cart, this time to Spanish Point with Irene Gerken. Reginald handled the donkey as before, while Isabel Lyon, Elizabeth Wallace, and William Benjamin all walked. H.H. Rogers did not go [D. Hoffman 105]. See Lyon's entry below:

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King has found a little girl—Irene Gerken—and this afternoon we started for Spanish Point, the King & Irene in the donkey cart, with Maude. IT was happiness haunted by a sadness to course along these lovely roads, with the memory of dead little Juliet in my heart [MTP: IVL TS 27].

Mrs. Gerrit S. Clemens for the Womens' Club of Texas wrote from Joplin, Mo. to invite Sam to visit Texas, where she spent part of the winter. She mentioned the "pleasant visit" she and the doctor had at Tuxedo Park in August 1907 [MTP].

Archibald Henderson wrote from Chapel Hill, NC to Sam. He was "almost finished" with his biography of Bernard Shaw but one chapter on Shaw's philosophy kept him "awake at night"—would Sam read it and offer his opinion? He thought Shaw's views must be close to Clemens' [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II wrote to Sam sorry that the Bermuda trip would keep him from joining "at St. James Church with Julie and Edward and a few others to hear that glorious organ played by a splendid player—Mark Andrews...." They also needed one more investor at $5,000 and explained [MTP].

February 26 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave. NY, Isabel Lyon telephoned Albert Bigelow Paine after discovering some missing older letters of Clemens'. Isabel Lyon's diary:

Tino [a nickname for Paine] in Redding...to ask about letters that I am missing and that the King and Santa [Clara] would hold me responsible for. He was cross and answered in a burst of ill temper that he had many letters and would take them when he wanted to. This is not quite right of Tino—and is a new and regrettable attitude [Hill 201].

Note: Lyon was concerned that if Paine published the letters, the volume that she and Clara Clemens planned to publish might be injured. Hill adds that Paine wrote Isabel a letter claiming he had spent two years and over $8,000 working on Twain's bio, and met her concern by saying that the brief excerpts he would publish would only serve to increase the public's appetite for Clara's later volume [201-2].

Jean Clemens wrote from Greenwich, Conn. to Isabel Lyon:

Howdy Lioness; / It's raining cats & dogs wherefore my walk in (I started a word & then ran to give George 3 cts. & now I don't know what the word was intended to be) had of necessity to be diminished.

Thank you so very much for those photographs, especially the one of "In the Garden" which I love. It brings out the wonderful details of the grasses, leaves & of the background so much better than the newspaper print. I hadn't so much as seen the houses & terraces in the background, before. It is all so exquisite, so perfect.

And what do you suppose? Mr. [George de Forest] Brush actually wants to paint me. He means to endeavor to find a stray moment before he sails to draw a sketch of me to work on in Florence & then when he returns paint some things. And besides all this he told me that he and "Mittie" had sat about in Dublin admiring me. Are you as utterly amazed as I was? I had never dreamed of a thing, not an atom in Dublin. And when at Bedford I caught him staring somewhat hard, I thought he was looking to see whether I appeared well or not, as people had been peering at me on account of my health. ...

On Monday, I discussed Mildred most of the time with Dr. P. but when he asked me how I felt, I answered:

“Spry as a grasshopper” & that’s still true [MTP].

February 27 Thursday – In Bermuda, the Clemens party was entertained by a baseball game [D. Hoffman 105].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Ball game today / I turn on the practical faucet & suggest a publisher. This apropos to Miss W’s [Wallace’s] charming ms. reminiscent of her life in France. She’s been reading it to me on the porch & I went off to find the King just arrived from a trip to town with Mr. Rogers. St. Simeon Slylites—or Skylights—[MTP: IVL TS 27-28].

The New York Times reported Sam’s enlistment by Mrs. Isaac L. Rice in the Anti-Noise Society, though this was merely the use of his name, as he had allowed with previous social movements. In part:

ANTI-NOISE SOCIETY REVIEWS PROGRESS

Fifty-Nine Hospitals with 18,000 Beds Now Represented in Its Directorate.

CHILDREN HELP THE CAUSE

Mark Twain Runs Their Branch—Mrs. Rice, at St. Regis Meeting.

Tells What Has Come of Small Beginning.

The Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noise held its first annual meeting last night at the Hotel St. Regis, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street, and Mrs. Isaac L. Rice, its founder and President, reported the progress it had made.

One of the newest moves was the organization, with the full consent and cooperation of the Board of Education, of a Children’s Hospital Branch, to be composed of children pledged to make as little noise as possible in the neighborhood of hospitals. Mark Twain has agreed to be President of this. In accepting the office he wrote to Mrs. Rice:

I have an abundance of sympathy for this movement. If I were younger I would like to work for it. Now, I thank you for the compliment you pay me, and shall be happy to have my name used as President of the Children’s Hospital Branch. Sincerely yours, MARK TWAIN.

February 28 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: There was a cold & tearing wind all day, so that when the Trinidad finally got in after lying to anchor outside the harbor, her smoke stacks were white with brine, & her few passengers looked wearily shaken. This morning Sorellatua & I went to a quaint little Belgian woman who has brought a quantity of lovely lace here for sale. The King drives out, & he walks out, & he is gay & young & full of a new and splendid life. Mr. Rogers is improving every day now, & he isn’t the grey feeble man he was less than a week ago. A dance tonight & a lot of English were here. Dr. & Mrs. Parker had the Governor General here for dinner. The Governor General looks like a parrot, Mr. Wodehouse is his name. The King plays billiards by the hour with the 2 childhood [missing word?] Irene Gerken & Anne Fields. He is hungry for the friendship & his association of children & his first interest when he goes to a new place to find little girls [MTP: IVL TS 28; also, in part and some modified: MTHHR 645n1; D. Hoffman 105]. Note: General J.H. Wodehouse.

D. Hoffman adds,

“When indoors, Clemens spent hours playing billiards with Irene and another child, Anne Fields, of Jersey City. That evening, before the regular Friday night hotel ball, his excellency the governor, Lt.-Gen. J.H. Wodehouse, arrived in regalia” [105].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote a laundry list to Miss Lyon, covering many of the things they'd been collaborating on. There is a certain playfulness in the second section of his letter:

Shall I tell Henderson to send along his chapter on Shaw as a philosopher?

I enclose clipping from the Sunday World; also one from the Westminster Gazette.

I have sent a package of magazines to Dr. Herring, for you. If you want others, tell me what to get.

Hobbe [Josephine Hobby] can't have struck any snags yet, as she had not attempted to continue the acquaintance recently formed.

At last we have found a couple of suitable shells, and they will be ready next Friday. I will send one to Bermuda by next mail, and one direct to Margaret [Blackmer]. If this is not right, say so now !

I was delighted to get your note, and to learn that you did not die on the voyage. Yesterday, before receiving it, I sent you a cartoon which I received from Richards, the cartoonist who crossed to England last summer with us. If the conditions on your return voyage are not satisfactory, think of this cartoon, and be comforted. There is always a lot of solace in the thought that things might be worse.

That Byrn Mawr school has been closed, temporarily, on account of scarlet fever, so Miss Howard and the Morfords are having holidays. Miss Howard and I are going to get drunk to-morrow at Fraunces Tavern, across the Way, just as George Washington did ; then we are going to see Paid in Full at the Astor, and where we will end up if our brains get mushy, I don't know. One thing is certain, we will not classify the tricks of the last game, and exclaim what a remarkable hand we have !

I am glad you like Miss Wallace, but I want to warn you that she is the daughter and grand-daughter of Presbyterian missionaries ; and, as you know, the offspring of parsons and professors will always bear watching.

By the way, did Sir Benjamin Stone (Keeper of the Sutton Coal-fields and Photographer-Extraordinary to the Houses of Parliament) ever keep his promise to send the King copies of the photographs taken on the Terrace, in which Balfour and Komura and the King appear?

I suppose Rogers and Benjamin monopolize the King. How do you put in your time? Not having headaches, I hope? / R.W.A. [MTP]. Note: Arthur Balfour, Komura: Japanese Ambassador.

Margaret Blackmer wrote from Briarcliff Manor, NY wishing Sam a nice time in Bermuda and when he got back her picture would be ready for him—could he ask Mr. Ashcroft to send her mother a picture of Sam and her in the donkey cart? “If you see Maud, give her my love, and tell her I hope I will see her again” [MTP].

February 29 Saturday – At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam began a letter to daughter Clara that he added a PS to on Mar. 2.

Clara dear, there is nothing to report. Everything goes well & satisfactorily, therefore plan-making has not begun. It will not begin until Mr. Rogers becomes restless. He is in better condition than he was in when he left New York, & if he remains contented he will go on improving I think. He & Miss Lyon are very good pals, & Miss Wallace is another one. Benjamin is good company. Take it altogether, Mr. Rogers is well situated, as to the main requirement, which is cheerful & frivolous surroundings; the next requirement is pleasant & sunny weather. Thus far the weather has not been of high quality, but an improvement is promised. Ever yours [MTP]. Note: see Mar. 2 for PS.

Sam also inscribed a copy of Eve's Diary to Irene Gerken: “To / Miss Irene Gerken / with the affectionate regards of / The Author. / Bermuda, Feb. 29, 1908. / Let us save the to-morrows for work / Truly Yours / Mark Twain” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The best of all the lovely chaffing day was the evening when we went to the King's room after dinner & he read some Kipling poems to us. “The Bolivar”, “Soldier & Sailor Too” (so full of unapproachable words) “The Mary Gloster” & “McAndrew's Prayer.” We went from shouting joys to tears over the beauties, the perfections of that magician; & for Kipling to be able to hear the King read those verses might be solace to him for the loss of his dear little girl Josephine.

Oh the comings into our lives of sweet women & strong men who stay with us for a swift moment—then go. They bring a pungent joy, & a fearful one, for we know they come, only to go again. A woman came down on the ship; a woman with red hair & a tall slim figure, & a cleft in her chin and lovely eyes. She was the only woman I saw & I was drawn to her. This morning she stopped at our breakfast table to say she was starting for Nassau, & to give me a beautiful message. She was like Eulabie Dix who came like a burst of sunshine & love to us & then flew away to St. Louis to ponder on what may be marriage for her.

Today Elizabeth Wallace & I went up to Madam la Belge to buy more lace & after luncheon we drove to a little Devonshire Church, & went into the grave yard to make photographs of the giant, ancient dying cedar that has been standing for generations guarding the quaint small church, & the dead, lying under simple slabs. When we came home we had tea & Mrs. Peck joined us. She & Sorellatua talked in French all the time. It was a delight. Professor Ferguson & Mrs. F. & Miss F. are here [MTP: IVL TS 28-29].

D. Hoffman writes of “the mysterious” Mary Allen Hulbert Peck and of some of Sam’s activities on Feb. 29:

Another person who raised eyebrows, especially those of Miss Lyon and Miss Wallace, was the mysterious Mrs. Peck. At first, Miss Lyon simply recorded that she regularly wintered in Bermuda and called herself a “hardy annual.” But soon she wrote that Mrs. Peck was “a bewitching woman, and a snare for men folk.” People on the Islands, she added, “think she is not sincere.” Miss Wallace, more reserved, reported that no husband was in sight, and “there was a little restless look of unfulfilment about her eyes and mouth that gave grounds for romantic speculation.” They watched Mrs. Peck when she appeared at the hotel for tea on February 29 and conversed with a friend all the while in French. Clemens spent part of the day entertaining Irene. He gave her [above] an inscribed copy of Eve’s Diary, which he had lovingly written after the loss of his wife. That evening, lying on his bed and still wearing his white suit, he read aloud from the narrative poems of Kipling, who had just won the Nobel Prize. As he read “Mary Gloster,” Miss Wallace and Miss Lyon broke into tears [107]. Note: Elizabeth Wallace wrote in her memoirs that Mrs. Peck possessed “a little restless look of unfulfilment about her eyes and mouth that gave grounds for romantic speculation” [ibid].

Charles P. DeLaittre wrote from Aitkin, Minn. to ask Sam if one Clarence H. Mackay of NYC was authorized to receive funds for the Lincoln Farm Assoc. [MTP].

March – Burr McIntosh Monthly (NY) ran a portrait of Twain and daughter Clara, p. 57-8,. Tenney: “Accompanying text states that MT had approximately $50,000 on deposit at the Knickerbocker Trust Company in New York at the time of the crash; he opposed establishing a permanent receivership on the grounds that it would be as expensive to maintain as a harem: ‘Anybody who has had experience in this line will endorse my statement’” [45].

Pacific Monthly ran an article by Charles Warren Stoddard, “In Old Bohemia, II, the Overland and the Overlanders,” p. 261-73. Tenney: “Contains anecdotes of MT in California and recollections of sharing rooms with him in London in the winter of 1873-74. Includes photograph of MT” [46].

Blackwood’s (London) printed an article by Charles Whibley, “American Literature,” p.414-22. Tenney: “On MT, pp. 419-20: ‘There is but one author who represents with any clarity the spirit of his country, and that author is Mark Twain. Not Mark Twain the humorist, the favourite of the reporters, the facile contemner of things which are noble and of good report, but Mark Twain, the pilot of the Mississippi, the creator of Huck Finn and Tom Sawyer. He, indeed, is national as Fielding is national. Future ages will look upon Huck Finn as we look upon Tom Jones,—as an embodiment of national virtue’” [46].

March 1 Sunday – In Bermuda, the Clemens party took an excursion to see the new island aquarium, which had opened on Jan. 1, 1908. D. Hoffman gives “the effervescent and obliging U.S. consul,” W. Maxwell Greene as organizer of the trip, and writes:

Goodwin Gosling, secretary to the Bermuda Natural History Society, also came aboard.... Twelve fish tanks were cleverly constructed within a masonry moat around a powder magazine the Royal Navy had declared obsolete. Open to sunlight and fresh air, the tanks were designed to be approached through dark and mysterious chambers. "The fish were very wonderful in their coloring and form," Miss Wallace wrote, "but Mr. Clemens didn't seem to think that they were very sociable. ... Clemens, predictably, pronounced the blue and yellow angelfish his favorite. After a keeper prodded the octopus, so it was told, Clemens did the same to Rogers, and said, "There you are, H.H.—the Big Stick is after you, even down here."

Upon return, the group took cabs to Prospect in Devonshire Parish, just east of Hamilton to review the troops at the British garrison and listen to the band. Tourists were allowed to attend Sunday services in the chapel. D. Hoffman writes of Sam's approach:

Sundays saw Clemens adopt a careful strategy. He would arrive too late for church but in time for the band, which played under a grove of cedars. On such outings he took further opportunities to poke fun of Rogers, calling him "the Rajah" [108].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Sunday and a full day. This morning at 10:30 we went with the American Consul, Mr. Greene & a scientist, Mr. Gosling, to the Aquarium. We were a party of 2 or 15 & going up young Dr. Ditman talked to me about Lafcadio Hearn & he wished that Hearn could have come to Bermuda & could have written of its beauties, before he went to Japan to grow ever iller & finally pessimistic & then to die. The Aquarium isn't large, but its specimens are very beautiful. There was a young eager Bermudian there who seemed to know more about the real lives of fish than the scientist did. It was a darling sail, and when we reached the Princess, we scrambled for cabs and drove up to Prospect to see the young soldiers and to hear the band. We met some very agreeable people there. Mrs. Peck again, and Lieut. Frewen and Mrs. Frewen and Capt. Rose and others. Mrs. Peck comes down every winter and calls herself a "Hardy Annual". After luncheon at 4 "The Harem" and Miss Wallace started for Soucy to have tea with Mrs. Hastings and her daughters. It was very sweet and calm there. The King protested that the fire was poorly laid, and under his bidding I mended its structure, and up it blazed, while the King sat near the table with a sweet black cat in his lap. All day it has been an arriving and a departing, for after leaving Mr. Rogers at the Princess we drove up to Belleterre, Mayor James's very lovely house with its beautiful garden, quaint, and a pride to the Colonel and a joy to the rest of us. We had tea again, in the library, where there were 5 beautiful Chinese rice-bowls up on a high shelf. Then another departing and an arriving at the Hotel after a drive home in the twilight [MTP: IVL TS 30-31]. Note: likely Sir Moreton Frewen.

March 2 Monday – At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam added a PS to his Feb. 29 letter to daughter Clara: "P.S. Monday Eve. Your letter has arrived, with its gratifying news. The Oswego incident is worth a dozen word-compliments."

Sam also replied to the Feb. 28 from Margaret Blackmer at The Misses Tewksbury's School, Irvington-on-Hudson, N.Y.

Dear Margaret:

I saw the ship coming in at 8 this morning, & very soon afterward the purser sent your letter to me, & I was glad to get it.

I will see that Mr. Ashcroft does not forget to send your mother the picture of you & me & the donkey. He gave one to Miss Lyon, & it was so good that I took it away from her. I shall be so glad to have the picture of you which your mother is saving for me.

I met Maude at the dock this morning, & gave her your message. She was all alone; Reginald had gone off somewhere. We made a trip to Spanish Point with Maude & Reginald the other day; Miss Lyon, Miss Wallace and Mr. Benjamin walked, & Irene & I rode in the cart. Irene is 12 years old, & lives in West 75th street.

There isn't any coasting here, but no matter, it is nicely hot & sunny and comfortable.

Don't forget that I am to see you at Easter, dear. I shall be here 2 or 3 weeks yet, I suppose. With lots of love, ... [MTP; MTAq 113-15]. Note: Maude was the donkey and Reginald the black boy who accompanied the pair on their cart rides during Sam's last visit in January.

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean in Greenwich, Conn.

Jean dear, there is nothing to report except that we are all comfortable & Mr. Rogers is improving, day by day. We do not know how long we shall stay, but it will be beyond the 10th, anyway. (The 10th is sailing-day 8 days hence.) It has been rainy, but we have lovely summer weather now, & the effect upon Mr. Rogers and Miss Lyon is fine.

The roads are good, & we drive a deal; when we are not driving we still live out-doors in the sun & gather health.

The hotels are full—and more than full. The cottages are full also. The weekly steamer brought 255 people this morning, & they are around skirmishing for shelter.

There's plenty of company in this hotel, & of an excellent sort, & there's a dance twice a week. We are not suffering for a lack of pleasant social life. / With lots of love & kisses / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mai H. Coe (Mrs. William Robertson Coe) about her father, H.H. Rogers.

Dear Mrs. Coe:

Your father is ever so much better, & I think he improves daily. This is exactly the place for him, & I hope to get him to remain clear into April.

He has been pining for the expected picture of the baby, & when he saw the steamer come gliding past the windows at 8.30 this morning his anxiety rose to boiling point, which is 212 at sea-level.

The letters will not be delivered until 5 this afternoon, & he is waiting as patiently as he can. I do hope you haven't forgotten to send the picture / With love [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

Dear Mrs. Rogers: / He is getting along splendidly! This was the very place for him. He enjoys himself & is as quarrelsome as a cat.

But he will get a backset if Benjamin goes home. Benjamin is the brightest man in these regions, & the best company! Bright? He is much more than that, he is brilliant. He keeps the crowd intensely alive. / With love & all good wishes, ... [MTHHR 644-5].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Cards we have in the evening now up in the King's room; the King and Mr. Rogers abuse each other with an earnestness entirely deceptive to the uninitiated, but it is blessedness to us.

This afternoon the King and I went up to the Victoria Lodge just opposite the public gardens, to call on the Misses Ladd and Miss Shibley and to hear the band play. Such a lot of people arrived. It is despairing to have to meet strangers by introduction, but to meet them because of a bond of sudden sympathy, that is good and natural. It's the way marriage ought to be: a natural beautiful meeting without the legal or ecclesiastical bondage that so often makes conditions fester under it. Elizabeth Wallace has promised that she will not introduce another human soul to me [MTP: IVL TS 31].

March 3 Tuesday – Sometime during the Bermuda stay with H.H. Rogers, Elizabeth Wallace recorded her impression of Rogers and the interaction between Clemens and Rogers during card games:

One day as the Rajah [Rogers] came in to the dining room in his slow stately manner, the King who was already seated at the table said, "There he comes just like Gibbs' Lighthouse, stiff and tall turning his lights from side to side." The kindly simile was perfect in a way and I never afterwards saw the Rajah bearing down upon us without seeing the resemblance. The Rajah and the King love each other dearly and manifest their affection by abusing each other whenever the occasion offers and when it doesn't making the opportunity themselves. Our favorite amusement of an evening is to play hearts and the Secretary [Lyon], who always keeps score, writes our names thus, The Author, The Rajah, The Dean, The Secretary. The Author usually prefaces the game by saying to the Rajah in a tone of kindly remonstrance "Now I hope you are not going to show your disagreeable disposition tonight. Do try to show us some pleasant sides of your character." The Rajah with a perfectly serious face replies in the same vein and this is kept up throughout the evening so skillfully that the Secretary and the Dean never grow weary, on the contrary they are convulsed with silent mirth. They—the King and the Rajah—both hold to the theory that the other would be a hopeless outcast were it not for his regenerating influence and they assume a high moral tone when they reason with one another [Hill 204-5].

Charles E.S. Wood wrote from Portland, Ore. to ask Sam for the Pacific Monthly Magazine to submit some article. Wood had been writing for them without pay, but they would pay Clemens. He enclosed several articles from the magazine which are in the file [MTP]. Lyon wrote on the letter, "Answd. May 7, '08" and on the envelope a note "Answd. Mch. 10" with another cryptic note that Sam could not comply due to his contract with Harpers.

March 4 Wednesday – Dorothy Butes wrote from London to Sam.

Dear Dr. Clemens. / Your crimes follow you! In geography, the other day, the Professor said that at a little inn in Germany, where he stayed, in the guest register he had to put down, his name & profession, & just above his name was that of "S.L. Clemens, Profession, Mark Twain"!!

We are in a pretty flat (apartment) of our own, now—It is nice not to be in hotels—one gets so tired of living in trunks—I never saw anything which quite equals the slowness of British Workmen—They put all there pots & pans in the hall, roll up their sleeves, slap each other on the back, & solicitously enquire, "Wot's wrong, old Sport?" of one another—Then they do a little work—At eleven they go off—"for lunch" (they arrived at ten, you know,) and don't turn up again till 2 o'clock—Mother has been so tormented by them that the doctor has ordered her to bed for a few weeks, so the "British Workman" will be "on his own"!

I went to a Dance at Queen's College last night. Very, very few of the girls could "lead," & very few could even "follow" decently—We had a "Waltz Gallop" amongst other things. It was too funny to see our staid and stately English Grammar teacher gallop off like a Bucking Bronco from the Wild West! I & my partner started off in her wake, and bumped into a few couples—

It has been foggy and wretched. I loathe this climate!

You have been down in the Bermudas again, havn't you? We had a lovely stay in Paris—& brought back lots of mechanical toys. I must go and do my German exercises now. I don't see why one couldn't be just as happy without German verbs!

With much love, Your little friend / Dorothy Butes

P.S. Am't you coming over for the London Pageant? London would love to have you (I speak for London!) [MTP; MTAq 115-16].

John M. Howells for Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam about Clara's desire to have the two Lucca della Robbia (1399-1482) plaques set into the wall [MTP].

Frances Nunnally wrote from St. Timothy's to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens,— / I hope you got the letter I sent to you in New York just too late for you to get it before you sailed. In it I told you the lovely pin arrived just after I sent you the letter you received in New York. It hadn't been lost in the mails at all, and I surely am glad for I wouldn't have lost it for anything.

Bermuda must be a beautiful place and I am so glad you went down there, so you will miss the disagreeable cold weather of New York.

Last night we had great excitement here, though it all came out well. While one of the clubs was giving a party in the gymnasium, the school house caught on fire from some of the paper decorations on the walls, and all the favors just went up in one great flame. All the girls got out of the building in about two minutes and no one was hurt at all. The part that wasn't burnt was damaged by water, so we will not be able to use that building for several days. Our dwelling house was not touched, though there was a general confusion, as everything was moved out for fear the fire would spread. Everything was fixed up again to-day and I think we are going to have school to-morrow in a little parish house near here. Though we lost only one day of school, I suppose everything will be more or less confused for the next three or four days, until we can get into our school house gain.

Must stop now / With love, / Francesca [MTP; MTAq 116-17].

March 5 Thursday – Sam appeared on stage at the Princess Hotel ballroom, for the benefit of the Cottage Hospital. He told the story of the “three-dollar dog,” which he had related in his A.D. of Oct. 3, 1907. See entry; also see D. Hoffman p.110-114 for the full tale. Hoffman writes:

Mark Twain told the story as though for the first time, aiming for what he defined in his autobiography as “the captivating naturalness of an impromptu narration.” He added an “application,” another of his techniques. “My friend was partly right,” he said, “when he assured me that the ‘Lord would provide,’ but it is rather doubtful whether the Lord really would have provided for us if I had not bestirred myself.” He continued:

The Bermuda Hospital needs financial assistance and it is very easy and very pleasant to believe that the Lord will provide for such a worthy institution, but it is safer for us to bestir ourselves a little....Therefore, give generously tonight to the cause. The larger the sums, the more cordially they will be received, and if you have not brought your purses with you, the ladies may contribute their jewels and the gentlemen their letters of credit, or express checks, properly endorsed. This does not mean that small sums will not be politely received, but simply means that the degree of enthusiasm for a shilling may be slightly less than one for one hundred pounds....And in closing, Ladies and Gentlemen, let me remind you that the hospital is always fighting pain, and pain is a King who is no respecter of persons [114-15].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King helped in an entertainment tonight for the benefit of the Cottage Hospital. He was rarely welcomed by his audience and when his turn really came—for he introduced a man who made misrepresentations (Faulkner his name is)—he told the Three Dollar Dog story, and he broke down at the point where the general asked if he would sell that dog. He broke down into a hearty boyish laugh [MTP: IVL TS 31-32].

In New York, Clara Clemens participated in another musicale at a private home, this time for Dr. and Mrs. Edward Quintard at 145 West Fifty-eighth Street. Miss Lillian Littlehales played the cello and Charles Wark accompanied on the piano [NY Times, Mar. 6, “Mrs. Quintard Entertains,” p. 7]. Wark, a married man, was to be later romantically linked with Clara. Dr. Quintard was Sam’s regular NYC physician.

Alice Minnie Herts for the Children’s Educational Theatre wrote to Miss Lyon so she might advise Sam of what had been done to incorporate the Educational Theatre [MTP].

Eden Phillpotts wrote from Eltham, Torquay to Sam.

My dear friend / Today your cargo of boys—mostly bad ones—sail for the States. Few men I think would welcome such an inroad as you have done.

May they serve to pass a spare hour or so for one who has in his own amazing gallery so many immortal pictures of “genus puer.”

I much regretted that my agents have not found a home for your book in this country. Perhaps American school boys are different from English ones—& yet that surely is an absurd proposition [MTP].

March 6 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: This morning we had been gaily photographing the King and Irene, in and out of the donkey cart, and they went to the billiard room to be photographed there by a German whose name is uncatchable. I followed by and by to tell the King that the “battery” was waiting to move and looking through the window into the billiard room as I passed along the porch, I saw the King, pale as death, leaning over the table, and the young German rubbing the back of his head. “Do you feel better now?” I heard him say. Then the King straightened himself up and said he did, he thought. It had been just a sudden “crick in his neck,” and the pain is always so acute with him that it makes him weak. All day I too was weak with the memory of the look on his face. We started off for the Spanish Point but we didn’t reach it—and turning home we met Mr. Rogers and Benjamin in a fiacre [hackney coach]. We induced Mr. Rogers and Elizabeth to climb into the battery and after making a photo of the blessed group, Benjamin and I started for a drive and wound up at the Admiralty Gardens, where after a talk with the English chauffer who couldn’t permit us to see the cave, we did see it, and it was very interesting. The Admiral now here is Inglefield. He is sent over in a battleship—he and his family and his 16 servants. He has a very charming home and 5 boats of different grades at his secret and that secret cave to go down into and watch the waters surging in from the sea at the openings that the prisoners made there more than 100 years ago. It is a place to fire the imagination of a Stevenson, or a lesser man too, for the sound of that water is eternal, and the movement of it is too [MTP: IVL TS 32-33]

Frederick T. Leigh for Harper & Brothers wrote to Miss Lyon, advising that $5,057.70 had been deposited in Lincoln National Bank for Clemens [MTP].

John M. Howells for Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam detailing the mantel items and the Robbia terra cotta plaques; other details left to decide were mentioned [MTP].

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens / I hope you are enjoying the balmy sunshine and the lilies of Bermuda better than I am enjoying the sunshine of Plainfield for I am sick in bed and can do nothing but look at it from inside while I dose with “no 77” every hour [Humphrey’s # 77 a cold medicine]. I hope you and Miss Lyon are well and enjoying the comforts of life and the Bermuda air. I wish I were with you but as I am not I wish you would write to me occasionally but then I know you are busy enjoying yourself. Miss Clara sent me some beads which my friend’s and I have enjoyed very much also a very nice note [.] When are you coming to New York again [?] But now I must close [.] With love to Miss Lyon and lots & lots & lots for yourself.

I am your very loving / Dorothy

P.S. I have several new autographs Geraldine Farrar [.] Governor Fort [.] Booker Washington [.] and curso [Enrico Caruso]—I have written Mary Garden and other people / Love / Dorothy [MTP; MTAq 117].

George White wrote from Glen Ridge, NJ to Sam. White had been reading the latest Autobiographical segment and felt Sam’s work on the Mississippi had no equal in literature [MTP].

March 7 Saturday – The Royal Gazette of Hamilton, Bermuda noted the regular appearance of Sam and H.H. Rogers on Front Street. Quoted and summarized by D. Hoffman:

Rogers and Clemens often took short rides to town, and not without attracting notice. An idler on Front Street, the Royal Gazette reported, “may see almost any afternoon, weather permitting, two quiet looking, white haired old gentlemen taking the air in an open carriage, chatting cosily and absorbing with shrewd glances from under bushy eyebrows the sights and the scenes of the street.” Their reputations preceded them—perhaps with help from Upton Sinclair. The same piece said that Sinclair, a “representative of that fast growing class, the American Socialist,” was currently rusticated in Somerset. Of the two old gentlemen that appeared on Front Street, the Gazette continued, one was known as a maker of merriment, while the other was likewise in touch with the world but rather through their pockets than their sense of humor.” Miss Wallace maintained that Rogers, too, was a charming man “with a fund of quiet humor,” but Clemens found that his association with Rogers prompted more questions than his public attentions to schoolgirls. When asked why he befriended a man of so much tainted money, he had a ready answer. “Yes,” he said, “it’s doubly tainted: t’aint yours, and t’aint mine” [105-6].

March 8 Sunday – The New York Times, page 12, ran “Knickerbocker Will Open On March 26,” which announced the reopening of Sam’s bank where he had over $51,000 in deposits. The Knickerbocker Trust Co. bank had suffered a run by frantic depositors and was forced to close shortly after noon on Oct. 2, 1907. It’s likely that Sam received the good news by this day or the next.

H.W. Finlayson wrote from Grassy Bay, Bermuda to Sam (John Gay, Capt. Of Cressy; also signed) Finlayson:

Dear Doctor Clemens: I understand we are cousins and in a closer sense than that you are American and I English. Your dear mother is sister to my (to me) dearer mother!

I am jealous that my Alma Mater was forestalled by Oxford in adopting you.

I regret also that the “exigencies of the service” prevented my being in Oxford—in fact, England—to assist those who desired to do you honour. Think you that we might square yards in some way? May I suggest a way? What if you did us the honour to lunch on board the battleship on Monday or Tuesday? Does that appeal to your sense of humour? If not, will you let it touch that whole-hearted generosity of yours, and come?

We won’t ask you to say anything funny, but will, if you will honour us, show you as much of the ship as you might wish to see, and do our best not to bore you too much.

I have a confession to make—my conscience compels me. Here it is—Fleet-Surgeon F—and I made a pilgrimage yesterday to your present shrine to do you homage. We had one golden opportunity, when you were smoking your after breakfast cigar on the terrace of the hotel, but being the shyest of a shy race, or let me say, the kindest of our kind, we refrained from taking advantage of your only moment of isolation to attack you and achieve the object of our visit. ...

I must apologize for the length of this invitation. My excuse is, that it is not so much an invitation as a humble petition from two / GRATEFUL ADMIRERS-IN-CHIEF [MTP: Mark Twain and the Happy Island, p. 65-66].

March 9 Monday – Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam, enclosing a bill for $2,952.69 for William Webb Sunderland, the 7th payment in his contract [MTP].

March 10 Tuesday – At the invitation of ship’s captain, John Gay, Sam spent much of the day aboard a British Cruiser, the HMS Cressy, enjoying laughter and stories in the Officers’ Mess [Mar. 12 to Quick]. William Evarts Benjamin accompanied him. The Cressy was one of three warships anchored at the Dockyard, Ireland Island, Sandys Parish [D. Hoffman 115-16]. Note: since he did not mention his time aboard ship in the following three letters, they were likely written in the a.m. before boarding. Sam would mention this time aboard the ship to Dorothy Quick in his Mar. 12 letter.

At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to daughter Jean .

Jean dear, we are having an exceedingly good time, & the weather is perfect now. It is American June weather. There’s a plenty of people—every Monday 250 arrive from New York, & half as many sail for New York next day. We make delightful friends, then they fly homeward, & we make a new accumulation in their places. We go driving or sailing or tramping every day, & also we go to teas & lunches, but not to dinner—we don’t go out at night, but stay at home & play cards & billiards.

Mr. Rogers is improving, & likes it here. I believe I can persuade him to stay till near the middle of April; but at first he wanted to get back home. I hope you are having good & satisfactory times & are happy. I have a note from Clara, & she is evidently in fine spirits.

Lovingly, with hugs & kisses / Father [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Mar. 4 from Frances Nunnally.

Yes, you dear Francesca, I got the letter, & was very glad to have it. But if the pin had been lost it wouldn't have mattered, because I find I am likely to be here a month yet, & therefore could get another.

I am very glad no harm came of your fire, but I hope you won't have any more accidents of that kind. It makes me very uncomfortable to hear about it & think of the risks.

I wish you were here, dear. You wouldn't ever be idle. We are busy everyday—sailing, driving, walking, lunching, dancing tea-ing, & so on; & at night we stay at home. We decline night-invitations, & go to bed by 10.30 or 11. Miss Lyon is getting strong & healthy, & Mr. Rogers is improving so decidedly that he is glad he came, & I expect to persuade him to stay until April 11.

The weather is perfect now. It is New York June weather, & I think there is no such thing possible as improving upon that.

Goodnight, Francesca dear. / With love / SLC [MTP; MTAq 119].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Dorothy dear, I am so sorry, sorry, sorry you are sick. I know you ought to come here. This heavenly climate & fine air would soon make you strong & well. It is doing wonders for Miss Lyon & Mr. Rogers. Can't you come? I don't expect to go home before the 1st or 10th of April. I hope your mother can bring you. You are a frail little creature, & you need to get away from doctors & let generous & wise Nature build you up & make you strong. Come to me, you dear Dorothy! You will be so welcome.

Miss Lyon is getting strong & robust, & Mr. Rogers is improving so decidedly that he has stopped talking about going back home—so I am hoping & expecting to keep him here until April 11th. We are having very lively times every day—sailing, driving, walking, lunching, dancing; & at night we play billiards & cards & never go out, to dinners or anywhere else. I am now so strong that I suppose I could pull up one of these islands by the roots & throw it half way to New York. In fact I know I could.

Write you? Certainly I shall. I don't intend to ever be too busy to write to my dear Dorothy.

Good-bye, with lots & lots of love— / SLC [MTP; MTAq 118].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King and Benjamin went out to the Cressy to lunch with the regular mess and were escorted by Mr. John Gay, and Fleet Surgeon Finlayson. They went gaily off in the admiral's launch, and when he came back the King said that the day had been perfect. We waited for over an hour to be called for by that admiral's launch. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman, Lafreda, and Madelon Wier and Elizabeth—to go out to the Cressy for tea—but the boat didn't come, and we had a sad sense of defeat, so we sat on the porch and had a riotous dish of tea with rum in it, and watched for the King to come back to us. These days are sweet—even the days with a sense of defeat [MTP: IVL TS 33]

Irene Gerken left the islands on this day. The New York Times of Apr. 19, 1908, p.4 would run a photo of Sam and Irene on the dock in Bermuda, possibly taken on this day.

The ledger books of Chatto & Windus show that 1,000 additional copies (3s.6d.) of Pudd'nhead Wilson were printed, totaling 12,000 [Welland 238].

March 11 Wednesday – Sam attended a garden party at the Governor J.H. Wodehouse's house and enjoyed music by a British band, which he called the “best band in the British army save one—the Horseguards” [Mar. 12 to Quick]. Note: if IVL's lined out phrase for this date means anything, Benjamin went with him.

March 12 Thursday – At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam began a letter to Dorothy Quick that he added to on Mar. 13, and 16. Sam relates activities of this day, as well as time spent on Mar. 10 and 11.

My poor little Dorothy, I hope you are well again, & will write a line & tell me so. I wish you were here—you would be on your feet right away.

We are to be here about 20 days yet. We sail for New York April 1.

It is very pleasant. There is always something going on. Yesterday it was a large garden party at the governor's, & there was music by the best band in the British army save one—the Horseguards. I have not heard such lovely music except at the King's garden-party last summer, when the Horse Guards band played.

Day before yesterday I spent the day on a British cruiser, & had a screaming good time (the screaming was laughter over yarns in the officers' mess). And yesterday Miss Lyon, & 5 other ladies were the cruiser's guests, & they had a screaming good time too.

To-day five of us men drove to St George's, over beautiful roads with charming scenery & the wonderful blue water always in sight—distance 12 miles—and we dined at the hotel. However, on the way there we visited a wonderful cave that was discovered in December by a couple of black boys—the most beautiful cave in the world I suppose. We descended 150 steps & stood in a splendid place 250 feet long & 30 or 40 wide, with a brilliant lake of clear water under our feet & all the roof overhead splendid with shining stalactites, thousands & thousands of them as white as sugar, & other thousands & thousands of them brown & pink & other tints. All lighted with acetylene jets.

Every Friday night there's a ball in the hotel; & I look on. I go out to teas & lunches, but not to dinners. I stay at home, nights.

There's a lot of lovely sailboats, & we often go sailing in them. They are wonderfully handled by colored sailors. You dear child, if you were only here! There's a little bit of a donkey-cart, & a little bit of a donkey named Maude, & we would make trips to Spanish Point. It is 3 miles, & Maude can go there in an hour & a half. There is a pretty beach there, & the water is crystal-clear. But you can't bathe there, for lack of bath houses [MTP; MTAq 119-20].

March 13 Friday – At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam added to his Mar. 12 to Dorothy Quick.

Friday, 9 p.m. This has been a lovely summer day, very brilliant & not uncomfortably warm. If you would only come, you could stop those deadly medicines & soon get well.

The ball has begun, & I think I will go down & look on.

Dear child I am taking the liberty of appointing you to membership in my “Aquarium”—if you will let me. It consists of 5 angel-fishes & one shad. I am the shad. The device of the club is a very small angel-fish pin, to be worn on the breast. I will fetch it when I come. I have to wear a flying-fish pin, until I can get a shad made [MTP].

Irene Gerken wrote to Sam including her charming spelling.

We arrived safely and found lovely spring weather. The trip was fine only I was a little sick. I met a lot of friends on board and so was not very lonesome. How is Mr. Roggers? I hope he is much better, and when he leaves I hope he will have recovered all to geather. My bird was not the least sick and now he is talking all the time. Please give my love to Miss Lion and Miss Wallace. Mother and Father wish to be remembered to you. With lots of love from all / Your little Angel Fish / Irene Gerken [MTP; MTAq 121].

Harry P. Wood for Hawaii Promotion Co. wrote to Sam, offering to “place some article of furniture in one of the rooms that would serve to continually recall to your mind the days you spent in these Islands many years ago.” They suggested either a chair or a mantel [MTP]. Note: see Nov. 30, 1908 entry for picture of chair.

Howells & Stokes wrote two typed letters to Sam, going over details on the Redding house: the sewage disposal plant and the gas lighting plant, with costs. The second letter noted that Clemens had left the matter of the mantel designs with them and they would aim at the “simplest and best effects.” [MTP].

March 14 Saturday – At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam began a letter to Frances Nunnally that he added a PS to on Mar. 16.

I was very glad to get your letter, Francesca dear, & also glad that you all escaped uninjured from the fire. But I hope you won't be subjected to any more risks of that kind.

It is lovely summer weather here, now, splendidly sunny & yet not too hot. I believe this is the best climate in the world. The sailing, among the islands is delightful, & the water is divinely blue. The drives are very fine, too. I wish you were here.

We sail for New York April 1, arriving Thursday April 3—and then it will soon be Easter & you will let us fetch you to New York for a visit, won't you? I am depending on it, and I hope I shan't be disappointed.

Are you growing out of my knowledge? Would I know you if I met you on the street in a strange town? I hope so. / Lovingly / SLC [MTP; MTAq 122]. Note: see Mar. 16 for P.S.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I've got 2 old Bermudian cedar chairs. They are darlings" [MTP: IVL TS 33].

The New York Times, p. BR140 ran this notice:

Completing Mark Twain's Works.

The American Publishing Company of Hartford, Conn., has just issued the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth volumes of Mark Twain's collected writings in order to complete the sets of the various uniform editions published by them. These volumes are important ones, and contain many of the stories, sketches, and articles written by Mr. Clemens during the last five years, and also a number of earlier stories, which a careful search, under Mr. Clemens's supervision, has brought to light, and which, in many cases, rank with his best work.

March 15 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: The Yoke—Hubert Wales. / We lunched with Mrs. Peck today and had some wonderful Bermudian Pepperpot. The heart of it was a chicken and it had strange spices and pepper corns. It came on the table in what is called a buck kettle—a big black heavy old kettle, full of the flavor of many pepperpots. But first of all we drove up to Prospect to hear the Sunday morning band play, and to see the charming English people, and the pretty Americans under the trees, and the brilliant red coated bands and scatteringly few soldiers making a lovely picture. We went up with young Mr. and Mrs. Graham and Mr. Trumbull. The close of the day was the best—for we went to the King's room and he lay on his white bed and read Kipling to us [MTP: IVL TS 33-34]. Note: The Yoke (1907), by Hubert Wales, about a mother who seduces her son in order to keep him from a wicked woman, brought civil charges. Not in Gribben. This may have been Lyon's book. There's no evidence Sam read or was aware of it. Mary Allen Hulbert Peck.

D. Hoffman gives us an account of this day's activities, adding from Elizabeth Wallace's diary:

On March 15, after another Sunday morning drive to Prospect for the band concert, Clemens and his party rode to Shoreby, where Mrs. Peck entertained them with her favorite dish, West Indian pepper pot. It was brought to the table in a "big black heavy old kettle," Miss Lyon said. Typically, pepper pot took three or four days to prepare, with strips of pork, beef, and poultry cooked with cassareep, peppers, thyme, and salt. Mrs. Peck said it was a heathen dish, best enjoyed on Sundays. Although mild at first taste, Miss Wallace wrote, it soon began to burn insidiously. Clemens approved, but said a little more pepper was needed. The day ended in his hotel room with more readings from Kipling's poems [119].

March 16 Monday – At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam finished his Mar. 12 and 13 to Dorothy Quick.

March 16. The Bermudian has arrived, with / 60 bags of mail & 250 passengers. She sails to-morrow.

We don't sail April 1. We have postponed to April 11. I am sorry, but Mr. Rogers is improving ever so fast, & we want him to stay as long as he will. Bermuda is better than four or five or six million doctors. Don't you forget that, dear. / With lots of love [MTP].

Sam also added a P.S. to his Mar. 14 to Frances Nunnally.

P.S. March 16 (Monday.) We don't sail homeward April 1. We have postponed it to April 11. Francesca dear, I am taking the liberty of appointing you to membership in my "Aquarium." (Club). It contains 5 angel-fishes & one shad. I am the shad. The badge of the club is a very small angel-fish pin, to be worn on the breast. I will bring it when I come. I have to wear a flying-fish until I can get a shad-pin made [MTP].

Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers) arrived in Bermuda on the Bermudian. On Mar. 23 Sam noted in his letter to daughter Clara that Emilie had not been in good health upon her arrival but that by then she was “much improved.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mrs. Rogers arrived today. She has a peculiar nervous affection of the right arm and hand” [MTP: IVL TS 34].

Archibald Henderson wrote to Isabel Lyon advising he was sending Clemens the typed chapter on “Mr. Shaw’s Philosophy” [MTP]. Note: likely George Bernard Shaw’s philosophy, which was close to Clemens’.

William Webb Sunderland wrote from Danbury, Conn. confirming receipt of Sam’s Mar. 9 letter with amount of seventh payment (as per contract). He thanked Clemens and reported they had framed the loggia [MTP.]

March 17 Tuesday – Howells & Stokes sent another typed advisory about the Redding house under construction, specifically the wainscoting in the various bathrooms [MTP].

March 18 Wednesday – Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Sam, enclosing their readers’ criticism of the JA play produced by John W. Postgate [MTP].

The New York Times, p. 7 “Great Men’s Letters Sold at Auction” reported that three letters from Mark Twain sold for greater amounts than those from Theodore Roosevelt, William Jennings Bryan, Andrew Carnegie, and others.

March 19 Thursday – Irene Gerken wrote her typical no-periods note to Sam. “I received your letter this evening and was very glad to hear from you you say you are lonesome Why I should think Miss Allen would fill my place Allthough I am far away I hear all the news. By the score you sent me of the cards I see Mr Rodgers has lost every game I am very glad that you had a good time at the War ship and if I had knowen you were there I might of seen you.” She asked after Maud and Reginald [MTP].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote a short note to Isabel Lyon (though catalogued as to Clemens) [MTP]. Note: there are many letters in the file to Lyon which are catalogued as to Clemens. Though somer are listed in this volume, not all are.

John M. Howells for Howells & Stokes wrote again to Sam with many details about the Redding house, including placques, stonework and a possible fountain [MTP].

W.A. Morschhauser wrote from NYC to advise Sam that he’d sent “a few” photos he’d taken in Bermuda; if he wished more to please advise [MTP].

The Playground Assoc. sent an engraved invitation to meet Mrs. Humphry Ward at a dinner at the Waldorf on Mar. 31 [MTP]. Note: IVL wrote: “Answd. Mch. 19—Mr. C. in Bermuda, wd. Forward invitation, etc.”

C. Brereton Sharpe for the Plasmon Syndicate, London wrote to Sam enclosing the Mar. 18 issue of Truth, which had an article on Plasmon that Sharpe felt was “a good advertisement” [MTP].

March 20 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: We went to the Hastings for tea today at four o’clock, It was assembled out on the beautiful point, and though there were a lot of people there, our own clan was the dearest. The others gave us no thrills. The King and I drove over with Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, the Rajah on the box, (Betsy is naughty—she says Mrs. Rogers could be called a Eunuch because she is the Rajah’s manager.) and after the tea and the sandwiches we drove around to the North Shore, and got out to look down a cliff side into the water 100 feet below. To look into Bermuda water, it is a blast of poetry just to say it. The King is having a darling time with 2 little girls—Jean Spurr and Helen Martin. Jean wears a blond wig and has no eye brows or lashes, but the King doesn’t care about a detail like that. He sees into her fair young soul and is very glad [MTP: IVL TS 34-35]. Note: see Mar. 23 entry.

March 21 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Such a wonderful day we have had, for Mrs. Rogers organized a party to go to Somerset, 12 miles away and to lunch there. We set out at eleven; Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. [Zoheth] Freeman, the King, Mr. Weir, Mrs. Peck, Mrs. [Marion Schuyler] Allen, Mr. John Wayland, Elizabeth [Wallace] and I. And the drive around by Paget and through Warwick was beautiful with glimpses of wide views of these waters through cedared openings, with each house more quaint and satisfying in its architecture than the last one, with darkeys bending over the vast onion fields, patiently thinking they are finding weeds; with the oleanders just coming into bloom; with the life plant lifting its stately bells, and with the sight of the King’s beautiful head always away in front, 3 carriages ahead. Then the drive home was even better, for John Wayland and I talked alone, and he said that his father had said of the King that the King stands for the same things that Lincoln stands for—that he is of the same greatness, and it is very true [MTP: IVL TS 35].

March 22 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Betsy, the King and I drove up to Prospect to hear the band play. We sat on a cab rug under the trees and watched that colony of red coated players with its graceful leader, and we watched the little children who were enraptured by the music, and who gamboled around through “the forest of legs” (Betsy) and tumbled over the dogs and were so very, very happy. They were great human beings in little, and showed openly the characteristics that their elders were concealing under stolid masks. Sometimes a riotous bonnet would reveal a hearty heavy with the love of color. But oh, the outward show of us all. The King is happiest in white. I am most comfortable in yellows; and today Mrs. Freeman told me that living as I am with the greatest human being, there can be no danger of my ever over dressing the part, the danger will be in my failure to dress up to it. The King would love to have me in rich soft clinging silks and splendid or delicate colors; and when I told him what Mrs. Freeman had advised me to do, he said that she was a wise woman [MTP: IVL TS 35-36].

March 23 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Yesterday the King, Mr. Rogers and I drove over to call on Sir Bronlow Grey’s elderly daughters who have never been off these islands. He was attorney general here and in those old days he would not let them leave, and now they are afraid to venture, I believe.

This morning the King started off on a picnic with Jean and Helen to be gone all day; and we, Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Freeman, and the Waylands lunched with Mrs. Peck again, and again had pepperpot. Col. Frewen was there. He talked to me about South African and the Boer War and about India and his brother who sat at the other end of the table and who was the discoverer of Kipling; found his youthful contributions to some local paper to be full of interest and said that he was a rising genius, but was snubbed for his pains. And now those who snubbed him are having a bitter laugh at themselves.

Mr. Wayland said on Saturday that Mrs. Peck is reaching out for friends. People here think she is not sincere [MTP: IVL TS 36-37]. Note: Sir Moreton Frewen; Mary Allen Hulbert Peck; Jean Spurr and Hellen Elizabeth Martin. Jean was thirteen and from Newark. Helen was twelve and from Montreal, Canada [D. Hoffman 118-19].

At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to daughter Clara.

Dear heart, it isn’t “better than Mark ever done.” They used to shorten-up base-ball games to ’tend my lectures. And as for mere charity entertainments, they didn’t dast to play agin me at all, except Sundays, & then I squashed them. But you are coming along, dear, you are coming along. You are getting splendid notices, & I am aware that you deserve them. It makes me very glad.

We are having good times. To-day I went pic-nicking with some other children, & romped in the sand on the sea-shore about 6 hours. I returned dog-tired, & at first I thought I oughtn’t to have went, but 2 hours of billiards rested me up again.

Mr. Rogers was pretty poorly when we came down here, & Miss Lyon was not much better off, but both are in much improved condition now. There was nothing the matter with me, yet I seem to have improved a little myself.

Our sailing-date is April 11. / With heaps of love / Marcus [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean in Greenwich, Conn.

There is nothing to report to you, Jean dear, except the weather, & it may be pronounced perfect. Tomorrow the ship will carry away a number of pleasant friends, & she didn't bring any in their places—not a single familiar face. But no matter, there's plenty of good times, & I like Bermuda ever so much.

I hope you will find a place that will be entirely satisfactory to you & your friends—but be sure it is close to New York, because I want you to be near Dr. Peterson, & also near enough for me to see you, & I can't stand long land-journeys. However, you'll find the right place, no doubt. When you think you have found it, submit it to Dr. Peterson, & if it satisfies him it will satisfy me.

Mrs. Rogers is here, now, but her health is bad, & I think the climate does not altogether agree with her.

I believe I will go to bed, now. I have been pic-nicking & billiarding 9 hours to-day.

With lots & lots of love

Father [MTP].

Sam also sent a postcard with a photo of the “Royal Palms” to Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J., adding:

The weather is perfect, & if you want some of it for your own use or for sale, please let me know, & I will see that you get all you want—but our government will swindle you on the duty, as it does on all imports./ S.L.C [MTP].

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam with Sunderland's estimate of $450 for the sleeping porch “as designed for Miss Clemens opening over the west end of the loggia and projecting from her room.” He included specifications for the addition [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II wrote to ask Sam if he would sign the enclosed letter (not in file) or write one of his own, as a testimonial for the Hope-Jones organ to Daniel Frohman [MTP].

March 24 Tuesday – At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Francesca dear, this note will leave here 4 days hence by a slow steamer, & reach you 8 days from now—April 1. We sail April 11 & reach New York April 13th—Tuesday. Miss Lyon & my daughter will then go to Redding, Conn., where we are building a house, & return at the week-end—Saturday, April 18.

Then on Monday Miss Lyon will go to Baltimore & stay over night & fetch you home to New York Tuesday, & rest you up, & take you back to your school by the time it opens.

You consent, don't you, dear? There is a comfortable room for you, & I would give you two if I could—or a dozen, if I had them. You will give us this pleasure, won't you? The ship that fetches us home will leave New York the 9th of April, & if you write me by the 7th (to above address) I shall get your letter before we go hence. I am hoping you will say yes, dear heart. / With love, SLC [MTP].

Miss Elizabeth Wallace and her mother left the Islands on this day [D. Hoffman 119].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Betsy [Elizabeth Wallace] has gone away on the Bermudian. I've come to my room very lonely and very forlorn, and my spirit is covered with white blisters. Again I say it, that I must not let myself love people—but forever I am doing it. It is just as I said to Ashcroft: Betsy is wonderful because she understands a thousand things she does not know or even suspect. She lives out her dean-ship of the Junior College in the University of Chicago with not entire interest; for she is a living throbbing woman, and meant to be living a stronger throbbing life [MTP: IVL TS 37].

Victor H. Paltsits wrote on NY State Capitol letterhead to invite Sam to the annual dinner for the New York Library Club on Thursday, Apr. 30, at the Aldine Assoc [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd Mch. 25—wd. Forward his letter to Mr. Clemens in Bermuda. Date of his return uncertain”

March 25 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Bermuda: Mr. and Mrs. Freeman took me for tea at the Women’s Exchange. We sat up on the latticed balcony and watched the darkeys in afternoon toilets, and the other folks go by and then we drove out to Spanish Point and around by the North Shore and to visit some charming rentable vacant houses, and that started me to telling the Freemans about Redding and Lyonesse and they want to go there too. Someone—Dr. Gallanded—has written to say that the King’s name has been suggested for the Nobel Prize [MTP: IVL TS 37-38].

Frances Nunnally wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens,—

I am sure I have not changed so much that you would not know me in a strange place, and I really do not think I have changed at all, unless I have gained some flesh.

I am deeply honored to be a member of the “Aquarium,” which from the number of members I see is a very select club.

We have not had anymore excitement of any kind since the fire, and we have once more gotten back into our school house. Everything is in running order now just like it always was. We only have three weeks now before our Easter holidays begin, and I can hardly wait until that time. I think Mother is coming up to take me to New York, but I shall certainly see you while I am there. If we go to Europe this summer as we hope to do, we will have to make our preparations and do all our shopping at Easter, as we shall probably sail as soon as school is out in June. I am making all these plans in my mind, but I am not sure that we are going abroad at all. Any how I shall be in New York in about three weeks and I surely hope to see you there.

Hoping you are still having a fine time in Bermuda, I am / With love, / Francesca [MTP; MTAq 123-4].

C.F. Stromeyer, Furniture & Upolstery, NYC, wrote acknowledging Clemens’ letter and informing that they had shipped the Mantel to Harry Lounsbury and William Robertson Coe [MTP].

March 26 Thursday – Dr. Frederick Peterson wrote to Isabel Lyon recommending that Jean Clemens, her two nurses, and young friend Marguerite Schmidt (or Schmitt), who shared a cottage in Greenwich, Conn., might prefer Gloucester, Mass. On Apr. 18, Lyon and one of the nurses, Edith Cowles, would go to Gloucester and select a cottage for the girls [Hill 197; MTP]. Note: IVL wrote: “Heartily approve of Gloucester”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: We dined—a lot of us—with Mr. and Mrs. Wayland, here in the hotel—Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, and Mr. & Mrs. Weir, Mrs. Peck, Mr. Ely, the King and I and afterward we all came up to the King’s room to hear him read Kipling. He was never in better spirit—never in completer understanding and John Wayland said that to hear such an appreciation of an appreciation—as in the “Sailor and Soldier Too,” poem—was a thing never again to be repeated. I suggested it to John Wayland, knowing that sometimes the King is weary after a dinner, or bored which is worse—and I knew that every soul there would treasure the memory of it, and then Mrs. Peck would have a place to smoke in. She wore a very beautiful gown that she called one of her “life-boats”—she is a bewitching woman, and a snare for men folk [MTP: IVL TS 38]. Note: Mary Allen Hulbert Peck, Robert Erksine Ely.

Margery H. Clinton wrote to Sam.

I telephoned to your house the other day, to find out if you had returned from Bermuda, and was told that you would not be back until April. I am so sorry, because I wanted to see you before sailing for Europe. Mother and I are leaving next Tuesday (the 31st), by the steamer Hamburg, for Gibraltar....

Looking back over this winter, my pleasantest recollections are the good times you have given me, and I want to thank you again for being so sweet to me... [MTP; not in MTAg].

March 27 Friday – The Bermuda Royal Gazette of Mar. 31 reported Sam's reading of Kipling's poems at Shoreby on Mar. 27 for the guests of Mrs. Mary Allen Peck: "He read these in a tone and with a depth of feeling that gave to the verses a value seldom recognized" [D. Hoffman 108]. Note: Gribben offers more detail:

...Clemens repeatedly read aloud to groups of vacationing Americans in Bermuda in 1908. "These people had never, never heard anything of the real Kipling before," an admiring Isabel Lyon commented in her journal. Following a reading on March 27th Miss Lyon heard one of the fifteen people present, a Mr. Chamberlain, declare that "there isn't anyone else in the world who could read between the lines as the King can" (Lyon's journal, TS 313, MTP). Another account of these Kipling readings appears in Elizabeth Wallace's valuable if saccharine memoir, Mark Twain and the Happy Island (1913), pp. 93-100. Miss Wallace, the dean of women at the University of Chicago, heard Clemens entertain Henry H. Rogers and other friends in his hotel room in Hamilton on several occasions in March and April 1908. She remembered that Clemens held his pipe in one hand and gesticulated with it during highly dramatic passages. Rogers urged his friend Clemens not to read "too slowly" [376].

The New York Times, p. 1 included a short article about Mark Twain in Bermuda:

NEWS FROM MARK TWAIN.

Enjoying Himself in Bermuda and Teaching Little Girls to be Wise.

Some new epigrams by Mark Twain were brought home yesterday by the Quebec Line steamer Bermudian from Bermuda. Among the passengers was Miss Jeanne [sic Jean] Spurr, a Newark little girl, who proudly showed a ball programme on which Mr. Clemens had written:

"Considering the proportion of things, it is better to be a young June bug than an old bird of Paradise."

C.H. Pedrie of Glens Falls, N.Y., told of an incident at the ball. Mr. Clemens, seeing another little girl making faces and otherwise causing consternation to her guardians, wrote on her programme:

"Never do anything naughty when any one's looking."

Mr. Pedrie said that Mark Twain spends most of his time romping with the children and telling them stories.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Two days ago I gave Mrs. Freeman "Eve's Diary" to read and today when I went to her room and she said she had finished it between laughter and tears, and that she didn't see how a man could ever get into the heart of a woman as he had done, she finished her worshipful delight by saying "but he is just a combination of God and women and little children, and so he is the perfect man." It was a darling tribute for me to be able to bring back to the King, and he gathered it to his heart, as only he could.

This afternoon we went over to Mrs. Peck's, for last night the King said he would read Kipling over there to Col. Graham, and someone else, and the someone else ran up to about 15. These people had never, never heard anything of the real Kipling before for as Mr. Chamberlain said: there isn't anyone else in the world who could read between the lines as the King can. It was a proud hour for me, and almost spoiled a little by having Josephine Bacon recite some baby verses and then stand and bid for the applause that she got—of course—and the King was annoyed almost into showing that annoyance [MTP: IVL TS 38-39].

I.K. Funk for Funk & Wagnalls wrote, enclosing a tract, "A Uniform Alphabet For Respelling for Pronunciation" and asking his "careful attention." The tract was "sent only for criticism" and not for public use. "I would take it as a special favor if you should write me fully" [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Answrd Mch. 30 – wd. File to mail Mr. C's return / He cannot do these things—"

Howells & Stokes wrote again with more details on the Redding house's finishing touches [MTP].

March 28 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Bermuda: Sometimes it seems to me as if each person were surrounded by a wonderful color, and that is a sacrilege to try to penetrate it. There be some whose color could never be merged into that of another person, but in the main there is only one person in all the world whose color would match with its mate, to make a perfect harmony. For we can’t be many things to many people. I look at all these people and they seem either monotonous or crude in coloring, but suddenly a comet goes by in flashing beauty, and we clap our hands in joy at the splendid vision and recognition of it. I lunched with all the Waylands today at Ardsheal, and Mr. Wayland drove me home talking brilliantly during the splendid glimpses we got of the south shore. Thursday night John Wayland seemed to rebuke me for loving the King as I do and said I mustn’t be a “priestess”. Last night after a dance we thrashed it out on the porch and now he knows that I couldn’t even aspire to that great place [MTP: IVL TS 39-40].

The New York Times, p. BR177 included the following anecdote:

When Authors Are Tonguetied.

A few weeks ago, at a dinner given to Gertrude Atherton in London, a story was told by a woman who had been present at a New York luncheon when Mrs. Atherton and Mr. Clemens were introduced and placed next each other. Mark Twain thought his neighbor was about to speak, and gallantly waited for her, while Mrs. Atherton, with her customary reserve of manner, waited for him. There ensued a chilly silence, which was broken by Mark Twain saying, as he shook his white locks: “Child, child, don’t be so terribly boisterous.”

March 29 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: The band concert at Prospect when dear John Wayland and the King sat on a rug apart from a batch of women, for when he goes to listening to music he doesn’t want anything else. No feminine chatter—and up near the tennis court sat Madame Wayland, and Mrs. John W. and Josephine Dascomb [sic Daskam] Bacon—such a chatterer—and a Mrs. Gordon. Then home. This afternoon we went over to the Long Beach on the South Shore where the King and Zoe Freeman went in swimming. The King at 72 was as young and vigorous in his wide strokes as a youth would have been [MTP: IVL TS 40]. Note: Josephine Dodge Daskam Bacon (Mrs. Selden Bacon) (1876-1961) poet and author of novels and several stories published in Atlantic, Scribner’s and other magazines [Who’s Who in America 1908-1909, p. 68]. She was also a pioneer in the Girl Scouts movement and compiled their guidebook.

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr Clemens.

I wrote you a long letter last week but by some mistake it was not mailed in time for Saturday steamer so I am writing again I will mail this one at once so there can be no mistake I know from your letter it must be beautiful in Bermuda and I should love to be there with you and make the acquaintance of Maud I am sure we would all be very good friends and have lots of fun together I have one more autograph of F. S. Church (artist) it is very nice, he drew a picture and autographed it wasn’t that nice of him? I am doing very well in school now. I have a lot of stamps and am getting along very well with my collections I suppose the lilies are out now they must be beautiful I shall be very glad when you are back but I do not blame you for wanting to stay as long as you [can] as the weather here is very changable. Hot one day cold the next. With lots & lots of love to you and Miss Lyon I am / your very loving Dorothy

P.S. I am so glad I am a member of the Aquarium lots of love [MTP]. Note: the source surmises the artist was Frederic E. Church, landscape painter who lived near Hudson New York, and had a brief friendship with Twain in 1888 [n1].

March 30 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “We had a darling lazy sail this afternoon with Mr. and Mrs. Freeman, and then tea in the billiard room—that to give Zoe Freeman a chance for a cup, for he was tired” [MTP: IVL TS 40].

Among new arrivals to the Islands were the fourth Earl Grey (1851-1917), (aka Albert Henry George Grey) Governor General of Canada (1904-1911), and Nicholas Murray Butler (1862-1947) president of Columbia University (1902-1945) [D. Hoffman 120]. Note: Alice Holford Grey, Mrs. Earl Grey (d. 1944), was also along on the trip. Canadian football's Grey Cup is named for Lord Grey, a supporter of the sport.

David C. Grant for Lincoln National Bank wrote to advise Sam that of the two checks he'd presented, drawn on the Knickerbocker Trust Co. they had been able to cash the $5,000 check but not the $45,000 [MTP]. Note: this letter enclosed in Ashcroft's Apr. 1.

March 31 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King is going boating with Nicholas Murray Butler and Lord Gray [sic Grey] who arrived yesterday on the Bermudian" [MTP: IVL TS 40-41]. Note: Albert Henry George Grey, 4th Earl Grey (1851–1917) served as Canada's Ninth Governor General (1904-1911). He established the Grey Cup for the Canadian football championship. The Cup was initially for the top amateur rugby team in 1909, but since 1965 it has been the prize for the top professional football team.

At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally at St. Timothy's School in Catonsville, Maryland.

Your letter has come, Francesca dear, you dear indefinite little body! But anyway, you are coming to New York, & that is something. I do hope your mother will let me have you part of the time.

Won't she go to the Grosvenor? It is the nicest, quietest, genteel little hotel in all New York. We have used no other for a good many years. It is on the corner of 10th and 5th avenue, just a block from our house. Tell her I know she will like the Grosvenor.

We sail April 11, arriving the 13th a day or so before you arrive. Do you know my telephone address (it isn't in the book): "3907 Gramercy." With love ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Insert Below: Pitt's Bay with Bay House on left, Princess Hotel on right.

You dear little Dorothy, this is only a line to say I hope you are not still looking out upon the snow-storms from a sick bed & taking "77," but are up & around & well again. Next time you are sick you must come to Bermuda, then you won't need any medicines.

We sail for home April 11, & then I shall see you./ Lovingly ... [MTP]. Note: Humphreys #77 was a common cold medicine of the day.

According to D. Hoffman this is the day Sam met another angelfish, Helen Schuyler Allen (b. 1894), thirteen year old daughter of William H. Allen and Marion Schuyler Allen. William Allen was the vice-consul under W. Maxwell Greene. Helen's grandmother, Susan Elizabeth Allen, then 82, knew Olivia Langdon Clemens when she was only a small child (Susan died in 1909). Sam knew Helen's grandfather, Charles Allen when he was American consul in the days of Innocents Abroad. Helen was not a tourist, but lived across Pitt's Bay from the hotel. She had come to watch the dancing at the hotel [120]. Note: In his Apr. 17, 1908 A.D. he described Helen Allen as “aged 13, native of Bermuda, perfect in character, lovely in disposition, and a captivater at sight!” [140].

Note: Hoffman also writes that Sam visited Susan Allen when he learned of the family’s Elmira connections, and talked for an hour and a half [120]. Hoffman does not specify if the visit was on this day, but since the dancing was in the evening, the visit was likely the following day, or later. Helen would visit Sam at Stormfield on Oct. 16-17, 1909. / Bay House & Princess Hotel

Lawrence B. Evans wrote to advise Sam that at a meeting of the Boston Authors Club he’d been elected an honorary member [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd April 3 – Mr. C. in Bermuda, wd. File carefully to mail, etc.”

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam that Isabel Lyon had authorized proceeding with the sleeping porch. They also advised of other details and blueprints and mantels [MTP].

Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Isabel Lyon (though catalogued as to Clemens); would he consent to a flat royalty of $50 per week for all performances of “How I Became an Editor” for Arnold Daly? [MTP].

April – Gessford’s photograph of Mark Twain ran in Forum, facing p. 441. “No significant commentary” [Tenney, ALR Third Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1979) 192].

April 1 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Bermuda: The Bermudian sailed away with such a cargo of folks. The greatest “miss” as these Bermuda darkeys say, is the Waylands. Another of the King’s angel fish went too. He has his aquarium of little girls and they are all angel fish, while he wears a flying fish scarf pin, though he says he is a shad. Off he goes with a flash when he sees a new pair of slim little legs appear and if the little girl wears butterfly bows of ribbon on the back of her head then his delirium is complete [MTP: IVL TS 41].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Isabel Lyon, enclosing the Apr. 30 from Lincoln National Bank. He asked her opinion of various department stores in NYC. Also: “I saw Betsy and her mother off to Chicago. Betsy is quite my ideal of a girl.” [MTP]. Note: “Betsy” was Elizabeth Wallace.

Margaret Blackmer wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens:— / I received your nice letter and card.

I would like very much to join your club. I think it would be a very nice one.

I like the shell more and more every day, don’t you?

Mother is out west and will be out for a long time. Maybe I can get Miss Tewksbury to bring me down to see you in the Easter vacation.

Today lots of pie beds were made and we played a lot of jokes on each other.

With lots of love. / Yours lovingly. / Margaret B. [MTAq 131-2]. Note: source claims “pie beds” were short-sheeted pranks.

April 2 Thursday – Clemens was in Bermuda.

April 3 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Bermuda: “I’ve just been reading AB’s article on Stedman in the April ‘Pearson’s’ and somehow it isn’t all Stedman at all. I’m afraid that some of it is a eulogization of Paine through a dead man” [MTP: IVL TS 37-38].

Kendrick Lewis for Louisville Male High School wrote twice to Sam. One is a formal letter of thanks bound in blue cardboard, thanking him for the right to put on a P&P play. The other is a short note inviting him to a performance of the play on Apr. 24 or 25 [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd. Apr. 6. Mr. C. may return abt. Apr. 13 – Thanked him for Mr. C. wd. Hold letter & ‘greeting’ to mail his return.”

April 4 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Bermuda: We went out to the Euryalus again to the children’s party this time—and it was a rough little voyage. 15 of us had to cramp-up in a tiny cabin and our stomachs felt badly. But we got inside the breakwater and onto the flagship and officers Gray and Boyer and Beatty showed us about and were very good to us and made the children adorably happy. We went into the Bake room, and into the “Sick-Bay,” and we climbed into the turrets and saw the beautiful great guns and heard about the workings of them, and then all the children and the King and we women (Mrs. Allen, Mrs. Marsh, Mrs. Butterfield and I) sat down to tea and 14 kinds of cake. It was so good to see the King in his happiness sitting between Helen Allen and Dorothy Darrell, and putting his panama hat on top of Helen’s nob-on-her-head as a hat rack, and he eating cakes and drinking ginger pop, and loving it all. Going out in that rough little sea, the King sat in a corner of the cabin reading Woodrow Wilson “Mere Literature,” and he didn’t seem to realize that he had a lot of giggling youngsters there—or more likely he never read a word but took it all in with the tail of his eye and the tail of his ear [MTP: IVL TS 41-42].

Daniel Frohman for the Lyceum Theatre wrote to Sam. “I am to-day in receipt of your letter of March 31st. I did not know that Jervis Langdon was your nephew and so I just happened to treat him with unusual politeness.” His enthusiasm was somewhat held back by the $20,000 price of the Hope-Jones organ; he wondered if it were adaptable to the theater. He added, “I shall convey to Margaret Illington your message...” [MTP]. Note: Margaret Illington was at this time Mrs. Daniel Frohman.

Hellen Elizabeth Martin wrote to Sam. In part: “We arrived at home on Sunday morning April 5th, We stayed five days in New York and had a fine time there. We found our cat had run away on Saturday evening, We did not get him back until Monday morning. Our dog was delighted at our coming back. How are you feeling. I was very sick on the boat and so was Mother, it was very rough coming back.” [MTP; not in MTAq].

Frances Nunnally wrote from St. Timothy’s school to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens,— / Your letter reached me this morning, and I am awfully sorry to have to tell you that I will not be able to come to New York at all during the holidays. I did not know this until two days ago, when Mother wrote and said she thought I had better come home. I certainly am disappointed that I will not be able to pay you a visit, for I had been looking forward to it with a great deal of pleasure. We have about decided to go abroad right after school closes in June, and as I will not have time to go home then, Mother things it best that I come at Easter. So I will have to give up my trip to New York.

Must stop so this letter will get mailed right away.

Hoping you will have a very pleasant ocean trip up, I am / With love, / Francesca [MTAq 132].

April 5 Sunday – At the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to daughter Clara in N.Y.C.

Clärchen dear, I hope you are entirely well & hearty by this time. I don’t know where you are, but you are drifting professionally around somewhere, I suppose—and hope.

I have led a lazy & comfortable life here for six weeks, & am sorry it will come to an end next Saturday—a shade less than a week hence. It is a most pleasant & useless life,—as far as other people are concerned. I have been useful only once: I talked for the hospital, one night & made some money for it. Next Thursday I am to be useful again—a talk for the aquarium, which is the Governor’s pet, & a very worthy one. It will be a great institution by & by, & will draw the scientific folk from many countries. But it needs money now.

Earl Grey, Governor General of Canada is visiting here, & is a good fellow—yes, & charming. This morning he said I was about the most conspicuous detail of the island scenery (my white clothes). But I was frank, & told him not to deceive himself: that it was not nature, it was art, & premeditated,—I got myself up so, to attract attention.

We have accumulated a fortune in delightful friends—some from abroad, some native to the place. In this way our sojourn had paid richly.

We’ll be at 21 on the 13th.

With heaps of love & kisses, / Marcus [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Josephine Dascomb [sic Daskam] is such a damn fool that the King would like to kick her and I'd like to give him a push to add force to the kick. Smirking and preening her feathers she kept calling herself the Rose of the Harem, and calling other people idiots, but put the accusation into their own mouths as in the case of Capt. Egerton the ADC, who, she said, told someone that he hadn't any brains and so made him ADC. Her way of getting even with him because he hadn't invited her to Government House. She took the good taste out of the morning we had had there at Prospect listening to the music, and watching the people. The cunning Freeman children, who more and more remind the King of Susy and Clara, came and snuggled up to us, and when the King went off to speak to Lord Grey, little Mary in despair said, "Oh, where has Mark Twain gone?" A part of the music finished in the banging overture style and she said, "I don't like the way the music happens, now" [MTP: IVL TS 42-43]. Note: Earl Grey governor-general of Canada. Capt. Egerton is not further identified. Josephine Dodge Daskam Bacon: see 29 Mar. 1908.

April 6 Monday – Bermuda. Mark Twain and Earl Grey met and talked to the children at the garrison school. Their comments appeared in the Apr. 19 NY Times. See Apr. 8 below for these.

Isabel Lyon's journal: We went up to the Garrison School at 11, and were met by Col. Chapman who took us into the primitive school room where the tiny children were in charge of a Mrs. Wates, who had charge of the Garrison School in Cairo a few years since. Both she and the school master in Kahki had a pardonable pride in their pupils. They sang old English hymns for us without any accompaniment and their sweet voices made our hearts ache. The King sat there in his white clothes, and his eyes were filled with tears as those dear children sang. Then he spoke to them and told them how when he was a boy he had given the cat "pain killer", and the greave children broke out into shouts of laughter. After we got home he told me that they were so serious that he did not know how he was going to break through that barrier; but the first ripple of sound broke, and then they were enthusiastic. When leaving time came they gave him three—no four—splendid cheers, following the Khaki schoolmaster's "hip hip" which he said as "ip, ip." Then we went to the officers mess. The Freemans took me to drive this afternoon and then we went to the Arts and Crafts for Tea [MTP: IVL TS 41-42].

April 7 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Bermuda: The King and I went out to the reefs this morning in a kind of royal party, for Lord Gray the Governor General of Canada and Lady Gray and Mrs. (Bermuda Governor) Wodehouse went—and I did like it very much. Mostly it was quiet and restful. But I had a talk with Mrs. Wodehouse who turned to me at once when someone said of me "That is Mark Twain's private secretary." We got into the glass bottomed boats and were rowed out over the coral reefs. Oh, it is so beautiful to see the coral mound and the sea fans, and the finger sponge. The King said that the deep places were like the sage brush and the desert. Coming home I got some snapshots of the King and Lord Grey. I had a nice little chat with him and he is just a human man. Lady Grey let me take a photo of her, and we sat and chatted along for some time. It is just an accident of birth—but is it?—that makes them fitted for their great position—so someone says. But Lord Grey is a big strong man. We drove out to Tuckertown and then had tea at Frascati (the Freemans and the Rogerses) [MTP: IVL TS 43-44].

Howells & Stokes wrote to advise Sam that the total cost of "all masonry, paving and carpentry work in connection with the terraces, steps, balustrades, paths, fountain, pergolas, benches, etc. arrived two days ago from Mr. Sunderland. It is $2,200..." Sunderland didn't feel it was possible to finish all by the first of June, when Clemens had planned to move in [MTP].

April 8 Wednesday – The New York Times, Apr. 19, p. X4, "Mark Twain's Outing in Bermuda" ran with three photos of Twain and Irene Gerken (not identified), Twain and H.H. Rogers, and one of Earl Grey and Lt. Gen. Wodehouse:

Mark Twain Tells About the Cat.

HAMILTON, Bermuda, April 10.—A distinguished party consisting of Earl Grey, Governor General of Canada, Lady Grey, S. L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Rogers, and Lieut. Gen. and Mrs.

Wodehouse made a trip to the coral reefs on Wednesday [Apr. 8] as the guests of the Bermuda Natural History Society.

They entered the glass-bottomed boat as the steam launch came to a stop about three miles out from Hamilton, and gazing down into the crystal clear depths, they admired the waving sea fans, the graceful coral formations, and the many brilliant rainbow hued fishes that played about beneath them. The party spent the better part of an hour looking at the wonders of this varied marine life. On the trip back they were entertained by Mark Twain's comments and stories which he has always ready for the occasion. It was while viewing the parade of the Forty-sixth Regiment at Prospect on Sunday last that Col. Chapman invited him to address the children of the garrison school. He consented, and next day appeared before them with a solemn mien.

"As I was on my way up the hill," he said, "I saw a cat jump over a wall, and that reminded me of a little incident of my childhood that may interest you. I was a little boy once upon a time, and before that I was a little girl, perhaps, though I don't remember it.

"There was a good deal of cholera around the Mississippi Valley in those days, and my mother used to dose up children with a medicine called Patterson's Patent Pain Killer. She had an idea that the cholera was worse than the medicine, but then she had never taken the stuff. It went down our insides like liquid fire and fairly doubled us up. I suppose we took fifty bottles of that pain killer in our family. I used to feed mine to a crack in the floor of our room when no one was looking.

"One day when I was doing this our cat, whose name was Peter, came into the room, and I looked at him and wondered if he might not like some of that pain killer. He looked hungry, and it seemed to me that a little of it might do him good. So I just poured out the bottle and put it before him. He did not seem to get the real effect of it at first, but pretty soon I saw him turn and look at me with a queer expression in his eyes, and the next minute he jumped to the window and went through it like a cyclone, taking all the flower pots with him; and seeing that cat on the wall just now reminded me of the little incident of my childhood after many years."

Earl Grey met the children of the garrison school and told them about his plans for a great celebration of the Canadian Tercentenary. He said that it would cost a hundred thousand pounds to buy the Plains of Abraham, the scene of the famous battle, and that he hoped to raise that amount by subscriptions of threepences from all the quarters of the British Empire. The names of the subscribers would be enrolled in vellum scrolls and deposited in the great monument, which it is purposed to erect on the scene of the historic event.

"Gentlemen, you have remarked that my visit is a new departure of a Governor General of Canada. Well, I believe that to be true, but I also believe that if I am the first to visit Bermuda I shall not be the last.

"If you resolve to have the best transportation service and the best hotels, you will encourage people from abroad to make homes in your islands, and I believe Providence has destined them to become in ever-increasing degree the Winter homes and the market garden of the Canadian people"

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Drove out to Mrs. Allen's—fish, flowers with coffee, a lovely picture. / This morning Grace Freeman and I went out to Somerset by the ferry boat to hunt for cedar chests, but didn't find them. I brought away a Boer War trench shovel" [MTP: IVL TS 44]. Note: Grace Freeman (Mrs. Zoheth S. Freeman).

April 9 Thursday – Bermuda. Either this day or the next, Sam lost his half of the seashell used to identify him to Margaret Blackmer (see May 25 to Blackmer). It was found by a servant in the mess hall at Prospect Army Garrison and handed to Major Malcolm D. Graham, who mailed it back to Sam in New York. See also May 25 to Graham.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King does love these English people. He has just been talking about Col. Chapman and says "he is such a sweet man, he has that curious diffidence and shyness that always means the unhardened heart."

It was a mistake for us to drive over to St. George's today—15 of us—for last night the King dined up at the officers' mess, and for some reason he didn't want and wouldn't eat any breakfast this morning, and he felt so badly at luncheon, that he and I left the table at St. George's and drove home alone and in silence along the beautiful north shore [MTP: IVL TS 44-45].

Eva C. Dix wrote to Sam about his letter on vivisection, in which he'd given permission for her to publish. She'd handed out a few of the letters, but wanted to wait to include it in their annual report. How many copies would he like? [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Answd. Apr. 4" and on reverse, "Mr. Clemens would be glad to have 8 or 10."

Jean Spurr wrote from Newark, NJ to Sam.

I am writing to you to wish you a pleasant trip home. But if you do have a rough trip do not be foolish as I was and get so sick you cannot eat a thing.

I am back at school again but we are to have Easter vacation next week. I could not bear to be indoors if I did not have that to look forward to.

Our country is looking fine for this time of year. Spring has set in early.

Have you seen many oleanders in bloom. We did not see any.

Hoping you a pleasant trip,

I am/ your little friend / Jean Spurr [MTP; not in MTAg].

April 10 Friday – Several photographs of Mark Twain swimming in the Bahamas are given this date [Bob Slotta, eBay item 180516263500, June 4, 2010; See Hellen Allen's of Apr. 27, D. Hoffman, picture p. 122]. Note: advertised at that time as the "Only known Under Water Images of him."

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I went to get a cedar chest today, and all the morning I was very busy, but went to the Allens at Bay House to photograph the King and Helen Allen in swimming" [MTP: IVL TS 45]. Note: see one of the photographs taken on this day in D. Hoffman, p. 126.

April 11 Saturday – In Bermuda, the Clemens party boarded the steamer Bermudian for a return trip to New York. Isabel Lyon's journal: "We sailed—Josephine Dascomb [sic Daskam Bacon] is killable—the King calls her 'Josephine Bastard Bacon'" [MTP: IVL TS 45]. Note: see Mar. 29 on Bacon.

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam, noting he would be leaving Bermuda this day, and asking if it would be possible for Lyon to meet at Bradley & Hubbard Mfg. Co. to choose gas fixtures. Also what type of kitchen range and ice box would be desired? [MTP].

An unidentified person (Grateful Admirers in-Chief) wrote a fan letter to Sam [MTP]. Note: also given as Feb. 27.

April 12 Sunday – Sam was aboard the Bermudian on the way home to New York. In the Apr. 14 edition of the New York Times, p. 9, Sam related an incident aboard ship:

...
Mark Twain told of one exciting incident of the voyage home. The ocean he characterized as "most rude." On Sunday afternoon, dressed in his famous white suit, he was standing at the stern rail with Miss Dorothy Sturgis of Boston, watching the play of the ship's log, when a wave struck the vessel astern and a great comber climbed over the rail and drenched the pair.
...

Isabel Lyon's journal: "So ill I was" [MTP: IVL TS 45].

April 13 Monday – The Bermudian docked in New York in the afternoon. On Apr. 14 the New York Times, p. 9 ran this tale about Mark Twain and Rogers returning:

TWAIN AND ROGERS BACK FROM BERMUDA

Offer to Lend $2 to Rogers Not Accepted—Strain of Traveling with Financier.

JOINS ANTI-NOISE CRUSADE

“Fourteen Banks of England Could Not Finance” Lakes to Gulf Canal.

“Birds of a feather,” said Mark Twain, as he appeared on the deck of the steamer Bermuda yesterday holding H. H. Rogers by the arm. “You know the rest of it,” and both humorist and financier laughed heartily. All this marked the end of a five weeks’ vacation on the Island of Bermuda. Both looked in the best of health. Mark Twain wore a gray flannel suit, a long fur-lined overcoat, and a peaked cap, which sat jauntily on his long, gray hair.

Mark Twain, smoking a long, black cheroot, met interviewers standing under a sign warning male passengers that smoking on deck annoyed mal de mer patients. “It’s a terrible strain, this being a financier,” he said, nodding his head in the direction of Mr. Rogers. “It is also a strain traveling with one. I offered to loan Rogers $2, though I knew I was taking an awful risk. Rogers thought it was simply a courtesy and so did not take me up. Now I am $2 ahead.

“I have returned from my trip a reformer. I have joined the ranks the anti-noise society. I have retired both from the making of after-dinner speeches and the lecture platform. No one can tolerate noise, you know, unless they are noisemakers. I am through making a noise and so I now insist on quiet. Mrs. Rice started her crusade at the right time for me.”

“Mr. Twain, what do you think of the scheme to improve our interior waterways by dredging a fourteen-foot channel down the Mississippi River?” asked one.

“I have no sentimental interest in such a project, and I have too many realities to deal with to be chasing a will-o’-the-wisp. When the Almighty built this earth He knew very well that a fourteen-foot channel from Chicago to the Gulf would have been a very excellent and much needed thing, but he also knew that it would tax even His resources. If there were fourteen Banks of England behind the scheme, and fourteen more behind them, there would not be enough available money to finance the scheme.

“I know the Mississippi Valley and its oozy soil too well. The digging of the channel would be but the beginning. A thousand dredges could not keep it clear.”

Mr. Rogers said that he had had a pleasant vacation and was much improved in health, but was out of touch with current events.

Mark Twain told of one exciting incident of the voyage home. The ocean he characterized as “most rude.” On Sunday afternoon, dressed in his famous white suit, he was standing at the stern rail with Miss Dorothy Sturgis of Boston, watching the play of the ship’s log, when a wave struck the vessel astern and a great comber climbed over the rail and drenched the pair.

Mr. Twain said he will remain in his Fifth Avenue house for five weeks and then go the new home he is building on a farm at Redding, four miles out of Danbury, Conn.

The Bermuda brought a large consignment of West Indian fish for the Aquarium. She also had on board a consignment of 1,000 boxes containing 60,000 Easter lilies. The Bermuda steamer Trinidad, arriving later in the week, will, it is expected, bring a great cargo of lilies.

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam began a letter at midnight to Dorothy Sturgis that he added to the next day, Apr. 14.

Tel: 3907 Grammercy.

21 Fifth avenue, 13th—midnight

Good-night, dear, und schlafen Sie wohl! It was a great disappointment, for I was confident that you would fail to catch the train. I never gave you up until dinner-time. Then Miss Lyon telephoned Plainfield, N. J., & asked the youngest (no, next-youngest) angel-fish in the Aquarium to come up & spend a few days, but her mother cannot bring her until Monday—so that was another disappointment, & the Aquarium is going to be empty all that interval.

Mr. Littleton was called to Washington this afternoon, & could not keep his appointment to play billiards to-night—still another disappointment. But my biographer (Albert Bigelow Paine), was in the house, & agreed to stay all night. We left Miss Lyon on guard against the reporters & went upstairs at 5 p.m. & played until 5 minutes ago (barring the dinner-hour.) My cat came up from the basement to superintend. She leaped upon the table & spread herself out, after her sociable habit, & we had to play around her for half an hour, then she went about her other affairs.

The house is looking very homelike & inviting, & I am not sorry to be in my own bed again.

Mr. Ashcroft came up with the trunks, but he had an engagement & could not stay; but Mrs. Littleton came over & sat with Miss Lyon in the billiard room until 11. It has been a pleasant evening, but if you had been here it would have been pleasanter.

I hope you reached home safely—but I am very very sorry you caught the train. I beg to be remembered kindly to your father & mother & your brother; & with love to you, I am ... [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Article about children. Lord Grey has been an enchanting Englishman on this trip—as he must be on any trip and anywhere" [MTP: IVL TS 45].

Will McClintock, a seventeen year old fan who'd read TS five times, wrote from Brooklyn to ask Sam for an autographed letter [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Too busy to write a letter but glad to send auto." Clemens consistently refused to send "a few lines" or opinions or a letter from this year on, but gladly sent autographs and a few photos.

April 14 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer.

Dear Margaret, we arrived from Bermuda yesterday afternoon, & in the accumulation of letters I find yours of a fortnight ago. I've brought the little angel-fish pin—badge of my Aquarium—& will keep it for you till you come, which I hope will be as soon as Miss Tewksbury can escort you. Come VERY soon!

We had 7 very lovely weeks in the island, & the lovable Miss Wallace was with us until recently. We made only one excursion to Spanish Point. Irene—one of my angel-fishes—drove me, & the others walked, & shoved Maude up the acclivities. You would hardly recognise Maude now. She has been closely clipped, & her pelt is shiny & smoothe, & looks like velvet.

Think—there isn't a solitary angel-fish in the house, Margaret. Francesca was to come to-day, but can't, because she has to go home to Georgia & get ready for Europe. Another was to have come yesterday to dine & stay all night, but she was called out of town. We telephoned Dorothy of New Jersey last night, but her mother cannot bring her until next Monday. Imagine this desolation—a house with not an angel-fish in it! Hurry up, dear!

I am inconsolable. Three days before we left Bermuda my shell was stolen from my watch-chain. It grieves me deeply; but Mr. Ashcroft will hunt for another one—so that I can identify you when I see you, dear. / With lots & lots of love / SLC / Chief ~~Servant~~ slave of the Aquarium [MTP]. Note: See Jan. 26 account of the seashell halves, by which Clemens and Blackmer could "identify" the other.

Margaret Blackmer wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens:— / My Easter vacation begins Thursday. I am going away with papa for a little while. But if you will write and tell me when you will be home I will come and see you. I will be away with papa for about a week but after I come back I will come.

I love my shell so much. / With lots of love / Your loving friend / Margaret [MTP; MTAq 134]. Note: Sam wrote on the letter "Have asked her to go with us to the Children's Theatre April 23."

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mrs. Guinness, Jean, Edith Cowles. Blue facings. / Lunch with Mrs. Day [MTP: IVL TS 46].

Nancy Langhorne Astor wrote a postcard from Taplow, England to Sam. "Dear Cousin — / When shall we expect you? Let me know & I will promise you rest & absolute freedom from the reporters—& the most lovely garden in England to take your sun baths in—I will also collect little children from miles around to amuse you!" [MTP]. Note:

the card is not addressed or stamped, so likely enclosed in another letter not extant. Sam was not related to any Langhorne, as the name was given in honor of a friend, not a relative.

Robert Erskine Ely for New York City History Club wrote, enclosing a program of performances on Apr. 23 and Apr. 28, given by the Children's Educational Theatre for the Club. Clemens was invited to attend and possibly to say a few words [MTP].

Dorothy Sturgis wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens / I was so very, very sorry that we caught that horrid 5 o'clock train, and I wasn't able to dine with you!

I suppose you saw what they said in the newspapers about our being caught by that wave. The account in the Boston Herald was really very funny, and of course mostly incorrect!

We had a very comfortable trip out here, and arrived safely at our house shortly after ten.

I hope you got home safely, and that Mr. Ashcroft met you alright.

Please give my love to Miss Lyon, and tell her not to forget to send me those photographs she took of us on the steamer, and by the way do you want the pictures I took of you, if so I will send them to you as soon as they are printed [MTAq 135].

April 15 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Apr. 14 of Margaret Blackmer.

I have your letter of yesterday, & you are a very dear Margaret, & have given me great pleasure. Now as I cipher it you are to go away with your papa Thursday the 16th (to-morrow) & will return on or "about" the 23^d.

So I will look for you about the 23^d. I am the honorary President of the Children's Theatre, & on the 23^d the children will give a performance in aid of one of the great charities. Ah, they are great, those gifted children. Of course I shall be there (for I have to speak a few words,) & it would be lovely if you could go there with Miss Lyon & me. Can you? Will you? / Lovingly / SLC / C.S. of the A. [MTP]. Note: C.S. of the A. = Chief Slave of the Aquarium.

Clemens acquired another case of Queen Anne whisky [L-A MS]. Note: see June 8, 1907 for the full list of acquisition dates of whisky, intended as ammunition against Isabel Lyon.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Hunting fixtures. / Doesn't want article. Santa came home" [MTP: IVL TS 46].

Caroline Coddington wrote the first of several "crank" letters to Sam: "We hope our Idea will succeed in pleasing the Numerous Beings whose names will become enrolled in the various departments of the Alphabet." Enclosed a list of A to Z standing for the Woman Department and the Man Department, as well as an envelope containing some "mix' for a bird's nest" [MTP]. Note: in each letter she enclosed wood scraps and other small objects, all of which shows that insane people also loved Mark Twain.

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam.

Dear Mark:

You were doubtless grieved to learn, if you did learn, on your arrival home that you had missed the honor of my "keep" over last Sunday.

But dry your tears. ...Providence does favor some people.

I am called to New York again;—this time to attend a meeting in Carnegie Hall next Monday evening (Apr. 20) and I will lodge with you then—if you say so.

But there's no compulsion about it, you understand./ Yours aff / Joe [MTP].

April 16 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J.

Thursday night.

Friday—Saturday—Sunday—Monday—then you are here! Monday afternoon. About half-past 2, I suppose. Well, I shall be on the lookout, & powerful glad to see you. Shan't we have good times? I do most confidently guess so.

In Bermuda I bought a trinket for your Christmas. But I can't keep it that long, I'll give it to you now.

That reminds me that you are a member of my Aquarium Club, which consists of a few very choice school-girl angel-fishes & one slave. I am the slave.

I think you have the badge. But if you haven't, I'll get it for you.

Do remember me kindly to your mother & all the household,—& don't forget that I love you, you dear little rascal [MTP].

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr Clemens / I am very glad you are home and I am so glad I am to see you on Monday I will not be able to come Monday morning but will come on the one-nine train I will be so glad to see you I am sorry not being able to be with you on Saturday but I really want to be with Grandpa and now I must close.

With love to you and Miss Lyon / your loving / Dorothy

P.S. Grandpa is going away that is why I must be with him on Sunday / Dorothy [MTP]. Note: this letter was included in Sam's Apr. 17 A.D.

Sam's A.D. for this day continued to describe the Bermuda trips and give Angel fish accounts [Hill 209].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "All day in Redding" [MTP: IVL TS 46].

The New York Times, p. 3, announced that Mark Twain would speak for the Children's Educational Theatre on April 23, under the auspices of the NYC History Club.

April 17 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Richard C. Carr in Bogotville, Chicoutine County, P.Q., Canada.

"I have not heard of the learned pere Vignie before, still he could have existed. The main trouble with him is, that he did not furnish his "documents" instead of merely talking about them. In my judgment the unverified testimony of no unknown person is valuable—even when found in a Bible. / Very Truly Yours "... [MTP]. Note: "Père," or father, was used by certain Catholic priests; it also was used to distinguish a father from a son. No further reference for Carr or Père Vignie was found.

Sam also wrote to Margery H. Clinton.

Dear Miss Marjorie—

It was lovely of you to knit that beautiful tie for me. It is in the right hands, it is in appreciative hands: I shall wear it with ostentation.

I am so sorry you have escaped to Europe; & I am sorry you will not be in the box to-morrow with Miss Polly & the rest of us. / Sincerely Yours / SL. Clemens [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Angelfish, 10-year-old Hellen Elizabeth Martin of Montreal, Canada.

I miss you, dear Helen [sic Hellen]. I miss Bermuda too, but not so much as I miss you; for you were rare, and occasional, and select, and Ltd., whereas Bermuda's charms and graciousnesses were free and common and unrestricted,—like the rain, you know, which falls upon the just and the unjust alike; a thing which would not happen if I were superintending the rain's affairs. No, I would rain softly and sweetly upon the just, but whenever I caught a sample of the unjust out-doors I would drown him [MTP]. Note: Hellen Elizabeth Martin (b. ca. 1897), one of five children and the daughter of Robert Dennison Martin and Helen Moncrieff Morton. Robert died in 1905; at this time Mrs. Martin was a wealthy widow. Sam recorded in his NB for June 1908 that Hellen's age was 12. Cooley notes that this is Clemens' only surviving letter to Hellen [MTAq 141n3].

Sam also replied to the Apr. 15 from Joe Twichell. A draft survives:

I am glad, Joe—uncommonly glad—for you will tell me about the “new movement” up your way which your clergy have been importing from Boston. Something of it has reached me, & has filled me to the eyelids with irreverent laughter. You will tell me if my understanding of the New Movement is correct: to-wit, that it is just Christian Science, with some of the earmarks painted over & the others removed, after the fashion of the unanointed cattle-thieves of the wild, wild West. My word, how ecclesiastical history do repeat herself! The Jews steal a God & a Creation & a Flood & a Moral Code from Babylon; Egypt steals the like from a forgotten Antiquity; Greece steals the swagger from Egypt; Rome steals it from Greece; Christianity comes belated along & steals morals & miracles & one thing & another from Budh & Confucius; Christian Science arrives & steals the Christian outfit & gives it a new name; & now at last comes the Boston puritan—hater of Christian Science—and steals the plunder anew, & re-baptises it, & shouts tearful & grateful glory to God for winking at the mulct & not letting on—according to His shady custom these thirty million years.

Oh yes, I am aware that the Science was emptying New England's churches, & that the wise recognized that something had got to be done or the Church must go out of business & put up its pulpits at auction; I am aware that the peril was forestalled, & hoo; I am aware that Christian Science, disguised & new-named, has arrived in Hartford & is being preached & thankfully welcomed—where? In the most fitting of all places: The Theological Factory, which was largely built out of stolen money. Money stolen from me by that precious Christian, Newton Case, & his pals of the American Publishing Company.

Oh, dear Joe, why doesn't somebody write a tract on “How to Be a Christian & yet keep Your Hands off of Other People's Things” [MTP]. Note: Newton Case (1807-1890), wealthy railroad executive and past Hartford neighbor of Sam's. Case was also a friend of Twichells, who had offered to pay Julia Twichell's passage to Europe. See entries on Case, Vol. I & II.

In Sam's A.D. for this day he dictated about his collection of Angelfish, listing the names and sketches of each girl: Dorothy Butes, Frances Nunnally, Dorothy Quick, Margaret Blackmer, Irene Gerken, Hellen Martin, Jean Spurr, Loraine Allen, Helen Allen, and Dorothy Sturgis. Notably absent from this list was Margaret Illington (honorary), Dorothy Harvey, Louise Paine, and Marjorie Breckenridge, all of whom were listed in the “Constitution for the Aquarium” dated only “Summer, 1908.” This suggests that Clemens added this last group to his Aquarium Club sometime after Apr. 17. Loraine Allen, on the other hand, appears in this list and dictation below, but not in the Constitution. See Schmidt's Twainquotes website for more on Loraine and the other Angelfish.

After my wife's death, June 5, 1904, I experienced a long period of unrest and loneliness. Clara and Jean were busy with their studies and their labors and I was washing about on a forlorn sea of banquets and speechmaking in high and holy causes—industries which furnished me intellectual cheer and entertainment, but got at my heart for an evening only, then left it dry and dusty. I had reached the grandpapa stage of life; and what I lacked and what I needed was grandchildren, but I didn't know it. By and by this knowledge came by accident, on a fortunate day, a golden day, and my heart has never been empty of grandchildren since. No, it is a treasure-place of little people whom I worship, and whose degraded and willing slave I am. In grandchildren I am the richest man that lives to-day; for I select my grandchildren, whereas all other grandfathers have to take them as they come, good, bad and indifferent.

The accident I refer to, was the advent of Dorothy Butes, 14 years old, who wanted to come and look at me. Her mother brought her. There was never a lovelier child. English, with the English complexion; and simple, sincere, frank and straightforward, as became her time of life. This was more than two years ago. She came to see me every few weeks, until she returned to England eight months ago. Since then, we correspond.

My next prize was Frances Nunnally, school-girl, of Atlanta, Georgia, whom I call Francesca for short. I have already told what pleasant times we had together every day in London, last summer, returning calls. She was 16 then, a dear sweet grave little body, and very welcome in those English homes. She will pay me a visit six weeks hence, when she comes North with her parents Europe-bound. She is a faithful correspondent.

My third prize was Dorothy Quick—ten years and ten-twelfths of a year old when I captured her at sea last summer on the return-voyage from England. What a Dorothy it is! How many chapters have I already talked about her bright and booming and electrical ways, and her punctuationless literature and her adorably lawless spelling? Have I exhausted her as a text for talk? No. Nobody could do it. At least nobody who worships her as I worship her. She is eleven years and nearly eight-twelfths of a year old, now, and just a dear! She was to come to me as soon as I should get back from Bermuda, but she has an earlier grandpapa, and he is leaving for Europe next Monday morning, and naturally he had to have the last of her before sailing. Is she her old self, and is her pen characteristically brisk and her spelling and punctuation undamaged by time and still my pride and delight? Yes:

[Dorothy Quick's Apr. 16 letter was inserted here; see entry]

Next is Margaret—Margaret Blackmer, New York, 12 years old last New Year's. She of the identification shell. Those shells were so frail and delicate that they could not endure exposure on a watch-chain, therefore we have put them safely and sacredly away and hung gold shells enameled with iridescent shell-colors on our watch-chains to represent them and do the identifying with. Margaret's father will bring her down from her school at Briarcliff on the Hudson six days hence to visit me—as I learn per her letter of five days ago—and then she will go with me to play at the Children's Theatre, where, as Honorary President of that admirable institution, I am to say a few words.

Next is Irene—Irene Gerken, of 75th Street, New York, that beautiful and graceful and altogether wonderful child—I mean fairy—of 12 summers. To-morrow she will go to a matinee with me, and we are to play billiards the rest of the day. In Bermuda, last January, we played much billiards together, and a certain position of the balls is still known by her name there. When her ball backed itself against the cushion and became thereby nearly unusable, she was never embarrassed by that defect but always knew how to remedy it: she just moved it out to a handier place, without remark or apology and blandly fired away! Down there, now, when a ball lies glued to a cushion, gentlemen who have never seen that child lament and say,

“O hang it, here's another Irene!”

Next is Hellen Martin, of Montreal, Canada, a slim and bright and sweet little creature aged ten and a half years.

Next is Jean Spurr, aged 13 the 14th of last March, and of such is the kingdom of Heaven.

Next is Loraine Allen, nine and a half years old, with the voice of a flute and a face as like a flower as a face can be, and as graciously and enchantingly beautiful as ever any flower was.

Next is Helen Allen, aged 13, native of Bermuda, perfect in character, lovely in disposition, and a captivator at sight!

Next—and last, to date—is Dorothy Sturgis, aged 16, of Boston. This is the charming child mentioned in yesterday's chapter when I was talking about Lord Grey. On the voyage together we were at the stern watching the huge waves life the ship skyward then drop her, most thrillingly H—alifax-ward, when one of them vast bulk leaped over the taffrail and knocked us down and buried us under several tons of salt water. The papers, from one end of America to the other, made a perilous and thundersome event of it, but it wasn't that kind of thing at all. Dorothy was not discomposed, nobody was hurt, we changed our clothes from the skin outward, and were on deck again in half an hour. In talking of Dorothy yesterday I referred to her as one my “angel-fishes.”

All the ten school-girls in the above list are my angel-fishes, and constitute my Club, whose name is “The Aquarium” and contains no creature but these angel-fishes and one slave. I am the slave. The Bermudian angel-fish, with its splendid blue decorations, is easily the most beautiful fish that swims, I think. So I thought I would call my ten pets angel-fishes, and their club the Aquarium.

The club's badge is the angel-fish's splendors reproduced in enamels and mounted for service as a lapel-pin—at least that is where the girls wear it. I get these little pins in Bermuda; they are made in Norway.

A year or two ago I bought a lovely piece of landscape of 210 acres in the country near Redding, Connecticut, and John Howells, the son of his father, is building a villa there for me. We'll spend the coming summer in it. I have never been to that region, but the house is so lauded by Clara and Miss Lyon that I am becoming anxious to see it.

The billiard room will have the legend “The Aquarium” over its door, for it is to be the Club's official headquarters. I have good photographs of all my fishes, and these will be framed and hung around the walls.

There is an angel-fish bedroom—double-bedded—and I expect to have a fish and her mother in it as often as Providence will permit.

There's a letter from the little Montreal Hellen. I will begin an answer now, and finish it later: [MTAq 137-41]. Note: see letter to Hellen above in entry.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Went to Boston with E. Cowles" [MTP: IVL TS 46]. Note: Edith Cowles.

Diana Belais for the New York City Humane Society wrote to Sam. Having called on Clemens the day before but not finding him in, Belais wrote she'd had a "charming conversation" with Lyon who suggested she write. She wanted to acquaint Clemens with their society, especially on the issue of vivisection, in which she knew he was interested. She hoped he "might be inclined to take some very slight, but active, part in our endeavor" [MTP].

Hellen Elizabeth Martin wrote to Sam.

I wrote you a letter but was just too late for the mail for Bermuda. I hope you had a pleasant voyage coming back. My Brother Charlie who is at Boarding School, is coming back for the Easter Holidays. How are you feeling now? I am feeling fine. Lots of Love from / Your Loving Little friend / Hellen Martin / P.S. Wishing you a very Happy Easter. H.M. [MTP].

Photo insert: Twain and Rogers are standing in the middle next to the windows.

April 18 Saturday – Mark Twain, H.H. Rogers and State Senator Patrick H. McCarren were guests of honor at the Humorists and Cartoonists Beefsteak Dinner at Reisenwebers in NYC. His speech and the event was covered by the NY Times, Apr. 19, p.16.

TWAIN AND M'CARREN MIX WIT WITH ART

And Incidentally Devour Beefsteak and Beer with Cartoonists.

LONG PAT WANTS TO PAINT

Says He'd Like to Picture Some Folks as He Sees Them—Inside—Twain on Heroes.

Mark Twain, the humorist; Mam'selle Fay Douglass, introduced as "the champion long-distance soubrette of the world"; Patrick H. McCarren, and H. H. Rogers of the Standard Oil Company met some 150 comic artists, cartoonists, caricaturists, humorous writers, comic writers, and other funny-looking people last night at Reisenweber's, third floor, where there was beefsteak and animal and vegetable spirits.

Everybody did something, and many things were still doing at 11 o'clock when Mark Twain, Mr. Rogers, and Senator McCarren withdrew, but at that hour Roy McCardell, exuberant with animal and vegetable spirits, was trying to hold down all speakers to two-second addresses.

This was the first meeting of this company, most of those present being from New York, though Philadelphia and Newark were represented; and some sort of organization may eventuate from the meeting. At 11 o'clock it appeared that the proper name for the organization would be the Mutual Protective Bail Bond Association.

The eating cards were of huge size, so that the artists might write down their stimulated fancies and pass them around. This was done. One of the inside pages of the big card had "Steak" in the size of type sometimes used on front pages to herald murders, and on the other inside page was "Beer," in type no smaller.

The Introductory Speech.

The card was entirely correct in its details. The things on the card were finally disposed of, though the drawing of pictures and seizure of autographs had been going on at such a pace, as said Homer Davenport later, that Mark Twain's signature, which last week sold for a few cents over $4, would now fall below 30 cents.

Walt McDougal, said to be of Philadelphia, attempted to call the meeting to order, and proceeded with his address notwithstanding, as follows:

"I want to tell you of the pride and exaltation that fills me at the thought of having been called upon to preside over the greatest galaxy of human intellect ever gathered under one tent." [Violent applause.]

Voices: "Let McCarren speak."

"You are a dear old man, Mac, but—"

"Call the Committee on Credentials."

"I could make a long speech," went on the Chairman.

"Terrible!" yelled the audience.

"But I will now call on one," went on the Chairman, "who has hobnobbed with royalty, run the Standard Oil Company—"

Many voices: "Pat McCarren!"

Mark Twain on Heroes.

Mark Twain was called, however, and he said:

"In the matter of courage we all have our limits. There never was a hero who did not have his bounds. I suppose it may be said of Nelson and all the others whose courage has been advertised that there came times in their lives when their bravery knew it had come to its limit.

"I have found mine a good many times. Sometimes this was expected—often it was unexpected. I know a man who is not afraid to sleep with a rattlesnake, but you could not get him to sleep with a safety razor.

"I never had the courage to talk across a long, narrow room. I should be at the end of the room facing all the audience. If I attempt to talk across a room I find myself turning this way and that, and thus at alternate periods I have part of the audience behind me. You ought never to have any part of the audience behind you; you never can tell what they are going to do.

"I'll sit down."

He was talking across the room.

It must be said parenthetically and looking backward, that before Mark Twain spoke Rennold Wolf had introduced Mam'selle Fay Douglass, the champion long-distance soubrette of the world, who sang a song about somebody getting on a horse with her out around Pueblo, Colorado. Mam'selle Douglass wore a sort of bathing-suit costume. Considerable applause greeted Mam'selle Fay Douglass.

Clarence Harvey was introduced as one who would read a poem. He did not, though no direct word against it was spoken. He started in to say that he thought that what had gathered around the boxes on which beefsteak and beer had been sitting, was the nucleus of a fine club, but he was cut off by this voice:

"Cut that out! That's my speech!"

Mr. Harvey did so, switching to a plea for the return to the simple life of Arcadee, as it is in most rhymes, where (in Arcadee, that is) the dairy maid attends to her own dairy and baby does not have to leave home for its meals.

Senator Pat Says He Got His.

Chairman McDougall said that, nevertheless, he would try for one more speech, anyhow, thus introducing Senator McCarren. Thus spoke the Senator, playing with his apron strings in a nonchalant sort of way:

"I am unlike Mr. Clemens; I know no limits to my courage. All that could happen to be has been performed. I don't care whether I talk across the room or along it.

"I have often thought that if I ever adopted the profession of caricaturing I would draw the insides of some people, using some sort of X ray apparatus to find what they were really like inside.

"Now, the artists, the excellent artists whom I see around me, have drawn my exterior in excellent pictures. They know not what they have done. They have made me popular with the female sex, and they can't vote.

"I have recently been in a position where I would have like to picture some people as I saw them—inside."

Senator McCarren said he did not agree with Frank J. Gould, who was quoted in he papers yesterday as saying that money was a curse. But even if it was, he said, he was anxious to find out just exactly what kind of a curse it was. He pleaded with the cartoonists to draw him henceforth as a man who wanted to be a philanthropist, one who took pleasure in handing out money. He had noticed the pleasure it gave other men to hand out money; he wanted so much to taste that pleasure to the full.

"I have a great deal before me," he went on. "I now receive a salary of $1,500 a year, and most of that is spent before I receive it."

In conclusion he made this appeal to the artists and humorists present:

"If you can't do me any good, then go ahead and do me as much harm as you can."

Mr. Clemens Gets a Picture.

Archie Gunn, artist, sang, and was going to do it again when Chairman McDougall called upon Charles Battell Loomis for the story about the lady with the gold fingernails.

"Flown!" was the cry.

It was true.

The artist who is best known by the names "Pal," which he signs to his pictures and "the Big Turk," which he does not, drew the beautiful head of a beautiful girl in a few minutes, presenting it to Mark Twain, who said it was the most beautiful thing of the evening. "Pal," alias "the Big Turk," said privately that the picture was not at all what it should have been: He had happened on the wrong canvas. It was an oil canvas. If he had had a chalk canvas, why then—

H. H. Rogers, who sat by the side of Mark Twain, was called upon for words. These he said:

"Mr. Clemens has paid me to keep still."

Bob Davis tired to make a speech and was cried down, Roy McCardell leading the opposition. R. F. Outcault also tried and couldn't.

Then Senator McCarren, Mark Twain, and H. H. Rogers withdrew. But Mr. McCardell said he wouldn't.

At last reports somebody was "singing" at Reisenweber's, third floor [Note: See also Fatout 619; State Senator Patrick Henry McCarren (1849-1909), political boss who dominated Brooklyn politics for two decades; known as "Friend of the Sugar Trust"].

A program/menu for this dinner survives, autographed by Mark Twain to Betsy Robinson. The large menus contained Headline fonts only for "Steak" and "Beer." See two inserts: large program (above) & enlargement of left side with MT signature (at right). The 20" x 13" program was signed by: "Mark Twain SL Clemens". Political cartoonist Homer Davenport (1867-1912) added a sketch of Clemens to which he wrote, "That's him." Betsy Robinson attended the event and had many of the attendees, in addition to Clemens and Davenport draw sketches and sign her program. Included were:

George McManus (1884-1954), Charles Battell Loomis (1861-1911), Walter McDougall (1858-1938), Victor C. Forsythe (1885-1962), Richard F. Outcault (1863-1928), Winsor McCay (1867-1934), H.A. MacGill, Gus Mager (1878-1956), G. Viafora, Archie Gunn (1863-1930), F.M. White, Walter Sinclair and one other [Written Word Autographs auction June 27, 2009 Lot 398].

Isabel Lyon and Edith Cowles, one of Jean Clemens' nurses, went to Gloucester, Mass. to select a cottage for Jean, her two nurses, and young friend Marguerite Schmidt, to rent for the summer [Hill 197]. Isabel Lyon's journal: "To Gloucester hunting houses. Cream puff" [MTP: IVL TS 46].

Solomon J. Douglas wrote from New Haven, Conn. to Sam. Douglas remembered sailing in the brig George to Bermuda in 1868. He also recalled Sam's interest in the Russian movements for freedom. He complained of "Russian spies" in the US: "We allow these spies to sneak into our libraries, & try to catch a Russian subject reading books on human freedom. Shame on the Astor Library officials for ever allowing it." He signed and noted "class of '57 Yale" [MTP].

John W. Postgate wrote to Sam, appealing for an extension to produce JA as "The Maid of Orleans" play [MTP].

April 19 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

Easter Morning

Yes indeed, dear Miss Dorothy, I want the pictures you took; & I am hoping that Mr. Russell will not forget to send copies of those which he took of you & me, for I want good ones to frame & hand in the billiard room of the house I am building in the country—the said room's name being "The Aquarium," because it is to be the Aquarium's official headquarters.

It is 11 a.m., now, & as soon as Miss Lyon gets up I will remind her to send you the pictures she took of us on the steamer, when she gets up. She arrived late last night after a journey to Gloucester, where she secured a house for my daughter, Jean. She is probably tired out.

===

1 p.m. Miss Lyon is up, & I shall get up myself before long, as there is to be company at dinner. I am very glad she caught you on the telephone & delivered my affectionate greetings to you & got yours to me in return.

With a further consignment of love, ... [MTP; MTAq 142].

Isabel Lyon's journal: A rainy Easter—but a good quiet restful day. Young Dr. Norman Ditman has won the $20,000 Gibbs prize for original investigation in sick kidneys. We read an interesting article about Dr. Koch's investigation of the Sleeping Sickness and its cause. He says that it has been traced to the crocodiles or alligators because only the natives near rivers become infected, for that is where the tsetse fly, the cause of the disease, lives.

By and by evening came and with it the Waylands for dinner, and dear Dan Frohman and Margaret Illington [Frohman]. Santa and Will came down for a change too and we had a beautiful time. Then after dinner and after we had smoked in the drawing room and had watched the King and Margaret Illington making the most beautiful picture in the world as they sat on the floor and watched Tammany and her pile of kittens (quietly they touched them, and the King's white head was so lovingly beautiful, as he bent over that striped batch), we went to the billiard room and the 3 men played cowboy pool and each one of them got a game and so the rubber is to be played next Sunday night, when they will all be here for dinner again at seven [MTP: IVL TS 46-47]. Note: Ditman, 31 at this time, won the prize for an essay dealing with "the cause and possible prevention of Bright's disease" [NY Times, Apr. 19, 1908].

April 20 Monday – If Sam's estimate was correct, Dorothy Quick, Angelfish, would arrive for a visit at about 2 p.m. this day. See his letter to Dorothy of Apr. 16.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Went to look at Cremone bolts" [MTP: IVL TS 47]. Note: Cremone bolts are used for door and window casement locks; sliding bolts.

Caroline Coddington wrote another short "crank" note from Brooklyn. "I hope Miss Clemens will not have the pleasure of laying out her father — / I have suffered sufficiently to free him from his 'Ideas' I trust they both will enjoy future success" [MTP].

Harry P. Wood for Hawaii Promotion Co. wrote to Isabel Lyon, "glad indeed to know that Mr. Clemens accepts our gift. Upon receipt of the architect's plans, we will lose no time in getting the work done" [MTP]. Note: the gift was a koa wood carved mantel for Sam's billiard room.

April 21 Tuesday – Sam, feeling "in the humor to dance" at midnight, "went round the corner," but not finding Nancy Langhorne Astor there, decided not to dance [Apr. 28 to Astor].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Went to hunt for wall paperings. Santa and her troupe are planning to go to England [MTP: IVL TS 47].

Alice Moran wrote from Oil City, Penn. to Sam.

In my effort to prove that Who's Who in America, is he who has some infusion of Celtic blood, I have come upon a rough place. In the beginning I assumed that your blood was considerably Celtic because I know Mark Twain well, and there's much of the Celt in him.

However, now that I am summing up my material & I have little time left, I realize that my assumption will not pass for a fact.

Please, Mr. Clemens—may I know from you if Mark Twain gets his humor from some bit of the Celtic in you! [MTP].

John B. Stanchfield for Reynolds, Stanchfield & Collin (law firm) wrote to Sam. "Baldwin & Baldwin have sent over to me a copy of the summons and complaint in the action brought by Mr. Butters against you for libel. I discussed the subject with you some time ago and in conversation you directed me to put in the necessary appearance on your behalf. Kindly advise me whether I am to carry out those instructions. I am at present engaged in Court, but as soon as I am at leisure I will come up and see you about the matter”[MTP]. Note: IVL: “carry out the instructions”

April 22 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King, Dorothy, Ashcroft and I went down to the Aquarium today for a little frolic, but the King was very limp, and didn’t stay there very long, for there weren’t the wonderful fish that you see in Bermuda waters. The angel fish cannot live here at all it would seem. The King cosied-up in the corner of the elevated train, and come home to rest for Zoeth and Grace Freeman came to dine and to meet ABP. AB wasn’t very well, and so not very bright, but Grace was scintillating [MTP: IVL TS 447-48].

Caroline Coddington wrote another “crank” letter to Sam, addressing it “Dear Spakers.” She apologized for the “tangled message from ‘Snarles’ sent ...last evening” She hoped to see him “ere long and apologize” [MTP].

Ethel Courlander wrote from Croydon, England, enclosing a print (not in file) for Clemens to autograph [MTP].

April 23 Thursday – The New York Times, p. 13, “Business Troubles” ran a paragraph on the Plasmon Co. of America’s bankruptcy:

Schedules in bankruptcy of the Plasmon Company of America, food products, 59 Pearl Street, of which Mark Twain (Samuel L. Clemens) was acting President, show liabilities of $26,843 and assets of $1,395, consisting of cash, $915; accounts $30; patents $100; machinery at Briarcliff Manor, $200, and 30,000 pounds of spoiled casein, $150. Among the creditors are John Hays Hammond, $10,000, secured; Ralph W. Ashcroft, $8,565, salary as Secretary and Treasurer and money loaned; William B. McGann, $2,500, salary as President; William T. Robson, $1,000 salary as Treasurer; W.W. Wallace, $1,000 wages as clerk, and Samuel L. Clemens, as assignee of the International Plasmon, Ltd., $456.

Sam spoke at the Children’s Theatre of the Educational Alliance. The New York Times covered the event in it’s Apr. 24 issue, p. 9:

CHILD ACTORS WARM TO THEIR MARK TWAIN

An Eye at Every Peek Hole and an Ear at Every Crack as He Speaks.

HE TELLS GOOD NEWS, TOO

Bigger Theatre and New Directors for the Children’s Educational Play Acting—Society Gives Aid.

“Say, didn’t youse ever see an automobile before?”

This in most scornful tones last night from the larger boys in the crowd outside the Children’s Theatre of the Educational Alliance, at Jefferson Street and East Broadway. It was announced that “Mark Twain” was to speak at the evening’s performance, and society, with its motor cars descended upon the Children’s Theatre, so naturally all the curious small boys in the neighborhood swarmed around.

To be sure, society didn’t arrive till the first play, “Editha’s Burglar,” was well under way, and the regular patrons of the theatre who save their few pennies desperately to go there, were thrilling with admiration for the tiny Editha.

“Say! Ain’t she the cute one? Oh! She’ll have that boiglar fooled,” they murmured to each other as Society walked down the aisles.

The curtain fell on the first play, and they “got busy” behind, according to stage managerial directions. The child-actors retired to the dressing rooms, while the youthful stage hands did their work. The assistant property man stowed away safely the auto horn with which he had announced the arrival of Editha’s papa, and took a hand at the lashing. As the scenery was rushed hither and thither, just like the “real behind the scenes,” except for the conspicuous absence of profanity, there were many officious calls of “Sh-sh! Silence, there!” for the children’s orchestra was playing Mozart’s “Magic Flute” music between acts, and the artists behind respected their fellow-workers in front. All of a sudden a small girl at one side of the curtain called out:

“That’s him, there he comes.”

“Him” was Mark Twain, taking his place before the curtain to make his speech.

At the call, the stage hands stopped shifting, the property men came running out with a vase in each hand, and out swarmed the actors from the dressing rooms. Those from the first play had their make-up only half off, and those who were to be in the coming play had not yet developed sufficient “temperament” to object to being disturbed before going on to play their roles. One and all, the entire staff of the Children’s Theatre, ranged itself behind the curtains, with an eye at every possible peep hole, and an ear at every crack. At the furthest left hand edge sat “Mrs. Whitmore” taking down the speech.

“I’m going to have every word he says, every word,” she declared.

Meanwhile, quite unaware of this enthusiastic devotion behind the curtain, Mark Twain was making his speech to the audience in front. In opening, Mr. Clemens called attention to the playing by the children’s orchestra.

“We have all home talent here,” he said.

“We,” sniffed a girl flippantly.

“Silence, Becky!” answered the dressing room mistress severely. However he is regarded elsewhere the children at the Educational Alliance take Mark Twain seriously.

Mr. Clemens made only a short address, pointing out the need for a children’s theatre to supply the demand for amusement, and to give amusement of the right kind. He asserted that the work was entirely educational, and that the boys and girls training for the plays knew their Shakespeare far better than many Broadway audiences. [Sotto voce applause from the actors, with their ears against the curtain.] Of the hundreds of children in the classes of “Speech and Action” only three, Mr. Clemens said, had developed any desire to take up acting as a profession.

Then Mr. Clemens announced the news of the evening. After July 1 the Educational Theatre for Children will enter upon an independent existence, under a different Board of Directors. The Honorary President of the board is Mr. Clemens himself, and he said he took great pride in the choice as he understood that the children themselves had some voice in that election. [Emphatic nods of approval from all the assembled theatre staff.] The other Directors are Robert Collier of Collier’s Weekly, the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, and President Stanley Hall of Clarke University. Under this new direction a larger building will be erected to give more seating room at the theatre and to provide schoolrooms for the accompanying class work.

The speech was over, with great applause in front, but that was nothing compared with the joyous war dance behind, in which all joined to the chant: “oh, we’re to have the new theatre.” Then the stag manager called: “Hey there! All ready!” The actors fled, the scene shifters stood at attention, the light man gathered up his blue bulbs, and all was order once more. But they crowded around the girl in the corner, who had been taking notes.

“Did you get it all down—every word he said?” they demanded as the curtain went up on “‘Op-o’-me-Thumb,” the second play of the evening.

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Thursday.

I miss you so! I wish you were back, you dear little rascal.

When I found that your luggage could not be expressed until morning I asked Miss Lyon to telephone you so, right away, & no doubt she did so.

It is past midnight—we have been to the Children’s Theatre, where you must go with us some day when you can be spared from home. You will like it, dear.

I thought you left your story with me, & I told Miss Lyon she might read it—but we couldn't find it, & she was so disappointed, & so was I. Won't you send it to me, dear heart? I will send it back as soon as she has read it.

I have been playing billiards alone for half an hour, but it is no fun, & there are no cats & no Dorothy, & the house is silent & asleep. I will follow suit now. With love good-bye, good-bye, good night! [MTP; MTAq 143-4 (gives as Apr. 24)].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Such a busy day. Dictating letters to Hobby, looking after the King, attending to furniture repairs for the new house, going with Santa to select hats, going up to Mrs. Freeman (Mother and I) in the Hotel Willard, dining (the King and I) with Mr. and Mrs. Robert Collier and then going down to the Educational Alliance to see "Editha's Burglar" and "Op'o My Thumb". Between the 2 plays the King spoke in behalf of the Educational Theatre, and I was nervous about him, for he wasn't himself. He miscalled words, and seemed to have great difficulty in holding his thoughts together, but I was the only one who knew it. It was enough for the rest of the audience to look at him and be enchanted. Today after Dorothy left, I found the King laughing as he sat in his room and he told me how D. had written a story of a woman ghost who appeared before her sorrowing husband and told him to be comforted for he was happier as he was without her, as she was planning to get a divorce [MTP: IVL TS 48].

Kendall Banning wrote from NYC to Isabel Lyon (though catalogued to MT) about taking a plaster cast of Clemens' hand at 2 p.m. Tuesday [MTP].

Dorothy Sturgis wrote to Sam.

I got my photographs the other day, but none of the ones I took of you came out at all so I won't send them.

When Miss Lyon was here in Boston I told her that I was going to send you an Easter present. It was a little sketch I drew while in St. George's, of the church on the hill which was started, but never finished. Mama said she thought that you would like it. Where I took it to be framed they said they would send it by Saturday, but I don't think they did, did they? I thought I'd better write and tell you who it was from as there was no card or anything with it.

Now that I have not got my own pictures of you, please tell Miss Lyon to be sure and send me hers. Give her lots and lots of love, and keep oceans for yourself. / Ever Lovingly, the newest arrival / DMS [MTP; MTAq 143].

April 24 Friday – Clemens and Ralph Ashcroft traveled to Greenwich, Conn. to visit Jean Clemens. Jean, her two nurses, and friend Marguerite Schmidt; the ladies would shortly move to Gloucester, Mass. Meanwhile, Isabel Lyon inspected the construction site of what would be Stormfield at Redding [Hill 197; 203]. Note: the exact date of Jean's move was not determined, but on May 20, Sam wrote a "welcome to your new home" for her. It becomes apparent that Hill used IVL's journals for much of his source, though he didn't always cite it.

Isabel Lyon's journal: We went to Redding today, Mother and I; and it was like driving along and looking through veils of exquisite color at a darling landscape, for the blooms of willow and maple and birch and cedar were so delicate and so different in color that you could see through them easily. The King's house is coming on very well, but the chaos there is appalling just now, for they are working on Santa's wing, and the loggia and the road and the path to the pergola and the terraces and the perron, and the cess pool and the gas works, and the interior decorations and today it seemed a little despairing, and I couldn't see my way, or their way out. And Lyonesse is so dear. The long line of study and living room and buttery and kitchen and wood house is such a splendid satisfying original long line, and the view from there is so beautiful, that we are both filled with happiness over it. Real happiness.

The King went to see Jean today. Ashcroft took him to Greenwich [MTP: IVL TS 48-49].

Diana Belais for the New York City Humane Society wrote to thank Sam for his permission to use his name in their cause; she'd asked the favor in her Apr. 17 letter [MTP].

Irene Gerken wrote from NYC to Sam. "I want to thank you very very much for your kind invitation and I was very sorry that I had to refuse you but my friend is giving a theater party and I have accepted the invitation. / Please give my love to Miss Lion [sic] and hoping that this letter will find you in good health" [MTP; Not in MTAq].

Hellen Elizabeth Martin wrote to Sam. "I received your nice letter and was so glad to get it. I also miss you very very much indeed. My brother Charlie went back to school on Wednesday 22nd. I have started my lessons and have a lot of new ones. We have got another little kitten only a month old.... Would you please write an autograph for a friend of mine her name is Grace Brown" [MTP; Not in MTAq].

J. Pease Norton for American Health League wrote to advise Clemens that his name had been nominated for membership in their organization. Questions (not detailed in the letter) were enclosed (not in file) for his reply [MTP].

April 25 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Helen Schuyler Allen.

I miss you ever so much, you dear Helen. There's been a queer & constant reminder of you—salt in my hair—ever since that pleasant bath, until an hour ago when I washed it out with 5 separate & distinct soapings & scourings.

We had an enjoyable voyage—(though a little rough)—because I had a member of the Aquarium along, & also the Governor General. The Governor General (Gray)—is just a love! There couldn't be a more winning, & respect-compelling and human-being-at-its-very-best personality. And so the voyage was too short.

But I'm desolate now. My youngest daughter came yesterday, but she could stay only an hour or two, then hurry away. My other daughter (Clara) will arrive this evening. Meantime there's not an angel-fish on the place; the Aquarium is empty. Francesca (Atlanta Ga.), can't come till June. Dorothy (London) can't come any earlier. Margaret (up the Hudson at school), can't come till April 23. Dorothy (New Jersey) can't come till next Monday. You can see yourself, that things were looking gloomy for me—but my weather is improving, I am glad to say. Irene has telephoned that she is coming Saturday morning. She will play billiards until luncheon & after that, we will go to a matinée. Maybe her parents will allow her to stay over till Monday, then Dorothy will come.

The billiard room in the house we are building up-country will be the official headquarters of the Aquarium. On the walls will be the framed photographs of the members and over the door will be the sign "The Aquarium," in wood-carving. My daughter Jean will do the carving, & she is competent.

Good-bye, dear heart. Please remember me cordially to the others & at least all of that to yourself.

Lovingly,

SLC

The people of the Sandwich Islands have offered me a mantel-piece, of native wood, for the new house. Isn't that nice? Miss Lyon & the architect have forwarded the design, dimensions, etc. [MTP; MTAq 144-5].

Sam also replied to a not-extant letter from Andrew Lang, which from this reply, asked if Sam had received Lang's latest book. Gribben supplies The Maid of France, Being the Story of the Life and Death of Jeanne d'Arc, London (1908) [395].

Dear Mr. Lang,—

I haven't seen the book nor any review of it, but only not very understandable references to it—of a sort which discomforted me, but of course set my interest on fire. I don't want to have to read it in French—I should lose the nice shades, & should do a lot of gross misinterpreting, too. But there'll be a translation soon, nicht wahr? I will wait for it. I note with joy that you say: "If you are lazy about comparing, (which I most certainly am), I can make you a complete set of what the authorities say, & of what this amazing novelist says that they say."

Ah, do it for me! Then I will attempt the article, & (if I succeed in doing it to my satisfaction,) I will publish it. It is long since I touched a pen (3½ years), & I was intending to continue this happy holiday to the gallows, but—there are things that could beguile me to break this blessed Sabbath. / Yours very sincerely, ... [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Apr. 23 from Dorothy Sturgis.

Dear Miss Dorothy, I thank you ever so much for the picture; I am very glad to have it—your mother was quite right about it. I did not know it was from you until your letter came. Miss Lyon thinks you think you told her you were going to send me an Easter present, but forgot to really say it.

It is generally agreed that Joe Jefferson's son's Rip Van Winkle is not as good as his father's was, & some folks say the like about Sothern jr's Lord Dundreary as compared with his senior's rendition of the part—but that is a distinct mistake. Miss Lyon & I saw the piece this afternoon, & I laughed as I have not laughed before in 30 years—that is to say, not since I saw the elder Sothern in the part for the last time a generation ago. When you have the opportunity, go & see that play.

Miss Lyon sends you lots & lots of love, & so doth [MTP].

Note: Edward H. Sothern, son of Edward Askew Sothern, ended his engagement on this very day at the Lyric Theatre, where Sam, Miss Lyon and Mrs. Collier viewed the performance. Sothern played the part of Lord Dundreary, a part his father had played for many years [NY Times, 17 Apr. p. 7, "Theatrical notes"; NY Times 28 Jan, "Dundreary's Charm and Genial Humor"; Gribben 689]. See Sam's A.D. Apr. 28; Insert ad for play.

42d. W. of B' way. LYRIC SOTHERN NOTE.—Mr. Sothern has received so many requests from persons who saw his father play Lord Dundreary that he begs to state that a Special Matinee will be given on Wednesday, May 20th. during his coming engagement at the Academy of Music.	Last Matinee at 2. Last Night at 8. LORD DUNDREARY

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I shall never, never be able to catch up again for the days are only a kind of wind that whirls me along and away through a wonderful maze of living. Mrs. Collier, the King and I went to see Sothern in Dun Dreary" [MTP: IVL TS 49]. Note: see insert.

Philip Nichols Sunderland wrote to thank Sam for his check of $4,063.78, the eighth payment on the contract for construction of the Redding house [MTP]. Note: Sunderlands were a three generation Danbury family of builders, who built Stormfield.

Monroe Sunshine wrote on Sunshine Pressing Appliance letterhead, NYC to Sam.

I dare say that as you strolled past 14 E 8th St. on your way to Fifth Ave late this afternoon you little dreamed that you passed within a few feet of one who was the protégé of old Joe Brown, once Mayor of Atton, Ill, later Mayor of St. Sonis and at one time owner of some of the fastest Mississippi boats.

Mr. Brown often told me that you were a very "bum" pilot. He said you had the habit of running "her" on sand banks.

Joe Brown is sleeping on one of the hills above Atton overlooking the river he loved so well.... I never had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with Mr. Mark Twain but I certainly would like to [MTP].

April 26 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Eden Phillpotts.

Dear Mr. Phillpotts:

The Human Boy Again has arrived, & I have just begun it & am greatly enjoying it. Meantime (in Bermuda) I read—& re-read—The Mother of the Man, with high admiration. A great book!

I wish I had energy enough to resume work upon one or two of my several half-finished books—but that is a dream, & won't ever come true. / Cordially your friend ... [MTP].

Note: Gribben supplies Phillpotts's dedication of the book: "TO MY DEAR FRIEND, / MARK TWAIN, / FATHER OF 'TOM SAWYER' AND / 'HUCKLEBERRY FINN,' / THESE HUMAN BOYS, / WITH SINCEREST REGARD." The title page quotes Mark Twain's aphorism from "Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar" about the schoolboy who said that "Faith is believing what you know ain't so." The Human Boy Again (1908), and The Mother of Man (1908), both by Phillpotts [Gribben 544-5]. Note: See Philpotts letter of May 11.

Isabel Lyon's journal: That last Sunday evening batch was here again and we had a lovely time, for downstairs Margaret Frohman told us how she doesn't wear any drawers in her first act, and we chatted a cosy lot. The Frohmans left early and then the Waylands stayed until 1:30 and I a-perishing with sleep. But it is lovely to be a-perishing with sleep when the Waylands are here [MTP: IVL TS 49].

April 27 Monday – Helen Schuyler Allen wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens, / I was afraid that possibly you had forgotten to write me, so decided I would write you first, and tell you how much I have missed you, I shall always remember the lovely times we had together and particularly our fine swim that last day you were in Bermuda. When ever I use my camera I think of you, and how kind you were to help me get it. Please do write me soon. I remain you loving and devoted "Angel-fish" / Helen Schuyler Allen

P.S. Please give my love to Miss Lyon [MTAq 146].

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam, including her story, "Martin Chown," that Sam had asked for in his Apr. 24 letter.

Dear Mr Clemens

here is the story

What would have happened. The guests were gone and Martin Chown sat by the fire it was almost out. Martin Chown was an old man no not old but he was not young he was 65 years old he was alone and his thoughts were sad they went back to the last Christmas where he had sat in the death chamber of his wife and how she had when his train of thoughts were suddenly interrupted by a figure clothed in white You are happier as it is it said so is she.

"No No interrupted the man."

You are the spirit but I will show you what would have happened if she had lived Come Come

Martin Chown drew back.

Where was he to be taken but the spirit drew him forward do not be afraid come again. Martin Chown followed it. It led him to a room he looked and recognized the courtroom he was on the witness stand so was his wife

What does it mean he asked the spirit

it means that your wife would have loved someone eles and gotten rid of you through the divorce court

Will she suceed he was about to ask when he looked up the spirit and the courtroom had vanished he was once more seated by the now dying fire there was no sign of the spirit

Martin Chown slowly arose it is better as it is he said slowly He had learned that it is best to be contented with what is ordained

[—]

I have missed you very very much (also the cats but not so much) the play went on very well everyone said I did very well thank Miss very much for sending the bag Mother would write but she is sick in bed with lots of love your loving / Dorothy

P.S. give lots of love to Miss Lyon [MTAq 146-7].

Isabel Lyon's journal: A larynghaical cold, I've got. But I went with John Howells to look at gas fixtures at Caldwells' wonderful place on 15th street where they have the most exquisite reproductions from all nations. These men (Mr. Von Lossburg among them) spend their lives searching museums and excavations and palaces for the most beautiful, perfect lamps and chandeliers and lanterns, and their place is comforting—more comforting than a museum [MTP: IVL TS 50].

V.F. Von Lossberg for Caldwell & Co., NYC wrote a list of fixtures “under consideration for your new residence” [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

April 28 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Nancy Langhorne Astor.

Dear Cousin:

I am very sorry to hear that you have been sick, & very glad to believe that you are well again.

I wonder if I am really to have the lark of darting over to England & back, in the summer? The thought of it is enticing, but—There’s always a but. I do not suppose I can go—still, it is good enough material to dream upon, till by & by.

I went round the corner at midnight last Tuesday, & was in the humor to dance, but refrained, you not being there. I couldn’t manage it alone./ Ever yours [MTP].

Note: Virginia-born Nancy Wicher Langhorne (1879-1964) married Englishman Waldorf Astor (1879-1952) in 1906. It was the second marriage for both. Their English home, “Cliveden,” was the focal point for gatherings of literary figures and political leaders. It is likely that Sam met the Astors in his 1907 trip to England. When Astor inherited the title of Viscount he was elevated to the House of Lords. Nancy (Lady Astor) was elected to her husband’s former seat in 1919 in Parliament, becoming the first woman to serve in the House of Commons. The term “cousin” which Sam used was likely due to their common surname “Langhorne,” though Clemens family tradition held that the name was given to Samuel as an honor to a friend, not a relative. Clemens’ parents were from Virginia, as were the Langhornes, so it is likely that Nancy was related to the man whose name was given to Sam. Just where Sam went to dance at midnight on Apr. 21 is not known.

Sam also wrote to Andrew Carnegie.

Dear St. Andrew:

The whisky came at the right time. Of course—for whisky never comes at the wrong time.

“My boat is by the shore

And my bark is on the sea

But before I go, Tom Moore,

Here’s a health to Carnegie.”

Byron.

As always

† Mark [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Oh, you dear Dorothy, you have changed the story! You little rascal, you have put things in it that were not there before, & I want it just as it was. Be a good child, & send me the original manuscript—I will be sure & send it back to you.

Of course you did very well, in the play—I knew you would.

Dear heart, can’t you come up Saturday after next & play billiards & take lunch & go to a matinee & stay over till Monday? Can’t you? Won’t you? I hope so. Ask your mother, if you may come. I shan’t be here long—only a month; then our new house in the country will be finished, & we’ll go & live in it. And you must come there as soon as you can. There will be a bed in your room for your mother.

I haven’t seen a cat since you went away until to-night—then Tammany came up to play billiards.

With lots of love, / SLC

[In the left-margin of the first page.] I like the story in its changed form, but I like the former form a little the best [MTP; MTAq 147-8].

Sam's A.D. is given by Gribben:

"Clemens said that he last saw the senior Edward A. Sothern (1826-1881) as Lord Dundreary twenty-five years ago in Hartford, when Clemens laughed so constantly that he felt obliged to leave the theatre so as not to distract from Sothern's acting. "In those days it was the funniest thing I had ever seen on the stage, and I find that it is just as funny now as it was then. I saw it yesterday [sic]. I am old & intelligent now, and by earnest and watchful effort was able to keep from going into hysterics over it" [Gribben 689].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "These days are a crashing rush over the King's house [Redding]. I'm having a sorry time wasting time finding [wall]papers, but at the Alfred Peats Co. I'm getting them" [MTP: IVL TS 50].

Richard Watson Gilder wrote to Sam.

My grandfather was a Methodist class leader; my father was a Methodist preacher; my uncle was a Methodist preacher. These facts account for those virtues which you have always found shining so brightly in my person.

The above are the reasons also for my writing this line of introduction to a committee of Methodist ministers who have designs upon you. I do not know why they prefer yourself to Twichell but they apparently know what they want. ... [MTP].

John M. Howells wrote to advise Sam that they had ordered the Verrochio Cupid for the fountain on the lower terrace, enclosing a letter from The Erkins Co. supplying the Cupid [MTP].

John Larkin, attorney, NYC wrote to Sam.

The two suits by the City of New York one against you as executor of Mrs. Clemens for about $75. for taxes for the year 1905, and the other against you personally for about $750. for taxes for the same year, have, as you know, been pending for some months. I have kept the suits open during your absence.... I think the suit against you as executor for the small amount will have to be paid. As regards the other suit...the only way to settle the suit is by your appearing either in person or by your secretary or someone else who is familiar your your affairs and making an affidavit before the Corporation Counsel showing that the assessment, which was $50,000, was excessive [MTP].

Edith Thompson wrote from Milwaukee, Wisc. to Sam. "When I reached home last Saturday, I found your letter and book. It was lovely of you to send it to me and I appreciate it very much. / We had a very rough trip home also, but it was not as rough as yours, I don't think. / Yours..." [MTP]. Note: the lady was likely in Bermuda about the same time Clemens was there.

April 29 Wednesday— Sam wrote a sketch unpublished until 2009: "Dr. Van Dyke as a Man and as a Fisherman" [Who Is Mark Twain? xxvi, 87-94]. Note: title assigned by the MTP. Undoubtedly the sketch owes itself to an Atlantic article in the May 1908 issue by Henry Bradford Washburn, "Shall We Hunt and Fish? The Confessions of a Sentimentalist," where Washburn opens with a quotation from Van Dyke's "Some Remarks on Gulls, with a Foot-note on a Fish," Scribner's Magazine Aug. 1907. In his A.D. for this day Sam wrote (not dictated): "Last night I read in the Atlantic a passage from one of Rev. Dr. Van Dyke's books....I like Van Dyke, and I greatly admire his literary style—notwithstanding the drawback that a good deal of his literary product is of a religious sort" [Gribben 722: DV 251 MTP]. Note: Van Dyke would be "an officiating clergyman" at Sam's funeral at the Brick Presbyterian.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King can't dictate these days—he is waiting to be settled in the Redding house" [MTP: IVL TS 50].

Kendall Banning wrote to Lyon (though catalogued to Lyon & Clemens) about making another cast of Clemens' hand. "The cast taken this afternoon has turned out satisfactorily so far as we know, but we would like to show the hand in different position.... I am writing to Mr. Henry H. Rogers to-day with a request that he also pose for us. It might be possible to arrange to take casts of both Mr. Clemens and Mr. Rogers' hands at the same time—a plan which was suggested by Mr. Clemens himself" [MTP]. Note: IVL: "It was a poor cast they made—not showing the wrist or palm." Also, a clipping is in the file, paper not specified, "H.H. ROGERS SAID TO BE IN VERY POOR HEALTH."

Howells & Stokes wrote a short note advising that they were ordering two exterior Venetian blinds to fit the two openings at the end of the loggia, for $128.50 [MTP].

April 30 Thursday – Frances Nunnally wrote from Baltimore to Sam.

While I was at home for my holidays, I started several times to write to you, but something always interrupted me, so I am going to try to write now. I had such a good time at home, that it was awfully hard when I had to come back to school. There is just six weeks to this term, though, and I think it will pass very quickly. When I come up to New York about the first or middle of June, I hope very much I can see you. Margaret Disosway told me when she came back to school that Mrs. Quick had taken her to call on you while she was in New York, and I surely wish I had been there.

I think we will sail for England on the "Minneapolis" on the sixth of June, but there may be some trouble about my leaving school before it is over. We have gotten our passage for that date and I don't know what we will do if they will not let me leave school early. They have always been very strict about that sort of thing here, thought. Perhaps we can get passage on a later boat.

I want this letter to go off on the afternoon mail so I will stop. / With love, / Francesca [MTAq 148-9].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I went to Redding this afternoon, and after a drive of 4 miles in a driving rain (open carriage—no top) Lounsbury's wife welcomed us, and I went early to bed" [MTP: IVL TS 50].

May – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam inscribed a copy of LM to an unidentified person: "Mark Twain /. I published this book at my own expense, as an experiment in economy. It cost me fifty-six thousand dollars before the first copy issued from the press. / SLC / May, 1908." [MTP].

Sam discussed The Age of Reason by Thomas Paine (1737-1809) with Albert Bigelow Paine, who quotes Twain:

"...that seems a mild book now. I read it first when I was a cub pilot, read it with fear and hesitation, but marveling at its fearlessness and wonderful power. I read it again a year or two ago, for some reason, and was amazed to see how tame it had become. It seemed that Paine was apologizing everywhere for hurting the feelings of the reader" [MTB 1445].

Bookman (NY) ran an anonymous article, "Travelling with Mark Twain," p. 227-8. Tenney: "Describes the hold of MT and Kipling on all who speak English; for example, when MT boarded the Bermudian a stevedore asked, 'Where's his white suit?' On the ship, a traveler introduced himself because he thought it was 'the duty—and the privilege—of every American—to shake hands—with Mark Twain'" [Tenney, ALR Third Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1979) 192].

The Circle published an anonymous article, "At Home with Famous Authors: A Glimpse into the workshop where seven great writers do their thinking and writing." Tenney: "Includes a photograph of W.D. Howells at his desk, and one of MT in bed" [Tenney, ALR Second Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1980) 175].

May 1 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the Apr. 30 to Frances Nunnally.

The way you are arranging things, you little rascal, what sort of a glimpse of you am I going to get? Before the 6th of June we shall be living in the house I am building in the country. However, it isn't far away—only an hour & a half. When you arrive here I will come to town & see you—and then I hope you & your mother can run out to the villa with me & give me a visit.

If you should need to change your steamship-date, let me know, & I will put it into the hands of Ashcroft & Miss Lyon & save you the bother of attending to it.

It was a great pleasure to see Miss Margaret; I hope it isn't to be the last time. Francesca dear, is Atlanta vain of you two, or are you samples of just the ordinary average product of that place? /With love ... [MTP; MTAq 149].

Isabel Lyon's journal: I drove to look at a Redding farm of 70 acres and a dear old house for $3500. for Zoheth and Sheba and then Lounsbury took me to Lyonesse and Eugene Adams and I had a splendid half hour planning for the arrangement for the house. We tore the plaster from the stone work around the mantles and it reveals a lovely old chimney piece of coarse stone work that I shall leave exposed. But the work of the day was at the King's house going over and over the rooms to get the sense of them, and to correct a score of tiny mistakes.

The work seems to go forward very slowly and outside of the house is chaos. Santa's wing is an improvement to the whole house [MTP: IVL TS 50-51].

May 2 Saturday – Isabel Lyon's journal: Headache. So ill all day, for I wept without control for hours last night, because I was exhausted, and the fact that Santa [Clara] misunderstood all my efforts, in working over the house. My anxiety over the finishings, my interest in my search for the right thing for the King's house has all been misinterpreted, and the child says I am trying to ignore her. All my effort has been to please her, to keep her from the dreary search of hours and hours to find the right thing, or shape or color. The King has resented my being out of the house so much, until I've told him that I only seem neglectful and that all my days are only for his interest, and that when he thinks that I am out frolicking, I am only trying to save his money and Santa's strength. Oh, so ill I am [MTP: IVL TS 51].

Charles H. Higgs wrote from Chicago to Sam about CS and the cult which he'd studied for 25 years. Higgs praised the book as "the best presentation of the facts of any work so far," and advised Sam to revise the first half of the book so as not to "raise prejudice in the minds of some" [MTP].

Rossiter Johnson for the National Alumni wrote to ask Sam's permission to include 2 to 4,000 word synopses of GA or PW or TS in their forthcoming 20 volume set [MTP]. Note: Harper's was consulted and, in a May 23 letter to Lyon, they thought it unwise.

Charles J. Langdon wrote to Sam from 355 South Marengo Avenue in Pasadena, Calif., where he'd gone for his health. He asked Sam for an autographed photo for a friend, Joseph E. Hinds, who "lives here and has been very kind to me during my stay." He finished with: "I expect to be here until about the middle of June and a letter sent to the above address would reach me" [MTP; Mark Woodhouse, Elmira College email Jan. 31, 2011]. Note: Twain signed a photo for Joseph sometime in 1905: see 1905 year listings.

Dorothy Sturgis wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens / How do you think I have spent my entire day to-day? Reading "The Prince and the Pauper". I have always loved it, but now it has an added interest for me since I know its author!

Perhaps you remember that in your last letter to me you spoke of Sothorn's Lord Dundreary. I saw it when it was here, and thought it was perfectly splendid, and just as funny as it could be! But possibly a little too long drawn out in some places, such as the time when Lord Dundreary has that long conversation with the girl, whom [he] eventually marries, just outside the house.

Papa went to New York last night on business, and I begged him to take me with him so that I could come and see you, but he remained hard hearted and refused to take me!

Give my love to Miss Lyon, but tell her I shan't love her any more if she does not send me those pictures of you pretty soon, because you must remember that I have no picture of you at all! On Easter mama gave me a beautiful Japanese silver picture frame, with the opening four inches in diameter, and I am hoping that a picture of you will fit that. / Ever your loving / Dorothy [MTAq 149-50]. Note: Edward H. Sothern; see Apr. 25 entry.

May 3 Sunday— Isabel Lyon's journal: "Ill all day, but I did go up to the Wayland's for dinner with a stiff larynx—and a heavy heart" [MTP: IVL TS 51].

A.J. Dawson wrote from Scotland to ask Sam, "When will you come back again? The U.S. shouldn't be selfish; we too have rights....Yours so affectionately." Dawson quoted Sam's "The Aged Pilot Man" from RI (1872) [MTP].

Dorothy Quick wrote from Plainfield, NJ, enclosing the story of "Martin Chown" she'd written. "I think I copied the story exactly...I have lost one sheet of the original but I'll send what I have[,] I'm sorry now I copied it over but Mother said the writing was very bad. I want to come up next Saturday very much & I think I can" [MTP; not in MTAq].

May 4 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the May 3 from Dorothy Quick.

You are just a dear, you little rascal! I shall be so glad to see you. I shall be downstairs waiting for you at 11.30 when you come.

It was lovely of you to send me the original MS of the story.

We certainly did have good times in Tuxedo, & I guess we will duplicate them in the new house in the country. We'll start The Author's League again, & you will dictate & I will be your amanuensis.

Yes, Wednesday will be time enough to let me know whether you can come or not—but I do hope you won't fail to come, dear heart.

I am watching out for the violets; it is very sweet of you to send them. / With lots of love ... [MTP; MTAq 150]. Note: in his Apr. 28 to Quick, Sam had asked her to "come up Saturday after next" (May 9) and to stay over till Monday, May 11. She wrote him shortly about May 6 however (not extant) that she was down with a cold and wanted to postpone the visit until the following weekend.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Somebody has put all these sickening ideas into Santa's head and I feel that my interest in the house is dead forever" [MTP: IVL TS 52].

Arnold Briggs from England wrote a fan letter to Sam. While confessing that American humor seemed "abstruse" to him, he'd just finished "A Horse's Tale," which he loved. He closed by asking for an autograph [MTP].

Andrew Lang wrote from Kensington, London. "If you will lay 60s [illegible word] it is all right. I believe he is to be translated, and has only afraid that he may expect his [illegible word], but I will give you what I can find" [MTP]. Note: see Clemens' Apr. 25 reply to Lang's non-extant.

May 5 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Eulabee Dix / Mr. Clemens remembers that you want a sitting for his hand./ Margery. / Mustn't forget that Mr. Clemens is counting on your & Carolines visit. It isn't entirely selfish" [MTP: IVL TS 52]. Note: this entry is on a separate scrap of paper, undated and placed in this date; it may not relate.

Homer G. Curless wrote from Springfield, Ohio to ask Sam's advice. Which books should a young man put in his library? [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Mr. Clemens would be glad if he were able to give advice, but he finds that the taste of each person must determine the matter"

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam about “addition of certain apparatus” to “facilitate the connection of a second generating unit” for acetylene gas [MTP].

May 6 Wednesday – In N.Y.C. Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Frederick A. Duneka.

“Mr. Clemens asks me to write for him & say that as these people want such a small quantity of stuff, & as it would look better to be in the collection than out of it, if you have no objection he will tell them to go ahead” [MTP]. Note: likely some unidentified group wanting to reprint snippets of Mark Twain’s published works, though also unidentified.

George L. Carlisle wrote to Sam, enclosing his first attempt at a book, Around the World in a Year. (1908). He sought Sam’s opinion of the book [MTP]. Note: See Gribben p. 127.

Dorothy Quick wrote a short note to Sam. “I have such a bad cold I won’t be able to come in this week if you want me I can come next week instead. I am disappointed. I put off writing till the last minute as Mother thought I might be all right...”[MTP; not in MTAq].

May 7 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “I dined, Mother too, with the Waylands at the Café Beaux Arts and then we went to see Margaret Illington [Frohman] again in ‘The Thief’”[MTP: IVL TS 52].

Charles H. Keep for the Knickerbocker Trust sent a form letter thanking Sam as one of their depositors, allowing them to reorganize [MTP].

May 8 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick.

(Joan of Arc’s Day.)

Your letter came last night, dear, & brought me such a disappointment. I am so sorry you have a cold, but glad you are taking proper care of it. It would not be wise for you to make a journey in the draughty cars at such a time.

“If you want me I can come next week.” If I want you! Can you imagine when I don’t want you? As far as my understanding of it goes, I want you all the time. I hope you will get entirely over your cold, dear heart, & will come to me to-morrow week sound & well.

The violets came promptly, & the reason I did not write you to that effect was, that I wanted to tell you, & show them to you unwithered; for Claude undertook to keep them fresh, & he has done it. You dear sweet child, to send them to me [MTP; MTAq 151]. Note: Claude Benchotte the butler.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Santa is never sure for 24 hours if she will be able to make this trip to London. The plans are all going forward. / My days are terrible—except for a few placid moments with the King” [MTP: IVL TS 52].

Zoheth S. Freeman for Merchants National Bank wrote to Lyon (though catalogued as to Clemens) [MTP].

May 9 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

Dear Miss Dorothy:

Why, bless you heart, your father isn’t a bit necessary on a short journey like that. Use him for company, & leave the rest to us. We will meet you at the station; & take care of you; & when you return homeward we will put you on board your car. It is all easy, & handy, & safe—you see that it is, yourself. Next time you have a chance to come down, tell us your train, & come right along. We will take you off your father’s hands at the station, giving a receipt for you if required; & on your return we will deliver you unimpaired into his hands.

There, I've said it twice. That is because I wrote pages 1 about a week ago, & didn't re-read it when I began page 2 at the bottom of page 1.

[May 9] I have been waiting and waiting for the photographs to come from the developer before writing you. They never came until last night, & they were bad, when they did come. I enclose the only good one. The likeness of you is very good, but I wish you had washed your face before sitting. The picture ought to have been taken right after the wave-drench, then you would have been up to standard. The chair-back at your left is VERY good.

The picture will fit the frame your mother gave you, I think. You say you have no picture of me at all. Do you mean a solitaire? There's plenty, but they are too large for the frame—but they don't belong in that frame, anyhow.

We are going to the police-parade, now. Good bye. With the love of / S L C

P. S. Miss Lyon has brought copies of the two other pictures. I enclose them [MTP; MTAq 151-2].

After the parade, Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick, revealing the day's activities.

I hope the cold is well—I mean I hope you are well of the cold, you dear Dorothy. I had arranged to take you to the police-parade, but I took Miss Lyon in your place. Perhaps it was best that you were not there, for it was cloudy part of the time, & a little chilly. It was much the most splendid parade I have ever seen, either in Europe or America, & I am sure you would have enjoyed it.

I took Ashcroft & Miss Lyon to the matinée, & the box was an unusually large & comfortable one, but I didn't like the piece. It was too frivolous & vaudevillian, & too much ballet & clothes and foolish songs. I got very tired of it, & was glad you were not there. We must find something better for next Saturday when you come. I miss you, & shall be so glad to see you, dear. / With lots of love, ...[MTAq 152-3]. Note: IVL's journal gives the matinee performance: The Soul Kiss, a musical in two acts, produced by Florenz Ziegfeld at the New York Theatre [Gribben 649].

Sam inserted the following newspaper article:

DISTINGUISHED GUESTS REVIEWING TO-DAY'S POLICE PARADE

[photograph of five men captioned as follows:]

MARK TWAIN. CARDINAL LOGUE. ARCHBISHOP FARLEY. PRESIDENT M'GOWAN. PATROLMAN FARLEY.

This is a photograph of the scene on the reviewing stand this afternoon while the medals of honor were being presented to the brave policemen who had won them during the past year. At one end of the row of guests shown here is Mark Twain, wearing a derby hat, and at the other end Patrolman James Farley, who has been fifty years on the force and who was present at the special invitation of Commissioner Bingham. next to Mark Twain is Cardinal [Michael] Logue, Primate of Ireland, with Archbishop Farley on his left. President McGowan, of the Board of Aldermen, is on the Archbishop's left.

[beside a face in the background SLC has written '× Miss Lyon.']

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King, Ashcroft and I went to see "The Soul Kiss"—a horrid sort of play, but Gence the Danish dancer was beautiful and wonderful" [MTP: IVL TS 52-53].

Irene Gerken wrote from Deal Beach, NJ: "My dear Mr Clemens / I am now in the country and am having a fine time, only it is not very good weather and can not go out. But as it is a good day to write letters I am kept pretty busy, I am going to call on Anne Fields tomorrow and as it is not very far I am going in the Auto. Please give my love to Miss Lion" [MTP; not in MTAq].

Howells & Stokes wrote to Sam, enclosing a copy of drawing #45, showing the arrangement of bookcases in the living room, hall and billiard room of the Redding house [MTP].

May 10 Sunday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The Waylands and the Frohmans were here for dinner again, and a young journalist” [MTP: IVL TS 53].

Frances Nunnally wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens, — / Thank you very much for your kind offer to change our steamship passage for us, but we have already succeeded in getting very good accommodations on the “Minnetonka.” So we shall sail on the thirteenth instead of on the sixth of June. By the present arrangements, I will only have about one day in New York before we sail, as I am not to leave here until the eleventh. I certainly hope I can see you before we leave. When do you expect to go to your new house? I know you will be glad to get there, in the country. I surely would love to make you a visit in your new home, but as I said, I will just have one day before we sail.

I am having to study awfully hard now, but in three weeks the worst part of my work will be over, and then it will not be anytime before school closes. Then I am sure my summer abroad will make up for all the hard work. / With love, / Francesca [MTAq 153].

May 11 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Margaret Frohman has sent me a darling colonial tea service” [MTP: IVL TS 53].

A.C. Furbush wrote from Georgetown, Conn., hearing of Sam’s plans to donate books to start a library in West Redding at the Umpawaug Chapel. Furbush argued that Clemens’ books would get better exposure if he donated them to Georgetown’s library, which was recently started by laboring people [MTP].

Katherine Nichols wrote from Newark, NJ to Sam. “Dear Cousin: / If you think I am worthwhile, I would greatly appreciate a reproduction in marble of Karl Gerhardt’s bust of you, miniature size. / Its really an accurate likeness!” After her signature: “How would you like me to get you into spiritual communication with Susie? I can do it; under the proper influences or auspices” [MTP].

Eden Phillpotts wrote from Hotel Minerva, Florence, Italy to Sam.

My Dear Friend / I do hope you are back like a giant refreshed from the vexed Bermoothes to your unfinished books.

I saw a plaster picture of you in a shop window yesterday & smiled upon it. And somehow I seem to expect the white vision of you at every street corner! “The Mother” [see Apr. 26 Notes] (the line little which has to be changed in U.S.A.) is a little too saccharine, but it was written for love of one woman: my own mother who said to me “the time has come for you to write me a book; & my book shall be a joy & not a grief.” So I obeyed & found in the heredity of goodness a them that promised beauty & hope.

I wonder if you would like a copy of the book from me? You shall have it when I go home in July.... I wonder what you liked best in Florence?

PS / I suppose it is not in my power to do you any service in Florence but if so, command me [MTP].

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens

I am almost well now but not quite. I am so glad you got the violets all right. It was so funny how I got this cold that I must tell you about it. I was in school Tuesday when suddenly my eye began to get red. & Miss Arnold (my teacher) said she was afraid I was going to have a pink eye and I had better go home which I did. I did not have pink eye but I got nervous; hence the cold. But I am all right now except a slight cough. How are the cats? “Oh dear! look at the time quarter of nine; I must go to bed.” So I will say “good night” and close with lots & lots of love / I am / Your very loving / Dorothy

P.S. Please give Miss Lyon lots of love for me. Dorothy [MTP; MTAq gives May 12].

May 12 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick.

You dear little Dorothy, it was very fortunate that you escaped the pinkeye, for although a cold is bad, pinkeye is worse, & is a stubborn & painful malady.

I shall look for you Saturday morning with high anticipations. We've got a box for "Girls," & they say it is very good, & is clean & wholesome & hasn't any of that horrible ballet-dancing in it, such as we saw last Saturday.

Margaret Illington has been trying to get into our Aquarium, & I wouldn't let her; but Sunday night she came here to dinner with her husband (Daniel Frohman), & she was dressed for 12 years, & had pink ribbons at the back of her neck & looked about 14 years old; so I admitted her as an angel-fish, & pinned the badge on her bosom. There's lots of lady-candidates, but I guess we won't let any more in, unless perhaps Billy Burke.

I've got something for you. It cost 10 cents. I took it away from Ashcroft.

I haven't seen the kittens lately, but Tammany came up Sunday night & jumped up on the table & helped us play billiards—uninvited. / With lots & lots of love, / SLC

Dear heart, we must start the Author's League again [MTAq 154].

Note: source provides that Girls ran for 64 performances at Daly's Theatre in New York and starred Laura Nelson Hall. Margaret Illington, wife of Daniel Frohman, manager of the Lyceum Theatre [n1-2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Hunting clothes for Santa" [MTP: IVL TS 53].

Frank Bloodgood wrote to Sam, agreeing to "furnish and hang all wall papers, Japanese grass cloth, Burlap, etc., prepare and tint all ceilings, paint all bath rooms, etc. at your residence in Redding...for the sum of ...$1,285.00" [MTP].

Angie J. King wrote from Janesville, Wisc. to praise CS [MTP].

May 13 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote a letter of introduction for George M. Robinson, wealthy Elmira furniture maker, to Bram Stoker. "This is George Robinson, a friend of mine of 40 years' standing, & I hope you will tell him the things he wishes to know, for Clara's sake & mine" [MTP]. Note: George M. Robinson was a lineal descendant of John Robinson, one of the Mayflower emigrants of 1620. See Aug. 20, 1890 entry, Vol. II. Also, the reference to Clara and the need for Sam's note become clear by this May 14, 1908, p. 9 squib in the New York Times, under the heading, "MUSIC AND MUSICIANS":

George M. Robinson sails on the Baltic to-day to arrange for the concert appearance in London and Paris of Miss Clara Clemens, the contralto, daughter of Mark Twain, and Miss Marie Nichols, violinist, who will sail Saturday on the Caronia [Note: Robinson was Clara's new manager, hired at $300 per month [Hill 215].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Calvin H. Higbie. "Mr. Clemens asks me to write for him & say that he has no idea of the value of the article you speak of; that you might be able to sell it to some newspaper out here, but what they would give you for it is a thing that Mr. Clemens could not possibly determine" [MTP]. Note: this a reply to a non-extant request from Sam's old mining partner.

Helen S. Allen wrote from Bermuda to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens,

I was so glad to hear you hadn't forgotten me but that it was only the mail. How sorry I was to hear that Miss Lyon was ill and I am also glad to hear that she is better now. A dreadful thing happened the other night!

Some dogs came and killed all my guinea pigs and rabbits, except one rabbit who hid itself away in the coal room.

There is to be a fancy dress dance at Government House on the 22nd of May. It is the Governor's little boys birthday and lots of children are asked and some of the cadets from the ships. Maxwell is going as an Indian Chief and I as Juliet, I went in this costume once before.

I have never met Irene, but I saw her with you while she was here and I must admit I envy her being with you in New York.

Mother and Daddy have not decided whether I am to go away this winter to school, but if I do not I am looking forward to seeing you here.

Will you please write to me again soon? because I shall love to here about all your plans and doings.

With lots of love for Miss Lyon and yourself

I remain / Your "Bermuda angel-fish"

Helen Schuyler Allen [MTAq 155-6].

John H. Finley sent a telegram to Sam: "Electric cab will call for you tomorrow morning nine fifteen to bring you to the college for exercises" [MTP]. Note: see May 14 entry.

Jessie G. Happ wrote from South Bend, Ind. to tell Sam the story of his father, who was injured in the Civil War and had been denied twice in applying for a pension increase. Would Clemens aid his father "in bringing this matter before Congress"? [MTP]. Note: IVL: Mr. Clemens would like to be able"

Frederick T. Leigh for Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens: / You will remember that you referred a letter to us, of Mr. Rossiter Johnson [May 2], Editor-in-Chief of the National Alumni, in which the gentleman offered you $500. for permission to use in his forthcoming set of books, from 2,000 to 4,000 words either from "The Gilded Age" or "Pudd'nhead Wilson" and "Tom Sawyer".

After considerable consideration and examining into the matter, I think it would be an undesirable thing to grant the permission asked.

We have consistently, for more than four years, refrained from letting anybody print anything from your books in the various collections of authors' writings, in readers, etc., etc., and it is believed that this policy has been a wise one and resulted in increased sales of your books in sets and singly. As it is, no one can now make use of your name to help them sell the collected writings of others. ...[MTP].

Otto H. Kuhn for Kuhn, Loeb & Co., NYC wrote to Sam.

I am obliged for your note of the 13th instant. As I wrote Miss Herts yesterday, existing engagements make it impossible for me to be present at the meeting at your house this afternoon. I regret this exceedingly, both because the object of the Children's Educational Theatre is particularly sympathetic to me and because it would have afforded me much pleasure to meet you and the other gentlemen concerned [MTP].

Dorothy Sturgis wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens

I'm just going to write you this letter to see how famous you are & not put any address on it. Do tell me if it reaches you! / DMS

Samuel Clemens

21 5 Ave.

N.Y.

I put this on so that if they don't know your address they will find it inside [MTAq 156]. Note: Sam wrote on the page, "It arrived promptly."

May 14 Thursday – Sam left 21 Fifth Ave. at 10 a.m., sat on the platform for the City College Ceremonies for three and a half hours, then returned home at 3 p.m. and an hour later took a walk: “At 4 I walked out to 57th street & made a call, then came back in the ’bus—for it was raining” [May 15 to Jean]. In the evening he gave a speech for the banquet of the Alumni of the City College, below:

Sam was included as a speaker at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel for the Jubilee celebration of the College of the City of New York. He arrived at 9:30 p.m. The New York Times, p. 5 covered the event:

JUBILEE DEDICATION FOR CITY COLLEGE

Eighty Seats of Learning Represented at the Ceremonies on St. Nicholas Heights.

BRYCE AND TWAIN THERE

Mrs. Cleveland Touches Electric Button That Rings
the Tower Bell Signalizing the Dedication.

The College of the City of New York which cost $6,500,000 and in its completed state is said to be second to none in the United States, was dedicated yesterday to the cause of higher education, free to all, under the most auspicious conditions.

The day was an ideal one for the ceremonies, at which no less than eighty colleges of this and other lands were represented in the throng that was gathered for the dedicatory exercises.

Aside from the actual dedication there were two notable features. One was the ovation with which Mark Twain was received. The other was the raising of the Stars and Stripes to the lofty flagstaff on the plaza, while the assembled company sang “America” and the silken folds of the emblem snapped in the breeze.

The exercises began at 9:15 o’clock with a reception for the speakers and distinguished guests in Townsend Harris Hall, where the academic procession was formed. It was a few minutes after 10 o’clock, while the Seventh Regiment Band played an overture, that the line, with Major Charles E. Lydecker, Marshal in Chief, at its head, moved from the north door of Harris Hall toward the plaza, where the presentation and raising of the flags of the city and of the Nation took place.

President McGowan of the Board of Alderman, introduced by Dr. Finley, President of the college, presented the city flag.

“We of New York owe allegiance to three flags,” said Mr. Gowan. “First is our allegiance to the National flag, with beautiful and inspiring Stars and Stripes; second, to the flag of this Commonwealth, the emblem of the great Empire State, and the greatest and most powerful in the Union; third, the flag of this city.”

Flag Flung to the Breeze.

The emblem was received by a delegation of students, who hurried with it to the tower of the auditorium, from which it was soon flung to the breeze.

Edward Lauterback, on behalf of the Associate Alumni of the college, presented the National emblem. The flag-raising which followed the address and formal presentation, was inspiring. With thousands grouped about the flagstaff “Old Glory” was run up and in a moment it was caught in the breeze.

As the band struck up the “Star Spangled Banner” every hat was doffed and cheer after cheer rang out to be echoes and re-echoed among the turreted towers of the surrounding buildings.

Mark Twain reached the grounds just before the flag-raising, and instantly recognized he was welcomed with cheers as he walked with buoyant step from the Amsterdam Avenue gate to the plaza. He wore the gown of a Doctor of Laws of Oxford, and the red and pale blue of his flowing robe and his shock of white hair would have made him a conspicuous figure in any assemblage. He joined a group of the guests and speakers consisting of Ambassador Bryce, President Eliot of Harvard University, Joseph H. Choate, Mayor McClellan, and Edward M. Shepard, President of the college trustees, all greeting him cordially.

The movement of the guests and speakers to the main hall, where the dedication exercises proper took place, proved a triumphal procession for Mark Twain. He walked with St. Clair McKelway, but all efforts to carry on a conversation with the editor were futile. Cheer after cheer rang out for the distinguished author. He smiled, waved his hand and doffed his cap to the enthusiastic throng. The undergraduates were unsparing in their welcome of the famous man of letters.

"What do you think of it?" he was asked.

"I am not a bit embarrassed," he replied.

Another reporter asked him if he didn't wish all the shouting boys could vote.

"That I don't," he said, laughing. "I am afraid they might elect me Sheriff, or to some other high office which I am not qualified to fill."

It was the City College's day, and Mark Twain's.

In the great hall those taking part in the programme were seated in the front row on the platform. Among them was Mrs. Grover Cleveland, who had a simple but interesting duty to perform in connection with the dedication. She sat between Mr. Shepard and President Finley, and was quickly recognized. She was quietly dressed in black, with just a dash of color in the form of purple trimming and a bit of lace at the throat. Her hat was trimmed with flowers and a white wing.

The exercises began with an invocation offered by Mgr. Lavelle, followed by the formal presentation of the buildings to the Mayor of the city by Mr. Shepard. Turning to Mayor McClellan, Mr. Shepard said:

"It is the plain duty of the Trustees at this dedication to express their special sense of the obligation which the college and city owe the genius and labors of George B. Post, the architect, and of those who have labored with him here.

"We offer, Mr. Mayor, this great hall and these buildings upon St. Nicholas Heights as the result of our stewardship over the moneys and other power which the city has put into our hands. Whatever may be amiss in what we have done we are confident that here is fit provision for the present work of the President, Faculty, and instructors, who must, in truth, be the rulers of the college, and for it earn its lesser or its greater glory.

"No doubt there must in time come still larger provision, but what has thus far been done makes easy on these very heights that increase in college work which will inevitably come with the Greater and still Greater New York. through the work of President Finley and his associates and successors may God bring the full measure of a great blessing to the City of New York, to those who dwell within its borders, and to those who are within the ever larger and larger, and, we pay, the nobler and still nobler, scope of its influence."

[passage cut here]

Every one settled back for a good laugh when President Finley called on Mark Twain to speak for Oxford, introducing him as the foremost figure in American letters. When he could make himself heard, the author said, in all seriousness:

"How difficult, indeed, is the higher education. Mr. Choate evidently needs a little of it. He is not only lacking as a statistician of New York, but he is off, way off, in his mathematics. 'Four thousand citizens of New York,' indeed!

"But I don't think it was wise or judicious on the part of Mr. Choate to show the kind of higher education he has obtained. He has said that seventy years ago he was in the lap of that great educator Horace Mann. I was there at the time—and see the result, the lamentable result. May be, if he had had a sandwich here to sustain him, the result would not have been so serious.

Gov. Hughes was to have spoken, but telegraphed that he was kept away by pressing official duties. He sent his congratulations.

400 ALUMNI AT THE WALDORF. [This at 9 p.m.]

They Sing Old Songs and Listen to the Wisdom of Mark Twain.

The "old boys" of the College of the City of New York—400 strong—representing the Associate Alumni of the institution, lustily last night drank to the long life and prosperity of their alma mater at a dinner in the Waldorf-Astoria. It was the closing feature of the day of celebration in connection with the dedication of the new buildings on St. Nicholas Heights. The alumni sang the song with a zest which revived memories of the old days, when they were enrolled as students in the buildings now vacated for the larger and more magnificent quarters which the city has built.

And when the echoes had died away, the alumni and members of the college Faculty, together with the Presidents of several other colleges in this and other States, listened to the words of wisdom and wit by Mark Twain and others.

One suggestion made by Mark Twain may take root and grow, the college men say, although, when offered last night, it was partially cloaked in jest. The suggestion was that a chair of citizenship be established at City College, and the idea met with applause. Mark Twain, who was late in arriving at the dinner, was lustily cheered. Some one facetiously shouted, "Who is Mark Twain?"

Instantly came the reply from many throats:

"First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen."

Before the author was called upon to speak, the other speakers had been frequently interrupted by cries of "Louder!" And on this Mark Twain commented:

"If you have a voice loud enough to state what you have to state you don't have to have anything in what you say anyhow." And then he told of the Mayor's suggestion made in his speech at the dedication exercises in the afternoon, that citizenship should be placed above everything, even learning.

Mark Twain's Suggestion.

"I thought when the Mayor said that there was not a man within hearing who did not agree with that sentiment," added Mr. Clemens. "And then I thought—is there in any college of the land a chair of citizenship where good citizenship and all that it implies is taught? there is not one—that is, not one where sane citizenship is taught. There are some which teach insane citizenship, bastard citizenship, but that is all. Patriotism! Yes, but patriotism is usually the refuge of the scoundrel. He is the man who talks the loudest.

"You can begin that chair of citizenship in the College of the City of New York. You can place it above mathematics and literature, and that is where it belongs.

"Some years ago on the gold coins we used to trust in God. We didn't put it on the coppers and the nickels because we were not sure. If you teach citizenship you will teach that veracity is one of the first principles of good citizenship. I think that the Congress of the United States should take it upon itself to state just what we do believe in.

"That statement on the gold coins, 'In God We Trust,' was an overstatement. There is not a nation in the world which ever put its faith in God. In the unimportant cases of life, perhaps, we do trust in God—that is, if we rule out the gamblers and burglars, and plumbers, for of course they do not believe in God.

"If cholera ever reached these shores the bulk of the Nation would pray to be delivered from the plague, but the rest of the population would put their trust in the Boards of Health. If I remember rightly, the President required or ordered the removal of that sentence from the coins. Well, I didn't see that the statement out to remain there. It wasn't true.

"The author then told of the forty-two children in the Holy Land who were devoured by two bears, and suggested that if they put their trust in God, as they had been advised to do by the prophet, they were sadly disappointed.

He Respects the Prophets.

"But I have a great respect for the baldheaded prophets," he resumed. "I expect to be one myself sometime. I don't know Mr. Bryan, but he's got that sort of a head. If congress puts that motto back on the coins I hope they will modify it. There are limitations. If there is not room on the coins for the limitations let them enlarge the coins.

"Now I want to tell a story about jumping at conclusions. It was told to me by Bram Stoker, and it concerns a christening. There was a little clergyman who was prone to jump at conclusions sometimes. One day he was invited to officiate at a christening. He went there sat the relatives—intelligent-looking relatives they were. The little clergyman's instinct came to him to make a great speech. He was given to flights of oratory that way—a very dangerous thing, for often the wings which take one into the clouds of oratorical enthusiasm are wax and melt up there, and down you come.

"But the little clergyman couldn't resist. He took the child in his arms and, holding it, looked at it a moment. It wasn't much of a child. It was little, like a sweet potato. Then the little clergyman waited impressively, and then: 'I see in your countenances, he said, 'disappointment of him. I see you are disappointed with this baby. Why? Because he is so little. My friends, if you had but the power of looking into the future you might see that great things may come of little things.

His Name Was Mary Ann.

“ ‘There is the great ocean, holding the navies of the world, which came from little drops of water no larger than a woman’s tears. There is the great constellations in the sky, made up of little bits of stars. Oh, if you could consider his future you might see that he might become the greatest poet of the universe, the greatest warrior the world has ever known, greater than Caesar, than Hannibal, than er —er (turning to the father,) what’s his name?’ ”

“The father hesitated then whispered back, ‘His name? Well, his name is Mary Ann.’ ”

It was nearly midnight when Mr. Clemens finished speaking. With a long cigar in his mouth he hastened from the dining hall, pausing at the door to say:

“I have an important engagement at a quarter of eleven.”

It was then 11:45

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The King, Paine and I went up to the New City College to see the gift of them to the city” [MTP: IVL TS 53].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote for Sam to Charles Gladstone Bird in Oakland, Calif., asking for a negative of Bird’s picture of the cabin at Jackass Hill, which Paine wanted for publication in the only authorized biography of Mark Twain. Paine mentioned that he had been to the very spot though there “was no trace of the old cabin” remained [MTP].

Caroline Coddington of Brooklyn wrote another bunch of drivel to Sam, enclosing some wood chips and a wooden ring, and some doodles with abstruse captions. All pretty non compis mentis were these crank letters of hers [MTP].

Mrs. Beaumont Packard for the Golden Gate Professional Club, NYC wrote to invite Sam to be their guest of honor at a reception, May 24 at the Plaza Hotel, and “make a few remarks on California and what it stands for in the world.... The objects of this Club are many principally however to benefit young aspirants, especially young women, coming here from California to seek their fortunes by studying the arts” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answrd May 15, ’08 / Regret very much”

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens / I got your letter & will be so glad to come Saturday I may come in with grandma on an early train which will bring me to your house at 11 but if I come in with mother it will be half-past I am writing this letter in a great hurry so you must excuse it this is going to be a very short letter as I want it to catch the first mail

With lots & lots of love I am your loving / Dorothy [MTAq 157].

May 15 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Greenwich, Conn.

It is a sour wet day, Jean dear, & at noon I am still in bed, but not idle. I am trying to arrange in my head some perplexing statistics to use in a speech I am to make in the afternoon 5 days hence, & am also trying to think of something to say at a banquet that night, & at another banquet 5 days afterward. These are busy times. I sat on the platform 3 hours & a half, yesterday, at the City College ceremonies, after prowling in gowned procession for an hour previously. There were about 200 degree-men in gowns, but they were black ones; I was glad to have a red one on, because it made me conspicuous. We left home at 10 in the morning & got back at 3. At 4 I walked out to 57th street & made a call, then came back in the ’bus—for it was raining. At 9. 30 p. m. I went to the City College banquet at the Waldorf, & got back at midnight. I made a vicious half-political half-theological speech, but sugared it over with a gentle-spirited tale at the end.

I am expecting you to-day, but you haven’t come yet. With lots of love, you dear Jean,

Father.

P. S. I find you are not coming to-day, dear heart, & I am disappointed [MTP].

In N.Y.C. Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam to Sanford, Bell, & Lahm, 61 Fourth Ave., NYC, confirming an order for a new pool table to be set up at the new Redding residence:

Gentlemen: / I hereby accept, for Mr. S. L. Clemens, your offer of the 14th inst., of one 5 x 10 pool table, quartered oak, "Baltimore" design, top of rails veneered with rosewood, new billiard rubber cushions fitted, new Simonis #2 cloth, oak cue rack to match table, one dozen selected hardwood butt cues with ivory tips, one mackintosh cover, one billiard brush, two bridges, one set of counters on wire, packed and delivered on board cars, for $130. net cash. This price to include labor of setting table up at Mr. Clemens' residence in Redding, Conn. The pockets to be made same size as those on the table in Mr. Clemens' city residence.

Please arrange with Miss Lyon, Mr. Clemens' secretary, as to the date for setting up the table at Redding.

Thanking you, I am,

Yours, very truly,

P. S.

I enclose card of introduction to Miss Lyon [MTP]. See Insert ad:

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

Yours of day-before-yesterday arrived this morning. It stopped over at Hartford for refreshments.

The newest photographs (& the best, we think) arrived from the photographer's yesterday evening, & Miss Lyon will mail one to you. The upper part of the figure, if judgmatically scissored out, will go into the 4. inch circle very well, if a part of the right arm be chopped off.

Land! I forgot all about the dancing lessons. I must attend to that. Don't you mind about the "bother," & we shan't. All we need to know is about your trains, & we'll receive you & re-ship you, & take good care of you between. And there won't be any bother about it. Dorothy comes from New Jersey every now & then & stays two or three days (she is coming tomorrow), & we don't discover that there is any bother about it. Just you give us your trains, & leave the rest to us.

You remember the Waylands? They are just lovely. They come here to dinner every Sunday night. The Freemans, too when they are in town. / With lots of love ... [MTP; MTAq 156]. Note: Zoheth S. Freeman was Sam's banker; Grace Hill Freeman (Mrs. Zoheth S. Freeman); Mr. & Mrs. John Elton Wayland.

Caroline Coddington wrote yet another crank letter to Sam; see prior [MTP].

Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam. "As I telephoned Miss Lyon, I saw Mr. Rogers, and he agreed to come to our luncheon at one o'clock on Wednesday, May 20th, at the Aldine.... Mr. Rogers, I think, will come if he is in town, but I am almost afraid that he will run away so that he will not have to come, and I hope you will corral him for the good of the cause" [MTP].

Alice Minnie Herts for the Children's Educational Theatre wrote to advise Sam of two performances on May 21 and May 24, and to ask if he would send any names he thought might like to be invited [MTP].

Elizabeth Jordan wrote from NYC to invite Sam to "dine with me at Delmonico's Sunday evening, June seventh at 8 p.m. to meet Mr. & Mrs. Charles Rann Kennedy" [MTP]. Note: editorial emphasis.

May 16 Saturday – Dorothy Quick arrived in New York for a visit and stay-over at Sam's house until Monday, May 18. With Isabel Lyon, the pair had tickets for "Girls" at Daly's Theatre:

Insert: Girls, play at Daly's theatre (See May 12 to Quick)

GIRLS  DALY'S Ev. 8:15. Mt. To-day 2:15.

Sam saw daughter Clara, accompanist Charles E. Wark (“Will”), and violinist Miss Marie Nichols off on the steamship Caronia, headed for Europe, where they were to give a series of concerts in London and Paris [May 19 to Allen; NY Times, May 17, p. 9, “Miss Clemens Sails to Sing in Europe”]. Note: Hill gives a performance in London at Queen’s Hall ca. June 6 and at Bechstein Hall, London on June 16 [200].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Santa sailed today in the Caronia. / Dorothy Quick arrived this morning to stay ovr Sunday” [MTP: IVL TS 53].

The New York Times, p. 3, “Top Price For Grant Letter” included two letters by Mark Twain sold:

Two letters of Mark Twain, one dated “Kaltenleukgeben 1898,” “Go on: fire away; I am a firm and trustworthy target for checks,” and the other, dated “London, 1900,” “A month ago I put $25,000 into a promising venture here,” respectively $4.50 and $6.50.

[Note: Both letters were to John Brisben Walker, Aug. 20, 1898 and Apr. 7, 1900. The investment was in the Int’l Plasmon Syndicate of London.].

May 17 Sunday – Dorothy Sturgis wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens.

You are indeed a most noted personage if a letter will reach you without any address on it at all. But do tell me why it went to Hartford, did you ever live there?

I saw a lovely article about you in the Transcript the other day, headed “Mark Twain-Nuisance Senator Stewart tells how he wrote ‘Innocents Abroad’ and frightened his landlady”! Was that true? If so I didn’t know that you were such a bad character, the description of you was truly awful, and not at all correct—now, except for the cigar. You wouldn’t be you if you didn’t have a cigar in your mouth or between your fingers.

Papa read aloud “The Brushwood Boy” to me last night for about the tenth or twelve time. I believe, & I love it more every time I read it. Don’t you think yourself that of all the short stories in the English language it is one of the most wonderfully worded, the most clearly expressed, and the most exquisitely thought out of any you have read? I certainly do. Did you ever come across a writer who could cover so large a space of time and introduce so many wonderful thoughts in so short a story. / Ever your loving Dorothy [MTAq 158].

Note: “The Brushwood Boy” by Rudyard Kipling.

May 18 Monday – Dorothy Quick ended her weekend visit and left for home in the late afternoon [May 19 to Allen].

Howells & Stokes wrote to advise Sam the cost of bookcases on drawing #45 would be $267 [MTP].

Elizabeth Jordan wrote to Lyon (though catalogued to Clemens). She was delighted he would come if in town [MTP].

Robert Mountsier for Univ. of Michigan Students Lecture Assoc. wrote to invite Sam to lecture sometime during the coming year [MTP].

Phillip F. Cunliffe Owen wrote from Staten Island, NY to Sam. “With your permission I will call for you on Monday evening next, at a quarter to seven, to escort you up to Delmonico’s for the British Schools and Universities Dinner. I have placed a copy of your speech in the hands of Melville Stone with the necessary directions” [MTP].

May 19 Tuesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Helen S. Allen in Hamilton, Bermuda.

I am so sorry, you dear child! You must be pretty desolate, now, with so many of your pets gone. I hope the disaster will not spoil the fancy dress dance for you.

Indeed you will be very likely to see me in Bermuda next winter, but I shall also hope that you will come to New York to school. I wish to keep in touch with my angel-fishes. One of them came Saturday morning & stayed until late yesterday afternoon, but could not stay longer because she goes to school. We drove to the ship, Saturday afternoon, & saw my daughter Clara off to England.

The new house up-country is getting finished. Miss Lyon expects to go up & take possession about the first of June; then I will follow about the tenth.

To-morrow I attend two functions, & two on the 25th—then I'm free till next fall. It's a blessed thought!

Miss Lyon sends lots of love, & so do I. / SLC

The pictures of you & me in the Atlantic Ocean are VERY cunning! Miss Lyon has sent you copies—or will, anyway. She has just gone out a while ago, so I don't know [MTP; not in MTAq].

Sam also wrote to daughter Clara.

Clärchen dear, you are half-way across, now—I have been keeping the progress of the ship in mind ever since you left, & watching her lay the meridians of longitude behind her. By this time she has cut twenty-five or thirty of them in two, I guess.

Robert Collier did certainly do well by you. He is a dear. He was going to find an automobile for us, but we'll call him off from that quest to-day. We should need it only 4 or 5 months in the year; it would cost a good deal; the chauffeur would be expensive; we shouldn't use the thing often, for I mean to walk, not ride; we should have to build a garage—an unsightly one, no doubt. And so, there's not going to be any 'mobile.

We took the subway at 9 this morning, & had half an hour with Jean at the Grand Central station. She was on her way to Glo'ster—a tedious long journey. I was sorry for her, but she was cheerful. From the station I walked out to the Plaza Hotel, & then back home.

If you should run across little Dorothy Butes, be good to her. She is one of my pets.

With warm regards to the others & lots of love & kisses to you. / Father

Dear heart, I hope everything will come out exactly as you would wish [MTP].

Hellen Elizabeth Martin wrote to Sam. "I was so pleased to get your letter. I am glad you heard from Jean Spurr, Our cousin Bruce is dead. Mother went to ... see him buried. I am glad you are feeling well and hope you are still well. Edith and I went picking flowers with my Sunday school teacher and the class. Did you get the letters I sent you? Lots of love..." [MTP; not in MTAq]. Note: IVL: "ans. June 7"

May 20 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean, now under the care of Dr. Harlands and Dr. Peterson, in a house taken for the summer at Eastern Point, Gloucester, Mass. Two hired nurses, Edith and Mildred Cowles, and friend Marguerite Schmidt, looked after her there. Insert: Eastern Point Lighthouse, erected and first lit, 1832.

Jean dear, welcome to your new home, & happiness therein! In earlier days I would not have expected you to be otherwise than unhappy in a new & strange home, but your spirit & your philosophy have undergone great & beneficent improvement in these latter days, along with your improved physical health. I am aware that you are sweet, & forgiving, & helpful, & now, & not fretful & not given to complaining, & fault-finding. In a word, that the fine & fortunate disposition you were born with is again in the ascendant—and long may it keep its supremacy!

I hope your house will turn out to be a pleasant one, & satisfactory to you & all your excellent household, & that its situation & surroundings will soon come to be homelike & to your mind. I believe you are going to be happy. The best sign I have heard of is, that you are not absorbed in yourself, now, so much as you are in those about you, & in contributing to their lives whatever of comfort & peace & sunshine you can. I wish I was like this, myself, but it has long ago been petted out of me if it was ever in me, & I am too old & “set,” now, to learn to interest myself in anybody’s welfare but my own.

Miss Lyon went to the farm yesterday afternoon, & will be there to-day, superintending. I told her to stop negotiations for an automobile, & make horse-arrangements with the Redding livery-stable for the season.

The stenographer has come.

With lots of love & kisses / Father [MTP].

Note: “Eastern Point, at the entrance to Gloucester Harbor, has been home to farms, a quarry, a Civil War fort, a number of summer residences and the Eastern Point Yacht Club. One of the most famous locations at Eastern Point is Beauport, a sprawling 40-room mansion that is now open as a museum. Among the visitors entertained at Beauport were Henry James, Amy Lowell, Booth Tarkington, Noel Coward and Eleanor Roosevelt”[New England lighthouses: <http://lighthouse.cc/easternpoint/history.html>]. Also, a 300-room luxury hotel at Eastern Point burned in 1908.

In his May 21 to Jean, Sam wrote that he spent three hours in the afternoon listening to speeches and two hours from 10 p.m. to midnight doing the same. A search of the New York Times for May 20-21 turned up one good possibility for a meeting with speeches during the day of May 20 that Twain would likely have been interested in:

May 21, 1908, p. 5, “Want City to Pay for Drive Extension,” was a public meeting and taxpayers protest at a $1,500,000 assessment on their property for improvements made to Riverside Drive. The meeting was held in the Gerken Building, 90 West Broadway, during the day; this may have been the three hours Sam spent listening to speeches. As a former resident of Riverside, he would have known many of the speakers and groups.

In the evening Sam spoke before the American Booksellers annual dinner. The New York Times, May 21, 1908, p. 7 reported on the event:

MARK TWAIN GIVES THANKS

To the American Booksellers for Helping Him Make a Living.

At the annual dinner of the American Booksellers’ Association last evening at the rooms of the Aldine Association, Mark Twain, in his usual white flannel suit, told how well his books had sold since they had passed from subscription agents into the hand of the booksellers.

“For thirty-six years my books were sold by subscription,” he said. “The books passed into the hands of my present publishers in 1904, and you then became the providers of my diet. I think I may say without flattering you that you have done exceedingly well by me.

“By the terms of my contract my publishers had to account to me for 50,000 volumes per year for five years, and pay me for them whether they sold them or not. It is at this point that you gentlemen come in, for it was your business to unload the 250,000 volumes upon the public in five years if you possibly could. Have you succeeded? Yes, you have—and more. For in four years, with a year still to spare, you have sold the 250,000 volumes and 240,000 besides.”

The story teller then said he was building a farmhouse with the proceeds, where he intends to take a vacation for thirty or forty years before completing the five books he is now engaged on.

Other speakers at the dinner were the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Burges Johnson, Will Irwin, Holman Day, and Simon Brentano. About 400 were present [Note: part of Sam’s speech ran in the June 6 issue of Harper’s Weekly.]

Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to an unidentified man, advising that Sam must decline his invitation as he was now retired from the platform [MTP].

Howells & Stokes wrote a short note to Sam to enclose a letter from Harry P. Wood of the Hawaii Promotion Committee. “We told them not to hurry the matter, but to do something interesting” [MTP]. Note: relating to the gift of a mantel piece for Stormfield.

Alfred J. Silberstein for NYC College wrote to Sam. “Accept this Dedication Number of the ‘College Mercury’ as a remembrance of the splendid ceremonies on May 14th last, in which you so nobly participated” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Many thanks / Answd. May 25”

May 21 Thursday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Gloucester, Mass.

Thursday night.

Your beautiful letter [not extant] has come, Jean dear, & I draw a deep breath of relief—you like the place, & my anxieties have vanished away! I had a growing fear—founded upon nothing—that you would feel the other way about it. I am unspeakably glad that it pleases you, & now I hope & believe you will have a happy summer. By your description, it is a place that would delight the heart of any one that has the seeing eye for the graciousness of the woods & fields & rocks & their wild inhabitants, & for the majestic ocean. You can live out of doors there; you were virtually in prison at Greenwich, & would still have been in prison if you had occupied the whole forlorn & uninspiring town.

Oh, don’t trouble about me! I am a happy & vigorous loafer. Yesterday afternoon I spent 3 hours listening to speeches, & spent 2 hours in the same way last night—from 10 till midnight. Then I played billiards & freshened myself up. I have no public engagement until Monday night—and that is the last one for the season, thanks be! There’s a great banquet to the Primate of Ireland Tuesday night, but I am sticking to my wise resolution of not going out any more until autumn.

Evidently there is something that has been kept from me—but that is right, & as it should be, unless it is something that I could remedy. Clara, Miss Lyon & Mr. Paine keep all sorts of distresses from me, & I am very thankful for it—distresses which they are aware I could not remedy, I mean. They know I desire this; for I am taking my holiday, now after 60 years of work & struggle & worry & vexation, & am willing to know nothing, ever any more, of what Susy used to call “the wars (woes) of life.” But whenever there is anything that depends upon me & my help, I want to know all about it.

I am glad to have Brush’s address & very very sorry for his bereavement. I will write him the first thing in the morning.

With ever & ever & ever so much love, dear child, / Father [MTP].

Note: see May 22 to George de Forest Brush (1855-1941), painter who was active at the artist colony in Dublin, N.H. during Twain’s Oct. 1905 stay; Sam also called on Brush in Florence, Italy on Jan. 22, 1904. See Sam’s note of condolence on May 22. Sam’s Monday night “public engagement” was a May 25 speech given at Delmonico’s on Victoria Day. See entry. Hill sees Sam’s reply here to Jean as “openly unimpressed” that “Jean apparently implied that the truth about her unhappiness [at Katonah, Greenwich, etc.] was being kept from” him.

Sam also wrote a line to Franklin G. Whitmore: “I am unspeakably glad to hear the good news, give my best love to the patient, / S.L. Clemens” [MTP].

Helen Stewart Campbell wrote from Arlington, N.J. to ask if Sam had rec’d her “rhyming effusion on ‘The Ladies!’ after he arrived” in NY on the Bermudian [MTP]. Note: same woman wrote Nov 28, 1907 asking for a loan.

E.J. Ridgway wrote from NYC to Sam, “sending you by bearer, a copy of ‘A Mind That Found Itself’ the book which I spoke to you about yesterday. I hope you will enjoy it as much as I did” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd May 25, ’08 / Thank him for sending it. Began it at once but shall read it slowly as it is strong goods.” The book (1908) was by Clifford Whittingham Beers, (1876-1943) [Gribben 56].

Dorothy Sturgis wrote from Boston to Sam.

My Dear Mr. Clemens / I got the picture the other day, and it's a perfect beauty, not exactly four inches in size though, is it. I hate to spoil it by cutting it up. It's such a nice picture as it is.

Mama has gone up to Woodstock to spend a week or so, and I'm left all alone now, you see I only see Papa and my brother at breakfast and dinner, and not always there. But I'm doing all the housekeeping, and that's lots of fun.

Please give my love to Miss Lyon and thank her ever so much for taking all the trouble she has to send your various pictures out to me.

When you write next please tell me lots of news about yourself and Miss Lyon, and about what's happening in New York.

I spoke of The Brushwood Boy in my last letter to you, and that reminds me that I meant to ask you where Kipling is now, I have often wondered where he spends most of his time, and I have often longed to meet him, but I don't suppose I ever shall. / Lovingly Dorothy [MTAq 159].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

May 22 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote condolences to George de Forest Brush, after hearing of his loss from daughter Jean.

My dear friend, I have just learned through a letter from Jean of the heavy stroke that has smitten you, & I hasten to do as we all do, & as it is our nature to do: say the word that would comfort & console if it could, but never yet has healed the hurt it sought to heal, for in no words of any man is there healing for a breaking heart. But it is all we can do. We can only say—and I say it:—out of my heart I grieve for you. Most sincerely, ... [MTP]. Note: see Aug. 25 from Brush, who had recently lost a daughter, Georgia Brush.

Witter Bynner wrote to Sam. "I'm glad if you're nesting—even if its from me. But I surely'd like a word with you before I take to the woods again. Can't you stick on a post-card the hour and day when I might find you next week between Tuesday and Saturday? Yours..." [MTP].

L. Dean Sands for the Missouri University Savitar wrote to ask Sam if he'd be "gracious enough to write something to go in our Savitar '09?" [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

May 23 Saturday – Harper & Brothers wrote to Sam, advising him not to satisfy the request of Rossiter Johnson, who wanted "permission to include in his forthcoming set of books the synopsis of 2 or 3 of" Sam's books, and to stick to "that policy which you have followed so consistently in refusing permission for your works & name to be associated with other publications..." [MTP].

Robert W. Breckons wrote on U.S. Attorney's Office, Honolulu, to ask Sam to put his autograph on enclosed postcard for Breckons' eight year old daughter [MTP].

May 24 Sunday – Clara Clemens' cabled from England that she had arrived safely. The cable arrived in the morning at 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. [May 24 to Sturgis] Sam then sent a telegram to daughter Jean, c/o Dr. Harlands: "Clara has arrived safely. Much love to you. Father" [MTP]. Note: Clara Clemens had arrived in England for her singing tour of Paris and London.

Sam also replied to the May 21 from Dorothy Sturgis:

Dear Dorothy—

Indeed I would tell you lots of news if there were lots to tell, but there's only some. We shipped my daughter Clara to England a week ago, & she has just arrive there—so says her cablegram of this morning.

Last Tuesday we shipped my daughter Jean to Eastern Point, Gloucester, Mass, where she has taken a house for the summer, & has two very charming companions who do for her what you are doing for your father & brother—keep house. Miss Lyon found that place & secured it, but as Jean had never seen it we were in deep suspense & anxiety until we should hear from her, for it might not content her. But it is all right, now—she can't find adjectives enough to express her delight in it. I did not fully appreciate how cautious I had been, until her letter came & relieved me.

One of the angel-fishes is stopping over Sunday with us, & she & I took the top of the electric stage this morning and traveled from our door to 90th street, then down again to 55th where we entered the St. Regis & sat down to wait until church should break out. When the porter informed us, we crossed the street & mixed into the crowd issuing from a 5th avenue church, & gained good & great reputation at no expense of fatigue or contributions. Everywhere you could hear people say in an awed & hushed voice, "How nice that young Clemens is—people think he doesn't go to church, but you can see he does." Then I whispered to the fish to look as if she had put 10 cents in the plate, & I put on a look indicating a dollar & a half—and you never saw such admiration as it excited. Many of the ladies swooned, from pure joy.

We joined every congregation between 55th and 28th, & by careful & delicate art convinced each & every [one] of them that we had been partakers of their clerical feast. It has been a good lesson to this child; she will always know how to make an inexpensive good impression, Sundays, after this; & by & by it will have a splendid commercial value for her.

Kipling? I don't know where he is, now. England, no doubt. He winters in South Africa.

Good bye. With love— / SLC [MTP].

May 25 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer at Miss Tewksbury's School in Irvington, N.Y.

Dear Margaret—

Did I tell you, when you visited me, that I had lost my half of the enameled shell in Bermuda? I've got it back again! Of course the real shell, the original shell, the frail jetsam of the waves of Sandy Point, was the valuable shell, because of its odd & pretty associations, (& I still possessed that), but I held the enameled one in very high regard because it was that original's official deputy & representative. I lost it off my watch chain at a dinner at the officers' mess at Prospect a day or two before we sailed, & now it has been found & handed to Major Graham by one of the servants. I shan't lose it again, dear.

One of my angel-fishes stayed over last Sunday with us, & another one stayed over yesterday with us. I wish you would do us that honor. / With love ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Major Malcolm D. Graham at Prospect Army Garrison in Hamilton, Bermuda.

Dear Major Graham:

Yes, it is my shell, & I am very glad it is found, for two large reasons: 1, it purges of suspicion a colored maid of some particular friends of mine—a suspicion which I kept to myself of course, in the absence of positive proof; 2—a minor reason—it has very pretty associations with an American child of twelve, whose acquaintance I made at the "Princess,"—one of ten little girls, scattered about England, France, Canada & the U.S., with whom I am in continuous correspondence. One day at Spanish Point I found a delicate little bivalve, & severed its dried hinge, & said, "You are to keep one of these halves always, & I the other—for identification purposes. Some day I may meet some child I may think is you, but not be certain; then I will expose my half-shell & say 'If you are my Margaret & not another, produce the duplicate of this, & prove your my-Margaretship!'"

Afterward, for many days, I used to strike a dramatic attitude of glad surprise when I met her, then turn heart-brokenly away, murmuring, "Alas, no, it is not my Margaret!"—whereupon with innocent exultation she would fetch her shell out of her bosom & hold it up to the light of day.

She was here with an aunt a week ago, & would give no name to the servant, but sent up her eloquent dumb shell to me, with the enameled iridescences glinting from its hollowed surface. I carried down my original, & didn't tell her I had lost its representative.

I shall be very glad if you will give the enclosed trifle to that mess-room waiter, with my thanks. It has of course been a pleasure to autograph the cards: they will be posted to-day. (If they—or one or two of them—should fail to reach their destinations, you will remember that sometimes postmen are collectors of picture-cards & autographs.)

The new house in the country will not be completely finished & furnished before the middle of June, & so we are tied to the hot town until then, instead of being set free of it the first of May, as heretofore. But no matter, I am enjoying life.

There's an agonized call on the telephone!—& not from a stranger; so I will run & pacify it. Aufwiedersehen in Bermuda next winter! / Very sincerely yours ... [MTP]. Note: Sam evidently lost his half of the shell at one of the band concerts he attended at the Prospect Army Garrison, and a waiter at the mess there found it. The good major returned it.

Isabel Lyon replied for Sam to Rossiter Johnson's May 2, enclosing Harper & Brothers' May 23 advice not to give consent for Johnson to quote from two or three of Sam's books [MTP].

Lyon also wrote for Sam to an unidentified man to decline an invitation, and explaining Sam no longer took "any railway journeys that are not compulsory" [MTP].

In the evening Sam spoke at Delmonico's to celebrate Victoria Day (Empire Day). The New York Times, May 26, p. 5, covered the event and Sam's speech:

TWAIN EULOGIZES QUEEN VICTORIA

Humorist Speaks at Victoria Day Dinner of British Schools and Universities Club.

"HAD NO PEER IN HER TIME" Mentioning War Only to Scoff at Idea,
He Tells of Affection Between Countries.

Old "boys" from many famous English universities and schools, including Oxford and Cambridge and Eton and Harrow, met at Delmonico's last night to celebrate Victoria Day, under the auspices of the British Schools and Universities Club. Victoria, or Empire Day, as it is more generally known throughout the British colonies, was founded on the late Queen's birthday, the 24th of May. Falling this year on a Sunday, the annual dinner of the club had perforce to be held one date late.

The chief guest of honor last night was Samuel L. Clemens, who as Mark Twain is loved throughout the British Empire as much as he is in his native land. Mark Twain is an Oxford Doctor of Literature, this degree having been conferred on him by the university during his visit last year.

Dr. W. E. Lambert, President of the Club, was toastmaster and read a cable from King Edward sent through Lord Knollys, conveying a message of good will to the club. Seated at the guest table with him were Mr. Clemens, W. Courteney Bennet, C. I. E., British Consul General at New York; J. E. Grote Higgins, the Rev. A. H. Judge, past President of the club; the Rev. D. Parker Morgan, D. D.; Dr. John MacPhee, President of the Canadian Society; Robert P. Porter, Reginald Walsh, and J. D. Petersen, Secretary.

Mr. Clemens responded to the toast, "Queen Victoria—An American Tribute." He prefaced his remarks by reciting one or two of his humorous experiences, including an imaginary interview which he thought he overheard between Livingstone and Stanley, when the latter found Livingston in Central South Africa. Livingstone wanted to know the news of the world for the five years he had been in Africa, and Mark Twain overheard Stanley tell how the rulers of most of the countries had been changed, finally concluding, "and Horace Greeley has changed his political faith."

"As a woman the Queen was all that the most exacting standards could require. As a far-reaching and effective and beneficent moral force she had no peer in her time among either monarchs or commoners. As a monarch she was without reproach in her great office. One may not venture, perhaps, to say so sweeping a thing as this in cold blood about any monarch that preceded her, either upon her own throne or upon any other. It is a colossal eulogy, but it is justified.

“What she did for us in America in our time of storm and stress we shall not forget, and whenever we call it to mind we shall always remember the wise and righteous mind that guided her in it and sustained and supported her—Prince Albert’s. We need not talk any idle talk here tonight about either possible or impossible war between the two countries; there will be no war while we remain sane and the son of Victoria sits upon the throne.”

Consul General Bennett, alluding to the feeling between England and America, said:

“I will stake my reputation that there never can be serious trouble between the two countries. They are marching along the same line, and the same object in view, and they are marching now as they will in the future, as one great nation.”

Mrs. George S. Brock wrote from Washington, D.C. to ask Sam where she might get a copy of a toast he made called “Friends” or “To a Friend”. “An actor impersonating Mark Twain at Chase’s this winter gave this toast at a dinner but I can’t remember it and I am very anxious to get it to send to a friend...” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “not a toast of mine, but an ancient one & a very good one.”

*As you ascend the hill of prosperity may you not meet a friend.
May the best of your past
Be the worst of your future.*

*Here’s to you as good as you are
Here’s to me as bad as I am
But as bad as I am &
As good as you are
I’m as good as you are
As bad as I am.*

Billie Burke wrote from Oakland, Calif. to Sam. “My dearest friend / I can’t tell you what happiness your darling note gave me. Just to know that I had not been forgotten was in itself a joy...” [MTP]. Note: IVL wrote a list of girls and ladies on the envelope, members of MT’s Aquarium.

Edward M. Colie wrote from East Orange, NJ to thank Sam for his “presence and talk at the [Empire Day] Dinner.” She also thanked him for inscribing her copy of HF [MTP].

Irene Gerken wrote from Deal Beach, NJ: “My dear Mr. Clemens, / I received your letter and was very glad to hear from you. I am very glad you are coming down ~~Monday~~ Wednesday. It is lovely weather down here now and we are all having a grand time. I am sure that the air down here will do you good. Soon the bathing pool will open and then we can have fun going swimming every day” [MTP; not in MTAq].

J.A. Lloyd wrote from Dixon, Ill., a long rambling letter amounting to a request for Sam’s autograph and the enclosing of his book [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben. IVL wrote on the letter: “Thanks for letter / Would so like to be able to say that he will find time to read the book”

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr Clemens

I have intended writing every day since I left you to thank you for the lovely time I had with you I haven’t got my pony yet but we are looking all the time & may get one any day, it is very warm here today & if the weather keeps warm I suppose you’ll be glad to get into the country yourself. My drawing class on pleasant days goes out to sketch from nature it is very nice but I don’t like it very much. With lots of love hugs & kisses I am your loving / Dorothy [MTAq 161-2]. Note: Dorothy seemed to be growing more familiar with punctuation.

May 26 Tuesday – Sam went to Deal Beach, N.J. to spend a week with Col. George Brinton Harvey. During this stay he spent time with Harvey's daughter Dorothy Harvey (1894-1937), who he added as an Angelfish in his club [June 2 to Allen]. Note: Dorothy was the only child of George and Alma Parker Harvey. In the source Sam mentioned being with two Angelfish members in Deal; Dorothy Harvey and Louise Paine, (1894-1968), daughter of Albert Bigelow Paine, were the first members of Sam's club to visit the new home in Redding, Conn. (first called "Innocents at Home," later "Stormfield."). Louise Paine was the most likely to be second Angelfish at Harvey's Deal, N.J. home. Ever since her father became Mark Twain's official biographer in Jan. 1906, Louise was around Clemens a great deal. See the website www.twainquotes.com for more on Louise and all the other Angelfish. In his 1910 memoir, In the Kaiser's Capital, J.F. Dickie recalled seeing Twain and Louise Paine together in New York. Perhaps they were on their way to or from Deal, N.J.

In May 1908, the last time I met him, he was taking his walk on Fifth Avenue as heretofore, clad in his white flannel suit. He had as his companion a sweet young maiden of perhaps thirteen summers, whom he introduced to me as the daughter of his biographer, Mr. Bigelow Paine. It was a very pretty sight to see, and left the sweet impression of a heart that, in spite of his seventy years, had never learned to grow old [190].

Helen S. Allen wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens,

The party at Government House was a perfect success, everybody looked their very best. I am going to send you some pictures taked of Max and myself just before we started and while we were there. We got there by 3:30 and went right down on one of the lower terraces and had our pictures taken and played musical chaires then had tea and after that the cotilion and just before we went home we fished for candies, we didn't get home until quite late, later than we expected.

Monday was a legal holiday and I went to a lovely picnic at St. David's Lighthouse. Tuesday I had a small tennis party. I am getting on beautifully with my tennis but will not stop until I am not ashamed to play with anybody.

Dr. Herring told us that he saw you in New York and that you thought there was some hope of your coming down here this summer if so please let me know so that I will be able to be down to see you.

I will be delighted to get the pictures. With lots of love for Miss Lyons and yourself.

Believe me as ever

Your loving little "Angel-fish"

Helen Schuyler Allen [MTAq 162].

Mabel Hill wrote from Irvington, NY to ask if Clara Clemens had left any word for her about some music manuscripts that she was looking over. She'd called "the other day" but the butler didn't know anything about them [MTP].

W.H. Langhorne wrote a rather long letter from Oxford, England. Langhorne was 82 and retiring from being a minister to two parishes for the Church of England. He possessed the MSS. of Richard Langhorne, a man he claimed was "unjustly condemned," and W.H. wanted to publish them. He wondered if Clemens might help get the memoirs into helpful hands [MTP].

A.S. North wrote from Montclair, NJ to enclose some sheets of handwritten music and lyrics of "Scroll Song" [MTP].

May 27 Wednesday – Sam was the guest of Col. George Brinton Harvey in Deal, N.J. [June 2 to Allen].

Howells & Stokes wrote to Isabel Lyon (though catalogued to Clemens) about newspapers inquiring for photos of the new Redding house [MTP].

Phillip F. Cunliffe Owen wrote from Staten Island, NY to thank Sam for his appearance at the British dinner at Delmonico's, and especially for his eulogy of Queen Victoria. Owen added he'd written to Whitelaw Reid about Clara Clemens' presence in England [MTP].

Dorothy Sturgis wrote from Boston to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens / I got your letter the other day, and I never knew you had so many daughters before, but I'm glad you got them all "shipped" safely!

What are your summer plans? or haven't you got any? I don't know exactly what I am going to do except that in July and August I am going to a camp on Lake Asquam in New Hampshire, and in June I may go up to Woodstock and join Mama there.

I'm afraid I must stop now as I have lots of lessons to do. / Lovingly / Dorothy Love to Miss Lyon! [MTAq 163].

May 28 Thursday – Sam was the guest of Col. George Brinton Harvey in Deal, N.J. [June 2 to Allen].

May 29 Friday – Sam was the guest of Col. George Brinton Harvey in Deal, N.J. [June 2 to Allen].

Sam wrote to Carlotta Welles.

Friday night.

Dear Charley, I am vexed to the last limit, & disappointed, & so sorry. If my secretary hadn't chanced to be out, it would not have happened, for she sees all strangers that come, whereas I see none of them. The butler took you for a stranger, & followed the law of the house, but if you had told him you were a friend he would have found me, for I was in my room. In fact he did find me, but I was asleep, & so he foolishly & criminally did not wake me. I hope you will not come as a stranger next time, & I also hope that there will be a next time.

Frances Nunnally is at school near Baltimore, & I shall see her here June 12th. She sails, Europe-bound, on the 13th. She & her mother visited me in Tuxedo Park last September, but it was only a glimpse, for they were flying homeward from Europe.

Mr. Ashcroft is well. He dined with us Wednesday, & spent the night. The burden of city life is heavy upon me, but we go to the country for the summer June 15th. We have been delayed a month by an unfinished house.

I hope you will come again, & not as a stranger, Charley. / Affectionately, ... [MTP; MTAq 163-4].

Note: Cooley adds after the letter: "At the bottom of the letter Carolotta Welles (Briggs) later wrote this note: "This was my last letter from Mr. Clemens. I called at 21 Fifth Avenue around the first of June '08 just before going to Bryn Mawr where my sister was graduating. He sent this letter to Bryn Mawr. I have not got the envelope as someone begged to have it" [MTAq 164].

May 30 Saturday – Sam was the guest of Col. George Brinton Harvey in Deal, N.J. [June 2 to Allen].

Sarah A. Blanchard wrote to ask Sam if he would lecture before the Dorchester, Mass. Women's Club next season [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Answd June 2, '08; Sincere thanks for compliment of invitation"

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens

My letter has not reached you are you have been sick. I am worried please let me know.

I'm very well and very very busy studying for examinations its awfully hard work. commencement is Tuesday June 9th I'm going to be there and expect to have lots of fun Tell miss Lyon I send lots of love to her and hope she is well and now I must close
 With lots and lots of love hoping youre not sick / I am / Your very loving / Dorothy / Please write [MTAq 164].

May 31 Sunday – Sam was the guest of Col. George Brinton Harvey in Deal, N.J. [June 2 to Allen].

Louise Paine wrote to Sam.

Your lovely picture came out safely and is very popular. Every one who sees it says that it is such a beautiful picture, and that you are such a handsome man. You really should be hiding somewhere to hear the nice things that are said about you.

I would have written sooner but I wanted to wait till the picture should come; besides we only have one writing hour a week.

Often I think of the lovely time I had at your home last week; so thanking you again, both for the lovely visit and the picture, I am / your little friend [MTP; not in MTAq].

Summer – Sometime during the summer of 1908, Clemens drafted his Constitution for the Angelfish. It follows:

THE AQUARIUM

Issued By

THE ADMIRAL

INNOCENCE AT HOME

REDDING, CONN.

SUMMER-TIME 1908

Qualifications for Membership

Sincerity, good disposition, intelligence, & school-girl age.

Secrets of the Order

Members of the Aquarium are forbidden to divulge its affairs to any but their parents & guardians.

N.B.

This is the only copy of these Rules & Regulations. They must be read to each Member when opportunity shall permit, but they must not be printed or otherwise copied.

Note

I have built this house largely, indeed almost chiefly, for the comfort & accommodation of the Aquarium. Its members will always be welcome under its roof.

The Name

Its Aquarium name is "Innocents at Home," & it is not misnamed, for I know the Fishes well, and am aware that they can furnish the innocence necessary to make the name good.

Private Headquarters

The Billiard Room is the Aquarium's Private Headquarters. Members may exclude non-members from that room at any time they choose, & for as long as they choose. They may stop a game whenever they please & put the players out. The power to exercise these privileges is lodged not only in the Members as a whole, but may be used by a single Fish if she shall desire to do so.

Neither the Admiral nor the Officers and Servants of the Aquarium are immune from this rule.

The Fish-Market

This is the Loggia, which projects from the Western end of the house. It is open to the scenery & the breezes, by grace of its high & wide arches, & forasmuch as its piers support a second-story wing, it is sheltered from sun and rain. It is large, & cleanly tiled, & is the Aquarium's play-&-exercise quarters when the weather is not of a sort to invite the children to the wood, & hills.

The Niche

This is one of the piers & will contain a vase of flowers at times, & at other times an Angel-Fish who has been tried & found guilty of conduct unbecoming her high estate. The Court may sentence her to remain in the Niche of Repentance for a period of not less than two minutes nor more than ten. While under sentence she must live on bread & water.

The Criminal Court

This is the spacious room which opens upon the Fish-Market. Here accused Members will be tried for conduct unbecoming an Angel-Fish. The Admiral will sit as Judge, & the prosecution & defence will be conducted by the Official Legal Staff of the Aquarium.

All prisoners shall be granted trial by jury.

None may sit upon the jury except Members.

The jury shall consist of not fewer than one Member nor more than three.

Any Member refusing to sit upon the jury shall be fined. The Judge alone may name the fine, & he alone may collect it.

Non-Members cannot act as witnesses.

Conspiracies

The right to conspire is restricted to Membership. Conspiracies cannot be concocted in the house; nor anywhere upon the estate except in the gorge below the Aquarium Cataract in the daytime, nor anywhere at night except in the privacy of the Pergola at the foot of the grounds below the northern front of the house.

Members desiring to conspire must give notice to the Admiral & tell him what it is about.

Except when the proposed conspiracy is against the Admiral himself; in that case notice must be given to the Official Legal Staff.

Persons intruding upon a lawfully arranged conspiracy with a view to obstructing it, will be tried in the Criminal Court.

Portraits

The only important decoration of the Billiard Room is the framed photographs of the Membership. Portraits of non-members are not permitted there.

The Badge

The official Badge of the Order is a small angel-fish pin. It bears the splendid colors of that beautiful inhabitant of the West India waters, exactly imitated in enamels. Members wear it upon the left breast, usually. The Admiral is obliged to furnish this pin to every Member without charge, & he is also obliged to replace lost ones on the same terms. Members need only give him notice.

Membership

Members are created by appointment. By the Admiral.

None above school-girl age is admitted.

But, once a Member, always a Member—for life.

Margaret Ellington [sic] Frohman, a choice & valued Member, is beyond school-girl age, but with opportunity by the Admiral will be able to explain her case & justify it.

M.A.

Members of the Aquarium are entitled to put M.A. after their names.

Non-members can be admitted only by pass, signed by the Admiral. They are not privileged to take part in the proceedings.

Bribery

Attempts to bribe the Court or Jury, by either members or non-members, will be subjected to such punishment as the Judge in his discretion prescribe.

Dress

At all trials the Judge, the Mother Superior, the Chatelaine & Staff must appear in their official robes.

Spectators must wear evening dress.

Members must wear their badge and their head-ribbon.

Ceremonial

Proceedings cannot begin until the Chatelaine shall have made proclamation that the Court is now open & ready for business.

Order of Appointment

There are 12 Members, & the names of the same are here set down in the order of their appointment, with the ages which they had reached at the time of appointment.

Dorothy Butes, 14, England. (honorary)

Frances Nunnally, 16, Georgia.

Dorothy Quick, 10 & 10 months, New Jersey.

Margaret Blackmer, 12, New York.

Irene Gerken, 12, New York.

Helen Allen, 13, Bermuda.

Hellen Martin, 13, Canada.

Jean Spurr, 13, New Jersey.

Dorothy Sturgis, 16, Massachusetts.

Margaret Illington, New York.

Dorothy Harvey, 13, New Jersey.

Louise Paine, 13, Connecticut

Marjorie Breckenridge, 15

Honorary Members

Members who fail to write the Admiral during an unbroken period of 3 months do not cease to be Members, but are retired from the Active list & banished to the roll of Honorary Members with reproaches!

Conspicuously charming unmarried ladies above school-girl age may be appointed to this degree. But the members in occupation must at no time exceed 6.

The Board

Admiral of the Aquarium

S.L. Clemens

Mother Superior Miss Clara Clemens

Legal Staff, Dan Frohman

The Admiral is a Member, but gets no salary; the others are paid, but not Members. The foregoing Constitution, Rules & other particulars are respectfully submitted to the Aquarium, for approval or dissent, by

S.L. Clemens

Admiral

[MTAq 191-5].

June – Sam's notebook contained a roster of his Angelfish:

The Aquarium, (June 1908)

Dorothy Butes (16) London, England (Honorary)	16
Dorothy Quick (11 ½) Plainfield, N.J.	12
Dorothy Harvey, (13.9) Deal Beach, N.J.	13
Dorothy Sturgis (16) 153 Beacon Street [Boston]	16
Hellen Martin, (12) 1 Murray ave, Westmount, Montreal	12
Helen Schuyler Allen, (13) Bay House, Bermuda	13
Irene Gerken (13) 52 W. 75 th street	13
Margaret Blackmer, (12) New York	12
Louise Paine (13) Redding, Conn	13
Frances Nunnally (17) Atlanta, Ga.	17
Margaret Illington	13
Jean Spurr, (13) 129 Mt. Pleasant ave, Newark, N.J.	150
Marjorie Breckenridge, 15, Brooklyn

The 12 children's ages foot up 165 years. Margaret Illington isn't a child, but she is charming enough to be one. She dressed for 12 & elected herself, & was accepted & invested with the badge of the Order (an enameled angel-fish pin) [MTAq 165; NB 48]

Sam passed on a "chain prayer" to Beatrice M. Benjamin.

[typewritten:]

Endless chain Prayer

Oh Lord Christ we implore thee Oh eternal God, to have mercy on all mankind keep us from sin by thy precious blood. take us to be with thee eternally Amen

This prayer has been sent by Bishop Laurence recommending to be rewritten and sent to some other persons. he who will not send it will be afflicted in some way by some misfortune. one who paid no attention met with a terrible accident. he who will write this prayer for nine days and distribute it to nine other persons comencing the day rec'd. on or after the ninth day experiences great Joy. at Jerusalem during the holy Feast it was said to who will rewrite this prayer will be delivered from every calamity. please do not break the chain copy all on this page

This prayer was sent me by a Friend

[handwritten:]

"Save yourself, dear Beatrice! This comes to me from an unknown benefactor, & I am distributing my 9, in fear and trembling" [MTP].

Sam also sent the same "chain prayer" to Mai H. Coe (Mrs. William Robertson Coe), and enclosed a newspaper report that the prayers of Father Curry of St. James Church had saved a prisoner (Sullivan, whose sister was a Nun) at midnight who was to die at 6 a.m. [MTP].

June 1 Monday – Sam was the guest of Col. George Brinton Harvey in Deal, N.J. [June 2 to Allen; June 2 to Sturgis].

Henry Hersch Hart wrote from San Francisco, Calif. to ask for Clemens' autograph on a note [MTP].
Note: IVL: "Answd June 9, '08 / Would be so glad to but demands are great"

Lucia Hull wrote from Newport, R.I. to thank Sam for his "awfully sweet letter." She vowed to keep the letter and someday when her grandchildren were in financial straits she would sell it for a fortune [MTP].

June 2 Tuesday – Sam left the Harvey residence in Deal, N.J. and returned home to New York at noon. Before leaving, he settled on the name “Innocence at Home” for the new home in Redding [June 3 to Clara].

At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

I am just back this moment, & find yours of May 27. I have been down in Jersey eight days, visiting around among my angel-fishes of that region, & have had a very good time indeed.

Oh yes, I have plans, but what disturbs me is, that they don't seem to fit in with yours very well. About next Monday (June 8) I expect to pass through Boston on a visit to my daughter Jean at Gloucester, Mass., & I was planning to stop over, (in Boston) one or two hours, if the trains might permit, & run in & see you. But there are two maybe's—1, Maybe the trains will connect too closely; & 2, maybe you will be gone to Woodstock. Then there are some more maybes—thus: 3: maybe after I shall have spent a couple of days in Gloucester, the return trains may connect less closely in Boston; & 4, maybe you will be back from Woodstock by that time. And so I am going to hope for a glimpse of you in that Gloucester trip somewhere. Meantime I will wait & see what happens. / Lovingly ... [MTP; MTAq 166-7].

Sam also wrote to Helen S. Allen.

I have been away, 8 days, Helen dear, visiting a couple of my angel-fishes at Deal Beach, New Jersey, & we had fine times together. But through being away, I missed a girl's-school musicale at Irvington-on-Hudson where another angel-fish was to perform (Margaret Blackmer of the “identification-shell.”) I lost my half of the shell in Bermuda at the Officers' Mess dinner, but it has been found & is on its way to me now.)

The new country-house is finished (its name is “INNOCENCE AT HOME”), & we shall occupy it two weeks hence. In succession these following angel-fishes have promised to visit me there: Irene, & 3 Dorothys.

The Aquarium contains 12 fishes, & 4 of them are named Dorothy. If you come to New York before December I require you to give me the pleasure of a visit there. Please do not forget. When I reached home yesterday I found letters from 6 of my 12. I am beginning the answers now, & they will all be finished before I stop.

(I am glad you had such a happy time at the fancy-dress party, & I thank you ever so much for the pictures. Max takes well. I think you are best in the large group.) Miss Lyon kept her promise to send you some pictures I believe. I will ask her when she comes; (she has gone to Innocence at Home on furnishing-business. Goes every 2 or 3 days, & is desperately busy.) / Very lovingly ... [MTP; not in MTAq].

Sam also replied to the May 30 from Dorothy Quick, revealing his plans to move to Redding, Conn.

You dear little Dorothy, I am so glad to hear from you. No, I haven't been sick, I have been away, eight days, at Deal Beach, arranging a lot of matters with my publisher. I am home now for a week, then I am going to Gloucester, Mass., to spend a few days with my daughter Jean, who has taken a house near there on the sea shore for the summer. After that I shall run back to New York & then up-country to the new house. It will be ready for us by the 15th or 20th of June, we think. By & by you & your mother must give us a visit there, when we get things well going. Miss Lyon & I will do our very best to make it pleasant for you. Promise me you will come, dear.

I hope you will have a splendid good time at Commencement. I expect to arrive at Gloucester about that date.

Clara is singing in London, & I judge by the cable-news that she is having a very satisfactory time.

Miss Lyon sends you lots of love, & I send you lots & lots of mine. / SLC [MTP; MTAq 165-6].

Eleanor L. Nicholas wrote a begging letter from NYC to Sam asking him to “send all you can spare” so she might afford to move [MTP].

Francis Ram wrote from London to Sam. It seems the first page of the letter, an unflattering assessment of Queen Victoria, is missing. Enclosed is a newspaper clipping, May 25, from the London Times, that Ram responded to: “Mark Twain on Queen Victoria.” Ram claimed Victoria at one time had broken another woman’s heart [MTP].

June 3 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Clara.

Well, Clärchen dear, I have your dear letter from ship board saying what fine shape you are in: also there are cablegrams whereby we know you sang twice last Saturday; & now I am waiting for particulars by mail. It seems a good while to wait, too.

I’ve been down-country 8 days, at Col. Harveys, & have had a charming time. I got back yesterday noon. I devoted the 8 days to trying to invent a name for the Redding house. After many & many a defeat, I won out at last, yesterday morning, & am quite well satisfied with my performance. I wanted a name that wasn’t use-worn; & wouldn’t resemble any other house’s name, either in this world or Sheol; & couldn’t be copied by anybody; & would at once suggest me to anybody hearing it uttered or seeing it in print, by suggesting my best-known book. I reckon INNOCENCE AT HOME covers these several grounds. Many populations will think it describes me, but I do not wish to seem to know that.

Have a good time, dear heart, & success, to your satisfaction & clear up to your utmost desire. / With lots & lots of love / Father [MTP]. Note: Clara would override Sam’s initial choice for the home, making it “Stormfield,” which may have contributed to the false notion that Twain’s final years were unhappy, unproductive ones.

Sam also wrote to Frederick A. Duneka.

Dear Brer Duneka:

Ostler & I helped him out. Ostler put it into his head to go, & I furnished him a “philosophy of life.” The quoted paragraphs are (barring two or three inconsequential & unliterary errors) from my 70th-birthday speech of 2½ years ago. Reads pretty well, too! / Yrs ever ... [MTP].

Note: Sam may have referred to Sir William Osler, who in one of his talks claimed a paraphrase from Mark Twain’s Christian Science, that “so-called Humanists have not enough Science, and Science sadly lacks the Humanities.” Since nothing like this claim was found in the book, Osler may have been “the whole force of Twain’s criticism, rather than one passage” [Osler’s ‘a way of life’ and other addresses, etc. note 124]. Just whom was helped by Clemens and Ostler is made clear by Duneka’s reply of June 4, “the Chicago man who killed himself on his 70th birthday quoting your great speech...” See Sam’s reply June 4.

From Google books: Sir William Osler (1849-1919) had a long and distinguished career as a physician and professor at McGill University, the University of Pennsylvania, the Johns Hopkins University, and finally, as the Regius Chair in Medicine at Oxford University. Over the course of his professional life, Osler gave many addresses—mostly to medical students—on medical ethics, medicine and the humanities, the relationship between the medical practitioner and the patient, and, as the titular essay makes clear, on the “way of life” he advocated for the ethical physician. He remains an inspiration to many contemporary medical practitioners; there are active Osler Societies throughout the world. While Osler’s talks were frequently published during his lifetime and they have been published individually and in different compilations since his death, none contain the over 1500 annotations that appear here, notes that serve to explain the many philosophical, biblical, historical, and literary allusions contained in Osler’s writings. This thoroughly explicated selection of Sir William Osler’s writings will be cherished by physicians, medical students, nurses, philosophers, theologians, and ethicists in this-and future-generations.

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally at St. Timothy’s School, in Catonsville, Maryland.

Francesca dear, I am ciphering over the situation. The country-house is finished & I shall move into it June 15th, by Miss Lyon’s guess. So I am planning as thus:

Sunday, June 7, my last public engagement here.

Monday, June 8. To Boston.

Tuesday, 9th. To Gloucester, to visit my daughter Jean, who has taken a house on the sea, near there.

Thursday, 11th. Back to New York, to see you next day.

That is my scheme. Tell me your hotel, dear, so that I can go & find you.

And make a note of my telephone address, for it is not in the book:

3907 Gramery. / With love [MTAq 167]. Note. Sam's travel plans were changed; he wrote daughter Jean on June 5 that "I shall have to be here until near June 20."

The New York Times, p. 12 reported an updated schedule for bankruptcy of the Plasmon Co. of America:

BUSINESS TROUBLES

....

THE PLASMON COMPANY OF AMERICA.—Another set of schedules of the Plasmon Company of America, manufacturer of food products, 59 Pearl Street, of which Mark Twain was acting President, was filed yesterday by R. D. Hanna, Secretary. They show liabilities of $17,347 and assets of $4,173, consisting of stock, $1,500; cash in Knickerbocker Trust Company, $819; office furniture, $700; machinery and tools, $1,000, and accounts, $154. In addition to these assets there are unliquidated claims for damages to the goodwill of the business against S. L. Clemens (Mark Twain) for $25,000 and R. W. Ashcroft for $5,000. The schedules filed several weeks ago showed liabilities of $26,843 and assets $1,395 [Note: Robert D. Hanna]

The Times, p. 5, "Child Actors Close The Winter Season," also reported the final performance of the season, and announced that the Entertainment Department of the Educational Alliance the following season would be incorporated as the Educational Theatre, under the management of Mark Twain, Robert Collier, Otto Kahn, the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, and President G. Stanley Hall of Clark University in Mass.

Lilian W. Aldrich wrote to Sam advising that the dedication exercises for the Thomas Bailey Aldrich Memorial would be June 30. He would get a formal invite later [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Of course I shall be there if writing happens to prevent. Have an engagement in Boston for that evening but that will not prevent"

Ferris Greenslet for the Aldrich Memorial Museum wrote to Sam, detailing the upcoming ceremonies, asking for his brief remarks, five or ten minutes [MTP].

Dorothy Harvey wrote from Asbury Park, NJ to Sam. "I received your sweet letter to-day and think it very nice of you to write to your 'angel-fish'. / I suppose Miss Lyon is very busy getting 'Innocence at Home' ready for you to live in and I should love to see it myself sometime. We had pie for lunch to-day and it was too bad that you were not here for it was very good indeed" [MTP; not in MTAq].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

June 4 Thursday – Frederick A. Duneka for Harper & Brothers wrote offering a rather humorous reply to Twain's of the previous day:

Oh Royal Sire: / My correspondence with royal personages has been so limited and intermittent that I am a little creaky in the joints as to the proper form of genuflective address. "Dear King" has a ring far too rudely and robustly democratic, "Dear Sire" proclaims a hint of equality which royalty is swiftly sure to resent and "O King Live Forever" is a plagiarism which spells instant expulsion from the light of the royal presence.

So I don't know how to begin—and this I am convinced accounts for the one-sided nature of the correspondence which I have heretofore carried on alone with Kings and such.

But without beginning—this is to thank you for your note with its strange newspaper clipping of the Chicago man who killed himself on his 70th birthday quoting your great speech (which I had the pleasure of hearing on your 70th birthday,) and quoting it as a philosophy of Death rather than of life. My own point of view is that we could better spare people who have not yet reached this serene age, and if a method could be arranged whereby your great peroration might become executioner, I should be happy, O King! to furnish a list for the royal off-with-his-head roster.

Thank you again for the information which I am venturing to make the basis of a “literary note”.

With bowed forehead, I am, Hoch-wohlgeboren, / Your humble subject [MTP]. Note: Hoch-wohlgeboren = high well-born.

Irene Gerken wrote from Deal Beach, NJ to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens, / I received your letter and was very glad to hear from you. I am very sorry that I could not say goodbye to you but I suppose the auto was not finished in time. Is it very warm in New York it must be as it is very warm here. We have had no more lovely days like the one when I was at Dorothy's and I hope we will not for a long time...I have not had the pleasure of having Dorothy over yet as I have been to New York with Mother but hope to have her next week [MTP; not in MTAq].

Frances Nunnally wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens,—

Your letter came this morning and I am so glad you are going to be in New York when we sail. I was afraid you would have gone to your new house. Mother leaves Atlanta on the sixth and is going right to New York, as she has some shopping to do before we leave. Then Father is coming up and take me up on the eleventh. I shall reach New York on the afternoon of the eleventh and will be there until some time on the thirteenth, whenever the “Minnetonka” sails. We shall be at the Waldorf and I will telephone you when I get to New York. I certainly am glad I am going to have a chance to see you before I go. I wish you were going over again this summer. The picture you enclosed in your letter reminds me so much of last summer. It is awfully good, I think.

I want this letter to get off on the afternoon mail, so I will stop. Hoping to see you in about a week, I am / With love, / Francesca [MTAq 167-8].

June 5 Friday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to daughter Jean, at Eastern Point in Gloucester, Mass.

Dear Jean, consound the well-intending dog! And certainly he had good intentions, & a heroic spirit. The great big majority of our race are away below him in this regard, & not worthy to untie his shoe-latchets.

Miss Lyon is slaving away at the new house, getting it ready. She will make an admirable job of it if she survives.

I have named the house Innocence at Home. A good name—& susceptible of more than one interpretation.

I shall have to be here until near June 20th. Then I am expecting to be there. Must be, I reckon; & must remain there some days & straighten-up things & entertain two or three sets of visitors who may possibly settle in the neighborhood—& certainly I do hope they will.

Then on the 30th of June I am due in Portsmouth N.H. for the dedication of the Tom Bailey Aldrich Memorial. Along about that time you will be well settled in your home, I guess, & can receive me, on my way to or from Portsmouth.

We have started a village library up yonder, & the people have named it for me. ~~We have dug four or five hundred old books out of our over-burdened shelves & inflicted them upon that library.~~

I have no doubt the Spider is having a good time in London. I hope so, anyway. With lots of love & kisses, / Father [MTP]. Note: One might only speculate as to the line Sam struck out. Was there some reason he decided Jean should not know about the large donation of books? However, he must have thought it would upset her, because on June 14 he wrote her not to be troubled by the donation; there were no books that Jean would “wish to withhold.” The first paragraph about the dog is clearly a response to a recent letter from Jean, but none are extant.

Sam also wrote to Father William Fitz-Simon, at this time in Washington, D.C. about his approaching wedding in Tuxedo Park to Miss Ursula Juliet Morgan.

Dear Father Fitz-Simon,—Marriage—yes, it is the supreme felicity of life, I concede it. And it is also the supreme tragedy of life. The deeper the love the surer the tragedy. And the more disconsolating when it comes.

And so I congratulate you. Not perfunctorily, not lukewarmly, but with a fervency & fire that no word in the dictionary is strong enough to convey. And in the same breath & sincerity I grieve for you. Not for both of you & not for the one that shall go first, but for the one that is fated to be left behind. For that one there is no recompense—For that one no recompense is possible.

There are times—thousands of times—when I can expose the half of my mind, & conceal the other half, but in the matter of the tragedy of marriage I feel too deeply for that, & I have to bleed it all out or shut it all in. And so you must consider what I have been through, & am passing through & be charitable with me.

Make the most of the sunshine! & I hope it will last long—ever so long.

I do not really want to be present; yet for friendship's sake & because I honor you so, I would be there if I could. / Most sincerely your friend, / S. L. Clemens [MTP: Paine's 1917 Mark Twain's Letters, p.811-12]. Note: the MTP's TS replaces Sam's "&" signs and makes a few other changes. Rev. William Fitz-Simon would marry Miss Ursula Juliet Morgan (niece of J. Pierpont Morgan) at St. Mary's church in Tuxedo Park on June 24 [NY Times, 24 June, p. 7, Miss Morgan Weds Rev. Wm. Fitz-Simon].

Julia O'Connell wrote from NYC to invite Sam to visit their literary club at Morris High School; they had been studying TS and "are greatly delighted with your style and humor" [MTP].

Myron H. Phelps for the Society for Advancement of India wrote to Sam. "In view of your interest in the subject, I take the liberty of sending you a report regarding our work which we have just issued; and also some newspaper clippings which possibly you may not have seen, and which may interest you" [MTP]. Clippings from the NY Sun, NY Post, NY Herald, all June 3 are in the file.

Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My Dear Mr Clemens / I have a bad cold rose fever and Bronchitis together its almost over now. We except to leave on Wednesday for Atlantic City. I have not gotten my pony and mother says that there is no use in getting one now as we are going away but get it in the fall and hire one wherever we go. I like that idea dont you? I have two rabbits. Billy and Dorothy (Dodo for short) they are two weeks old pure white with blue eyes. They're so lovely.

When we go away I shall let my friend Claire Kenworthy take care of them for me. She can have the products. You must be having a lovely time going everywhere. I hope you enjoy your visit with Miss Clemens I look forward to visiting you later on.

I hope you will like your new house when you see it. but, oh dear how late its getting and I must close with lots & lots of love your loving / Dorothy / P.S. Please give Miss Lyon my love / Dorothy [MTAq 168].

June 6 Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

You are a very dear & sweet Francesca to answer so promptly, & you so heavy-laden with work, you poor little chap! But soon you'll be at sea, & that will be fine & restful. I wish I could go with you.

I go away Monday the 8th, but shall plan to return Thursday forenoon so as to be on deck & listening for your telephone message that afternoon. You & your parents must spare us a little of your time at our feed-trough, either at dinner that evening or at luncheon or dinner next day. I'm going to count on that, dear heart. / With love, ... [MTP; MTAq 169].

Sam and Isabel Lyon went to the Savoy Theatre to see Charles Rann Kennedy's play, The Servant in the House. Sam would meet Kennedy at a dinner given by Miss Elizabeth Jordan on June 7 [June 7 to Sturgis; NY Times, June 8, p.7 "Dinner to Charles Rann Kennedy"]. Note: the Henry Miller Associate Players.

SAVOY 34th St. & B'way. Evs. 8:20.
Mat. to-day, best Seats, $1.50.
HENRY MILLER The Servant in the House
ASTE PLAYERS

The New York Times, June 14, p. C3, ran a special story datelined London, June 6:

TWAIN'S DAUGHTER TALKS ABOUT HIM

Miss Clara Clemens Says It Is Hard to Have a Genius for a Father.

TAKEN FOR BUFFALO BILL

"Father Wears White Suit to Remind Him of Bed," Says Miss Clara.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 6.—Miss Clara Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain, who is the possessor of a rich contralto voice, has made her debut in this country as a concert singer at the Queen's Hall. She will give a recital, with Miss Marie Nichols, violinist, and Mr. Wark, pianist, at the Bechstein Hall on June 16.

Miss Clemens inherits her father's sense of humor, and in an article published in the London Express she tells of the tribulations which face the daughter of a celebrity.

Miss Clemens writes as follows:

"I have just come to the conclusion that things want readjusting in this old world of ours.

"Need I mention the fact that I refer to the glaring injustice of having to go about labeled 'Mark Twain's daughter' when I am doing my best to pursue a musical career?

"Father, is, of course, a genius—and that is what makes me so tired. My fatigue is directly caused by the incessant strain—prolonged over some years and induced by trying to find a secret hiding place when I can shroud my identity and be sure of a really comfortable bed.

"I have a mind to scour Europe for such a place, and when I have found it to take to bed for, say, a couple of years, and arise—a genius. For the bed habit is the recipe of father's success.

"While I have been tiring myself out in an endeavor to rise to the heights as anybody else's daughter he has just lain in bed and thought things and got out of bed now and then to loaf around on a lecture tour or tramp lazily through Europe. That's why I'm looking for a really comfortable bed. Genius is the art of taking—to bed.

"Father called me a genius once when I was about 15, and, although I guess he was just fooling me, I am not likely to forget the occasion. He had gone on a lecture tour with Mr. George W. Cable, the Southern writer, and during his absence we girls—my two sisters and myself—arranged some theatricals as a surprise for him on his return to our home at Hartford, Conn.

"The piece we selected was 'The Prince and the Pauper,' and father pretended to enjoy it just as much as we did, and, as I said before, he informed me that I was a genius. Shortly after that memorable night I came over to Europe.

"Then my troubles began. They began in Berlin, where father, thanks to no violent physical efforts on his part, is wonderfully popular. When I was not studying hard at my music I would go out occasionally to little functions, where I would sit in a corner and be completely ignored by all assembled until some foolish person whispered to another: 'I believe that's Mark Twain's daughter in the corner.'

"Then the guests would arise as one man and swoop down upon me, and expect me to be 'bright' and amusing after a hard day's work. These, of course, were the occasions when my august parent was not present. At social gatherings graced by his presence my existence was on the level of a footstool—always unnecessary object in a crowded room. Father, fresh from bed, would completely flood the place with his talk. And yet the secret of his popularity never occurred to me at the time.

"But father has had much to endure, too. The last time he was in London he was assailed in Regent Street by a venerable old lady, who shook him cordially by the hand and repeated fervently: 'I have always wanted to shake hands with you.' My father, who was feeling particularly brilliant after a long day's rest, was much moved, and responded gratefully: 'So you know who I am, madam?' 'Of course I do,' answered the old lady with enthusiasm, 'You're Buffalo Bill!'

"Father's white suit is another of my trials. I have always believed that the reason he took to wearing it is that it soothed him and reminded him of bed. His white hair, too, can be explained scientifically. The explanation can be found in any well-equipped natural history museum. The hares and the bird and the foxes in the arctic regions are of a dazzling whiteness when the snow covers their haunts. Father is, therefore, a striking example of what is known as sympathetic coloration. His hair has gradually assumed the color of his pillow.

"But I must do father bare justice. In spite of his lying-in-bed habit he can be impetuous both in speech and action. When he gets too impetuous in speech I rise to the occasion and answer him back.

"Last Winter I was to sing at an important evening concert on the other side, and the entire family had been invited to attend a function in the afternoon, Father, being unmusical, could not understand that I should have been unfit to sing if I had chattered after his own fashion all the afternoon. And so I coaxed him to go and represent the family. At first he objected strongly, but finally, in a burst of impetuosity, he said: 'Yes, Clara, I'll go to that reception. I'd go to _____ for you.'

"To which I thoughtfully replied: 'If ever, father, you should be called upon to go there, please go labeled 'I'm for Clara.'"

[Note: Sam approved of this article: in his June 14 to daughter Jean he wrote, "Clara has been writing something for a London paper, & doing it very well. I will try to remember to enclose it."]

Harper's Weekly published an excerpt from Sam's speech at the eighth annual banquet of the American Booksellers Assoc. on May 20: "Mark Twain, His Books, and the Booksellers," p. 32 [Tenney, ALR Third Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1979) 192].

Leopold Godfrey-Turner wrote from England for "Life's Pictorial Comedy" to ask Clemens to write an answer to the question, "What is the greatest mistake" of his life [MTP] Note: IVL: "Contract prohibits," meaning his contract with Harper's prohibited him from submitting elsewhere.

June 6? Saturday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Jennie A. Eustace.

Dear Miss Eustace:

I wish to contribute the inclosed $10 to that $1,000 which you propose to raise among our profession. I think I have fairly earned the right to say "our," for I have been monologuing before the footlights for forty years & I am on the free list of all the righteously conducted theatres in the country. / Sincerely yours, / S. L. Clemens [MTP: NY Times, June 9, 1908 p.7]. Note: the following from the Times article explains:

To Miss Eustace's Fund for Feeding Needy School Children.

Jennie Eustace, leading woman of the "Witching Hour" company at the Hackett Theatre, who has undertaken to raise $1,000 for the fund to aid the indigent school children of New York, yesterday received a letter from Mark Twain inclosing a check for $10. The letter, which was written from 21 Fifth Avenue, said:

[Sam's above letter appeared here].

Though Miss Eustace announced her intention of collecting funds only three days ago, she has already received nearly $200. The subscriptions have been from "professional" friends and also from friends and acquaintances in no manner connected with the stage.

Note: Just after this letter from Sam, Jennie A. Eustace replied: "You are very kind. I thank you sincerely. Your cheque will do a great deal of good. But you will do a great deal more. I cannot tell you how I appreciate your subscribing to my fund. Would you object to my using your charming letter” [MTP]. Note: This is catalogued as simply 1908 but it is clearly in response to Sam’s above.

June 7 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam wrote to Ebenezer J. Hill, postmaster, N.Y. A draft plus a signed letter survive.

Dear Sir: /I am just about to settle in Redding; but to live there, & have to break bulk at Branchville, on then mail addressed to Georgetown, is too confusing for me. The Railroad Co has done its part to my entire satisfaction, in the matter of granting us express-service after June 15, and now I turn to you to help me out of the difficulty of being outside the limit allowed to the rural free delivery that starts from the Redding Post Office. There are several of us newcomers, & there will be some more. Hoping you will be able to help us, I am / Very ... [MTP: Christie’s East catalogs, Nov. 12, 1997, Item 27].

Sam also replied to the June 5 from Dorothy Quick.

You dear little rat, aren’t you ever going to stop catching cold & struggling with bronchitis? I am so sorry for you. Wait till I get you up-country at “Innocence at Home”—then we’ll set your health up!

Yes, I like the idea of waiting till fall to buy the pony. A hired one will answer quite well in the meantime.

I am glad you’ve got Billy & Dodo. In December they will be just right, & I will run down to see you & we will have them for dinner. I am like you, I just love rabbits.

I have been scheming to get down to your school-exercises day after tomorrow, but I failed, because of a string of business engagements which are going to keep me here for more than two days yet. I would love to see you, dear.

Will it be safe to leave them with Claire Kenworthy? Do you know her well-enough? Is she good, & does she go to Sunday school? I think I wouldn’t take any rash chances; because if she should eat them—however, maybe she can resist. I will hope so. She can eat the “products,” & that will be all right, because they will belong to her.

Miss Lyons sends her love, & I send lots & lots of love, dear heart / SLC

I reckon this will catch you before you get started toward Atlantic City. Tell me—what is your address there, & how long shall you stay? [MTAq 170-1].

Note: Cooley in the latter source cites Clara in MFMT that the name for the new house at Redding was changed from “Autobiography House” to “Innocence at Home” on June 3, but this is incorrect. Sam made the change on the morning of June 2, at the end of his stay in Deal, N.J. with the Harveys; see entry. Such errors often get repeated.

Sam also wrote to John L. RoBards in Hannibal, Mo.

If the graves of my family need putting in order, will you kindly have it attended to and send me the bill? I shall be greatly obliged.

I was very sorry to miss you that afternoon at the Auditorium, but I was constantly being introduced to people, & had no chance to get out my glasses & examine the cards placed in my hands until you were gone; then all my efforts to get on your track were futile. By George it was a day of confusions, mistakes, disappointments, defeated intentions, & cross-purposes!

You came east, that time, without looking in at 21 Fifth avenue. Please don’t act like that again. I will always be a delight to me to see you—& the time left us is not long, John / Sincerely Your friend ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

The Directors of the Children’s Theatre are holding a business meeting down stairs, but as I am only Honorary President, I don’t have to do any work & can therefore stay up here & answer Aquarium letters. Yours I cannot find; & so, as I don’t know what State Woodstock is in I will send this to your Boston address.

I find I am not going to pass through Boston till then end of the month, because I can't get away from here earlier. I do hope you will be at home again by that time. I have to be in Portsmouth, N. H., June 30 for the Tom Bailey Aldrich Memorial dedication.

I go visiting on Long Island tomorrow, but shall return on Friday to receive an angel-fish (the Georgian) & her parents, who will dine with me & sail for Europe next Day. Then I shall go back & finish the visit.

Yesterday we went to see "The Servant in the House" (oh, a noble play), & tonight I go dining out, to meet the author of it, whom I very much wish to know.

I don't know how I have managed to mislay your letter. Such is not my custom—certainly it isn't as regards the letters of the Aquarium. I don't care for the others, they are Miss Lyon's affair. / Lovingly ... [MTAq 169-70]. Note: Charles Rann Kennedy (1871-1950) Anglo-American dramatist, was the author of The Servant in the House; his plays dealt with moral dilemmas. Frances Nunnally was the Angelfish Sam planned to receive on Friday.

The New York Times, June 8, ran a squib on p. 7 covering the Kennedy dinner:

Dinner to Charles Rann Kennedy.

Miss Elizabeth Jordan gave a dinner at Delmonico's last night in honor of Charles Rann Kennedy, author of "The Servant in the House," and Mrs. Kennedy, (Edith Wynne Mathison.)

Among those present were Mark Twain, Mr. and Mrs. Selden Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. St. Clair McKelway, Charles A. Conant, Mrs. James Robert McKee, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Goetchius, Miss Elizabeth Cutting, and Mr. Arthur Brisbane.

Newton Wallop (Earl of Portsmouth) wrote to Sam. "I wish I could have seen you as well as your handwriting. We shall not be returning to town before the end of this month; but Lady Portsmouth hopes then to give herself the opportunity of making your daughters acquaintance." The Wallops were visiting the US [MTP].

June 8 Monday – Clara Clemens' 34th birthday. Clara was in London on tour.

William Fitz-Simon wrote from Tuxedo Park, NY to Sam.

I thank you most heartily for your letter. I appreciate what you say and even now can understand the deep truth you express. You honor me greatly in writing me as you have done and I am so glad because of your expression of friendship. You will allow me to say that I have regarded it as a great privilege to have had an opportunity during your stay here to learn something of that great humanness—that great heart that is the mainspring of your life. Miss Morgan is very anxious to meet you... [MTP].

T.H. Green wrote a three-page typed letter from Minneapolis about his sister discovering a note about Clemens' grandmother, Pamela Goggin Clemens, during a search of Virginia genealogical records [MTP]. Note: IVL on letter: "Many thanks for your very pleasant letter. / Answd June 11, 08"

Ferris Greenslet for the Aldrich Memorial Museum wrote a short note on Houghton Mifflin notepaper to Sam. "It is great pleasure of us all to know that you can be present at Portsmouth on June 30th. You don't say anything about the matter of the little talk on Aldrich as a Wit, but I shall venture to assume that your silence gives consent..." [MTP].

June 9 Tuesday – Malcolm D. Graham wrote from Hamilton, Bermuda to Sam. "I am indeed glad to have traded the owner of the shell, and am returning it to you by the mail under registered cover & trust it will duly reach you." He also discussed Bermuda's weather [MTP]. Note: the "identification" shell was from Helen Blackmer; See May 25 to Graham.

Ebenezer J. Hill, Congressman, wrote on Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representative letterhead to Sam. "I am in receipt of your letter of the 7th, and think you are mistaken in regard to a rural free delivery service starting from Redding. I am under the impression that the rural free delivery service to which you refer starts from Bethel... / I will at once forward your letter to the Post Office Department and ask them to send an inspector there and see if the route cannot be extended so as to take you in" [MTP].

June 10 Wednesday – Dorothy Sturgis wrote from Woodstock, Vt. on Woodstock Inn stationery:

My dear Mr. Clemens.

Do please tell me who wrote "the Servant in the House"! I am ashamed to say I don't know. But now we are "quits" because you didn't know what state Woodstock was in. If you find my last letter please peruse its contents very carefully; if not, remember that I want you to come up here awfully badly! There's a sweet little girl up here too, whom I'm sure you'd be entirely captured by! Besides I should think it would be horrid in New York now. / ... I have taken to writing poetry! Silly verses about the people here..." She includes a verse about a lawyer there named Skeels [MTP; not in MTAq].

June 11 Thursday – Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr Clemens

I received your letter just before I left I'm so sorry you could not have come out to commencement but I must confess I felt very much disappointed I wanted to show you my school and all my friends. Claire took the rabbits I think I can trust her

Dorothea Ofrdytce took my bird Nellie Arnold my goldfish. so you see my pets are pretty well scattered around Plainfield.

I wish you were here. It is lonely here and there is no crowd. I except to be here until July first and I expect Grandpa and Grandma will be back by then My Rose fever is not very much better but I have scarsely been here long enough to be cured.

However, I slept through all of last night.

Which was a big improvement.

As I have been awake coughing all most every night for a whole week

I had a merry-go-round ride yesterday and got the brass ring Was'ant that exciting I wish you had been here to watch me catch it. it is almost an art. Please write to me very soon wont you.

With lots & lots of love to Miss Lyon & yourself send lots of hugs & kisses / Your loving / Dorothy [MTAq 171-2].

June 12 Friday – Charles Hinckley Baker (b. 1864) wrote to Sam, sending his new book Life and Character of William Taylor Baker, President of the World's Columbian Exposition and of the Chicago Board of Trade, by His Son (1908). Baker inscribed the book: "To Mr. Samuel L. Clemens / 'Mark Twain' / with the compliments and good / wishes of the author / Charles H. Baker / June 12th 1908." Sam wrote on the front pastedown endpaper, "A valuable book, & capably constructed. A tribute from a son to his father which does honor to both. SL C June/08" [Gribben 40; MTP].

June 13 Saturday – G.E. Stechert & Co., books, NYC wrote to Sam.

We are in receipt of your favor of the 10th inst. in which you ask us to mail future members of "Simplicissimus" to your country address but regret that on account of the periodical being declared illegal for mailing, owing to the obscene illustrations as well as the lottery advertisements appearing in the columns from time to time, we cannot send the copies through the mail. Shall we retain the numbers sending them to you by express from time to time until your return to the city? [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Answd June 23; Deliver to R.W. Ashcroft 24 Stone St."

June 14 Sunday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to daughter Jean (incoming not extant) at Eastern Point in Gloucester, Mass. He was planning a visit to Gloucester.

The time is drawing near, dear Jean, & I shall be glad to start. Miss Lyon has been hard at work up there among the workman for the past 3 days, & it is now almost definitely settled that next Thursday is my date for moving into the house. There has been a whole world of work to do, but I have escaped it all from the start (a year ago) to the finish.

Clara has been writing something for a London paper [See June 6 article], & doing it very well. I will try to remember to enclose it.

Do not trouble about the books I am giving to the village library. There's none that you would wish to withhold.

There is no hurry about the Aquarium-sign, Jean dear. It can wait as long as you wish.

Indeed I should like to tarry with you a considerable spell, but Dr. Peterson will not allow that. For your good he will restrict me to hours, not days.

I am dreading that Portsmouth journey. I suppose I shall have to come down here from Redding; then take 5 hours to Boston; then some more hours to Portsmouth—all in dead summer-time! By God, I would rather be hanged. However, it is a memorial service in honor of an old friend, & I think he would reciprocate by & by, if he could.

Goodbye, dear heart, with lots of hugs & kisses— / Father [MTP]. Note: Jean was making a woodcarved sign for Sam's Aquarium Club to hang in his den at the new house. Also, she was "insistent" in asking for a visit of several days [Hill 198]. The Portsmouth trip was to attend the dedication of the Thomas Bailey Aldrich Memorial. See June 29.

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick in at the Hotel Windsor, Atlantic City, N.J. relating updates on the new house in Redding, Conn.

I am so sorry, dear heart, that I could not come to Commencement, for I would have been so glad to see your school & meet your friends.

Miss Lyons is working very hard, these days, getting the new house up-country ready. Of course it requires a world of labor to get a new house in shape. She has been at it might & day, this past week, & has gotten all the furniture & the orchestrelle & a billiards table in, at last, and says the house will be ready for me next Thursday. I shan't be able to leave here till Thursday afternoon—Then I'll go. I am sure I shall like the house, from all accounts. I think you will like it too, when you come to pay me a visit.

You careless child! How do know you can trust Claire & Dorothea & Nellie? As for me, I never expect to see those rabbits nor that bird nor that goldfish again. I wish now I had gone to Plainfield while they were still alive.

I wish you wouldn't be sick so much, dear. You seem to be always traveling from one malady to another, & it grieves me. Get well, dear! & stay well! Won't you?

I am glad you got the brass right—I think you did well.

Miss Lyon sends you lots of love, & so do I—multiplied by 6 [MTAq 172].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

Dear Dorothy: / Charles Rann Kennedy is the author of "The Servant in the House." His wife, who was the chief figure in "Everyman," plays in it, & so does his niece, a girl of 18 or 19. It is a wonderful play & a wonderful cast.

The reason I didn't know where Woodstock is, was because I knew it used to be in another State & had moved, but I didn't know what State it had moved to until your last letter came.

Yesterday morning I shipped the Georgian member of the Aquarium to Europe, with her parents; but they will visit me at "Innocence at Home" (the house I have built near Redding, Conn.) the 21st or 22^d of September, & I hope you can come at that time, too, & have ventured to enter you upon the list accordingly. The house is about ready, now, & I shall go up there next Thursday, if nothing happens to defeat Miss Lyon's calculations. I haven't seen it yet.

Yes indeed, I wish I could come to Woodstock, but I know I can't manage it. I'm too old to skirmish around like an angel-fish. / Yours, with love, / S L C [MTAq 173]. Note: See June 7 for more on Kennedy.

Lilian W. Aldrich wrote to Sam, inviting Sam to a function on June 29, the day before the Memorial to Thomas Bailey Aldrich [MTP].

June 15 Monday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam replied to the June 14 from Lilian W. Aldrich.

Dear Mrs. Aldrich: / It is lovely of you to invite me for the 29th, & I wish I could accept, but I shall not be able to arrive until the next day. I shall be pretty sure to catch the special train; but failing that, I shall go by the 10 a.m. I could easily miss both trains if I were alone, but a friend will go with me who will protect me from myself. / Yours affectionately / Mark. / P. S. / I started this note, was then called away, & presently came back & unwittingly made a new start [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.).

Mariechen dear, it is lovely of you to invite me, & I do wish I could say yes, but I am tied up with preventive engagements—that is to say, company at “INNOCENCE AT HOME” (name of the house I have built in the country—you are permitted to keep your sarcasms to yourself, dear; & it wouldn’t be safe for you to utter any, anyway.)

The final last tinkering & fussing & finishing was completed yesterday on the Sabbath day, & everything is shipshape & ready now. Miss Lyon & the servants & the four cats will go up to-morrow morning & take possession, & I am to follow two days later, in the later afternoon. Friends will arrive Friday, Saturday & Monday. I am conscious of a steadily augmenting great curiosity to see what the house looks like. And also the region round about. Clara & Miss Lyon claim that it is as beautiful as Tuxedo, but I doubt it.

Of course you can have any head I’ve got, & right welcome—but I don’t know of any “large” head, unless you mean the brown-tinted London one such as H. H. has. If that is it, I can get a copy from London in about 3 weeks. If it is the Gessford (New York) picture, tell me & I will attend to it. I think I like the London one better.

The skinning of this house goes steadily on, hour by hour. There is not an ornament left in my bedroom now but a bottle of Scotch whisky, & somebody has even been skinning that.

Paragon of nieces, I herewith enclose my warm regards and regrets to Father Fitz Simon; & to you my love. / Uncle Mark [MTP]. Note: William Fitz-Simon was about to be married. The London photographer was H. Walter Barnett; see June 26.

Monte A. Dernham wrote from San Francisco to ask for an autograph [MTP].

June 16 Tuesday – Ferris Greenslet for the Aldrich Memorial Museum wrote to Sam about his train connections from Boston to Portsmouth on June 30—even the 10 o’clock train would suffice [MTP].

Mary R. Townsend (Mrs. W.W. Townsend) wrote from Marshallville, Ga. Mary wrote she was the daughter of Jere Clemens of Alabama, Sam’s “distant cousin.” She asked about an anecdote she’d read in his Autobiography in Youth’s Companion that she felt certain was of her father—where did Sam get it from? Also, she planned on republishing two of her father’s books about the Mexican War and the Texas War. Could he advise her on the matter? [MTP]. Note: extremely light faded letter. IVL: “Regret to say that the only advice he can offer is that the best thing for her to do is to apply to some publisher. Doesn’t know which anecdote is referenced to; Answd June 23”

June 17 Wednesday – At 21 Fifth Ave, N.Y. Sam inscribed a copy of LM to Commander Daniel Dow (1860-1931): “Very truly yours / Mark Twain / To Commander Dow, R.N.R. / June 17/08” [MTP]. Note: this from a message board posted by Dow’s grandson, Michael Dow, in 2004:

My grandfather was Commander Daniel Dow RD, RNR and he commanded all the Cunard ships during his career until his retirement. He went to sea in 1876 as an Apprentice to Thos and John Brockelbank and sailed in the barque “Baroda”. His last sea command was in 1919 but he then was sent to become Cunard's American representative until his retirement. On a voyage in the "Mauretania" in September 1910 he achieved a record westbound passage from Daunt's Rock to Sandy Hook in 4 days, 10 hours and 50 minutes, an average speed of 26.06 knots so taking the Blue Riband record off her sister ship "Lusitania". He died in 1931. However, he did have command of the "Lusitania" from 1913 until her penultimate voyage in May 1915; (a total distance of 1,635,092 nautical miles) during which time he came into public prominence on several occasions most notably after flying "Old Glory" after being instructed to fly a neutral flag in the hope that it would deter an attack from German Cruisers patrolling off Sandy Hook! Needless to say this did not go down well here in the UK but his American passengers loved it! There has been a lot of controversy over the events leading up to the final and fateful voyage of the "Lusitania" and of Captain Turner a great deal of which is inaccurate.

[For more on Commodore Dow see http://www.dowfamilyhistory.co.uk/daniel_dow_.html].

Sam also wrote to an H. Walter Barnett, London photographer, "My charming niece requires me to give her my best photograph, very well, you made it." Sam asked if the photographer would send a copy [MTP: Myers and Co. catalogs, Autumn 1952, No. 373, Item 88]. Note: see June 15 to Mary B. Rogers.

June 18 Thursday – The History of Redding website notes that Sam arrived at the West Redding Train Station shortly before 6 p.m on the Berkshire Express out of New York. The train made a special stop for Twain and thereafter continued the stop for his many visitors.

At 6 p.m. Sam arrived by buggy at his new (and last) home in Redding, Conn., one that Isabel V. Lyon had been getting ready for some weeks. Sam played billiards with Ralph Ashcroft and Albert Paine until midnight [June 19 to Jean Clemens]. Initially he named the house, "Autobiography House," then "Innocence at Home," but finally "Stormfield" would stick at the insistence of Clara Clemens in Oct. The house cost about $45,000 [MTHL 2: 830-31n1].

Cooley writes of Mark Twain's arrival in Redding:

When Clemens arrived at the Redding rail station, he was greeted by a crowd of townspeople. Carriages decorated with flowers formed something of a parade, transporting Clemens, his well-wishers, and curious onlookers the three miles to the gates of his new home. The house and its grounds seemed to him perfect in every detail. That night more townsfolk and some neighbors stopped by to set off fireworks in the garden and give welcome to their celebrated new neighbor. Afterward, because the billiard table was already in place, Paine and Clemens played until after midnight. Before retiring that night he wrote to Dorothy Quick [See June 19], inviting her to come for a visit [MTAq 174-5].

Louise Paine also remembered the arrival:

On the 18th of June, 1908, at about four in the afternoon we left New York City by an express train that was to make its first stop in Redding that day. With Mr. Clemens were my father, a reporter or two, a photographer and that most fortunate little girl, myself, whose boarding school closed that day so that I, too, was homeward bound to Redding.

Waiting for us at the Redding station was a proud array of carriages, flower trimmed, and filled with smiling people who waved warmly. I knew I would never forget it. Mr. Clemens waved in return, then stepped into his own carriage and drove toward the beautiful house that was to be his last home.

- Louise Paine [<http://www.historyofredding.com/HRtwainstormfield.htm>].

Philip Nichols Sunderland, along with his father, William Webb Sunderland, builder of Stormfield, recollected the day:

The day he arrived, I went down to be present, as a representative of my father, at his entry into the house. It was all rather informal, I recall; there were quite a lot of people who came out with him on the train from New York and we all drove up from the Branchville station (he says Branchville but that's incorrect, unless a photo surfaces to prove otherwise, Twain arrived in West Redding) in buggies. And it was all there, just as he had wanted it, even to the cat and I believe that he was very pleased [ibid.]

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Benar, Mr. & Mrs. Paine. / The King arrived this afternoon" [MTP: IVL TS 53].

Joe Twichell wrote a note to Sam on an engraved invitation announcing the marriage of their daughter Harmony to Charles Edward Ives, June 9 in Hartford.

"Dear Mark, / Harmony—old lady Harmony—and I sail for England Saturday. Good bye. We have just received a quite long and very nice letter from Jean at Gloucester. Yrs." On the bottom of the announcement he wrote of his daughter: "Harmony is to be domiciled in NY at 70 West 11th St.; so that she will be your rather near neighbor" [MTP].

Sam's new guestbook:

Sam signed himself, Ralph W. Ashcroft, and Albert Bigelow Paine and wife into the first page of the guestbook. He wrote "1908" at the top, and put Brooklyn, N.Y. for Ashbrook, and Redding Conn. for the Paines, who lived nearby. After his name he wrote "Arrived. Saw the place for the first time. Came for the summer. Soon concluded to remain permanently. Gave up the New York house." Note: these entries were made on or after Dec. 28, when Mary B. Rogers gave Sam the new guestbook. The original guestbook of five pages was merely signed by guests with a few dates.

June 18 after – Maud W. Littleton wrote Sam a note on a postcard: "My dear Doctor Clemens—Why don't you answer my last letter? Are you too busy or have you forgotten us? Martin was mightily set up over the nice things you said. My house will soon be finished — & then I am going to invite you again—with love..." [MTP]. Note: a similar postcard to Isabel Lyon is in file.

June 18-August 31 – Sometime during this period in Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer about a humorous exchange with a supposed lookalike.

I'm already making mistakes. When I was in New York, six weeks ago, I was on a corner of Fifth Avenue & I saw a small girl—not a big one—start across from the opposite corner, & I exclaimed to myself joyfully, "That is certainly my Margaret!" so I rushed to meet her. But as she came nearer I began to doubt, & said to myself, "It's a Margaret—that is plain enough—but I am afraid it is somebody else's." So when I was passing her I held my shell so she couldn't help but see it. Dear, she only glanced at it & passed on! I wondered if she could have overlooked it. It seemed best to find out; so I turned & followed & caught up with her, & said, deferentially, "Dear Miss, I already know your first name by the look of you, but would you mind telling me your other one?" She was vexed & said pretty sharply, "It's Douglas, if you're so anxious to know. I know your name by your looks & I'd advise you to shut yourself up with your pen & ink & write some more rubbish. I am surprised that they allow you to run at large. You are likely to get run over by a baby-carriage any time. Run along now & don't let the cows bite you."

What an idea! There aren't any cows in Fifth Avenue. But I didn't smile; I didn't let onto perceive how uncultured she was. She was from the country, of course, & didn't know what a comical blunder she was making [MTP: MTB 1438].

June 19 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick:

Oh, this will never do! You are having altogether too good a time, you little rascal (because I am not in it.) Still, I'm glad. I mustn't break into it now, but I'll have to do it before long; you & your mother will have to pay me a visit here. I want you; & I want my other angel-fishes. I must have a couple of them under this roof all the time, from now until January. There will be 2 under it to-morrow, to stay a week, I hope.

The billiard room, downstairs, is the Aquarium Official head-quarters. Their framed photographs are being hung around its walls.

"Innocence at Home" is the right name for this house, because it describes me, & describes the Aquarium Club. What do you think, dear?

I was never in this beautiful region until yesterday evening. Miss Lyon & the architect built & furnished the house without any help or advice from me, & the result is entirely to my satisfaction. It is charmingly quiet here. The house stands alone, with nothing in sight but woodsy hills, & rolling country.

We brought Tammany along. / With lots & lots of love / SLC [MTP; MTAq 179].

Notes: Cooley claims this letter was written in the wee hours of June 19, after a long billiard game with Ashcroft. Nothing in the letter or the MTP notes makes this claim. The following letter to Mary Rogers, however, states he had been in the house "several hours" and is a much more likely candidate for a note written after midnight. The two Angelfish arriving the next day were Dorothy Harvey and Louise Paine, though in the first page of the guestbook, Sam wrote next to these two Angelfish names, "first week in July" and "8 days". The discrepancy is explained in that he added these entries on or after Dec. 28, upon receiving the new Guestbook from Mary B. Rogers.

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean at Eastern Point, Gloucester, Mass.

Dear Jean, I like the house ever so much, & I like the deep quiet, after tumultuous New York. I arrived at 6 p.m., yesterday, & Paine & Ashcroft & I played billiards until midnight & had a good time.

Certainly it is a pity that I can't stay all night in your house, but your health is the important thing, & I must help Dr. Peterson in his good work, not mar it & hinder it by going counter to his judgment & commands. I am very grateful to him for the wonderful work he has done for you, & I feel that you & I ought to testify our thankfulness by honoring his lightest desire. Your mother would say this too, out of her grateful heart.

Mr. Cleveland? Yes, he was a drinker in Buffalo, & loose morally. But since then? I have to doubt it. And of course I want to doubt it, for he has been a most noble public servant—and in that capacity he has been utterly without blemish. Of all our public men of today he stands first in my reverence & admiration, & the next one stands two-hundred-&-twenty-fifth. He is the only statesman we have, now. We had two, but Senator Hoar is dead. Drinks? No, I hope it is a mistake. However, Cleveland drunk is a more valuable asset to this country than the whole batch of the rest of our public men sober. He is high-minded; all his impulses are great & pure & fine. I wish we had another of this sort.

Yes-indeedy, it was just too bad that there wasn't a solitary junior member of the family here to help me christen the house. But you know the adage: Man proposes, but God blocks the game.

With lots & lots of love— / Father [MTP]. Note: a reply to a letter not extant.

Sam also wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Dear Lazy: I looked in at Gessford's, & realized that the London picture is much the best; so I wrote to London for it. As I shall be away all summer, I asked that it be sent to Harry, at 26 Broadway. Then, even if he should be in the Yellowstone Park there'll be someone to receive it.

I was told yesterday, in the Grand Central that the other Rogerses & the Broughtons are gone to Bermuda & have secured houses there. I should have doubted it if it hadn't been told me by a Bermudian.

I have been in this house several hours, now, & I like it ever so much.

There—from your very loving / Uncle Mark

I am very very sorry I am not to be with you the 23rd. Do give my love to Father Fitz Simon, & my best good wishes to the bride, if I may take that liberty, on the plea that I know all her people, even if I be a stranger to her / P.S. the London man writes that he has sent the picture to the office [MTP]. Note: Miss Ursula Juliet Morgan (niece of J. Pierpont Morgan) was Fitz-Simon's bride.

June 20 Saturday – In the morning in Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Clara, now in London.

Clara dear, I have been in residence two days, now, & I realize that this is the most satisfactory house I was ever in & also about the most beautiful. The Hartford house was a lovely home, but the architect damaged many of its comfort-possibilities & wasted a deal of its space. The New York house is a roomy & pleasant home, but it is sunless not beautiful. This house is roomy & delightful & beautiful, & no space has been wasted. The sun falls upon it in such floods that you can hear it. Miss Lyon has achieved wonders, I think. There isn't a discordant note in the whole place, inside or out, except the dining room carpet. It is to be superseded.

The New York house is ours for another year, otherwise I would remain here, & never go back. If I could rent the New York house to somebody, I should never have to go to another banquet or make another speech.

Your outside bedroom (the Nightingale's Cage), is the prettiest feature of the whole house. I expect to move into it when it is finished & furnished. No, I will lodge angel-fishes in it. Two will arrive this afternoon, & one governess.

Another one (Dorothy Butes, of 32 Carlisle Mansions, Victoria street) has been trying to get speech of you, & I hope she has succeeded before this time. Francesca Nunnally (of Atlanta), reached London yesterday, with her mother, & I hope they will find you.

Your cablegram about the recital rejoiced me, & I hope for full particulars about it soon.

With ever & ever so much love / Marcus

I am going to put a tin roof on the house so that I can hear it better. Miss Lyon is overdone, quite. She would write to you if she could, but rest is best for her, & necessary. She did not write her mother on her 70th birthday. She will go to New York now for a couple of days, for repose & change [MTP]. Note: this letter written and the following Nunnally letter were written before the arrival of the two Angelfish—Dorothy Harvey with governess Pauline Martin, and Louise Paine; the following letter to Blackmer written after their arrival, likely in the evening.

Sam also wrote to Margaret Blackmer at Misses Tewksbury's School, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y.

Dear Margaret, I thank you for inviting me to the musicale. I would have been there sure, if I had received the message in time.

Do you know, I lost my shell! The enameled one. I missed it from my chain a day or two before I sailed from Bermuda. I was so grieved about it! I didn't tell you, when you visited me, because I hoped to be able to find a duplicate of it before I should see you again. And I was careful not to strike a histrionic attitude & exclaim,

"Why, you look almost exactly like a little Margaret of mine! Maybe you are that Margaret. I think not—I am afraid not—No, it is some other Margaret. If it was mine, she could produce the duplicate of this shell."

I couldn't say it, for I hadn't any shell.

But I've got it now! The officers dined me at Prospect just before I sailed, & I lost the shell there, though I always had supposed it was stolen at the hotel. A waiter found it & the Major of the regiment has sent it to me. It was put into my hand when I stepped into this new country-house of mine for the first time, day before yesterday—a good omen!

Two angel-fishes arrived this afternoon, to stay a week, & we shall have good times. After dinner they took billiard-lessons until their bed-time, half-past 8. We took a long discovery-walk thro' the woods first. I hope you will come & see me here one of these days. / With love & good wishes / SLC / Mr. Ashcroft is coming tomorrow [MTP; MTAq 179-80]. Note: Dorothy Harvey arrived with governess Pauline Martin of Ann Arbor, Mich.; Louise Paine also arrived from down the road. The trio would visit eight days [Guestbook].

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally, now in London with her parents.

You dear little fish, I suppose you are arriving in England today. I had a cable from Clara 4 days ago, announcing a successful recital. I hope you & your mother will see her, but I don't know her address—except J. S. Morgan & Co., bankers.

I have seen the house at last, & have been in it two days, now. You & your mother will like it when you step into it about the 20th of next September—to stay as long as you can. It is altogether satisfactory, & requires no change.

Half of my fishes are framed & are decorating the wall of the billiard room, on the ground floor, which is the Official Headquarters of the Aquarium, & the other half will be there presently. Your Atlanta picture & the London picture of the two of us are there.

I am so sorry I took the New York house for another year. If I hadn't done that, I would never go back to New York again. Here there is nothing in sight between the horizons but woods & hills; & the stillness & serenity bring peace to the soul.

Good-bye, dear. With kind regards to your mother, & to you— / S L C
Two fishes will arrive at mid-afternoon—to stay a week, I hope—Dorothy Harvey & Louise Paine; also Dorothy's governess [MTP; MTAq 180-81].

Sam also wrote to John Brown, Jr. (“Jock”).

Dear Mr. Jock:

I have economised the “Letters,” tasting them at intervals & making them last, but the pleasant feast is finished now, to my regret. In the book your father has painted his portrait with his own hand, with a free brush and unconsciously, & how beautiful it is! And in a sentence he has painted Mrs. Clemens, just as she was. Just as she was when she was a black-haired girl & he a white-haired youth with his spirit untouched by the years. Susy was with them, then—sometimes the eldest of the three! They are gone, now, all gone; & it seems as if they had never been—except in a dream.

I have built this house in the solitudes of the woods & the hills; it was finished & furnished yesterday—so to speak—and I am already in it & half-used to the healing deep stillness, & the flooding sunshine & the fainting & fading distances. It is next to unthinkable that only forty-eight hours ago I was still weltering in the tumult & turmoil & thunder of New York. It is a satisfactory house; a good place to live in, a good place to die in—presently. / Sincerely Yours / SL. Clemens [MTP].

Charles Rollinson Lamb, architect wrote from NYC to Sam, offering his services for the planned new building for the Children's Educational Alliance [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Ansd.”

June 21 Sunday – The photograph of Clemens playing cards with Dorothy Harvey and her friend Pauline Martin, and Louise Paine was likely taken this day, the day after their arrival at Stormfield [MT Journal Spring/Fall 2006 p. 25].

The New York Times, p. C2 under “Nearly 10,000 Guests Bidden to Windsor,” ran a final paragraph about Clara Clemens:

Miss Clara Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain, left for Paris with Miss Marie Nichols, the Boston violinist, after giving a successful concert at Bechstein Hall. Miss Clemens and Miss Nichols will pass the rest of the summer on the Continent, returning to the United States in September for a concert tour, which will extend from Boston to San Francisco. Miss Clemens complains that her father's reputation has overshadowed her here as well as in America.

June 22 Monday – In Redding, Conn., Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Dorothy Quick.

Dear Dorothy: / Mr. Clemens has just left for town, & he asks me to invite your mother & you to come up here on Thursday the second leaving N. Y. Central on the 4:15 train M for Redding. Mr. Clemens & Mr. Paine will be on the same train. Please do not disappoint Mr. Clemens. He sends you much love, & to your mother too. / Yours Ever / I. V. Lyon [MTP].

John Larkin wrote to Sam about the Archer County, Texas property, enclosing a check for $135.52 in payment of Samuel Wilson for interest for 1908 [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd / June 24, 08”

John R. Marks wrote from Prince Edward Island to thank Sam for the “kind words spoken at Delmonicos on May 25 in honor of Queen Victorias birthday.” Though Marks was only 30, he had read of the Queen’s history; he sent verses for her on the day she died (not in file) asking their return when convenient [MTP].

June 23 Tuesday – John J. McCowan for the Actors Society of America wrote from NYC. He planned to enter vaudeville dressed up as Mark Twain, if Clemens had no objection [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd / June 29, 08; Please refer him to Miss Elizabeth Marbury 1430 Broadway”

Mr. & Mrs. Whitelaw Reid sent an engraved invitation to the wedding of his daughter Jean Reid to John Hubert Ward on June 23 at Dorchester House [MTP].

Pauline Robinson for Playground Assoc., NYC wrote to Sam. She had rec’d from Lyon “a second note saying” he would consider joining the council. She encouraged him to do so; it would be an honor to use his name, and listed at the end twelve men who had accepted, including John Pierpont Morgan [MTP].

Skillings & Page, Real Estate, Boston wrote to Sam, noting in the Dramatic Mirror the announcement of incorporation of the Educational Theatre of New York. They felt a similar theatre would do well in Boston and had some “very choice sites” for same [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Refer them to Miss Minnie Hertz Children’s Theatre 20 Gramercy Pk”

June 24 Wednesday – In Princeton, N.J.. ex-president Grover Cleveland succumbed to a heart attack. His last words were, “I tried so hard to do right.” Sam consistently held the man in high esteem, and wrote condolences to Cleveland’s widow on June 25.

Alice Minnie Herts for the Children’s Educational Theatre wrote to Sam announcing their move and asking for “a good picture of yourself” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd/ June 29, 08 / Say, yes. For her to get the photo & Mr. Clemens will present it. Mr. C. is in his country home”

June 25 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Frances F. Cleveland (Mrs. Grover Cleveland) in Princeton, N.J.: “Your husband was a man I knew and loved and honored for twenty-five years. I mourn with you. S.L. Clemens” [MTP]. Note: for some reason the NY Times reported this as June 26 [June 27, p.2, “From Mark Twain to Mrs. Cleveland”].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: I shan’t ever be able to write any thing again, for all my time, my strength are given over to the finishing and furnishing and installing the King in this beautiful home. I am savagely interested in it—not tenderly; because although in a way much of it is my creating, I have no sense that any corner of it belongs to me. Not even my own cluttered room [MTP: IVL TS 53-54].

Elias Cornelius Benedict wrote from Greenwich, Conn. to Sam.

“I expect to leave here on Sunday morning next (28th) on the Oneida to be present at Portsmouth on the 30th Inst. to attend the dedication services of the Thomas Bailey Aldrich Memorial—and at the suggestion of our mutual friend Mr Gilder (who was obliged to decline my invitation) I write to ask if you will not do me the great favor of being my guest on the trip.” He related it was on the Oneida that the Players Club was formed; Aldrich was one of the forming group—“all who took part in the affair are dead save Mr. Bispham & myself & he is much too crippled to attend” [MTP]. Note: William Bispham.

Howells & Stokes wrote twice to Sam, with details and expenses connected with fixtures and other items for the Redding house [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd / June 29, 08”

June 26 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Dear Mr. Rogers: / Will you & Mrs. Rogers come & pay me a visit? I hope you can, & that you will give me that pleasure. I have been in the house a week, now, & am nearly wonted. I am sending this note to New York, as you were still there & making preparations for Bermuda when I last heard of you, which was a week ago.

This is a good house, & a very comfortable one—however, it is better that you judge of that when you come. / Yours ever ... [MTHHR 649].

H. Walter Barnett, London photographer, replied to Sam’s June 17. “It was with very great pleasure that I received your very kind note this morning, instructing me to send one of the portraits that I made of you eight years ago to Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Junior....” Barnett was also sending photos of Clara Clemens and Miss Marie Nichols, who were in England. Soon he’d be able to make full color photographs, but was still experimenting with them [MTP].

Robert H. Syms wrote from NYC, simply to appreciate Sam’s “literary work” and “to emphasize particularly the value which I put upon your sympathetic insight into the hearts of men and your poetical appreciation of the beauties of nature” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answd / July 1, 1908”

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

June 27 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Augusta M.D. Ogden in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. Ogden: / It is a great pleasure to me to hear that I am missed. I could not want a pleasanter compliment. Last autumn when the panic came I tried to stop the building of this house, my idea being to get a house in Tuxedo again; but the contracts had all been signed & I had to go on to a finish—very much to my regret. However, the matter has turned out well. I saw this region & this house for the first time ten days ago, & am already infatuated with both. There are no hot days; & as for the house, I like it better than any I have ever lived in. I shan’t leave it any more. It is a better winter house than the New York one, therefore I shall give up the New York one & stay here permanently. I was afraid my daughter Clara might not like this arrangement, but she has cabled her approval from London.

I was vindictively sorry to have to miss the Fitz Simons [sic Fitz-Simon] wedding, but I could not get away at that time.

With love & all good wishes to you & yours, ... [MTP]. Note: See June 5 for details on the wedding, which took place on June 24.

On or after June 27 Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to an unidentified person.

“Mr. Clemens’s permission is not sufficient. By the enclosed letter you will see that the publishers are most unwilling, which Mr. Clemens regrets. Mr. Clemens wants them to visit him here when next they come to America as he does not expect to be in N.Y. anymore to live” [MTP].

Phillip Nichols Sunderland wrote to Sam.

Dear Sir:—

Having been dumb in your presence on the occasion of the memorable visit to your house to-day, I feel constrained to express to you, in some measure, our feeling of gratitude.

It has been an interesting year to us all, and from the time that Mr. Lounsbury began to shoot up the ledges last June, every man of us has felt a personal pride in the fact that he was working for you. Having enjoyed the privilege of doing our best for you, and hoping that you would be pleased with the result, you must know that it was a supreme satisfaction to go there and see you in your house, and to have you tell us that you liked it.

It has all been a most unusual and a most delightful experience [MTP]. Note: Phillip was the son of William Webb Sunderland, a three-generation family of contractors. Harry A. Lounsbury was a Redding man who aided in the construction.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mr. & Mrs. Littleton, Judge & Mrs. Moreau" [MTP: IVL TS 54].

Sam's new guestbook contains entries for the following:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Elizabeth Richards Moreau	-----	June 27
J. T. Moreau (Judge)	-----	" "
Maud Littleton	2 nd st. & 5 th Ave New York	" "
Martin W. Littleton	" " " " " " " "	" "

Note: the original guestbook was "installed" on June 27. On Dec. 28 Sam transcribed most of the entries in the original guestbook from June 27 to Dec. 26 into the "new" guestbook, a Christmas gift from Mary B. Rogers..

June 28 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick.

"Dorothy dear, bring with you a doll about 8 inches long—Paine's little daughter Frances will fetch a doll when she comes up the hill to visit you, & you and she can have a fine domestic time together./ With lots of love" [MTP; MTAq 181]. Note: Frances Paine was a younger sister to Louise Paine.

June 29 Monday – Sam and Albert Bigelow Paine left Redding and traveled to Boston, where they took rooms at the Touraine Hotel. Before they left, Paine wrote a letter for Sam to Dorothy Quick, then followed it with a telegram and another letter. The first letter:

Mr Clemens asks me to write a line to you to say that we expect to leave here Thursday morning (8 am), for Redding, Mr Clemens's new home. We shall reach South Norwalk in time to catch the same train that you would take, if you left N.Y. (Grand Central Station) at 12:03. Mr Clemens hopes that you will do this & bring your mother along, as it will be quite hard for him to come to the Grand Central, as was his first plan, and as Miss Lyon has no doubt written you. Now, if for any reason you cannot take the 12:00 train, or if your mother can't come through with you, then please write first as soon as you get this and say just what you can do. You can write to Mr Clemens at this Hotel [Hotel Touraine, Boston] & he will get it, if you write at once & put on a special stamp.

I shall also telegraph you tonight that I have written you about coming. Of course this letter takes the place of anything that Miss Lyon may have written or telephoned you, as we left her this morning early & did not change our plans until we got started.

Remember, the train that leaves the Grand Central at 12:03 for So Norwalk will meet our train there—that is, we will be waiting for you, there & all go to Redding together, & your mother is going to bring you & spend a day or two, if she can— / Yours truly / A B Paine [MTP].

Then the telegram: "Have written you about Visit Please wait for letter / S. L. Clemens" [MTP].

And finally the third communication, a letter, repeating the first, for reasons Paine explained:

Mr Clemens has changed his mind about his return from Boston & asks me to say that he will leave here at eight o'clock Thursday morning & will reach South Norwalk in time to meet the train that leaves New York at 12:03 (noon) He hopes you will take that train, with your mother, & come to S. Norwalk, when you will change & take the Redding train. I am with Mr Clemens & we will be on the platform waiting for you & then we will all go up to Redding together—I wrote a letter a while ago, like this, to you, but I'm afraid I forgot to put on the name of your hotel, so am writing again. I have also sent a telegram to you to "wait for a letter."

Remember, you are to take the 12:03 train from the Grand Central, for Redding, via South Norwalk Conn. & we will meet you at the latter place, & your mother is to come for a day or two, if she can spare the time.

Write as soon as you get this & put on a spl stamp. Write to Mr Clemens, here c/o Touraine / Yours ever / A B Paine [MTP]. Note: evidently Dorothy could not make connections, but wrote she could come on Wednesday, July 8. See July 2 from Quick.

On this first day in Boston, Sam went to Dorothy Sturgis' house but found no one at home [July 5 to Sturgis].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Dorothy Harvey, Miss Martin" [MTP: IVL TS 54]. Note: Hellen Elizabeth Martin.

James M. Dodge for Link-Belt Co., Phila. wrote to Sam enclosing photographs (one remains in file) for him to enjoy again [MTP].

June 30 Tuesday – In the morning, Sam and Paine traveled to Portsmouth, N.H. for the dedication of the Thomas Bailey Aldrich Memorial Museum, an event staged by Lillian Aldrich.

The New York Times, July 1, p. 16 covered the event:

MEMORIAL TO T. B. ALDRICH

Notable Speakers at Opening of Poet's Home as Museum.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., June 30.—A large gathering of distinguished persons, representatives of many walks of life, came to this city today to do honor to the memory of Thomas Bailey Aldrich, the poet, by assisting in the exercises held in connection with the dedication and opening of the poet's former home as a memorial museum.

Mayor Wallace Hackett of Portsmouth, President of the Thomas Bailey Aldrich Memorial Association, presided over the exercises, which had been arranged under the direction of Major Talbot Aldrich, son of the poet.

Prominent among those who took part in the literary exercises were Gov. Curtis Guild, Jr., of Massachusetts, Hamilton Wright Mabie, Richard Watson Gilder, and Samuel L. Clemens ("Mark Twain") of New York, and Thomas Nelson Page of Washington, D. C., fellow authors and friends of Mr. Aldrich.

Sam's A.D. of July 3, 1908 reflected on this day and criticized placing the museum in "that decayed town," where few would visit:

Last Monday, Albert Bigelow Paine personally conducted me to Boston, and the next day to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, to assist at the dedication of the Thomas Bailey Aldrich Memorial Museum. ...

The justification for an Aldrich Memorial Museum for pilgrims to visit and hallow with their homage may exist, but to me it seems doubtful. Aldrich was never widely known; his books never attained to a wide circulation; his prose was diffuse, self-conscious and barren of distinction in the matter of style; his fame as a writer of prose is not considerable; his fame as a writer of verse is also very limited, but as such as it is it is a matter to be proud of. It is based not upon his output of poetry as a whole but upon half a dozen small poems which are not surpassed in our language for exquisite grace and beauty and finish. These gems are known and admired and loved by the one person in ten thousand who is capable of appreciating them at their just value [Neider 358; Gribben 16]. Note: Hill writes: "Mrs. Aldrich earned five days of spectacular venom for her pretentious but miserly behavior at her husband's memorial (July 3, 4, 7, 8, and 9)" [209].

MTHL 2: 831n2 gives more detail of the dedication:

At the time, on the stage of the Opera House, Howells had murmured to Clemens that Aldrich would have treated the whole affair as an old-time minstrel show. Clemens further said: "Howells's speech [concerning his relations with Aldrich on the staff of the Atlantic] was brief, and naturally, and necessarily felicitously, worded, for fine thought and perfect wording are a natural gift with Howells and he had it by heart and delivered it well; but he read his poem from manuscript. He did it gracefully and well, then added it to the pile and came back to his seat by my side, glad it was over and looking like a pardoned convict. Then I abolished my prepared and vaguely and ineffectually memorized solemnities and finished the day's performance with twelve minutes of lawless and unconfined and desecrating nonsense."

Paine writes of an exchange with J.T. Trowbridge after the ceremonies:

Outside, when the services were ended, the venerable juvenile writer, J. T. Trowbridge, came up to Clemens with extended hand. Clemens said: "Trowbridge, are you still alive? You must be a thousand years old. Why, I listened to your stories while I was being rocked in the cradle." Trowbridge said:

"Mark, there's some mistake. My earliest infant smile was awakened with one of your jokes."

They stood side by side against a fence in the blazing sun and were photographed — an interesting picture [MTB 1456].

In the evening after the event, Sam and Paine returned to the Hotel Touraine in Boston [July 5 to Sturgis; MTB 1456]. Note: Sam wrote he spent three nights at the hotel.

George H. Davis, Jr. wrote to send Sam a picture taken at the Aldrich Memorial [MTP]. Note: IVL on the note: "Dear Sir: / In Mr. Clemens' absence I wish to thank you for the photograph made of Mr. Trowbridge and himself at Portsmouth / Very truly"

Ernest C. Hales wrote from NYC to Sam after speaking to him in the morning on the North Station Boston. Hales related asking for his autograph years before in London, and receiving instead a letter, which was his prized possession [MTP].

July — Sometime during the month a lawn party was held by the Mark Twain Library Association at Harry A. Lounsbury's home. Another party at the same location was held in August [MT Library minutes copied by Tenney, Nov. 15, 1981].

Amo Umbstaetter and Elizabeth Atwood wrote from Lovell, Maine to thank Sam for his letter and autographs. Signed, "Your little friends" [MTP].

July 1 Wednesday — Sam and Albert B. Paine were still in Boston at the Hotel Touraine, staying the third night there [July 5 to Sturgis]. According to Paine:

Clemens did not wish to hurry in the summer heat, and we remained another day quietly sight-seeing, and driving around and around Commonwealth Avenue in a victoria in the cool of the evening. Once, remembering Aldrich, he said:

"I was just planning Tom Sawyer when he was beginning the 'Story of a Bad Boy'. When I heard that he was writing that I thought of giving up mine, but Aldrich insisted that it would be a foolish thing to do. He thought my Missouri boy could not by any chance conflict with his boy of New England, and of course he was right."

He spoke of how great literary minds usually came along in company. He said:

"Now and then, on the stream of time, small gobs of that thing which we call genius drift down, and a few of these lodge at some particular point, and others collect about them and make a sort of intellectual island — a towhead, as they say on the river — such an accumulation of intellect we call a group, or school, and name it.

“Thirty years ago there was the Cambridge group. Now there’s been still another, which included Aldrich and Howells and Stedman and Cable. It will soon be gone. I suppose they will have to name it by and by.”

He pointed out houses here and there of people he had known and visited in other days. The driver was very anxious to go farther, to other and more distinguished sights. Clemens mildly but firmly refused any variation of the program, and so we kept on driving around and around the shaded loop of Beacon Street until dusk fell and the lights began to twinkle among the trees [MTB 1456-7].

July 2 Thursday – Sam and Albert B. Paine left Boston at 8 a.m. for N.Y. [June 29 and July 2 to Quick]. Later, in Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Jean.

Dear Jean I am disappointed, distressed, & low-spirited, for that dream of yours & mine has come to nothing. That house turns out to be a poor trifling thing, like the rest of the ancient farmhouses in this region, it has no room in it. Paine told me all about it on the way home to-day; & Miss Lyon thinks she told me all about it earlier, but I suppose it went out of my worn-out head, as everything does. I am so sorry. I wish I could situate you exactly to your liking, dear child, how gladly I would do it. And I wish I could take your malady, & rid you of it for always. I wish your mother were here; she could help us.

I will not try to write any more. I love you dear, dear, dearly, & I am so sorry, so sorry. What can I do? / Father [MTP]. Note: The “dream” had been for Jean to stay in a nearby house to Sam.

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick in Atlantic City.

You dear Dorothy, I got your latest letter in Boston last night, & was ever & ever so glad that you & your mother can come to us here on next Wednesday, July 8. You will be very welcome.

And now I must tell you the only & only train to come by: it leaves the Grand Central at 4.15 p.m. & comes straight to Redding without change of cars.

It has a Pullman car, but one must apply for seats a day or two beforehand.

Miss Lyons expects to be in New York the 8th, & she will come up in that train.

I hope your mother will spare you to us a whole week, as she did in Tuxedo that time. When she sees this place she will realize that it will be healthy for you.

I’ll be glad when you come! / Lovingly [MTP; MTAg 185].

Lilian W. Aldrich wrote her gratitude for Clemens’ “tribute of friendship” for her late husband [MTP].

A.B. Smith for New York, New Haven and Hartford RR wrote to Sam. “Referring to your letter of the 24 ult., introducing your Secretary, Miss Lyons, to Mr. Call, then Gen’l Agent at Grand Central Station, requesting that New York and Pittsfield Express trains #232 and #245 make stop at Redding on signal for New York Passengers.” It was arranged for the #232 but could not be for the #245 [MTP].

July 3 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to John M. Howells, who had designed Sam’s new home in Redding.

Dear John: / You have set up a charming Italian villa here & made it look native & at home among these Yankee woods & hills. It is a fine feat. It is a shapely & stately & handsome house, & grows more & more impressive & satisfying and beautiful the more I enlarge my acquaintance with it. I am speaking of its outside. Inside it is sane,—a compliment which cannot be applied to any other Italian villa, I suppose. The distribution of the rooms is rational, no space is wasted, all space is profitably utilized. It has four times as much useful & usable room in it as was findable in that East Florentine villa of ours, although that one was 200 feet long, 60 feet wide, 3 stories high, and & had a cellar under the whole silly mess. You couldn’t even get to one bedroom without passing through somebody else’s; & it had only 3 good bedrooms in it.

All of our visitors are as delighted with the house as I am. Go on, John. Introduce the American-Italian villa, & spread it over the land. It is the ideal house, the ideal home. / Affectionately ... [MTP].

Sam's A.D. for this date dealt with "spectacular venom" (Hill 209) against Lillian Aldrich for the June 30 Memorial of her late husband, which Sam attended. See June 30 entry.

Ebenezer J. Hill, Congressman on the Committee on Ways and Means, wrote to Sam. "I am in receipt of a communication from the Post Office Department under date of June 30th stating that Rural Route No. 41 will be extended so as to serve you at your residence...effective from and after July 15, 1908" [MTP].

N.J. Lee for the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad wrote to Sam, repeating the July 2 from A.B. Smith of the railroad and advising the #232 would begin stopping at Redding on July 6 [MTP].

George M. Robinson wrote from NYC to Sam about Clara's fall and winter tour; he also had a photo of Clara and Miss Marie Nichols to deliver to Clemens and "give him a detailed account of our trip to London" [MTP]. Note: Robinson was Clara's tour manager.

July 4 Saturday – Sam's A.D. for this date continued to focus with "spectacular venom" (Hill 209) against Lillian Aldrich for the June 30 Memorial of her late husband, which Sam attended.

Harper's Weekly ran an anonymous article, "Mark Twain's New Home at Redding," p. 24, 29. Tenney: "On the purchase of the land, building of the house, and the neighbors. Illustrated with photographs of the house, local scenes, and MT playing billiards with Albert Bigelow Paine" [45].

July 5 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam began a letter to Dorothy Sturgis which he mislaid, found and finished on July 14. The July 5 portion:

Sunday noon.

Dear Dorothy, I was not in Boston much, but I slept there 3 nights at the Touraine. I went to your house the first day—not really expecting to find any one there, but hoping to be pleasantly mistaken as to that. The weather is divine here, to-day & I wish we had some angel-fishes with us to enjoy it. We have had visits from two, & another is coming day after tomorrow. Meantime Mr. Paine comes every day & plays billiards, & Ashcroft comes up for the week-ends. I may stay here all the winter, but I suppose I shall keep the New York house. But I shan't be there much. This place is pleasanter.

Cohasset, if I remember rightly, is in Michigan—or maybe India, or around those places somewhere. I will inquire, or send this letter to Beacon street when I finish it tomorrow.

The billiard room in this house is Aquarium head-quarters, & on its walls hang the framed photographs of 6 of the 12 members—yours among the 6; but it is not a good picture at all, & I think you must send me a better one. I shall soon have all the 12. However, it can very well wait until you come here. In time I hope to have all the beloved dozen photographed here on the premises [MTP].

John Brown, Jr. ("Jock") wrote to Sam, "pleased and proud" to have rec'd Sam's letter of June 20. His son was now sixteen, daughter fifteen, and he thought his son (also Jock) was "in character & mind like my father" [MTP].

Alice Von Versen wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr Clemens / I am going to ask you to help me in the International popular Art Exhibition which takes place next year in Berlin. They have asked me to take charge of the American exhibit. What I want you to do is to give me the name of some lady in New York who would be willing to receive all the artists sent for this Exhibition & have them forwarded to Europe; of the Lyceum Club has [illegible word] perhaps some member of it would do this... [MTP]. Note: MT wrote in the margin of the first page, "Hofrath von Reuvers" and "J. Borden Harriman"

July 6 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Collier's Weekly.

Hon. Collier Weekly which furnish Japanese Schoolboy to public not often enough, when is his book coming out? I shall be obliged if you will send me the earliest copy, or at least the next earliest. That Boy is the dearest & sweetest & frankest & wisest & funniest & delightfulest & lovablest creation that has been added to our literature for a long time. I think he is a permanency, & I hope so, too. / Truly yours [MTP]. Note: see Mar. 8, 1909 to Wallace Irwin (1875-1959; pseud. "Hashimoto Togo"), author of Letters of a Japanese Schoolboy, which first ran in Collier's Weekly in installments (1908-1909) and later became a book. See Gribben 154, 347.

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam to James A. Renwick, owner of 21 Fifth Ave. NYC.

Mr Clemens directs me to inform you that he does not expect to be able to renew the lease of the house, no 21 Fifth avenue for another year but that he would like to retain his tenancy of it after Sept. 30th next, by the month or by the quarter.

When Miss Clemens returns from Europe in the late autumn, Mr Clemens will be able to decide whether he will need the house for a further period, but in the meantime, he would like to know that it is agreeable to you that he shall return it subject to a month's or a quarter's notice by either party, as you may elect [MTP]. Note: Isabel Lyon revised this draft, which is in the file for the Renwick to MT of 7 July.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

July 7 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer.

I was wondering what was become of you, you dear little angel-fish, & was very glad to find out by your letter, which came an hour or two ago. I hoped & believed I should hear from you before very long. My fishes are good & faithful correspondents. There are 12 of them, & two days seldom go by without a letter from one or another of them. Yesterday I answered letters from Dorothy Harvey, Dorothy Quick & Dorothy Sturgis. I watch the mails, for the Aquarium is one of my life's chiefest interests.

The fishes are as good as they can be, & they come & see me whenever they can. The first to come, when I opened this new house among the hills & the woods, were Dorothy Harvey & Louise Paine; they stayed a week & said they enjoyed it. I know I did.

Dorothy Quick will arrive with her mother day after tomorrow & stay a week. Irene Gerken expects to come before long; Francesca Nunnally will come when she lands from Europe Sept. 21; Helen Allen, (Bermuda), is coming in December, & her mother too, I hope. And I hope you & your mother will come when you return home. The English member (Dorothy Butes) expects to come over before the summer is ended. The others are coming as opportunity offers.

I like the new house so well that I am likely to remain here all the winter. We are on high ground & it is always cool, for we get all the breezes. All about are richly wooded hills, & only half a dozen houses in sight. There are no sounds but the singing of the birds, so it is very quiet & peaceful.

We spend our days in the loggia, which opens out from the living-room & has 8 tall arches & they frame the scenery and make 8 pictures of it. It is tile-paved, & the fishes play diablo & other violent games in it. I think I will call it the Fish-Market, for I built it for the fishes.

The billiard-room is Aquarium headquarters, & the angel-fishes are in command there. Their framed photographs hang on the walls, & yours looks very sweet there.

Half a mile from the house there is a deep little gorge spawned by an antique stone bridge with a single arch under it. I am going to stop up the arch & make the water flow over the bridge & make a cataract, to be called the Aquarium cataract. The arrested water will make a fine pool above the bridge, & the children can skate there in winter. My house is named "Innocence at Home," & it is the angel-fishes that are to furnish the innocence though the public don't know that. It isn't the public's affair. Please remember me to your mother. / With lots of love to you, dear— / SLC [MTP; MTAq 185-6]. Note: this is a reply to a non-extant from Blackmer; also the three letters Clemens mentioned to other angelfish are also not extant.

Sam also wrote to Margery Hamilton Clinton in Glen Cove, Long Island, N.Y.

Dear Miss Marjorie: / Won't you run up here July 18th for the week-end & a day or two longer if you can?

I am asking Miss Lucia Hull to do the same, so that you will have comradeship in addition to Miss Lyon & me.

I hope to get both of you, but will compromise on one if I can't have two.

You will find it cool & comfortable here.

The Express, with Pullman car, leaves the Grand Central at 1.27 p.m. (Saturdays) & at 4.15 p.m on the other weekdays, & fetches you to Redding station in an hour & a half without change of cars.

There is a morning-express, too, at 9 a.m.

With hopes for the best, / Affectionately, ... [MTP]. Note: Sam's guestbook shows 21 year old Margery there from July 18 to 24.

Sam's A.D. for this date continued to focus with "spectacular venom" (Hill 209) against Lillian Aldrich for the June 30 Memorial of her late husband, which Sam attended. Sam also referred to Bayard Taylor's translation of Faust. A Tragedy. "Clemens referred to Taylor as the poet 'who made the best of all English translations of Goethe's 'Faust'" [Gribben 264]. Sam also remarked in his A.D. that "Bedouin Love-Song" was one of only two of Taylor's poems that were still remembered, "the tremendously inspiring love song of an Arab lover to his sweetheart; and "The Song of the Camp" (poem), "about the Scotch soldiers singing 'Annie Laurie' in the trenches before Sebastopol" [687, 688].

Edward Verrall Lucas (1868-1938), popular English writer of over 100 books (aka E.D. Ward), wrote from London to Sam. Lucas provided extensive content for Punch.

Dear Mr Clemens in a collection of stories for boys entitled Runaways & Castaways I very much want to include two chapters from Tom Sawyer describing how the three boys run to the island & pretend to be Indians. Your English publishers said that I might make the inclusion in our edition; but they cannot of course give permission for America where the book would be issued by the Macmillan Co. What do you think? / Believe me yours faithfully / E.V. Lucas [MTP]. Note: IVL: "The Harpers couldn't grant the permission, because they have withheld it from a thousand others.." On another sheet also by IVL: "Mr. Clemens's permission is not sufficient. By the enclosed letter you will see that the publishers are most unwilling, which Mr. Clemens regrets. Mr Clemens wants them to visit him here when next they come to America, as he does not expect to be in N.Y. any more to live. Also not in the MTP file: "see letter to 'dear Lucy' 20 July 1908 for dating of year."

Zoheth S. Freeman for Merchants National Bank wrote to Isabel Lyon (though catalogued to Clemens), regarding letter of credit for Clara Clemens [MTP].

James A. Renwick wrote to Sam, acknowledging receipt of $291.67 for July rent of the Fifth ave. house and his July 6 letter (see entry). "In regard to your inquiry about the lease I want time to consider your proposition & submit it to Mrs Whittingham who jointly owns this property with me" [MTP].

R.A.S. Wade wrote from Los Angeles, Calif. to ask Sam for his help in publishing a poem. He enclosed a sample of his writing [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Answrd July 15 08"

July 8 Wednesday – Sam's guestbook has the following entries (also noted in IVL TS 54):

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Frederick Leigh	New York City	July 8-9	Staff of Harper & Bros.
F.A. Duneka	" " "	" "8-9

Note: Major Frederick Leigh was Treasurer of Harper's.

William Dean Howells, in Kittery Point, Maine, wrote to Sam.

I am sending a huge mass of your letters to you for Paine, because I am vague as to their going direct to him, after your doubts of last winter. I have written him saying merely that I think it best all round that you should see them first. You will note that for some reason I had got them ready to send you two years ago at Dublin.

That was beautiful of you to write John of your pleasure in his house. I believe I would rather have such a letter than the most perfect villa.

I have been thinking how Aldrich would have enjoyed that thing the other day, and what fun he would have got out of us poor dodderers. How old is Col. Higginson anyway? A thousand? He made you look young and made me feel so. / Yours ever ... [MTHL 2: 830]. Note: Thomas Wentworth Higginson was 85.

Sam's A.D. for this date continued to focus with "spectacular venom" (Hill 209) against Lillian Aldrich for the June 30 Memorial of her late husband, which Sam attended.

July 9 Thursday – Sam's A.D. for this date continued to focus with "spectacular venom" (Hill 209) against Lillian Aldrich for the June 30 Memorial of her late husband, which Sam attended.

Sarah S. Collier (Mrs. Robert J. Collier) wrote from Racquette Lake in the Adirondacks, N.Y. to thank Sam for his invitation to stay with him, "but I am settled here for the summer, and don't expect to leave till some time in September" [MTP].

July 10 Friday – Sam's guestbook has the following entries (also noted in IVL TS 54):

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Mrs. Quick	Plainfield, N.J.	July 10-17	Remained until
Dorothy Quick M.A.	" " "	" " " -17	July 18
Frances Paine	Redding, Conn.	" " " -17

William Henry Watts wrote from Gloster, England to send Sam some "relics of old Tewksbury"—a horseshoe "on the track of the battle of Ixby of 1471," and "The smaller pipe bowls are Elizabethan and Jacobean" of around 1643 [MTP]. Note: see Sam's reply on Aug. 15.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

July 11 Saturday – The New York Times, "Topics of the Week," p. BR385, led off with the following paragraph about Elinor Glyn and Mark Twain:

ELINOR GLYN'S decision, after carefully sifting the evidence, that Mark Twain is our most distinguished citizen, is valuable. It helps to adjust our appreciation of contemporary genius. Mrs. Glyn has a report, written by herself from memory, of some private remarks by Mr. Clemens, which she is going to print in the future. She might better print it now, as Mark would not mind, and what he says is generally timely, and belongs particularly to the moment of its utterance. But Mark has already placed her transcription of his words in the class with "approximations, synopsized speeches, translated poems, artificial flowers, and chromos." Nevertheless she thinks that his eyes indicate hidden beauties of character. He impressed her more favorably than President Roosevelt did, who she thinks, might have read "Three Weeks" and not liked it. This would indicate the possession of a "bourgeois soul." Mrs. Glyn, because of one silly, overwrought book, is now on the top wave of popularity, so far as interviews, newspaper portraiture, and cable dispatches signify popularity.

She is the subject of common talk. Yet her first work, "The Visits of Elizabeth," a trifle and not of an elevating character, remains her best book, and nothing she has done is of world-wide importance.

"Mark Twain's Pastor: Some Stories of Samuel L. Clemens," ran in the Daily Graphic (London) [Tenney 45].

July 12 Sunday

July 13 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.).

Why, bless your dear heart, you do give a body such a turn! I was expecting a word from you from the Yellowstone Park these two or three days past—& instead, all of a sudden—you appear above my horizon mutilated & in pain! It was very sweet of you to tell me of it first of all your friends, with your own hand. But I wonder you got out of the submerging influence of the ether sufficiently to handle a pencil on the third day. Clara was still torpid & incapable considerably longer than that. I hope to hear you haven't had a backset. If you will come up here I will furnish you plenty of cool weather & the freshest of fresh air to get strong in, & make you very welcome besides.* Tuxedo is lovely, but sometimes the weather has spasms of being warmish there. [in margin: I wish Harry would come too, but the idea of his going anywhere on a visit is not merely unthinkable, it's unimaginable!*

This house was certainly a very pleasant surprise to me, & I was glad I knew nothing of its shape & character & furnishing & situations until I saw it three & a half weeks ago. It is a home—unquestionably a home. I have lived in only one other house which was able to produce in me the deep feeling inspired by that word; that was the Hartford home. I have the New York house for 14 months longer, but I do not wish to see it again; it was crude & rude, & its too pronounced & quarrelsome colors broke the repose of my spirit & kept me privately cursing & swearing all the time, even Sundays. I am negotiating a return of the property to its owner, after Clara shall have come home in October & consented. It is a good house in many ways, but I don't expect to see it again. This is the place for me, my dear!

I have three neighbors within walking distance—a mile & a half, & I am good for that, after my long tramps up & down Fifth avenue to show my clothes. Half a dozen other friends live 5 or 6 miles from me, & they can easily drive over & see me & lunch with me, & they will do it. And I will lunch with them; but there are to be no dinners on either hand, & no gadding around at night, when I ought to be at home playing billiards. It isn't lonesome here, & I don't intend that it ever shall be. We have two kinds of visitors—week-enders & whole-weekers, for this place is handier to New York than is even Tuxedo. The friends come & go, right along—laps & slams—the new visitor getting into the old visitor's bed before it is cold. One went away this morning; three came last Friday & will remain until next Friday, when Miss Marjorie Clinton will arrive—& Miss Lucia Hull too, I hope, though she hasn't returned a Yes yet, & is probably away from Tuxedo.

We have good times, dear. Sunday services regular. We didn't finish billiards, Saturday night, until 3 o'clock yesterday morning.

These statistics, these particulars, these informations, unto my dearest niece, along with my love—
Uncle Mark.

Read this & grit your teeth, Mariechen dear. Yesterday you were sending me that cunning post-card picture [not extant?] of a brother of mine, with the unrighteous purpose of "taking me down a peg"—as you slangers phrase it—& this morning comes this nice buttery card from a just & judicious shipmatess, & antidotally sets my self-complacency up again, a whole peg higher than it was before! Grit your teeth & try again—maybe you'll score next time. Henry will sail at 10 tomorrow, & I am tied up & out of luck. / With love— / Uncle Mark [MTP]. Note: the guest who left this morning may have been George Robinson, an overnight stay not entered in the guestbook, but mentioned in the July 18 to Clara; the three who came on July 10 and left on July 17 or 18 are shown under July 10.

Katharine I. Harrison wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr. Clemens: / Thank you a thousand times for the lovely photographs which Miss Lyon handed me this morning. They are both fine and I'm delighted to have them. Also for the kind invitation extended me to spend a night at Redding. Please keep this open, for I really and truly want to come, although at present I cannot on account of mother's ill health. I'm glad you have such a beautiful spot to rest in. The heat in the City is intense, but I believe cool weather is in sight. Mr. Rogers is coming to town for a day or two for which I'm mighty glad as the office does not seem right without him.

I'll forward that picture to Mr. Lancaster, but between you and me and the lamp post, I think my two are the best.

Again thanking you for the pictures and with best wishes believe me / Most sincerely...[MTP].

Claude H. Miller for Country Life in America (a section of Doubleday) wrote to Sam, interested in seeing his home and getting a few photos and an interview [MTP]. Note: IVL: "The thing for him to do is to send a very competent man up here who will take my view & his own too. Couldn't he sent that stenographer who came once in New York"

Joe Twichell wrote twice to Sam, from Chester, England.

Dear Mark: / In writing to you in some haste this morning, I forgot to tell you that a man—an English "divine" again—in Edinboro [sic] brought me [a] copy of "A Tramp Abroad," and saying that he was informed that I was the "Harris" of that book, asked me to enrich the volume with my distinguished autograph!! Which, of course, I did. He must have got his information from some one of the American contingent of delegates assembled in the big council.

I have no doubt that they—the Americans—were responsible for my being clothed—as I related—with the glittering distinction of "M.T's pastor" but it shows how you stand in both Gt. Britain and the U.S. It shows too what manner of [illegible word] is required of you as a man advertised to the whole world as a parishioner—with all the term implies.

A poor white Virginia woman whose children I baptized during the Civil War, said to the kids after the benediction, speaking with much severity of tone, "You've always got to be mighty good now!![?]" You are under like compulsion to righteousness; or what becomes of me? I have received a note from Mr. J.Y.W. MacAlister of London, who says that you are his dear friend, begging me to let him see something of me when I am in town. If I have time I think I will give him a call, anyhow to thank him for his courtesy. I much need a treatise on the Rules of Proper Manners for a Satellite—or is it Sattelite as I wrote it first? Harmony and I can't agree on the point, but I am about sure I am right. / Yrs Joe [MTP].

In the second longer letter Joe wrote this day, his sermon at Endinburgh, Scotland was over and off his mind. He asked Twain to send an autographed photo to a man in Edinburgh and talked of being interviewed by the London Daily Graphic. He announced they would sail from London on the S.S. Minnehaha on Aug. 8. "We are on the outlook for Clara, though we are not sure that she is still in the country. We mean to appear to her if she passes our way, or we her's. Love to you dear old Fellow." He also told of being informed of the death of "Uncle Remus," and after his signature, Joe wrote, "I am sad to think that I shall see 'Uncle Remus' no more. I liked him well, and he as your very warm admirer" [MTP].

July 14 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam finished the mislaid July 5 letter to Dorothy Sturgis.

TEN DAYS LATER

It has long been my impression that this letter went to the mail at the time it was written. But that was a mistake. It got mislaid, & had turned up by accident this morning.

To-day is Tuesday. Can't you come next Saturday, Dorothy, & give us a few days? I hope you can. Miss Marjorie Clinton, a highly valued friend of ours, will arrive at 6 that evening, & Ashcroft our favorite male friend will come by that or an earlier time. It isn't a hard journey for you, you are so young. You leave Boston at 8 a.m. (there's a Pullman card) & in 4 hours you reach South Norwalk. There you descend & cross under the tracks to take a train which is waiting and ready for you. It fetches you to Redding in half an hour, & Miss Lyon or I will be waiting for you there with a carriage. The drive is a half-hour, over a country road. Do come, dear—& telegraph or telephone us.

With lots of love— ... [MTP].

In his A.D. Sam ridiculed Norman Hapgood's editorial comments in the July 11 issue of Collier's Weekly [Gribben 154]. He also scalded Theodore Roosevelt in this A.D. on the Brownsville incident. Gribben writes:

Mark Twain evidently depended on the manuscript of Paine's book [Captain Bill McDonald, Texas Ranger. A Story of Frontier Reform (1909)] in arraiging Theodore Roosevelt for mishandling the Brownsville incident (14 July 1908 AD, MTP). "By the testimony of Captain McDonald, Texas Ranger, a man whose character for veracity is well established...the government and its agents acted in a shabby and dishonest and dishonorable way from the beginning to the end" [522].

J.G. Hester wrote from Calgary, Canada to Sam, having delayed writing for 40 years after once meeting him on a train during Clemens' first trip to England, but not knowing who he was [MTP].

George H. Teague wrote from London to Sam, who had given him an autograph the previous year. Teague asked for "a few lines" for his new magazine "The White," shortly to be published in London [MTP].

July 15 Wednesday

July 16 Thursday – Jeanne E. Wier for the Nevada Historical Society wrote to inform Sam that he'd unanimously been given honorary membership in their annual meeting on June 8. She added that she felt RI was the best history of Nevada yet written [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

July 17 Friday – Frank N. Doubleday for Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to Sam that he was sending "some books for your library at Redding." He declined the invitation from Miss Lyon to spend a night but he and the wife were taking a steamer for France next Tuesday. He offered to send their "bang-up photographer," Mr. A.R. Dugmore, to take colored pictures of the Redding house [MTP].

July 18 Saturday – Sam's guestbook shows the following entry (also noted in IVL TS 54):

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Margery Hamilton Clinton	29 (?) East 57 th , New York	July 18-24 (?)	*

* Sam added the following in the Remarks column next to Margery's entry:

Note, Dec. 28. After a day or two of thought upon the matter, I yielded to Margery's wish for a "job," & appointed her Official Plumber of the house—without salary. She pays us a visit whenever she can (she promised this), but if ever she plumbs [illegible word], I well, I don't believe she ever does. In fact sometimes I doubt if she knows how to plumb. But she's a good child & means well

[Sam wrote Margery on July 22 that her "going silenced a most pleasant note in the melody of this house's atmosphere," so his question mark in the date column likely reflects his faulty memory, since by July 22 she had left; if she stayed a week it would have been ca. July 16-22]

In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Clara Clemens in London, England.

Clara dear, the enclosed, from an Italian paper, was forwarded to me by our consul at Palermo. He did the red-penciling himself.

George Robinson came up & spent a day & a night here, & told us all about you & was therefore inexhaustibly interesting. He is fine and lovable. I hope to see more of him.

I do so delight in this home that the thought of ever going back to that crude & tasteless New York barn, even to stay over night, revolts me. I do not wish to live anywhere but here.

I have written Mrs. MacMillan a letter of hearty thanks.

Always your very loving / Marcus [MTP].

July 19 Sunday

July 20 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the July 7 request by Edward Verrall Lucas.

Dear Lucy: / My permission to include the Tom Sawyer extract in your series, you have, straight from the bat, as the worldlings say. My secretary will ask the Harpers to add their permission, & forward it to the Mac Millans or to you.

Love & all good wishes to you & to Punch & that dear little fairy./ Sincerely Yours ... [MTP].

Sam's original guestbook, now in the possession of Kevin Mac Donnell, page 1: Contains the following names headed by July 20, 1908:

S. L. Clemens – “Innocence at Home”

Ada Frances Howard [not in the new guestbook (also noted in IVL TS 54):]

Margery H Clinton

Predating the new guestbook, which Mary B. Rogers gave to Sam for a Christmas present, and which Sam wrote a preface to on Dec. 29, 1908, this original prior log survives dated July 20, 1908, and contains seven pages with Clemens' signature and the signatures of guests, followed by 44 blank pages and the last dozen pages at the back have been torn out. The signed pages were transcribed by Sam into the new guestbook a day or two after receiving it. There are discrepancies between the two guestbooks. Guests for the period July 20 to Dec. 29 were transcribed into the new book by Clemens. Ada Frances Howard was a piano accompanist, likely for Clara Clemens.

Witter Bynner wrote two lines on a postcard from Katahdin Iron Works, Maine: “I hear you’ve moved in. / Congratulations!” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “No answer”

Mrs. Timothy D. Crocker wrote from Geneva, Switzerland to Sam, having read of his Oxford honors and his new home. She referred to their time on the Quaker City [MTP]. Note: see MTL 2: 311n10.

July 21 Tuesday

July 22 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margery H. Clinton at 39 E. 57th N.Y.C.

Miss Clinton—
New York.

Madam: Favor of date 21st rec'd & contents noted. In reply to same would say, place such as desired by you is at your disposal, & will be kept open—at all times, both winter & summer—to be occupied at your convenience, with or without notice of your coming. Desire to call attention to fact that establishment is non-union. Factory hours, 8.30 a.m. to 10 p.m., with reasonable intervals for meals; after 10, over-time allowed, at advance of 20 per cent. Washing done on premises, meals served in room without extra charge. N. B. Tipping not permitted, except in case of Bishop of Benares, & then only when looking after baggage.

Terms & conditions as above stated. Hoping same will meet with approval, & same confirmed by early reply, am

Resp'y
S L. Clemens

Asst. Manager

Dear Miss Margery:

Your going silenced a most pleasant note in the melody of this house's atmosphere. Restore it. Restore it as often as you can. Your presence is a benefaction. One does not have to lie awake trying to think up ways to entertain you & keep you from getting homesick, you cause no anxieties & solitudes, you are as unburdensome as the sunlight & the summer air. Your visit was a great pleasure, a continuous & unbroken pleasure & we want it repeated, & repeated, & repeated.

Affectionately, ... [MTP]. Note: see note in guestbook dated Dec. 28 (in July 18 entry) about Margery wanting a "job" as plumber.

Sam also wrote to William Dean Howells.

Dear Howells— / Thank you once more for introducing me to the incomparable Pink Marsh. I have been reading him again, after this long interval, & my admiration of the book has overflowed all limits, all frontiers. I have personally known each of the characters in the book & can testify that they are all true to the facts, & as exact as if they had been drawn to scale. And how effortless is the limning! it is as if the work did itself, without help of the master's hand.

And for once—just this once—the illustrator is the peer of the writer. The writer flashed a character onto his page in a dozen words, you turn the leaf & there he stands, alive & breathing, with his clothes on & the African odor oozing out of him! What a picture-gallery it is, of instantly recognizable, realizable, unassailable Authentics!

Pink—oh, the shiftless, worthless lovable black darling! Howells, he deserves to live forever. / Mark [MTHL 2: 832].

Note: Pink Marsh was the protagonist in a book by that title (1897) by George Ade; Howells admired Ade's early writing. The illustrator was John Tinney McCutcheon (1870-1949), political cartoonist, known as the "Dean of American Cartoonists." He worked at the Chicago Tribune from 1903 until retirement in 1946. He won the Pulitzer for Cartoons in 1932. See also Gribben p.11 on Ade.

Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Dan Beard ↑	[New York]	July 22
Beatrice Alice Beard	" "	" "

Clemens acquired two cases of Queen Anne whisky. He wrote, "2 cases—24 bot. In 40 days—up to" and then continued with the Aug 31 entry [L-A MS]. Note: see June 8, 1907 for the full list of acquisition dates of whisky, intended as ammunition against Isabel Lyon.

July 23 Thursday – George M. Robinson, Clara's tour manager, wrote to Isabel Lyon c/o Clemens: "Will you kindly send me a check for $75., in accordance with our understanding. I am sending out two thousand circulars with letters enclosed. Will send you a copy of the circular to-morrow. I think it a vast improvement on last year's issue" [MTP].

July 24 Friday – Sam, Ralph Ashcroft, and Zoheth S. Freeman played billiards from 9:30 p.m. till after midnight [July 27 to Quick]. Note: Freeman, at this time Vice-President of Liberty National Bank, N.Y. Along with Jervis Langdon II, and Edward Loomis, Freeman would be an executor to Sam's estate.

Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Mrs. Grace Hill Freeman ("Sheba")	New York	July 24-26
Z.S. Freeman (her property)	" "

John B. Stanchfield wrote from NYC to Sam, feeling that addressing Clemens as “Doctor” did not sound natural.

...my errand in writing was not to comment on your various titles that your ability and fame have won for you, but to say that immediately following our visit at your home [see Aug. 14-15], I am intending with my touring car to run up into the White Mountains, across to Poland Springs, down to Boston, then back home. I have a very comfortable car, the trip leads us each day to first-class hotels where we will have good sleeping accommodations and be otherwise well cared for, and covers about seven days. It is the finest automobile trip in this country and August is the ideal time to take it. I have plenty of room for you and would be charmed to have the pleasure of your company. Does the prospect stir your pulses sufficiently to make you want to go? ...it would give us an opportunity to discuss Butters, Plasmon and hair pins to our hearts' content. ... [MTP].

Note: Henry A. Butters.

July 25 Saturday – Sam sent a brief note to Miss Dorothy Butes, who was sailing home to England: “Goodbye you dear child, and a happy voyage / SL Clemens” [MTAq 188].

Mary Desha wrote from Washington, D.C. anxious to “establish kinship” to Clemens through her great grandmother Katherine Montgomery. A photo of a woman is in the file [MTP]. Note: on the letter, but not by IVL: “ans’d 9/7”

John M. Howells wrote from Onteora Park, NY to Sam.

It was awfully nice of you to really write so kindly about the house—even if somewhat under pressure, and Stokes and I will put it proudly in our archives. / It came just as I had again finished reading the Yankee at K. Arthur’s Court, which I, socialist as I am, think a glorious book. I wish everyone bad to read it—it is such a splendid study in democracy. My father saw me reading it—and took it off to bed with him. Next morning at breakfast he was full of it—“That’s a great book of Clemen’s” he said [MTP].

July 26 Sunday – Jean Clemens’ 28th birthday.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today when the King and Sheba and Zoe [Mr. & Mrs. Zoheth Freeman] were driving and passed a cemetery, Sheba said that the King reverently lifted his hat from his beautiful head and after a moment Sheba reached over and touched his beautiful hand in sympathy.

While they were driving Ashcroft came to my room with me and told me—after questioning me about Paine’s friendship for me—that coming up in the train on Friday Paine sat with him and talked against me. Said that I am ruining my mentality, etc. with drugs, fenascetine—Why I can’t even spell the word [MTP: IVL TS 54-55].

Note: likely referred to here is Phenacetin, an analgesic and antipyretic whose major metabolite is acetaminophen, now rarely used due to its toxicity.

Sam, Ralph Ashcroft, and Zoheth S. Freeman played billiards from 9:30 p.m. till after midnight [July 27 to Quick].

Sam’s original guestbook under this date:

Grace Hill Freeman “Sheba”

Zoheth S. Freeman “~~Prince~~ Consort”

Jenine Coker Gay

Susie Coker

Duncan Gay

Harriet E.G. Whitmore [Kevin Mac Donnell TS 1]. Notes: the Freeman entries were copied to the new guestbook under dates July 24 to 26. All the other names were not transferred to the new book.

July 27 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Dorothy dear, I miss you. It seems a long time since you were here. Louise has been here once, for a few minutes, & we have had a five minutes' glimpse of Frances; Frances [Paine] went back home to her father's house the day you went away.

We have not been lonely, for we have had company almost all the time, & Mr. Paine has come whenever he could, to play billiards. Mr. & Mrs. Freeman & Mr. Ashcroft are here now. On Friday Paine & I played 37 games of 10-point caroms & I beat 24 of them. Yesterday Freeman & Ashcroft & I played 62 games of 3-handed hearts. Freeman got 285 hearts, Ash got 298 & I got 223. It was great fun, my dear. On Friday night & last night we played billiards from 9.30 till past midnight, & shall do the same to-night.

They're all at luncheon, now. We have spent the whole forenoon in the loggia reading & talking & enjoying the wonderful day—with Ashcroft at the orchestrelle much of the time.

"Hearts" will begin in ten minutes from now. So I will go down stairs & be ready.

I send lots & lots of love, to you & my kindest regards to you mother. I think we had good times, those days. / Lovingly ... [MTP; MTAq 188-9 misdates as July 26].

Sam also wrote to Mai H. Coe (Mrs. William Robertson Coe).

Dear Mrs. Coe: / A few days ago a most beautiful picture of you & the children arrived here—from whom or whence I don't know, but I am very glad to have it, anyhow, & am thankful to the sender.

I suppose you are not in New York, now—of course you are not—but by & by you will be, & then you & William & the maid will run up here & pay me a visit, won't you? I shall be very glad if you can & will. The distance is less than two hours, & there are good trains with Pullmans thereto.

With love to you both— / SLC [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mother went to town today, when the Freemans left" [MTP: IVL TS 55].

July 28 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Jean at Eastern Point in Gloucester, Mass.

Dear Jean it is a luxuriously lazy & delightful day; & the sun, & the shade, & the far-spreading green & the sumptuous dense foliage, & the soft blue distances, & the gossiping birds make me stay out doors. With myself for company. Miss Lyon has gone to New York & all of the servants have gone to the woods to gather decorations for the rooms—they do it every morning, of their own accord. Claude [Benchotte] has a rare gift for arranging flowers—I guess he is aunt Sue's equal in this regard.

Yesterday we arranged a dining-table for the birds. It is a shallow cigar box on the end of a stick. The stick projects from Clara's out-door sleeping cage, three feet below one of her windows. Tammany can't get at it, but I reckon she will enjoy wishing she could. [sketch of cat jumping below cigar box to the left of this paragraph]

I am very glad you enjoy sailing. Sixty years ago I think I ranked it above all other pleasures, & enjoyed it above all other pastimes. But I am more different now. I found out, in Bermuda, that my passion for it was gone. Partly, maybe, because I could indulge in it if I wanted to. It was forbidden when I was a boy.

I am doing very very very very little work. I am sorry, but I can't help it—without an effort, & I have ceased from having a liking for efforts. I seem to greatly prefer cards, & billiards, & reading, & smoking, & lying around in the shade. However, I worked 60 years, & if I am ever going to take a holiday it is time I was at it.

Go on with your boating, dear Jean, & have the very best times you can! The pursuit of happiness is the most precious of the liberties granted by the Declaration.

With lots of love & kisses— / Father [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I went to town and to the P.E. vaults with Benares [Ashcroft]" [MTP: IVL TS 55].

Wallis D. Walker, M.D. wrote from Portsmouth, N.H., thanking Sam for successfully launching the Aldrich Memorial and including a "small check" [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Mr. Clemens couldn't allow that"

July 29 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally in London, England.

Dear Francesca—

Your letter arrived to-day with picture of Interlaken. What an architectural transformation! There's nothing of the former Interlaken left but the Jûngfraû.

I am sorry you did not catch my daughter in; & she was sorry, too. She was more fortunate with Dorothy Butes, who found her at home.

You sail Sept. 12, & will reach New York the 20th. So I shall keep the succeeding days open & the guest-room ready for you & your mother, up to the 26th, when a couple of Bermuda friends will arrive. I hope you will occupy the room those several days. I wish I could invite your father, too, but there is only one other good guest-room & it will not be furnished until October, when we give up the New York house.

This place is easier to reach than Tuxedo, there being no river to cross. You will not mind the journey of one hour & 43 minutes. Good train. Pullman car.

With a good deal of love to you, dear, & Kindest regards to your mother— ... [MTP; MTAq 189].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King says that he lives more in an hour here, than he can live in a week any where else" [MTP: IVL TS 55].

William Read wrote from Columbia Falls, Montana to Sam, wondering if Clemens had been the author of "a little newspaper story...clipped from the 'Virginia City Enterprise' and was entitled 'Wind Puddings'". The story of a tramp begging breakfast [MTP].

July 30 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Clara.

I place with this a copy of a letter of today's date which I have just written to Colonel Harvey.

I have given you all letters of mine now obtainable. You have full authority over them. Paine's extracts will be judiciously made but that mass should not exceed the limit of 6,000 words per volume. You will be able—if necessary—to enforce this, by injunction. Decisions of English courts have established the principle that private letters cannot be published without the consent of the writer of them or of his heirs & assigns.

Pond gave a lot of my letters to that bogus relative, Will M. Clemens, but by threat of an injunction I stopped his publisher (Bobbs Merrill) from issuing them. / Lovingly / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Joe Goodman.

Dear Joe: / I have authorized Clara & Miss Lyon to edit & publish a volume or so of my letters—but not in my lifetime. If you have any of my letters will you send them to me so that I can have copies made? They would be returned to you or destroyed, according to your pleasure.

I like this house, Joe. I have occupied it 40 days, & this seems test enough. I am not likely to go back to New York or elsewhere. It is isolated, & not very close to anything & not very easy to get at. But in a way these seeming defects are an advantage. Indeed a very large advantage: in these 40 days no stranger with an axe to grind has called; & so 80 visits—usually of an empty & futile character—have been escaped. I shall stay here, I am sure. I wish you were here & would try it a month or two with me. If you come east, give me a chance, you will not find it dull here.

Clara is in Europe, but will come home in September. Jean goes to Europe in October. / With love / Mark [MTP].

Sam also wrote to George B. Harvey.

Dear Colonel Harvey: / I do not want Paine's biography of me to contain many letters or other original matter of mine—there must be a limit. His book must be a Biography, not an Autobiography: I am preparing the latter myself. His purpose is to merely use extracts, not whole letters, but even in that case I want a limit. And so I ask you to make the limit 6,000 words per volume of his book.

I also ask that Galley-proofs shall be sent to Clara, so that she can edit the extracts, & suppress such parts of them as she is not willing to see printed. / Sincerely Yours ... [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II for Charles J. Langdon wrote from Elmira, NY to advise Sam his father had just paid the taxes on the Genesee Street Property in Buffalo of $766.93, of which one third, $255.64 was Sam's share [MTP].

July 31 Friday – Sam's guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Harriet E.G. Whitmore	Hartford, Conn	) July 31 – Aug 3
Franklin G. Whitmore	" "	)

Note: in the original guestbook, Franklin Whitmore was dated as Aug. 2 [Mac Donnell TS].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The Whitmores and Ashcroft arrived this afternoon" [MTP: IVL TS 55].

Charles J. Hamlin, Boston attorney and president of the Old Colony Club wrote to invite Sam to the annual dinner on Friday, Aug. 28, hoping he would deliver a short address [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Answd"

August – In Redding, Conn. Sam inscribed a photo of him seated (by Underwood & Underwood) with "best wishes" and the month/year to Jeannette Cholmeley-Jones [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of JA to Mrs. Niehaus: "Truly Yours / Mark Twain / To Mrs. Niehaus, / the dear & valued friend of my daughter Jean—with my gratitude. / S.L. Clemens / August, 1908" [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of JA to Etta R. Willson: "Truly Yours / Mark Twain / To / Miss Etta R. Wilson / with the grateful appreciation / of her kindnesses to / my daughter Jean, / S.L. Clemens / August, 1908" [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of JA to Mrs. Frances Serrill Knowles: "Truly Yours Mark Twain / To Mrs. Frances Serrill Knowles with grateful appreciation of her kindnesses to my daughter Jean. S.L. Clemens". Additionally inscribed by Jean Clemens: "To Mrs. Knowles as the emblem of my affection Jean L. Clemens September 1908." On Jan. 8, 1910, after Jean's death, Mrs. Knowles wrote to Sam, "It is very pleasant to me, now, to know that I could be of so much help and comfort to her, the summer spent in Gloucester—we were fond of having her in our home, and as her daily companion" [ABE books, 19th Century Shop, # 1368098226, Oct. 22, 2009]. Note: source gives Mrs. Knowles husband as a physician in Gloucester, Mass.

Sometime during the month a lawn party was held by the Mark Twain Library Association at Harry A. Lounsbury's home. Another party at the same location had been held in July [MT Library minutes copied by Tenney, Nov. 15, 1981].

August 1908 to February 1909 — Sometime during this period Albert I. Frye wrote from Brooklyn, NY to inquire of Sam a "less expensive method to insure copyright" [MTP]. Note: In the file a note by the MTP staff: "Since MLH, Mary L. Howden, is SLC's stenographer from Aug 1908 to Feb 1909, this letter must have been written during that time"; the same note is in several letter files.

August 1 Saturday – Samuel E. Moffett, Sam's nephew and longtime booster, "drowned in the surf off the Jersey beach," while his wife and children (Anita Moffett, 17 and Francis Clemens Moffat, 13) watched from shore. He was 47. At the time of his death he was an editor of Collier's Weekly [MTHHR 651n1; NY Times Aug. 2, 1908 p.1]. Note: The Times gives Normandie-By-The-Sea (now Normandy Beach, N.J. just south of Pt. Pleasant). See Aug. 6 to Emilie R. Rogers. The New York Times reported the tragedy on the front page of its Aug. 2 issue:

EDITOR MOFFETT DIES, STRUGGLING IN SURF

Mark Twain's Nephew a Victim of Apoplexy on High Sea at Seabright.

WIFE SEES HIM GO DOWN

A. Q. W. Tollman, His Brother-in-Law, Plunges in and Drags Him Out, but He is Dead—An Editor of Collier's

Special to The New York Times.

NORMANDIE-BY-THE-SEA, Aug. 1.—Samuel E. Moffett, nephew of Mark Twain, an editor of Collier's Weekly and before that a well-known magazine writer, was taken from the surf here this afternoon dead. Three physicians who tried to resuscitate Mr. Moffett decided that death had been due to apoplexy superinduced by fright and overexertion and not to drowning. His struggles in the water and death were witnessed by his agonized wife.

Mr. Moffett, bringing his wife and two children, Anita, 17, and Francis Clemens, 13, alighted from a train here just before dusk, and the party registered at the Normandie Hotel. Mr. Moffett hurried to the rooms assigned to his party and in a few minutes reappeared in a bathing suit. Throughout the day a gale had been blowing and breakers twenty feet high were crashing in over the beach. Even earlier in the day, when the storm was not so heavy, only a very few swimmers had risked the heavy seas, and when he saw Mr. Moffett arrayed for a bath James Russell, the bathing master of the Normandie, cautioned him against risking his life in the breakers. Mr. Moffett laughed at the warning, remarking to Russell:

"I'll be all right. I'm a fairly strong swimmer and frequently take long swims with my brother-in-law, Albert Tallman." Mr. Tallman was stopping at the hotel, and Russell knew him for a sturdy swimmer.

An instant later Mr. Moffett dashed into the surf. His wife stood on the shore just out of reach of the breaking waves, and gazed admiringly at her husband's powerful overhand strokes by which he forced himself through the water until he had reached the last of the posts supporting the life lines. Then he was seen to stop swimming, grasp the post, and an instant later his voice was borne in over the whistling of the wind, calling for help.

Mrs. Moffett screamed, and John Artson, a life saver, hurried down to the shore. He took in Mr. Moffett's predicament and dived into the water and struck out for him. Against the incoming breakers Artson made but little progress and from the shore Mrs. Moffett saw her husband lose his grip on the post, fall back into the water and sink. He arose again to the surface, and for a moment or two those on the shore saw him struggle to swim in. Then he sank again.

By this time scores of people had rushed down to the bathing pavilion where Mrs. Moffett stood crying for help and almost hysterical. Among these was Mr. Tallman. He realized his brother-in-law's danger, and seeing how little progress Artson was making, seized a life preserver and ran headlong into the surf.

When waist deep he stopped for a moment to adjust the life preserver, and then once again he set out with strong powerful strokes toward his brother-in-law. Supported by the life preserver he made better headway than the life saver, and presently Mrs. Moffett and others on the beach saw him reach Moffett and clasp him around the waist. Then he called to those on the beach to haul in on the rope which dangled from the life preserver.

Both men were pulled ashore quickly. Mrs. Moffett was hysterical by this time and wept and screamed as her husband was stretched out on the beach where Dr. T. T. Goodwin and Dr. L. Denslow, both of New York, and Dr. Jones Reed, of Seabright, who were stopping at the Normandie, worked over Mr. Moffett.

Mr. Moffett had not been in the water more than three or four minutes, but after working over him for half an hour the doctors found themselves unable to resuscitate him. Then they got oxygen and this was administered as a last hope. Meantime, Mrs. Moffett walked back and forth wringing her hands and crying to the physicians to save her husband.

The doctors spared no efforts, but after an hour they determined that their work was in vain. Not a spark of life flickered in the man, and after one last effort the physicians announced that there was no hope of resuscitating him—that he was dead. Then they decided that it was apoplexy that had caused Mr. Moffett's death, as there was no water in his lungs.

Mr. Tallman took exception to this diagnosis, declaring his belief that his brother-in-law had been drowned. He said that Mr. Moffett was a powerful swimmer and corroborated Mr. Moffett's statement to Russell that he had taken long swims with him, but these swims, Mr. Tallman said, had always been made in still water. He said he thought the rough surf not only frightened Mr. Moffett, who was unaccustomed to it, but also weakened him more than he realized, so that he was thoroughly exhausted by the time he reached the post and had not strength enough to cling to it until help came.

The body will be taken back to the dead man's home, in Mount Vernon, tomorrow. Mrs. Moffett and the children are prostrated.

Mr. Moffett was born in St. Louis on Nov. 5, 1860, the son of William A. and Pamela A. (Clemens) Moffett. His mother was a sister of Mark Twain. As a youth he showed a marked tendency toward literary work. In 1881 he entered the University of California, but after spending two years there came East and finished his course at Columbia. The latter university conferred an A.M. upon him in 1902. Soon after his graduation he went back to California and commenced newspaper work. His rise was rapid, and in 1885, he was made chief editorial writer of The San Francisco Evening Post. Mr. Moffett then held various editorial positions in the city, until in 1891 he was sent to Washington as correspondent for The San Francisco Examiner. At the end of two years he went back to San Francisco and served as chief editorial writer for the same paper for four years. Then Mr. Hearst brought him to New York, and he was connected with The Journal for four years.

In 1902 he was made managing editor of The Cosmopolitan, but severed his connection with the Hearst interests in a little over a year after this to become editorial writer for The World. He remained there for two years and then joined Collier's. Recently he had attracted much attention to his department, "What the World Is Doing."

Mr. Moffett was a member of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, the American Economic Association, the American Political Science Association, the American Social Science Association, the National Geographical Society, the American Forestry Association, the Council of the American Association for Harbor Legislation, and the Municipal Art Society. While in college he joined the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity, and was also a member of the City, National Arts, and Reform Clubs of New York.

Among the books published by him were "The Tariff," (1892,) "Chapters on Silver," (1893,) and "Suggestions on Government," (1894.)

Mr. Moffett married Miss Mary E. Mantz of San Jose, Cal., in 1887. He was frequently identified with his distinguished uncle in much of his literary work, and when Mr. Clemens started on his trip around the world in 1894, [sic 1895] Mr. Moffett accompanied him across the Continent as far as San Francisco.

Mary M. Moffett (Mrs. Samuel E. Moffett) sent a telegram from Normandia by the Sea, NJ to Sam: "Your nephew Samuel Moffett drowned this afternoon notify Annie Webster" [MTP].

Emma S. Stilwell wrote from Phila. to Sam claiming to be Samuel Moffett's first teacher outside of his mother and grandmother. Stilwell sent tears and sympathies for the death of Clemens' nephew. She enclosed a poem and followed up with another note after forgetting to enclose the poem [MTP].

August 2 Sunday— In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Charles M. Fairbanks.

Dear Charley— / Will you please entrust temporarily to the hands of the bearer, Mr. W. R. Ashcroft, such of my old letters and ~~original~~ (unpublished) MSS as your mother left in the family's possession, so that he may have copies made of them for me. I have empowered Clara to publish a book of my letters for her bread-&-butter's sake, (after my death.) / Sincerely Yours [MTP].

Sam also sent a telegram to Mary M. Moffett (Mrs. Samuel E. Moffett) (Mrs. Samuel E. Moffett):

“THE FAMILY DEEPLY SYMPATHIZE WITH YOU IN YOUR GREAT BEREAVEMENT. ~~KATY & I WILL ATTEND~~ I SHALL ATTEND THE FUNERAL. / S.L. CLEMENS” [MTP].

Sam’s original guestbook contained an entry for Franklin G. Whitmore; Harriet E.G. Whitmore was on the line above her husband but no date was entered; both were guests this day [Mac Donnell TS 1].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The Whitmores are here and this morning when the King and I were having breakfast on the loggia, a fly pestered the King and he said ‘I’d rather have a rank old prostitute around than one fly’” [MTP: IVL TS 55].

August 3 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

Dear Dorothy: /Good! Then you will be very welcome in September, & your journey from Boston will not be a heavy one. We will tell you how to come, & what trains to take.

And so this is hoping you can come September 18th, & stay till Sept. 25th. Francesca M. A., (Member of the Aquarium) will arrive Sept. 20 or 21st from England. Other guests will arrive on the 26th.

I enclose a photo made a few days ago, in the loggia (where I am writing this[]). The cat is “Tammany,” the pride of the place. You will notice that I have become extraordinarily humpshouldered. The doctors say it will never diminish, but will increase. They say it is due to bad circulation, lack of exercise, & excessive smoking. I do not care. It is a good enough shape, & I like it. / Lovingly ... [MTP; MTAq 197-8].

Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers) wrote to Sam. She was leaving for the mountains later this day but hoped Sam could find his way to Fairview soon [MTHHR 649-50].

W.R. Green wrote in an aged scrawl from St. Louis. Much of the letter is illegible, but recalled old times and his appreciation for Sam’s account of Hannibal days in his Autobiography [MTP].

August 4 Tuesday – Sam went to New York City for the funeral of his nephew, Samuel E. Moffett, and where, per Robert Collier, he wrote to the Accident Insurance Co. which had determined that Moffett did not die from an accident but from natural causes. Moffett held an accidental death policy but had few assets.

Dear Sir

I shall be obliged to you for giving every consideration in your power to the case of my nephew, Samuel G Moffett, who was insured in your company and who died on Sat. Aug. 1st.

I am sure you will do all you can to make things easy for his family [MTP; Aug. 17 to Mary Rogers].

Sam stayed overnight in New York [Aug. 6 to Emilie Rogers]. Note: during the trip for the funeral, Sam later claimed he’d suffered “sunstroke,” but this may have been the beginning of his fatal heart disease. See Dec. 19 to H.H. Rogers.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King and Ashcroft started this morning for Mr. Moffett’s funeral. Last night I couldn’t sleep, so the morning broke with no strength in it. But I dismissed Hobby, paid her in full—so that expense is closed up—and I worked and I lunched with mother and then at 8:30 Benares telephoned me to say that Robert Collier had taken the King and him out to the funeral service at Mount Vernon in a splendid motor car. The heat in the city was intense [MTP: IVL TS 55-56].

S. Reid Spencer wrote from NYC to Sam looking for a copy of 1601, and not finding it anywhere [MTP].

J.M. Turner wrote from Lansing, Iowa about a plan to further channel the Mississippi. He transcribed what appears to be a NYC news article quoting Clemens: “This deepening of the channel of the Mississippi River is an excellent thing,” he said, “but Providence willed that the stream should always be crooked. If fourteen Banks of England were back of the scheme and fourteen more Banks of England back of the original bakers the task of deepening the channel to fourteen feet from Chicago to the Gulf is a hopeless one" [MTP]. Note: IVL for Sam: "I didn't say that. I put it stronger. I said God Almighty tried to do it & didn't succeed; so it isn't for you people to——"

August 5 Wednesday – Sam called on H.H. Rogers' office at 26 Broadway and talked William Robertson Coe into visiting Redding with his wife "later in the season." Later in the day he returned to his Redding home, accompanied by Col. George B. Harvey and David Munro (of the N.A.R.), who stayed over until Aug. 7 [Aug. 6 to Emilie Rogers; IVL TS 56 below].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Col. Harvey and Mr. Munro came home with the King tonight, and the wise Colonel, after reading an article to us, played billiards with the King and D.M. [Munro] played too, and then the Col. And I curled up on the couch to chat in whispers and he gave me advice for the future comfort and entertainment of the King. We have planned for guests for him as late as late September, the Colonel truly says that the novelty of the place hasn't worn off yet, and the lonely early winter days are what will make him gloomy. He mentioned Mr. James and Ingles as men good to know and to invite here [MTP: IVL TS 56].

August 6 Thursday – Paine writes of Sam's reaction to Samuel Moffett's death:

Clemens was fond and proud of his nephew. Returning from the funeral, he was much depressed, and a day or two later became really ill. He was in bed for a few days, resting, he said, after the intense heat of the journey. Then he was about again and proposed billiards as a diversion. We were all alone one very still, warm August afternoon playing, when he suddenly said:

"I feel a little dizzy; I will sit down a moment."

I brought him a glass of water and he seemed to recover, but when he rose and started to play I thought he had a dazed look. He said:

"I have lost my memory. I don't know which is my ball. I don't know what game we are playing."

But immediately this condition passed, and we thought little of it, considering it merely a phase of biliousness due to his recent journey. I have been told since, by eminent practitioners, that it was the first indication of a more serious malady [MTB 1458-9].

Note: See Aug. 9 to Jean and Aug. 12 to Crane. Also, in his Aug. 12 To Emilie Rogers, Sam wrote he was "threatened with a swoon, 10 or 12 days ago, & went to New York a day or two later to attend my nephew's funeral..." which places Paine's above account of Sam being dazed after returning from New York in question; Was there more than one such episode? Or, if only one, it seems more likely that Sam's "swoon" and Paine's account of "dazed" took place sometime between July 31 to Aug. 2.

In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

Dear Mrs. Rogers:

Yes, it is as you say: I am perfectly contented with my new home, perfectly delighted with it; & I realize that I haven't had a real home, until now, since we left the Hartford one 17 years ago. It is a long, long time to be homeless. I can hardly bear to go a mile from this one; that is the reason I haven't been to Fairhaven, though I have longed to go there. It was always lonesome & home-sicky in New York, with Clara & Jean seldom in sight & no guests but 2-hour & 3-hour luncheonites & dinnerites, but is not lonesome here. The friends come & bring a trunk, & stay from two days to eight. Already we have had 21 in the 7 weeks that I have been here, & the guestrooms are fast being taken for August & September. The distance from New York is so easy that the friends do not mind the journey. I wish you & Mr. Rogers had elected to come here for a few weeks' rest, for this is the very quietest place outside the dungeon of St. Peter & St. Paul; no strangers, no crowds, no fashion, only one neighbor within three-quarters of a mile—Miss Lyon's mother. Whereas it ain't so where you are, in the mountains, & of course you can't rest there. I guess the Clam-bake would be a very pleasant thing, with uncle Henry for company, but I shan't be able to go, because friends will arrive on the 26th & 28th to stay several days, & the Clam-bake is to take place on the 25th.

I saw Will Coe at 26 Broadway yesterday, & he has engaged to come with his wife later in the season; & Miss Harrison promised also. I was down there to attend the funeral of my nephew, Samuel E. Moffett, who was drowned in the sight of his little son, & also in sight of his wife. It is the most heart-broken family I have seen in years. Sam left $30,000 or $40,000 accident insurance, but no other property of consequence; & as the body had no water in the lungs, it is claimed that he died not by accident but by apoplexy, a natural disease, brought on by fright caused by the turbulent seas. Robert Collier & I took measures to do what can be done to contest that curious view.

Col. Harvey & David Munro came up with me yesterday to stay overnight, but they like it here & are not going back until tomorrow. This was the place for you; still I am aware that Poland Spring is next best, & I hope you will soon be as well & strong as ever you were.

With love to you both & best wishes, ... [MTHHR 650-1].

Redding neighbors, Miss Ida M. Tarbell & Miss Jeannette Gilder, came to luncheon with Sam, George B. Harvey and David Munro [Aug. 10 to Quick]. Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Jeannette L. Gilder	Redding Ridge	August 6	{The Big Four
Ida M. Tarbell	Easton - -	" "	{
Colonel George Harvey	Deal Beach, N.J.	" " 6-7	{They lunched with us
David A. Munro	Editor North Am. Review	" "	{

Note: none of the above names were in the original guestbook.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Miss Tarbell and Miss Jeanette Gilder were here for luncheon today. Paine came too. It was pleasant company and the King approves of those 2 fine old girls. They love the house with its mellow colorings, its "mouth watering" colorings, as Jeannette Gilder calls it. But the King was only half the King, for he was tired. At dinner he was so silent that several times I spoke to him to see if he were conscious. He dropped like a leaden man on the couch after dinner, and then at the Colonel's suggestion they played and played billiards. I hovered near the room in great anxiety, for I could see that the King was ailing and then I made the game stop and we came up for bed. Just as I was getting in, there came a groan from the King's room, and I sped wrapperless to him to find him staggering and vomiting in the bathroom. It was a terrible experience. I called the Colonel's valet to fetch the Colonel. But all night, after we got the King to bed, I could not sleep, and at every little sound from his room I would go in to find him lying like a sick and restless baby; but he had no fever. Nobody knows what happened to David Munro, but anyway he came into my room in the middle of the night. I think he was drunk, for his pajama coat was open, showing his hairy chest, and he didn't seem to know which way to go in his embarrassment. At a quarter before seven, I heard the King go into David's room and say, "Well I did have a clearing out." And then I went to the King and found him lighting a pipe and feeling as fresh and looking as sweet as a baby. In the afternoon AB told me that the King had a faint spell 10 days ago while they were playing billiards [MTP: IVL TS 56-57].

Hill writes and quotes from Isabel Lyon's diary:

In August 1908 the "sunstroke" that Clemens suffered at the funeral of Samuel Moffett produced in Miss Lyon a response that was distinctly proprietary in its sense of dedication. She wrote in her diary that on August 6, 1908

Thursday evening Col. Harvey and I had a talk about a literary executor for the King and I told him how nearly Paine had called that for himself. Now Col. Harvey is to do the editing of the Biog. Benares [Ashcroft] and I have a moral obligation now in looking after the King. I shall not leave him for an hour unless Benares or another as good is here to look after him, and together we must uphold him in our spiritual arms. The plan was for me to take Jean to Germany, but I must not go away from the King, ever. He is too wonderful [Hill 207-8; MTP IVL TS 58-59]. Note: Lyon wrote this on Aug. 8 referring to Aug. 6; Hill's emendations are removed to display the exact text of IVL's journal.

August 7 Friday – George B. Harvey and David A. Munro ended their 2 day visit [new guestbook].

H.C. Fish for N. Dakota State Historical Soc. wrote from Bismark, N.D. to ask if under date of May 26, 1874 Clemens had checked into the Capitol House in Bismark [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Mr. Clemens was not West at all in 1874.”

Howells & Stokes wrote to bill Sam another $4,000 in favor of William Webb Sunderland, contractor, and to note that the J.B. Colt Co. was owed $513.63 for installation of the gas lighting plant. Total cost of the house, $38,000 [MTP].

August 8 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: The King wandered out from dinner tonight to look at a wonderful sunset and he called Benares and me to look at the mighty show. But we were compelled to stop in the great room to look at the slim beautiful white figure of the King standing in an archway of the loggia, with the hills and gorgeous glow of the sunset as a background. Claude went out to ask him to have some cut up peaches, and when the King turned to come in and saw us still in the big room, he plaintively said, “You can’t see it from there.” So I told him we had halted to see the more beautiful picture of himself. We cut the meal short to go out and sit in the archway and watch the sunset that had for its top a great spray of white thin strip-like clouds, and we watched it until the moon came riding high enough to call the west from the sun to herself. All the time the King talked about astronomy—one of his pet subjects, and he and Benares calculated the distances between the stars—and “light years”, and they talked about air ships and the King said, “Oh, I suppose that a hundred years from now people will be sitting in these very arches to watch the air-ships go by.” A few stars were faintly glimmering away up toward the Zenith, and the King said “The sunset is like some Brobdignagian fire Company that is trying to put out the stars” [MTP: IVL TS 57-58]. Note: for the remainder of IVL’s Aug. 8 entry, see Aug. 6, to which it refers.

Julian Hawthorne wrote from the Cambridge Bldg., NYC to Clemens:

My dear Clemens: — / Why should you be surprised to see me going into mining? You have yourself described how Cecil Rhodes took hold of business, when no one suspected it of him. I have not found a shark on the beach in Australia, but, with a few friends of mind, I have found a silver mine in the Cobalt region up in Canada, and we are developing it with a view to living on our dividends....We shall keep clear of Wall Street, and of all speculation.

Of course, you are rich; but you should consider that it is invidious in a literary man to grow rich from his own profession; and it would allay the feeling against you if it were known that you had made an additional fortune out of silver. Get somebody to read the enclosed prospectus to you, and then act promptly. The stock is sold in bunches of not less than 1000 shares, at a good reduction from face value. We shall close up about the end of September; but I have set my heart on landing you for a purchase.

I am glad to hear that you are a neighbor of my daughter’s up there—which, of course, I could not be if it were my intention to sell you a gold brick.

Drop me a line here, and believe me... [MTP]. Note: IVL wrote on the bottom of the letter for Sam: “I’m not gambling on the mines because I know people sometimes say things about mines that are not true. I used to do it myself when I had mines to sell. But I am gambling on Julian Hawthorne’s integrity & levelheadedness.

August 9 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Gloucester, Mass.

Jean dear, don’t trouble about those financial matters; there will be no occasion for that; the expenses were fair & reasonable, & in any case Miss Lyon will take care of my interests. I knew all about the arrangement when it was made, & not only approved it but helped to make it.

It will be a pity to try to bind George in any way. You might greatly regret it. He should be left quite free. None of us can make plans very far ahead for ourselves, much less for others, & I am particularly opposed to that kind of unwisdom.

The Stanchfields are coming next Friday [Aug. 14], & I am full of anticipations. They will be able to tell me all about your prospects in Germany, which I think will be full of pleasure & interest for you & turn out splendidly successful—which God grant, for all our sakes!

I was gone two days to New York to the funeral; & the shock of the tragedy, & the blistering heat, & the heavy black clothes & the pathetic sight of the broken-hearted family, was a heavy drain upon me & struck me down; but I am getting over it now, & indeed am about as well as I was before I went.

Be happy, dear love, & put all disturbing solitudes away from you, & bury yourself in cheerful books & pleasant thoughts. Oh, yes, dear Jean, dear heart, shut your eyes & your heart to all burden of life, & be happy. / Your loving / Father [MTP]. Note: the guestbook shows a visit on Aug. 14-15 by Mr. & Mrs. John B. Stanchfield, with daughter.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "A quiet lazy day with just Benares, and Hearts. We played by the hour" [MTP: IVL TS 59].

Susan L. Crane wrote to express her "loving sympathy" at the loss of Samuel E. Moffett. She recalled his humanity and kindness to Jean, and also reported the drowning of Ralph Wales. She also reported the return of Charley Langdon on June 14, but seemingly without gain in his health.. She was happy that Clemens found a home he wanted to stay in year around, and said she'd rec'd a letter from Jean, who was enjoying the seaside (in Gloucester, Mass.) [MTP].

Mrs. Kim C. Tabley wrote from St. John, New Brunswick to thank Sam for the autographed copy of "Adam's Diary" [MTP]. Note: Tabley had requested the book on Feb. 17.

August 10 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to George B. Harvey.

To-day I have written as follows
To Clara Clemens in Europe:

1. "By the original understanding with Paine I was to edit the Biography, with power to approve & disapprove with finality. But I have turned that editing over to Col. Harvey, & he has accepted the job.

2. "He is to limit letters of mine, & excerpts from letters of mine (when paragraphed apart from Paine's text) to an aggregate of 10,000 words for the whole Biography."

And I added this, which I hope you will approve, & make it an annex to the editing-powers which you have assumed:

3. "But Paine may sprinkle single & double sentences & brief remarks here & there & yonder IN his text with considerable freedom. (This would help your & Miss Lyon's volumes of "Letters," not hurt them.)

"Paine is proposing several volumes: two or three complete letters (& preferably short ones) in each volume is all I would be willing to allow."

===

Now dear Colonel, if you are agreed, will you please send me a copy of this letter with your O. K. upon it, to be put in the Safe Deposit box? / Yours ever [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick c/o Mrs. D.W. Dow, North Epping, N.H.

Dorothy dear I have been to New York. It was a week ago. I was gone two days, in that sweltering weather, & it brought on a bilious attack. We have no such weather here. I shan't make any more summer trips.

I am sorry about the rabbits, but you can get some more. You still have your bird, so you are not out of luck altogether. I have only Tammany & her kittens, & Miss Lyon & Mr. Ashcroft. But they are all good company. Yesterday we played hearts several hours—at least, 3 of us did. I got 116; Miss Lyon got 185, & Mr. Ashcroft 208. Ashcroft plays the orchestrelle for me a great deal; & he has improved so much that if I am out in the loggia & don't see him I think it is Miss Lyon. And he plays good billiards now. Not as good as Col. Harvey or Mr. Paine, but better than formerly. Col. Harvey has been here, & David Munro of the North American Review, & we had very good times; Miss Ida Tarbell & Miss Jennette [sic] Gilder drove over & lunched with them. Also we have had the Whitmores, & in a day or two John B. Stanchfield & his wife & daughter are coming, & after they go the Freemans are to come for a few days. But Ashcroft is going away tomorrow & I am sorry. I have seen Louise but little; she has been away on several visits; & I have had only a glimpse or two of Frances. Miss Lyon goes to New York to-day, to send up my daughter's furniture & piano—then the house will be complete & nothing more to do.

I miss you Dorothy dear, I wish you were here. Please give my kindest regards to your mother & my love to yourself. / SLC / Curator of the Acquarium [MTP; MTAq 198]. Note: Ida M. Tarbell and Jeannette Gilder were Redding neighbors; Louise and Frances Paine were daughters of Albert Bigelow Paine.

Dr. Robert Hurtin Halsey visited Sam in Redding but did not stay the night [new guestbook; IVL below].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "To New York. Saw Robinson, brought Dr. Halsey home with me" [MTP: IVL TS 59].

Katharine Boland Clemens (Mrs. James Ross Clemens) wrote from S. Dartmouth, Mass. to ask if Sam was coming up their way soon, since they were only "about ten miles" from Mr. Rogers' Fairhaven. She described Salters Point where they were staying, and motoring to Newport. James Ross Clemens would leave St. Louis and travel by auto, taking ten days to arrive there. Just where was Sam's country home? They'd been thinking of moving from St. Louis but hated to give up Jim's practice—could Sam suggest a place "that holds prospects"? She felt he would succeed any place [MTP].

Charles Soby, Cigars, Hartford, wrote to advise Sam they were sending samples of tobacco for him to try and advise them [MTP]. Note: IVL: "The mixture is better than the Havana, & Mr. Clemens believes that the Broad leaf will be best / but none of it was good"

August 11 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn., Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to an unidentified person.

"Mr. Tallman should keep in touch with Mr Robert Collier in order that he may keep what Mr. Collier & Mr Clemens have done in the Accident Insurance matter from going astray.

"Mr. Clemens has refrained as long as he could from troubling you in this matter but he feels that it should not be neglected" [MTP]. Note: this note was to Albert Q.W. Tallman, the brother-in-law of the late Samuel Moffett. See Aug. 18 from Moffett's daughter Anita Moffett to Clemens. Also Aug. 1 news article on the drowning.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Benares left—to be gone until mostly September" [MTP: IVL TS 59].

Elisabeth Marbury wrote a short note to Sam that his letter of the 10th enclosing Mr. Martin's application rec'd. "As arrangements have already been made for Puddnhead Wilson we cannot accede to his request" [MTP].

Thomas Commerford Martin for Electrical World wrote to Sam, enclosing a letter to him from Frank L. Dyer, president of National Phonograph Co. Thomas A. Edison was desirous of making a record of Mark Twain's voice. Martin asked if he might visit Sam to accomplish that [MTP]. Note: IVL on Dyer's letter to Martin: "this is a business matter. Very fond of Mr. Edison but do not want business mixed up with friendship"

Annie Eliot Trumbull wrote to Sam, enclosing a booklet (in file) "Haman A tragedy" in blank verse. She asked him to evaluate it without deception [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Not competent to sit in judgment on a printed tragedy would have to see it on the stage, but glad she let me read it." And "he finds poetry all through—good poetry—fine poetry—& some he read to me"

August 12 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Susan L. Crane.

Dear Aunt Sue: / It was a most moving, a most heart-breaking sight, the spectacle of that stunned & crushed & inconsolable family. I came back here in bad shape, & had a bilious collapse, but I am all right again, though the doctor from New York has given peremptory orders that I am not to stir from here before frost. O, fortunate Sam Moffett! fortunate Livy Clemens doubly fortunate Susy! These swords go through & through my heart, but there is never a moment that I am not glad, for the sake of the dead, that they have escaped.

How Livy would love this place! how her very soul would steep itself thankfully in this peace, this tranquillity, this deep stillness, this dreamy expanse of woodsy hill & valley! You must come, Aunt Sue, & stay with us a real good visit. Since June 26 we have had 21 guests, & they have all liked it & said they would come again. I wish Jervis would run up here when he is in New York.

And Charley too, but—(this in your ear, privately), how can I ask Ida? She has kept back those little heirlooms all those years, & by that conduct she made Livy shed many a tear—which I never expect to either forget or forgive. No, I can't invite her, and so I don't know how to invite Charley. I want him, but I can't put upon him—and upon myself—the discourtesy of not including his wife.

And truly, this is pitiful—I clearly realize it. For God, & God alone, is responsible for whatever Ida or any other person, black or white, pagan or christian, does or says in this silly & villainous life. And so, how can I blame Ida for keeping back the trinkets when she was in no way to blame? Well, in my mind I do not blame her, but only in my heart. That is to say, God blames her, in my heart. I would not like to be as inconsistent as God is. Nor as incandescent.

Jessu but it is a beautiful day here! Come, Aunt Sue! / With love & ever so much love. / † Samuel [MTP].

Sam also wrote to William Dean Howells.

Dear Howells:

Won't you & Mrs. Howells & Mildred come, & give us as many days as you can spare, & examine John's triumph? For to my mind it is a triumph. It is the most satisfactory house I am acquainted with, & the most satisfactorily situated.

But it is no place to work in, because one is outside of it all the time, while the sun & the moon are on duty. Outside of it in the loggia, where the breezes blow & the tall arches divide-up the scenery & frame it.

It's a gastly long distance to come, & I wouldn't travel such a distance to see anything short of a memorial museum, but if you can't come now you can at least come later when you return to New York, for the journey there will be only an hour & a half per express-train. Things are gradually & steadily taking shape inside the house, & Nature is taking care of the outside in her ingenious & wonderful fashion—and she is competent, & asks no help & gets none. I have retired from New York for good, I have retired from labor for good, I have discharged my stenographer, & have entered upon a holiday whose other end is in the cemetery. / Yours ever / Mark [MTHL 2: 832-3]. Note. Josephine Hobby was the stenographer discharged; she had been hired in 1906.

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Dorothy dear, I wrote you a number of days ago, & mailed it to Epping, but I don't think you'll get it, because I couldn't make sure of the address you gave me. If it is Dow, you should write it like this: DOW—not like this [scribbles] (which is the way you wrote it). Don't ever again write a proper name in any but CAPITALS—do you hear?

But you'll never get this, so why should I go on writing? / With lots of love [written sideways on envelope:] You careless little rascal, why don't you write addresses plainer? SLC [MTP; MTAg 199 in part].

Sam also wrote to three Angelfish, one being the above to Dorothy, the other two not extant but referred to in Sam's Aug. 13 to Blackmer. One of these missing two letters was undoubtedly to Dorothy Sturgis, who evidently answered Sam's Aug. 12 in time for him to send a reply on Aug. 15; see entry [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

Dear Mrs. Rogers,—I believe I am the wellest man on the planet to-day, & good for a trip to Fair Haven (which I discussed with the Captain of the New Bedford boat, who pleasantly accosted me in the Grand Central August 5) but the doctor came up from New York day before yesterday, & gave positive orders that I must not stir from here before frost. It is because I was threatened with a swoon, 10 or 12 days ago, & went to New York a day or two later to attend my nephew's funeral & got horribly exhausted by the heat & came back here & had a bilious collapse. In 24 hours I was as sound as a nut again, but nobody believes it but me.

This is a prodigiously satisfactory place, & I am so glad I don't have to go back to the turmoil & rush of New York. The house stands high & the horizons are wide, yet the seclusion is perfect. The nearest public road is half a mile away, so there is nobody to look in, & I don't have to wear clothes if I don't want to. I have been down stairs in night-gown & slippers a couple of hours, & have been photographed in that costume; but I will dress, now, & behave myself.

That doctor had half an idea that there is something the matter with my brain. . . Doctors do know so little & they do charge so much for it. I wish Henry Rogers would come here, & I wish you would come with him. You can't rest in that crowded place, but you could rest here, for sure! I would learn bridge, & entertain you, & rob you.

With love to you both./ Ever yours,... [MTHHR 651-2].

Elisabeth Marbury wrote a short note to ask Sam if he was "willing to allow Mr Colwell a further 6 months extension on A Yankee in King Arthurs Court?" [MTP]. Note: M. Worth Colwell.

August 13 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Helen S. Allen in Bermuda.

To

Helen Allen, M. A. (Member of the Aquarium).

Dear Helen: Don't forget that you are coming here to spend a week with me when you come to New York. Several of the fishes have visited me already, & others are coming later. Just now they are pretty well scattered; & I find by their letters that they are not all amusing themselves in only one monotonous way, but in a healthy variety of ways: you with your regattas & fancy dress parties; Dorothy M. A. & Irene M. A. with sunbathing; Dorothy Quick M. A. with scrambling around on sea & land; Helen of Montreal M. A. with mountain-climbing in Scotland; Boston-Dorothy M. A. with foot-races & swimming-matches in her school-camp far up towards the North Pole (& she wins them, too); Margaret Blackmer M. A., with foregathering with the Indians in South Dakotah. The rest of my little tribe are—somewhere, I don't quite know where, but I shall soon know, for they are loyal & they always write me, sooner or later, & tell me what they are about.

We have good times here in this soundless solitude on the hill-top. The moment I saw the house I was glad I built it; & now I am gladder & gladder all the time, after 8 weeks occupancy. I was not dreaming of living here except in the summer-time—that was before I saw this region & the house, you see—but that is all changed now; I shall stay here winter & summer both, & not go back to New York at all. Miss Lyon is extravagantly fond of the place, & so is Ashcroft. Ashcroft comes up ever[y] Friday & stays over Sunday. All the guests like it. We have had 21 guests since June 26, & lots more have engaged to come. My child, it's as tranquil & contenting as Bermuda. You'll be very welcome here, dear.

With lots of love from Miss Lyon & from me— / S L C./ Curator of the Aquarium [MTP]. Note: for some reason Cooley did not include letters to and from Helen Allen, clearly given the distinction of "Member of the Acquarium" here by Clemens.

Sam also wrote to Margaret Blackmer.

It's a charming letter, you cunning little angel-fish! and glad I was to get it. My fishes find many ways to entertain themselves: you with the Indians & the circus; Irene with sea-bathing; Helen of Montreal with climbing mountains in Scotland; Helen of Bermuda with regatta-races on stormy seas; Boston-Dorothy with foot-races & swimming-races in her school-camp away up towards the North Pole—& she wins them, too. The others are scattered far & wide, but I shall hear from all of them presently & know what they are at, for they are not going to neglect me; they are too dear & faithful for that. I answered letters from 3 of them yesterday; & this morning I have your letter & one from Irene.

I shall be so glad to welcome you & your mother here, when you get back home. You will arrive September 16th, & you will write me on the 17th, won't you? & you & I will arrange that visit.

Goodbye, dear, with lots of love, / SLC. / Curator of the Aquarium [MTP; MTAq 199-200].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I heard sounds—sneezes from the King's room in the night and going to his room I found him very wakeful and threatened with another attack of nausea" [MTP: IVL TS 59].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Katharine Boland Clemens (Mrs. James Ross Clemens) in South Dartmouth, Mass.

Mr. Clemens asks me to write for him & tell you how very glad he is to know you are in this part of the country again, & to say that he very much hopes that you & Dr. Clemens will be able to motor over, or to come over here to see him, for it will not be possible for him to make any visits this season. Mr. Clemens went down to New York to attend the funeral of Mr. Moffett, & he returned entirely exhausted. A day or two later he had a bilious collapse, & the doctor has forbidden him to leave the quiet of Redding until frost. But he can have his friends; and any time that you can come to Mr. Clemens he will be most happy to see you, & make you welcome, and it will confer a benefit upon him. Mr. Clemens sends much love to you & to Dr. Clemens & hopes you will not disappoint him [MTP].

August 14 Friday – Sam's guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
John B. Stanchfield	)	)
Mrs. Stanchfield	) New York City	) " [August] 14-15	[Clara Spaulding Stanchfield]
Alice their daughter	)	)

Note: none of the above names were in the original guestbook.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The Stanchfields arrived by motor hours late. / Ashcroft started for Canada" [MTP: IVL TS 59].

George Hasselmeyer wrote from Kennesaw, Ga. to recollect being with Sam in St. Louis before the war. Did Sam remember Miss Compton (Dick) and Jacob Enders-Compton and the Enders Music Store? Hasselmeyer was in his 74th year. He also mentioned Judge James K. Knight of St. Louis who committed suicide. Joe Enders and Dick Compton were dead. Joe used to sing songs in German [MTP].

Margherita Pariente wrote a letter from Cairo, Egypt in French to Clemens. She expressed admiration for Twain. She owned many of his books and particularly admired IA. She enclosed a self-addressed postcard which she asks Twain to autograph and return. She promised she would treasure it as a souvenir of "the great and immortal American writer," and wished him good health and hoped to meet him one day [MTP]. Note: translation summary courtesy of Holger Kersten.

Joe Twichell, back in Hartford after his trip to Europe, wrote to Clemens.

Dear old Mark: / So here we are again—since last Tuesday. Our homecoming is glad and sad, both—sad because it meets us with the news of the death abroad of our long-time beloved friend Harry Hopkins President of Williams College, one of the noblest, gentlest most generous spirits life has made us acquainted with. You will remember him, I think. The first paper I took up on my arrival—a copy of Colliers Weekly—told me that Sam Moffett was gone. So you are in sorrow too, and by a bereavement that comes closer to you than ours to us, and is intrinsically more afflictive, for Harry had done a full day's work, but Sam is "dead in his prime,” cut off in the bloom of his promise. As we speak of him the face and voice of his sweet mother came back to us. We have never forgotten her.

Our vacation has been full of interest and pleasure throughout. I can’t stop to tell you about it now, but will say that few things coming into it are so delightfully memorable as two evenings we passed with Mr. MacAlister in London, who showed us great favor for your sake. It is scarcely necessary to remark that you were the principal theme of our converse with him [MTP].

August 15 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

Dear Dorothy:

Good! You will be very welcome.

To-day, in a lovely place in the woods a mile & a half from here we visited a fine swimming-pool a hundred yards long, twenty wide & 26 feet deep—water as clear as crystal, with a perpendicular rock jumping-off place 15 feet high—densely wooded shores all around. You get to it by an obscure path leading from the distant wagon-road. It is an ideal bathing-place. I thought of you, but you can’t use it, because there is no bath-house. But you shall go & look at it—& grieve because you can’t get into it. If I had it on my land there’d be a bath-house. / With love & best wishes ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to William Henry Watts in Tewkesbury, England.

Dear Sir: / I highly prize the pipes, & shall intimate to people that Raleigh smoked them—& doubtless he did. After a little practice I shall be able to go further & say that he did. They will then be the most interesting features of my library’s decorations. The horse-shoe is attracting a good deal of attention, because I have intimated that the Conqueror’s horse cast it. It will attract more when I get my hand in & say he cast it.

I thank you for the pipes & the shoe; also for the Official Guide, which I read through at a single sitting. If a person should say that about a book of mine I should regard it as good evidence of the book’s interest. / Very truly Yours [MTP].

Note: an 1894 Tewkesbury directory lists Watts as a “Builders’ Foreman.” W.H. Watts & Son, formed in 1903, sold all sorts of household goods. In his 1917 volumes of MT’s letters, Paine offers a note on the above letter: “...is an acknowledgement of an interesting souvenir from the battle-field of Tewksbury (1471), and some relics of the Cavalier and Roundhead Regiments encamped at Tewksbury in 1643” [812]. See July 10 from Watts.

William Dean Howells wrote from Kittery Point, Maine to Sam.

My dear Clemens:

I will surely and gladly come to see you when I go up to New York about the middle of next month, not merely because you live in the house that Jack built, [his son, John Mead Howells was the architect of Stormfield] but because I want to pour out on you the praise that has been filling me up ever since I re-re-read The Innocents Abroad last winter in Rome. I wonder you could write it, and I wonder you could write the Ct. Yankee, which I re-re-read after I got home. I could not have written it myself, although it is the most delightful, truest, most humane, sweetest fancy that ever was. Now that you have taken the pen into your own hand, why don’t you try something like it in your old age?

The other morning, after first waking, I dreamt of talking with a girl in Bermuda. I said that as it was coming spring I supposed she would be going north, but she said “No, we are going further into the tropics,” and I made the reflection how perfectly natural that was, when she added, “We want to see some Pepper Trees, and hear a pigeon sing.” Then it occurred to me that I had never heard a pigeon sing, and that it must be very nice.

Somewhere I have some more letters of yours, and I will send them as soon as I can think where I put them. But for goodness’ sake, haven’t you enough now?

My poor wife has been suffering with her teeth all summer, and can only gnash out her thanks to you for remembering her. Pilla thanks you too, tho’ not so hopelessly.

The unmuffled motor boats have made this place a pandemonium, and I am afraid we cannot come here any more. I am thinking of going to England as a summer resort. But there are the English. Unmuffled too. Yours ever, / W.D. Howells [MTHL 2: 833-4].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "A lazy day. A busy day. The Demings and Hildegard Hawthorne came for tea" [MTP: IVL TS 59].

August 16 Sunday – Sam wrote a tribute to his late nephew, "Samuel Erasmus Moffett" and quoted from an obituary in Collier's Weekly [Gribben 154]. Note: Moffett died on Aug. 1, 1908.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Stanchfields left, creeping down the long hill through the field" [MTP: IVL TS 59].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

August 17 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.).

Where are you at, Mariechen dear? I was in New York on the 4th & 5th—called there by the tragic death of my nephew—and I had half a glimpse of Harry for half a moment—maybe less than that—and so I did not learn how you are getting along. Very satisfactorily, I hope, & that you will drop me a line & say so. Those were a couple of sweltering days, & I got a violent bilious attack out of it after my return home. The hot weather, the heavy black clothes, the depressing funeral, & the spectacle of that crushed & broken-hearted family—altogether it was a ghastly episode.

I had a glimpse, also of Will Coe, & extracted a promise from him to bring Mrs. Coe here. They will come in September, by automobile—60 miles, but they think nothing of the distance. Don't you think you & Harry could do that? I do wish you would. This is a quiet place, on high ground, & you would flourish most wholesomely. And you wouldn't have to play billiards till 3 in the morning, unless you felt that a little dissipation like that would do you good. Our women-guests go to bed at 10 or along there, it is only the men that are late birds. We have had 21 guests since June 27, & they've all survived. They say they like the place, & I am sure they do. I like it myself; I liked it from the start; & when I was in New York those hot days, I found I had ceased to like No. 21, so I canceled the lease, & now we are fetching its furniture up here; all but enough to furnish a small flat for Clara. Jean goes to Germany early in October, to be placed under a famous specialist in Berlin. And she is glad, for she likes Germany & the language.

Mrs. Rogers writes me from the mountains that Mr. Flagler is there & wants that series of photographs illustrative of the evolution of a moral principle in a person urgently desirous of being good. A Mr. Davies, a friend of his, carried off his series. I remember it. It all comes back to me now. You had a set; & you were to send it to him & I was to have another set made for you. I reckon you forgot it, but it's all right, I will attend to it. At bottom I thought he was joking, anyway.

Come—dash me off a line & tell me how you are.

These—from your oldest relative & the one who loves you best— / Your uncle / Mark [MTP]. Note: Henry M. Flagler; see earlier from.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King ate watermelon and became an aqueduct. Miss Julia Stanford, Mr. Driggs and 3 girls came over by [the] mobile to salute the King, but Miss Julia really came to see me" [MTP: IVL TS 60]. Note: Silas W. Driggs.

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam enclosing an unspecified "communication and my endorsement." Harvey also suggested Sam come down during the Asbury Park Carnival where 100,000 people were expected. "Please let me know as soon as you decide so that I can post the committee" [MTP]. Note: IVL: You can post them No, the doctors wont let me leave here until the first frost"; Sam's reply is dated Aug. 19?

John B. Stanchfield wrote from NYC to Lyon c/o Clemens: "I directed Brentano to forward you a Perplexity Puzzle this morning. When the combined talent of your house shall have worked it to a correct solution, I wish you would express it to me in Babylon, as we have not had this one yet, and I will send you one of ours from that place” [MTP].

August 18 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote an aphorism to Margery H. Clinton.

“Let a sleeping dog lie.”

It is a poor old maxim, & nothing in it: anybody can do it, you don’t have to employ a dog.

Truly yours / Mark Twain

To

Miss Margery Clinton

(August 18, 1908, at Redding, Conn.) [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “We went, by way of the Peck’s mobile, over to their place at Redding Ridge, and then to see Jeannette Gilder” [MTP: IVL TS 60].

Anita Moffett wrote a mourning bordered note from Mt. Vernon, NY.

Dear Uncle Sam: — / Miss Lyon writes that you think it wise for my uncle, Mr. Tallman, to keep in touch with Mr. Robert Collier in regard to the accident insurance matter.

Mr. Collier is out of town, and Mr. Tallman has made an appointment to see him next week upon his return.

Mother is not able to write, but she wishes me to tell you that four New York pathologists and two physicians have found that it was neither apoplexy nor cerebral hemorrhage, but a clear case of drowning that killed papa. Mother will write soon. / Very sincerely... [MTP]. Note: See Aug. 1 news account of the drowning.

Mary Mantz Moffett wrote from Mt. Vernon, NY, two letters to Sam. The first:

Dear “Uncle Sam,” — / The report of the pathologist for the Insurance companies has been sent in to Mr. Alger—a friend of Sam’s—an attorney who is looking after the insurance. (Sam had said to call in Mr. Alger if we were ever in trouble.)

The report of the pathologists gives “drowning as cause of death.” I had two pathologists and two physicians at the autopsy to represent me—to prove that it was not apoplexy—nor brain hemorage [sic]. This awful thing that has happened was the result of cowardice and criminal negligence on the part of the hotel authorities — — — failure to provide a life saver — — and failure to provide proper ropes.

We were assured — — and Sam said “we have got to trust some people in this world” — — that they had an experienced life-saving man constantly on the beach. He turns out to be a butler—filling in his summer. When within 20 ft. of Sam—he lost his nerve and turned back — — abandoning Sam [MTP].

In her second letter of this date, Moffett’s widow thanked Clemens for a tribute he wrote intended for publication in a posthumous edition of a book by Samuel Moffett. Mary regretted the drowning especially since her son needed his father, and recounted the mountain of work and “hot travel” Moffett had made during his last year to Denver, Chicago and Washington, D.C. [MTP].

John B. Stanchfield wrote from NYC to Lyon c/o Clemens: “I have your letter under date of August 17th with check enclosed. The stock is not assessable. In due course you will hear from the proper parties in reference to the matter” [MTP].

August 19 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Mr. Lounsbury is ill, a fistula caused by a strain in moving Santa’s piano. AB and his nice old father came up for billiards. I entertained his nice old father and gave him tea on the loggia. He called the dear little cedar trees ‘volunteers’” [MTP: IVL TS 60]. Note: Paine’s father is shown as Samuel E. Paine in the Aug. 24 original guestbook entry.

William Webster Ellsworth sent Sam a letter addressed to "Subscribers to the Pond Fund," about Major Pond's son, James B. Pond, Jr. —his schooling, ill health and that no further need was advisable since his mother was dead and he could not return to college, due to several previous breakdowns there. Subscribers were listed and fund details given.

James B. Pond, Jr. ["Bim"] is a fine young fellow. He has an honorable ambition, a good mind, and I am sure we may feel that we have done a splendid work in helping him on his way. He has been thoroughly appreciative of all that has been done for him. Without this fund he would have been obliged to go to work at thirteen years of age, and that without any training [MTP]. The letter was also signed by Robert Bridges, and William B. Howland, who found the account records correct.

August 19? Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Aug. 17 of George B. Harvey. "You can post them No, the doctors wont let me leave here until the first frost" [MTP].

August 20 Thursday – In Redding, Conn., Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Katharine B. Clemens.

"Mr. Clemens asks me to thank you for the photograph which he is very glad to have, & also for your note containing the very pleasant news that you will probably be able to spend a Sunday here.

"Mr. Clemens is better, & asks me to convey his love to you" [MTP].

Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Jervis Langdon	Elmira, N.Y.	August 20	(My nephew).
Margery Clinton O.P.	39 E 57 th	" 20-24	Margery came up to neglect the plumbing. She knows how.

Note: Margery was given the "job" at no pay as "Official Plumber": O.P. None of the above names were in the original guestbook.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mother came back from Farmington. We had a business-library meeting at Mrs. Lounsbury's.

Marjorie Clinton arrived and Mr. Jervis Langdon came for the day.

I lifted my bronze cat up onto some book shelves, and have a vivid pain in my side [MTP: IVL TS 60-61].

Elin Liljebloom wrote from Wiborg, Finland to ask about a story she described but could not find and did not know the name of [MTP]. Note: IVL: "the Death Disk"

Maud W. Littleton (Mrs. Martin W. Littleton) wrote a postcard from Interlaken, Switzerland to Sam. "Hello—How are you? We are very tired traveling, & I remember that you said you felt sorry for us when we left. We feel sorry too. With love..."[MTP].

Die Zeit sent a form letter to Sam regarding the 80th birthday of Tolstoi on Sept. 10. They were inquiring of "representative personages in the world of Politics, Science and Art" just how Tolstoi had influenced them. They intended to publish the results [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Contract intervened" (meaning Clemens was barred from such submissions by his Harpers contract. Even if not strictly so, he often used it as a reason to decline.

August 21 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "The day was a placid one. We played Hearts, and then more Hearts" [MTP: IVL TS 61].

Charles W. Birge wrote from the Fitch Home for Soldiers in Noroton Heights, Conn. to ask Sam if he'd be some help to him in securing a cheap pair of spectacles to help him read; he could get a pair for $2 in Stamford. At age 72, Birge had a shaky hand [MTP]. Note: IVL: "No ans."

Joe Goodman wrote from Alameda, Calif. about locating old letters from Clemens.

Dear Mark— / I've searched alow and aloft, and in every corner and receptacle, but can find only two of your letters. I had a package of them down in Fresno, but it has been lost in one of the many moves I've made since then, probably. Should it ever turn up, I'll send it to you or Clara.

Tufts begged the letter you wrote of Little Ward's death, to go with one of yours that Ward had given him; and I also let him have the note you wrote in answer to his warning that the Bobbs Merrill Co. were having your writings copied from the files of the Enterprise, Union and Call. He has them bound in his collection of your works.

Steve Gillis has some of your letters to Jim [Gillis], but he said one of the newspapermen they formerly harbored stole most of them.

Of course, I should like the two letters returned—unless you should prefer to cancel them. They are intimately personal, and will be about the most prized legacy I can leave the children.

I saw the description of the Innocents at Home [Stormfield] in Harper's Weekly. It must be a charming place apart from hits seclusion, which you seem to regard as its best quality. I should dearly like to see it, and to hold communion with you once more; but neither is likely to be. I don't expect to ever come East again; I can see nothing between now and the finish but a hard grind.

I rejoiced at Clara's success as a singer, for I remember how ambitious she was when a child to get out in the world and do things. Please ask Jean to kindly carry my congratulations to her.

With benedictions on your new home, and a prayer that you may live long to enjoy it, / Yours ever. J.T. Goodman [MTP].

August 21 Friday ca.

H.J. Learoyd, managing editor for the NY Evening Post wrote to Sam. "We are anxious to get expressions of sentiment on the subject of the advisability of renominating Governor Hughes." He asked for "a few lines" [MTP]. Note: Clemens answered on aug 25.

August 22 Saturday – Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Z. S. Freeman	New York City	" [August] 22-24	[Zoheth S. Freeman]

Note: not in the original guestbook.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "I went to N.Y. on the 8:15. Back on the 1:27 and Zoe Freeman came too. It was torrenting when I went to the station, and the flood gates [sentence unfinished] [MTP: IVL TS 61].

Margaret Chisholm wrote from Butler, Ill. to Sam.

My papa says when he gets rich he is going to buy all of your books. He says he would have been rich long ago if his parents had been brought up in the same locality.... / I saw papa looking at these two pictures and he said he was glad you had made enough to buy you a new suit of clothes, and then he wondered if this very same fellow was still doing your washing. But he wont write so I though I would write and ask you [MTP].

James Longstreet Clemens wrote from Macon, Miss. to disclose his genealogy and to enclose an 1870 clipping from the Macon Beacon containing editorial criticism of America's humorous writers, the article inspired by Mark Twain. James' mother was the sister of Confederate General James Longstreet [MTP].

August 23 Sunday – Zoheth S. Freeman was visiting Sam in Redding [new guestbook].

August 24 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Zoe and Margery left today. The King seems to improve with every day. Paine who came up for billiards remarked that the King doesn’t play as good a game as he did. But that is clearly understandable, for the King has been teaching the game to young strong men, who now are playing as well as he does, and better, for many of them have had instruction from experts in “draw shots” and “English” etc. and have no more wit than to come here and to tell the King how to make his shots. That would have to sap the strength from any man’s game. It is no wonder that he said, “This is a God damn Hell of a game! Let’s quit!” [MTP: IVL TS 61].

Albert Bigelow Paine and Samuel E. Paine show as guests in the original guestbook, p.1 under Aug. 24 [Mac Donnell TS 1].

Miss Ethel Payne wrote from Dover, Missouri to Sam. She was compiling an article, “Famous Flowers of Famous Men” and asked him to write with his favorite and give her permission to quote his remarks [MTP].

August 25 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to H.J. Learoyd, Managing Editor of the N.Y. Evening Post, heading the note “Private.”

Dear Sir: / If you had asked me two months ago, my answer would have been prompt & loud & strong: Yes, I want Governor Hughes renominated. But it is too late, & my mouth is closed. I have become a citizen & taxpayer of Connecticut, & could not now, without impertinence, meddle in matters which are none of my business. I could not do it with impertinence without trespassing on the monopoly of another. / Very Truly Yours ... [MTP].

Sam’s new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Jeannette L. Gilder	Redding Ridge	August 25-26
Jeannette Cholmeley-Jones	“ “	[ditto]

Isabel Lyon’s journal: I’ve just been cutting the King’s hair; he sitting up in his sunshiney room and teaching me how to use the flat shears that clip the back of his neck. And it was a successful cutting too. He has just come down to say that I’d beating the barber at his own trade. How much of happiness that means. Miss Jeannette Gilder and her niece Jeannette Cholmely-Jones are here for the night, and I am so glad that the King likes them both and particularly Jeannette Gilder, for she is very genuine, and the youngest woman at 59 that I ever saw [MTP: IVL TS 61-62].

William Allen wrote from St. Louis to Sam.

Referring to a chapter in your Autobiography in last week’s Associated Sunday Magazines, I believe Redpath’s “gallant jayhawker chief”—the man who was “out of words” in your presence—was Dave Stringfellow. He was a prominent “border ruffian” in “bleeding Kansas” days, and he and Redpath made things lively in raids and counter raids. There was another fellow, Jim Lane, and he may have been the “chief.” He hoped the Autobiography would be finished in his lifetime, as he was 73 [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Know it wasn’t Jim Lane, but think it must have been Stringfellow, but cannot be quite sure”; and “rece’d 8/31/08”

George de Forest Brush wrote from Italy to Sam.

Dear Mr Clemens / That was a beautiful letter you wrote me on learning of Georgia’s death. I was very grateful to receive it. I love to refer to those who are dead that I have loved the death of a child is very sad because you find that they have gone before they have made any impression; I am surprised how little I knew her living with her every hour of her life. One day sitting at the breakfast table before I left for America I said [“]Georgie you are a quiet little girl who never wants anything[.] what can I do for you what would you like[?]”] “Nothing” said she “but education”...the last request she made was to be read to from Huckleberry Finn...[MTP].

Rev. Fred V. Christ (1878-1937), at this time asst. pastor Lutheran Church of Atonement, Edgcombe Ave. & W. 110th Street, wrote to Sam, recalling “The Captain’s Story.” He inquired as to Sam’s source of inspiration for the tale [MTP]. Note: see Sam’s Aug. 28 intriguing reply.

Henry W. Ruoff wrote from Buffalo, NY to ask Sam’s input on the 100 greatest men he was compiling for a series of biographies. He wanted those “with the greatest visible influence on the life and activities of the race.” Would Sam look at the list? Would he include Jesus? [MTP]. Two copies of the list are in the file, for eight categories. “Good” was placed on each sub-section and other names were added for Religion (Jesus and Satan), Science, politics and industry. IVL: “8/31 wrote for another list”; see Aug. 28 reply to Ruoff.

R.E. Sherwood, bookseller, NYC wrote to Sam about the practice of department stores cheapening the price of books, and with the American Publishers Assoc. being dissolved by Federal courts, there was no protection of retail prices. Sherwood offered to send his car for Clemens, so he might talk over these trends [MTP]. Note: IVL: “The thing for him to do is to hop into the train at nine o'clock Friday morning. He did it. But it didn't amount to anything of interest”

August 26 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The King watches Tammany’s kittens by the enchanted half hour. We get them into the library after dinner. They carry on like beautiful wild monkeys” [MTP: IVL TS 62].

Jeannette Cholmeley-Jones wrote from Redding Ridge to Sam. “I hardly know how to express to you how much I enjoyed our all too short visit at ‘Stormfield.’” She thought it a “great privilege” and “one of the greatest treats” she’d ever had, and she was still reflecting on what he talked about [MTP].

August 27 Thursday – Anna Goldschmidt wrote from Hamburg, Germany to Sam about “A Dog’s Tale,” and the great pleasure she had translating it. Since this was the first translation she’d attempted she sent a copy for his review, hoping he would give permission for her to publish [MTP].

August 28 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Aug. 25 of Fred V. Christ:

Dear Sir: / You say: “I often owe my best sermons to a suggestion received in reading” . . . and let us add, “or from other exterior sources.”

Your remark is not quite in accordance with the facts. We must change it to “I owe all my thoughts, sermons & ideas to suggestions received from sources outside of myself.”

The simplified English of this proposition is—

“No man’s brain has ever originated an idea.”

It is an astonishing thing that after all these ages the world goes on thinking the human brain-machinery can originate a thought.

It can’t. It has never done it. In all cases, little and big, the thought is born of a suggestion; and in all cases the suggestion comes to the brain from the outside. The brain never acts, except from an exterior impulse.

A man can satisfy himself of the truth of this by a quite simple process: let him examine every idea that occurs to him in an hour; in a day; in a week;—in a lifetime, if he please. He will always find that an outside something suggested the thought: something which he saw with his eyes, or heard with his ears, or perceived by his touch—not necessarily to day nor yesterday, nor last year, nor twenty years ago, but some time or other. Usually the source of the suggestion is immediately traceable, but sometimes it isn’t. However, if you will examine each thought that occurs to you for the next two days, you will find that in at least nine cases out of ten you can put your finger on the outside suggestion—and that ought to convince you that No. 10 had that source too, although you cannot at present hunt it down and find it.

The idea of writing to me would have had to wait a long time if it waited till your brain originated it. It was born of an outside suggestion—Sir Thomas & my old captain.

The hypnotist thinks he has invented a new thing—suggestion! This is very sad.

I don't know where my captain got his "Karosene" idea (it was forty-one years ago and he is long ago dead): but I know it didn't originate in his head, but was born of a suggestion from the outside. The chief mate (who was present) couldn't invent the idea of writing out the tale for print, and there was nothing in his circumstances to bring that idea to him from the outside; but my case was different: my trade was sure to flood me with suggestions that this was usable stuff for me.

Yesterday a guest said:

"How did you come to think of writing the Prince and Pauper?"

"I didn't. The thought came to me from the outside—suggested by that pleasant and picturesque little history-book, Charlotte M. Yonge's "Little Duke." I doubt if Mrs. Burnett knows whence came to her the suggestion to write "Little Lord Fauntleroy," but I know: it came from reading the "Prince and Pauper." In all my life I have never originated an idea, and neither has she—nor anybody else."

Man's mind is a clever machine, and can work up materials into ingenious fancies & ideas, but it can't create the materials. None but the gods can do that.

In Sweden I saw a vast machine receive a block of wood and turn it into marketable matches in two minutes. It could do everything but make the wood. That is the kind of machine the human mind is. Maybe this is not a large compliment, but it is all I can afford.

Your friend and sincere well-wisher, / S L. Clemens [MTP].

Note: the old Captain of 41 years before, "long ago dead," was likely Edgar (Ned) Wakeman (1818-1875); A review of Christ's letter reveals Sir Thomas to be Sir Thomas Browne. Gribben gives us a short discussion of disagreement about The Little Duke, Richard the Fearless (1854) by Charlotte Mary Yonge (1823-1901) being in Sam's recollection here [792]

Sam also replied to the Aug. 25 from Henry W. Ruoff, editor and compiler of The Century Book of Facts, which ran yearly during this period, published by the King-Richardson Co. Sam headed the letter "Private."

Dear Sir: / By "private," I mean don't print any remarks of mine.

===

I like your list.

The "longest visible influence."

These terms REQUIRE you to add Jesus. And they doubly & trebly require you to add Satan. From A.D. 350 to A.D. 1850 these gentlemen exercised a vaster influence over a fifth part of the human race than was exercised over that fraction of the race by all other influences combined. Ninety-nine one-hundredths of this influence proceeded from Satan, the remaining fraction of it from Jesus. During those 1500 years the fear of Satan & Hell made 99 Christians when love of God & Heaven landed one. During those 1500 years, Satan's influence was worth very nearly a hundred times as much to the business and was the influence of all the rest of the Holy Family put together.

You have asked me a question, & I have answered it seriously & sincerely. You have put in Buddha;—a god, with a following, at one time, greater than Jesus has ever had; a god with perhaps a little better evidence of his godship than that which is offered for Jesus's. How then, in fairness, can you leave Jesus out? And if you put him in, how can you logically leave Satan out? Thunder is good! Thunder is impressive; but it is the lightning that does the work. / Very truly yours [MTP].

Nathan H. Weed for National Phonograph wrote to ask Sam for "a brief interview...on a matter which it is confidently believed you will deem of mutual interest." Would it be convenient for Weed to come sometime next week? [MTP].

August 29 Saturday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Benares [Ashcroft] came back from Canada today and arrived when Paine was playing billiards with the King and I was unpacking books” [MTP: IVL TS 62].

August 30 Sunday – In his Sept. 3 to Dorothy Quick, Sam related, “We had a kind of house-warming three or four days ago, & the people of the countryside came, about 300, young & old, & boys & girls, & we had a very pleasant afternoon.” The gathering was likely this day, and included the guestbook entries below; these guests were residents of the surrounding area, which Sam gave no addresses for.

Sam’s New guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Arthur R. Pearson	-----	August 30
Jeannette Cholmeley-Jones	-----	“ “
R.G. Cholmeley-Jones	-----	“ “
Robert M McBride	-----	“ “
Jeannette L. Gilder	-----	“ “
Mabel F. Cholmeley-Jones	-----	“ “

August 31 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “John and Isabel Wayland came today” [MTP: IVL TS 62].

James Ross Clemens wrote to Sam, having arrived in South Dartmouth, Mass. and finding Sam’s invitation for him and his wife to visit Stormfield. Unfortunately only he could come and wanted to look in the following Sunday. He would stay overnight [MTP].

Mary B. Hackett wrote from Morristown, NJ to relate what she’d heard in a department store during the Christmas holiday two years before. A woman patron asked for “Eve’s Diary” and was told it must be in the religious section [MTP].

Sam’s New guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
John Elton Wayland	Little Pumpkin Island	August 31 – Sept 2	Bermuda Friends
The dear Mrs. Ditto	“ “ “	“ “ “ “

Note: In his Sept. 3 to Quick, Sam stated that the Waylands left that day, not the 2nd. Isabel S. Wayland (Mrs. John Elton Wayland)

Clemens acquired two more cases of Queen Anne whisky and wrote “2 cases used in August” [L-A MS]. Note: see June 8, 1907 for the full list of acquisition dates of whisky , intended as ammunition against Isabel Lyon.

September – Sam inscribed a photograph of himself in his white suit sitting in a chair and holding a book, to Isabel S. Wayland (Mrs. John Elton Wayland): “Mrs. John Wayland, with the affectionate regards of Mark Twain, Sept/08”[Sotheby’s auction June 19, 2003, Lot 127]. The Waylands were logged into Sam’s guest book for the period Aug. 31 to Sept 2, giving their home as “Little Pumpkin Island.”

Clemens acquired two more cases of Queen Anne whisky and wrote, “2 cases used before Oct. 3”, bracketing this entry with the Aug. 31 entry [L-A MS]. Note: see June 8, 1907 for the full list of acquisition dates of whisky , intended as ammunition against Isabel Lyon.

September 1 Tuesday – Sam had Mr. & Mrs. Albert Bigelow Paine, and daughter Louise to luncheon [Sept. 3 to Quick]. Note: he did not enter this visit into his new guestbook.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Lou and David arrived to visit mother, but I couldn't meet them, for I was full of the King's reception today" [MTP: IVL TS 62].

Bruno Frede wrote from Altona a.d. Elbe, Germany to ask for Mark Twain's autograph. He included some verses in German [MTP].

Zoheth S. Freeman wrote a card thanking Sam for his weekend at Stormfield [MTP].

George L. Robinson, Clara's tour manager wrote to Isabel Lyon (though catalogued as to Clemens) [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote from Hartford to Sam, assuming he had already seen what Joe enclosed (not in file) about Julian Hawthorne, who had turned from literary pursuits to mining, much to Twichell's displeasure, though he did not know Hawthorne's situation. If Julian was poor and his family in need, Twichell hoped his mine would be a bonanza. Joe had spent time with his newly married daughter Harmony in NY and in passing Sam's old abode judged, "from the look of things that your tenancy there is ended," something he regretted since he often had to make trips to the City. He reported that Gen. [Daniel Edgar] Sickles was home in NYC but looked "sadly old and feeble." Why hadn't Clemens written—was he angry? [MTP].

September 2 Wednesday – Dorothy Quick wrote to Sam.

My dear Mr Clemens.

I wrote you from Epping telling you I had changed my address but as I have not heard from you I have decided my writing was so bad you could'ant make it out yesterday I was 12 years old and I had a beautiful birthday Mother and my aunt Syda took me to Rye Beach in the afternoon to see Ben Greet in an outdoor performance of "As you Like it" It was really wonderful right out in the woods with the sea roaring in the distance I wish you had been with me you would have liked it and I would have loved to have you. Then I returned and had a party and in the evening we went to see Olivette, The Opera of the casino at Hampton beach about fifteen minutes on the car from here so today I am rather tired and glad it is stormy so I can rest We expect to remain here until Sept 15 school opens the 17 or 19th I don't know which it has been to cold here to go in bathing but it is beautiful on the beach last Wed we had a terrible storm and mother said she had never seen such a wild and beautiful sea before but she loves it and I dont. I liked it at Epping and Redding much better I shall even be glad to get back to Plainfield and all my friends will you give my love to Francis and Miss Lyon and keep lots & lots for yourself. / your loving / Dorothy [MTAq 200-1].

John Elton Wayland and Isabel S. Wayland (Mrs. John Elton Wayland) of Little Pumpkin Island, Conn. were entered in the original guestbook [Mac Donnell TS 2].

September 3 Thursday– In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Aug. 31 from James R. Clemens by sending a telegram: "Shall be very happy to see you on Sunday but am very sorry you not both come. / S. L. Clemens" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J.

Dorothy dear, I have been over-busy with guests, for a time, & I guess you are back home before this. There isn't much news to report. We lunched with the Paines day before yesterday & saw to Louise, but Frances has gone back to her school in Rochester. Louise is soon going away to school on Long Island. We had a kind of house-warming three or four days ago, & the people of the countryside came, about 300, young & old, & boys & girls, & we had a very pleasant afternoon. The Waylands have been here several days, & went away today. Some more guests are coming tomorrow & next day, to sleep over Sunday, & on the 10th my daughter Clara will arrive from Europe. Jean will sail for Germany towards the end of this month. There will be some more friends coming in the meantime—two young girls & an elderly couple.

I hope you & your mother have had a pleasant summer, & that you are well rested-up & ready for school & glad to begin again. Miss Lyon has nearly emptied the New York house, & so this one looks more furnished & less naked than it did. / With lots of love— ... [MTP]. Note: see Aug. 30 for the gathering.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The burden of this house is heavily upon my shoulders. Being on my shoulders it is an alien weight and has all the chances of being shifted to other props. I keep it there rather than in my heart too securely for if it were, or when it is taken from me, all the bleeding heart of me would be torn out with it. It's because I've been down to the N.Y. house working hard all day, and because Paine was there and was sad at leaving it; sad at seeing the dismantling of the rooms where we've had charming times, and gay times, but for me they have been sadder than gay I think, or more agonizing, for in that house I saw the terrible sorrow and grief of the King after Mrs. Clemens's death, and I saw the crying rage of servants dismissed by Jean and Clara. I saw Jean in her convulsions, and I saw Clara in her agony and in her illness, and in her struggles with her career and in her hates and fierce lovings, and while my heart was full of loving for all of them, there was a long, long lack of peace, and the stairs I climbed were often pitifully weary ones. But against it all was the great joy of living close to the King and of learning his ways and his moods and of holding my spirit arms about him, and of having my life fuller than I thought it could be.

Benares met David and me at the station [MTP: IVL TS 62-63].

Alice Minnie Herts for the Children's Educational Theatre wrote to Sam, this letter enclosed in a Sept. 2 to Lyon.

Arrangements are now completed for the lecture course to be given under the auspices of the Educational Theatre during January, February and March, 1909...

My immediate object in writing all this is to ask you to introduce the lecture course at the Lyceum Theatre on the afternoon of Jan. 8th by saying a few words concerning the aims and objects of the theatre as a force for shaping character in the young through the joy and happiness they experience in the work [MTP].

Matt H. Hewins wrote from Hartford to Sam having read in the morning paper that Clemens had "established another home." Hewins spent 3 or 4 pages describing liquor he'd had in his billiard room for the past 50 years; now he wished to dispose of it and offered the whole lot for $500 for Sam's wine cellar [MTP].

September 4 Friday – Frances Nunnally wrote from Brown's Hotel, London to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens,—

Thank you so much for the invitation you have given Mother and I to come visit you at "Innocence at Home." We should like very much to come up and spend the day with you any day that it is convenient before the twenty-sixth. I am very sorry we cannot spend more time with you, as we are very anxious to see you, but there are so many things to be attended to in New York before I go back to school and we will not have quite ten days. I shall let you know as soon as I arrive at the Waldorf, and then if you will tell us when it suits you best, we should love to come up for a day.

We left Paris a little over a week ago and came directly here. We met a great many friends in Paris and so I enjoyed my visit there, but I don't like the city itself nearly as much as London. One of the pleasantest days we had, was out at Versailles, where there is so much of beauty and interest to be seen. We made another excursion out to Chantilly, but I think we should have gone there before we went to Versailles. Our hotel was quite near the Louvre, so we went in there several times, but after all that, I don't think we have seen half of the things in that enormous place. We enjoyed the pictures more than any other part of the museum, but we spent a good while looking at the beautiful "Venus de Milo."

After about ten days we crossed a very rough channel and came to London, where it has been raining incessantly. Just a week from tomorrow we sail and I shall be very glad to see the “Minneapolis” again, though I don’t like to think that it is carrying me back to school. / Lovingly / Francesca [MTAq 203-4].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Hattie & Jack” [MTP: IVL TS 63]. Note: Harriet & John Enders; see log below.

September 5 Saturday – Sam’s new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Harriet Enders	Pittsfield, Mass	September 5-6
John O. Enders	“ “	“ “
John Howells	New York City	“ “	[Illegible notes]

Harriet E.G. Whitmore was also listed as a Sept. 5 guest in the original guestbook, as were the Enders, Louise Belden Moore, and June Moore Farmington [Mac Donnell TS 2]. Note: Sam evidently did not transfer all the names into the new guestbook he received from Mary Rogers for Christmas; also, he entered some names which were not in the original guestbook. Together then, we get a more complete listing.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “John Howells” [MTP: IVL TS 63].

Emily Clinton (Mrs. Charles William Clinton) wrote from Tuxedo Park, NY to Sam. “It is so good of you, & Miss Lyon to give Margery such a lovely time, she enjoys her visits at “Innocence At Home” so much, & we thank you very much ...” [MTP].

September 6 Sunday – Note guestbook for Sept 5-6 above. Sam’s guestbook, as well as IVL TS 63-64:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
James Ross Clemens M.D.	St. Louis, Mo.	September 6-8	[Illegible notes]

September 7 Monday – James Ross Clemens was a guest at the Redding house [new guestbook]. Also stopping by for a visit were the following Redding neighbors. Sam’s new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Annie R. Banks	_____	_____
Fannie Sanford Shaw	From over	September 7	[Fanny]
Emma Shaw Reid	on the Ridge
Marshal E. Driggs	_____	_____

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “There is a report in the paper today that Santa is engaged [see NY World below]. I brought Katherine in and we worked because it was Labor Day apparently, and the parades were streaming up and down 5th Avenue. Benares telephoned me the Paragraph in the World about Santa. I saw reporters and contradicted that and many things” [MTP: IVL TS 64].

The New York World, p.2, ran the rumor about Clara Clemens and Charles E. Wark (“Will”), her accompaniest:

The engagement of his daughter, Clara, to Mr. Charles E. Wark of this city, has been rumored. Miss Clemens has been traveling in Europe for some months with a party of friends. In the party is Mr. Wark” [Hill 205]. Note: Hill suggests Clara believed that Isabel Lyon had leaked the rumor, since Clara had written Lyon just over two months prior expressing frustration at not being able to to express “frank expression of the truth.” Wark was a married man.

September 8 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “There is a row about the red ms. trunk with Mrs. Paine who insulted the King and Benares and me over the telephone” [MTP: IVL TS 64].

James Ross Clemens ended his visit at the Redding house [new guestbook]. Sam’s guestbook shows another two-day stay by a Member of the Aquarium, or Angelfish.

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Marjorie S. Breckenridge, M.A.	From down the glen.	September 6-8
Clara Clemens	21 Fifth Ave., New York	-	We had not given up that house as yet.

Note: the entry here for Clara comes between the Sept. 6-8 and the next of Sept. 12. In his Sept. 3 to Quick he gives Sept. 10 as the date of her expected return. Clara actually returned on Sept. 9, however. See entry. She thought it inconceivable that her father would give up the NY house.

James S. Clarkson wrote on Custom House, Surveyor’s Office letterhead, NY to Clemens.

I have your letter of the fifth, and have instructed J.M. Bishop, Deputy Surveyor, to meet your daughter and her friends at Quarantine, down the bay, and to pay them every attention and help which will make their arrival home pleasant and agreeable... / We have a common tie dating back to the days when you were in a printing office at Keokuk and I in a printing office at Des Moines... [MTP].

Thomas Commerford Martin for Electrical World wrote to Lyon about the desired recording of Mark Twain’s voice. Thomas A. Edison, now in Yellowstone, and Martin felt Edison would like to make the recording himself [MTP]. Note: sadly, this was never done; or if it was, the recording was lost, as all were.

The New York Times, Sept. 8, p. 8, “New York Loses Mark Twain.”

NEW YORK LOSES MARK TWAIN

Physician Leases Fifth Avenue House and Author Will Live in Connecticut.

With the leasing of 21 Fifth Avenue for a term of years to a physician that address ceases to be the town house of Mark Twain. Mr. Clemens will spend his time principally at his Italian villa at Redding, Conn., in the future. His physicians have pointed out to him the strain of life in town during the Winter, which in his case involved attendance at many dinners given in his honor.

Even with the usual indulgence in the famous Mark Twain nap between the roast and the coffee there was still an element of weariness left for the author. Then, too, he was liable to interruption in his work, though not so liable as less known writers, since he was well guarded, some of his near relatives being unable to see him without an appointment.

At the present time the only furniture remaining in the Fifth Avenue house is a small table for the card of visitors, some chairs, a rug on the drawing room floor, and a few pictures on the walls. The author’s daughter, Miss Clemens, is due to arrive on the Caronia on Thursday. She has been traveling abroad with friends. With the party is Charles Wark [“Will”] of New York, whose engagement to Miss Clemens has been rumored. Mr. Clemens will come to town from Redding to-day to be on hand when the Caronia comes in. With the aid of the few furnishings left in the house Miss Clemens will give a reception at the old house on the evening of her arrival. It has been suggested that her engagement will be announced at that time.

The Fifth Avenue house has been leased by Dr. Robert J. Kahn for five years. It will be somewhat altered. Mr. Clemens’s billiard room will become the physician’s consulting room, while the top floor, where Mr. Clemens had his study and library, will be given over to servants.

September 9 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “We met Santa today at the Cunard pier. Paine came in pale, and I begged him not to quarrel there. He had no intention of that though. Santa came right up here to Redding and finds it very beautiful” [MTP: IVL TS 64].

Sam’s original guestbook contains the following guests: David L. Moore with Sept. 9; below Moore: Doris A.L. Fosdick, Stamford, Conn.; Beatrice Alice Beard, Flushing, L.I.; Bertha M. Jackson, Flushing, L.I.; Cornelia T. Talmage, Redding; Goyne Addison Talmage, Redding [Mac Donnell TS 2]. Note: guests assigned a single date usually came by for lunch or tea or dinner, and did not stay the night.

Clara Clemens returned to New York on the Caronia. The New York Daily Tribune, Sept. 10, p.7, covered her arrival:

MISS CLARA CLEMENS RETURNS HOME.

Plans Concert Tour to Pacific Coast and Says Father Will Not Desert New York.

Miss Clara Clemens, the contralto, and daughter of Mark Twain, who had been abroad on a concert tour arrived here yesterday [Sept. 9] on the Cunard liner Caronia. She said her trip had been successful and that she would soon make a tour of the United States extending as far as the Pacific Coast.

Mark Twain was not at the pier to meet his daughter, but as soon as the gangplank was made fast Miss Clemens received a letter from him, in which he explained that he was bilious, and, as his doctor had advised that he stay in Connecticut until the first frost, he thought it advisable not to go to the steamer to meet her. Miss Clemens said that, although her father may have known the meaning of what he wrote, she certainly did not know.

Miss Clemens said the report circulated recently that her father would abandon New York City as his home was absurd. “Just wait until the first part of the real cold weather comes on,” she said, “and you will see father coming to New York on the fastest train.”

[Note: the article is instructive in that Clara, who decorated the 21 Fifth Ave. house, found it inconceivable that her father would choose to live permanently at the Redding house, which Isabel Lyon had planned and directed. It was possibly, as Hill points out (p.205), the beginning of the rupture between the two women.]

Josephine S. Hobby wrote to Lyon (though catalogued to Clemens) offering her services for copying [MTP].

September 10 Thursday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Will [Charles Wark] came up this morning. / At early breakfast came 2 letters from Paine. Benares and I were in the loggia at breakfast and I had to have him read them, for since the day when Paine wrote a letter that must have been terrible, for he forestalled my reading of it.”

Victor Sauer wrote from Essen, Germany to ask Sam where he might procure some number of the NAR for 1908 containing another Autobiography segment, as he was going to lecture, and Twain’s books were held in great interest in Germany; he abhorred black clothing for men [MTP].

Citizens of Hartford sent a folder and engraved invitation to the Hartford Bridge Dedication on Oct. 6 [MTP].

September 11 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Benares came this afternoon” [MTP: IVL TS 64-65].

September 12 Saturday – Sam’s new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks

Silas W. Driggs
Teresa W. Driggs	From over the Ridge	September 12
Clara D. Driggs

Isabel Lyon's journal: "We worked in the garret over ms. trunks" [MTP: IVL TS 65].

Sam's A.D. included comments on Theodore Roosevelt's selection of William Howard Taft: "Things will go on well enough under this arrangement so long as a Titus succeeds a Vespasian, and we shall best not trouble about a Domitian until we get him," referring to The Lives of the Twelve Caesars by Tranquillus C. Seutonius, translated in 1796 by Alexander Thomson [Gribben 677].

September 13 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "We worked again over ms. trunks and in the afternoon drove over to the Griggs log cabin, Benares and I" [MTP: IVL TS 65].

September 14 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "I went to town with Santa" [MTP: IVL TS 65].

September 15 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "I came back from town with Santa" [MTP: IVL TS 65].

Hawaii Promotion Co. sent a press release about the imminent shipment of the koa wood mantel carved by Franz (Frank) Nickolous Otremba, who had worked on the piece the last four months [MTP].

Nathan H. Weed for National Phonograph Co. (letterhead picture's Thomas A. Edison), wrote to Sam that he'd been away from NY and so hadn't answered Lyon's about the Sept. 21 invitation which he'd suggested on Aug. 28; since he knew Martin had communicated with them about the subject (of making a recording) he would leave it with Martin [MTP].

September 16 Wednesday – Dorothy Butes wrote from England to thank Clemens for his autograph:

...my friend was delighted with it. I am sending you the long-promised snap-shot. If I have a better one taken I will send it to you. I am so glad I am a Jellyfish! An Anglican-American Jellyfish—it sounds rather sweet, doesn't it! I am longing to see my badge of membership. Do you remember "The Human Race" club that you told me about?" She wrote on about her travels and sightseeing in England, then asked, "Were you really lost in the cave, as Tom Sawyer was, & did you really see Injun Joe murder the young doctor in the grave-yard? It must have nearly frozen ou with fright! Please tell me! [MTP; not in MTAq]. Note: most likely Clemens did not give Butes the full name of his "God Damned Human Race Club."

Arthur G. Stedman, second and last son of the late Edmund Clarence Stedman, died in NYC of Bright's disease. His father died on Jan. 18, 1908 [NY Times, Sept. 17, p. 7 "Arthur G. Stedman Dead"]. Note: Arthur had assisted his father on the Library of American Literature, a series that had taxed the bank account of Charles L. Webster & Co.

September 17 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Charles Gilman Norris (1881-1945), author and playwright (see notes) in Toronto.

Dear Mr. Norris: / Someday, I hope, you will be moved to visit me here, & will obey the impulse: then I will explain why I have not long ago done some of the things which you suggest—for I have thought of them, considered them, pondered them, & waited; waited for the right time. It is coming. When it arrives, I shall know it, if alive; if dead, my absence will not affect the result—at least deleteriously.

What I have desired, & what I still desire is, to have What is Man examined by unpreoccupied (& CAPABLE) minds. Examined—not glanced at. To accomplish this, the authorship must be concealed—for the present. To publish the book with my name to it would defeat this. I want a backing of several hundred capable men before I come out of hiding—men who have read unprejudiced, & have approved. Then they are committed, & will stand to their guns; & will persuade others.

I marvel that you have found several persons who were able to put their training aside sufficiently to enable them to understand the book. I have placed it (clandestinely) before 5 or 6 competent persons—with deliciously sad results! I have read it—with comments & explanations—to six persons; three understood, three didn't. Since I finished this house & moved into it on the 18th of June, we have had about three dozen guests—all educated, all intelligent—but I have not brought the matter before one of them. They would not have understood.

I got my first person 23 years ago, when I threw out a feeler among 12 men of very superior intellect. Not one of them could understand & accept the proposition that personal merit is an impossible thing.

Yes, typewrite as many copies as you please, adding “copyright by J.W. Bothwell.” I hope your printed copy will get worn out by & by; then Ashcroft will send you another.

Very sincerely yours / S L. Clemens [MTP].

Note: from The Oxford Companion to American Literature: “Charles G. Norris, brother of Frank Norris, author of novels dealing with such problems as modern education, women in business, hereditary and environmental influences, big business, ethics and birth control.” Kathleen Thompson Norris (1880-1966) his wife, a popular novelist.

Isabel Lyon's journal: “Will has found an apartment on Styvesant Square. The King and I walked for 3 hours this afternoon down the Glen road and to the Garnet cliffs” [MTP: IVL TS 65].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam. “Mrs. Sanderson has sent to me the enclosed speech [not in file] which you made years ago defending General Grant's English.” Duneka thought it might be good “turned over to Paine” (for the biography) [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Mr. Clemens decided to use the sketch autobiography”

Percy Spalding wrote from London to advise Sam he was sending a copy of “The Tichborne Trial” under separate wrapper [MTP].

September 18 Friday – At 12:30 a.m. two burglars, Charles Hoffman and Henry Williams, broke into Sam's home in Redding, Conn. They were surprised by Isabel Lyon as they were removing silverware. As they were fleeing Claude Benchotte the French butler fired shots at them, and a neighbor, Harry A. Lounsbury, followed them. A deputy sheriff joined the chase and after a shootout at the West Redding rail station the pair was arrested [MTHL 2: 835n2; Hill 210].

Sam entered the burglars names in to his new guestbook, along with the sheriff and his other guests.

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Charles Hoffman (per SL Clemens)	The State Penitentiary (afterward).	September 18 12.00 a.m.	[* see below re: burglars]
Henry Williams (per SL Clemens)
Charles E. Wark (a guest)			[NY attorney]
Harry A. Lounsbury	{ Arrived 1.30 a.m.	September 18
George S. Banks, Dep. Sheriff	{
Dorothy Sturgis M.A.	153 Beacon st. Boston	September 18-28.

* Sam wrote on the Remarks column:

Burglars. They broke into the house at 12.30. Miss Lyon summoned Mr. Lounsbury, & he & the sheriff arrived within an hour. They & Mr. Wark tracked the burglars 6 miles to Bethel & caught them on a train. One of them shot the sheriff three times, but the sheriff held on to him & handcuffed him. On Nov. 12 they went to the penitentiary Williams (the shooter) forty [ten] years, & Hoffman for 4. The silverware they stole was recovered.

The 'Muniments' Notice to the Next Burglars, which hangs in the billiard room, is Dorothy's work, from my ink original [Note: Dorothy Sturgis was thus not in the house at the time of the robbery, but arrived at 7 p.m. on September 18 (See Sam to Blackmer). In a small oval on the bottom left of the Notice to the Next Burglars, Dorothy's name can be seen. (A "muniment" is a document as a title deed or charter by which various rights are given)]

Isabel Lyon's journal: "At 12:30 I was wakened by a sound down stairs and it was burglars. I saw them. Reporters—Dorothy Sturgis came, Benares came too" [MTP: IVL TS 65].

Sam's original guestbook included two names not found in the new guestbook for this date: Elsie Vanderhoff, and Dan Beard (with a spade symbol) [Mac Donnell TS 3].

At 2:30 a.m. in Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Theodore A. Bingham, Comissioner of Police, N.Y.C.

Dear General: / A couple of hours ago these burglars entered this house, but were interrupted in their operations & fled. They got only the following silver articles: marked, in Italian script, with Mrs. Clemens's maiden name, Olivia Langdon:

I do not want the burglars, but the silver has great value for me, because of its associations. One of the men was a professional & doubtless came from New York.

I would like to give notice to the next burglars, through you, that nothing but plated ware will be kept in the house hereafter. / Sincerely yours ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Margaret Blackmer at the Woman's Club, 9 E. 46th Street, N.Y.C.

You dear little Margaret! I am so glad to hear from you. Yesterday, in the billiard-room I said to Mr. Paine, "There's Margaret, hanging on the wall, & I know by some instinct that within 3 days I shall hear from her"—& it has come true.

I have not been away from this house since I arrived here just 3 months ago; but I am going to New York Sept. 25, (Friday), arriving toward 1 p.m., & shall walk over from the Grand Central to the Woman's Club, 9 East 46th street & call upon you & your mother. The rest of the day & evening I shall spend with my youngest daughter at the Martha Washington hotel, & then see her off to Germany next morning.

I have had a most pleasant 3 months here, with delightful guests coming & going, some staying a day or two & some a week. A while ago Louise Paine, M. A. & Dorothy Harvey M. A. were here together 6 or 7 days; Dorothy Quick, M. A. & her mother gave us 6 days; Marjorie Breckinridge M. A. left here last Monday; at 7 this evening Dorothy Sturgis M. A. & maid will arrive, & will remain until the 25th; on the 26th Miss Wallace (you remember her?) will reach New York from Europe, & she & Mr. Ashcroft will come home with me the next morning (Sunday) in the 9 a.m. train, which reaches Redding in about an hour & forty minutes.

And as soon as we can arrange the date, you & your mother must come. I hope you will like this place, & I am sure you will.

Yes indeed, dear heart, you can have any book of mine you want.

My favorites are: Joan or Arc; Prince & Pauper; Huck Finn; Tom Sawyer. I will take them to you on the 25th.

I hope you will have your shell with you, for you have been away a long time, & without it I should be almost certain to mistake you for somebody else. / With lots of love / SLC / (Curator) [MTP; MTAq 204-5].

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Francesca dear, you are nearing these shores, now, & in less than half a week you & your mother will arrive, & run up here, according to schedule. You will be very very very welcome. I hope your father can come, too. Will you please ask him? Expresses leave the Grand Central for Redding at 9 a.m. & 4.15 p.m. on all days but Saturdays, & come through in an hour & forty minutes.

Will you telephone Miss Lyon or me & tell us your train, so that we can meet you at the Redding station, which is about 20 minutes by country road from this house. / With love, ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Dorothy dear, the postcards have just arrived, & I judge you are reaching Plainfield to-day. You have had a long holiday, & I guess by your letters that you have had a healthful & delightful good time. So have we. Very pleasant guests right along, all the time. Among them a Member of the Aquarium, (Marjorie Breckinridge M. A.) Who left here last Monday. This evening Dorothy Sturgis M. A. will arrive, & remain until the 25th; & not long after that date I shall expect Margaret Blackmer M. A. & her mother to come. Yes indeed, it has been a most delightful summer for us.

With lots of love / SLC / (C.A.) Curator of the Aquarium

Burglars broke in after midnight this morning. But they were caught afterward, & are on their way to jail this afternoon.

Note from Francesca Nunnally M. A., England. She & her mother are due here next Monday for a short visit [MTP; MTAq 206].

The New York Times, p. 9, ran the following account of the Redding burglary:

BURGLARS INVADE MARK TWAIN VILLA

Captured After a Pistol Fight on a Train in Which Prisoner and Officer Are Shot.

ALARMED BY A WOMAN

Notice Posted by Mark Twain Notifying the Next Burglar Where to Find the Plated Ware.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Sept. 18.—Mark Twain's home at Redding, "Innocents at Home," was visited by two professional burglars last night. The wakefulness of Miss Lyons, the humorist's private secretary, was the undoing of the bold crooks, who were captured after a fight on a New Haven train.

Mr. Clemens today posted this notice on the door of his house:

Notice: To the Next Burglar:

[see notice text on following page]

Miss Lyon the humorist's secretary, was aroused about midnight by the sound of breaking glass in the lower part of the house. She went softly down the stairs to find a flood of light in the dining room and that the sideboard, with its solid silver, was missing from its customary place in the room. Cautiously slipping along in the shadows to a point where she could have a view of the garden, to which her attention had been called by an open window in the dining room, Miss Lyon saw two men forcing the doors and drawers of the sideboard, which they had carried out, apparently in the hope that they would not be interrupted in their work. Without giving the burglars any cause for alarm Miss Lyon summoned Mr. Clemens and the butler and then telephoned for Deputy Sheriff Banks, Harry Lounsbury, and several neighbors.

Before any of them reached the scene the burglars had fled with their booty.

Following the awakening of Miss Lyon and her discovery that burglars had been at work, search of Mark Twain's place was made by Mr. Lounsbury, the Deputy Sheriff, and neighbors, and on the lawn some distance away was found the empty drawer.

Mr. Lounsbury and Deputy Sheriff Banks found peculiar footprints, which they followed to Bethel.

Mr. Lounsbury discovered the men on the train in the smoking car. He attempted to engage them in conversation and asked them if they lived in Danbury. The men replied vaguely. Mr. Lounsbury said he noticed that both men's shoes had rubber heels, which it was said would correspond with the tracks in the roadway. When the train arrived at Redding Mr. Lounsbury got off and notified Banks that he believed the men they were after were the two to whom he had been talking. Banks boarded the train, and when an attempt was made to arrest the burglars one ran out of the car door and jumped off and the other showed fight and drew a revolver. He fired four shots, one of which struck the Sheriff in the leg, and one, the last in the struggle, hit the burglar himself in the head.

A passenger jumped into the fight and subdued the burglar with a club, cutting his head open. The burglar who jumped was found under a bridge in Brookside Park.

A physician was called and the wounds of the Sheriff and of the injured robber were attended to. Later in the morning the men were taken before Justice Hickerson for a hearing. Mr. Clemens, his daughter, Miss Clara, and Mr. Wark appeared at the hearing. The men had taken only the solid silverware and this was all recovered. The plated ware they had evidently discarded.

The hearing was held in a small room of an old-fashioned house. Justice Nickerson sitting at a little table. The witnesses and the prisoners occupied the same settee. Mr. Clemens had on his white suit.

The prisoners described themselves as Charles Hoffman, aged 30, of South Norwalk, and Henry Williams, aged 40, no address. Both men were held for the Superior Court. Other counts of assault, resisting an officer, and carrying concealed weapons were lodged against Williams. He was the wounded man. They were taken to the Bridgeport Jail this afternoon. Later they were taken before Judge William Case of the Superior Court. Williams was charged with burglary, and held under $5,000 bail. Besides the burglary charge, a second charge of assault, with intent to kill, was entered against Hoffman, and his bail fixed at $7,500.

The May 1924 issue of True Detective Magazine, p. 46-9, & 70-2, "The Love Story of Mark Twain's Burglar" told the episode from one of the burglars points of view (Henry Williams, though his name is not given; he was the burglar who shot the Sheriff); the tale was set in a romantic envelope by one of the burglars, who was on his "last job" after being changed by the love of "Alice." Names were changed, and even the date was in error as the night of Sept. 16 instead of Sept. 17. In this narrative the following account is offered after the two burglars were apprehended:

We were to before the justice of the peace at Redding Center. In the dingy back room of the Town Hall the handcuffs were removed from The Smiler [pseudonym for his partner in crime] and me, and we were taken before him.

NOTICE.

To the next Burglar.

There is nothing but plated ware in this house, now and henceforth.

You will find it in that brass thing in the dining-room over in the corner by the basket of kiltens.

If you want the basket, put the kiltens in the brass thing. Do not make a noise - it disturbs the family.

You will find rubbers in the front hall, by that thing which has the umbrellas in it, chiffonier, I think they call it, or pergola, or something like that.

Please close the door when you go away!

Very truly yours
S. Clemens

A carriage drawn by a pair of spirited horses stopped at the Town Hall. Mark Twain, his daughter, Miss Clara Clemens, and his social secretary, entered.

As he passed very close to me, he stopped long enough to deliver a scathing lecture on morality, ending by denouncing me as “a disgrace to the race.” I was so weakened from loss of blood and so crushed by the thought that I would never see Alice again, that I did not feel the sting of his mental punishment. ...

The aged humorist took a seat near the Justice of the Peace, and court convened. We were given a preliminary hearing, the bag with the stolen silver and my revolver being produced as evidence [the Sheriff has been shot by the burglar during a struggle on apprehension]. It was a clear case of burglary. We had been caught with the goods. A heavy bail, which neither of us could furnish, was the ultimate conclusion, and the Fairfield County Jail at Bridgeport the lock-up.

...

The sentenced me to ten years in the Connecticut State Prison at Wethersfield. My partner was given five years, because technically he had not attempted to resist arrest.

Alice A. Driggs wrote from New Canaan, Conn. to Sam. “Hurrah! / We are glad you Reddingites were smart enough to catch those two burglars” and felt it might be the same burglars who had robbed homes there [MTP].

M. Lightpen wrote from St. Louis to suggest that the two burglars were really looking for the Ascot Cup! [MTP]. Note: While in England the newspapers spoofed that Clemens had made off with the Cup.

B.A. Myers of Myers & Levitt Amusement Enterprises, NYC, wrote to offer Sam $1,500 per week for ten weeks in Vaudeville [MTP].

Melville E. Stone of Assoc. Press sent a telegram to Sam. “Are you willing to pay carfare and the other expenses New York to Redding and return for two efficient and trustworthy burglars / Best of reference” [MTP]. Note: see Clemens’ reply of Sept. 19.

John Elton Wayland sent a telegram to Lyon c/o Clemens about the burglary: “Are you and the king all right can I do anything” [MTP].

Later, with the help of Dorothy Sturgis, who arrived at 7 p.m. for a visit,. Sam wrote the above “NOTICE!” insert [MTP]. Note: perhaps too small to see here is Dorothy’s name inside the oval on the lower left corner, just to the right of the drawing of a burglar.

In Gloucester, Mass. Jean Clemens sent a telegram to Isabel Lyon. “Couldn’t get room tried for, what hotel shall I go to [?]” [MTP].

September 19 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Marjorie Breckenridge, in Brooklyn.

Marjorie dear, we all thank your Mother ever so much for her invitation, but meantime I have been accepting an invitation to a matinee on the 26th, & was waiting for the tickets to come, so that I could send a couple to you & your mother & ask you to come to that matinée. The tickets have just arrived, & I enclose two. Do come if you can, for they say Billie Burke is just irresistible in this piece. Indeed you must, must, must come! At 2 p. m. Saturday Sept. 26 you will find Miss Lyon & me waiting for you at the door of the Lyceum Theatre, 45th st between Broadway & 6th avenue. But if by chance we should be delayed, don’t wait for us but go into the box & wait for us there. You won’t have to wait ten minutes.

Dorothy Sturgis M. A. arrived yesterday evening. She will stay till the 25th. We’ve been playing billiards this morning. On Tuesday Francesca M. A. will arrive from Europe but can stay with us only a day. Margaret Blackmer M. A. is coming before long, with her mother. They reached New York day before yesterday from the Pacific. After luncheon Dorothy, Miss Lyon, Ashcroft & I will drive down & call at the house of the Sheriff & inquire. He was shot by one of the burglars in the scuffle early yesterday morning.

Miss Lyon & I walked down (by way of the old bridge) to your house day before yesterday & climbed those cliffs that fence your clearing. It is to be repeated tomorrow. I found your porch a comfortable & restful & welcome place after that violent climb. We returned home by a perfectly charming woodland trail that I hadn't known of before. We will exploit it when you come. / Good-bye, dear. With lots of love—...[MTP]. Note: Billie Burke was starring in Love Watches at the Lyceum Theatre, opening on Aug. 27.

Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
S.J. Cholmeley-Jones	_____	September 19
Dorothea Gilder	Tyringham, Mass	September 19-21

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Dorothea Gilder for over Sunday. / Last night my nervousness was so great that I went to the billiard room at eleven where D. Sturgis and D. Gilder were playing at billiards with the King and I watched them from my perch, the observer or umpires seat in window" [MTP: IVL TS 65-66].

James W. Clinton wrote from Passaic, NJ to ask if the "William Clinton" mentioned in Sam's autobiography in the Sept. 13, 1908 issue of the New York Tribune was the man's true name, and if so, was he still alive? [MTP].

Porter F. Cope for the Anti-Vaccination League of Penn. wrote to ask Sam if they might use his name for the upcoming conference [MTP].

Captain John W. Crawford wrote from Manistee, Michigan:

My dear Twain: - / I am sending you, under separate cover, my Broncho Book and I have taken the liberty of writing a verse on the flyleaf, to a man who has rubbed up against old Mother Nature in the early days of the wild and fuzzy west. The Broncho speaks for itself. I am sure there are some things in my little modest volume that you will appreciate and thoroughly understand. After you have glanced through it, I should be very glad to receive just a line from you and remember I am going to notify you in good time so that we can have the greatest western camp-fire just among a few thoroughbreds that have ever been seen in New York.

Some time I should be glad to entertain you at my Glen Mineral Springs which I am fixing up for a very beautiful summer resort. Trusting you are in good health and with very best wishes, believe me, in clouds and sunshine, / Your Friend J.W. Crawford / Capt. Jack [MTP]. Note: The Broncho Book, Being Buck-Jumps in Verse (1908); not in Gribben.

Gustav Haller for Security Mortgage, Pasadena, Calif. wrote to Sam having read in the local papers that Twain was "contemplating taking up a residence in Southern California—probably in Pasadena," and offered their real estate services [MTP]. Note: the origin of this rumor is not clear, but Charles Langdon had recently spent time in S. California for his health and visiting a friend.

Frederick A. Wright, clergyman wrote from Brooklyn, NY to Sam. Wright's wife had met Clemens at George Washington Cable's house in New Orleans as a girl. This a thoughtful and sincere fan letter which details the joys of the HF characters [MTP].

September 19? Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam drafted a collect telegram reply to the Sept. 18 from Melville E. Stone of the Associated Press, NYC. "No. I can get burglars here at club rates and they pay their own fare. Can you lend me a dog? I want one that will leave strawberries and cream to eat burglars" [MTP].

September 20 Sunday – Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
F. Oppen	New York	" [September] 20	[Note: IVL: misspells Oppen as "Opher"]
C.J. Taylor	" "	" "

Note: Frederick Burr Oppen (1857-1937), pioneer of American newspaper comic strips; famous for Happy Hooligan strip; also political cartoons for Hearst's campaign battling the trusts. The above pair were also in Sam's original guestbook, along with: Clara Clemens; Dorothea Gilder, Tyringham; Dorothy Sturgis, Boston; R.G. Cholmeley-Jones, N.Y.C. [Mac Donnell TS 3].

Charles H. Battey wrote from Providence, RI to Sam, enclosing two pages of verse about Sam's latest "adventure" with the burglars [MTP].

Margaret Blackmer sent a telegram to Sam: "So Glad they did not steal you / Margaret Blackmer M.A." [MTP].

September 21 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "F. Opher [sic Frederick Burr Oppen] & C.J. Taylor / Santa to N.Y." [MTP: IVL TS 66]. See guests above for Sept. 20.

Helen Kerr Blackmer (Mrs. Henry Myron Blackmer) wrote to Sam.

Hail the dear Curator of the wonderful Aquarium back with the angel-fish Margaret and her mother on Friday at one o'clock or thereabouts! There is a lovely little private dining room on the first floor where "new guests" are entertained by members & there we can enjoy a little visit undisturbed. The angel-fish has grown—if possible—dearer & sweeter—and I'm sure you will think that she resembles more than ever your dear Susy— / Anticipating with much pleasure seeing you on Friday—very sincerely yours / The angel-fish's mother [MTP].
Note: in Twain's hand: "Mrs. H.K. Blackmer / The Woman's Club / 9 East 46th street / New York. / I accept with great pleasure / S.L. Clemens"

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam. "How foolish burglars are. Not content with embarking upon a profession which entails unwholesome night work and is often closely confining, they try to rob a house knowing that its most valuable jewel (genius) is unburglarable. / But I am glad you escaped and congratulate you heartily" [MTP].

James M. McCool, grocer in Montgomery, Ala. to praise Clemens for "the softening influences of your works" [MTP].

Nettie Moore Powell (Mrs. S. Powell) wrote from Redding, Conn. asking how she might get Sam's Autobiography complete [MTP].

In Gloucester, Mass. Jean Clemens sent a telegram to Clara Clemens in Redding. "Reach city at six am. Uncertain about wisdom of taking Anna" [MTP]. Note: from Jean's Sept. 22 to Lyon, we know that the city she was planning to reach was NYC.

September 22 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Benares goes" [MTP: IVL TS 66].

Charles Henry Meltzer, reporter for the New York American, visited Sam to question him about the pamphlet that Elinor Glyn had been circulating. The visit is referred to in Meltzer's letter of the following day, Sept. 23.

In New York, Jean Clemens wrote to Isabel Lyon [MTP]

Dear Lioness; / Saturday the grain man brought a bill for horse-food bought since May. I paid the two orders of Aug. 21st & Spt.—and Dr. Knowles succeeded in getting him to send the bill to the Cowles, first by telling him that if they failed to pay the $41 odd (as without doubt they will) Father would pay it. In case you get the bill it will be from Burnham Bros. The fish man, Nelson, will send his bill directly to you. I have two others, with the slips, here, which I will send to you if you like, if not I'll wait until you come down.

Also, I wish you would write Dr. James H. Knowles East Gloucester, a nice little note & ask him for his bill. They had been so lovely to me that I hadn't the courage to ask for it for the few times I consulted him. If it hadn't been for Dr. K. Mr. Burnham might have either forced me to pay the close to $50 bill or held Scott [her horse] as security. I was somewhat short of funds & I had no very large amount left in the bank, wherefore I was thankful to be helped out of the excessively awkward position. Clara doesn't think there are any rugs that aren't being used, but you can let me know in time to buy some, if need be. Then, you remember my blue dress, muff & boa, of course. It's so nice & considerate to load a weary, ill, be-robberized mortal down with clothing & furniture!

Up to now, Lioness, the money that I have paid out for household things & fares, etc. amounts to $198.27. I don't need my allowance before I sail but I should like a check for the above amount. Hoping you are better & with much love, / Jean. / I believe George will reach R. tomorrow [MTP].

N.E. Agent and E.R. Kidder for Thomson's & Co. distillers, London, wrote to Sam after seeing in the NY World an article (enclosed) about his burglary.

Where I underline in red I notice you use the proper beverage as you mention (SCOTCH) but as I am not sure it is (ROYAL ARMS SCOTCH) I am sending you some samples of same so you can have one in each room and one in (the brass thing beside the Kittens) also one in (the thing in the front hall). / Trusting you will have used these up long before the Kittens are cats, I am / Most Respectfully... [MTP].

Robert J. Collier wrote to Sam that he'd promised Alice Minnie Herts to ask Sam for a "very brief autograph pronuciamento about the Educational Theatre which is intended to enclose in a facsimilie form with an appeal for funds." He was "off for a month's shooting in Wyoming" hoping to see him on return [MTP].

F.A. Paddock for Rochester NY Grace Church wrote to ask Sam if he might give them a lecture to help raise funds for their new church [MTP].

H. Tree wrote from Hastings, England to Sam after seeing his address in the papers regarding the burglary. Tree enclosed a "copy of an old print" of the tower he thought Joan of Arc was confined in [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Ansd."

Annie E. Trumbull wrote on a picture postcard showing H.H. Rogers "Summer Residence" in Fairhaven: "I read your ms. speech in the library this evening and between that and the burglary notice I am ... impelled to write and thank you again being a citizen of Connecticut" [MTP].

J. Perry Worden wrote on American Consulate, Bristol notepaper to Sam after reading of the burglary.

Perhaps the account of your experience with the burglar as the Daily Telegraph of London summed it up, may not come before you; hence the enclosed [not in file]. / Mrs. Worden who called upon you in Florence joins in wishing you the blessing of health assured of the warm place you have in the hearts of ...the world [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Dear Mr. Worden"

September 22? Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Helen Kerr Blackmer (Mrs. Henry Myron Blackmer) (mother of Margaret Gray Blackmer). "I accept with great pleasure. / S.L. Clemens" [MTP]. Note: because Sam wrote on Sept. 18 to Margery as if his call at the Woman's Club had already been accepted, it may be that this note predates Sept. 22, which the MTP has placed it with question mark.

September 23 Wednesday – Sam’s original guestbook contained one entry for this date: Harriet W. Barbour, Farmington, Conn. [Mac Donnell TS 3].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Ill all day – nervous shock” [MTP: IVL TS 66].

J.H. Burchford for the Circumnavigators Club wrote from Burlington, NJ, a short note to advise a “prospectus” of the club was being sent, “and we should be very glad to receive your application” [MTP].

Mary L. Howden wrote to answer Sam’s ad for a stenographer in this day’s NY Herald. “I am a Scotch girl, an Episcopalian, refined and well educated” [MTP]. Note: Mary would be called “Miss Mollie” after she was hired to replace the dismissed Josephine Hobby as Sam’s stenographer. She was put in charge of answering and sorting Sam’s voluminous mail and appears to have begun employment on Oct. 1, 1908, with her earliest annotations on Sam’s incoming mail on Oct. 3. Howden would be replaced by a male stenographer, William E. Grumman. Isabel Lyon had fired Josephine Hobby, who Hill calls “Paine’s ally.” Howden had answered an ad in September. She was replaced by Grumman on Feb. 3, 1909 [208, 229].

Dr. Louisa H. Richardson’s short note recommending Mary Howden as “most faithful and painstaking” in her stenography work, is in the file with Howden’s above letter to Sam [MTP]

Charles Henry Meltzer wrote twice to Sam, the first from Redding, the second from NYC. He was a correspondent for the New York American and his editor had requested him to “annoy you with a few questions... / Mrs Eleanor [sic Elinor] Glyn has been circulating—privately a pamphlet which, it seems to be published, and which embodies a summary of an alleged (apparently genuine) interview with yourself and what seems to be your written comment.” Was the interview and Sam’s comment genuine? He enclosed a copy of the “Glyn matter” and expressed the desire to meet while in Redding.

Meltzer’s second letter from NYC reveals he had visited and interviewed Clemens the previous day, Sept. 22:

My Dear Sir. / I had written my story and turned it in to the Editor when quite by chance—happening to call at the office. I was handed your message. You will believe me when I say that it greatly disappointed me—For I will not pay you the poor compliment of assuming that you supposed I was talking en l’air today without purpose. — That would have been disrespectful to you. Of course I supposed that you knew I was interviewing you for publication. Moreover, if you recall the circumstances, you twice in the course of our conversation told me that you had no objection to my quoting your very words—and indeed asked me to do so—especially in expressing your opinion of certain “indiscretions” of that lady [Glyn]. Only at certain points had I put exact words in your mouth in my story and I had been careful to explain that I did not pretend to be literally quoting you—I have referred the whole matter to the managing Editor, who is a most courteous gentleman—quite desirous to do everything fair and decent.

He says (quite truly) that the pamphlet is public property anyhow, as it has been circulating in London & New York. That will therefore be printed in the “American” in any case and be read all over the country. It was with the wish to give you an opportunity of commenting and repudiating or qualifying the statements attributed to you by Mrs. G. that the “America” requested me to interview you. —The intention was entirely courteous and deferential and I had hoped you understood this. —If you wish to modify what was said to me yesterday, or to omit certain remarks, it would give the paper pleasure to accommodate you. But would it not be less rather than more desirable to have those statements of Mrs. G.’s go out to the world without your protest and explanation than with them? — I shall endeavor to call you up tomorrow by telephone and should appreciate your courtesy if you would kindly answer me yourself. — It would gratify the “American” if, on re-consideration, you let the matter go as now planned and waived your objections to the publication. If you absolutely wished (though time is an important factor in all journalistic things) possibly the Editor would submit my story to you for you to revise. But I have no authority to say this and the matter is (technically) out of my hands. — Very sincerely and without presuming to counsel you, it does seem a case in which hard plain speech was more than permissible; and I believe everyone would think the better of you for using it. / With many thanks... [MTP].

W.W. Sanford wrote from NYC to send Sam a copy of the Christian Herald which contained an account of Sanford's mother's life. "I have often heard her speak so feelingly and so kindly of your mother and have many times heard her relate the occurrences of those early days at Fredonia, N.Y. / I thought it might interest you to read a few lines..." [MTP].

Thomas Weiss sent a picture postcard (of a fountain) from Munich, Germany with a brief salutation in German [MTP].

September 24 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to William Dean Howells.

Oh I reckon you will be able to stand such abuse as my autobiography will deal out to you. Particularly as you will be in heaven & not caring a dam in that distant future day appointed for the appearance of the Auto in print.

But—speaking of the burglary: I thought it was merely a pretty little adventure & useful to joke about—but no! It happened 6 days ago, but not a woman in this house has had a whole solid hour's sleep since. I mean Clara, Miss Lyon & all the others. They drop into feverish cat-naps, & at the very slightest & almost inaudible noises they spring to a sitting posture, panting & gasping & quaking. It is pitiful. They look wan & haggard, & Miss Lyon has kept her bed for the last two days. Clara left for New York promptly & never wants to sleep in the house again. Miss Lyon & two of the maids will soon go away for a week & busy themselves with theatres & other burglar-abolishing restfulnesses.

Lately I was once more reading your incomparable Tuscan Cities—a book [1886] whose details I love to forget, so that I can read them again with the pristine relish. If I had a memory I should know the book by heart by this time.

Damn the flies!—there's a million of them swarming around me, this sultry close day. / Good-bye, / Yrs ever [MTHL 2: 834-5]. Note: the source adds, "apparently a missing letter from Howells made jocular inquiry about his role in Mark Twain's autobiographical Dictation" [n1].

Sam also inscribed a copy of JA to Marguerite Schmidt (Schmitt): "To / Mademoiselle Marguerite Schmitt, / with the high esteem & the / friendly regards of / The Author. / Sept. 24/08". Sam added the very last paragraph from JA, noting from page 461 :

"Love, Mercy, Charity, Fortitude, War, Peace, Poetry, Music—these may be symbolised as any shall prefer: by figures of either sex & of any age; but a slender girl in her first young bloom, with the martyr's crown upon her head, & in her hand the sword that severed her country's bonds—shall not this, & no other, stand for PATRIOTISM through all the ages until time shall end?" [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Benares [Ashcroft] came back" [MTP: IVL TS 66].

Manfred Goldschmidt wrote from NYC to Sam, enclosing a letter and translation by his sister who was 21 and had lived in Germany for eleven years [MTP].

Julia Langdon Loomis (Mrs. Edward E. Loomis) wrote to Sam on notepaper from French Lick Springs Hotel (Ind.) for which she apologized. Was there a chance he might come and visit them at their country home in Short Hills, NJ? It wasn't far from Redding [MTP]. Note: IVL: "answered"

Inez Shannon wrote from on Gerard Hotel, NYC letterhead to ask Sam for a fifteen-minute interview from “the daughter of one of your boyhood schoolmates at Hannibal—namely—‘Fanny McFarland’. Before she died she told me to make myself known to you.” Shannon needed advice badly for things she could not explain on paper. She enclosed a very large playbill picturing “Inez Shannon And Her Children—Frances, Pat and Zyllah” from the Morning Telegraph, NY, July 26, 1908 [MTP].

William Singerman for the Children’s Educational Theatre wrote to thank Sam for his “very beautiful photograph” [MTP].

September 25 Friday – Sam was in NYC to see daughter Jean off for Berlin, where she would be treated by a German physician, Professor Hofrath von Reuvers, recommended by Dr. Frederick Peterson, Jean’s primary physician. William Dean Howells and Sam spent some time together [MTHL 837n1]. Note: Clemens likely spent the night in a hotel and saw Jean off early the next morning.

Shelden writes that it was Lyon’s maneuvers which sent Jean abroad:

Though Lyon was successful at preventing Jean from coming home for the summer, she knew that the short of Eastern Point would lose its appeal as soon as the weather turned cold. By September, she would need to find another place to send Jean or risk having her at Redding. A solution came to her when she heard of a medical professor in Berlin—Hofrath von Reuvers—who was supposedly achieving great results in his work with epilepsy patients. Actually, Dr. Von Reuvers’s treatments were no better than Dr. Peterson’s, but Lyon probably exaggerated their effectiveness in order to create a good excuse for sending Jean abroad. She knew that a long stay in Germany wasn’t something Jean would object to. After all, Jean was fluent in the language, and she had enjoyed living in Berlin with the rest of her family when she was eleven. If Lyon wanted an effective way to keep father and daughter apart for another year, sending her to Germany made sense [256-7].

Note: various biographers have ascribed various motives to Lyon; here Shelden takes the darker view, while Hill claims Dr. Peterson recommended six or eight months for Jean in Berlin. It is undeniable at least, that Jean’s seizures frightened the delicate, melodramatic Lyon. Shelden further argues that Lyon worked for months to gain Dr. Peterson’s approval of sending Jean to Berlin. Isabel Lyon continues to be an enigmatic figure in Twain’s life. Lystra adds another important detail to the von Reuver story—that he had become known to Lyon through the Stanchfields, “who were enthusiastic about his treatment of their daughter” [142]. Lystra further writes:

Peterson had in fact written to another doctor, whom he considered the best in Germany, and was waiting for a reply to his query. Lyon, however, preferred to make her own arrangements for Jean, although, despite Peterson’s impression that all had been settled by mid-August, she did not request Dr. von Reuvers’s services until September 4. And he did not mail his confirmation until September 16, only ten days before Jean’s scheduled departure [142-3].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “The King, Dorothy and I to N.Y. to see Jean off. Benares doing all the wonderful little things. We went to see Blanche Bates in “The Fighting Chance” [MTP: IVL TS 66]. Note: see insert ad.

I. Samuelson & Co., Importers of Cigars, wrote from Memphis, Tenn. to Sam. “Your letter of Sept. 19th was referred to us as the reliable tobacconist and cigarist of Memphis. We are pleased to state that we believe we can fill the bill to your entire satisfaction. / We are sending you under separate cover twist of the real genuine article, Tennessee home grown leaf tobacco” [MTP].

September 26 Saturday – At 11 a.m., Jean Clemens sailed for Germany on the Pretoria, accompanied by Anna Sterritt, and Marguerite Schmidt. On the dock waving goodbye were her father, Isabel Lyon and Dorothy Quick. Jean would cable her father on Sept. 30 that she was well and having a comfortable voyage [Sept. 30 to L. Paine; MTOW 179; Hill 213]. Note: MTHL 837n1 erroneously gives Sept. 25 as Jean's sailing date; Howells' Oct. 30 refers to the time the two spent in NYC "three weeks ago" [837]. Only one ship sailed from NYC on this date to Germany (Hamburg), the Praetoria [NY Times, Sept. 26, p.7, "Sailing to Europe To-Day"].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Jean, pathetic and wan, sailed at eleven today on the Pretoria, with her Anna and Marguerite Schmitt [sic]. / In the afternoon the King had a box at the Lyceum to see Billie Burke in her new play 'Love Watches.'" [MTP: IVL TS 66]. Note: a comedy in four acts by Robert De Flers and Gaston Caillavet [Gribben 180].

Sam's original guestbook contains the following entries for this date (not transcribed into the new guestbook): Meta G. Southmayd, East Orange, N.J.; Meta A. Southmayd, East Orange, N.J.; Julia H. Sanford, Redding Ridge; Imogen Hawthorne Deming, Redding; "X" Hawthorne Deming, His Mark, Redding [Mac Donnell TS 3]. Note: p. 4 was left blank. p.5 continued without a new date for: Adelaide Deming, Litchfield, Conn.; Mary Ashton Wade, Boston [5].

James Ross Clemens wrote from St. Louis to Sam, jesting about the burglary and thanking for "a delightful treat" of his stay at Stormfield [MTP].

Madame Y. Miral wrote from Tunis, N. Africa to ask Sam if "during the past twelve years, gold has been found in the States" [MTP].

September 27 Sunday – The New York American, p. 1 section 2 ran an interview of Mark Twain by Charles Henry Meltzer, about the pamphlet Mark Twain on Three Weeks that Elinor Glyn had published earlier in the year, probably in January. The pamphlet had contained Clemens' supposed verbatim opinion of Glyn's Three Weeks, her scandalous but popular novel which depicted an adulterous relationship. Sam cleared up the matter of the pamphlet, which he called "not important," and set the record straight, that Glyn put words in his mouth in trying to promote her work, and had left out the most important aspect of his opinion, that it had been a mistake for her to publish her book.

Twain Says He Told Her "Book a Mistake."

By Charles Henry Meltzer.

When I placed a copy of the pamphlet in the hands of Mark Twain, he accepted it in the philosophic attitude so characteristic of the man, and began to read it and make his comments as the reading progressed. He then dictated the following statement to me for publication in The American:

"This is not an important matter. I can say in two minutes all it is worthwhile to say about it. Let me dictate it to you, and you write it down. Proceed:

"I am not well pleased with her conduct in publishing in a printed pamphlet (as charged by you) a private conversation which I had with her; also for making me talk in the first person, when she could not by any possibility reproduce the words I used, since she did not take me down in shorthand.

"She put into my mouth humiliatingly weak language, whereas I used exceedingly strong language—much too strong for print, and also much too indelicate for print—a fact which she has fully recognized by not reproducing any of it.

"Inadequate as was her report of my sermon, she got at a good part of the substance of it, but she left out its only worthwhile feature—which was the argument I offered that her book was a mistake, since, while it uttered a very large truth, it was a sort of truth which the world for wise reasons lets on to be unaware of and does not talk publicly about—a sort of truth which is best suppressed, because it is not a wholesome one and its discussion is much more likely to do harm than good.

“I think Mrs. Glyn originated the idea of getting you to publish that private conversation. It has the look of it. I think she gave you that typewritten report of it. It looks like the very one she showed to me the time I told her it was a quite extraordinary piece of misreporting, and much below her literary capabilities.

“I am afraid she wants another advertisement of her book. I am sorry, for it is a very harmful and very readable book, though I did not pay it the extravagant compliments which she has put into my mouth.

“There, I think of nothing further to say. And it is just as well, for your space is valuable and so is my time.” [MTCI 673-4]. Note: Charles Henry Meltzer (1853-1936), translator and playwright. See also Neider’s version of MT’s Auto, p. 353-7, and Gribben p. 262.

Sam’s new guestbook includes day visitors and a two-day stay by an angelfish with mother:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Cora W. Nunnally	Peachtree Road, Atlanta, Ga	)September 27-29	[*]
Frances Nunnally M.A.	“ “ “ “	) “ “
Uneida? W. Teets	Redding Ridge	“ [27]
J.W. Teets	“ “	“ “	[Joseph W. Teets]
D. Sanford	“ “	“ “	[David C. Sanford]
Samuel T. Dutton	New York	“ “

Note: Dr. Samuel Train Dutton (b.1849), educator, coauthored the first school administration textbook, The Administration of Public Education in the United States (1908). He was secretary of the Peace Society of the City of New York, headed by Andrew Carnegie.

* Sam wrote in the Remarks Column the following:

“Francesca.” The year before—aged 16—when I was on the other side to receive an Oxford degree, she helped me pay calls in London every day for two weeks. Her picture is in the billiard room with the other M.A.^s (Members of the Aquarium.)

The Aquarium is a club of 12 school girls. I appointed them. I am Curator (otherwise Autocrat) and the only male member.

Subordinate Officers:

Clara Clemens, Mother Superior

Miss Lyon, Chatelaine.

Daniel Frohman, Legal Staff.

R.W. Ashcroft — — “ “

The Aquarium’s Official Device / is an Angel-Fish [MTP].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “This morning 8 of us, the King, Benares, Dorothy Sturgis, Mrs. Nunally, Francesca, Santa and I came home into this beautiful wonderful country” [MTP: IVL TS 67].

Friedrich Henke wrote a two-page letter in German to Sam. Apologized for bothering Twain by saying that he is a lover of his books and that he cannot get them at the public libraries because they are constantly checked out. Explained he got Twain’s address from reading his “Abenteuer mit den Dieben” (“adventures with the thieves”) in a newspaper. He identified himself as a young man of 16 years of age training to become a bicycle and car mechanic. He said he would like to emigrate to America with his mother, to join their relatives in Hiawatha, Kansas; announced if he got to America, he would visit Twain. Asked for a reply [MTP]. Note: translation summary courtesy of Holger Kersten.

Mabel Lakie Patterson from Miles City, Mont. wrote a thankful fan letter to Sam [MTP].

September 28 Monday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “On Saturday I saw everything to be done in the N.Y. house and not a whit done that Katie had said should be done. So this morning I set out for N.Y. and with Will Wark we worked savagely all day—going from garret to cellar. Santa came in at 6—for Mary has tonsillitis, and Benares came too” [MTP: IVL TS 67].

Sylvester Baxter wrote from Boston to Sam after reading in the paper the account of Clemens’ speech at the Whittier birthday dinner back in 1877.

Dear old Mark: - / I was delighted to read yesterday your account of your experience at the Atlantic Dinner in honor of Whittier’s seventieth birthday. I was there myself as a very young author, having lately returned from studies in Germany. I was, I believe, the “kid” of the company, and had merely contributed to the Atlantic a couple of poems that Howells liked and an article on the theater in Germany which had then, I believe, not appeared.

I want to tell you that your speech at the time gave me great delight, and I could not account for the frosty reception that it received. I felt about it then precisely as you feel now. I believe I laughed immoderately. Howells, a little while afterwards, told me that he really enjoyed it himself, and, for his part, he could not see anything out of the way in it.

In those days there was, I think, too great a tendency to take authors solemnly, and the eminent ones, I fear were reciprocatingly inclined also to take themselves solemnly, and to accept their roosting places upon the pedestals assigned to them as Exalted Ones. I was talking about those old-fashioned tendencies with Bliss Perry not long ago, and he agreed with me. Authors now-a-days, I think, as a rule,—that is, those who amount to anything,—do not like to be taken solemnly and assigned to pedestals....

.... It seemed to me queer at the time that Emerson, Longfellow, and Holmes, did not appreciate the fun of it, and appeared to consent to let it pass that they felt themselves objects of blasphemy. Really they ought to have thanked you. ... [MTP].

Miss Annie Sullivan wrote from Connellsville, Pa. to Sam enclosing poetry and asking if he would tell her if they were any good [MTP]. Note: IVL: “return poems”

Mrs. R.M. Wallace wrote from NYC to Sam. Hers was a melancholy and melodramatic appeal, having been directed by Ralph W. Ashcroft in NYC that Clemens no longer lived in the City. She was working to finish her late husband’s work, “The Flowers and Plants of Robert Burns,” and would send letters from Andrew Carnegie, William Winter, Dr. Henry Van Dyke “and others” once she got back to West Gloucester [MTP]. Note: the envelope was not mailed, and likely delivered by Ashcroft.

Chandler N. Wayland wrote from Stonington, Conn. to Sam. “I have just read your account of that old time Boston dinner. I only remember now, reading about it in the papers at the time and feeling that you were ‘in for it!’ How different it comes out from what it seemed then. / And you were funny.” He closed hoping to see Clemens in Bermuda again this winter [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Oct 20 /08”

September 29 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Work all day long—packing and clearing out the dreadful rubbish of many years’ accumulating. / Bought a bicycle” [MTP: IVL TS 67].

Ralph W. Ashcroft came to Sam’s at 4:15 p.m. After dinner they played billiards until 10:30 p.m. Sam lost [Sept. 30 to Sturgis]. Note: likely Ashcroft delivered Mrs. R.M. Wallace’s appeal on this visit.

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam. “I had an awfully nice time at your house yesterday, and I hope you will let this ‘Autobiography of John Stuart Mill’ help say to you how pleasant it was.” He enclosed a printed list of Sam’s books that had been fire damaged for which they proposed “a kind of fire sale” [MTP].

George William Hill for US Dept. of Agriculture, division of publications wrote to Sam. "In reply to your letter of September 26, I have to say that the Volume of the Experiment Record should have been 9 instead of 11, and this copy of the publication will be sent to you" [MTP].

Burges Johnson for Judge's Weekly wrote to ask for a funny anecdote for their Christmas issue [MTP].

Roi Cooper Megrue for Elisabeth Marbury wrote to Isabel Lyon (though catalogued to Clemens) [MTP].

Mary Yates Watson wrote to Sam. Unfortunately, the letter is nearly illegible, what with thin paper, bleed through and a scrawl that any inebriated invertibrate would be proud of [MTP].

September 30 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Louise Paine in Locust Valley, N.Y.,

Dear Louise, I was very glad to hear from you. Your father brought back the plated ware to-day, & I have forgiven him, for he did not know it was plated or he would not have taken it. He thought it was silver; that was the only reason he took it, he said to himself. One is not blameable for mistakes, we all make them. A mistake is not a crime, it is only a miscarriage of judgement.

Your father & mother & Mr. & Mrs. Verbach have just gone. We had a very pleasant hour or two together.

We had two fishes & some other nice guests up to yesterday, when they all went away, & Miss Lyon & my daughter with them. And so I am to be all alone now several days, then on Friday we shall have another angel-fish & her mother, & Mr. Ashcroft.

My daughter Jean sailed for Germany Saturday & is now in mid-ocean. I had a wireless message from her a few minutes ago saying she is well & is having a comfortable voyage.

Your father is coming to play billiards with me to-morrow—then I shan't be lonesome.

With love & all good wishes— / ... [MTP; MTAq 210].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

You dear delightful Annianlouise! You cannot realize how much we all miss you, nor what a continuity charm your presence was, nor how it pervaded this house like a fragrance & refreshed its mouldy & antique atmosphere with "the unbought grace of youth." I wish you were back again. However, if wishing could do any good, you would be already back. It was lovely of your mother to let us have you, & I hope & trust she will let us have you again soon. Will she? Pray say she will.

Yes, we played billiards that night & Benares beat me by one point, (that is, by two of his points, which is one of mine.) Yesterday Miss Lyon failed to find a comrade for me, so Benares came up in the 4.15; & after dinner he played the Erbkönig twice for me, then we played billiards until 10.30. He made a 150 points while I made 280: so he beat me again, & worse than before. He was to have stayed here with me until tomorrow, but he is gone; Miss Lyon telephoned him while we were at breakfast, & he left by the 10.31, half an hour before your letter came. And so all day today, & all day tomorrow & all day next day there isn't going to be anybody here but me, & I don't count, as personal society. These aren't the "bes' g.d. days" for me, for sure.

Mr. Lounsbury has just this minute been in, with a "find." It is the stolen plated ware. The burglars hid it behind a rock almost in front of that farm house which he says you called beautiful. I do not remember which one that was. The finding was an accident, & happened early this morning.

Yesterday morning, after the rainstorm I went down to the gorge to see the results. You can't think what a cataract was raging past the Brushwood Bay's seat! But it was a double stream, & needed some practised experts to dam one of them & concentrate the waters in a single volume.

"And say we shall always be thus."

That was lovely, & just perfect, until you took it back in the postscript. Why did you do it, unless the sentiment was a jest? I don't want it to be a jest. Come Annianlouise dear, you mustn't say it was a sarcasm: I wouldn't have you say that for anything. In my belief it wasn't a jest when you wrote it, because I think it goes without saying that if it had been, it would have stopped in your thoughts & you wouldn't have written it. I am going to believe that the postscript was a momentary afterthought, & you underestimated the force of it. Isn't this solution correct? [MTP; MTAq 211-12]. Note: Der Erlkönig, was a poem by Goethe used in art songs by several composers, the most famous being by Franz Schubert, his Opus.1.

Jean Clemens cabled her father. The cable is not extant but referred to in Sam's to Louise Paine, Sept. 30

Isabel Lyon's journal: "This morning I was exhausted and sent out to Redding for Benares to come in and take me home" [MTP: IVL TS 67].

October – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Amelia D. Hookway, principal of the George Howland Elementary school in Chicago.

P. S. to my secretary's letter:

Dear Mrs. Hookway: /Although I am full of the spirit of words this morning—a rarity with me lately—I must steal a moment or two for a word in person; for I have been reading the eloquent account in the Record-Herald & am pleasurably stirred, to my deepest deeps. The reading brings vividly back to me my pet & pride, The Children's Theatre—of the East Side, New York. And it supports & reaffirms what I have so often & so strenuously said in public: that a children's theatre is easily the most valuable adjunct that any educational institution for the young can have, & that no otherwise good school is complete without it.

It is much the most effective teacher of morals & promotor of good conduct that the ingenuity of man has yet devised, for the reason that its lessons are not taught wearily by book & by dreary homily, but by visible & enthusing action; & they go straight to the heart, which is the rightest of right places for them. Book-morals often get no further than the intellect, if they even get that far on their spectral & shadowy pilgrimage but when they travel from a children's theatre they do not stop permanently at that halfway house but go on home.

The children's theatre is the only teacher of morals & conduct & high ideals that never bores the pupil, but always leaves him sorry when the lesson is over. And as for history, no other teacher is for a moment comparable to it; no other can make the dead heroes of the world rise up & shake the dust of the ages from their bones & live & move & breathe & speak & be real to the looker & the listener; no other can make the study of the lives & times of the illustrious dead a delight, a splendid interest, a passion; & no other can paint a history-lesson in colors that will stay, & stay, & never fade.

It is my conviction that the children's theatre is one of the very, very great inventions of the twentieth century; & that its vast educational value—now but dimly perceived & but vaguely understood—will presently come to be recognized. By the article which I have been reading I find the same things happening in the Howland School that we have become familiar with in our own Children's Theatre (of which I am President, & sufficiently vain of the distinction.) These things, among others:

1. The educating history-study does not stop with the little players, but the whole school catches the infection & revels in it.

2. And it doesn't even stop there: the children carry it home & infect the family with it—even the parents & grand-parents; & the whole household fall to studying history, & bygone manners & customs: & costumes, with eager interest. And this interest is carried along to the studying of costumes in old book-plates; & beyond that to the selecting of the fabrics & the making of the clothes. Hundreds of our children learn the plays by listening, without book, & by making notes; then the listener goes home & plays the piece—all the parts!—to the family. And the family are glad & proud; glad to listen to the explanations & analyses, glad to learn, glad to be lifted to planes high above their dreary workaday lives. Our Children's Theatre is educating 7,000 children—and their families. When we put on a play of Shakespeare they fall to studying it diligently, so that they may be qualified to enjoy it to the limit when the piece is staged. They know Shakspeare. They haven't much competition in this.

3. Your Howard School children do the construction-work, & stage-decorations, etc. That is our way, too. Our young folks do everything that is needed by the Theatre, with their own hands: scene-designing, scene-painting, gas-fitting, electric work, costume-designing, costume-making—everything & all things, indeed—and their fine orchestra & its leader are from their own ranks.

The article which I have been reading, says—speaking of a historical play produced by the pupils of the Howard school—

“The question naturally arises, What has this drama done for those who so enthusiastically took part? . . . The touching story has made a year out of the Past live for the children as could no chronology or bald statement of historical events; it has cultivated the fancy & given to the imagination strength & purity; work in composition has ceased to be drudgery, for when all other themes fall flat a subject dealing with some aspect of the drama presented never fails to arouse interest & a rapid pushing of pens over paper.”

That is entirely true. The interest is not confined to the drama’s story, it spreads out all around the period of the story, & gives to all the outlying & unrelated happenings of that period a fascinating interest—an interest which does not fade out with the years, but remains always fresh, always inspiring, always welcome. History-facts dug by the job, with sweat & tears, out of a dry & spiritless text-book—but never mind, all who have suffered know what that is.

Commendations uttered by President Eliot of Harvard are quoted in that article which I have been reading. That great man & great citizen is a strong friend of our Children’s Theatre. And what is more, he is officially connected with it. He is a subordinate of mine.

I remain, dear madam, sincerely Yours ... [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of his photograph, reading in bed, to Frederic Bulkeley Hyde. “To Mr. Frederic Bulkeley Hyde, with the best wishes of Mark Twain Oct’08” [MTP: eBay Mar. 25, 2002]. Note: Hyde took photographs at Stormfield in Nov. 1908.

William Wymark Jacobs (1863-1943) sent Sam a copy of his book, Salthaven, inscribing the title page: “To: Mark Twain / with the author’s compliments / Oct 1908” [MTP; Gribben 348]. Note: Clemens wrote under this inscription: “It’s a delightful book. / Mark” then below the title itself “Bay House / Bermuda, March/10 /I have read it about 5 times. The above verdict stands.” See Clemens to Jacobs of 28 October.

Jacob A. Riis for Riis Neighborhood Society sent Sam a printed form letter seeking subscriptions of one dollar per year [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Yes”

October 1 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to John Henniker Heaton (also seen as Henniker-Heaton).

“Dear Mr Henniker-Heaton: / At midnight to-night the Great benefaction to two nations conferred by your labors reaches consummation, & I send my first 2-cent letter to you, along with my cordial congratulations. / Truly Yours” ... [MTP]. Note: Henniker-Heaton’s long campaign for cheap postage between England and the US resulted in his being called “the father of International Penny Postage.” See July 2, 1907 entry, Sam’s A.D.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Claude announces that he is going—and all the girls will follow suit”[MTP: IVL TS 67]. Note: the Redding servants were nervous after the burglary, and so most of them left.

October 2 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Berlin, Germany (she would have arrived about this day after leaving Sept. 26).

[in left margin: Clara is to send us your address to-day, by telephone or letter.]

Oct. 2’08.

Jean dear, it was delightful to hear from you from mid-ocean. Wonderful times we live in!

As I understand it, Clara has completed the arranging of her little flat in Stuyvesant Square, & is moving in, to-day. There is a small extra room for a guest.

Martin W. Littleton has bought a house in east 57th street near Park avenue, & will allow me to lend him my New York billiard table if there is a place for it. There’s a bedroom for me, & so, between Clara & the Littletons (and the Stanchfields) I am at last well fixed in the matter of accommodations, & shan’t ever have to go to a hotel. The Stanchfields got their house for $85,000 (in the panic days) & it is worth a great deal more.

I think Clara has so strong a desire that this house shall be called, not “Innocence at Home” but “Stormfield,” that you & I will let her have her way. Stormfield is the best name anyway—in two ways: 1, It is set so high, that all the storms that come will beat upon it, there being no obstruction; 2, the whole loggia-end of the house was built with money received for a magazine article entitled “Captain Stormfield’s Visit to Heaven.”

We have 6 cats, now, & they are all beautiful: Tammany & her 2 children & her 3 grandchildren. We crowd one of the grandchildren into a pocket of the billiard table (which he fits as snugly as a hand fits a glove), & he sits there by the hour & watches the game—and sometimes obstructing it: for when a ball passes near him he puts out a dainty paw & changes its direction & spoils the shot.

Dear heart I am so glad you are under the care of the great & good Geheimrath —unto whom I offer salutation & homage. / With lots of love & kisses, / Father [MTP]. Note: see several entries on Martin Wiley Littleton. “Geheimrath” may have been Sam’s nickname for Professor Hofrath von Reuvers, who took Jean under his care.

Sam also wrote to Mabel L. Patterson.

Dear Mrs. Patterson,—The contents of your letter are very pleasant & very welcome, & I thank you for them, sincerely. If I can find a photograph of my “Tammany” & her kittens, I will enclose it in this. One of them likes to be crammed into a corner-pocket of the billiard table—which he fits as snugly as does a finger in a glove & then he watches the game (& obstructs it) by the hour, & spoils many a shot by putting out his paw & changing the direction of a passing ball. Whenever a ball is in his arms, or so close to him that it cannot be played without risk of hurting him, the player is privileged to remove it to anyone of the 3 spots that chances to be vacant.

Ah no, my lecturing days are over for good & all. / Sincerely yours, ... [MTP].

Sam’s new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Helen K Blackmer	New York City	October 3-5
Her daughter Margaret, M.A.	(at school) Briarcliffe	October 2-5	→ [*]

* Sam wrote next to this entry as he transcribed it on Dec. 28: “This is ‘Margaret of a sea shell.’ Note. Dec. 28. In 3 more days she will be 13 years old. She & her mother are in Bermuda now for a month. A New Year’s gift was Margaret. A pretty rare one, too.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Claude left and Benares arrived with Margaret Blackmer—a darling, grave yet gay child” [MTP: IVL TS 67-68].

Katharine Boland Clemens (Mrs. James Ross Clemens) wrote from Somerset, Virginia to Sam.

“I am distressed to find myself on my way home without having seen you, but it was impossible to manage a little visit to you. Jim enjoyed his so very much and has great admiration for your beautiful new place, and he liked Miss Lyon so much. We are now visiting your other cousin, Minnie Clemens Anderson, of Richmond.” Katharine spent the rest of her letter describing her hosts and the area. She added that she’d written Alice von Versen (her aunt) and told her that Jean was in Berlin [MTP].

John McComb, (Jr.) wrote from Denver, Colo. to Sam, “presuming on the friendship that existed between” his father and Clemens to ask for either a loan or an investment in a new mining pump, the “Starrett.” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him & say that he regrets not being able to grant your request.” John McComb, Sr. proprietor of the S.F. Alta California, had been instrumental in encouraging Clemens to give his first lecture at Maguire’s Academy of Music in San Francisco in 1866. See MTL 1: 361, MTL 2: 12n1, etc.

N.Y. Association for the Blind wrote to Sam enclosing an issue of Everybody's Magazine for October, which contained an article by John Albert Macy, husband of Helen Keller's former teacher Anne Sullivan Macy [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Ans'd"

Mrs. Georgia C. Taylor wrote from Taunton, Mass. to Sam after reading of the old Whittier birthday speech, and thinking it "one of the best things" he'd ever read [MTP].

October 3 Saturday – At "Stormfield," Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Miss Lucy Maud Montgomery (1874-1942), author of Anne of Green Gables (1908):

Dear Miss Montgomery:

Mr. Clemens directs me to thank you for your charming book & says I may quote to you from his letter to Francis Wilson about it:

In "Anne of Green Gables" you will find the dearest & most moving & delightful child since the immortal Alice.

I am, / Yours, sincerely, I.V. Lyon ... [MTP]. Note: see also Gribben 480.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mrs. Blackmer came and this morning I had such a nice letter from Jervis Langdon congratulating me on my "good nerve" but I don't deserve much credit for going down stairs that burglar night, because though I knew something was wrong, I had no idea that two burglars were in the house, and I wish I could get rid of the terror I still feel in my heels, when I fled up those stairs [MTP: IVL TS 68].

The Bobbs-Merrill Co. wrote to Sam sending a copy of Colonel Greatheart, by Henry Christopher Bailey (b. 1878), without obligation [MTP; Gribben 39]. Note: IVL: "Don't believe I shall catch up with the books I have undertaken to read for a year. Hope to get at it some day or other"

C.T. Pardee for The Southern New England Telephone Co. wrote to Sam. "I have your letter of Sept. 8th in reference to a call from New York by Miss Clemens. I have looked up this matter thoroughly, and I think that no impertinence was intended. I have taken the matter up with our operators, however, and I hope there will be no further cause for complaint" [MTP]. Note: Twain was quick to react to any real or imagined slight to his daughters.

Samuel W. Sherman for the Emerson Literary Society, NYC wrote to Sam, noting that each year for the past five years they'd sent him an invitation to their Annual Reception and that each year he'd declined. Would he allow them to send a member down for a "10 or 15 minute" interview? [MTP].

Katherine Wylie wrote from Edinburgh, Scotland to advise Sam she was sending an album in which she was collecting author's autographs. Since he was her favorite, would he allow this? [MTP].

October 3? Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Francis Wilson. "In 'Anne of Green Gables' you will find the dearest & most moving & delightful child since the immortal Alice" [MTP: The Bookman Dec. 27, 1908]. Note: this quoted by Lyon on Oct. 3 to Miss Lucy Maud Montgomery, author of the book.

October 4 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "Fanny the pony, Jeannette Cholmely-Jones's little steed arrived today for me to use and to take care of. The use of her for the care of her. She is very soft; Benares and I just drove around the circle and that is all, before we took her out to the stall made for her in the garage. We shan't be able to drive her for a fortnight" [MTP: IVL TS 68].

October 5 Monday – In his Oct. 6 to Margaret Blackmer, Sam related activities of this day. See entry.

Edith Virginia Gazella wrote from Rutherford, NJ to Sam. She'd sent him a copy of La Vita Nova, her new magazine and asked if he might look it over and offer how she might improve it. She'd ridden on the streetcar with him a few times but never had the nerve to speak to him. As a girl she would hide in the attic and read HF and TS and wanted so badly to be a boy [MTP].

George Hahlweg wrote from Brooklyn, NY to ask Sam where in his books she might find a certain quote, “Where is California? / Oh California / Why is it on the earth? On the earth!” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “C.S. Visit to Heaven”

Katherine Koch for Denver Public Schools, noting Clemens’ publicized struggles with the German language, wrote to ask if he would “make a brief suggestion” for her article (to be published in Education) about how German might be more easily taught or learned [MTP].

October 6 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Clara at 17 Livingston Place, N.Y.C.

Clärchen dear, your letter sounds ever so good. Your sunny apartment seems to be a rare & fine stroke of luck. I hope you have secured a refusal of it for a year or two; but if you haven’t you can keep it anyway, no doubt, if you behave yourself. Miss Lyon will be able to give me a lot of details concerning the place when she comes back.

Well, I don’t know that it’s a shame about the servants—we must wait & see if there aren’t some compensations in it for us. I think it is plain that we cannot have two breeds of Christians on the premises & have peace. We are limited to one breed, & must now try the Italian. I shall be ever so glad if the experiment shall succeed. If it fails we shall go down into the country parts of Virginia & visit the new Clemens discovered by Mrs. Dr. Jim, & import a battery of colored Christians unacquainted with city life. I shall never be happy in either heaven or hell, because both places will be so infested with mixed breeds of Christians—human cat & dog.

With lots & lots of love, dear child, / Marcus [MTP]. Note: “the Italians” were Teresa and Giuseppe Cherubini, the emegrees who had come with the Clemenses to the US in 1904. They were rehired after the servants all quit following the Sept. 18 burglary. Also hired was a young man, Horace Hazen, as butler.

In the Lyon-Ashcroft MS, Sam would blame Lyon for the servants quitting:

It wasn’t the burglars that scared the former servants away. They couldn’t stand Miss Lyon. I told her several times she wouldn’t be able to keep servants if she stormed at them. However, she couldn’t break herself of it. She came several times to me & bragged about the fierce things she had said to them. I told her it was not a thing to brag about. Lately she gave Horace [Hazen] a third-mate dressing down; then sent for him & apologised. It would have been wiser not to make the apology necessary. Rosa was in our family 12 years—till she married; George (colored), served us 18 years—till he died; Patrick, (coachman), claimed that he had served us 35 years. I was a pall-bearer at his funeral. Katie has been with us 27 years. They did their work faithfully & well—and yet none of them ever got a harsh word from us.

Sam also began a letter to Margaret Blackmer that he added to on Oct 7, 8, and 9. Here is the Oct. 6 segment:

You dear Margaret, I went to your room an hour ago on my way to breakfast, to call you—then I remembered. I had to go down all alone. I should have been much better satisfied if I had had your company. To look at you a person would think you couldn’t take up much room, but you do; this place seems pretty empty without you.

We went down to the gorge toward sunset yesterday afternoon, & sat a good while on the rocks that border the bridge—where you & I hulled the nuts. Then Ashcroft went down on the upper side, where we gather’ed chestnuts, you remember, & when he was tripping his way to the entrance of the tunnel he found the chocolate & the letter on the ground. You see, I threw them there & forgot about it.

A beautiful little bird has just flown into the kitchen. The cook brought him to me, & he was not at all afraid. She is taking him down into the woods below the pergola to keep Tammany’s family from getting hold of him [MTP; MTAq 212]. Note: Margaret had been a guest of Sam’s from Oct. 2 –5.

Mrs. R.M. Wallace wrote from West Gloucester, Mass. She was “sending out everything” she could find about her husband’s “Heather” books. See hers of Sept. 28.

Sam’s A.D. for this date focused on the two burglars at Stormfield [Hill 209].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today to N.Y. I went to see about getting more servants and went to Santa’s new apartment at 17 Livingstone Place. It is very pretty. These days I am so over-driven with the small affairs of getting a house in order that I cannot find either time or wit to write of the King and his moods. All the servants are going. It is a sorry thing to have to give so many hours of sweet time to—this thought of getting new servants, but the business of getting the King’s house in order is the mainest thing in my life. I could not do it alone; but I am unafraid, for always there is Benares to be near me, and to help me. And not merely to help me, but to do the many things I cannot do [MTP: IVL TS 68-69].

October 7 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam added to his Oct. 6 to Margaret Blackmer. Here is the Oct. 7 segment:

Oct. 7. Your letter came yesterday, & was very welcome. Do the kittens miss you? Indeed they do. Why, even the rocks & the trees & the flowers miss you. Yes, & the landscape, too. It doesn’t think as much of itself as it did when you were a part of it, & I shall not be satisfied with it until you are a part of it again. It is pathetically doing its very best to make up for your loss with other splendors, but it doesn’t succeed—doesn’t with me, dear, for sure.

I am not quite certain of your school-address, so I am waiting till I hear from you again [MTP; MTAq 212-14]. Note: see segments added on Oct 8 & 9.

Sam also wrote to Helen S. Allen in Hamilton, Bermuda.

“Dear heart, I wonder what has become of that Bermuda angel-fish of mine. She hasn’t answered my last letter, & it makes me a little uneasy. Can you tell me she & her household are well? I hope so. / Lovingly” ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Marjorie Breckenridge.

Dear Marjorie: / Indeed you are right: This region is beautiful now; every day adds new & richer tints & shades to the splendor of its autumn glories. I wish you were here to prowl the woods & the glen with me.

Those three fishes have been here, & they all liked the place & greatly admired the Gorge. Margaret & her mother went away day before yesterday, & the others on the 28th Sept.

No, dear, the scare remains. Not a woman in the house has had a good night’s sleep unpersecuted by ghastly dreams since the burglary 19 days ago. My daughter Clara has the shudders every time she thinks of that night, & so does Miss Lyon.

Miss Lyon is now in New York for a day or two, & Mr. Ashcroft went away this morning. So I am a solitary. I don’t like being a solitary. However, it isn’t for long; Miss Lyon will return this evening, & Mr. Ashcroft tomorrow.

With my kindest regards to your parents, & lots of love to you, dear, ... [MTP; MTAq 217].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

How are you getting along, dear heart? The women-folks in this house are not getting along well at all. Their sleep is broken, & is pestered with dreadful dreams every night—dreams about burglars. Catherine says she has the same dream nightly, in which a swarm of masked burglars are riddling her with bullets. It fetches her out of her slumbers with a shriek.

We've built a garage. It was necessary, for the Sunday morning train is taken off, & actors cannot come to us now, save by motor car. They can fetch it by train to South Norwalk, & motor the rest of the way in less than an hour.

We are putting glass in the arches of the loggia now, & turning it into a winter parlor, so that we can sit there with our knitting & watch the snowstorms.

We have plenty of cats & kittens, now—all descendants of the incomparable Tammany.

With lots of love to you, dear, ... [MTP; MTAq 218].

Sam also wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

Dear Mrs. Rogers: /The letter was an urgent one from Clara; & as she knew I was going to Fairhaven she rushed it thither. Dear me, I wish you two would come here, & right away! & look at the foliage. Can't you? Won't you? Will you? / With love to you both, ... [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: I met Benares at the station; it was an inspiration of mine, as I drove up Madison Avenue in a cab, on my way to an intelligence office, and the look on his face was one of grave astonishment and solemn delight, when he saw me suddenly appear. Oh the good Benares. I had a wonderful sleep in Santa's little apartment and I came home to find the King full of interest in my servant hunt [MTP: IVL TS 69].

To My Guests

*Greeting and Salutation and Prosperity!
And Therewith, Length of Days. Listen:*

MY fellow farmers of this vicinity have gathered together some hundreds of books and instituted a public library and given it my name. Large contributions of books have been sent to it by Robert Collier, of Collier's Weekly, by Colonel Harvey, of Harper & Brothers, and by Doubleday, Page & Company—all these without coercion; indeed upon the merest hint. The other great publishers will do the like as soon as they hear about this enterprise. The Harper Periodicals, Collier's Weekly, World's Work, Country Life in America, and other magazines are sent gratis to the library—this also without coercion, merely upon hint. The hint will in due time be extended to the other magazines. And so, we have a library. Also, my fellow farmers have arranged for the librarian's salary and the other running expenses, and will furnish the necessary money themselves. There is yet one detail lacking: a building for the library. Mr. Theodore Adams gives the ground for it. Mr. Sunderland furnishes, gratis, the plans and specifications, and will let the contracts and superintend the erection of the house. The library building will cost about two thousand dollars. Everybody will have a chance to contribute to this fund. Everybody, including my guests—I mean guests from a distance. It seems best to use coercion in this case. Therefore I have levied a tax—a GUESTS' MARK TWAIN LIBRARY BUILDING TAX, of one dollar, not upon the valuable sex, but only upon the other one. Guests of the valuable sex are tax-free, and shall so remain; but guests of the other sex must pay, whether they are willing or not. I desire that the money be paid to me, personally: this is the safest way. If it were paid to my secretary a record would have to be made of it, and the record could get lost.

The peace of the house be upon thee and abide with thee!
"STORMFIELD," REDDING, CONN., October 7, 1908.

Received of John Elton Wayland $2
Mark Twain

Malcom Fiddis Greenridge wrote a letter all in rhymed verse from Brooklyn, NY to ask Sam for a photograph, enclosing his own [MTP].

Emily C. Hawley wrote from Brookfield Center, Conn. to ask Sam if he would allow her to quote a paragraph he'd written many years before on Hawaii, for her to include in a sketch she was writing of the first missionaries sent to the Islands in 1819 [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Request"

Alexander Ross MacMahon wrote from Norwalk, Conn. to ask Sam for the honor of calling with a friend, the Marquis of Montcalm some Sunday. He enclosed his photo (in file) [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Oh, yes." The famous French general (1712-1759) during the French and Indian wars bore this title, and had at least six children, possibly as many as twelve. This Marquis was possibly a descendant.

October 7 after – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent printed broadside notices dated Oct. 7, 1908 as receipts for various small contributions for a local public library established in his name.

The receipts which survive are to the following: Harriet Whitmore Enders ("Hattie") for $25; Albert B. Paine for $2.45; Philip Nichols Sunderland for $1; Chatelaine for $2.50; and John Elton Wayland for $2 [MTP]. Note: See insert.

October 8 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam added to his Oct. 6, 7 to Margaret Blackmer. Here is the Oct. 8 segment:

Oct. 8. You've been gone so long, now, that I suppose I wouldn't know you if I met you. But fortunately there's the shell! By that I should know you in a minute; for there's only the one shell.

Day before yesterday Ashcat & I found a new trail, & a long one. First it goes down the road to Mrs. Lyon's; then takes the old road to the left (the one we drove over to the Branchfield station when you & your mother went away); by & by you turn sharply to the left again & prowl through deep woods over an old grass-grown road which curves gradually leftward & at last comes out on the road that goes down past the red barns & the gorge. You cross our bridge there & go up past the mound toward our hickory trees, & up the slope to the top, & there you are! with the kitchen-end of the house in sight—and in two minutes more you are at home. It is a splendid long oval tramp, you see, with quails whizzing up all about you & the deep woods rich with autumn colors. Next time you come, dear, we'll try it, wicht wahr?

As soon as Helen is old enough to travel you must bring her here every little while & teach her to like the place, for your sake & mine. Will you, dear? And her brother, too. I know I shall love the children; in truth I love them already, & often think of them.

Noon, 8th. I got up at 9.30 & went down stairs. The woods were so beautiful from my bedroom window, all drenched with sunshine & purpled with shadows, that I had to go down & observe them from the loggia arches.

The servants came to bid me good-bye, at 11. They gave notice a week or ten days ago, still frightened to death about that burglary. All of them are gone, except the two outside men (Harry & the Italian general-utility-man.) Our two old-time Italian servants will arrive from New York at 5 this afternoon. The man is a good cook & his wife is expert in chamber-work. We shall get some natives from the farm-houses in a few days, & bother no more with city-servants. Meantime we are quite comfortable & perfectly satisfied. Tomorrow Ashpan will arrive with the captain of one of the great Cunard liners & his body-servant, for over Sunday; & also my daughter Clara will arrive with her aunt. Ashhopper & Miss Lyon & I will dress up in aprons & gorgeous Chinese jackets & east-Indian turbans & wait on the table & have lots of fun; & if we could only have you here, in your dainty blue costume to pass the cocktails around in the library the whole scheme would be just perfect! I wish we had you, you little witch! [MTP; MTAq 214-15]. Note: Sam finished this letter on Oct. 9; see entry. The captain of the Cunard liner was Commodore Daniel Dow [Oct. 12 to Nunnally]. See also June 17, 1908 entry on Dow. "Ashpan" and "Ashhopper" were Sam's nicknames for Ashcroft.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today all the maids left. Katie Murray, Katherine, Mary—cook and the kitchen maid. They shirked their work, left no luncheon for me and on the whole I was glad to see them go. At 6 o'clock Goddam brought Teresa and Giuseppe. She was excited and important; he was excited and eager and shy. It was a pleasure to see those 2 good Italians [MTP: IVL TS 69]. Note: who Goddam is, not clear.

Jean Clemens, aboard the S.S. Postdampfers in route from NYC to Germany, wrote to Isabel Lyon [MTP].

Dear Lioness; / In my bankbook, which I received the day before I sailed, there is no statement about the $200 you meant (or did) to telephone them to add to my account. I am writing them that it should have been there & doubtless now is & about sending me money. I meant to bring more of my own with me, so as to have plenty in time in which to make the necessary arrangements, but I didn't succeed in completing all my plans, so that I came on board with very little. I may have to borrow from Father, if I find it necessary to buy any clothing—and I am afraid I may—before my own fortune reaches me. But of course it won't be forgotten.

Anna's behavior lasted three full days & then on the morning of the fourth she asked me if I was angry with her. I told her I had been very much annoyed but that I had felt badly, too, because I knew she had been unhappy & crying but that after I had started to speak about different things several times & had gotten either grunts or bare answers, I had decided she better work herself out of her frame of mind herself. I reminded her that before we left she had been told she must not act as she had, that that kind of conduct must stop. She said some idiotic & impudent things about Béb  which were caused by imagination, ignorance & perhaps a tinge of jealousy. I made no mention of her rudeness to me & actual insolence to B   , in public, nor did I give her the satisfaction of knowing that I had been so upset by her performance, my feelings of exasperation & pity combined, that I had lain awake until about two that morning. I didn't immediately let her think it was all over & gone but I didn't want her to be unkind, either. Among other things, she said I treated her so differently whenever B    was about that she felt she wasn't wanted. That was due to our talking French the greater part of the time. Well, the first squall has passed—it took it eight days to develop & three to wear out.

After having heard so much about the horrors of fog from my sailing-captain last summer, I felt far worse every time we have been enveloped than ever before. In the channel, since yesterday morning we have had fog right along—part of the time so dense that we went at quarter-speed & even stopped for a short time. We have come very close to several quaint fishing boats—so close that it made me shudder.

To my amazement we passed Dover at about ten this morning—just a few minutes after our table steward told me we might not be able to land until Sunday. Of course, if the fog is dense at the Elbe light-ship we may not reach Cuxhaven for a day or more, but the Captain's dinner takes place tonight, so they are evidently hoping to land us tomorrow afternoon.

If you haven't sent the $200 & my allowance of $100 please do so at once—at least one of the two sums. With ever so much love... [MTP]. Note: Anna Sterritt, Jean's maid, hired by Clemens.

Hill writes of Jean in Germany:

After getting settled, Jean explained to Miss Lyon in detail the need for additional money to cover unanticipated expenses. Anna Sterritt angered Jean by saying "some idiotic and impudent things about B    [Marguerite Schmidt] which were caused by imagination, ignorance and perhaps a tinge of jealousy." But she was pleased with her progress under Professor Hofrath von Reuvers and was convinced he could cure her. She enrolled in a lecture course on Faust, made many friends among the American colony, and began a round of teas and luncheons. She even delivered her father's ghost story, "The Golden Arm," successfully to a charity benefit [213-14].

Mary Helen Lathrop Nelson wrote from Cincinnati, Ohio to invite Sam to speak at their women's club [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Answd Oct. 8"

Edith A. Pond wrote from NYC to Sam. "I presume you will remember me when I tell you I am Major Pond's daughter." She wanted him to do a reading for her to raise funds so she might raise her nearly blind son, and suggested she engage the New Amsterdam Theatre for an afternoon [MTP]. Note: MLH: "Ans. Oct 20"

October 8 after – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Maud W. Littleton (Mrs. Martin W. Littleton):

You dear Mrs. Pinkerton!

You are really back & I am so glad. It was lovely of you to send me those beautiful handkerchiefs, & I shall prize them, not only for their own merit but for the sake of the giver.

You & your chief slave must come up here very soon, & render an account of what you have been doing abroad; & I want you to bring President Butler & Miss Sara. I would like very much to have Miss Sara in my Aquarium of Angel-fishes if she will consent & will follow the consent with her presence here. You see the Rules & Regulations are very strict in several particulars; among them the investiture has to take place in this house & not elsewhere, just as if he were an L.L.D, because there are many universities, but only one Aquarium. Miss Lyon will take the matter up with you & write the president & Miss Sara.

(Privately in your ear: Miss Lyon is pretty airy this morning because Germany is glorifying her as a Burglary-Heroine.) / With my love, ... [MTP].

Note: Nicholas Murray Butler (1862-1947) American philosopher, diplomat and educator: President of Columbia University; President of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace; recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize (1931); Nazi sympathizer until war broke out.

October 9 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam finished his Oct. 6, 7, 8 to Margaret Blackmer at the Misses Tewksbury's School in Irvington-on-Hudson, NY.

Friday, Oct. 9. I have a lovely letter from your mother this morning, & I gather from it that one of these days you are going to invite me again to visit the school. That is very pleasant, dear heart, I shall be sure to accept.

Do you like romances? Very well, here is one. About next Tuesday or Wednesday a Missouri sweetheart of mine is coming here from Missouri to visit me—the very first sweetheart I ever had. It was 68 years ago. She was 5 years old, & I the same. I had an apple, & fell in love with her & gave her the core. I remember it perfectly well, & exactly the place where it happened, & what kind of a day it was. She figures in “Tom Sawyer” as “Becky Thatcher.” Or maybe in “Huck Finn”—anyway it's in one of those books. She is bringing one of her granddaughters with her—a grown-up young lady, I guess.

It is noon, now. I think I will get up. There is no hurry about finishing this letter; I will mail this much of it today, & then go on with it a paragraph per day till I get it done some time or other. You are busy & I mustn't tax you; but whenever you've got any love for me, save it up till there's enough of it to fill a few lines, then find a chance when you've a minute or two to spare, & send it along.

Distributed along through this letter I'm sending you my love—not all of it, but such of it as I've found room for. / S L C., Curator [MTP; MTAq 215]. Note. Becky Thatcher was actually Laura Hawkins, now Frazer.

In the evening, Ralph W. Ashcroft brought Commodore Daniel Dow of the Cunard line to Stormfield for a weekend stay. Dow's “table-steward” accompanied him [Oct. 12 to Nunnally]. See insert of Sam wearing a jacket and cap of Dow's. The two men met on one of Sam's many trans-Atlantic crossings, perhaps many years before.

Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Commander D. Dow, R.N.R.	On board his ship	October 9-11	[Daniel Dow]
R.M.S. “Caronia”

Note: Sam's original guestbook also shows Dow for Oct. 10 [Mac Donnell TS 5].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Tonight Captain Dow of the Caronia arrived and with him his pet steward Billy. Always Benares comes on Fridays. The King was walking around the circle for a little exercise, and his white figure in the moonlight fell in like a spirit in the landscape. All day I have been very busy, for young Horace Hazen has come to try to be the King's butler. He has never been in service of any kind, but he feels that it is an honor to be given the privilege just to try to be the King's butler. Eighteen he is, and 6 feet 1—and very slender, but with the spirit of work in him. If only it will last. Anyway he drifted to the position. We did not search for him, so who can tell? [MTP: IVL TS 69-70].

Hawaii Promotion Co. wrote to announce that the mantel piece had been shipped. They asked if he would have his photo taken sitting by the mantel or standing next to it [MTP].

Charles Gilman Norris wrote from Toronto, Canada to Sam, hoping “the time will come” when he'd have the “pleasure of visiting...and of expressing a great deal difficult to put on paper.” Norris discussed Free Masonry and enclosed a four and a half page single spaced typed treatise on religion, philosophy and the like [MTP].

Alice von Versen wrote from Germany to Sam having read of the burglars and Sam's new house. She would call on Jean in Berlin, and thought that Prof. Hofrath von Reuvers had “an excellent reputation & I hope he will benefit her” [MTP].

William Wainwright wrote from NYC to Sam, agreeing to charge $97 to install a burglar alarm system at Stormfield, Clemens to pay the cost of lodging and meals for the electrician sent [MTP].

L.E. Wild wrote from NYC to Lyon asking about references for Claude Benchotte, previously a butler for Clemens who now applied with Wild [MTP]. Note: IVL: “No faults that I know of / an excellent man”

October 10 Saturday – Sam wrote an aphorism to an unidentified person: “We ought never to do wrong when people are looking. / Truly yours / Mark Twain” [MTP: Superior Auction Galleries catalog, Oct. 15, 1991, Item 1832].

In Redding, Conn., Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Laura Hawkins Frazer, his childhood sweetheart.

Dear Mrs. Frazer: / Mr. Clemens asks me to tell you for him how glad he is that you are coming to Redding, & that he hopes that you & your granddaughter will give him the pleasure of spending a night here in his house, before you go away. Perhaps it will be Tuesday night, for on Sunday & Monday the house will be very full, but by Tuesday there will be plenty of room, & Mr. Clemens wishes me to say that he would not miss seeing your granddaughter for a good deal. He asks me to convey to you his sincere regards. This morning four of us were taking a walk through these beautiful fields, & were saying how much we owe to Mr. Paine for finding this wonderful country side which is now a lovely home for all of us.

I will telephone Mr. Paine about making a plan for you to come ... [MTP].

Sam also began a letter to Frances Nunnally that he finished on Oct. 12. The Oct. 10 segment:

I have had a fine time worrying about you, you dear little rascal! It didn't begin until you had been gone seven days—then it swiftly made up for lost time! By yesterday morning—after a vacant mail—I was perfectly sure you were sick or had met with an accident. Miss Lyon said no, you were only very busy with school-work, & would write presently. But it did not convince me, for I am like any other mother, I suppose, when her imagination gets alarmed. I said, “try the telephone the first thing in the morning & see if Francesca is well.” And so she did. She brought up the news a little while ago, before I was dressed, & if she had been a man I would have hugged her [MTP].

On or about this day Sam sent the library notice with receipt to Ralph W. Ashcroft (whom he called the “Bishop of Benares,” among other nicknames) for $2.50 [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King, the Captain, the Bishop [Ashcroft] and I took a most lovely walk this morning around what we call Howells Hill, for to the westward there is a lot that the King would gladly give to Mr. Howells, if only he would come here and build. But he can't do that for Mrs. Howells won't hear of his settling anywhere. In the afternoon Clara arrived and later Will came. It makes a big and nice household [MTP: IVL TS 70].

Jean Clemens wrote from Hamburg, Germany to Isabel Lyon. Only the envelope survives [MTP].

The Anti-Vivisection Society wrote to invite Sam to their first attempt at raising funds from the public and “by a few words” from him, on Nov. 10 at 4 p.m. at the Waldorf [MTP].

Nicholas Murray Butler sent a form letter on Columbia Univ. letterhead to solicit funds for surviving American recipients of honorary degrees from Oxford. Since 1870 Oxford had conferred honorary degrees on 40 Americans, and over half were still living, including Clemens [MTP].

Insert: Commodore Daniel Dow with Twain at Stormfield (courtesy of Michael Dow, grandson)

Franz Nickolous Otremba wrote from Hawaii to expressing “the greatest pleasure...in building and carving” the mantel for Clemens’ billiard room. “In carving the capitals I have tried to faithfully portray, first (commencing at the base) Taro leaves, then Palapalae ferns, then Hao leaves and flowers, then Ilma leaves and flowers.” He also wrote that he’d included enough extra pieces of wood to make six pool cues and four walking sticks [MTP]. Note: see Oct. 31 entry for a photo of this mantel from Harper’s Weekly.

Mrs. R.M. Wallace wrote to Sam, having forgotten to enclose the copy of “that agreement for transfer of the copyright of my husband’s book on ‘The Heather’.” She went on for several pages about a copyright fight between her late husband and Mr. De La Mare. She repeated that Ralph W. Ashcroft had directed her to write Clemens [MTP].

October 11 Sunday – Cunard line Commodore Daniel Dow ended his weekend stay at Stormfield. Sam returned his coat and cap worn in the insert photo, likely taken this very day (see Oct. 12 to Nunnally).

Sam’s original guestbook lists Elizabeth G. Guillaume and Jules A. Guillaume, New York [Mac Donnell TS 5].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The question of servants is certainly solving itself for the present, for this morning a young relative of Harry Iles’s, a nice girl of 17 or so, came to help Teresa in the upstairs work. Elizabeth Dick is her name. So now we have 2 Italians, and 2 natives, and the washing is to be sent to the laundry in Bethel on trial.

It’s been a gay day. Captain Dow is a charmer. He played billiards with the King; and then off we went in the rumble, he and Will and I, in the wake of Santa who went spinning along these sweet country roads on Senciramide. Her legs flew out exactly like the legs of a fox terrier. Santa rides her beautifully. Then we made photographs—one of them of Captain Dow standing on his head [MTP: IVL TS 70-71].

October 12 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam finished his Oct. 10 to Frances Nunnally.

Monday, Oct. 12—noon.

I find it no sin to be still lying in bed, for we have been having very diligent times entertaining ourselves Friday evening, Saturday & Sunday. Ashcroft & Capt. Dow of the Coronia (Clara’s ship) arrived Saturday afternoon; Clara followed in a later train, & Mr. Wark in a still later one! Our old servants were all gone, & in their places we had only our two Italians from the New York house with a new & untrained butler (a native youth of the neighborhood,) & with Clara’s maid & the Captain’s table-steward to join these forces. But no matter, we got along ever so well with the “simple life,” & had a good time. Oh, you should know the captain! The loveliest darlingest Irishman that ever was. We were all photographed many times, yesterday, in singles, couples & groups—which reminds me! When you come to dinner with the beautiful pink bows on the back of your head I wanted them, to hang up over your picture in my room when it comes from the developer in New York, but I resisted the temptation to steal them. Now for that resistance you ought to give them to me. I mean, when you are done with them, don’t throw them away, but remember me & send them. Will you? And in return I’ll send you a book—“Anne of Green Gables.” It came two days after you went away, & I was to read it & give it to Francis Wilson; but I was at once so taken with it that I thought I would send it to you & get another copy for him. I think Anne is a very pleasant child to know, & that the literary quality of the book is fine. You may not have time to read it, & in that case you mustn’t; but don’t waste it, dear—give it to some other girl, who appreciates good literature.

Your letter arrived an hour ago, & was very welcome; and so you are forgiven, now, for alarming me. But don’t you do it again! Next time, I will go straight down to Catonsville & preach you a sermon. Francesca, you will have a long holiday at Eastern—won't you spend it here? Miss Lyon & I will gladly go to Catonsville & fetch you. Don't make any other arrangement, please. / Lovingly / The Curator.

[in left margin of page 2: No there have been no more conspiracies, & I have warned Ashcroft that he mustn't conspire again, for he isn't a member.]

P. S. I know you are busy, & I don't want to overtax you greatly, but indeed you must send me a line now & then, do you hear?

P. P. S. I am going to plant 12 Aquarium cedars—but I'll tell you about it some time when there's more room on my paper [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University.

Dear President Butler:

I gladly join you & enclose $100. The amount is shamefully small, but the smallness is compulsory, because the Knickerbocker Trust crippled me a year ago when I was committed past escape to house-builders & because the house has since cost me (of course) double what I had expected it to cost. If these calamities had not happened my check would not be of a sort to need this apology.

Thanking you for calling upon me, & for not overlooking me. / I am sincerely Yours ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean in Berlin, Germany.

Oh Jean dear, I am so glad you escaped the collision unhurt—& also glad that when those we love are in peril like that, we are spared the anguish & terror of knowing about it while it is happening. Clara was in a collision 15 months ago, I was in a collision a month later. "Three times & out!" The family record is complete, now.

Don't you be fooled by the immense noise & racket the Presidential election is making—there is no substance to it & no great interest in it—it is just make-believe. No sane person wants Mr. Roosevelt's shadow elected, & the apparent enthusiasm consists of wind mainly—there are a good many evidences that these things are so, & that deep down under the noise & the storm the national ocean is quiet, apathetic, & massively indifferent.

I've got a new stenographer, & she is competent & ladylike, & educated & agreeable; but I haven't gone to work yet. But there's a world of work for her to do, without my adding to it. By & by I shall get to work again—when the strong desire comes.

I do a long walk every day, & it keeps me finely fresh. Last night Tammany accompanied me—uninvited, but very welcome. She glided along over the meadows in the moonlight like a spirit. A beautiful one, too; for Tammany is much the handsomest cat on this planet. It isn't my opinion alone—Clara thinks so too. And her two children & three grandchildren are a good deal like her, both physically & in rare qualities of mind.

I guess you are happy now, & certainly I do hope you are, & that your health is going to thrive & flourish. / With lots & lots of love & kisses, / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

Yes, I was coming, & my arrangements were all made; but on the evening of the day that I telephoned you about it some guests arrived & broke it up. My idea was to fly over there & get a one-day glimpse of you before the next guests were due to arrive, & put in the said day persuading you & Henry H. to come out of your seclusion & pay us a visit.

I'll try again, the first chance. By my calculation that may occur about Tuesday or Wednesday of next week, but it may possibly fail, because 3 guests who are booked to come have not given us their dates yet.

The reason we have company in the house all the time now, is because we never had any in New York during four winters, & I got nearly starved for human society, & am trying to catch up. I don't ever want to be so lonesome & dreary again. I've grown young in these past three months of dissipation here. And I have left off drinking—it isn't necessary now. Society & theology are sufficient for me.

Jean has arrived in Germany. Off the coast of Holland her ship sunk another ship in a fog. Clara was in collision fifteen months ago; I was in collision a month later. The family record is complete now.

The burglars scared off every servant we had. We brought up our two Italians from the New York house & are getting along plenty well enough, by help of a native or two, from the farmhouses around. We think we shan't need city servants at all. I don't like them anyway: they have to have facilities all the week for going to hell, & facilities every Sunday for grafting their way into the other place.

I am sending my love to you both & would desperately like to see you. /SLC [MTP].

Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Mrs. Susan L. Crane	Quarry Farm, Elmira, N.Y.	October 12-15

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mrs. Crane came today and charmed Benares by her beautiful and gentle presence" [MTP: IVL TS 71].

John Boyle, Jr. for the Republican County Committee wrote to ask if Clemens might address a meeting during "the present campaign in behalf of Gov. Hughes" [MTP]. Note: MLH: "Ans. Oct 14 08"

Julia H. Farwell for Miss C.E. Mason's School, Tarrytown, NY wrote to ask Sam if he would "give us a lecture some Friday evening after the Christmas Holidays" [MTP].

William Hirschfeld, D.D.S. wrote from Paris, France to ask Sam's opinion on an after-dinner speech he was to give on "France and America"—his idea to imagine Mark Twain was with them giving his views on life in Paris—what would Twain say? [MTP].

John M. Howells for Howells & Stokes wrote to Isabel (though catalogued as to Clemens) [MTP].

W&J Sloane, carpets, NYC sent a form-printed postcard requesting return of Ingrain samples sent on Aug. 24, 1908 [MTP].

Victor Speer for the Saturn Club, Buffalo, NY wrote to beg Sam to speak "on any subject acceptable to yourself" [MTP].

October 13 Tuesday – Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Mrs. Laura Hawkins Frazer	Hannibal, Missouri	October 15 —————>	My first sweetheart (65 years ago when she was 6 or 7 years old.)
Her granddaughter Clara	" "	" "

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Mrs. Laura Frazer, the King's earliest sweetheart came today, and her niece, a sweet girl, came with her. They have been visiting the Paines [MTP: IVL TS 71]. Note: there are several letters between Frazer and Paine in the files.

George B. Harvey wrote to Sam.

Dear Uncle Mark: / Dorothy's schooling has begun at Deal and it will cause a serious break in the operation to take her away at this time. / Can you come down to Deal on Tuesday and stay as long as possible? I have communicated with Northcliffe and he is choked up with business engagements...impossible for him to leave the City, but he says he is very anxious to see you and have you lunch with him [MTP].

Emily C. Hawley wrote to Sam learning that he had moved to Redding, and sending her book, The Hills of Fairfield County. She thanked him for letting her use his squib on Hawaii for the meeting of the American Board of Missions this week [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben.

F.L. Shellabarger for the American Art Assoc. of Paris wrote to ask Sam for “a sketch or story for the December” issue of their small monthly magazine. Their assoc. was for American students in the Latin Quarter of Paris [MTP].

Francis Wilson wrote from New Rochelle, NY to decline Sam’s invitation to visit as his “play days” were over and he was “settling down to real work.” He was building a cottage [MTP].

October 14 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer.

Oh, you dear Margaret, you are coming up with Ashcroft, & I’m just as glad! He will go to your school & fetch you. Then by the 5 p.m. train, Sunday he will take you back—or rather, I will take you back to your school & we will let him accompany us & see that we don’t get lost. I have to go to Deal Beach Monday afternoon or Tuesday morning; so I mean to go down on Sunday & take you home, then wait over in New York till Monday afternoon or Tuesday morning, according as Col. Harvey shall elect.

I haven’t eaten all the hickory nuts, I’m saving some for you; & at noon to-day I found a good chestnutting place, I think, on the main road below our bridge. We will exploit it when you come, & see if it will pay us for our trouble.

We are all to help open the Mark Twain library about an hour from now. It won’t be a very formidable ceremony.

Love to you, dear!

The Admiral.

P. S. That is according to the new By-law, which transforms the Curator into the Admiral & requires the member to say “Admiral, do so & so,” instead of “Mr. Clemens, do so & so.” Don’t you forget it, dear. I added that Bylaw last night. Curator isn’t a large enough title for me [MTP; MTAq 220-1]. Note: Cooley misdates this letter as “[11 October 1908],” though headed “Wednesday.” Fatout gives Twain’s speech [MT Speaking 630-1] taken from MTB 1472-3, but gives it as Oct. 28.

Paine quotes and remarks about Sam’s speech at the opening of the new Redding Library:

I am here to speak a few instructive words to my fellow-farmers. I suppose you are all farmers. I am going to put in a crop next year, when I have been here long enough and know how. I couldn’t make a turnip stay on a tree now after I had grown it. I like to talk. It would take more than the Redding air to make me keep still, and I like to instruct people. It’s noble to be good, and it’s nobler to teach others to be good, and less trouble. I am glad to help this library. We get our morals from books. I didn’t get mine from books, but I know that morals do come from books—theoretically at least. Mr. Beard or Mr. Adams will give some land, and by and by we are going to have a building of our own.

This statement was news to both Mr. Beard and Mr. Adams and an inspiration of the moment; but Mr. Theodore Adams, who owned a most desirable site, did in fact promptly resolve to donate it for library purposes. Clemens continued:

Insert: Redding Library, original building.

I am going to help build that library with contributions—from my visitors. Every male guest who comes to my house will have to contribute a dollar or go away without his baggage. If those burglars that broke into my house recently had done that they would have been happier now, or if they'd have broken into this library they would have read a few books and led a better life. Now they are in jail, and if they keep on they will go to Congress. When a person starts downhill you can never tell where he's going to stop. I am sorry for those burglars. They got nothing that they wanted and scared away most of my servants. Now we are putting in a burglar-alarm instead of a dog. Some advised the dog, but it costs even more to entertain a dog than a burglar. I am having the ground electrified, so that for a mile around any one who puts his foot across the line sets off an alarm that will be heard in Europe. Now I will introduce the real president to you, a man whom you know already—Dr. Smith [MTB 1472-3]. Note: Fatout adds that Dr. Ernest H. Smith was first vice-president of the library, and William E. Grumman was the librarian [630]. Dan Beard was the second vice-president; Isabel Lyon third vice-president; Mrs. Zalmon Read, Secretary & Treasurer, Mrs. William E. Grumman Librarian [Mark Twain Library Association minutes, copied by Tenney Nov. 15, 1981].

Cooley also writes of Sam's dedication at the new library in Redding, adding some details not given by the other two scholars:

Clemens gave a large collection of his surplus books to the town of Redding to be used as a nucleus for a public library. An unused chapel, which could be seen from his house, was obtained for the library. Clemens was elected president of the Mark Twain Library of Redding and delivered a brief address at the opening ceremony. Dorothy Quick and Louise Paine were visiting Clemens at the time; they dressed up in Japanese kimonos and carried paper parasols at the dedication [221n2].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King opened the little library today at 4 o'clock" [MTP: IVL TS 71].

The History of Redding website offers this:

"Umpawaug Chapel. On October, 28, 1908, Twain dedicated a nearby chapel as the temporary location for the Mark Twain Library. He donated thousands of books from his personal collection. The library was actively used, and a librarian was on hand Wednesday and Saturday afternoons" [Note: misdated; should be Oct. 14, 1908 <http://www.historyofredding.com/HRTwainstormfield.htm>].

To make the date of the dedication even more confusing, these minutes of the Mark Twain Library Association show Sept. 14 as the date, which is likely in error:

On Sept 14 – The Library was opened and presented to the town, a large number of people attending, also many from out of town. Dr. Ernest H. Smith, presiding, delivered the opening address—introducing Mr. S.L. Clemens—who delivered the presentation speech, therefore personally presenting the Library to the people of the town of Redding [Mark Twain Library Assoc. minutes, copied by Tenney Nov. 15, 1981].

Sam also inscribed a photograph to Laura Hawkins Frazer: "To Laura Frazer, with the love of her earliest sweetheart / Oct. 14/08 Mark Twain" [MTP]. Note: This was the day that Laura Frazer and her granddaughter Clara Frazer ended their visit with Sam. The photograph was "found" on Laura's dresser in the morning [Hannibal Evening Courier-Post, Mar. 6, 1935 p.3C]. Laura was the inspiration for the character Becky Thatcher in TS. On or just after this date Sam mailed the photo to Clara Frazer in Withers Mills Mo., and wrote on the envelope: "I don't suppose there's any such place but never mind, let the government hunt around & find out" [MTP #11250].

Ambrose W. Barratt wrote from Scranton, Penn. to offer Sam his price to come and speak [MTP].

Nicholas Muray Butler wrote to thank Sam for his "prompt and generous response, under date of the 12th, to my suggestion about Oxford. We are all poor men, and if we can raise a hundred pounds between us we will be doing well." Butler hoped Clemens was "nicely settled" in his new house [MTP].

L.N. Jenkins for Kolynos Co., New Haven, Conn wrote to Sam to pump their latest product, a mouth cream. Jenkins' father, Dr. N.S. Jenkins of Dresden invented "Porcelain Enamel for restoring defective teeth [MTP].

Alfred E. Lunt for National Republican Colleges wrote to ask Sam if they might publish his photo with one of their articles in the National College Republican, a paper with 50,000 circulation [MTP].

William B. Reeve wrote from Brooklyn, NY to ask Sam for an autographed photo. Reeve had watched as a boy when the Quaker City left the dock in NY, "longing to be one of them" [MTP].

October 15 Thursday – Sam's original guestbook contains the following names for this date, which do not appear in the new guestbook, transcribed after Dec. 28: Kate V. Saint Maur, The Maples, Redding; Vida C - - ly Sidney, Siasconset Mass.; Fanny Sanford Shaw, Redbank, N.J. [Mac Donnell TS 5, 7]. Note: p. 6 is left blank.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mrs. Crane went away today—but not before I had discovered another of AB's indiscretions. He has had letters written from Mrs. Clemens to Mrs. Crane in his possession for over a year. The King's anger burned furiously, so he bade me go to the telephone and demand those letters. I did so—with Benar standing beside me so to courage me up, and Paine said "certainly" and they came up with Sanford the Grocer [MTP: IVL TS 71].

Hill writes: "Paine appeared to be vanquished and Miss Lyon the victor in their power struggle, with Ashcroft on her side. But Clara Clemens had not yet chosen to exert her authority over her father" [208-9].

W.H. Holmes, Jr. wrote for Public Schools, Westerly, R.I. to inquire if Sam was "open to engagements for lectures" [MTP].

Ezekiel Leavitt wrote from New Haven, Conn. to ask Sam's permission to translate his autobiography into Yiddish; he was sending under separate cover his book, Songs of Grief and Gladness, as well as a booklet, "Education and Psychology" and would be "very happy to have your opinion about them" [MTP]. Note: Leavitt's book is not in Gribben.

The Taunton, Mass. Post Office sent a postcard notifying Sam that his letter to Mrs. Georgia C. Taylor remained undeliverable [MTP].

John C. Brownbridge wrote from Durham, England to ask Sam for "some small material help" being unable to work at hard manual labor and being "stone deaf" [MTP]. Note: MLH: "Mr. Clemens regrets"

October 16 Friday – The New York Times, p. 9, "Says Arnold Daly Will Try Vaudeville," reported that Percy Williams, vaudeville manager and proprietor of the Orpheum circuit announced that Arnold Daly and company would produce a new one-act farce by Mark Twain entitled "Becoming An Editor," which would open at the Colonial Theatre in Brooklyn on Oct. 26.

Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Margaret Blackmer, M.A.	Miss Tewksbury's school	" [October] 16-19	→ Margaret-of-the-shell

Isabel Lyon's journal: Early I went to N.Y. this morning on the 7:30 train, but when we reached Stamford the power on the electric division gave out, and we were hours prowling along the road to N.Y. I had time for only an errand or two, and then to go down to the Caronia, where we were to lunch with Captain Dow, Benare was there, and Will Wark, and Ethel Newcomb and C.C. and Mr. McCubbin, the purser. It was very gay, and very good. The Benare and I met Margaret at the station, and we came home to find the King watching for the coming of Margaret. He stood out in a loggia archway in the late twilight; his figure as straight and lithe as that of a youth [MTP: IVL TS 71-72].

Charles L. Andrews wrote from Bendigo, Victoria Australia to advise Sam that by lecturing on Mark Twain's works he was raising "hundreds of pounds for Hospitals & other charities," and listing various works he used. He wanted to be included in a list of invitations to Sam's funeral [MTP].

New York Times sent an engraved invitation to meet Lord Northcliffe and Guglielmo Marconi (1874-1934) at a dinner on Oct. 16 at 7:30 p.m. Tower Hall, Times Building [MTP].

October 17 Saturday – Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Geo. Neilgruen	)		To discuss my
Gustave Kobbé	) From Harper & Bros, N.Y.	October 17	new copyright law
Mr. Phayre	)

Note: Gustav Kobbé (1856-1918) was an author in his own right, with at least two books on opera. At the time of his accidental death from a hydroplane, Kobbé was the music and art critic of the NY Herald. John F. Phayne of Harpers.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Headache. Mr. Milzener—Gustave Kobbé" [MTP: IVL TS 72].

Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers) wrote from Fairhaven, Mass. to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens / We just got home last evening and now Mr Rogers says we must go to town again tomorrow night. Can you not come to us the last of the week? We shall surely be back here by Friday—We want very much to see you and we must find our way to Redding sooner or later—Send me a little telegram to 3 East 78th st and let me know—Your letter reassures my mind as to your habits—I am so glad. With kind regards to Miss Lyon / Very Sincerely ...[MTHHR 655-6].

John B. Stanchfield wrote to advise Sam not to invest in the Fleischman Baths; he returned a check for $10,000, the amount Sam thought he would invest [MTP].

M. Ellen Zerfass wrote from Mt. Vernon, NY to invite Sam to lecture or talk to the Westchester Women's Club [MTP]. Note: MLH: "ans Oct 20."

October 18 Sunday – Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Miss Ethel Newcomb	Interior N.Y. (& Vienna)	October 18-21

Isabel Lyon's journal: In the late twilight Benar and I wandered down to the pergola. The soft light and the dim trees put a spell over the place, like that of Debussy music. It was all soft grey harmony. The only pin was the sound of Benar's voice, in the still green greyness, and now I know why the earth was so lonely when he was in Canada and it seemed as if he would never come back. He is strong and by his calm judgment he carries me through difficulties, he gives me support and a knowledge of the values of things [MTP: IVL TS 72].

Leigh Hunt sent a telegram from NYC to Sam.

My dear Doctor I much prefer to have you speak at random it was stupid of me to think of confining your to any particular line of thought however I'm sure you will accept my apology I'm looking forward to seeing you again with more pleasure than I can tell you I wish you could have heard Lord Northcliffe express his satisfaction you were going to speak for us [MTP].

October 19 Monday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "This servant question is an anxiety. The running of the house is a big business. It almost commercializes one—first now the little house maid who has come and leans over me to say that she cannot stay unless she is able to go home nights to sleep with her mother. The quaint wee soul! I'm letting her go home to her mother's bed tonight; but also she goes to talk to her mother and to try to make herself and her mother believe that she will get over her homesickness. Poor wee soul! I remember my own misery—the same agony can creep over me, even now. The King and Benare and Margaret Blackmer left today. The King to drive Mr. Leigh Hunt to meet Lord Northcliffe—and then to go down to Deal [NJ] with Colonel Harvey. There are left here, C.C. Will, and Ethel Newcombe—but the loneliness for me is heavy [MTP: IVL TS 72-73].

Jean Clemens wrote from Berlin to Isabel Lyon

Dear Lioness; / This is just a note to detail a few facts.

Living in Berlin is not inexpensive by any means. In fact, I am quite distressed to find that my board and lodging is going to amount to $50 a week. My room costs 10 M. a day Bébé's 8 M. & Anna's 5.50 M. That includes food, of course, & may include my milk—in the a.m. & evening but it includes neither baths, heating, lights, nor tea. When I went to see Mr. Thalkara, for my necessary certificate of American citizenship, I told him of a few of the difficulties I had to contend with here and he told me about an American pension [rooming house] where the rates were 10 M. but I haven't been to see it, because it would be sure to mean extra dressing & there are some people here that are nice & interesting. Also, things, except the cold in the dining-room & parlor, are going better. I did go & look at a pension which the doctor advised my seeing & I found the prices ranging from 15 M. to 50 M. and the rooms were small & furnished after the regulation hotel style. This place is homelike.... My room is the largest of our three.... I could probably put Anna into a court room & pay 4 M. 50 instead of 5 M. 50 but I should hate to. Her life is none too joyful, nor her food too plentiful & if she had a court room she would have bad air & nothing to look at outside.

Professor von Reuvers wants me to eat a cereal, if not every day, at least frequently, for breakfast. He mentioned hominy & I promised to try it. So far the ladies haven't been able to find any. I wonder if it would be possible for you to ship me some wheaten or something similar—it sounds preposterous but I very much doubt the ability of Berlin to furnish anything besides oatmeal & possibly hominy—ugh!

One of the ladies here, Mrs. Jenkins, lived for some time in Gen. Sickle's house. After a painful time at lunch, the other day, when I had to admit that Mark Twain was a humorist & act astonished at the fact that I reminded Fr. Stubenrauch of his exquisite daughter (Clara), whom she had seen at Fr. Dr. Hempel's, I let out the fact of my identity to Mrs. J. because I was afraid that after she had heard my name a few times she would recognize it and tell. It was well I did. Her most intimate friend's house was occupied by Father in Tuxedo [Voss house]. She has kept my secret even from her cousin since the latter said to me, last night, "You dance much more slowly than we do, don't you?" I was taken completely by surprise & asked her what she meant. She repeated what she had said, adding, "in England", whereupon I told her I wasn't English & gave her cause for surprise.

The first time I saw Prof v. R. he said he tho't he could help me & the next day, after mentioning Alice S. said he tho't he could cure me, too. His medicine is absolutely harmless, he says, & his rules as to food are almost the same as Dr. P.'s. I have permission to go to the theatre once a week & to continue once weekly Faust lectures I started. Then, he said that after two weeks he would be able to tell whether I could undertake any actual studying.

I am rather afraid that Bont is not going to dress quite as neatly as I wish she would. She's a little inclined to be messy, very likely partly due to her lack of strength. I shall have to wait for awhile but I am terribly afraid I shall have to speak about it & her jiggling her feet constantly, before people. I know it will make her rabid, poor child, but if she's to go & call with me I shall probably be obliged to do the unpleasant deed.

Please thank Mr. Ashcroft for his note. I had already signed the book on the steamer. / With much love... [MTP]. Note. The transcription reads "Prof v. B" which should read "Prof. v. R." or Dr. Hofrath von Ruevers; "Bont" may be a nickname for one of her nurses, Anna Sterritt or Marguerite Schmidt. Mrs. Jenkins may be Margaret Jenkins; see other entries for her.

Charles L. Andrews wrote from Melbourne, Australia. "When writing you from Bendigo a few days ago I omitted to enclose a report of the lecture." He enclosed a complimentary newspaper clipping from the Geelong Advertiser dated Aug. 8 and also a handbill for the Oct. 9 performance in Bendigo [MTP].

Eliza L. Dodge wrote from San Francisco before this date. "Will you accept a reminder of the days when we were young, and dear old [illegible word] seemed the fairest spot on earth. / Respectfully..." [MTP]. Note. "Ans Oct 19 MLH"; Based on letter deliv. from SF this would have been at least 4 or 5 days prior, say Oct. 14-15

Elias Lieberman wrote from NYC, noting Sam's interest in the Lower East Side, the Educational Theatre, etc. Lieberman was a teacher in Public School #62 on the East Side and under his supervision a journal/newspaper came out twice each term. Would Sam be as "equally obliging" as Dr. Henry Van Dyke had been and write something for their paper? [MTP].

Zoheth S. Freeman for Merchants National Bank wrote to Lyon (though catalogued to Clemens) [MTP].

October 20 Tuesday – Sam was at Col. Harvey's "country house" in Deal Beach, N.J. [IVL Oct. 19].

Isabel Lyon's journal: A good part of the burglar alarm system was installed yesterday. The gong is just outside my door, the indicator is just in my bath room, and last night I slept as I have not slept for nearly 5 weeks, for there has been no night since Sept. 18th without a terrified mental shriek in it. It is not fear, it is a pathological condition.

Such deeps of loneliness with the King away!

There is such a confusion over the servants and the confusion lies not in the servant department, but in a part of the house that gives itself credit for a high line of conduct. I was to go with the King to Irvington yesterday—but I dared not leave this house to a certain derangement and a possible clearing-out of the present working force. The servants do not want more than one head—hence the wearying, wearying confusion [MTP: IVL TS 73-74].

Jean Clemens wrote from Berlin to Isabel Lyon

Dear Lioness; / In haste & speed, I write to tell you, that as my average expenses will be nearly two hundred marks a week & I have only four hundred still on the letter of credit, I hope you will make some further arrangement at once. By the time you succeed in sending me some money by mail I shall be nearly minus. Of course, it may not amount to absolutely that each week, but it won't be far from it. I have arranged today to make my own tea, so the MO. 75 a day will be saved & even cover the purchase of the lamp & two cups.

I am being careful but it is not possible to get low rates & at all decent food. ... Love to Father & the Spider [Clara] [MTP].

Gratia H. Bain wrote from Rutherford, NJ to ask Sam for "a few lines" [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Thanks for letter, & wishes he were able to grant request, but such demands come with every mail"

Edmund W. Ballentine wrote from Chicago, Ill. to remind Sam of a conversation in his Hartford home "some years ago" when Sam said if he ever spoke in Chicago he would hire Ballentine to manage the event, and Clemens had further said no greater pleasure would be his than to appear with James Whitcomb Riley. Ballentine recently visited Riley who agreed to come out of retirement from the platform if Twain would come to Chicago and appear with him [MTP].

October 21 Wednesday – Sam went to New York City and attended a banquet for Lord Northcliffe at the Union Club, given by Leigh Hunt. He wrote of the evening in his Oct. 23. That excerpt:

I stopped over in New York, night before last, [for a banquet] to Lord Northcliffe, given at the Union club by Leigh Hunt. I didn't go until 10 P.M. & so it didn't tire me.

There were only a hundred guests, & as I knew all of them, it was very pleasant. Old Chauncey Depew was there, & D. O. Mills & Pierrepont [sic] Morgan; & Laffan;—and, well, everybody including Mr. Rogers. I did not expect to go to a banquet for a year to come, but this was an exception, for Leigh Hunt is a special friend of mine [MTP] Note: See Oct. 23 for the rest of the letter. Lord Northcliffe (Alfred Harmsworth - 1865-1922) headed up the Harmsworth firm in London, which owned The Daily Mail, Evening News, Globe, Observer, and 35 other British publications [NY Times, Oct. 23 p. 4, "Pilgrims to Dine Lord Northcliffe"]. Leigh S.J. Hunt (1854-1933), educator and publisher who became a multi-millionaire by 1901 through tax-free gold mining concessions in Korea.

Since he did not go to the banquet until 10 p.m., it's likely he stayed the night at the Wolcott Hotel before going on to Deal, N.J. the next day. It is the hotel he mentioned for his return trip to NYC on Oct. 24 to daughter Clara.

Miss Ethel Newcomb, pianist and past student of Theodor Leschetizksy ended her visit to Stormfield on this day [New guestbook].

Isabel Lyon's journal: I went away this morning on the earliest train, to get away from the gloom that misunderstandings frequently put into my heart. As far as S. Norwalk I talked with Mr. Oddy, the man who struck burglar Williams over the head with a billy, and so saved the lives of 2 or 3 on the train that morning. Benares met me at the station—even at the train, and before I had time to banish my glooms, they were written all over my face—but he scattered them. And all day he wouldn't leave me; he even came down with me and we drove home in the twilight, along these darling roads and through the woods, made so stately by their naked trees. We had a most lovely evening. We got an electrical vibrating machine for the King, in N.Y., and tested it on me and on him—Benar—and he read aloud to me. Benar is a very wonderful man [MTP: IVL TS 74]. Note: Skandera-Trombley made a reference to the vibrating machine as a "sex toy" and "gift" from Lyon, to which Robert Hirst replied forcefully in a post for the online Mark Twain Forum, May 2010: "That Clemens would have recognized the vibrator as a potential sex toy is entirely Laura Skandera-Trombley's idea; and since Skandera-Trombley specifies that it was a sex toy "for women," its meaning as a putative present to Clemens would be deeply puzzling." For more, see the MTP's rebuttal which claims the device was "osteopathic and not masurbatory," see Benjamin Griffin's excellent article in the UC Press blog: "Mark Twain: His Own Devices." <http://www.ucpress.edu/blog/9857/mark-twain-his-own-devices/>

H. Walter Barnett wrote to Lyon (though catalogued to Clemens) [MTP].

F.S. Griffen wrote from Brookfield Center, Conn. sending a block for a quilt she wished Clemens to sign. The quilt was to be for St. Paul's church [MTP].

Henry Hersch Hart wrote from San Francisco doubting that the autograph he recently rec'd was indeed that of Samuel Clemens; could he get one in "Clemens' own name"? [MTP]. Note: "ans. Nov. 3 MLH"

Ezekiel Leavitt for The Time, a New Haven Jewish weekly wrote again to Sam about translating his Autobiography into Yiddish and Russian; as directed he would contact Harpers. He then asked for "two favors": Sam's "testimony" on Leavitt's book Songs of Grief and Gladness which he'd sent, and a date when he might call at Redding to talk over the translation “and many other things” [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Oct 23 / 08 MLH”

October 22 Thursday – Sam went to Deal, N.J. to “talk business” with George B. Harvey, and planned to stay “2 or 3 days,” but left at noon, Friday, Oct. 23 [Oct. 23 to Jean] .

In Deal, N.J., probably on this evening, Sam wrote to daughter Clara.

Deal, N.J.
Saturday eve.

Clara dear, I saw Mr. Sawyer & Mr. Benedict & arranged that matter. Here at this country house, exposed to all the winds of winter, they warm all the bedrooms with oil stoves, & are well satisfied with them. They say we need have no fears.

I expect to return to the Wolcott next Tuesday forenoon—don’t you dare to leave before I see you, dear heart. / With lots & lots of love— Father [MTP]. Note: It’s not clear why Sam headed this Saturday eve., which was Oct. 24, since he left Deal on at noon Friday, Oct. 23 [Oct 29 to Blackmer]. Mr. Benedict was likely Elias Cornelius Benedict.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: “We took Benar to the Station—mother and I—and then we drove for a long way, 20 miles in all. Over Pickett’s Ridge, and through a most beautiful country” [MTP: IVL TS 74].

M.E. Zerfass wrote on Westchester Women’s Club, Mt. Vernon, NY notepaper to again urge Sam, though Lyon had replied he was retired, to speak to their group [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Oct 23 / 08 MLH”

October 23 Friday – In Deal, N.J. Sam wrote to daughter Jean, giving some account of his activities for the last few days.

Dear Jean: / I came down here yesterday to stay 2 or 3 days, & talk business with Col. Harvey. It has suddenly turned cold. Yesterday it was fine weather, today is like November.

I stopped over in New York, night before [...see this excerpt in Oct. 21 entry]

Our neighbor—our charming & lovable neighbor at Redding Jeannette Gilder—has been surprising & grieving us by falling ill—fatally ill we feared—but she is happily over it now, as I see by this morning’s paper, & I am glad.

Clara is leaving soon on her tour—I guess she is well prepared for it, & I think she is expected to have a very satisfactory time—a kind of pleasure excursion in fact. I hope it will turn out so.

There is a most kind word from Excellenz Frau von Versen. She is most kindly disposed toward you, and I feel very grateful to her.

I love you dearly & hope you are happy & prosperous. / With lots of love & kisses, / Father [MTP].

Sam left at noon. This was Dorothy Harvey’s 14th birthday [Oct 24 to Blackmer]. Lyon details his arrival (below).

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Tonight the King came back, very tired he was, and he literally tumbled out of the carriage, as is his wont. He was so glad to get home. Benar took him to his room and got him out of his clean white clothes and he went down to the library and stepped lovingly from point to point in it, reveling in the copper beauty of the big room, and dwelling with satisfaction on the big bunch of rich red sumach heads that I’d put in a copper bowl [MTP: IVL TS 74-75].

M.G. Rider wrote from Norwalk, Conn. to sell or give Sam some antiques [MTP]. Note: “to say if he were collecting” and “Ans. Oct 23 / 08 MLH”

October 24 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

Thank you very much, & I hope to take advantage of the invitation.

I want Mr. Rogers to buy & try the Arnold electric vibrating machine—for sale cor. 38th & 5th ave.,—& you must try it too. It seems to do all that the human massager does with his hands—& more, & better, & pleasanter, and simpler, & more effectively. It stops headaches for Miss Lyon & cures & limbers lame & stiff backs for me. It claims to ease all sorts of pain, & I judge it can do it, for it stirs up the circulation quite competently—& that is really the essential function of osteopathy & kindred treatments.

It costs but little, & I am convinced you will like it, & prosper by it. / Yours as always ... [MTHHR 655].

Insert: 1913 Ad on the Arnold Vibrator.

Sam also began a letter to Frances Nunnally that he added to on Oct. 26, 27, 28, 29, and 31. Here is the Oct. 24 segment:

Yes, keep the Easter holiday in mind, you dear Francesca, & don't let any of those mates of yours persuade you to go home with them. No, come here! And persuade your mother to come with you; she will be needing a change from the Georgian gentle climate by that time.

Come, dear, let's make a bargain—like this: if your mother can't come with you, I will send Miss Lyon for you; then, later, I will go down & see you graduate. That will be one journey for me, & I am just old enough & rickety enough to dread two journeys. I do dearly want to be there when you graduate; & I am not going to miss it for any light matter.

==

The first shadow has fallen upon the Aquarium—Margaret Illington is very sick. I am speaking for all the members, & sending her their sympathy & good wishes.

==

Some of those photographs came out so-so. Two of you are better than any of the others, but not so good as they ought to be. I will enclose copies. The best one is to be enlarged for my room. That is the one I want the ribbon-bows for—please don't fail to send them when you are done with them, dear [MTP]. Note: Margaret Illington Frohman.

Sam also began a letter to Margaret Blackmer that he finished on Oct. 29.

[one page missing]

Dear heart, you wouldn't let me go to the gorge that Monday morning & recover the lost section of the cup, & now—oh dear, the place is all covered deep with fallen leaves. As soon as we got back from New York we went to the gorge, & Ashcroft & Miss Lyon shoveled the leaves away & hunted a long time, but there was no result, & I was so sorry. I ought to have made you stay back, that day, while I went down & got it; but you were a disobedient angel-fish, & you wouldn't stay back. You'll have to be tried for this.

[one page missing]

Send me a kiss. No, bring it. / Lovingly, /S L. C., Curator [MTP; MTAq 221-22].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King is in bed doing a copyright problem" [MTP: IVL TS 75].

Will F. Bromley wrote a short note from Clark Falls, Conn. to Sam, enclosing a clipping from the Saturday Evening Post of Feb. 15, 1908, which he thought "may bring a moment of amusement..." [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Oct 27 / 08 MLH; Mr Clemens has seen the clipping but thanks you for sending it"

James H. Roberts wrote from Hartford to Sam. Roberts was administrator of his uncle's estate (James D. Willard) and had "for sale several hundred copies" of Twain's portrait. "Could you make use of them?" [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov 3. 08." [MLH]

W.B. Miller wrote for the International Committee of YMCA, enclosing printed material (not in file) and a request for donation [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Oct 27 / 08 MLH"

October 25 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: We all had tea with Mother this afternoon, and after we got back the King read the copyright problem he has been working on. He was lying in wait for Benar and me, and Benar flew upstairs with his white legs, not waiting for me to say that the King was waiting in the library. These impulsive creatures are so much the best in the world, and the best example of it is the King, the beautiful King [MTP: IVL TS 72].

C.P. Jones, M.D. wrote from Vineland, NJ, having just read FE about the endurance of pain by aborigines. Jones had recently sent his book, Quick My Rifle, which he thought his secretary had not allowed Clemens to read. The book contained a chapter, "The Torture Chamber" describing "elegantly the practices of the Tibetan Lamas." He suggested that when Lyon was out for a walk that Clemens "sneak" the book out and read it [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Oct 28 / 08 MLH"; Gribben 358 lists the book with Jones and A.L. Sykes as co-authors (1907).

Hazel Stourton for the Working Girls' Assoc. wrote from Evansville, Ind. to ask Sam to donate his handkerchief to their Assoc [MTP]. Note: Ans. Oct 27 / 08 MLH; and, "In the country where it is not easy to buy handkerchiefs, but is glad to send an autograph."

George L. Smith of YMCA Canal Zone, wrote sending his autograph in a rather spoof of a letter and not directly asking for Clemens' autograph [MTP]. Note: "Autgr sent Nov. 6. MLH".

October 26 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam added a line to his Oct. 24, 26 to Frances Nunnally: "Monday, 26th. Now if you are—however, I am interrupted" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to William Dean Howells.

Oh, I say! Where are you hiding, & why are you hiding? You promised to come here & you didn't keep your word. (This sounds like astonishment—but don't be misled by that.)

Come, fire up again on your fiction-mill & give us another promise. And this time keep it—for it is your turn to be astonished. Come; & stay as long as you possibly can. I invented a new copyright-extension scheme last Friday & sat up all night arranging its details. It will interest you. Yesterday I got it down on paper in as compact a form as I could. Harvey & I have examined the scheme, & to-morrow or next day he will send me a couple of copyright-experts to arrange about getting certain statistics for me.

Authors, publishers & the public have always been damaged by the copyright laws. The proposed amendment will advantage all three—the public most of all. I think Congress will pass it & settle the vexed problem permanently.

I shall need your assent, & the assent of about a dozen other authors. Also the assent of all the large firms among the 300 publishers. These authors & publishers will furnish said assent I am sure. Not even the pirates will be able to furnish a serious objection, I think.

Come along. This place seemed at its best when all around was summer-green; later it seemed at its best when all around was burning with the autumn splendor; & now, once more it seems at its best, with the trees masked & the ground a painter's palette. / Yours ever [MTP; MTHL 2: 835-6]. Note: latter source notes claim that Sam's copyright scheme has not survived, but gives MTB p.1641 and speculates as to the main considerations, that is, the author after 42 years would be able to extend copyright 30 more, when certain conditions were met.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Englishman. / The soul is so dead within me. It must be a pathological condition; for when I saw Dr. Quintard in the train on Wednesday he said I was badly in need of rest and change. I cannot have either, and so I must try to develop the soul within me. It is so dead.

Later. But it isn't dead. It's just over its ears in mud—the mud of criticism—no, misunderstandings fired by C.C. and I'm a coward to not know that mud can clarify things in time, and can build a foundation from which I'll be the better able to see the King.

Benares went hurtling away today, glad to get clear of the mud; but breathing at me his sweet philosophy that we must pay for what we have. And to hold so great a treasure as the King means that the price one must pay can never be too high a one. It will be a high one. But to know that you know the King is to send big roots down to support your tree [MTP: IVL TS 75-76].

Charles Emerson Cooke for The Friars, NYC wrote to invite Sam to a dinner recognizing the actor, John Drew, Oct. 31 at 10:30 p.m. [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Oct 29 MLH”

Republic Magazine, St. Louis, sent a telegram:

Professor Guthrie of University of the South in lecture here says that Mark Twain's humor “is mostly rot” though he concedes “he has genius”. “Just compare him with Alphonse Daudet who was required by the People of France to be extremely refined in his offerings and there you have the difference”. He says will you reply to him through columns of the Republic wiring direct at our expense [MTP].

October 27 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam added one word to his Oct. 24 to Frances Nunnally, “Interrupted.” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

Dear Annieanlouise, when you wrote last you had been indulging in a good many gay activities, & manifestly enjoying them. Go on with it—it is wholesome. I have lately been gay myself—partly upon compulsion. Business. Flying around. I did not get entirely over the fatigue of it until last night. I was in New York, Boston, Deal Beach, & Irvington—and kept late hours part of the time. I mean to stay at home, now, all the winter, & be quiet.

We've got the burglar alarm in, & nobody in the house is nervous now, or loses any sleep. And the arches of the loggia are snugly filled with glass, & we occupy that place a good part of the day, because it is so cosy & so deluged with light. It is equipped for steam heat—a fact which we discovered by accident. The pipes come up under the floor.

The heart-game begun early in September still goes on, & the record is kept. Benares' score is 1385 hearts, mine is 1418, & Miss Lyon's closing up on 1600. So the game stood today when Benares left in the last train for New York. He is well, & is getting very fat.

It is a good book you sent me, but your annotations are better still. Thank you very much.

Margaret (of the shell) was here several days. Benares and Miss Lyon brought her up from her school, & Benares & I took her back to it, & had a very enjoyable time there.

Paine was here yesterday for billiards, & Sinbad assisted the game for half an hour & was killingly entertaining. /With a great deal of love / The Major

Ten minutes later. I went to the billiards room a moment ago to get a picture of Tammany which you have not seen, & there I found some friends of yours—the kittens. The two Omars are slumbering on the sofa, & Sinbad is asleep in his pocket in the billiard table—the same one you saw him in. We put him there just when Benares was leaving.

Tammany's part of the photograph is good, but the rest of it is bad; & not only bad but unflattering, which is a crime.

You are very busy these days, I know; but please don't be too busy to write me. / Lovingly / The Major [MTP]. Note: Clemens named two of his cats “Omar.”

Sam's original guestbook contains the following for Oct. 27: Annie Reid Banks, Bridgeport, Conn.; Alice A. Driggs, Brooklyn, N.Y. [Mac Donnell TS 7]. Note: Driggs has no date next to her name but is shown directly under Banks, and before a Nov. 19 listing. The Driggses from Redding were earlier visitors and likely related.

Isabel Lyon's journal: The King is gay and strong these days. He talked with Ethel Newcomb last night at dinner and reminisced over the life in Vienna. But today Mr. Phayre and Mr. Nast came up from Harpers to hear the King's copyright project. Mr. Nast sat there like a brutal rival fighting clenching beast waiting for his "kill" in the death of the copyright on the "Innocents Abroad." I think Colonel Harvey or any gentleman could have kicked him for talking the pirate publisher's view. The King never lost his control—though his eyes blazed and his color rose high, as he answered that brute, slapping his challenge back at him. Mr. Phayre crossed and uncrossed his legs nervously [MTP: IVL TS 76]. Note: John F. Phayre (1843-1919) of Harpers, worked there for 40 years and was Joseph Wesley Harper's (1830-1896) assistant.

Jean Clemens began a letter from Berlin to Isabel Lyon that she finished on Oct. 28. After detailing more about her allowance and expenses, she responded to servants leaving Stormfield:

I am very much surprised at Katherine's & little Katie Murray's leaving—the latter more than the former's because without doubt she missed the city festivities. But did they actually leave inside of a week? It seems as though that were really too unjust to be permissible. I don't in the least envy you your undertaking of finding and breaking in new servants.

I had forgotten that Father had been in a collision a year ago, & even now, after having been reminded of it, I cannot remember anything very distinct about it.

Bébé [Marguerite Schmidt] has begun lessons at the Berlitz School. She went for the first time yesterday & enjoyed it very much & also considered it very good! I was afraid that she might find the lesson, especially, dull but she pays less than one Mark per lesson—just think of it! [MTP].

Arthur McDonald scrawled a letter in Washington, D.C., enclosing "the general purpose of a humanitarian and scientific work" and asking for any contribution. No enclosures in file [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Oct 29 MLH"

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam that after going through their stock of fire damaged books there were "a good many damaged very, very little indeed." He estimated a thousand in a range of titles. They wished him to accept them as a donation to the Mark Twain Library in Redding. Where to ship them? [MTP]. Note: IVL: "The telegraph is too slow to send him out appreciation & thanks. It's the best Goddam [illegible word] get. We're going to add them a few at a time with the compliments of Harper & Bros."

K. von Louis wrote a long letter all in German to Sam. "Ach! Mark Twain, Der Humorist!" [MTP].

October 28 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam added to his Oct. 24, 26, 27 to Frances Nunnally. "28th. It was a very very pleasant interruption—It was the mail, & brought the pink ribbons. Thank you, dear, ever so much. They will make a charming decoration for the enlarged picture" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to William Wymark Jacobs. Paine introduces this letter:

Clemens was a great admirer of the sea stories of W.W. Jacobs and generally kept one or more of this author's volumes in reach of the bed, where most of his reading was done. The acknowledgment which follows was sent when he had finished Salthaven.

Dear Mr. Jacobs—It has a delightful look. I will not venture to say how delightful, because the words would sound extravagant, & would thereby lose some of their strength & to that degree misrepresent me. It is my conviction that Dialstone Lane holds that supremacy over all purely humorous books in our language, but I feel about Salthaven as the Cape Cod poet feels about Simon Hanks:

"The Lord knows all things, great & small,
 With doubt he's not perplexed:
 'Tis Him alone that knows it all—
 But Simon Hanks comes next."

The poet was moved by envy & malice & jealousy, but I am not: I place Salthaven close up next to Dialstone because I think it has a fair & honest right to that high position. I have kept the other book moving; I shall begin to hand this one around now.

And many thanks to you for remembering me.

This house is out in the solitudes of the woods & the hills, an hour & a half from New York, & I mean to stay in it winter & summer the rest of my days. I beg you to come & help occupy it a few days the next time you visit the U.S. / Sincerely yours, ... [MTP: Paine's 1917 Mark Twain's Letters p.823]. Note: see also Gribben 348 on Jacobs.

E.C. Bross for the New Amstel Press wrote to advise that he was sending an issue of the New Amstel Magazine which contained special appreciation of Charles Dudley Warner [MTP]. Note: "Oct 29.08" and "Thanks for sending cute mag, which he is glad to see"

Samuel Duncan Patterson for the Westchester Women's Club, Mt. Vernon, NY wrote to Sam, adding to the previous pestering requests for him to speak there [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Oct 29 MLH; and "Decline form"

Jean Clemens finished a letter from Berlin to Isabel Lyon that she began on Oct. 27. After instructing on her correct address, she wrote:

I called on one of Mrs. Henderson's sisters a few days ago and was surprised to find that she lived at the same number a former school-mate of mine had lived. I think the house has been decidedly changed because my memory of my friend's home was that the house was an ordinary one, whereas this one is rather elaborate with a sort of court-garden. Frä. von Bunsen lives in what is called the "Gartenhaus." I didn't find her in nor have I heard anything from her yet but I hope I shall.

I haven't gotten permission to study yet but I am going to ask next Friday. It made me fairly boil to undertake something, when I escorted Bébé to the Berlitz School to get her ticket. I have no desire to go there—except that it always has a sort of fascination for me—but I do most desperately want to begin to study history with a really good teacher. Of course, since I so much want to do it, I fail to grasp why one lesson a week should be undesirable. It may not be considered so. Next Friday my two-week's probation ends & then I shall ask. I didn't mention the subject last time but the doctor said not to use the brain by reading or writing too steadily—that such work must be interrupted.

Prof. von R. did one thing last week which I can't remember Dr. Peterson's ever having done in exactly the same way. He held a magnifying glass against each one of my eyes in turn, with one hand, while with the other he held a small instrument with some metal on it to his eye, & made the light flash on my eye by means of the metal. When he was through I asked what the deed was done for—what he could tell by it and he told me that he was able to see the blood vessels of the eye & that the eye reflected the condition of the blood vessels on the brain; if they were close together the person was not in a good condition—the brain was excited, etc. He found mine in a normal condition. Dr. P. always (or almost always) pulled the lower lid of one eye down but that merely showed the condition of the blood in general. Once or twice, I believe he held something to his eye & looked at mine but without using any particular light & he never would explain anything that he did. When I inquired of Dr. von R. about bicycle-riding & he said no he explained why & knowing the reason I was perfectly willing to give up all tho't of it. Dr. P. used to irritate me by invariably stating that such & such a thing was better for me or not feasible but without ever giving a definite explanation. In that respect I like this doctor better. His personality is one of quiet & kindness. When he asked me about my breakfast last Friday & I spoke of coffee he said, "coffee & milk" & I gave him the proportion that I usually take in it, then he said: "Gut. Milch mit Kaffee aber nicht Kaffee mit Milch!" Give my love to the family & please send me word of poor old Prosper [dog] & the sores he got on the journey. / Ever so much love...[MTP].

October 29 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam added to his Oct. 24, 26, 27, 28 to Frances Nunnally.

