Thursday 29th. The glass is in the arches now. There is steam heat. So the loggia makes a cosy winter-parlor, with plenty of chance for sunshine. Miss Lyon is going to put a couple of powerful reflector-lamps in there for night-service—then, seen from all the distances, the glare will make the place look like a light-house. At night, with a light in every window & viewed from that white church over on the Ridge, the house already looks like a factory that's running over-time to fill rush-orders. Coude the painter lives over there, & he says it's the dreadfulest object under these skies on a gloomy night.

A new fact in natural history: some cats do like water. Ashcroft dipped Sinbad in the fountain, & he manifestly liked it. He made no objection, & presently came back for another dip—& got it, & looked pleased & grateful. / Lovingly ... [MTP]. Note: he would finish this marathon letter on Oct. 31.

Sam also finished his Oct. 24 to Margaret Blackmer in Hamilton, Bermuda:

Four or 5 days later—Oct 29.

The glass windows are in the arches now, & the loggia makes a most cosy & comfortable parlor. It was snug & pleasant in there this morning during a driving rain-storm, with the kittens romping around.

The kittens are fine—Ananda & Annanci. Do you remember Billiards? Billiards is the tame big brother. A remarkable cat, for he isn't prejudiced against water. The other day Ashcroft dipped him in the fountain to see how he would like it. He didn't object at all, & didn't try to scramble out. When we went off walking down towards the spring-house he followed; & when we came back Ashcroft sat him in the fountain & took his hand away & Billiards sat there quite contented. I suppose such a cat as this is worth three or four thousand dollars.

The Mark Twain Library is getting along very nicely. I am required to give a reading or a talk for the benefit of its treasury during the month of November. You are invited. I invite you. You'll be the only complimentary ticket. The performance will take place here in the house. Miss Lyon & Lounsbury & the other officers will select a date presently.

Ashcroft & I had a delightful time at your school, & we wish to thank the Misses Tewksbury cordially through you.

I went down to Deal Beach the next day, & was there until Friday noon with Dorothy Harvey, M. A. Friday was her 14th birthday.

[Continued. Night.] Come back, dear, it is too lonesome here without you. To-day there is no company. At least none except between-trains company. Miss Newcomb has been with us a week, but she went away this morning. We are telephoning Miss Margery Clinton, & we hope she will join us Miss Lyon & Ashcroft on board the 3.32 train tomorrow & come up. You see how lonely you make it by going away from here, you little rascal. / Very lovingly ... / [sketch of cat "Billiards" at bottom – see insert; MTP].

Brooks Riley wrote from Colerain Mass. to send thanks and a poem [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov 16 MLH"

William Robertson Coe wrote from NYC to Sam.

I have in mind your various references to the "open latch" [invites to visit]. / How would it suit you to provide luncheon for Mrs. Coe, Mr. Winslow, a friend of ours whom I believe you have met, and myself on Election Day? If it will be convenient to you we will motor up, so if you have anything to say about the roads write me by return mail [MTP].

Viola Rae Scott for New Thoughts, a monthly illustrated magazine in St. Petersburg, Russia, wrote to note that "the most popular books in Russia are the translations of your works," and asking for a short article, but since there was no copyright there for foreign writers, it would have to be something simultaneously published elsewhere to avoid piracy [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov 13 MLH”

Women’s Education Assoc. sent a printed invitation to hear Alice Minnie Herts speak on the Educational Theatre, on Nov. 12 at 3:30 pm at Simmons College, Boston [MTP].

October 30 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margery H. Clinton.

Dear Miss Margery: / Good, you’re coming! Well, I am glad. Even dern glad, as Pontius Pilate used to say. I think it was Pontius; at any rate it was the one that wrote Paradise Lost & was eventually burned by the Church for falling down the mountain & breaking the tables of stone. I never cared for him, although an ancestor. He ought to have known he was in no condition to carry things down a mountain & everybody looking at him. / With love & thanks ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Harvey.

Dear Dorothy, you have been 14 so long now, that it no longer seems strange & bizarre & impossible & unthinkable, but has settled down into a calm & logical & to-be-expected & unflammable fact. It is very odd, to watch 14 & see it perform; see it appear a vague speck on the horizon; see it get larger & a little larger & a little larger, & nearer & nearer, & then suddenly swell up & occupy all space for an instant & go crashing & thrashing & thundering by; & the very next moment there’s nothing in sight but some whirling leaves & dust—and lo & behold you are 14! In 5 minutes that dust settles down, & you realize that you don’t really feel any more different than you did before. You have been 14 exactly a week, now, Oct. 30, & already you are perfectly used to it. It is like being a mother a week: feels as if one had always been a mother. I remember it very well.

I am feeling better this morning, & the physicians & the nurses think there is hope. The most alarming difficulty was that I could get no sleep, during the whole of four consecutive nights and days. It was on account of my Cabinet. I felt that if I should be elected, I ought to be able to name my Cabinet at once, so that they could go to practising & be competent for work as soon as confirmed. I decided upon your father for Secretary of State; Mr Duneka for Public Printer & Major Leigh for Librarian of Congress: but in trying to select the right people for the right places, I lost my sleep & my mind, & those places are vacant yet.

This may all be premature, I know that. There is not the slightest likelihood that I shall be elected, yet experience has long ago taught me that it is always best to look sharply out for the unexpected & be prepared for it, because that is the thing that happens—not the other thing. It logically follows, then, that it is the most unexpected thing that happens. Very well, you will see that I will have this Cabinet all coopered and ready.

I had a most lovely time down then. I wish I could have these free- gratis-for-nothing-voyages-&-nothing-to-do-but-look-at-you every day. I should grow fat and satisfactory.

France has 207,000 sq. m.; Oregon, 194,000; Texas, 265,000, & each of them farming 2000 a year. The picayune was a silver coin worth 6 ¼ cents in America & 3 in England & its origin was Spanish. I know some other things besides these, but these are the bulk of my education.

Will you ask your father if he thinks Howells would do for War?

Very lovingly / S.L.C.

P. S. I am ever so glad the pin pleases you; for, selecting pins is pure guesswork with me & can easily result clumsily [MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote from Hotel Bellevue, Boston, to Sam.

“Hello! Hello! That you. Clemens? Well, this is Howells.”

(From a one-legged Dialogue between two Deans of American Literature.)

I would like to come to you at once; I left just such another landscape at Kittery Point last Saturday; but I shall not look from your windows before the snow flies. Pilla and I are here seeing Mrs. Howells through a course of teething which began last winter and has kept her in misery ever since. We expect it to be over next week, and then, after I have settled her in a New York hotel, provisionally, while our flat is furnishing, I can begin to talk.

Of course you have thought of the right thing in copyright, and I wish I knew what it was. I have long dimly thought that what we wanted was not copyright law but law. Is it something like that? But you have my assent, anyway. I can take it back, I suppose.

Think of our being in New York together three weeks ago! But I can't think of it. Yours ever / W.D. Howells [MTHL 2: 836-7]. Note: see n1 source: Howells had been in NY at the end of Sept. Clemens had been in NY on Sept. 25 to see daughter Jean off for Berlin.

Charles Gilman Norris wrote from Toronto, Canada to ask for a copy of “What is Man?” and enclosing his letter to David Grayson, “author of delightful articles...in the ‘American’ Magazine” and to whom he wished to give the copy [MTP].

Pearson’s Weekly, London wrote asking for a “contribution” for their Christmas Number [MTP].

Erin Hill wrote from NYC to invite Clemens to read at the City History Club’s conference and bazaar at the Hotel Plaza on Nov. 13-14 [MTP].

Herman Stalberg wrote from Hartsdale, NY to Sam. “God bless you, and a thousand thanks for that portrait!” [MTP].

YMCA per W.G. Cartlich wrote to try and “secure you for a lecture in Minneapolis sometime during the winter” [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 3 MLH”

October 31 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam finished his Oct. 24, 26, 27, 28, 29 to Frances Nunnally.

[written in the side margin of page 1:] Oct. 31. I haven’t finished this letter yet, but Ashcroft wants to play billiards; so I will start it along & finish it another time. With very much love. SLC

William Robertson Coe wrote to Sam that they had rec'd his telegram and was "glad to know it will be convenient for you to entertain us on Tuesday next. We shall be there at one o'clock; that is, unless the weather proves to be bad" [MTP].

Ralph M. Easley for The National Civic Foundation, NYC wrote to thank Sam after reading Extracts from Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven.

Samuel Gompers and I read your article together one afternoon when we were coming down from Washington on the "Congressional Limited." He roared so loudly over it several times that there was danger of his being ejected from the car. Finally it got so bad that by the time we reached Jersey City we both had to get off [MTP].

Lykens & Levy wrote from NYC to ask Sam "would you consider a short [lecture] tour" [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov. 6 MLH"

Ismia O'Flaherty wrote from Devonshire, England to Sam.

My father gave me a present of your "Choice Works", which I am never tired of reading. / I am only a little girl, but I appreciate them all, especially that pathetic story of George Washington's boyhood. / When you were last in Durban, my Father & Mother heard you lecture in the Theatre; and laughed until they were speechless, although some people said that they could not see anything to laugh at! I was too tiny to go and hear you then, but I hope to hear you in England some day. Are you coming again? / We all hope that you are not so anxious for your funeral now, but are feeling better." She asked for his reply [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Dec. 9 MLH"

November 1 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer.

You sweet Margaret, I have been trying to get Ashcroft shot & I went to Police Commissioner General Bingham about it, but he was full of objections & lame excuses & said it would make too much talk. I have known Bingham ever since he was our military attache at the German Court 18 years ago, & yet the very first time I ask a little favor of him he hunts up excuses.

Do you know what Ashcroft did? I will tell you. When he and I were walking down Fifth Avenue that next day, I stopped at a Jeweler's to get "1908" engraved on my shell & I sat down to wait. But Ashcroft said: "Never mind waiting, let them send it to the hotel." It made the blood run cold down my spine. Do you see what he had in his malicious mind? He thought you might be in town & he hoped I might meet you on the street. Then what would happen? Of course I would spring at you joyfully & say: "Oh, you dear Margaret!" Then you would say coldly & haughtily: "I beg your pardon, I do not know you, Sir." "But, dear heart, I am Clemens, old Mr. Clemens, of Redding, you know." You would answer, sarcastically: "Indeed? Then perhaps you carry about you a certain shell, a duplicate of this one."

Then I would begin to cry & you would say:

"Now, go away, shameless imposter, & molest me no more, or I will give you into custody."

You see? That is what Ashcroft was hoping & expecting would happen. But I saw through him & defeated him. I stayed right there till I got my shell back, engraved. He saw he was caught & he was the most ashamed person on this planet. Bingham disappointed me, but no matter, there are other ways of getting Ashcroft shot. He will see.

DIED

By violence, in the depths of the forest, victim of enemies unknown—

TAMMANY

The most beautiful of her race, admired, beloved & now lamented, by all who knew her.

She leaves behind her, inconsolable, two children by her first marriage, BILLIARDS & BABYLON, & three grandchildren by her second espousals, ANANDA, ANNANCI and SINBAD.

REQUIES CAT IN PACE

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Francesca dear, don't you be alarmed at my writing you so continuously; it puts no obligation upon you. At least no very burdensome one. You have to spare me ten lines when you are writing your other letters—that is all—but don't you forget to do that, & don't you neglect it, do you hear?

An hour ago, at noon, I was drifting about the ground-floor noting the enchantment the brilliant sun was working upon this & that & the other object possessing color a glowing copper vase on the black mantel with yellow berries dropping from it; a splash of intense white light upon a many-hued rug, the rest of the rug lying subdued & soft & mellow in shadow; a blaze of mingled gold & crimson flaming in that darling billiard-room fender, observed down the intervening berugged hall from in front of the library fireplace, & a shaft of sunlight from the front door glorifying one half of a bowl of pink flowers midway of the hall, the rest of the mass dimmed to a vague flush by a deep shadow; a burning touch of sun upon the centre of a vase of red flowers on the dining-table, with the dream-image of the flowers reflected like a miniature sunset cloud in the polished dark wood of the table—and so on & so on—and then I glanced down the terraces to the columned "pagoda," & lo & behold I had an idea! That group of beautiful cedars down there settled the question. They are the ones! They are sacred to the Aquarium now—no others need apply. Nature placed them there, Nature grouped them about the columns, no man's defiling hands assisted. They are fine, they are delicate, they are shapely, they are graceful, symmetrical, beautiful, & without flaw or blemish—like my fishes. They will always be under my eye, & I will subtly nourish them with my worship & my affection. If I should plant trees, they might die & wound me; but these will still be green & lovely & full-flushed with life when I have been dead a century.

It was the luckiest idea! One after the other the fishes will come, & each will choose her tree & stand up against it & be photographed, & we'll put her name on her tree, & keep record of the date in a book. If I had only thought of all this when you were here! But never mind, you are coming [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. Frederic Robson a friend of Benare's came up from New York for the day. He had a darling time sitting in the billiard room and watching the King play and listening to his sweet banter with Benar. And then after luncheon we went down to see mother, and Mr. Robson was swept off his feet and had no way of recalling himself to find words that would express his feeling of the beauty of that little house, and it is beautiful. Its redemption is so complete [MTP: IVL TS 76-77]. Note: this may be Frederic Robson, drama critic for Canadian Magazine.

Frederick Moore Clements, chemist, pharmacist wrote from Sydney, Australia to advise he'd sent some Sydney and N.Z. postcards to "some of your lady folk," and warned him to be good and avoid "those violent paroxysms of temper...awful language you are so addicted to. So be good!" [MTP].

November 2 Monday – Gribben gives us a nugget from Sam's A.D. for the day regarding George Bernard Shaw: "Mark Twain was aghast that Shaw's biographer 'wildly imagined a lot of resemblances' between Shaw's philosophy and Twain's 'What is Man?'" (2 November 1908 AD, MTP)" [638].

Isabel Lyon's journal: This morning a letter from Mr. Norris telling of his sending "What is Man?" to David Grayson and Tolstoy has inspired the King to dictation. He came into my room in his red silk gown, and seated by the window said that his head was bursting with fancies that he had no physical ability to give birth to. Oh why couldn't he live until the time when a man's thoughts could be taken down by the wonderful, the simple machine that is to be invented—perhaps is invented and all you have to do is to turn the crank of it and the grey cloud of thought will come back to you visualized, verbalized as it existed in the brain, before the machine delivered it. There he sat, with eyes flashing and deploring the fact that the great giant within him would be strangled at birth, and its force expended in disrupted temper. The King regrets so that Tolstoy is a Christian—"A Hell of a Christian" [MTP: IVL TS 77]. Note: Lev Nikolayevich Tolstoy (1828-1910).

Doubleday, Page & Co. wrote to advise they were sending a set of Little Masterpieces of Autobiography, edited by George Iles. No obligation, but they'd appreciate any statement [MTP; not in Gribben]. Note: "Ans. Nov. 6 MLH"

Isabel Lyon's journal: Election Day. Taft is elected President. The King said that if he had a preference it would be Taft, but that he regretted seeing the Republican Party continue in power. Mr. and Mrs. Coe motored up today. With them came young Mr. Lanier Winslowe [sic Winslow], a nice chap. I'd been having fear from Giuseppe's cooking, but he gave us luncheon worthy of the best of French chefs, and the guests fed royally, and said so too. They left the house at 3 to motor back to N.Y. November 4 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Berlin, Germany.

Jean dear, an Embassy isn't a house, it is a function—strictly speaking. Still, custom allows us to speak of it as a house; & so, to speak of it in that way is right enough. Our Ambassador is a messenger, & in common parlance, the place he occupies—whether it be a hotel, a palace, a stable, a cellar, or a vacant lot—is an Embassy. Also that place ceases to be a part of the country it is in, & becomes for the time being, a part of the country the messenger represents; & its occupants are sacred from arrest or molestation, their persons are inviolable. Where the American ambassador unfurls his flag—say, in a vacant half-acre, that half acre is for the time being, a part of the United States, & accused persons taking refuge there, cannot be touched, by force. The King's writ fails at the foot of the flagstaff. The buildings occupied in Paris & London by our Embassies, are not owned by our Government. We own no Embassies except 2 or 3 cheap shacks in the Far East. We save our money to buy votes with. Graft is our political religion.

Today the news arrives that Taft is elected. It may be that we shall presently own our embassies; Congress has been almost willing for the past few years.

My, but it is a black & threatening day! but very beautiful, enchantingly beautiful. Tammany is dead. I am very sorry. She was the most beautiful cat on this side of the planet, & perhaps the most gifted. Intellectually, I mean; morally she was loose. She leaves behind her, inconsolable, by her first marriage, Billiards & Babylon, & by her second, Ananda Annanci & Sindbad. She was buried with the honors due her rank & reputation.

Hear you are making progress, & I am glad & grateful / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Laura Hawkins Frazer.

Dear Laura,

We enjoyed the visit you and your granddaughter paid us very much, and remember it with pleasure. The pictures made by Miss Lyon came out very well. I enclose samples. All well but Tamany, Tamany is dead. Tamany is (was) the cat.

[on the envelope Sam wrote:]

Since sealing this your very welcome letter has arrived with the picture, and I thank you very much. S. L. C. [MTP: Hannibal Evening Courier-Post, 6 March 1935, p. 3c].

Sam also wrote to Louise Paine.

Dear Louise: / I don't expect this to reach you, for your habit is to violate the first law of correspondence, which is repeat your address in every letter.

Tammany is dead. I am very sorry. She was the most beautiful cat on this western bulge of the globe, & perhaps the most gifted. She leaves behind her, inconsolable, two children by her first marriage—Billiards & Babylon; & three grandchildren by her second—Amanda, Annanci & Sindbad. She met her death by violence, at the hands of a dog. She was found dead in the early morning, under my window, whither she had apparently dragged herself from a predacious excursion, for she had with her a field mouse that had suffered death by murder.

She was buried by Miss Lyon with the honors due her official rank—for by appointment she was Mascot to the Aquarium, & brought it good luck as long as she lived. She took great interest in the M.A.'s & went to the billiard room every day to look at their pictures.

"If you have no hope of avoiding the duty of signing the document, and will indicate a time at which you will be home, and resigned, we will send it to you by messenger...the book is really very pretty, in spite of the bad handwriting of the signers" [MTP].

November 5 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent a telegram to President of the Pilgrims, N.Y. chapter.

President of the Pilgrims:

New York

I am sorry indeed I cannot be at the Pilgrim dinner to Lord Northcliffe, whom I hold in high esteem & friendly regard. I ask him to forget for a moment that he is a legislator & join me in a health to the sacred memory of ~~Guy Fawkes~~ of that great Englishman who on this day three hundred & three years ago tried to blow up a Parliament that was meditating a limitation of copyright, but was defeated by the mistaken interference of a Providence more interested in spectacular mercy than in plain square justice [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick in Atlantic City, N.J.

Dear heart, I said last night "I will write a letter in the morning & give a certain Dorothy a scolding & inquire what has become of her." So you have spoken up just in time to save yourself!

Yes, No. 21 is rented & occupied. We shan't leave Redding anymore, winter or summer. We like it here better & better all the time.

Dear, I haven't heard of the second robbery. If it was only books of mine that were stolen & not Bibles, I am glad, for the robbers will read those books & become good citizens & valuable men—but they wouldn't read Bibles.

It is a pity you lost the cat, but I can sympathise with you, for we have ourselves suffered a heavy loss in that line. Tammany is dead. Killed by a dog, we think, when she was out hunting. She was the finest cat & the handsomest, in America. Moreover, she was an officer of the Aquarium. I appointed her myself. She was the Aquarium's Mascot, & brought it good luck as long as she lived. Miss Lyon buried her with the honors due her rank.

In token of respect for her memory & regret for her loss, it is requested that each M.A. shall wear black head-ribbons during one hour on the 30th of this month—Tammany's birthday. See that you obey. / With lots of love, dear Dorothy/ ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to an unidentified man.

Dear Sir: / I note this passage in the letter sent you by Mr. Ashley:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Mrs. Lillian Duneka
Also her husband	Of Harper & Brothers	November 7-8

Isabel Lyon's journal: Mr. and Mrs. Duneka arrived this morning, and such welcome guests as they are. Unhappily we couldn't hear the copyright talk between the King and Mr. Duneka, because they took themselves off to the Gorge. In the afternoon we all went for a walk, trying to find a level one, for Mrs. Duneka's heart is weak [MTP: IVL TS 78].

James Brent Clemens wrote from 603 Fifth Ave., NYC: "Dear Cousin Mark: / The enclosed letter was a part of my larger mail to-day and it was accidentally opened before the mistake was discovered. I re-mail it promptly to your new address with ...my deep regret at the occurrence. / We all hope that you are enjoying perfect health, and, that we may again enjoy the pleasure of seeing you sometime during the winter" [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov. 16 MLH"

C.S. Ashton wrote from Brighton, England to Sam. "I am about (as an amateur) to give an 'Evening with Mark Twain' to a literary society in this town and would like to be able to tell my audience that my hero is still going strong and suffering from nothing worse than an occasional burglary!" [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov. 20 MLH"

The Outlook Co. sent an engraved invitation announcing that Theodore Roosevelt, President of the U.S. "will on March 5th, 1909, become a Member of the Editorial Staff of The Outlook which will thereafter be the exclusive channel for his writings on Political Social and Industrial Topics" [MTP]. Note: Twain wrote on the notice: "Now if the Outlook people are good business they'll water their stock & get out"

Jerome M. Sinsheimer wrote from NYC to Sam, noting he'd been the "happy discoverer" of Adam's diary and that while reading Washington Irving's History of New York he "observed in chapter III that he states that someone in the future would discover the daybook of Noah and would publish it. / In light of your previous archeological researches, does this not point to you as the proper person to enlighten us?" [MTP]. Note: it had been Sam's intention to write Noah's Diary but it was never published.

November 8 Sunday – Charles Este wrote to ask Sam if he would "drop a word" to Mrs. Catherine Starbuck a 90 year old friend of his in Nantucket, Mass. He enclosed a note from the lady wondering if Clemens had decided not to finish his Autobiography [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Dec. 11 MLH" [his address on note paper 4111 Baltimore Ave. City is not given; such an address exists in Phila., Kansas City, Mo. & others].

Friedrich Henke wrote from Berlin, another letter in German to Sam [MTP]. Note: Not translated.

Mary G. Pulsifer wrote from Brookline, Mass. to ask if Sam was giving any public readings this winter, hoping he would be available for the Misses Gilman's School Assoc. of Boston [MTP].

November 9 Monday – Arthur J. Burdick for Gateway Gazette wrote from Beaumont, Calif., having heard the rumor that Clemens contemplated living in California. He promoted the city and wrote he was sending “a paper telling something of Beaumont” [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 17 MLH”

Frederick A. Duneka wrote from NYC to Sam. “It was very beautiful—our visit—just the happiest kind of times....even the cats seem to be dressed up for the occasion and to join in the welcome.... I am looking into the Mark Twain Spring Water scheme” [MTP].

Lillian Duneka (Mrs. Frederick A. Duneka) also wrote Sam a thank you note for their visit to Stormfield, “glad to have the little book with your dear inscription” [MTP].

Ida R. Larkin wrote to Lyon (though catalogued to Clemens) [MTP].

W.E. Raymond wrote from New Orleans to ask Sam for some information on a book of his sketches, asking where she might get two of the sketches now, “Rogers” and “Some Rambling Thoughts on an Idle Excursion”. He mentioned knowing Horace Bixby and Capt. J.B. Woods [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 16 MLH”; Clemens was a cub under Bixby on the New Falls City, captained by James B. Woods, 30 Oct to 8 Dec. 1858 [MTL 1: 388].

Anne W. Stockbridge wrote to Isabel Lyon. “Do you have any recollection of some [illegible word] letters sent to Miss Stockbridge of Providence in regard to the California earthquake sufferers. Mr. Clemens used them at the dinner of the Associated Press in New York to illustrate ‘Simplified Spelling.’ ...He showed so much interest in the letters in the beginning that I want him to see the book in its completed form” [MTP].

Mrs. J.M.Y. Wool wrote from NYC to ask Sam if he would look through a manuscript her late husband left and give an opinion [MTP].

November 10 Tuesday – Sam attended the Danbury, Conn. trial of the two burglars, Charles Hoffman and Henry Williams. The New York Times, Nov. 11, 1908, p. 5 reported on the trial:

TWAIN'S BURGLARS ON TRIAL.

Author on Witness Stand Identifies Silverware They Stole from Him.

DANBURY, Conn., Nov. 10.—Charles Hoffman and Henry Williams were put on trial here to-day on the charge of robbing the home of Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) in Redding several weeks ago. Against Williams, who resisted arrest and shot at the officer attempting to arrest him, the additional charge of assault, with intent to kill, was placed. The prisoners were guarded by three Deputy Sheriffs while they were in court, as they are believed to be desperate men.

Mr. Clemens came down from his place, Innocents at Home, in an automobile, accompanied by his secretary, Miss Lyon, and several neighbors. He was bundled up in furs, but in a room on the first floor he left his outer garments and appeared in the courtroom attired in a light gray suit.

When called to the witness stand he was addressed as Dr. Clemens by Prosecuting Attorney Stiles Judson throughout his examination. Mr. Clemens identified a large part of the silverware which was recovered at the time the burglars were arrested on a train.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Today to Court in Danbury. The King, Benar, Paine and I went over in a motor, which waited until the King had identified his silver and then took him and Paine home. It was a trying and terrible day. The poor woman who was sentenced to "six months in jail" for shop lifting, and who went so dead white when she heard her sentence, made me sick with sympathy, and I longed to go and throw my arms about her. And then the burglary trial. I couldn't feel my feet on the floor when Sheriff Hawley led me to the Witness Box. The King was beautiful and dignified, and made a fine picture as he stood up to take the oath, the 12 jury men and everyone else so keen with interest [MTP: IVL TS 78-79].

Robert Brockway wrote to ask Sam for his autograph [MTP]. Note: "Autogr. Sent Nov 13 MLH"

Charles P.G. Scott for the Simplified Spelling Board wrote to advise Sam he would receive the "book of engrost resolutions" to be presented to Andrew Carnegie, for Sam's signature [MTP].

Valdemar Thoresen wrote from Randers, Denmark to point out "the fact is that there can be no doubt whatever that this tale [Tom Sawyer Detective] has borrowed the bulk of its subject from Blicher's The Vicar of Veilby. There are, of course, great differences" [MTP]. Note: "see IVL answer Dec. 9"

November 11 Wednesday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "More trial—a weary day in court. Benar stayed to go with me, and be with me. Paine came for billiards with the King. At dinner I went to pieces" [MTP: IVL TS 79].

The New York Times, p. 4, reported on the sentencing of Mark Twain's burglars:

TWAIN BURGLARS SENTENCED.

Men Who Broke Into Samuel L. Clemens's Home Get Prison Terms.

DANBURY, Conn., Nov. 11—When the trial of Henry Williams and Charles Hoffman, accused of breaking into the Italian villa of Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) at Redding, several weeks ago, was resumed in the Superior Court this afternoon, both men changed their pleas of not guilty to guilty.

The court sentenced Hoffman to not less than three nor more than five years in State prison. On the charge of burglary Williams received not less than five nor more than six years in State prison, and on the charge of assault with intent to kill, to which he also pleaded guilty, not more than four years in State prison [Note: not mentioned if Sam attended the sentencing.]

November 12 Thursday – Sam's A.D. for this date focused again on the two burglars at Stormfield [Hill 209]. Note: Sam also dictated on the burglary on Oct. 6 and Dec. 8.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "In bed all day, worn out. Paine came and dined with the King" [MTP: IVL TS 79].

Frank N. Doubleday wrote to Lyon (though catalogued to Clemens) [MTP].

Charles A. Ellicock for the Mark Twain Club, Cleveland, Ohio wrote to ask Sam for his autographed photo "and some quotation from any of your writings" for their new club [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Mr. Clemens has no photos but will be glad to sign one if they can find one they like & will send it" ; "Ans. Nov 25 MLH"

Herbert E. Bowen of Harpers wrote to Sam that it would be convenient for Col. Harvey and Lord Northcliffe to "come up to Redding for the night on Friday...Nov. 20" [MTP].

Dr. G. Victor Janvier wrote from Royersford, Penn. to ask for an autograph [MTP].

Ernestine M. Kaehlin for Wyoming History & Geology, Wilkes-Barre Penn. wrote to ask Sam for one of his bookplates [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 16 MLH”

J.A. Ward, “a perfect stranger” to Clemens wrote from Troy, Mo. This is a 16 page letter asking his advice about publishing his poetry [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 25 MLH”; and IVL: “Refer him to Publishers”

November 13 Friday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: “Benar came back to us, but still I am ill. My forces are very much scattered” [MTP: IVL TS 79].

American Geographical Soc., NYC Per Chandler Robbins sent Sam a printed list of officers with dues of ten dollars [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Many thanks but he is resigning from clubs & societies rather than joining them. And has retired to the country to reside”; and “Ans. Nov. 25 MLH”

Millard L. Bailey wrote from Arlington, Mass. to ask for an autograph [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 13 MLH”

Frederic Bulkeley Hyde wrote from Washington D.C.

My dear Mr Clemens; - / The photograph inscribed and autographed arrived the other day and I want to tell you how much I value and appreciate it. When I return to my home in Southport it will be placed in my library and of all the photos I have it will take highest rank.

Miss Lyon tells me that you really did like some of the ones I made of you. Well, you see martyrdom has its compensations. You won’t take umbrage I hope when I tell you that I consider the photo I made of you sitting on the lounge in the library the best one I have ever seen of you. (Nothing like speaking up in meeting!) And as for the one in the billiard room, after I have carefully looked at it I am sure it is most pleasing.

In a few days now, I will have the time to make you the postals that you desire...[MTP]. Note: Hyde took photographs of Clemens at Stormfield during this month [MT Journal Spring/Fall 2006 p.19].

Anna Campbell Osband wrote from Flint, Mich. to Sam. “For the memory of he Hon. R.P. Campbell, my fathers favorite brother, I write you. You speak very highly of him in the notes of your splendid book Roughing It. I wish to know if you will give me your autograph” [MTP].

LeGrand O. Robson for Robson Smelting, Buffalo, NY wrote to ask Sam to lecture for the Delaware Club (men of the Delaware Ave. Baptist Church) [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 20 MLH”

G. Herbert Thring for the Society of Authors wrote to ask Sam if he would do them the honor of allowing his name to be placed on the list of the Council [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Dec. 9 MLH” ; and IVL: “Mr. Clemens consents”

Edward C. Towne for the Oxford Institute of Research wrote to ask Sam if he agreed with the quote about the “drink problem” by Hugo Munsterberg, that, “the only wise reform is by working toward Temperance and not toward Prohibition” [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 16 MLH”

November 14 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a poem and a note to Margaret Blackmer.

BE GOOD, BE GOOD. A Poem.

Be good, be good, be always good,

And now and then be clever,

But don’t you ever be too good,

Nor ever be too clever;

For each as be too awful good,
 The awful lonely are,
 And such as often clever be,
 Get cut and stung and trodden on by persons of lesser mental capacity; for this kind do by a law of their construction regard exhibitions of superior intellectuality as an offensive impertinence levelled at their lack of this high gift, & are prompt to resent such-like exhibitions in the manner above indicated—& are they justified? alas, alas they

(It is not best to go on; I think the line is already longer than it ought to be for real true poetry.)

Mark Twain.

To Margaret.

November 14th.

[handwritten in margin:] This is only a copy, so it won't matter if it should get injured in the mails; but you must come & get the original which is more valuable than anybody can imagine. Tell me when you are coming [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Helen Keller.

Dear Helen Keller:

The book has just arrived & I thank you so much for it, for I liked it in instalments & know I shall have pleasure in reading it as a whole. I do hope you & the Macys can come down here in January & give us a week-end visit, arriving on a Friday & abiding with us till the Monday. Won't you three hold a consultation & vote Yes? We will take the best kind of care of you.

Affectionately

SL. Clemens

[MTP]. Note: The World I live In (1908) by Keller; see Gribben 366: "On the inside front cover Clemens noted in black ink: 'It is a lovely book—& Helen is herself another lovely book. / SLC /1908.'"

Mr. Curtis	New York	Nov. "

Isabel Lyon's journal: "Forbes Aeronaut. / Walked around the circle twice and then to house and bed" [MTP: IVL TS 79]. Note: A. Holland Forbes, balloonist, had escaped death when a balloon burst during an International flight in Berlin October 13, 1908.

A contract and power of attorney signed by Clemens on this day would turn out to be the "smoking gun" in the dismissal of Isabel Lyon and Ralph W. Ashcroft. On June 16, 1909 Sam wrote to William Coe that he had “never heard of that paper,” calling it “The most amazing document that has seen the light since the Middle Ages.” (See entry.) Sam was convinced that they tricked him into signing away all of his rights and property, that this was their grand scheme. This document, which was uncovered on May 29, 1909 during the investigation of Stormfield’s books, was sold in 1966 by Charles Hamilton, catalog 15, but has since been lost. Victor Fischer of the MTP quotes from the catalog and offers:

“D. S., two full pages, folio, November 14, 1908, a lengthy and interesting contract appointing ‘Isabel V. Lyon and Ralph W. Ashcroft my true and lawful attorneys for me and in my name, place and stead, to exercise a general supervision over all my affairs and to take charge of and manage all my property . . .’ signed Samuel L. Clemens, above a gold-paper notary’s seal.”

The catalog also lists “another document, almost identical with the preceding, boldly signed ‘Samuel L. Clemens,’ above a gold-seal.” [Note: Fischer assumes the Detroit Public Library purchased the document but upon request for a photocopy the library could not comply. Just where the document resides now is unknown. What follows is a TS from the Ashcroft-Lyon MS, MTP, With Hill’s excerpts from p.212-13 in bold & underlined:]

Know All Men By These Presents, That I, Samuel L. Clemens, of the Town of Redding, County of Fairfield, State of Connecticut, have made, constituted and appointed, and by these presents do make, constitute and appoint, Isabel V. Lyon, and Ralph W. Ashcroft my true and lawful attorneys for me and in my name, place and stead, to exercise a general supervision over all my affairs and to take charge of and manage all my property both real and personal and all matters of business relating thereto; to lease, sell and convey any and all real property wheresoever situated which may now or which may hereafter at any time belong to me; to demand, receive and collect rentals of such property, to make repairs to any buildings thereon, to keep any and all buildings insured, to remand, receive and collect all dividends, interests and moneys due and payable to or to become due and payable to me; to satisfy and discharge mortgages; to sell, assign and transfer any and all stocks, bonds and mortgages belonging or which at any time belong to me; to change any or all of my investments and to make any investment of any or all of the moneys belonging to me; to draw checks or drafts upon any banks, banker or Trust Company or any financial institution with which or whom I have or may at any time hereafter have moneys on deposit or to my credit; to endorse either for deposit, collection or transfer any and all notes, checks, drafts or bills of exchange now or hereafter payable to me or to my order; to prosecute, defend, compromise and settle suits and legal proceedings and to retain and employ attorneys and counsel for such purpose or otherwise, to protect my interests; to release and discharge as my attorneys may deem proper any and all claims and demands in my favor of any kind or nature, and to make sign, seal acknowledge and deliver any and all receipts, acquittances, discharges, satisfaction pieces, transfers, assignments, agreements, deeds or other instruments under seal or otherwise, which in the judgment of my said attorneys may be necessary, appropriate or proper, giving and granting unto my said attorneys, and unto either of them individually, full power and authority to do and perform any act or thing requisite and necessary to be done in and about the premises as fully to all interests and purposes as I might or could do if personally present, with full power of substitution and revocation, hereby ratifying and confirming all that my said attorneys or attorney, or her or his substitutes or substitute shall lawfully do or cause to be done by virtue thereof.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 14th day of November, 1908.

Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of

Horace W. Hazen

Harry Iles

STATE OF CONNECTICUT)

COUNTY OF FAIRFIELD) Redding

On this 14th day of November, 1908, before me personally came Samuel L. Clemens, to me personally known to be the individual described in and who executed the foregoing instrument, and he acknowledged to me that he executed the same.

John N Nickerson,
Notary Public within and (Seal) for the State of Connecticut.

(Residing at Redding)

[MTP: Exhibit A, Ashcroft-Lyon Box].

Hill writes of this power of attorney, and of Sam's claim that it was a forgery:

It was comprehensive. And Clemens did indisputably sign it. Just as indisputable is that Ashcroft had almost seven months' time between the assigning and revoking of this power of attorney to use it for personal gain. But whatever Clemens' hysterical suspicions, Ashcroft did not exploit his total authority over Clemens' property for illegal purposes [213]. Note: all of this begs the question, just why was such a document drawn up? Perhaps realizing that Clemens' health was failing, Ashcroft and Lyon intended to wait until his death to take control of his estate. Why else would they want to be in such a position of control? With Jean hospitalized and Clara growing increasingly antagonistic toward Lyon, such a plan would have sought to cut the daughters out of the picture after Sam's death.

Henry Beebe, one of Sam's Hannibal schoolmates, wrote from Bridgewater, S. Dakota.

Dear Sir / In turning back the leaves of Memory I find that 64 years ago Sam Clemens[,] Joe Buchanan [,] Joe Craig[,] Andy and Archie Fuqua[,] Sam and Will Bowen[,] Joe Luck[,] Albert Glasscock[,] Jim McDaniels [sic McDaniel] & myself were School Mates at Hannibal. I often wonder what has become of them or if you and I are the only ones left. I have not visited Hannibal since 1852 and have lost track of all but you. I am not writing this expecting to gain my notoriety by correspondering with one as notable as your self neither do I cherish any animosity against you for being a school mate for neither of us were to blame for that as I think we both would have preferred to play hookey I have taken great pleasure in reading your books and oftimes thought I recognized the characters mentioned in them[,] I was pleased to note the sensation you created in England on your last visit. ... I expect you have forgotten me. My Father kept a store in Hannibal situated on the corner in second block from Steam Boat Landing on north side of the street [MTP]. Note: Beebe also asked if Sam could relay any information on the old gang.

Louise Yard wrote from Los Angeles, Calif. to ask for Sam's advice in their formation of an anti-vivisection society; and for the use of his name as an honorary member [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Mr. Clemens has retired to the country & from all activities"

November 15 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Champ Clark (James Beauchamp Clark) (1850-1921), prominent democrat politician, speaker of the House of Representatives (1911-1919), at this time a Congressman from Missouri.

Private.

Dear Mr. Clark:

When you come East won't you run up here (an hour & a half from New York), & stay a day or two with me & talk copyright extension?

I've got a new scheme. This time there ought to be no objectors, for my plan advantages

1. The author;
2. The publisher;
3. The bookseller;
4. And every wage-earner in the U. S. & every restricted purse.

For the present I am keeping the matter quiet. It is best so, until Congress meets. / Truly Yours [MTP: Karanovich].

Reinhold Keiler wrote from Breslau (now Poland) to ask Sam to sign his name “and to write a few words on the enclosed card” [MTP].

A.G. Learned, just back from a year’s study in Paris, doing “dry point etchings” wrote from NYC to ask Sam if he might sit for a portrait [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 20 MLH”

Mary Schneider, “An Austrian girl” wrote to ask for “your writing” [MTP]. Note: “Autogr. Sent Dec 7 MLH”

November 16 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Zoheth S. Freeman, who had just been chosen as vice president of Liberty National Bank, N.Y.C.

Dear Freeman:

I thank you ever so much for accepting that trust. There is no one in the world I would prefer to you for that friendly office.

I am shouting my hearty congratulations upon your new Vice Presidency, & am glad for your sake & Sheba’s & those dear little rascals of yours. Miss Lyon & Ashcroft will arrange the transfer of my account.

My love to Sheba—& speed the day when you can come here! / Sincerely, ... [MTP]. Note: Freeman would be one of the executors in Sam’s estate.

Sam’s new guestbook (and Lyon’s journal, TS 79):

Zoheth S. Freeman wrote to thank Sam—his autograph letter of Monday reached him this day [MTP].

Helen Keller wrote to Sam.

“When a king sends an invitation, his subjects must obey. How fortunate it is for them if they can obey his summons with the delight that we feel in accepting your invitation to spend a week-end with you! We needed no consultation, we all said ‘Yes!’...we are coming on the eighth of January” [MTP].

Charles B. Staples wrote from Phila. to ask whether picture of illustration No. 102 in the first few copies of HF had been “vulgarly suggestive.” Could Sam verify? [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Dec 7 MLH”; the writer refers to the tampering of an engraving on p. 283, leaving Uncle Silas’ member hanging out of his pants, making it obscene. In Nov. 1884 the trick was discovered, delaying publication; see “A Note on the Text” by Robert Hirst, p. 41 of the after-materials in the 1996 Oxford facsimile edition of HF.

Lucy Wood wrote from Norwalk, Conn. to sell a book she prized highly—“one of the copys of the declaration of Independence,” which she’d obtained through her grandmother’s first cousin, President Fillmore; she wanted to show it to Clemens [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 20 MLH”

J.J. McCabe wrote from Nova Scotia to ask for a "short article" for a magazine he was starting [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov. 30 MLH"

Lord Northcliffe (Alfred Harmsworth) wrote on Hotel St. Regis letterhead to thank Sam for his stay at Stormfield. "Your home is ideal in every respect. / I enclose a leading article from the Times, which looks like thought-reading on their part. It is almost exactly on the line of your conversation with me. If you would like to put your views into a letter, of a column or a column and a half, to the London Times I should be glad to forward it..." [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam, hearing that Clara would soon visit Hartford, and offering her "the best room in our house...and...in our hearts will be open to her the 29th inst." [MTP].

Robert Witson 86 years old, wrote from Bridgeport, Conn. to tell Sam some of his history, including, "In 1850-51, I commanded a vessel between San Francisco and Honolulu" [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Dec. 7 MLH"

Saturday Evening Post ran an article by Brander Matthews, "American Humor," with references to Mark Twain [Tenney 46: The Twainian (June, 1943)], also "A general discussion with relatively little on MT as a great humorist in a class with Moliere and Cervantes, with basic good humor and a strain of sadness" [Tenney, ALR Third Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1979) 192].

November 22 Sunday – In Redding, Conn., Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Helen Keller.

Dear Miss Keller:

Mr. Clemens asks me to tell you from him how very glad he will be, & we shall be, to see you on January 8th. It will be a very great pleasure to have you with Mr. & Mrs. Macy. And when I write Mrs. Macy's name, that reminds me that I must tell you Mr. Clemens sent a photograph to Mrs. Macy last May. I remember it very distinctly, but she shall have another. Just at that time several photographs were lost in the mails. Both photographs sent TO Mr. Clemens, & those sent by him.

Mr. Clemens sends his love to you, & his warm regards to Mr. & Mrs. Macy, in which I most heartily join [MTP]. Note: John Albert Macy.

Isabel Lyon's journal: "We have loafed very much—but today Captain Dow and I went down to see Mother for a few moments" [MTP: IVL TS 80].

Laura A. Lombard wrote from NYC to invite Sam to the Browning Society Symposium Dec. 29 and 30 at the Waldorf [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov. 24 MLH"; IVL: "Thanks & very sorry not to be able to be present but" (unfinished)

Sybil Kane Walker (Mrs. Alexander Stewart Walker) wrote to accept Sam's invitation, along with "Mary & Harry & Stewart" and herself "to spend Tuesday night (Dec. 15th) with you. All of us are coming up in the Rogers' Auto..." [MTP]. Note: they are not listed in the guestbook for Dec. 15.

November 23 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to William Dean Howells, addressing the letter:

"Mr. W. D. Howells | at the Burlington just aft the Holland House, 30th st., on the port tack as you pull out of 5th avenue reaching for 6th, on a taut bowline. New York City | N. Y."

Dear Howells:

There'll be a vacant bed Friday Nov 26th—do come up & occupy it & stay a few days. The early train (for Redding) leaves the Grand Central at 8.50 a.m.

The 3.32 p.m. comes about the same distance (an hour & a half) but you get off at Branchville.

Come! And tell us which train to meet.

If you'd like to see 100 of the sterlingest farmers & their families encounterable anywhere, take the early train. They will assemble in our library at 2.30 p.m., Friday, to hear me do the same old string of years—admission 25 cents, for the benefit of the village library. (You see I am concealing nothing from you, but you would greatly like these folks.)

Lord Northcliffe was here with Harvey. Lounsbury drove them to the station, & he told Miss Lyon that N. praised the house all the way & said he meant to get John Howells to go over & turn some of his residences into human houses. / With love— / Mark [MTHL 2: 837-8]. Note: Harry A. Lounsbury, a neighbor who had assisted in the capture of the burglars.

Sam also wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

I'm a-coming just as soon I can find a vacancy—some day next week, I hope. I wish I could camp with the tribe at the Thanksgiving orgy, but there will be company and profligacies here on that day & for a day or two after. I wish you & the Admiral were going to be here & were no better than you ought to be—we would have a scandalous good time. Miss Wallace & another member of the I. C. are coming.

Yes'm, I thank you very much, & I shall give you notice before long. With my love to you & the Admiral— ... [MTHHR 655-6].

Sam also inscribed a copy of Mark Twain's (Burlesque) Autobiography and First Romance to an unidentified person: "I bought the plates of this book about 1873 & destroyed them. S.L. Clemens Nov 23/08." [MTP: Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogs, May 12, 1953, No. 1441, Item 258].

Elbridge Axtell, age 74, an "old time printer" wrote from Springfield, Mass. to ask for "a line" from Clemens [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov. 24 MLH"

J.A. Goldsmith for Bridgeport Enterprise wrote to send Sam a copy of the paper and would be pleased to have his opinion [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov. 24 MLH"

J.T. Lockhart wrote from Spokane, Wash. to enclose a "little story of Col. Nash" he had just written. "I trust it may amuse you for a moment and hope it may bring back some pleasant memories of bygone days of early life [in] Carson, Parson White and his brick church that you named the 'Chronic church' as it was so long in the building" [MTP]. Note: "Colonel Nash of Carson" in file; "Ans. Henry Miller for Henry Miller Company, NYC wrote to announce The Winterfeast, a new play by Charles Rann Kennedy to be performed next Monday; if Sam wanted to go Miller would forward tickets [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov. 25 MLH"

New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad per A.B. Smith wrote to Sam acknowledging his letter of Nov. 18 asking that trains #239 and 240 stop at Redding; the matter would be looked into, but both trains were express [MTP].

Perry F. Burroughs wrote from Bridgeport, Conn. to ask for an autograph [MTP]. Note: "Autogr. sent Nov. 24 MLH"

George Thornhill wrote from Wappingers Falls, NY to verify his memory of seeing Sam on the SS Batavia in 1873 with a baby under his arm, Susy Clemens [MTP]. Note: the Clemens family with baby Susy was on the Batavia headed for England from May 17 to 27. See Vol. I.

Charles B. Whittelsey wrote from Hartford seeking Clemens with a talk before the Mens Club of Trinity Parish [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 25 MLH”; and IVL: “Lecture form”

November 24 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon’s journal: Will arrived early and Santa. / Prof. Sanford came today to see about having the library moved to Redding Centre. The Hawaiian mantel came today, but the beautiful Koa wood has been polished until it is terribly yellow, and it won’t go anywhere. Steve Barr and Mr. Adams lugged it around from billiard to dining room—but the polish of it was fearful. The King declared it too offensive, but suggested that all the wonderful shine be scraped off—so the men carried it to the garage to reduce its coloring [MTP: IVL TS 80-81]. Note: see Oct. 31 entry for picture of the mantel.

Commodore Daniel Dow of the steamer Caronia ended his visit at Stormfield. He arrived on Nov. 21, for his second visit.

Sam’s A.D. included mention of the London Times, “as Lord Northcliffe’s journal which for a century had wielded political power with world rulers” [Gribben 418].

George A. Gilman wrote from Berks, England to send birthday wishes [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Dec 8. MLH”

W. Haskard for Haskard & Co., Florence, Italy wrote to Sam acknowledging his letter of Nov. 6 and per Sam’s request enclosed a check for the balance of his account there [MTP].

Lilian MacDonald wrote from Belfast, Ireland to offer birthday wishes [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Dec 7 MLH”

Genevieve L. Miller wrote to ask Sam where she might get his article on Christian Science that appeared in the Cosmopolitan in Oct. 1899 [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 24 MLH”

Missouri University sent an engraved invitation for Sam to attend the inauguration of Albert Ross Hill as President of the University on Dec. 10 and 11 [MTP].

Louis Pelletier wrote to ask Clemens to fill out an enclosed table having to do with his genealogy [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 27 MLH”; and IVL: “Mr Clemens has been too busy to take any interest in his genealogy”

Thomas Rodgers wrote from Au Sable Forks, NY to describe a book from his youth he was trying to find [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 27 MLH”; and IVL: “Mr. Clemens has no knowledge of the book”

Lillian T. Schmidt for the Professional Women’s League, NYC wrote to ask Sam for cards with his autograph for sale at their bazaar at the Waldorf Dec. 10-12 [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 30 6 autographs sent. MLH”

Spencer Trask for the National Arts Club, Gramercy Park, NY wrote to invite Sam to a dinner on Dec. 3 to meet William J. Locke [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 24 MLH”

November 25 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margery Hamilton Clinton, 39 E. 57th, N.Y.C.

Dear Plumber:

Oh no, bless your heart, you are not in any danger of losing your job. All you have to do is to be sweet, & look sweet, & sit around & let on to plumb, same as the others do. These are the only requirements in your case, & they will always come easy to you. Your job is quite secure.

I am very sorry the cold hangs on, but glad it did not turn to gripe. Watch it, take care of it. If I had it I would vibrate it with the machine, & observe results. I have two ailments, & only two—that violent crick in my neck, & a frequent & protracted heartburn, due to indigestion. But nowadays I have ceased to mind them: when they attack me the vibrator abolishes them with surprising promptness—three applications of a minute each, with ten-minute intervals between. You see it is much quicker than the masseur's achievements with his hands, although the principle is just the same.

Come again, Plumber! / Affectionately ... [MTP].

Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Charles A. Ellicock. “Mr. Clemens has no photos, but will be glad to sign one if they can find one they like & will send it” [MTP].

Isabel Lyon's journal: “Will came early and Santa came later. / Benar came too” [MTP: IVL TS 81].

William H. Bliss wrote from NYC to invite Sam to a luncheon on Saturday, Dec. 5 to meet William J. Locke [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 27 MLH”; and IVL: “Mr. Clemens has invited guests here”

Katharine I. Harrison wrote from NYC to ask Sam if she might get two sets of his Hillcrest Edition books at a lower price than from Harpers direct, this for a friend of hers [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 27 MLH”; and IVL: “Where shall they be sent”

William Dean Howells wrote to Sam.

My dear Clemens: / I should like mightily to meet your farmers, but, poor fellow, I thought you went to Redding to get rid of Mark Twain. Besides knowing all your stories, I am prevented from coming to you by Mrs. Howells's not wanting to be left alone here; Pilla is still in Boston; and I have to help Mrs. H. breathe, and take other little jobs off her hands. If you ever give me another chance, be sure I shall take the first train. I am up so early, old man like, that if there were any lark round he would find me ready to shoot him.

L. Northcliffe, whom I met at a Harvey lunch, verified before-hand every thing you have since reported his saying of the house, but what pleases me most is your generosity. They usually say, “Oh, yes, Jones was the architect, but the fact is, my daughter planned the whole thing; and her aunts carried out her ideas. / Yours ever / W.D. Howells [MTHL 2: 838-9]. Note: Howells' son, John Mead Howells was the architect for Stormfield, though Clara Clemens had been active in the planning of the house, albeit not to the degree of Isabel Lyon. See n1, 2 source. In reference to getting “rid of Mark Twain,” Clemens must have complained to Howells at some point about the burdens of fame.

Frank A. Munsey wrote to advise Sam that he would give Lord Northcliffe a fairwell dinner on Dec. 14; a formal invitation would be sent in a few days [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 25 MLH”

Walter Hines Page for the North Carolina Society of NY wrote to invite Sam to a dinner for the society, at which William Howard Taft would be present [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 27 MLH”; and IVL: “Mr. Clemens thanks you”

W.A. Perry for the YMCA, Salem, Mass. wrote to Sam, listing elements which might have been “most valuable” in his success, asking him to double check his choices [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 30 MLH”

Charles P.G. Scott for the Simplified Spelling Board wrote to ask Sam if he'd rec'd the book to autograph that Scott had written several notes about [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov. 27 '08 MLH”; and IVL: “Dear Sir, Mr. Clemens hopes you have recd” —Meaning he sent it on.

November 26 Thursday - Thanksgiving – Elizabeth Wallace, whom Sam had met upon his arrival in Bermuda on Jan. 26, arrived at Stormfield for a visit of several days. She is listed for this day in Sam's new guestbook, with his note under Remarks: "Stayed several days but not long enough. Blackmer, discovered her in Bermuda about a year ago." She left Stormfield the morning of Nov. 29. In her 1914 recollection, Mark Twain and the Happy Island, Wallace writes:

A KING, whether he be one by the accidental right of inheritance or by the noble right of inborn royalty, has the privilege of calling his vassals to him at his will. So when a summons came, the Thanksgiving following the winter on the Happy Island, for me to go to Mr. Clemens's home in the Connecticut hills, I never thought of hesitating. It was Thanksgiving afternoon when I reached the little station. It was a glorious sunny winter day, with a gray frost still on the hills, little icicles on the edge of the streams, and a tang in the air that gave to hearts and cheeks a cheerier glow. We drove rapidly over the country roads, and I noticed at each turning that there was a neat and very diminutive sign-board, pointing always in the direction we followed, and bearing the initials M. T.

Many minutes before we reached it we could see the peaceful white Italian villa, from whose many windows we knew we could look for miles over the country. The grounds were unspoiled by the hand of the landscape gardener, and bushes grew everywhere, while the graveled road, that led up to the entrance, was not yet hardened by excessive travel. We drove up to the door. It opened, and there stood Mr. Clemens. It might have been yesterday that I had seen him last, for he had not changed. His suit was as white and immaculate as ever, his hair as silvery. There was only one change. He had tied a bow of pink ribbon to the top locks of his head, in honor of the guest. He extended both hands in cordial greeting, and I knew then that the Happy Island had not been a dream. The bow of pink ribbon was gently referred to, with proper acknowledgment of its hospitable significance. Mr. Clemens received the thanks gravely, and then the ornament placed there whimsically was apparently forgotten, but remained coquettishly pert all the rest of the evening.

Even before I went to my room I must look over the house. So we went from living room to loggia and back again to the dining room, and then down to the pergola, back again to the house and into the billiard-room, then upstairs to catch a glimpse of the view from Mr. Clemens' room before the twilight should close in upon it. Then Clara Clemens's charming suite of rooms must be visited, then the other bed-rooms, and the guest rooms. We must have a peep also into the servants' quarters, but finally, we stopped, before reaching the attic, which was reserved to another time.

The house was designed by the son of his life-long friend, Mr. W. D. Howells, a fact which gave Mr. Clemens great satisfaction. It was singularly in keeping with the dark, straight cedars which nature had foreseeingly disposed in decorative lines and groups. In side there was spaciousness, light, perfect comfort, and simplicity: while outside there was all the beauty of a New England landscape at its best, with nothing abrupt or harsh in the undulating curves of its hills and valleys; with something maternal in its soft, full outlines—where it would seem a sweet and restful thing to lay one's tired body down and let this mother Earth soothe and enfold you.

Mr. Clemens told me, almost with glee, that he had never seen either house or land until one day, the preceding June, when he came and took possession of a fully furnished and settled kingdom. All the instructions he had given were, that his room should be a quiet one, that the billiard-room should be big enough so that when he played he would not have to jab his cue into the wall, and that there should be a living-room at least forty by twenty feet. He was perfectly satisfied with the result, and wandered delightedly from room to room as he pointed out this and that particular charm.

As twilight fell, we gathered about the big fireplace in the living-room. Mr. Clemens asked me if I noticed anything very peculiar about the room. I vainly tried to perceive some eccentricity, but could not, for everything was in perfect harmony. "Haven't you noticed," said he, "that there isn't a picture on the walls?" I had to confess that I hadn't. We sat and talked of our friends of the Happy Island—of the Rajah, and of Margaret and the other Angel-fish, until it was time to go and dress for dinner.

This was a function where conversation was as important as food. Mr. Clemens grew restless before many courses had been served, and rose, to walk up and down the dining-room, discoursing the while on some favorite topic. This he often did at meals. For he was not a hearty eater, except spasmodically, and so he would often suddenly rise, still talking, and continue his tirade while pacing the floor. Then, if another course tempted him, he would come back and partake of it.

There was a big organ at one end of the living-room, with a self-playing attachment, and after dinner we had some music. One of the guests played while we sat in the fire light, and Mr. Clemens in his big armchair smoked and was perfectly happy.

The New York Times, p. 6. reported:

Mark Twain in Milk Products Co.

Samuel L. Clemens, otherwise "Mark Twain," is one of the Directors of the new Plasmon Milk Products Company, incorporated yesterday in this city, with a capital of $100,000, to exploit a patented milk food. The other Directors are Ralph A. Ashcroft [sic] and R. A. M. Hobbs. The ownership of patents has been the subject of litigation between Mr. Clemens and other parties interested, but it was said yesterday that he had been successful in all suits.

November 27 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal: "The King read for the benefit of the Library" [MTP: IVL TS 81].

Elizabeth Wallace describes the events of a full day at Stormfield:

Mr. Clemens spent half of each morning in bed, and sometimes he did not appear until lunch-time; but the morning after Thanksgiving he was downstairs at ten, and proposed that we take a walk over the hills, his hills. It was a gloriously bright, crisp, cold day, and the atmosphere was so limpid that we could see far away. Mr. Clemens put on a fur-lined great-coat and his gray cap, saw that there was a goodly supply of cigars in his pockets, and we started off down the walk, through the pergola, and picked our way to a winding path that led us to all sorts of charming places.

Just as we were starting from the house, Mr. Clemens had stopped me and had said: "I want you to look at this view." I looked at the slope below, that dipped down into a pretty valley, and then at the gentle hills beyond, where winter had forced the trees to drop their sheltering screens, so that unexpected houses and isolated farms were here and there revealed. Mr. Clemens asked, "Do you see that white building over there?" pointing, at the same time, to what was unmistakably a country church. He went on: "We've just discovered that it is a church. It's the nearest one. Just at a safe distance. All summer we thought that it was a wind mill."

That morning walk in the white November sunlight will always remain a vivid memory. We scrambled down the hillside and came to the stream, which Mr. Clemens pointed out to me with the proud gesture of a discoverer. It was just what a New England stream should be, winding and clear, flowing at times turbulently over obstructing stones, and then pausing to form a still, golden-brown pool. We followed its windings with happy delight, finding new beauties to show to each other and to exclaim over. Mr. Clemens told me Indian stories and legends he had heard in his boyhood days.

We came to a tiny cave, at the side of the road, where there were some baby stalactites, and Mr. Clemens stopped there to discourse on the wonders of geology. He told me he had lately been investigating the subject of the formation of the earth, and he had found it so wonderful that he wanted to know more about it. He had found some old treatises on geology which amused him greatly, but he wanted to get some more modern and scientific information.

And so we wandered on, beguiled by the stream, which kept on murmuring seductively of charms farther on.

We talked of the Angel-fish and their many attractions. Mr. Clemens told me of Margaret's last visit to Stormfield and of what good times they had had together. "She is a dear womanly child," said Mr. Clemens, "and we had one conversation together which convinced me more than ever of her sweet consideration for others. She was telling me how she intended to bring up her children, and what were her plans for their education. There were to be two, a boy and a girl. The girl was to be named after her mother. I asked her what the boy's name would be, and she replied, with a reproachful look in her brown eyes: 'Why, Mr. Clemens, I can't name him until I know what his father's name is.' Now, wasn't that truly thoughtful?"

We finally had to leave the stream, for it was the lunch hour, so we made an abrupt turn and approached Stormfield by the opposite side from which we had left it. As we climbed the hill, Mr. Clemens paused a moment to say: "I never want to leave this place. It satisfies me perfectly"

AT luncheon Mr. Clemens spoke of his lasting gratitude to Captain Stormfield. For it was to the success of his Heavenly Experiences that the building of the loggia was due. And that was the reason the peaceful house was thus christened.

Our meal was somewhat hurried by the announcement, made by the deeply-interested butler, that the people were beginning to come. We were to have that afternoon the first entertainment of a series for the benefit of the Library Fund of the village. Mr. Clemens had offered to tell stories, and the entrance fee was to be twenty-five cents. Chairs had been hired from the local under taker, and had been placed in close rows in the big living-room, in the loggia, and out in the hall.

The first who arrived had walked five miles. More came. They came in buggies and in other handy vehicles. They entered the house solemnly and took their places silently, refusing to make themselves comfortable, and held on grimly to fur overcoats and fleece lined jackets. Soon the big living-room was filled to overflowing, and then Mr. Clemens stepped up to the improvised platform at one end of the long room and bade them welcome. As usual, he made a most picturesque appearance. On the wall behind him was a very large square, of carved, rich, old Italian oak which filled the space between the two windows and formed an effective background for the white-haired, white-clad figure of the speaker. Mr. Clemens told story after story in his happiest vein—how he became an agriculturist, how he was lost in the dead of night in the black vastness of a German banqueting hall. He was brilliant, wonderful. He seemed determined to bring a ripple into the faces of that silent audience. Once in a while stern features would relax for a moment, but the effort seemed to hurt, and the muscles would become fixed again.

In the back of the room there sat some of the younger generation, who suffered from occasional apoplectic outbursts. And yet we knew that everyone there was enjoying it deeply, hugely, only, as Mr. Clemens said afterwards, "they weren't used to laughing on the outside." And they were proud, too, proud almost to sinning, of their illustrious fellow-townsmen, and they would have shouted with laughter, if they only could.

When Mr. Clemens had finished, after an entertainment of an hour and a half, there was no lack of applause. This they could give. The audience dispersed slowly, many of the number stopping to look, with open mouthed but inarticulate admiration, at the beauties and luxuries of this home, so different from theirs.

That evening Mr. Clemens rested himself by playing billiards. Before beginning, he showed me his collection of fish. Charming colored pictures of Angel-fish and other varieties were framed and hung low around the billiard-room. He told me that each real Angel-fish who came to visit him could choose one of those and call it her coat-of-arms. There were other very remarkable sketches and caricatures hung on the walls, but Mr. Clemens seemed most interested in the piscatorial collection.

It was sometimes a wonderful and fearsome thing to watch Mr. Clemens play billiards. He loved the game, and he loved to win, but he occasionally made a very bad stroke, and then the varied, picturesque, and unorthodox vocabulary, acquired in his more youthful years, was the only thing that gave him comfort. Gently, slowly, with no profane inflexions of voice, but irresistibly as though they had the headwaters of the Mississippi for their source, came this stream of unholy adjectives and choice expletives. I don't mean to imply that he indulged himself thus before promiscuous audiences. It was only when some member of the inner circle of his friends was present that he showed him this mark of confidence, for he meant it in the nature of a compliment. His mind was as far from giving offense as the mind of a child, and we felt none. We only felt a kind of awe. At no other time did I ever hear Mr. Clemens use any word which could be called profanity. But if we would penetrate into the billiard-room and watch him play, we must accept certain inevitable privileges of royalty [Mark Twain and the Happy Island, chapters 11-12]. Note: Fatout does not list this benefit talk by Clemens, though Lyon does. The Mark Twain Library Association minutes notes Sam's "short talk" and observed "quite a good attendance" [Copied by Tenney, Nov. 15, 1981].

Bennie Bercu, 12 years old, wrote from Providence, RI to express delight with Twain's books [MTP].

National Geographic Society, Washington, D.C. per Willis L. Moore wrote to ask Sam to make a toast at their Dec. 15 annual banquet [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Dec 1. MLH"

Thomas Brower Peacock, composer, wrote from Denver, Colo. to advise he'd sent Sam his latest song, "Beautiful Girl" as a birthday present. November 28 Saturday – Elizabeth Wallace describes the events of her last day's stay at Stormfield:

The next morning as I was going down stairs, Mr. Clemens called to me from his room, in a tone that made me hurry. He was standing by one of the many windows, and he said: "Come quickly and look at the deep blue haze on those barberry bushes! They have never looked quite like this before." Then he went on to say: "When they built this house they had the inspiration to put in these small panes. See how each one frames a wonderful picture, and I can have a different one every time I change my position. No man-made pictures shall ever hang on my walls so long as I have these."

That afternoon we took a long drive over the hills. Mr. Clemens kept no coachman and no carriage at that time, but when he wished a "rig" he sent word to the friendly farmer near by, who would soon appear with a surrey and a team of horses.

I remember that much of the talk that afternoon turned on the strange manifestations of genius and the tragic lives of many of those who were thus fatally endowed.

When evening came that day we asked Mr. Clemens to read Kipling to us again, and thus revive some of the memories of the Happy Island. And so we sat around the big blazing fire, and again the King's voice swept us out to visions of mighty action. More favorites were added. The Three Decker was read with unction, and The Long Trail was read twice over before the audience was satisfied. We wished that Mr. Rogers were there, and, happily, we did not feel the chill prophecy that some of us were never to see him again. An hour before luncheon, on Sunday, we gathered together in the living-room. Some one proposed that Mr. Clemens read aloud to us from his book, What Is Man? Into this work Mr. Clemens had put some of his deepest convictions as to the meaning of life and the principles that guide the human soul. What ever may be their philosophical value to others, he, at least, believed in them utterly, and when he read aloud to us the clear, trenchant dialogue, we, too, were convinced, for a time, of their truth. He grew so earnest that he would often repeat a phrase, twice, in a deep, solemn voice, and he so utterly forgot his pipe that it went out completely.

Our afternoon's peace was somewhat invaded by calls from the outside world and demands that Mr. Clemens should allow himself to be photographed. I often wondered how many thousand times the camera must have turned its eye upon him.

That last evening we played Hearts, for it still continued to be Mr. Clemens' favorite game. Again we missed Mr. Rogers sorely, and wished for his bantering. For no one else of us dared to chaff Mr. Clemens in quite the way that he had done. Besides, we knew that it wouldn't have been in the least humorous. We lengthened the hours as long as we could, for it was to be the last evening together, as the early morning train was to take me away. Since we knew how averse Mr. Clemens was to saying good-by to anyone, we parted that evening with a simple good-night. I did not expect to see him again, but the next morning as I went down to my hurried breakfast I heard his voice calling me. I went to his room. He was lying in his big carved bed, propped up by pillows. On the little table beside him were crowded together pipes, cigars, matches, a bottle or two, and a number of books. He handed one of the books to me, and said, "You must have one of my souvenirs.” It was a copy of Eve’s Diary, with a kindly dedication in it on the fly-leaf. Then he said good-bye. The November sunshine had gone. The chill of winter had come into the air, and as I drove over the hills to the station I felt that I was going away from something very wonderful and very precious. For the love and friendship of those who have their faces turned towards the sunset is sometimes as rare and sweet and unworldly as that of little children. Perhaps they both are nearer the infinite, and so can understand [Mark Twain and the Happy Island, chapters 12]. Note: Wallace afterward noted she never saw Twain again. Her inscribed copy of Eve’s Diary is not extant.

C.M. Ferrell, 74 years old, wrote from Newark, NJ to relate his old times on the Mississippi when he was on the F.X. Aubrey, which he thought Sam likely had seen. He related several tales but asked for nothing [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Dec 7. MLH”

William V. Griffin wrote from New Haven to ask Sam for 1,000 words for the Yale Daily News [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Nov 30th MLH”

Susie Rall Heslen wrote from Chesapeake Beach, Md. to ask if Sam knew about certain books from her youth, books not by him [MTP].

William Arnold Jacobs sent birthday wishes [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Dec 9. MLH”

November 29 Sunday – Elizabeth Wallace ended her visit and left Stormfield on an early train.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Today Mr. Watson and John [sic William] Ireland Starr motored up from Bridgeport. We had a gay time photoing, and just before they came I made photos of Benar and Betsy down in the pergola, that are going to be beautiful, I know. Betsy, Benar and I got into fantastic head gear and motored down to mother, for Betsy to say goodbye [MTP: IVL TS 81]. Note: William Ireland Starr b.1877, son of Major William Wright Starr (1848-1909), of Bridgeport, Conn. Watson is identified as Arthur K.L. Watson and the car a White steamer. Below is an account by Starr:

My Three Meetings with Mark Twain at Stormfield by William Ireland Starr:

During his Redding years, Stormfield was inaccessible enough to limit Mark Twain's callers to a small number, these he welcomed without benefit of introduction or advance appointment. During the warm part of the year 1908, exact date not remembered I was cruising around Redding with my good friend Arthur K. L. Watson in his White Steamer, and we decided to pay a visit to the local celebrity. At that time the approach to the Clemens' home was via Diamond Hill Road and what we now call Mark Twain Lane.

On such an excursion I was never without my cameras, and at this time I had just begun to experiment with the new Lumiere three-color photographic process, although my stand-by was my stereoscopic camera with which I took twin exposures giving the effect of a third dimension. Why I took no color shots on my first call I do not remember, but I did photograph the old gentleman in several poses, sitting in his front window, with his pipe in his hand, looking out at the Connecticut landscape.

I was assisted in this by Twain's two secretaries, Miss Isabel Lyon, his social secretary, and Ralph Ashcroft. English literary secretary, who, incidentally had accompanied Mark Twain to Oxford for the presentation of the doctorate not long before.

Twain was very proud of the cap and gown he had worn on this occasion and sometimes strutted around in them like a small boy dressed up. It was a sumptuous garment of bright red with gray half-sleeves and wide lapels. This colorful costume was largely responsible for my second visit, the following December 14th, at which time I brought along some autocrome plates for a few color shots of Doctor Clemens.

Our host received us graciously on both of these calls, and on the second visit I was invited to stay for lunch. He was at the time, however, greatly intrigued over the founding of the Mark Twain Library, and he “put the bee” on all his visitors for a contribution, however small, to the building fund. You will find my name among the founders, next to that of Mr. Watson, on the list we still have at the Library.

Twain was in good form that December day and greeted us warmly with one of his funny stories, as we were about to sit down at the table. He was very amusing and showed that he liked an audience, even a small one consisting chiefly of his henchmen and Watson and myself. In 1908 color photography was quite new in America and I seem to have been among the first to use the Lumiere process, which employed glass plates on which sensitized tiny grains of starch were used to photograph the scene as a transparency.

My host kept kidding me about what he called my “color machinery” but I could see that he was interested in having another portrait in color, following a “sitting” of only fifteen to twenty seconds. One thing I noticed was that he was the autocrat at the luncheon table; Miss Lyon had whispered that he did not like to be interrupted, much less contradicted.

Rare Color Shots Disappear

The color shots turned out beautifully and I mailed all of them to “Dr. Samuel Clemens, Redding, Connecticut” That was the last I ever saw or heard of my prized transparencies.

When, after the elapse of some weeks, I had had no acknowledgement, I wrote to inquire if they had been received and what Mark Twain thought of them. Still no answer.

Finally, in the spring, I journeyed a third time to Stormfield to see if I could not rescue the missing plates in person. By this time the old gentleman was suffering from what turned out to be his last illness and was confined to his bedroom on the second floor. He did stick his head out the window and shout down to me a greeting and an apology for not inviting me up. “Doctor's orders” He was gone before I could ask any questions about my color photographs. Judging by some subsequent happenings, I would not be surprised if Ralph Ashcroft could have explained the mystery, had he been so minded.

My brief acquaintanceship with Isabel Lyon grew into a lifelong friendship between her and my family. She and Ashcroft were married, but their union broke up with great unhappiness to Isabel, and she came and lived with my mother for quite a time while she was trying to recover from the shock [Redding Times, June 2, 1960, Vol. 5 p.1]

Dora Duty Jones wrote from Berlin, Germany to send homage to Clemens for his various works [MTP].

Alfred W. Lubin for Kora Co., NYC wrote to ask Sam for his autograph for his Vol. I of his Riverdale Edition of books [MTP]. Note: “Autogr. Sent Dec 7. MLH”

O. Roeber wrote from Germany to ask for an autograph [MTP]. Note: “Autogr sent. Dec 14 MLH”

Henry Williams wrote from the Conn. State Prison in Wethersfield to ask Sam for his forgiveness for burglarizing his home [MTP]. Note: Sam never answered; after Clemens’ death Williams wrote to Joseph Twichell (22 May 1910) anguished over Clemens’ not forgiving him, and begging Twichell to visit him in prison. He’d carved a Mississippi steamboat in wood and sent it to Clemens but didn’t know if Sam ever received it.

November 29? Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent another receipt on his library notice to William Ireland Starr [MTP].

November 30 Monday – Sam's 73rd Birthday. The New York Times, Dec. 1, p.1 "Mark Twain is 73." announced that Sam passed his birthday "quietly at his home...As was his custom, Mr. Clemens took his morning ride, passing the remainder of the day with his household."

In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Berlin, Germany.

Jean dear, I have been floundering around in my 74th year for half a dozen hours now, yet I don't seem to be any older than usual. It is a very good day for an old birthday: mild & gentle & autumnish & subdued as to color in woods & sky. But there do be blue jays flocking & flashing around, & I think they are out of season & will warn them off the place. No congratulations came till this morning—then even foreign ones arrived timed to the very day. Three from England. Ocean mails move accurately now-a-days.

The burglary scared away every servant we had. And we are very glad of it, for we are ever so much better off than we have ever been before, since the days when you were a little child in Hartford. We have 3 native Americans from the farms around, & 3 Italians—two inside & the other out: the insiders are Theresa & her husband & they can't be improved upon any where.

Jean dear, Miss Lyon will send you a trifle of Xmas money—which is better I reckon, than for me to try to select something for you—it would be sure to be pipes or cigars, or some other thing that is precious in my eyes, but which you would not much care for.

I've got a mechanical "vibrator," & we abolish indigestions, sick headaches, & such things in two minutes with it.

Merry Christmas, dear heart, & lots & lots of love / Father.

P. S. Give my very kindest regards to Excellenz von Versen. Oh, we had a darling visit from Dr. Jim Clemens some weeks ago. He was perfectly delightful. Jean, he is much too big a man for St. Louis. New York is better suited to the size of his brain & his scientific attainments [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Franz ("Frank") Nickolous Otremba (1851-1910), woodcarver in Hawaii.

Mr. F. N. Otremba:

The mantel is a charmingly conceived & admirably executed work of art, & I am grateful to you for the valued compliment conveyed to me in the labor of heart & hand & brain which you have put upon it. It is worthy of the choicest place in the house, & it has it. I wish also to thank you, & cordially, for the rare woods & for the beautiful bread-fruit plaque. / Sincerely yours

Insert: chair made for Twain by F.N. Otremba

Note: Franz Nickolous Otremba this from Rarevictorian.com website: Otremba was commissioned by the Hawaii Promotion Committee to carve a mantel for Mark Twain's new home, "Stormfield" in 1908. The job cost $300 and at the time was described as "one of the handsomest pieces of furniture ever made in the Islands". It was installed in the author's billiard room on his 73rd birthday. A chair was also carved by Otremba for Twain but he had a choice between the mantel and the chair and selected the mantel. The chair, pictured to the right, stayed in Hawaii, apparently with the Otremba family [Note: see picture of the Mantel in Oct. 31 entry. Otremba is most remembered for the popular and heroic bronze leaf statue of Kamehameha the Great, unveiled in 1883. It is currently seen in the opening of the popular TV show, Hawaii Five-O].

Sam also wrote to an unidentified person.

I like the Joan of Arc best of all my books; & it is the best, I know it perfectly well. And besides, it furnished me seven times the pleasure afforded me by any of the others: 12 years of preparation & 2 years of writing. The others needed no preparation, & got none. / Mark Twain [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of Eve's Diary to Elizabeth Wallace: "To / Betsy Wallace / from / Affectionately / The Author. / Stormfield, / Nov. 30, 1908. / At Eve's Grave. / Adam: 'Wheresoever so she was, there was Eden.' (last page.)" [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Harry P. Wood of the Hawaii Promotion Committee.

Dear Mr Wood

The beautiful mantel was put in its place an hour ago, & its friendly "Aloha" was the first uttered greeting my 73^d birthday received. It is rich in color, rich in quality, & rich in decoration, therefore it exactly harmonises with the taste for such things which was born in me & which I have seldom been able to indulge to my content. It will be a great pleasure to me, daily renewed, to have under my eye this lovely reminder of the loveliest fleet of islands that lies anchored in any ocean, & I beg to thank the Committee for providing me that pleasure. / Sincerely Yours / ... Isabel Lyon's journal: "Today Betsy went back to Chicago" [MTP: IVL TS 81]. Note: Elizabeth Wallace.

Ethelinde C. Johnson wrote blessings from Auburn, Maine to relate some of her life stories [MTP].

New York World wrote a short slip and birthday wish to Clemens [MTP].

Frederick T. Leigh, Treasurer of Harpers, sent a royalty statement (not in file) and best wishes [MTP].

Abram S. Stratton from Greensburg, Indiana sent his poem about Twain's birthday [MTP].

November 30 after – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka.

Dear Mr. Duneka:

I was just finishing a short story when you were here. I finished it to-day:

"The International Lightning-Insurance Trust."
A Love Story

It will make 8 or 9 pages of the Monthly, I reckon. It has love in it, & piety, & retribution, & distribution, & all those things.

When do you want it? ... [MTP].

December – Cooley writes of the decline of the Aquarium Club, something notable in less correspondence beginning this month:

By the early winter of 1908 the Aquarium Club had begun to decline. The number of Clemens's letters to his angelfish diminished, and he no longer pleaded for visits. In contrast to the one hundred or more letters he wrote to them in 1908, there are but twenty-five known letters from Clemens to angelfish for all of 1909, and very few surviving letters in reply. Half the angelfish swam from his Aquarium altogether, and no new "fish" were caught to take their places. Not only were there fewer letters but also significant changes in mood and content. Clemens frequently complained about his poor health, urged his angelfish to stop growing up, and muttered about their boyfriends. In these final letters he begins to sound, for the first time, like an old man admonishing his granddaughters to fold their wings and “quiet down.” When he is not complaining about the “lawless” qualities he loved but a year earlier, his letters are still warm and affectionate, though missing the exuberance so often present during the previous years [MTAq 234].

Dorothy Butes sent Sam a signed Christmas card [MTP].

Dr. Edward Quintard wrote to encourage Sam to attend a the Post-Graduate Medical School dinner [MTP].

Silk Association of America sent Sam a calligraphied invite with seal to their 37th annual banquet at the Waldorf on Feb. 11 [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Unable to be present”

December 1 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Marjorie Breckenridge.

You see I have followed your suggestion—so the house has two names: “Innocence at Home” for the Aquarium girls, & “Stormfield” for the general public.

Those poor burglars have gone to jail. I haven’t anything against them, I bear them no malice & put no blame upon them, for it is only circumstances & environment that make burglars, therefore anybody is liable to be one. I don’t quite know how I have managed to escape, myself. Yes I do: my circumstances & environment protected me. Whenever a man is not a burglar, that is the only reason—there is no other.)

If your turned ankle afflicted you only a fortnight, you are fortunate. Don’t turn it again—it is a bad business sometimes & hangs on & pesters a person a couple of years: I have had that experience.

Three days ago I walked down to your cabin with a guest. It was in good shape. There was a bow & some fishing tackle on the porch, & the wood-pile had not been robbed.

Although the beginnings of winter are here & the trees are more or less bare, the landscape is still astonishingly beautiful: indeed we can’t swear that it has ever lost any of its beauty at any time: what it loses in one way it seems to amply make up in another.

Love to you, & a merry Christmas, & the best of health & prosperity. / ... [MTP; MTAq 238-9].

Sam also wrote to Dr. Edward Quintard.

Dear Doctor: / Call Clara up, & require her to report to you. She is occupying a cunning little flat on the 5th floor at 17 Livingstone Place, corner of Stuyvesant Square and — — — is it 15th street — — — or 17th? — — — well, it’s there somewhere, on a corner. Damn a square that has corners to it, anyway! you never can tell which corner it is; whereas, if it were round, you wouldn’t need to try to know—you could just go on around till you got there.

Well, we are hungry to see you, too—therefore come up & give us a chance. Trains (good ones) from Grand Central at 8. 50 a. m. & 3. 32 p. m. Distance, about an hour & a half. Choose your own day, per your own convenience—& telephone us, so that we can meet you at the station with a hack or a garage or some other adequate transportation, the distance being 3 miles & the walking not good, with baggage. Come, won’t you? I am trying 74 now, & can tell you a lot about it. I do hope the madam can come with you; I should love that.

With love to you both— ... [MTP].

C.F. Stromeyer wrote a list of furniture shipped this day to Redding [MTP].

Howard P. Taylor wrote to Sam.

My Dear Sam:/ I read in a 'Frisco paper yesterday that you had just celebrated your 73d birthday. Let your old friend of nearly 50 years ago throw a few congratulations over your old pompadour, with the fervent hope you may live to celebrate many more annuals, and to continue to entertain the world with your pestilential pleasantries. I am but three years your junior, but feel fourteen years your senior, owing to a bunch of ingrowing rheumatism that has claimed most of my system since my advent among the 'glorious fogs of California' shortly after the earthquake, and left me physically and financially 'pinched' on a bargain-day mattress in Oakland, with a second-hand typewriter for company. I have read, too, of your frequent illnesses, and can only wonder at your extraordinary vitality, for when we were doing time on the old Enterprise in Virginia, you didn't seem "bigger than a paragraph," nor stalwart enough to pry up a carpet tack. I don't know your attitude on religion, or whether you ever had any (few of us had in the old days), but doubtless you are thankful to the Great Unseen for the blessed energies He has given you, for prolonging your days, and for making you the creature of cheerful usefulness to the world. It saddens "we old 'uns," though, to know that so few of our comrades of the past remain. A new, and still newer, generation has sprung up, and only a bent form and wrinkled face from among our youthful friends is occasionally seen wandering listlessly among the streets of San Francisco and Oakland. It makes one feel like the proverbial cat in the strange garret.

Nearly all the old newspaper editors, reporters and compositors that we knew have passed to the beyond, except Joe Goodman, whom I have been unable to locate, but hear he is somewhere in Southern California. Jim Townsend, I am told, died a year or two ago at Lodi, Cal., and Jim Gillis passed out last year—Steve a few years previously. Dan de Quille some time ago, as you know. Denis and Jack McCarthy, Pit Taylor, Jack McGinn, Mike McCarthy, George Thurston, and other of the old office boys, have all been gathered in, leaving but few of the old Comstockers to face the inevitable. My brother Billy, whom I believe you knew, is still on earth, here with me, but a paralytic. He is 76 years old. All very saddening; yet the retrospect is not so unpleasant, as I ponder over it, and doubtless the sanctities are still slumbering within both of us that make this life worth the living. ...

Your croney of Lang Syne... [MTP].

Rev. Charles Watt Whistler (1856-1913), historic fiction writer, wrote from Mercer, Penn. to Sam. "Dear old man: / In 64 or 65 I met you frequent in the old Alta Calif on Sacramento st, San 'Frisco. John McComb was one of the [illegible words]. / I said goodbye when you set sail on the bark Whistler—my own name—when you went out to Honolulu. He added birthday wishes [MTP]. Note: Sam took the steamer Ajax to Hawaii on 6 Mar 1866.

Mrs. E.A. Zimmerman wrote from Johnstown, Penn. with birthday wishes and request for autograph [MTP]. Note "Autogr. Sent Dec 7 MLH"

Susan W. Clune wrote from Boston, Mass. to Sam with “tardy” birthday wishes [MTP].

N. Lafayette-Savay for the American Civic Alliance wrote to advise Sam had been granted honorary membership; if he accepted they wanted him at their conference on Dec. 21 [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 9 MLH”

Dr. Charles L. Meriwether wrote from Louisiana, Mo. to Sam with birthday wishes, inviting him to spend his 74th with him; born on the same day, it would be Meriwether's 32nd [MTP].

Mrs. Oscar Robinson wrote from Colusa, Calif. to Sam with birthday wishes and stuffed figs, which she assured him weren't poison [MTP].

F.B. Vandegrift & Co., NYC wrote offering to sell a buffalo head that one of their correspondents had in Banff, Alta, Canada [MTP].

December 6 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer.

You “suppose” I had a happy Thanksgiving, do you? You don't suppose anything of the kind, you dear little rascal. You know very well I wouldn't have a happy Thanksgiving & you not here.

But it was just sweet of you to send me the flowers. They are lasting very well; they haven't lost their freshness yet.

We've been telephoning last night, & I am hoping we are going to capture you next Friday. But we have to wait & see if your mother will consent. Mr. Howells is coming, & he is just a love (but you mustn't flirt with him;) & Colonel Harvey is coming; if there is a spare bed I hope your mother will come, too. / With love [MTP; MTAq 237-8 misdated as Nov. 29].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

Dear Annianlouise: / A week ago I drifted over the 73-year frontier safely & entered my second childhood in good shape. It was like passing a milestone in the dark—I couldn't notice that anything was happening. It is very different at 50 & at 70. And again at a hundred, of course.

We have had a good many guests since the burglar days, but not an actress. I was too slow. October came, all of a sudden, & brought a time-table change which effectually put up the bars against the profession. There was but one who was free—Margaret Illington. Free by disaster, emancipated by broken health. It looks as if the stage is going to lose her, but I hope it will not happen.

I was in New York day before yesterday, & was to have stayed with the Rogerses, but at the last moment Mrs. Rogers was taken ill, & Mrs. Benjamin also (surgical operation): so I stayed with other friends. I saw Benjamin, & he said Mr. Rogers would probably go to Bermuda soon.

Your fellow-visitors of Sept. 18 have been tried, sentenced, & sent to jail—one of them for 4 years, the other for 9—this latter for burglary and shooting with intent to kill. The terms were light because they pleaded guilty. I had a letter from the murderous one three days ago. He is clearly a merciless devil, a bloody-minded devil, but softly sentimental, just the same, for he is a German. In his lament he says, “ich traume in des Lebens Blüthezeit.” (He is about 43.) / With lots of love— / Major [MTP; MTAq 239]. Note: Cooley offers translation: “I dream about a new (better) life.”

Sam also wrote to Martin W. Littleton, 113 E. 57th Street, NYC.

Dear Littleton: / Thank you for delivering into my hands those sumptuous examples of the art of decorating & putting together tobacco in the right & reverent way—when it is such tobacco—tobacco without its previous equal in flavor & fragrance, if my knowledge & experience are to be depended on.

And thank you again, & again, & again, & again, for not keeping it to yourself. I shall always admire you for this.

And please thank Mr. O'Grady for me, & very cordially. Thank him for the whisky, too. I had just reformed, but it is not too late to re-arrange that. I am used to it. / Sincerely Yours ... [MTP].

W.L. French wrote to ask for an interview about analyzing character from handwriting [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 11 MLH”

Charles J. Grundstrom, 21 year old “working boy” wrote from Riverside, Calif. to ask Sam for a “personal letter” about “some little incident” in his life [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 14 MLH; autogr. sent”

Hattie Summerfield for Illinois Woman's Press Assoc., Chicago wrote to ask Sam for an autographed copy of one of his books for the benefit of the Needy Author's Fund [MTP].

December 7 Monday – Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Murray Butler sent their calling card for Sam “to meet Lord & Lady Northcliffe & Signor Ferrero,” Tues. Dec. 15 4 to 6 p.m. [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 7 MLH”

Columbia University sent an engraved invitation to “exercises in Commemoration of the Three Hundredth Anniversary of the birth of John Milton” on Dec. 9 [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 9 MLH”

Marjorie Dawson for Marjorie Dawson's Doll-land Co. wrote from NYC to Sam, sending “some tickets and circulars to Doll-land” [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 7 MLH”

Neltje de G. Doubleday (Mrs. Frank N. Doubleday) wrote to ask Sam what he liked in the article in “Country Life” and to indicate where he wanted changes. Her scrawl is terrible and mostly illegible [MTP].

Daniel Frohman for the Lyceum Theatre, NYC wrote to Sam.

My sister tells me you have caused some inquiries to be made regarding Mrs. Frohman [Margaret Illington Frohman]. A month ago she went West and her mail was not given to her promptly because the doctor wanted her to be free from all thought of things. She improved so rapidly that she came back home for a couple of weeks for consultation and advice, etc., and Saturday she left for Southern California where she will live with an uncle in a nice comfortable place for one or two months until she gets her nerves in order. Her condition is not serious but her nerves gave out. She never recovered entirely from the horse-back accident she had over a year ago, and, added to the character of the part she played for a year, and the amount of emotion and intense effort she put into it, she collapsed. Now she is to give up acting entirely. She never cared much for the stage, but I wanted to keep her on because I felt she had a great career. But as it makes her happier not to do so, she will, on her return, become a domesticated Hausfrau. You will doubtless hear from her from her distant home, and see her on her return [MTP].

Notes: Margaret Illington (born Maude Light 1879-1934) took the stage name of Illington which combined “Illinois” and “Bloomington” in honor of her birthplace. She married the 28 years older Daniel Frohman in 1903. Clemens added Margaret to his Aquarium roster, though she was 29 years old. She divorced Frohman in Nov. 1909 in Reno, Nevada, and married Edward J. Bowes (creator of the radio show “Amateur Hour”), a rich real estate developer of Tacoma, Wash. only a few days later. Sam would write her on Jan. 26, 1910. See entry.

Howard P. Merrill for Springfield (Mass.) Calhoun Club wrote to ask Sam his terms to come and deliver a talk [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 11 MLH”

Nellie F. Monson wrote to ask for Clemens’ autograph [MTP]. Note: “Autogr. Sent Dec 7 MLH”

North Carolina Society of NY sent an engraved invitation to their annual dinner, Dec. 7 to meet their guest of honor, William Howard Taft, at the Hotel Astor [MTP].

John E. Ridenour for the Book Shop, Kansas City, Mo wrote to Sam with birthday wishes and to ask for an autograph [MTP]. Note: “Autogr. Sent Dec 7 MLH”

James B. Sutherland wrote from Toronto, Canada to enclose $1.15 to Sam for the Redding Library, hoping that it would come back endorsed by Clemens. The last time Sutherland heard Sam talk was at the Princess Hotel in Bermuda [MTP].

December 7-10 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a postcard to Nettie Brockley.

Indeed yes, dear Miss Brockley, & I thank you for thinking of it; for an attention from a school girl gratifies me more than the like from any other source. I am 73 & grandchildless; & so one might expect the whole left hand compartment of my heart to be empty & cavernous & desolate; but it isn’t because I fill it up with schoolgirls [MTP].

December 8 Tuesday – Sam’s A.D. for this date focused again on the two burglars at Stormfield [Hill 209]. f: Sam also dictated on the burglary on Oct. 6 and Nov. 12.

Ragnvald Blix wrote to Sam, thanking him for a letter of praise of his book Le Voile Tombe: Caricatures par Blix (1908). Blix offered to send Clemens the original of any caricature he chose. Gribben adds that “Blix’s prints mimic the master painters of Western Europe” [MTP; Gribben 75].

J.A. Jenkins wrote from Cheyenne Wells, Colo. to offer Sam his history and to ask for “a few lines” [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 11 MLH”

Maud Nathan for the Consumers’ League of NY wrote to Sam, following up on her previous letter of two weeks prior, asking him to speak [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 11 MLH”

December 9 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Dec. 2 of Charles Hopkins Clark.

“a speech to be made on any occasion & on any subject. I remember the p.a.s. but I haven’t any idea where I made it, if I made it, or where it was printed. It must have been printed for I had several examples of it” [MTP]. Note: evidently Clark was looking for a copy of Twain’s “Patent Adjustable Speech,” given at the Yale Alumni Association Banquet on Feb. 6, 1889. His speech was published as “Yale College Speech” [Fatout MT Speaking 235-7].

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally.

They will celebrate John Milton this afternoon in New York; & now, when it is too late, I wish I had accepted—which I didn’t, because I was sure I hadn’t anything to say about John that I dearly & particularly wanted to say. But it is different, now: all of a sudden I am full of things I want to say about him; full of things I want to put into Howell’s mouth & then refute them & handle Howells without gloves for saying them. I mourn, I mourn, you dear sweet Francesca, I mourn! for now that is going to be a solemn & sombre function, & I would have lifted some of that cloud from it & let in the sunshine.

Yes, I mourn; for Howells will be the only red Oxford there in all that pack of black gowns, & will have that splendid conspicuousness all to himself; whereas if I could only be there I would get in front of him where nobody could see him, & do all the showing-off myself.

There’ll be a full complement of week-enders arriving here day after to-morrow: Howells, Col. Harvey, Ashcroft, & Margaret Blackmer & her mother. If you were coming too, I should be very glad: I would give you my room & I would sleep on the couch in Clara’s parlor, or in her chicken-coop outside of her windows. Then you could select your tree, down at the pergola. No member of the now sacred group has been consecrated yet—all the 12 stand nameless, for there’s been no angel-fish on the premises since I devoted that cluster to the Aquarium. Margaret will be the first to choose a tree.

The framed enlargement hangs in the billiard room now, & looks really good, though not as good as its neighbor the Atlanta picture, which is incomparable; it is the finest triumph of photography in the house.

No indeed, I shan’t forget about your graduation; & also I shall keep you reminded of Easter.

An hour later. The morning mail is in. The Colonel is caught out & can’t come this week: he has to speak at a dinner to Carnegie. I had told him he must be sure to come, or Howells would get off at Syracuse or Peoria or somewhere around there & get lost, but he says Howells is 72 & must learn to take care of himself before he gets old.

Note from Howells. He can’t come till Saturday, then he will stay till Wednesday, if permitted. He does not believe there is a Lexington avenue station, but will take a taxicab & hunt for it & see. I know he is going to get lost, & we shall never see him again.

Good-bye' you dear Francesca— / S L C

[enclosure, a photograph of SLC with Lyon and Ashcroft, inscribed as follows:]

Affectionate greetings from this triangle, or trilogy, or whatever its right name is [MTP; MTAq 240-1].

Note: Cooley provides: “The event was the three hundredth anniversary of John Milton’s birth, celebrated at the Church of the Ascension in New York on 9 December 1908. The rector, Percy Grant, provided the sermon, and Howells and others presented readings and tributes” [241n1].

Sam wrote to New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad requesting a flag stop at Redding for the 3:32 train out of NYC. Sam's letter is not extant but referred to in the Railroad's Dec. 12 reply.

Isabel Lyon wrote for Sam to Valdemar Thoresen.

Dear Sir: Mr. Clemens directs me to write for him in reply to your letter in regard to the similarity between "Tom Sawyer, Detective," and "The Vicar of Wellby." [sic Veilby] Mr. Clemens is not familiar with Danish and does not read German fluently, and has not read the book you mention, nor any translation or adaptation of it that he is aware of. The matter constituting "Tom Sawyer, Detective," is original with Mr. Clemens, who has never been consciously a plagiarist. You may therefore deny most authoritatively that this or any other matter that has appeared under Mr. Clemens's name is based upon the work of any other [MTP: NY Times, 2 Feb. 1910].

Pieter Bausch wrote from Amsterdam to Sam [MTP].

Note: the text of this letter ran in Harper's Weekly for Feb. 20, 1909, p. 13. Tenney: "...from Pieter Bausch (Amsterdam, 9 Dec 1908) who has written a humorous book under the pseudonym of Peet Boester and asks MT to write a preface to the book. In a brief introduction to the letter MT praises the humor of Bausch's letter, despite an imperfect command of English, and suggests that if he translated his book it ought to find a market in America: 'He seldom succeeds in saying exactly what he is trying to say, but no matter, he always says his say felicitously, always quaintly and deliciously, and often brilliantly; and to be brilliant in a tongue not one's own is a rare feat indeed....I think that his English is perfectly charming, and I perceive that the personality back of it is charming too'" [Tenney, ALR Second Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1978) 176-77].

A. Bjerregaard wrote from Newcastle on Tyne, England to praise Sam for CS [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Appreciation"

The Church of the Ascension sent an engraved invitation for the 300th anniversary of John Milton's birth [MTP].

The Corcoran Gallery of Art for the American Institute of Architects sent an engraved invitation and ticket for the Dec. 15 appreciation of Augustus Saint Gaudens. The ticket is still in the file [MTP]. Note: "Ans Dec 9 MLH"

Estela A. de Lima wrote to ask Sam to "honor the Council of Jewish Women" with his "presence at their annual breakfast" at the Hotel Astor on Feb. 16 [MTP].

Colonel and Mrs. Heistand, Governor's Island, NY sent an "At Home" card for Dec. 16 [MTP]. Note: "Ans Dec 9 MLH"

Sherman, French & Co., Boston wrote replying to Isabel Lyon's note of Dec. 7 regarding the "Hibbert Journal," an English publication made in Birmingham, England. They enclosed a circular of the journal for Sam to review [MTP].

December 10 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick.

I am sorry, Dorothy dear, that your old bird died, but glad you've got a fresh one. I know it is a pretty one, for by your description of it I recognize it as a bird I am very well acquainted with. It is a chicken-hawk, & is one of the finest of the feathered singers. I used to have one. When it was not catching chickens & cats it would sit around & sing by the hour, & was a delight to everybody on the place. I hope you will get the other one, all in good time.

Irene's bird is dead. It was a beautiful creature. She got it in Bermuda when we were there a year ago. That is one of the main troubles about pets: one gets very fond of them, then they die & break your heart.

I'm not going to Bermuda this season. I have now spent 6 summer months here, & shall stay here right along until winter comes. That will be about next July, I reckon, the way things look.

Miss Lyon sends her love, & I send lots & lots of love. / ... [MTP; MTAq 241-2].

H. Crenshaw for Medical Consensus (Journal) wrote from Atlanta, Ga. to ask his opinion on "Which is the best method of composition—dictation, typewriting, or long-hand writing?" [MTP].

Cass Gilbert for American Institute of Architects sent a telegram to invite Clemens to the Annual Dinner at the New Willard, Wash. D.C. on Dec 17 [MTP].

Jennie Haas wrote from Whitewood, S.D. a long begging letter to Sam, describing the history of their financial woes [MTP].

Howells & Stokes wrote to ask Sam to send his check directly to L.S. Blackman, surveyor [MTP].

D.D. Knapp wrote from Danbury, Conn. to ask Sam if he knew of anyone who would help him get back his property, which he'd been forced to sell for about $6,000. The hand is nearly illegible [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II wrote to Sam about the Hope-Jones Organ Company being invited to move to Rochester, NY, with a model, fire-proof factory, resulting in a great savings per year. Jervis wanted to come in the next few days to discuss the matter with Sam [MTP].

Frank V. McGrath for Leary, Stuart & Co. Books, Phila. wrote thanks for Sam's autograph [MTP].

Kurt Monch wrote from Germany to Sam, asking what was meant by some lines in TA, Ch. 3 near the middle of "Baker's Blue Jay" yarn. "You make say the blue-jay at its examination of the hole on the log-house's roof: I wish I may land in a museum with a belly full of sawdust in two minutes. I beg to ask you what you mean by these lines" [MTP].

New Theatre sent an engraved invitation folder to Sam for the laying of the corner-stone by the Mayor of NY on Dec. 15 at 3:30 [MTP].

L.M. Powers wrote from Haverhill, Mass. to Sam. He had "about sixty first editions" of Twain's work but had never seen these: Men and Things; Women and Things; Primrose Way; Memoranda. Toronto 1871; Edmund Burke on Crocker and Tammany [MTP]. Note: "Ans Dec 23 MLH"; Clemens wrote on the letter in black ink making a curved line grouping the first four: "Published without my consent & promptly suppressed. / SLC"; on the Burke piece he wrote: "Don't know where to find this one. It was a political brochure"

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

December 11 Friday – Sam took a quick trip into NYC, using taxis to visit H.H. Rogers, Julia Langdon Loomis, daughter Clara, and Mary B. Rogers [Dec. 12 to Langdon].

In his Dec. 6 to Margaret Blackmer Sam had expressed hope that she might visit this day. The guestbook shows that she arrived this day with her mother and stayed until Sunday, Dec. 13. See entry.

In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Champ Clark (John Beauchamp Clark), at this time Congressman from Missouri:

Now that is the very thing! If you & Mrs. Clark will come up here & give us a visit of a few days between now & the extra session we can thresh the matter out serenely without intrusions & interruptions. I will calm myself down, now, & fold my wings under my shoulders & my ears over my head & wait in tranquillity till you come.

My proposition is not a new law, but a brief & undisturbing amendment to be hitched onto the existing law.

It gives to an expiring 42-year copyright an extension of say 40 years, upon this condition: that the owner of the copyright shall at once issue an edition at one-tenth the price of the cheapest existing edition, & keep it on sale to all applicants during said extension. Failure during a period of 3 months to furnish said cheap edition to an applicant during said extension annuls the extension. The extension is to be granted upon these terms to all interests, including books, now protected by the existing law & competent to furnish the required sweeping reduction.

High-priced editions can be continued without hindrance, but there must be a ten-percent edition.

At present the straitened-purse millions have to get along without cheap editions, almost as a rule, since the book-pirate may furnish them or not, as he chooses—& in lots of cases he doesn't choose.

But I am proposing to make it worth the legitimate publisher's while to furnish them, by offering to him & the author this extension reward, & this opportunity to continue their high-priced editions advantageously, & to nobody's hurt.

There are booksellers in every town & village in the country. They will all like the scheme.

The pirate has no right to complain. He will still have the innumerable dead copyrights of 2500 years & of all countries to live upon—let him be satisfied with that rich gratis gold-mine.

Let the 4 copyright bills now before Congress fuss along—they are not in my way. No man can understand them, & no Congress can pass them.

Lord Northcliffe came up here to call, the other day, & he liked the project, & said bring it to England & he would urge it with all his battery of 52 periodicals & newspapers, including The London Times. I said I would if I failed here, but I wanted to try here first, & for once originate a copyright law, instead of always following England's lead. / Sincerely Yours / SL Clemens

You see there isn't a single valuable thing in any copyright law of ours that we didn't take at second hand from England. You must make this measure your monument [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Clara at 17 Livingston Place, N.Y.C.

Clärchen dear, you & G'ossip will be very welcome, even though your stay with us is to be so brief.

I am glad you went to the shore—I expect it to help your cold. I suspect that the vibrator, applied promptly & early, would keep a cold from getting a start. I'll give you one for your Xmas if you like. It easily & quickly knocks out my two ailments—indigestion & rheumatism.

No—I am privileged to contribute to Harper publications only. This is absolute.

Mr. 'Owells the elder is coming tomorrow; also my Margaret & her mother.

Miss Lyon was to arrange the banquet details, date etc., with Quintard several days ago, so I suppose it is all arranged by this time. / With lots of love & hugs / Mark [MTP]. Note: Margaret Blackmer and mother are shown in the guestbook as arriving this day, perhaps earlier than Sam planned, but after this letter was written.

Sam's new guestbook:

Note: Sam wrote over the first date, but it looks more like a “1” than a “2”.

Isabel Lyon’s journal: To New York on the 7:37, which means breakfast at 6:30 & a sunrise drive out through the field to the darling wood road to the station. These early winter mornings, with a lifting frost mist over the valleys are too exquisite for mere words to paint. I lunched with Benar, after doing the beginning of the shopping for Christmas out here in the country. Then Benar met me at the train & together we came up to the darling paradise to find the King playing billiards with Paine [MTP: IVL TS 82-83].

In Berlin, Germany, Jean Clemens wrote a long letter to Isabel Lyon. Here is part of it, beginning with her choice of Christmas gifts:

Dear Lioness; / I am sending you two small boxes, containing, one a spider and one three wee cats & a frog. I don’t imagine that I need to state for you whom the contents of the respective boxes are intended. But I wish you would do me the kindness of putting the spider on Clara’s napkin (or in front of her plate) before breakfast or lunch (whichever is the most convenient for you) on Christmas day. The little cats & the frog I wish you would place in front of Father’s plate....Don’t show any of them to the spider [Clara] because I think she’ll enjoy their absolute idiocy more if she sees them placed, for the first time. ...

I wrote Clara yesterday and in today’s letter I read that she is quite disturbed at my loss of weight, so please tell her that in the past two weeks I have gained 3 lbs in each and now weigh nearly 121 lbs. I was weighed this morning when I went to get my butter. It’s rather embarrassing but in order to get weighed, I have to ask the grocer to do it as the doctor has no machine....Sunday I was paralysed with fear for about 2 hours before my rehearsal & couldn’t sleep that night, for thinking of the part. Monday, I went to a tea and then sat around watching the rehearsal of the comedy and expecting to rehearse, so that I had all the nervousness for nothing, again didn’t sleep very well; Tuesday I rested some & rehearsed...; Wednesday afternoon I went to tea where Daisy Suart (an English Vienna friend whom I suddenly discovered on Monday, was here) was staying—to her utter amazement when I entered with a Miss Clark...; in the evening we had the charity performance & I told the story of the Golden Arm—successfully, Lioness, what do you think of that?—and danced until 2.15; Thursday afternoon I went to a concert given for the American Church and from there went home with Fr. v. Versen & had dinner with her. I had given up all tho’t of going to the concert but an English lady, who is particularly nice and cordial, brought me her ticket after lunch. I hated to decline when she had taken the trouble to bring it, so I went, & enjoyed it very much. I sat next to Mrs. Lie the wife of the Norwegian military attaché, also English. I meant to call on a lady who lives opposite & on whom I haven’t as yet made my first call, this afternoon, but as I am somewhat tired & am going to a dance tonight I shall wait until tomorrow.

How are Scott and Prosper? Poor old dog! It made me feel like weeping when I went to the dog-show and saw similarly marked, but not nearly as fine specimens of St. Bernards. They are much smaller over here. ... [MTP]. Note: Clara’s handwriting earned her the nickname “Spider” years before. Alice Von Versen (nee Clemens), Sam’s cousin. Evelyn “Daisy” Suart. Miss Mary Clark.

Alice Hooker Day wrote from NYC to Sam. “The Consumer’s League is exceedingly anxious to induce you to speak at the annual meeting in January...” [MTP].

Cass Gilbert for American Institute of Architects, Wash. D.C. wrote to Sam referring to a telegram just sent for their Dec. 17 Annual Dinner at the New Willard Hotel; speakers were listed and discussed along with various ceremonies, including one for Augustus Saint Gaudens [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 14 MLH”

B.A. Myers for Myers & Levitt, Inc. Amusement Enterprises, NYC wrote to ask if Sam was “open for a short lecture tour” [MTP].

Helen A. Ranlett for Collegiate Equal Suffrage League of NY State wrote to ask Sam to “write an article of perhaps one hundred words on the subject of suffrage” [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 11 MLH”

John Wanamaker sent a form letter from NYC to Sam. The Educational Theatre for Children had given Clemens as a reference for credit [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 14 MLH”

December 12 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Charles J. Langdon.

Dear Charley:

This is to acknowledge receipt of check for $25 (Atlantic Gas coupon) received by today's mail. Miss Lyon will attend to Jean's draft when she gets back from New York this evening from a day's erranding. She will know what to do. (I protect myself from having to do things myself by always being able to plead that I don't know how.)

Oh, sometimes it would be better if I did know how, damn it all to damnation! I had only just time enough to taxicab around & look in on H. H., Julie, Clara, & Mary Rogers & one of my small girl-pets; & as I did not think to telephone beforehand I caught nobody at home but Mary. I am ever so sorry I missed you & Ida—an accident which could easily & happily have happened the other way, for I had an old young-girl friend along to help me do my visiting, & I waited ten minutes in the Plaza-lobby while she called on an aunt there. / With lots of love to you all— ... [MTP]. Note: Sam evidently made a day-trip into NYC, either this day or the day before. Since his Dec. 11 to Clara seems to answer either a non-extant letter or questions raised during a quick visit, it seems more plausible that the NYC trip took place on Dec. 11, especially since he had guests arriving this day, Dec. 12. In his Dec. 19 To Rogers, Sam referred to the “flying trip” to NYC as “a week or two ago,” so it may have been earlier than Dec. 12.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Margaret Blackmer & her mother came today. Margaret looked sad & pathetic & delicate, & as Mrs. Blackmer & I are going up to bed at 10:30, she drew me into her room to tell me that Mr. Blackmer is to be married next month, & the knowledge of it has been saddening to Margaret. Mrs. B's life has been a tragedy with that man for a husband. For 10 she has lived with him, for the children's sake, knowing that he was untrue to her, & now for Margaret's sake she has divorced him [MTP: IVL TS 83]. Note: Henry Myron Blackmer (1869-1962), tycoon who got rich financing railroads in Colorado.

Sam wrote to New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad asking that the #240 leaving NY at 3:32 p.m. might stop at Redding. Sam's letter is not extant but referred to in the Railroad's reply of Dec. 14.

Grace Moffett Loring, working on a Moffett genealogy, wrote from Swampscott, Mass. to ask Sam about his late nephew and any information about Moffett's family [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 15 MLH”

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad per A.B. Smith wrote to Sam about his letter of Dec. 9 requesting a flag stop at Redding for the 3:32 train, which he admitted was often late and that making a stop at Redding would not help, but he had a man investigating possibilities [MTP].

December 13 Sunday – Isabel Lyon's journal: “Mr. Starr & Mr. Watson came for luncheon today, & Mrs. Starr made some colored photographs of the King & Margaret” [MTP: IVL TS 83]. Note: see Starr's account of this trip Nov. 29 entry.

December 14 Monday – William Ireland Starr, photographer from West Redding, Conn. came and took photographs of Stormfield and its occupants, including one of Ralph W. Ashcroft (standing in window) and Clemens (seated in window) looking out at Isabel Lyon (standing outside the window); also one of Sam in his Oxford gown, seated with cigar in mouth [MT Journal Spring/Fall 2006 p.19].

American Institute of Architects sent engraved invite for Dec. 17 at the New Willard in Wash. D.C. [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 14 MLH”

Layton W. Crippen sent a telegram from NYC to Harry A. Lounsbury or Isabel Lyon c/o Sam: “Please telegraph to me at hotel Belmont what station I alight at this afternoon” [MTP]. Note: see Dec. 16 entry in guestbook.

Martin W. Littleton wrote from NYC to apologize for being absent during Sam’s recent visit [MTP].

New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad per A.B. Smith replied to Sam’s Dec. 12 letter: they were pleased to announce that beginning Dec. 21, the #240 leaving NY at 3:32 p.m. “would stop at Redding on notice to Conductor to leave passengers from New York only” [MTP].

Herbert Saull for the Salvation Army sent a form letter asking for donation for their Christmas dinner [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 15 MLH”

Edwin Wildman for M.A.P. Magazine NYC wrote to ask Sam “to give an expression” on the question of “What I Fear Most and Why” [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 15 MLH”

Billie Burke wrote to thank Sam for his “precious letter” invitation to visit but “some people were giving” her “a big dinner on Sunday...” Could she come the following Sunday? [MTP]. Note: Clemens wrote on the env. “From that dear Billie Burke”

Julia P. Dodge for the N.Y. Assoc. for the Blind wrote to thank Sam for his “cooperation which did so much last spring” and to ask the use of his name as Patron [MTP].

December 16 Wednesday – William Dean Howells wrote to Sam.

Dear Clemens:

I have just telephoned your butler that I can’t come to-morrow, and I’m so doubtful about the rest of the week that I shall have to telephone again. If you don’t hear from me, you’ll know I’m not coming, till heaven knows when. My bowels of compassion have broken loose in the wrong direction, and if I came now I should have to pass my visit in your bath-room, except when I came out for a banquet of boiled rice and hot milk. You might not think this so gay as I should. / Yours ever / W.D. Howells [MTHL 2: 840].

Layton Crippen	London Times staff	December 16-18

Note: Layton W. Crippen (1864-916) was later on the staff of the New York Times. Crippen had accompanied Lord Northcliffe, proprietor of the London Times, on a tour of Canada and the US, and wrote articles describing the travels for Northcliffe's papers. He was the first to describe the contents of J.Pierpont Morgan's library. He also wrote two books that won critical acclaim, Fujiyama and Olympus (1905), and Clay and Fire (1914), a metaphysical discussion. Not in Gribben.

Richard R. Bowker wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens: / I was a little surprised the other day, in view of your publicly announced opposition to burglary and such like, that you permitted yourself to walk off with my excellent over-coat and saddled me with a really inferior article. If the balance of trade had been the other way, I should have felt reason to be more forgiving. But Christmas is coming and just now we must be forgiving even under the most exasperating circumstances. I might have thought you as innocent, as abroad or at home, you make profession to be, but I think that any man who will write anything that could be translated into such an outrageous word as you will find on page 240 of a work which I am sending you, purporting to be a Swedish translation of Tom Sawyer, might be guilty of anything.

Even of your latest invention in copyright which Johnston [sic, likely Robert Underwood Johnson] and I and others have been talking over since you spoke of it. Seriously, we should hope that the attention of Congress would not be diverted from the bill well under way by new propositions such as that you suggest. Nor do I think that suggestion would stand full analysis. In most cases of popular works a fifty or even twenty-five cent edition is published within the copyright term, and your proposal would mean a five cent or two-and-a-half cent edition to hold the copyright, which edition must be kept perpetually in print. It is quite true that a large proportion of copyrights are not of value beyond the original term, as you have so often argued. But what we are hoping for is the period of life and fifty years, which was adopted a few weeks ago by the Berlin Conference, whose convention provides also that throughout the family of nations made into a copyright world-league, the formality necessary in the country of origin shall protect an author throughout all the other countries. Russia, Austro-Hungary, and the United States are now the only people out in the cold. / With best wishes of the season, ... [MTP].

Joe Twichell wrote to accept Sam's invitation to come for a day's visit, and he, accepted it instantly and unconditionally. We want much to see the house, but a great deal more to see you. We wish we might come right off. We can't, however, till after the holidays. ...There are lots of things I am eager to know your views upon—Roosevelt for one—as he is figuring now-a-days. I like him better than ever [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

December 17 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent a telegram to daughter Jean in Berlin, Germany.

[typed on form of Western Union Telegraph Company:]

Dec. 17, 1908.

TO Jean Clemens

Vanderheydtstrasse one, Berlin

You sail January ninth steamer Pennsylvania passage prepaid. Send Marguerite home. Dont cable. / Father [MTP; Hill 214].

Hill writes of Jean being called home:

Why Jean was recalled from the only pleasant life she had known since the summer of 1905—to be sequestered at Unkeway Farm on Babylon, Long Island—why she was taken from the care of Professor von Reuvers, who appeared to be making successful efforts for her, and why she was suddenly separated from the teenage girl Marguerite Schmidt who was her closest friend remain mysteries. Nowhere in the extant documents or correspondence does Clemens mention a decision to bring Jean home after three months in Berlin rather than the six or eight that Dr. Peterson had recommended [214]. Note: see source for speculations.

Mrs. H.H. Hankins for Tuesday Study Club, Braymer, Mo. wrote to ask Sam to clear up a controversy there—was he born in Hannibal or Florida, Mo.? [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 21 MLH”

December 18 Friday – In N.Y.C. H.H. Rogers wrote to Sam.

Revered Doctor:

I knew you many years ago, before you got piety and the balance of your vices, and I suppose you may have a remembrance of me because of my distinction as an evangelist.

There is going to be a conference at Norfolk in the course or two or three weeks, to open up our religious work in Virginia and West Virginia. There will probably be a great many people there; but the more distinguished ones will be the Rev. Doctor Broughton, perhaps Deacon Coe and that budding bundle of hopefulness, Mr. Harry Rogers. In other words, they are going to open up the railroad by a few choice spirits, and if you would like to join the saintly party, perhaps we will include the Elder Benjamin. I don't suppose you really want to; but then it is my Christian duty to invite you. Do you think that you could endure the company of such choice people for a day or two, or long enough to make the trip? If so, formal invitation will be sent you, together with your railroad fares and the other perquisites that will follow. Dr. Rice may be included, although that is yet in doubt.

Now, to get down to worldly things:—I have to say that Mrs. Benjamin has quite fully recovered from her illness and we are breathing freely again. Mrs. Rogers is fairly well, as are all the others of the flock. Why don't you come down and make us a visit? We have had that promise for a long time. Mrs. Rogers is inclined to fit up a hen house for you at Fairhaven because you are getting so secluded. I think I have said about all I want to say at the present time, and so will hope to meet you face to face in the near future, when we will either discuss this case or fight it out.

I was sorry to have missed our beloved Betsy when she called about ten days ago; but I heard that she had been in your company for three or four days, and while that was to be regretted, I was glad to know that she had the opportunity of exercising her moral influence on your saintly home. Goodbye! / Yours truly / H H Rogers [MTHHR 656-7]. Note: Betsy was Elizabeth Wallace.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Gabrilowitsch is here. Such a rich personality the man has. He has a fortnight holiday & must spend it somewhere in studying, & perhaps will stay here. Benar, who daily grows or shows that he is a man flower arrived by the 2 o'clock train with beautiful enlargements of the photos I made of Betsy. After dinner Gabrilowitsch & I walked 3 times around the circle in the snow. He in the King's galoshes & I in pair of the King's old white trousers tucked into my rubber boots [MTP: IVL TS 83].

Charles A. Ellicock for the Young Men's Mark Twain Club, Cleveland Ohio wrote to ask for his autographed photo [MTP].

Funk & Wagnalls wrote to Sam, sending him a copy of The Palace of Danger; A Story of Pompadour (1908) by Mabel Wagnalls. The letter mentions "the inscription which we have written under your name in the book" and requests "a word of commendation, with your permission to use it in public" [MTP; Gribben 730].

Seymour H. Ransom wrote from Ransomville, NY to invite Sam to speak at the annual picnic of the Niagara County Pioneer's Assoc [MTP]. Note: "Ans Dec 23 MLH"

E.B. Schaeffer wrote from Middletown, PA to wish Sam birthday greetings "a little late." He sent a puzzle on paper (not in file) which, when solved, would spell out Samuel Clemens [MTP].

December 19 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Dec. 18 from H.H. Rogers.

Dear Admiral:

That trip would just suit me, & I should ever so much like to make it with a real holy crowd such as you have mentioned, but as the doctor has vetoed all projected trips of any considerable size since I was knocked out for several days by something akin to a sunstroke acquired by heat & over-fatigue at Sam Moffett's funeral last August, he will say no again, now, sure. But I am myself aware that I couldn't stand it. I am as brisk & active a young thing as there is in my country—on a brief strain; but it has to be pretty brief. My flying trip to New York a week or two ago, [est. Dec. 12] with its unaccustomed industries, live interests, & activities, kept me tired out & played out for several days afterward. My health is so fine, so perfect, so splendid that it stands every test & holds its own against every assault except over-fatigue. You will have a grand time down at Norfolk. And you will deserve it, too. You have carried that giant enterprise through as patiently & quietly & unostentatiously as a geologic period overlays a continent with a new crust—well, it's just great! That majestic environment is the triumph of your life, & will be & remain your eulogy & your monument in the far by-&-bye.

I hope Mrs. Rogers will soon get well, so that you & she can come up here. It is always peaceful here, always still, always restful; & in all these 6 months there has never been any weather that couldn't take the chrome in an international weather-show. Can't you come in January or February? I hope so.

Betsy & we had a good time here. She is coming by & by to stay a month, in the spring or the summer.

Mr. Benjamin has my heartiest congratulations; & so have you all.

Get nearer to God. It is the best investment there is. Tell Rice, too [MTHHR 657-8].

About this day Sam inscribed a copy of TS to Charles T. Werner: "Merry Christmas / to / Charles T. Werner / from / The Author / 1908." [MTP].

Note: Werner dated this as Dec. 19, and wrote, "this book ... given to me in appreciation of my time & services as one of the incorporators of the Mark Twain, Inc. Mr. Ashcroft, the attorney introduced me at the time. Chas T. Werner, Dec. 19th." Above this is written: "John B. Werner 951 Prospect Pl."

An unknown photographer (Lyon? Or William Ireland Starr?) took a picture of Sam looking out a window; he enclosed it with a note to Charles C. Clarke on Dec. 22. Coincidentally, the photographer Alvin Langdon Coburn visited Stormfield Dec. 21-22, but on the Dec. 22 Sam wrote that this one was taken “last Saturday.” See Dec. 22 entry.

Isabel Lyon attended the second quarterly meeting of the Mark Twain Library Association She was third vice-president; five members present [MT Library minutes, copied by Tenney Nov. 15, 1981].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: English men. / Library Executive Meeting, but first Benar & I drove down to the lot that Mr. Theodore Adams is going to give for a building site for the library. It made me ill in my soul to see the men pacing off double the quantity of land needed & to see Mr. Adams’s expression of distress when he saw them devouring the land with mighty strides. I wanted to savagely cut the land down from 150 to 75 feet & I did cut it down. Mrs. Paine said they’d like half the lot. That would have meant an acre.

The snow is beautiful & this morning Gabrilowitsch & I shoveled a path down to the pergola for the King. Tonight just after I got into bed at 9:30, Mr. Robert Collier telephoned to say that he is going to send a baby elephant, a real elephant up for the King’s Christmas [MTP: IVL TS 84].

Mark Sullivan in his 1938 memoirs, recorded more about the baby elephant episode:

Instantly Collier took for himself a role of deeply moved gravity, which assumed that the loneliness of Mark Twain was the most serious matter in the contemporary world. It must be remedied at once, in whatever way possible. To Mark he said there was one thing that could be done promptly. “You ought to have a friendly animal in the house. It would be company for you in the long winter evenings—something you could talk to, but that won’t talk to you. Not a dog, a dog wouldn’t be it. It must be the most intelligent animal in the world. Ah, I know—I’ll get you a baby elephant. It’ll be a Christmas present to you. I’ll fix it all up; it won’t be any trouble at all.

The sweep of Collier’s enthusiasm was such that Mark felt obliged to seem appreciative. Later, to Hapgood and Dunne, he expressed, profanely, his dismay: “I can’t have a damn baby elephant up there. The thing would grow up. The ceilings of the house are too low. You fellows have got to head Collier off.” But Dunne and Hapgood told Mark they could not head Collier off. “You know how he is when he gets going; there’s nothing we can do about it; you’ll just have to take the elephant, for a while anyhow.”

Collier busied himself with details. To Stormfield he sent a load of hay, with a letter to Mark saying the hay would last awhile and he would see it was renewed. He was, he told Mark, making further inquiry about the diet of young elephants and about their ways. It might be necessary to have a man to take care of the animal. But Collier would look after that too—everything would be arranged, Mark need not give it a thought.

At the office Collier twinkled into my room. We must pretend to send Mark a mahout—the very sound of the word delighted him. He called Mark on the telephone and told him the mahout would arrive a day or so before Christmas. For the role of mahout Collier considered one of the printers, whose stout figure would carry well the drapery of an oriental costume, and whose ruddy countenance would look impressive beneath a turban. We must get some books about elephants and their keepers, so that our mahout could instruct himself in the technical talk of that calling, and be able to convince Mark of his authenticity.

Presently Collier sent the mahout. And he sent the elephant. It arrived at Stormfield on Christmas morning. It would not, however, inconvenience Mark by growing up. It was of cotton [The Education of An American 232-3]

December 20 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam began a letter to Margaret Blackmer that he finished on Dec. 21. The Dec. 20 segment:

You dear Margaret I clear forgot to show you the enclosed letter from a most charming human being, chaplain of a battleship whereon Miss Lyon & I spent a jovial day in Bermudan waters. I was going to ask you to let me send your love along with mine to his “dear girl friends” in England; & so I ask you now—but only as a formality, because I have already done it.

He wrote Miss Lyon too, still she wants this letter also, & I am glad, because in returning it you will have to send me a line & tell me what your idea is of what you owe me. I think it’s 14.

An hour after we got back to the house Mr. Starr telephoned to say all his photographs (the colored ones) had come to nothing in the developing except one, & he was wildly delighted over that one, because it was letter-perfect. It was the one with you beside me. That makes me very well satisfied indeed.

It was lovely of your mother to come to us when she had so little time, & we thank her for it ever so much. Tell her that both you & she will need a whole week here to brace up in after tropical Bermuda, & I hope she will cut a week out of the month’s vacation & give it to us.

I think it’s 14. I am not perfectly sure; it may be 15.

Remember me with warm regards to your mother—and tell her what I’ve been saying.

We have had cards & billiards, & now I’ve gone to bed. I miss you, dear; I wish you were back. I send you my love. / SLC / P.S. No, I remember now. It’s 16 [MTP]. Note: William Ireland Starr, photographer, had visited Sam and taken several color pictures using the new Autochrome method. No color print of the one good picture has been found [Bancroftiana, No. 120, Spring 2002 online]. The following day another photographer would arrive and take more colored photographs. See entry.

Lucia Gale Barber wrote from Boston to ask Sam to take the time to answer the enclosed Syllabus, a printed handbill with 14 questions about dancing. Clark University [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 24 MLH”

Grace Stuart Orcutt wrote from Woodsville, N.H. to appreciate his works and holiday wishes [MTP].

December 20-24 Thursday – During this period Sam wrote a postcard, bearing on one side a picture of himself with Isabel Lyon and Ralph Ashcroft, to Margery H. Clinton: “Affectionate Xmas greetings to the Official Plumber! / SLC / 1908.” [MTP].

Probably during this same period Sam sent the same postcard to Laura H. Frazer and Clara Frazer. He wrote: “Showing off. / The cup is beautiful, Laura, and I thank you for it. Happy new year to you and Miss Clara.” [MTP: Hannibal Mo. Evening Courier-Post, Mar. 6, 1935, p.3c]. Note: Clara Frazer was Laura’s granddaughter.

Sam also sent the same postcard to Dorothy Quick, writing “Merry Xmas to Dorothy!” [MTP].

December 21 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam added to his Dec. 20 to Margaret Blackmer.

Next morning. 8 a.m. Before breakfast.

I have been downstairs on a flying trip, & what do you think? I found Danbury sitting on the billiard-table looking up at your picture & crying; the tears running down his cheeks—oh, ever so pitiful to see. It was because he scratched your hands; & now he was sorry when it was too late [MTP].

Professor Archibald Henderson (1877-1963) and photographer Alvin Langdon Coburn (1882-1966) arrived at Stormfield. See Sam’s new guestbook below:

Isabel Lyon's journal: Such rich, darling folks do come here to see the King. Today Prof. Archibald Henderson & Alvin Langdon Coburn came. Benares went out to the station to meet them & we had a charming day with plenty of talk & Hearts & a walk down to my house. Coburn was very enthusiastic about it, & said he was absorbing ideas to be used in the reconstruction of a tiny house that he has taken just outside of London. Its an old, old little house in the William Morris Country & he has rented it for 5 years or else he would come here to find a lodging. He made a lot of photographs, color prints too, of the King, and he got some plain ones of me. After dinner he showed us a few of the very wonderful photographs he has made of Bernard Shaw, George Meredith, George Moore, Yates—oh, a wonderful Yeates [W.B. Yeates], May Sinclair, Chesterton, Henry James, Rodin & others, & a fine one too of Prof. Henderson. The more you see of Henderson, the more Keats like & beautiful he is. After dinner we went to the music room at 9:30. Gabrilowitsch played to us for an hour. He is a darling musician & it is so good to have him in the house [MTP: IVL TS 84-85]. Note: Lyon was also an avid amateur photographer. Henderson this year became a professor of pure mathematics at the University of N. Carolina.

The New York Times, Dec. 21, p.1, reported on a rescue from injury or death for Clara Clemens:

SAVES MISS CLARA CLEMENS.

O. Gabrilowitsch Stops Runaway Horse About to Plunge Down a Bank.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Dec. 20.—Miss Clara Clemens, daughter of Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain) was saved from serious injury and possible death this morning through the action of Ossip Gabrilowitsch, a Russian pianist, who is a guest at Innocent at Home, the residence of Mark Twain. M. Gabrilowitsch, who is making a tour of America, and Miss Clemens went for a sleigh ride this morning, leaving the Twain residence at 10 o'clock.

While passing through Redding Glen, about three miles from Miss Clemens's home, the horse took fright at a wind whipped newspaper and bolted. Mr. Gabrilowitsch, who was driving, lost control of the horse. At the top of a hill the sleigh overturned, and Miss Clemens was thrown out. At the right of the summit of the hill is a drop of fifty feet.

When the sleigh turned over the Russian leaped to the ground, and caught the horse by the head, stopping it as it was about to plunge over the bank, dragging Miss Clemens, whose dress had caught in the runner. In leaping to rescue Miss Clemens he sprained his right ankle. Miss Clemens was picked up uninjured, but suffered greatly from the shock of the accident. The injury to the pianist's ankle was painful, but he helped Miss Clemens into the sleigh, and drove her to her home.

December 21-22? Tuesday – Sam receipted Archibald Henderson $2 on the library notice [MTP].

December 22 Tuesday – Mansfield Hobbs, an attorney friend of Ralph W. Ashcroft filed incorporation papers for the Mark Twain Company, with $5,000 in capital stock. Clemens, Ashcroft, and Isabel Lyon were the original officers. Sam signed a document assigning and transferring all of his literary rights to the new corporation. Later, Ashcroft mentioned that Jervis Langdon II, Edward Eugene Loomis, and Zoheth Freeman were directors [Hill 212].

In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Richard R. Bowker.

Dear Mr. Bowker: / I am somewhat acquainted with the best of the 4 bills you mention. It is a good one, but is too complete & cannot be passed without great difficulty. Its features ought to be striven for, one at a time. My bill will not interfere with it. On the contrary it will help toward the achievement, later, of the only valuable feature of any of the 4: extension.

As for international copyright, a long term for it is not really worth working for; it has no importance. However, one may say that of domestic copyright-extension too, I suppose—or nearly that, commercially speaking. Honesty is involved in both cases, but no money in either.

I thank you for the book, & the fine large work.

With Xmas best wishes / Truly Yours

Push the other bills. I expect to postpone my efforts until next session of Congress [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Charles C. Clarke.

Dear Mr. Clarke:

I shall value that ancient picture, & I thank you ever so much for letting me have it.

Sincerely yours,

Mark Twain.

[enclosure, a photograph of SLC looking out of a window, inscribed as follows:]

The New York Times, p. 2, reported on a major business shift for Mark Twain:

MARK TWAIN TURN INTO A CORPORATION

The Pen Name Is Incorporated to Save Daughters from Literary Pirates.

FAMILY HOLDS THE STOCK

With the Expiration of His Copyrights the New Company Will Control All His Works.

For the purpose of allowing his two daughters Clara L. and Jean L. Clemens, to receive the financial benefits of his works for the greatest possible length of time, Samuel L. Clemens, America's greatest humorist and man of letters, has incorporated his pen name of Mark Twain.

The plan had been under discussion by Mr. Clemens, Ralph W. Ashcroft, his literary agent, and R. A. Mansfield Hobbs, his legal adviser, for more than a year. So greatly interested has Mr. Clemens become in the idea and so anxious has he become to keep the financial benefit of his long and arduous life's work within his own family instead of allowing it to be filched away by strangers, that Mr. Ashcroft has spent every week-end with him at Redding, Conn., where the Clemens family have been living since last June.

As a result of these consultations it was decided that the surest way to keep the earnings of Mr. Clemens's books continually in the family, even after the copyright on the books themselves expires, was to incorporate the "Mark Twain" name itself.

The Mark Twain Company of New York has accordingly been formed, the purpose of which is to secure to the author and to his family all rights in the nom de plume. Mr. Clemens himself is President of the company, Mr. Ashcroft Secretary and Treasurer, Mr. Clemens's two daughters and his secretary, Miss Isabelle V. Lyon, are the Directors. Mr. Hobbs, the attorney, forwarded the articles of incorporation to the Secretary of State on Monday, and they were formally placed on file yesterday.

The Mark Twain Company is capitalized for the nominal sum of $5,000. All the stock is held in Mr. Clemens's own name at present, but it is understood that at his death the shares will be divided equally between the two Misses Clemens, his sole heirs.

Mr. Clemens could not be reached at Redding last night. Ralph W. Ashcroft, at his home in Brooklyn, gave this explanation of the incorporation:

"The knowledge that the copyright of his works would soon expire and that strangers instead of his own kin would reap the financial benefit from his literary works has troubled Mr. Clemens for a year. He has been in consultation with Mr. Hobbs and myself practically every week. We finally hit on the plan of incorporating the Mark Twain name itself. We believe that when this name is the property of a perpetual corporation Mr. Clemens's heirs will be in a position to enjoin perpetually the publication of all of the Mark Twain books not authorized by the Mark Twain Company, even after the twenty-year first copyright and ten-year secondary copyright have expired."

Mr. Ashcroft was not prepared to say at present whether the incorporation of the Mark Twain name would prevent any publisher, after the expiration of copyrights on the books from printing the books under the name of Samuel L. Clemens. He said that this was a matter for the courts to decide, and that the incorporation of the Mark Twain name at least put Mr. Clemens's daughter in a position in which they could make a legal fight for their rights.

Gilbert Ray Hawes, the lawyer who defended Frau Wagner's copyright to "Parsival" five years ago, was one of a number of copyright specialists who expressed interest in Mr. Clemens's plan. Mr. Hawes pointed out a method by means of which, he said, he believed that the Misses Clemens could keep all unauthorized publishers from ever publishing their father's works, even if the unauthorized editions were put out under the name of Samuel L. Clemens.

“If, after the copyrights on Mr. Clemens’s works expire, a perpetual title is held to the name Mark Twain, and if the life of the original copyrights of the works has been expanded by the addition of new chapters or new material, I believe that Mr. Clemens’s heirs could enjoin the publication by other publishers of the original works even if these works were published under the name of Samuel L. Clemens,” said Mr. Hawes.

“The Misses Clemens could assert that the reprint of the original unamended works under a different name to that under which they were originally published was not the publication of the genuine book, and that it was interfering with the publication of the genuine book. An injunction, at least, could be issued on these grounds.

“Mr. Clemens has already announced that he intends to extend the length of his copyrights by the addition of chapters from time to time.”

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Such a beautiful full day with the dear distraction of having Benares near me to help. At 7:30 the man came to change the pool table into a billiard table. Benar locked him into the billiard room, & we told the King that Steve Burr was working on the windows, & we kept him in his bed all day, because we couldn’t let him go into the loggia which we are decorating. And every room smelt of Christmas & of a sweet suppressed excitement. At 3:30 just as I was away up on top of a step ladder on top of a table tying a Christmas bell to the gas nub, the elephant trainer arrived and said the little creature was on its way, that it was about as big as a cow, that the garage must be warmed—heated—that it must have half a bale of hay a day, & breed, & carrots, that it can’t come into the house[,] that there is a ton of hay out at the station, & my distress was genuine, for I know the wave of feeling that will rush over the King at having a wild creature in captivity. However! With a Christmas trumpeting CC & Gabrilowitsch arrived & after dinner we went out into the loggia to trim the Christmas tree. The place was lit up with candles & was beautiful. All day we kept the King in bed until 4 o’clock, when we let him come down to the billiard room. Over the billiard table hung a big card, made by Benares on the sides were printed

Greetings from Sheba
The Chatelaine
Zoe and
The Bearded lady

pockets.
I wish

The King read the cards and chuckled, but didn’t notice the table. Finally said, “What’s the matter with the table?” & then his seeing eye came to him & he choked up & said it was a beautiful surprise. We took him out to the loggia, and he loved the great masses of green, & the colors of the rugs & the evergreen trees in the corners [MTP: IVL TS 86-87].

December 25 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Dorothy Butes.

“Consider well the proportions of things: it is better to be a young june bug than an old bird of paradise. Truly yours, Mark Twain. P.S. You owe me a visit Dorothy dear. Come—pay up & save your character! / S. L. C. Dec. 25, 1908” [MTP: David J. Holmes Autographs catalogs, No. 38, Item 267].

Sam also wrote a card to William Robertson Coe: “Xmas Day/08 / Dear Mr. Coe. I have been smoking your health in your noble cigars...wish you...were here...” [MTP: Sotheby Parke-Bernet catalogs, Apr. 30, 1975, No. 3748, Item 296].

Sam also sent the same postcard with a photo of himself, Ashcroft, and Lyon to Harriet W. Enders in Hartford, Conn., adding, “Dear Mrs. Hattie: / It was lovely of you & the crimes to remember me with that sumptuous muffler & the portraits. The pictured creatures are so beautiful that I concede—by compulsion—that the crimes are almost justified” [MTP].

Sam also sent the same postcard with a photo of himself, Ashcroft, and Lyon to Harriet E. Whitmore in Hartford, Conn. “Dear Mrs. Whitmore: / I thank you ever so much for that nice book & the remembrance it betokens. I am wishing you—& all of you—a happy Xmas, & my love added” [MTP].

Sam inscribed his 1908 two-volume copy of Letters of Mrs. James G. Blaine, Ed. by Harriet S. Blaine Beale (1828-1903): “SL Clemens/ Xmas, 1908/ from Clara” [Gribben 74].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: Such a beautiful Christmas the King has made for us by his being satisfied with all that Benar & I have done to make the house & the loggia lovely.

The elephant was all a joke of that beloved Robert Collier, made completer by the ton of hay & the make believe trainer. A toy elephant came this morning, but even when Benar & I unpacked it in the back hall, & he saw through it all, I didn’t, & flew on the telephone to talk to Mr. Lounsbury about it.

The tumultuous servants are at it again. Now Elizabeth is jealous because Harry & his wife had a basket of fruit & stuff sent them [MTP: IVL TS 87].

William Emerson wrote from Wash DC to ask Sam where he might find a story of his about “2 aunts a mother and a little girl who told a lie” [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 30 MLH”; and “Dec. 1903 Harpers Mag”

Elizabeth Wallace inscribed a copy of Aspects of the Earth: A Popular Account of Some Familiar Geological Phenomena (1904) by Nathaniel Southgate Shaler (1841-1906): “presented to SLC by Betsy Wallace, 25 December 1908” [MTP; Gribben 636]. Note: see Dec. 29 and Gribben for several of Clemens’ marginalia on various pages of this book.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

December 26 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent the same postcard with a photo of himself, Ashcroft, and Lyon to Dorothy Sturgis, this time adding supposed dialog between those photographed:

Miss L. If you could only repent!

C. I can’t. And I won’t.

Benares. Try. Do try.

C. I won’t. I feel ready to cry because I didn’t do it some more.

Dear Annianlouise:

All the 12 were heard from

yesterday except for you & one other. The missing pair are heard from to-day, & the tale is complete & I am glad.

That is a perfectly lovely work of art—and done with your own deft hands I make sure—the same that wrought the note to the burglars, which Mrs. Doubleday is using as an illustration, in color, in her article descriptive of “Stormfield.”

The happiest of happy New Year’s to you! / With the love of / The Major [MTP].

Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Philip Nichols Sunderland.

Dear Mr. Sunderland: / But you DID pay in that dollar & more too, when you got all those post cards for Mr. Clemens & we got even with you that way. But Mr. Clemens thanks you very very much, & I as the holder of that building fund do so also; & also I thank Mr. Sunderland sr. very much for his continual generosity. / Very Sincerely Yours ... [MTP: Redding Times June 19, 1958, p.6]. Note: The Sunderlands of Danbury, Conn. were builders for at least three generations, and were involved in the building of Stormfield—Philip and his father William Webb Sunderland. Philip Sunderland recollected meeting Twain in NYC and Twain’s house at Stormfield:

“The first time I ever saw Mr. Clemens, was in the house on Eighth in New York, when I went there with John Mead Howells, the architect, to get the contract signed. The house was designed by that time, the plans were all ready, but the site had not been selected. Mr. Howells came out a little later and approved it. Mr. Clemens I did not see again until the day he moved in. He never saw the site, or the house while it was being built; all he did was sign the contract. His first sight of the entire project was the finished place, painted, furnished and ready for occupancy right down to the cat purring on the hearth.”

Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. Harry Rogers) gave Sam a new guestbook, in which she inscribed: “Dear Uncle Mark – / from his most affectionate niece / Mary Rogers.” Under this inscription, Sam wrote: “Mary, you are just a dear! This is the opinion of your oldest & best uncle— / Mark. / Dec. 26, 1908” [Note: entries from Sam’s first arrival at Stormfield (June 18, 1908) were then copied into the new guestbook, either from an older version or from memory.]

Sam’s new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Ethel Newcomb		“ [Dec.] 26-28	[& IVL TS 87]
The Maharajah	[]	[]	[*]

* Note: Sam wrote over all three right columns: “(this being the celebrated elephant that Robert Collier sent here for a Christmas present & frightened everybody to death until the creature turned out to be stuffed.) God will punish Robert Collier. I know it.” The stuffed elephant may be seen in the MTJ Spring/Fall 2006 issue by Kevin Mac Donnell, p. 40, next to the Christmas tree. It appears to be about two to three feet high and had wheels on its feet.

Adelia Ellison wrote from Plymouth, Ind. to Sam after reading RI. Was the name William Blodget in that book fictitious? She had searched for years for her son by that name [MTP]

Thomas W. Gilmer wrote to ask Sam who the “other literary light” he spoke with at the Congregational Church in Washington on Nov. 25, 1884 (Gilmer had a diary) [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 29 MLH”; IVL: “Geo. W. Cable”

Orison Swett Marden for Success Magazine NYC wrote to Sam, enclosing a proof of the Jan. number, entitled, “Growing Old a Habit,” which he felt would especially interest Clemens [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 29 MLH”; IVL: “Many thanks for sending article & for your pleasant message”

Kay A. Russell wrote from Chicago to Sam. She was writing a paper on Mark Twain and asked for “any new material” [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 30 MLH”; IVL: “Would like to be able to”

December 26? Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to the Red Cross Christmas Stamp Committee.

Ladies—In paying new year bills, & also in postponing them, I will stick on a Red Cross stamp. If you will suggest in print that the whole country do the same, the Red Cross will prosper to your content. I know this, for I know that all America is warm at the heart & generous at this time of year, & will thank you for your suggestion & follow it. / Respectfully yours, / Mark Twain [MTP: NY World, Dec. 28, 1908, p.6].

December 27 Sunday – Sam’s new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Billie Burke [signed]	Yonkers	Dec. 27 & 28, 1908	Lyceum Theatre

Note: Sam wrote across all four columns under Burke's signature entry:

Billie Burke, the young, the gifted, the beautiful, the charming, was the last guest to cross this threshold in 1908, thus she has a page to herself. By foresight, or by happy inspiration, the mat (in the text above), says, for her, "I cleanse thy shoes of travel's weary dust." The metaphor is correct. The magic of her personality clears the spirit of such as come within its influence, of nagging wearinesses & depressions. Her name is a pleasant one to close a pleasant year with.

Isabel Lyon's journal: Benar & I had such a gay little walk down to the Snugery together this afternoon. Around through the rooms of that blessed house we wandered & then sat down to talk of the King & of ourselves & the joy we find in living with him & in loving him. Billie Burke arrived this afternoon in her motor car. Sweet pretty charming creature that she is. We had a very late dinner. At 9 we sat down [MTP: IVL TS 88].

Margery H. Clinton wrote to thank Sam for the photo he sent as a Christmas card. Best wishes for 1909 [MTP].

Marion von Kendler wrote to Sam on a Jubilee picture postcard picturing various Habsburg rulers from Vienna, Austria, wishing him happy new year [MTP].

December 28 Monday – In Redding, Sam wrote a postcard to Ragnvald Blix in Munich, Germany.

Honored Herr Blix: / That very welcome book arrived last night, & your equally welcome letter followed it this morning. In reply I wish to say that your version of the Mona Lisa is my never-ending delight, & if I can have the original of it I shall treasure it above rubies, & shall be and remain / Your grateful servant / Mark Twain [MTP; New York Times, Dec. 28, p.3 "Mark Twain to Red Cross"]. Note: Blix sent the book of prints (Le Voile Tombe: Caricatures par Blix. 1908) mimicking the old masters, and letter on Dec. 8 [Gribben 75].

Isabel Lyon's journal: "This morning Benar went away to not come back again until after his voyage to England. The King has given him ... & appreciative letters to Lord Northcliffe & to Sir Thomas Lipton & Benar goes well equipped with his own darling personality" [MTP: IVL TS 88].

Clemens wrote to the New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad, requesting forwarding of baggage for Redding on the 3:32 p.m. train out of New York. Letter not extant but referred to in the railroad's reply of Dec. 29 and also in their reply of Jan. 5, 1909.

J.G. Becht for the Clarion (PA) State Normal School wrote to ask Sam to "write for us a brief New Year's greeting" for their school magazine [MTP]. Note: "Ans Jan 4 MLH"

Zoheth S. Freeman for Liberty National Bank wrote to Sam that as per his instructions they'd "obtained an additional letter of credit for 1000 Marks in favor of Miss Jean L. Clemens" [MTP]. Note: Jean was in Germany under a doctor's care.

H.C. Lucas who was "arranging a symposium," wrote from Prairie City, Ill. to ask Sam's input on "What is the greatest question in the world?" [MTP]. Note: "Ans Dec 30 MLH"

William Farquhar Payson (1876-1939) sent a copy of his book, Barry Gordon (1908) to Twain, inscribing it: “To Saml. L. Clemens, Esq. Dear Mr. Clemens: May I inscribe this copy of my latest novel to you with glowing recollections of the dinner on your seventieth birthday. As Huck Finn, Tom Sawyer, and the rest have been my intimate friends for over twenty years, perhaps you will grant at least a bowing acquaintance to my black sheep—Barry Gordon. With all esteem, Yours very sincerely, William Farquhar Payson, December 28th, 1908, Kingsthorpe, Bristol, R.I.” [Gribben 537; MTP].

Dr. Edward Skiddy Quintard and Estelle H. Quintard (Mrs. Edward Quintard) wrote from NYC with New Year wishes to Sam [MTP].

The Silk Association of America per Franklin Allen sent a typed letter to again urge Sam to attend their annual banquet [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 29 MLH”; and IVL: “Regret very much”

Robert R. Wiseman wrote from New Haven to offer miniatures of his etchings. Wiseman recalled with pleasure of showing Clemens his work when he lived in Hartford, though he mused that he did not take away any of Sam’s money then [MTP]. Note: “Ans Dec 30 MLH”; and IVL: “many thanks for offer, but Mr. Clemens unfortunately has no room now for the many pictures he already owns”

December 29 Tuesday – Sam wrote in the new Guestbook before transferring names and information from the old guestbook:

STORMFIELD GUESTBOOK

I bought this farm of 200 acres three years ago, at the suggestion of Albert Bigelow Paine, who said its situation and surroundings would content me, a prophecy which came true 2 years later, when I arrived on the ground. John Howells, architect, & Clara Clemens & Miss Lyon planned this house without help or advice from me, & began to build it in June 1907. When I arrived a year later ... it was all finished & furnished & swept & garnished, & was a home, cosy and comfortable as if it had been occupied a generation. This was on the 18th of June of the present year (1908.) I only came to spend the summer, but I shan’t go away any more.

We installed a guest-book June 27th & used it until four days ago, when this new & more satisfactory one arrived from the hand of my niece Mary Rogers & put it out of commission. I have transferred the names from that one to this one. The autographing of signatures will now be resumed. Has been resumed, I should say: that charming Billie Burke was the first guest to arrive after the coming of the book, & she inaugurated the resuming. Her signature heads them. / S.L. Clemens / Dec. 29, 1908.

Note: On the first signatory page, Clemens went back and, in his own hand, listed the visitors of the preceding six months, beginning with himself on June 18, 1908. The original guestbook was “installed” on June 27, 1908 and used until Mary B. Rogers gave Sam the new book for Christmas, 1908.

In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally in Atlanta.

Go it, dear! Go to all the dances & teas & luncheons, & all the other wholesome dissipations that offer—they are the due of your youth. I used to do like that, myself, in the early part of last century.

Benares sails for England to-day, on some business of mine. We shall miss him.

Billie Burke spent last Sunday & part of Monday here, & was her charmingest self. We’ve had lots of delightful company lately, & lots more are coming. But not you, you rascal!—& it’s a pity, I think.

Margaret, M. A. has been here, with her mother. They are in Bermuda now.

“Stormfield?” I made the change lately. That’s its public name; the other is its official name, for my fishes; & is restricted to the Aquarium.

You are a Democrat, perhaps. No matter; when the President-elect comes you must shake hands with him for me, & give him my very best wishes. I am a Mugwump (the only one left, perhaps), but I like him ever so much & am glad he was elected, for he will make a good President. He lets on to like me, & I think he does.

Don't you fail to write me a line when you get back to school. Try & remember that.
Good bye, dear. Have a good time. / Affectionately ... [MTP].

Sam wrote a note on p. 69 of Aspects of the Earth, etc. by Nathaniel Southgate Shaler, a gift from Elizabeth Wallace: "Dec. 29, 1908. I was reading these volcanic pages in bed when the morning paper brought this account of Aetna's yesterday performances." Note: see Dec. 31, Gribben.

Isabel Lyon's journal: There has been a great earth quake in Italy again & when we go to read the paper about it, we find that the King has cut out that article quite regardless of anyone. Gabrilowitsch & I walked down to the gorge in the early moonlight. I wear a pair of the King's white trousers & rubber boots, & find it very good going [MTP: IVL TS 88].

Milk Commission of the Allegheny County Medical Society per Ogden Edwards wrote to ask Sam for a subscription donation [MTP]. Note: "Ans Jan 4 MLH"

Willard G. Day wrote from Baltimore to ask Sam to "give a reading or lecture in Baltimore sometime in the near future" [MTP]. Note: "Ans Jan 4 MLH"

E.T. Elcock for the NY Evening Post wrote to Sam, replying to Lyon's letter that he wished the New York Evening Post discontinued and the Nation sent [MTP]. Note: "Ans Dec 30 MLH"; and IVL: "In as much as it's only the Editorials that I want, it not a matter of any consequence whether it comes the evening before or the week after but it's really the Nation that I want, so that I can let it lie on my pillow & read it when I get ready."

Marguerite L. Glentworth for Woman's Press Club of NYC wrote to ask Sam to speak to their Press Day on Jan. 30 [MTP]. Note: "Ans Dec 30 MLH"; IVL: "Would like to be able to accept the invitation thanks for it"

Thomas Commerford Martin for Electrical World wrote to Lyon (though catalogued as to Clemens) [MTP].

Bismark Moore wrote from NYC to Sam touting their Platinum Co. as an investment [MTP]. Note: "Ans Dec 30 MLH"; IVL: "Many thanks for offer, but all he has made all investments that it is possible to make"

New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad per A.B. Smith wrote to Sam that he rec'd his of Dec. 28 in regard to the forwarding of baggage for Redding on the 3:32 p.m. train out of NY. He would investigate [MTP].

Paul Thompson for the Article Syndicate, NYC wrote to Lyon (though catalogued as to Clemens) [MTP].

Barbara West wrote from St. Louis to Sam, enclosing a poem she'd sent to five publishers who'd rejected it. What was his opinion? [MTP].

December 30 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Elizabeth Alexander Alexander (Mrs. John White Alexander).

Dear Mrs. Alexander: / Good! Ever since I first examined Harvey's portrait at Deal Beach, I have said I did not want to be painted by anybody but John Alexander. By & by your rush will calm down; then you & he must come up here for two or three weeks, & fetch the paint. You can come in your 'mobile if you prefer: Billie Burke did it quite comfortably last Sunday.

Clara is away, but will get your kind message when she returns tomorrow.

"Affectionately?" Yes indeed. It is the way I feel, myself.

Happy New Year to all your flock! / Affectionately ... [MTP]. Note: John White Alexander (1856-1915), artist and one-time illustrator for Harper's Weekly. See Aug. 10, 1888 entry. An interesting note is that John was introduced to his wife because they had the same surname.

Sam also wrote to Frederick A. Duneka.

“Dear Duneka: / I am perfectly willing, & so will Dan Frohman be, I think, if Father Synnott will write & ask him. My authorization without Dan’s would not be sufficient. His authority dates away back—all of 20 years, I guess. / Happy New Year to all of you! / Ever yours” [MTP].

In his copy of The Memoirs of the Duke of Saint-Simon on the Reign of Louis XIV, and the Regency (1880) by Louis de Rouvroy Saint-Simon, Clemens dated a note in black ink on page 9 as written on this date; he referred to Nathaniel Shaler’s Aspects of the Earth [Gribben 600].

Isabel Lyon’s journal: The last little telephone message came from Benar this morning at 8:15 where he was finishing his breakfast in his apartment & Fred Robson was with him. Since then I have worked hard, but life has lost something vital, accentuated by a minor theme that Gabrilowitsch plays very much. Snow must be coming for the sky looks very big & very grey.

The King was in 40 different moods of profanity & rage & displeasure over the morning mail. Gabrilowitsch will stay & look after the King tomorrow while I go to town to see Dr. Peterson about Jean’s next housing. But I tell the King that Gabrilowitsch hearing such wondrous blasts of cursing will be afraid to stay. The King likes just such suggestions & blasted forth another volley of cursing. Oh, but he is lovable & naughty & good [MTP: IVL TS 88-89].

Harriet Bingham wrote from NYC to ask Sam to “dissect” her play for children [MTP].

Fidele A. Brooks wrote from NYC to wish Sam a happy new year, after writing pages reminiscing about Livy, her firstborn Langdon Clemens, and of their friendship years before [MTP].

Estelle T. Fox for Stores Publishing, NYC wrote to Sam. She needed $5,000 to start a woman’s magazine [MTP]. Note: “Ans Jan 4 MLH” ; IVL: “Unable to grant request”

Laura J. Post wrote from NYC to ask to use Clemens’ name on the committee to celebrate Marcella Sembrich’s retirement from the operatic stage. It would entail no responsibilities [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Answered Dec 30”; Sembrich retired from the stage Feb. 6, 1909.

Sybil Kane Walker (Mrs. Alexander Steward Walker) wrote from NYC to thank Sam “for the postal” and she “saw in the papers that” he had “a real live elephant for Christmas” [MTP].

December 31 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Gertrude Natkin in N.Y.C. “It is the last day of the year, Marjorie dear, & I hope the incoming one will bring you happiness & prosperity to your full content—with the like to follow as time moves on” [MTP].

Gribben offers details about newspaper clippings Sam saved:

“Clemens pinned a clipping from the 31 December 1908 issue of the New York Times (pp.3-4)— an article describing an earthquake in Messina, Italy—in the back of his copy of Nathaniel S. Shaler’s Aspects of the Earth (1904), a volume Clemens signed in 1908” [505].

R.A. Mansfield Hobbs wrote to Sam. "I received a short note from Mr. Ashcroft from the S.S. Lucania, sent back by the pilot, asking me to send you twelve copies of the New York American of December 30th. I sent two clippings of this editorial the other day to Miss Lyon" [MTP]. Note: "Ans Jan 4 MLH"

A.E. Morse wrote from South Paris, Maine to ask in what book of Sam's would he find a story with: "The male character represented Mr. Caruthers, who by continual unfortunate circumstances was unable to wed his betrothed" [MTP].

Mrs. W.J. Phillips wrote from Danbury, Conn. to ask Sam what an old coin he dug up was worth. He described it [MTP]. Note: "Ans Jan 5 MLH"

Philip Nichols Sunderland wrote to Lyon (though catalogued as to Clemens) [MTP]. Note: Financial statement from Russell & Erwin, Manufacturing Co. enclosed.

*“Is Shakespeare Dead?” – Stormfield $1 Tax – Clara vs. Isabel
 Lyon Breaks Down – Clara’s Affair – Carnegie Dinner – Ashcroft Weds Lyon
 “Lobster Pot” Boils – H.H.’s Railway – Who Fired Horace? – Lyon Sacked
 St. Timothy’s – Ashcroft-Lyon MS – H.H. Rogers Dies – Lost Footnote
 Twain Sues Mrs. Ashcroft – “Tobacco” Heart – Amicable Settlement
 Ossip Weds Clara – Jean Comes Home – Bermuda with Paine
 “Jean is a surprise & a wonder” – Jean dies: “I always envy the dead”*

In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to “His Excellency the Governor, & the Legislature.”

Sirs: We your petitioners, citizens, respectfully urge you to so amend the existing statute for the protection of the Christian Sunday as to either extend its safeguards, with even-handed justice, to the other Sabbaths, or withdraw them from the Christian Sabbath: this in accordance with the never-relinquished claim, now hallowed by three centuries of unchallenged acceptance & approval, that in our country religion is & ought to be free; & a condition which confesses that under our laws all statutory aid, support & favor granted to one religion must of right be either withdrawn or extended to the others. / Most respectfully

Dear Sir: I am sending this to every clergyman in Greater New York, in the hope that they will all be willing to sign the petition. / Mark Twain [MTP].

In a somewhat shaky hand, Sam inscribed a gift book from Col. A.G. Paine: The Navigator (1811), which contained directions for navigating various rivers, including the Mississippi [Donald Heald website Mar. 5, 2010].

Sometime in 1909 Irwin Wallace wrote to thank Clemens for his “word of praise” for Letters of a Japanese Schoolboy, which appeared serially in Collier’s starting in 1909. Wallace hoped a publisher would soon be putting the work out in book form [MTP].

Henry William Lucy included a section “Mark Twain” in his Sixty Years in the Wilderness: Some Passages by the Way (London 1909). Tenney: “Reminiscences of MT at a dinner in his honor at the Punch offices, and a scheme MT and Lucy had jokingly concocted to blackmail wealthy persons with scurrilous obituaries supposedly to be published on their death; also, two letters from MT to Lucy and an MT letter to the editor to be sent out to the newspapers, offering to pay a good price for ‘access to my standing obituaries, with the privilege...of editing, not their facts, but their verdicts’ (p. 226). Also, tells the story of MT at a dinner given in his honor by the American Ambassador, Whitelaw Reid; MT had prepared a speech, but was not called to give one, and later confided to Lucy that he had sold it for two hundred dollars (p. 228)” [47].

Elmer James Bailey wrote “The Essayist and the Humourists, in editor Theodore Stanton’s, A Manual of American Literature. Tenney: ‘pp. 321-59; on MT, pp. 357-59. Regrets that MT was burdened by his reputation as a humorist and predicts that ‘future critics may come to regard The Prince and the Pauper (1882) and Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc (1896), two serious and dignified pieces of writing, as Mr. Clemens’s best work.’ The Oxford degree awarded him, though a surprise to many, was evidence that ‘humor at last seems to be coming into its own’” [47].

Clark Sutherland Northrup wrote “The Novelists,” which appeared in editor Theodore Stanton’s A Manual of American Literature (NY 1909), on Twain p. 187-88. Tenney quotes: “Artistically defective his work is indeed, but it cannot be denied the qualities of eloquence, naturalness, and sincerity. The work, like the man, is genuine” [47].

Michael Monahan included a chapter “Saint Mark” in his book Palms of Papyrus, etc. (1909), p.65-72. Tenney: “With passing, respectful references to MT’s JA, this is primarily a discussion of Joan of Arc herself, who, ever since her martyrdom, has been the ‘glory of the faith and the shame of the Church’” [Tenney, ALR Second Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1978) 177].

Mary Jeune (Lady St. Helier) in her 1909 book, Memories of Fifty Years (London) included p. 319-20 on Mark Twain. Tenney: “Mary Jeune sat by MT at a dinner given by the New Vagabonds on his first visit to England. Mr. Grossmith took the chair, and many boys from St. Paul’s were present. He suggested they subordinate themselves to authority as a matter of expediency while young people ought to have independence in thought and conduct. Afterwards, the editor of the school magazine said he had taken down the lecture in shorthand and would like to publish it in the school magazine, which he did. MT later was Mary Jeune’s dinner guest, and Lord Goschen became a friend, and invited him to dinner” [MTJ, Bibliographic Issue No. 4, Spring 2004, p. 9]. Note: the date of the New Vagabonds dinner in 1872 was not determined.

Cuyler Reynolds, ed., “Fulton Day.” New York at the Jamestown Exposition. Norfolk, Virginia, April 25 to December 1, 1907. Tenney: “MT was the guest of honor on Robert Fulton Day (Sept. 23, 1907). Texts of his introduction and his own speech are given, together with photographs of him on 407, 411. His secretary Isabel V. Lyon was with him (438)” [MTJ, Bibliographic Issue No. 4, Spring 2004, p. 9].

Current Literature ran an anonymous article, “Mark Twain’s Idea of Heaven,” p. 653-57, a review of Captain Stormfield’s Visit to Heaven. Tenney: “‘one of the cleverest fantasies that has been published in a long while.’; consists entirely of plot-summary and extensive quotation until the concluding 38 lines, quoting a review in the New York AMERICAN (date not given), in which Edwin Markham says MT echoes Swedenborg’s picture of a heaven in which people, tired of praying and singing, request a life more like what they knew on earth [Tenney, ALR Second Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1978) 176].

A report of Mark Twain being admitted to honorary membership in the Nevada Historical Society ran in State of Nevada. First Biennial Report of the Nevada Historical Society, 1907-1908. Tenney: “Provides text of the resolution admitting MT to honorary membership and describes its unanimous passage. On p. 149, Underwood & Underwood photograph of MT...[Tenney, ALR Third Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1979) 194].

January –Samuel Wyatt wrote from Berks, England to offer three pages of verse after reading JA [MTP].

Broadway Magazine (later Hampton’s Broadway Magazine) ran an anonymous article, “Horace Ezra Bixby, Mark Twain’s Boss” in the January issue [Tenney 46: The Twainian, Dec. 1939]. In his 3rd supplement, Tenney added the following: “In interview with Bixby, who said, ‘Some people infer that Clemens was not a good pilot, but he was a first class one. He adapted himself to the river from the start and was as good a pupil as I ever had under me.’ Bixby told reporters all the stories he knew about MT a long time ago. ‘Now when the reporters pester him for them he gets peevish. ‘I wish Clemens was dead, then maybe you fellows would let me alone,’ he says.” “ Includes photograph: ‘Horace E. Bixby. Nearly forty years a river pilot and still at the wheel’” [Tenney, ALR Third Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1979) 193].

January 1 Friday – In Redding, Conn., Isabel V. Lyon replied for Sam to the Dec. 28, 1908 from Clara Frazer in Withers Mill, Mo.

Dear Miss Frazer: / Mr. Clemens asks me to write for him & say certainly you may have that photograph copyrighted, & then used on post cards.

It is such a pretty little photograph that when the cards are printed, Mr Clemens hopes to have some of them.

Mr. Clemens & I both send you our very best wishes, & shall hope for the pleasure of seeing you here, again. We did have a nice time, didn't we? And I shall always remember the disagreeable woman who made impolite remarks about your pretty blue hat, at the library that day. / Sincerely Yours / Isabel Lyon. (over)
P.S. You will see by the heading of this paper that the name of Mr. Clemens's house has been changed [MTP].
Note: Clara Frazer was Laura Frazer's granddaughter.

Sam also wrote on a card (picturing a woman wearing a hat) to Dorothy Quick. "Happy New Year, / Dorothy dear! / from / S.L. Clemens" [MTP].

And about this day Sam also wrote to Elizabeth Jordan.

Dear Miss Jordan: / Nothing in Dr. John Brown's book is copyright anywhere, now; but Mr. MacBean has introduced matter from Marjorie's journals not used by Dr. Brown: these additions are copyright in Great Britain. I have borrowed some of them, & will get Mr. Paine to ask the Putnams' permission to use them. / SLC

I shall need a very early proof to show the Putnam's, so they can see how much (or rather how little) I am asking [MTP].

Sam saved New York Times clippings about earthquakes dated Jan. 1, 1909 [Gribben 506]. Note: see Dec. 31, 1908.

Sam also signed his copy of George B. Harvey's 1908 book, Women, Etc. Some Leaves from an Editor's Diary. "SL. Clemens / Stormfield, Jan. 1, 1909" [Gribben 300].

Sam also signed his copy of The Ruby of Kishmoor (1908), by Howard Pyle (1853-1911): "S. L. Clemens, Stormfield, Jan. 1, 1909" [Gribben 565].

Lind Af-Hageby for the Anti-Vivisection Congress, London wrote to invite Sam to their gathering on July 6-10 [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 19. M.L.H."

Mrs. Elvira H. Brumfield, age 67, wrote from Waco, Texas believing Clemens to be her brother; and offering names in her family [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Mr Clemens [says] that there can be no relationship between the two families as he has never heard the names you mention."

Edmund Gerson for Golden West Exhibitions, London wrote to ask if they might add Sam's name to their Committee for their Exposition on March 1909 [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 19. M.L.H."

Jeannette L. Gilder wrote from NYC to wish Sam a happy new year and a hope he was enjoying Stormfield [MTP].

Mrs. H.B. Gooding wrote from Tiffin, Ohio to Sam, enclosing a clipping (not in file) and asking for "a few lines" for their 1890 Club [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 5 M.L.H."

L.M. Hudson wrote from Indianapolis, Ind. to ask where she might get a description he'd written "many years ago" about fighting missionary societies [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 5 M.L.H."

Lewis H. Machen, atty. wrote from Alexandria, Va. to verify, in a rather droll way, about Mark Twain. It was said of Twain by an old gentleman at the New Willard Hotel in Washington, "his forte is humor." ... "I write now to enquire whether there is any truth in this charge. I certainly think you should be given an opportunity to absolve yourself from such a grave aspersion" [MTP]. Note: IVL: "I am very much obliged to him for his letter which is exceedingly pleasant, but as to the charge you mention, it has been made four times before, but not by any responsible person."

Samuel Samuels wrote from NYC to Sam, receipting him for $75 for apartment rent in "The Stuyvesant" 17 Livingston Place, NYC for one month commencing Jan. 1 [MTP]. Note: for Clara Clemens.

William George Steinke, Jr., NYC, wrote a note with cartoon and pasted short article about Clemens getting an elephant for a Christmas present from Robert J. Collier [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 5 M.L.H."; "We think its about the best one we've got yet."

Sometime between Jan 1-12, L.M. Powers wrote to Clemens advising he was sending some books "as directed" for his signature, offering to "replenish your stogies of you have not reformed" [MTP].

January 2 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a postcard to daughter Jean. "Happy New Year, Jean dear! And I hope you will have many more. / Affectionately" ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote a postcard with a photograph of Stormfield to Dorothy Quick.

Happy New Year! Jan. 2'09

It is a very nice poem, Dorothy dear; that is my opinion, & Miss Lyon's, too.

We had a very pleasant Xmas, in spite of Robert Collier's elephant. Miss Lyon & Mr. Ashcroft were horribly worried about the elephant for several days & nights, trying to think what to do with him. Then he came, & the worry ceased. It was a very successful joke / Lovingly / ... [MTP; MTAq 244-5].

Edwin A.W. Bohl wrote from Peoria, Ill. to Sam. "I am 11 years old to-day and have read almost all of your books...and have laughed and enjoyed them like everything." He wished he'd gotten that elephant for Christmas instead of Sam and asked Sam not to laugh at mistakes in the typed letter [MTP].

The Elgin Press Club, Elgin, Ill. per R.C. Brophy wrote to ask for "an autographed letter to be sold at auction" for their upcoming function [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 5 M.L.H."

Alice Minnie Herts for the Children's Educational Theatre wrote to remind Sam of the lecture to "take place at the Lyceum Theatre on Friday next" and urging him to add his own comments, as "No one knows as well as you...what our children and young people are trying to do in this work..." [MTP]. Note: "Ans."

Minnie J. Reynolds for the National-American Woman Suffrage Assoc., NYC wrote to ask Clemens for the use of his name as a facsimile autograph for use in their cause [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 5 M.L.H."

January 3 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer at the Misses Tewksbury's School, Washington-on-Hudson, N.Y.

I wonder where you are, you dear little rascal. Yesterday your welcome message by wireless came, & I took it to mean that you had instructed the Bermudian to send it from sea, but had remained in Bermuda yourself; so I cabled New Year greetings to you at once; but last night the cable-office telegraphed us from Bermuda that you had sailed. That was a surprise! for we thought you were going to make a long stay in the Islands. Well, I am glad to have you back, on any terms. I hope you & the rest of the family whom you control have had a pleasant time & have been advantaged by your outing.

I've got the colored photograph of you & me, & it is perfect. All the colors are exactly reproduced. Yes, & the pose is easy & natural & unconscious—not a detail of it could be bettered, I think.

Miss Lyon & I are going to arrive at Robert Collier's, (752 Park avenue) at noon the 20th, of this month & remain there the 21 & 22^d & perhaps till the 3.32 the afternoon of the 23^d. Be sure you come there & see us if you come to town. And you must telephone beforehand, dear heart. It would be lovely to have a glimpse of you.

Major General Sir Ralph Ashcroft, Lord Bishop of Benares, has gone to England on business for me, & we do miss him so!

Billie Burke has been here to spend a week-end, & she was charming. You must do the same every time there's a chance; & your mother too. Will you greet her affectionately for me, & thank her for her letter?

Gabrilowitsch is here, & Miss Ethel Newcomb—professional pianists; also my daughter, professional singer. Music? Bless your heart it's going all the time, night & day!

Isn't this bed of mine pretty large? Sometimes it is, but now it isn't; it's full of cats, & they are all over on my side. I must get a shovel & clear them out.

Good-bye, dear. Make my best compliments to Madame & the Misses Tewksbury. / Lovingly / ... [MTP].

Sadie G. Brennan wrote a sentence from Danbury, Conn. to thank Sam for the “lovely box of candy” [MTP]. Note: Sadie was one of several telephone operators receiving candy from Clemens for his regard of service.

Billie Burke wrote to thank Sam for “the great happiness” it gave her to see him “last Sunday”—to her he would always be “like some wonderful beautiful king” [MTP]. Note: MT wrote at the end of the 3-page letter: “This is Billie Burke, who possesses all the charms that the most fortunate of her sex can claim: youth, beauty, sincerity, simplicity, refinement, a good heart and irreproachable character.” Burke visited Stormfield on Dec. 27, 1908.

A.J. Hollister for the Children's Home, Kansas City, Kans. wrote to Sam, enclosing his card and a clipping (not in file), since he knew Clemens enjoyed “a good joke.” His stated “object” was to “work” Clemens for his autograph [MTP].

Frank D [illegible surname], Chairman of the Art Committee for The Republican Club of NY wrote to ask Sam if he would autograph a picture of the Quaker City they'd just obtained to frame for their walls [MTP]. Note: the Club sent the picture and Clemens signed and returned it, then inquired as to where they'd obtained it.

E. Channing Stowell wrote from Jamaica Plain, Mass. to “induce” Sam to come to a dinner by the Medical Staff of the Boston Dispensary, the oldest medical charity in Boston. Stowell recalled Sam's remarks in Dublin, N.H. [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Jan 5 M.L.H.”

January 4 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to the Telephone Operators.

To the Young Ladies of the Telephone Office:

I have received your kind & welcome notes, & I thank you for them, & wish you a happy New year, with many & many others to follow.

Your obliged & appreciative friend

Mark Twain [MTP]. Note: Sam sent each operator a box of candy.

Sam also wrote on The Educational Theatre for Children letterhead, to an unidentified man.

Dear Sir:— / Doubtless the work that has been done by the Educational Theatre for children and young people has come to your notice frequently. This work has attracted attention not only in our own city, where it first took root, but in every city of the United States, from Maine to California, and in a number of cities money is being raised to build Educational Theatres. The belief has been expressed by some of our greatest educators, notably Eliot of Harvard and Hall of Clark University, that the Educational Theatre, New York, is the beginning of an educational movement of national importance.

With this in mind, the directors of the Educational Theatre have arranged a course of lectures dealing with the Theory of the work, and enclosing two course tickets for these lectures, they ask you to lend to this movement the support of your presence. / Yours truly ... [MTP]. Note: Sam was listed on the letterhead as President, together with officers and board members Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, Robert J. Collier, Otto H. Kahn, Alice Minnie Herts, G. Stanley Hall, President of Clark Univ., and Charles W. Eliot, President of Harvard.

Agnes Acker wrote from Danbury, Conn. to thank Sam for sending a box of chocolates. She signed "Operator #7" [MTP]. Note: at top: IVL: "Telephone girls"

Florence Collins wrote from Danbury, also to thank Sam for chocolates [MTP].

John Henniker Heaton wrote from London to thank Sam for his congratulations on Heaton's success in establishing penny postage between England, Ireland, and the US. He now was fighting for a penny-per-word cable rate. He closed by urging Clemens to commit to his next visit [MTP].

J. Clinton Roraback wrote from Canaan, Conn. to follow up on an invitation to the Jan. 15 Litchfield University Club banquet, and to offer Sam $75 for a half-hour talk [MTP].

C.B. Thompson wrote from Delta, Colo. to ask if Sam was acquainted with Edward T. Thompson, a pilot on the Mississippi, as he reads of one Thompson mentioned in LM [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Mr. Clemens cannot now say whether this is the Thompson he knew or not & knows nothing of the history on the Mr. Thompson he mentions."

January 5 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a three-paragraph letter (again on the Children's Theatre letterhead) to an unidentified person, inviting to a course of lectures at the Lyceum Theatre [MTP: Cordelia and Tom Platt catalogs, Nov. 1993, Item 1F]. Note: like the Jan. 4 letter this and likely several others were sent out to promote "the dramatic instinct in education."

Sam also wrote "an apparently unpublished letter" to an unidentified newspaper about an incident where Theodore Roosevelt had allegedly insulted a girl who tried to pass him on a bridle path. After a detailed account of the incident Sam wrote:

Have we ever had a President before of whom such a story could be told & find believers? Certainly not. It would be recognized as a foolish and extravagant invention, a magnificent lie; for we have never had a President before who was destitute of self-respect & of respect for his high office; we have had no President before who was not a gentleman; we have had no President before who was intended for a butcher, a time-keeper or a bully, & missed his mission by compulsion of circumstances over which he had no control [MTP: Chicago Book Auction catalogs, Nov. 19-20, 1935, No. 55, Item 131].

Sam also wrote to Elizabeth Wallace at Chicago University.

You have overwhelmed me, Dear Betsy. That poem does not seem like words—a march of words, with interrupting spaces between—it flows like organ-music, in blended strains, deep & rich & eloquent. And so moving! I can't read it aloud, my voice breaks. It is noble, stately, beautiful! I can never thank you with words, but I can with my heart; & I do. / Affectionately / SLC [MTP].

Harry Windsor Dearborn for the Robert Fulton Monument wrote to advise Sam of the progress made on the monument and to confirm that it was acceptable for him to come see him on Thursday, as per Lyon [MTP].

Liberty National Bank per Henry S. Bartow wrote to Sam. "We have charged your account to-day $96.36, for amount paid to Messrs. Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne for draft of Miss Jean L. Clemens for Mks. 400, as per document enclosed" (in file) [MTP].

New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad per A.B. Smith replied to Sam's of Dec. 28 about "informing the baggage room representatives at Grand Central Station of the fact that train No. 240 is now making flag stop at Redding" [MTP].

Public Schools Athletic League, Girls' Branch per E. Tully, financial secretary wrote to solicit a donation from Clemens [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 5 M.L.H."

Joe Twichell wrote to Sam.

Dear Mark: / I am to be at pulpit duty at Yale University next Sunday. As that will take me part way to Redding I plan to proceed thither on Monday—if there is no reason why not with you—arriving, via South Norwalk, at 2.08 P.M. Harmony hopes and expects to come with me, and we both are glad to think of seeing you once more [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

January 6 Wednesday – Anna L. Cunningham wrote to thank Sam for the box of chocolates [MTP]. Note: "Telephone girl"

Frederick A. Duneka wrote twice to Sam. The first to thank him for his "little article on the new Planet, and for your note to Colonel Harvey. We will fix the Planet story up for the Weekly in attractive shape—pictures and all that, unless you disapprove." The second note: "I enclose a telegram [see below] just received. We have acknowledged its receipt and said it had been forwarded to you" [MTP]. Note: "The New Planet" first appeared in Harper's Weekly for Dec. 1909, p. 70-71 [Budd, Collected II p. 875-6]. The planet would be called Pluto; in the 21st Century would be broken in rank to something less than a planet.

The National Press Club sent a telegram to "Samuel L. Clements" [sic] c/o George Harvey, Harpers." The jist of the one page message was to ask Clemens to "talk twenty minutes or a half hour" on Feb. 2 "on any subject you prefer," for the purpose of raising funds for "larger quarters" for the Club [MTP].

John Davenport O'Connor wrote from Chicago to ask Sam for a loan of $15 to buy a typewriter to "make presentable" his stories and plays [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 12. M.L.H."; "Would like to be able to & the vast number who write to borrow money of him, even small sums, but it is impossible"

Ragnvald Blix began a letter to Sam that he finished Jan. 21 [MTP]. Note: not found at MTP.

Y.J. Crow wrote to solicit the sale of “a fine buffalo robe” to add to Clemens’ “valuable collection of rugs”. The price was $100 [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Jan 14 M.L.H.”; “Thanks for offer—but has several fur rugs, is not planning to buy others”

Marietta Heller wrote from New Rochelle, NY to request Sam’s autograph and presence for an entertainment program given by the Ladies Auxiliary Society of the Washington Heights Hospital [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Jan 12. 09; Lecture form”

Frank Cavendish Lascelles wrote on The Plaza, NYC notepaper to Sam. In town “a few days” he wanted to call on Clemens; he’d met him when Sam admired the scenes Lascelles had produced for the “Pageants at Oxford” in 1907 [MTP]. Note: Lascelles would consult on a planned pageant for the Robert Fulton celebrations.

J.P. Sheldon wrote from Buxton, England to advise Sam of the death of Thomas Wardle. Sheldon met Sam at Wardle’s house “eight or nine years ago.” Would Clemens ever visit England again? [MTP].

January 8 Friday – John Albert Macy brought galleys of Some Acrostic Signatures of Francis Bacon, etc. (1909) by William Stone Booth (1864-1926) . Sam then wrote the first pages of “Is Shakespeare Dead?” Sam thereby became convinced that “Booth, had demonstrated, beyond any doubt or question, that the Bacon signatures were there” (in Shakespeare’s works) [Gribben 77; MTB 1479, 1485-6].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam. “The Book News Monthly, which is published by John Wannamaker [sic Wanamaker] in Philadelphia and New York, is proposing to issue a Mark Twain Number sometime this year. The editor asks whether you could find it convenient to let its representative see you in the hope of getting an interview, and all that sort of thing.” He enclosed their letter (not in file) [MTP]. Note: “Ansd”

Oliver Otis Howard for the Lincoln Centennial Committee wrote to invite Sam to “be present and preside in the afternoon at a big, big meeting to be held at one of the opera houses on the eleventh of February.” Howard mentioned the time Sam presided at Carnegie Hall and the “happy time we had together at West Point.” The object of the event was “to aid in raising the $500,000 Endowment Fund for Lincoln Memorial University, Cumberland Gap, Tenn.” He also teased Clemens for being on the Confederate side [MTP]. Note: see Sam’s reply Feb. 12.

Howells & Stokes wrote to Lyon (though catalogued to Clemens) [MTP].

George Meredith was one of various British writers who wrote to Ralph W. Ashcroft on behalf of Mark Twain—all relating to Twain’s proposals for int’l copyright reform [MTP:Auction sale catalog Mar. 27, 1943].

January 8-11 Monday – Sam receipted Helen Keller for $1 as a “tax” for the Redding Library, though Helen was exempt by her gender from the tax. He wrote on the form, “Received of the darling Helen Keller, $1” [MTP].

Sam also receipted Anne Sullivan Macy (Mrs. John Albert Macy) for $1 for his library “tax” [MTP].
Note: Anne Sullivan was Helen Keller’s famous teacher. See Jan. 11 entry.

January 9 Saturday – The Armstrong Assoc. of New York, per May Hurlburt sent Sam tickets for a box at Carnegie Hall on Jan. 22 [MTP].

Diana Belais, President of the New York Anti-Vivisection Society wrote to ask Sam for a letter of introduction to Harpers, as they were in “a terrific fight ...against the Medical Society of New York, which has banded indissolubly to crush out our movement” [MTP].

Before Jan. 9 – New Yorker Staats-Zeitung sent an engraved invitation to dine and meet Count Johann Heinrich von Bernstorff, ambassador of the German Empire. Feb. 4, at 7 p.m. at the Manhattan Club [MTP].

January 10 Sunday – Richard Watson Gilder wrote on Wells College, Aurora NY letterhead to ask Sam if he could be present on Wed. Jan. 13 at Carnegie Hall, 5 p.m. for a meeting in memory of Stedman—“if it wouldn’t be a burden” [MTP].

Charles J. Langdon wrote to ask Sam for his one-third share of the taxes on the Erie Basin property at Buffalo, amounting to $44.27. After receiving rent on the property he would return Sam’s one-third share. He also wrote: “We are having bitter cold weather here, and Ida, Peter the dog, and I are keeping the big house alone and trying to keep warm. We expect Edna home to-day and shall be very glad to get her back. / I sent Clara on January 11th a draft for some coupons which were paid on bonds belonging to her January 1st, but have not heard from her” [MTP].

January 11 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam inscribed his photo to Anne Sullivan Macy (Mrs. John Albert Macy): “To Mrs. John Sullivan Macy, with warm regard, & with limitless admiration of the wonders she has performed as a miracle-worker—/ Mark Twain / Stormfield, Jan. 11/09.” [MTP].

“I have been in Eden three days and I saw a King / I knew he was a King the minute I touched him though I had never touched a King / before — A daughter of Eve”.

Sam wrote in the Remarks column about Helen’s comment: “The point of what Helen says above, lies in this: that I read ‘The Diary of Eve,’ all through, to her last night; in it Eve frequently mentions things she said for the first time but instantly knows what they were—& named them” [MTP]. Note: was she a guest for three days as her note suggests? Only Jan. 11 is in the guestbook.

Sam's A.D. for this day is offered by Gribben:

In 1909 Clemens testified that he both “published” and “read” [Ignatius] Donnelly’s book [The Great Cryptogram: Francis Bacon’s Cipher in the So-Called Shakespeare Plays (1888)] when it first appeared; he found it then “an ingenious piece of work,” but nearly everyone scoffed at it. Though Donnelly’s acrostics did not entirely convince Clemens, he was enormously impressed by the point Donnelly made about Shakespeare’s never having used any Stratford scenes in his plays and poems [200]. “Mark Twain believed Granville George Greenwood’s claim that ‘through the last page of King Lear is scattered the acrostic “Verulam,” spelled backwards” [627].

Countess Gaston d’Arschot wrote on mourning border paper to Sam. “Just now I learn of your proposed library, and have much pleasure in enclosing my check for $5, which modest offering I beg you to accept...” [MTP]. Note: “Ansd”; formerly Miss Wilhelmina Detmold, she married Count Detmold, in charge of the Belgian legation in NYC. She died in 1912.

Isaac Guggenheim wrote from NYC to Sam, enclosing $25 for the Mark Twain Library, mentioned by Mr. Dearborn [MTP]. Note: “Ansd”

Charles J. Langdon wrote a short note to enclose a draft for $60 on matured bonds of Park County, Mont., from Livy’s estate [MTP].

A.P. Watt wrote from London to Sam, enclosing “the latest edition of my ‘LETTERS TO A. P. WATT’” which he noted contained 26 letters not previously included [MTP].

January 12 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Jan. 8 from General Oliver Otis Howard (1830-1909).

Dear General Howard:

You pay me a most gratifying compliment in asking me to preside, & it causes me very real regret that I am obliged to decline, for the object of the meeting appeals strongly to me, since that object is to aid in raising the $500,000 Endowment Fund for Lincoln Memorial University. The Endowment Fund will be the most fitting of all the memorials the country will dedicate to the memory of Lincoln, serving, as it will, to uplift his very own people.

I hope you will meet with complete success, & I am sorry I cannot be there to witness it & help you rejoice. But I am older than people think, nearly twice as old as I used to be; & besides I live away out in the country & never stir from home, except at geological intervals to fill left-over engagements made in Mesozoic Times when I was younger & indiscreeter.

You ought not to say sarcastic things about my “fighting on the other side.” General Grant did not act like that. General Grant paid me compliments. He bracketed me with Zenophon—it is there in his memoirs for anybody to read. He said if all the confederate soldiers had followed my example & adopted my military arts he could never have caught enough of them in a bunch to inconvenience the Rebellion. General Grant was a fair man & recognized my worth; but you are prejudiced, & you have hurt my feelings.

But I have an affection for you, anyway. / Mark Twain [MTP]. Note: Howard, a Union General, suffered defeats at Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, was also Commandant of West Point 1881-2 during one of Sam’s visits there. He later served out West and won surrender of Chief Joseph, and was a commissioner in the Freedman’s Bureau. He was also instrumental in the founding of Howard University.

Wilfred A. French for Photo-Era (The American Journal of Photography), Boston, Mass. wrote:

My dear Mr. Clemens; / I suppose, during your numerous and make-believe lawsuits—you are the cleverest advertiser that ever lived, even surpassing the war-lord of Germany, himself—you have, naturally and with justifiable neglect, overlooked your renewal to the finest and best magazine ever published—I believe you said so. My office instructions are to send you the magazine, just the same, right along; in fact, it is a life sentence, which I hope you will bear with your usual equanimity. . . .

P.S. I hear that Miss Clara and my sister, Miss Marie, are having tolerably good success in the West [MTP].

Harry Johnston wrote from Scotland to Sam. “By enclosed syllabus [not in file] you will observe that the writer is down to give a few ‘extracts from Mark Twain’. Might I be excused for asking you to give me a ‘message’ for my paper?” [MTP].

Charles W. Moore wrote to ask Sam if he had read J.A. Wylie’s History of Protestantism. If not, Moore wanted to send a set [MTP]. Note: “Thank him very much, but I take no interest in ecclesiastical history”

January 13 Wednesday – Ino Downey for the Men’s Club of Holy Trinity Church, NYC wrote to invite Sam to their annual dinner on Feb. 22 [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Jan 14 M.L.H.”

January 14 Thursday – In Redding, Conn., Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Archibald Henderson at the Univ. of N. Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Dear Dr. Henderson: / I gave your letter to Mr. Clemens who read it very carefully; & then he said that he is very sorry to be obliged to say to you that it would be quite impossible for him to give you, or for him to allow me to give you any assistance, as it would be encroaching upon the absolute rights of Mr. Paine. For three years, now, Mr. Paine has had the exclusive right to obtain access to any information that Mr. Clemens or I could give; and Mr. Clemens now feels that it would be most unfair & discouraging to Mr. Paine if he were to assist anyone else in writing any kind of a biography of him. When you spoke to me about the book you proposed writing, I understood that it would be critical, rather than biographical; and to that kind of book Mr. Clemens would have no objection; on the contrary he would be glad to see such a book written.

We shall always remember with pleasure your visit here; & shall hope that it may be repeated. Mr. Clemens wishes me to convey to you his warm regards, in which I know Mr. Ashcroft would join if he were here [MTP]. Note: Henderson wrote an article in the Deutsche Review about Twain; Paine wrote to Henderson on Nov. 15 that Clemens was pleased by the article [Gribben 307].

William Robertson Coe wrote from NYC to invite Clemens to “come down here and spend a few days,” reminding him of his promise to do so when “the country palled on you...” Coe suggested they attend a Feb. 2 dinner of the Campfire Club, “composed of big game hunters” [MTP].

Oliver Otis Howard for the Lincoln Centennial Committee wrote to Sam, following up on his earlier letter that mentioned Clemens fighting for the Confederacy—he apologized tongue in cheek for “unwittingly hurting a confederate’s feelings.” Could Sam merely sit on the stage at the upcoming meeting for the Lincoln Endowment Committee? [MTP]. Note: General Howard was 79 and with a shaky hand.

Curtis Lubin for Town & Country wrote to Sam having “just obtained from Mr. Paul Thompson some very attractive pictures of yourself and of your home,” which he wanted to run in the next issue of the magazine. “Would it be possible to visit and see the three rooms pictured, the library, billiard room and the dining room?” He suggested Saturday, Jan. 16, if convenient [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Jan 19 M.L.H.”

L.M. Powers wrote to Sam. Since he didn't know which brand of stogies Sam preferred he hoped that the "little cigar holder in the form of a book" he'd sent would "be acceptable" [MTP]. Note: "Ans. M.L. Howden / Jan 19."

Clinton Rogers Woodruff for the American Civic Assoc. wrote to ask Sam to write a letter to Governor Charles E. Hughes recommending William B. Howland for appointment on the New York State Commission on Niagara Falls, to fill a vacancy [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 19 M.L.H."

January 15 Friday – Harry Windsor Dearborn for the Robert Fulton Monument wrote to Sam, attempting to entice him to attend the "informal reception" for which he'd changed the date from Jan. 23 to the 21st to accommodate Sam's visit to NYC. He listed a string quartet which would be there, a waiting billiard table of Henry W. Marsh's, and would send an automobile for Clemens. He added a P.S.: "I have invited a number of very young and beautiful girls who will be so pleased to see you on Thursday next" [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote a short note to Sam. "Your translation of the Hollander's letter has just come to me, and I am hurrying to put it in type. I will follow your instructions, and do all you ask" [MTP]. Note: Hollander not further identified.

Charles Garvice for the Author's Club, London wrote hearing that Clemens was coming back to England this year, which would be a "red-letter day" for them [MTP]. Note: source of this rumor was not given.

Helen Keller wrote from Wrentham, Mass. to Sam (the letter is typed, and signed in block letters).

Dear Mr. Clemens: / Our minds keep recurring to the happy hours we spent with you in your beautiful home. I cannot thank you warmly enough for your kindness to me and the two friends whom I hold dearer than life itself. You cannot know what your wise sympathy and tenderness mean to me. You have a master key which unlocks the most intimate secrets of the heart, and I feel that you understand the world I live in and the deep affections behind it. It is a joy to be with one who, having eyes, sees the beauty in the still, dark valley between the mountains.

We arrived safely Monday night with all our belongings—umbrella, muff, trunk and lives. If that was luck, I am glad that "eternal vigilance is luck" because it means eternal good luck.

We are all well and living again in our usual quiet, busy way. ...

Mr. Macy wishes me to tell you that as soon as a complete set of the proofs of Mr. Booth's book can be had, it shall be sent to you. At present only about a third of the book is in type [MTP]. Note: Keller's name appears in Stormfield's guestbook for January 11, and noted was there for three days.

January 16 Saturday – Sam's guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Edward Quintard	New York	Jan 16 1909
Lumbring Kant [?]	New York	Jan 16 1909
Frank Lascelles	Oxford - Keblelon	" 16 "	[see notes below]
John Elton Wayland	New York	17-18 Jan 16, 1909
Isabel S. Wayland	" "	" " "

Note: all the guests for this date signed in themselves. In the remarks column for the entry of Frank Lascelles on Jan. 16, Sam wrote: "Mr Lascelles designed and carried out his splendid historical pageants in Oxford & other English cities in 1907, also the historical pageants in Canada last year, and is now devising the London pageant of 1910, in which 15,000 citizens in costume will take part." Sam inscribed a leather bound set of Adam's Diary and Eve's Diary to Lascelles with this date [eBay # 290459140946, July 30, 2010].

Caesar A. Roberts, Attorney wrote from Denver, Colo. to Sam.

Dear Mr Clemens:— / I have been down to Carson City, Nevada. The memories of you there are as pleasant and refreshing as the pungent, tonic fragrance from the sage as it comes into the little city on the winds of the morning, after a long night of rain.

I met Sam Davis, the man who wrote that most enjoyable of sketches, The First Piano in Camp, and he is the most winsome and delightful romancer in all the country round about, since you departed.

I presume you remember the cub reporter who was with you, I think, on the Virginia City Enterprise, and was your “pard” when you were millionaires for the ten days required to do the assessment to hold the cross vein. He is Hon Adair Wilson and was one of the ablest judges that ever sat on the Supreme Bench in Colorado.

I also looked upon slide mountain, on a basis of which you wrote that most delightful chapter in Roughing It, the action of trespass vi et terrae, where the overhanging tenant slid down upon his neighbor next below, not only with force but with all the sticks and stones that belonged to his preemption. I met Mr Coutts who remembers the trial well—for you know the lawyers held court in the evenings and gave full play to their fancy and their wit, no less than learning, in that famous action.

I went to Sandy Bowers house, where the door knobs used to be of silver, from the Comstock, for silver, in those days, served to unlock all doors.

Hank Monk, in 1883, for the last time, threw the reins to the hostler, sheathed his whip, and rests in the cemetery at Carson. I visited the grave of your brother Orrin’s [sic Orion’s] little child who died, I think, while you were there.

I read the story and laughed at it as a boy; appreciated it as a man, when I too became a part of the same scenes. The visit was like reading a story and then coming into the reality [MTP]. Note: the paragraph about Sam P. Davis is scribbled through with pencil. Davis was not one of Clemens’ favorites. Mr. Coutts is not further identified.

January 17 Sunday – William B. Jones for Raymond & Whitcomb Co., Boston wrote to ask for information on an article he’d seen years before attributed to Clemens on the “Waters of The Ganges, etc.” [MTP].

January 18 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Mai H. Coe and William R. Coe.

Dear Coes:

It is lovely of you to ask me, & I wish I could go to you—& indeed I will in the by & by, but I am going to New York day after tomorrow for the last time this season, to fill a last-April speech-engagement which includes guestship at young Robert Collier’s house. But you are a strong & young pair, & I shall expect & require you to come to me, for you don’t mind the travel, whereas I dread it.

With love to you both ... [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Jan. 4 from John Henniker Heaton in London.

DEAR HENNIKER-HEATON,—I do hope you will succeed to your heart’s desire in your cheap-cablegram campaign, and I feel sure you will. Indeed your cheap-postage victory, achieved in spite of a quarter-century of determined opposition, is good and rational prophecy that you will. Wireless, not being as yet imprisoned in a Chinese wall of private cash and high-placed and formidable influence, will come to your aid and make your new campaign briefer and easier than the other one was.

Now then, after uttering my serious word, am I privileged to be frivolous for a moment? When you shall have achieved cheap telegraphy, are you going to employ it for just your own selfish profit and other people’s pecuniary damage, the way you are doing with your cheap postage? You get letter-postage reduced to 2 cents an ounce, then you mail me a 4-ounce letter with a 2-cent stamp on it, and I have to pay the extra freight at this end of the line. I return your envelope for inspection. Look at it. Stamped in one place is a vast “T,” and under it the figures “40;” and under those figures appears an “L,” a sinister and suspicious and mysterious L. In another place, stamped within a circle, in offensively large capitals, you find the words “DUE 8 CENTS.” Finally, in the midst of a desert space up nor-noreastard from that circle you find a figure “3” of quite unnecessarily aggressive and insolent magnitude—and done with a blue pencil, so as to be as conspicuous as possible. I inquired about these strange signs and symbols of the postman. He said they were P. O. Department signals for his instruction.

“Instruction for what?”

“To get extra postage.”

“Is that so? Explain. Tell me about the large T and the 40.

“Go on, please, while I think up some words to swear with.”

“Due 8 means, grab 8 more.”

“The blue-pencil 3 was an afterthought. There aren’t any stamps for afterthoughts; the sums vary, according to inspiration, and they whirl in the one that suggests itself at the last moment. Sometimes they go several times higher than this one. This one only means hog 3 cents more. And so if you’ve got 51 cents about you, or can borrow it—”

“Tell me: who gets this corruption?”

“Half of it goes to the man in England who ships the letter on short postage, and the other half goes to the P.O.D. to protect cheap postage from inaugurating a deficit.”

“———!”

“I can’t blame you; I would say it myself in your place, if these ladies were not present. But you see I’m only obeying orders, I can’t help myself.”

“Oh, I know it; I’m not blaming you. Finally, what does that L stand for?”

After seeing the Oxford pageant file by the grand stand, picture after picture, splendor after splendor, three thousand five hundred strong, the most moving and beautiful and impressive historically-instructive show conceivable, you are not to think I would miss the London pageant of next year, with its shining host of 15,000 historical English men and women dug from the misty books of all the vanished ages and marching in the light of the sun—all alive, and looking just as they were used to look! Mr. Lascelles spent yesterday here on the farm, and told me all about it. I shall be in the middle of my 75th year then, and interested in pageants for personal and prospective reasons.

I beg you to give my best thanks to the Bath Club for the offer of its hospitalities, but I shall not be able to take advantage of it, because I am to be a guest in a private house during my stay in London. / Sincerely yours, ... [MTP]. Note: Henniker-Heaton (sometimes hyphenated, sometimes not) had successfully led a campaign for penny postage in England; he was now on a similar campaign to secure cheap cablegrams. Frank Cavendish Lascelles was logged into the guestbook for Jan. 16, but not for Jan.17. He may have stayed over, however, as Sam refers to him spending the day of Jan. 17 “at the farm here.”

Sam also wrote to William Dean Howells.

Dear Howells: / I have to write a line, lazy as I am, to say how your Poe article delighted me; and to say that I am in agreement with substantially all you say about his literature. To me his prose is unreadable—like Jane Austin’s. No, there is a difference. I could read his prose on salary, but not Jane’s. Jane is entirely impossible. It seems a great pity that they allowed her to die a natural death. ...

Another thing: you grant that God & circumstances sinned against Poe, but you also grant that he sinned against himself—a thing which he couldn’t do & didn’t do.

It is lively up here now. I wish you could come [MTHL 2: 841; MTP; Gribben 328].

Note: In the main part of his letter, Sam reacted to Howells’ Jan. 16 article in Harper’s Weekly in which he maintained that none of Poe’s stories would be accepted by present day publishers because of their “mechanicality.” Howells blamed Poe’s need for money, his drinking and the backward state of the country (“abjectly provincial”) at that time. In the last sentence Sam indirectly referred (“lively”) to the pianists then visiting Stormfield, Ossip Gabrilowitsch (who became Clara Clemens’ husband later in 1909) and Ethel Newcomb. See Sam’s Jan. 3 to Margaret Blackmer.

Clemens acquired another case of Queen Anne whisky [L-A MS]. Note: see June 8, 1907 for the full list of acquisition dates of whisky, intended as ammunition against Isabel Lyon. After this entry Clemens wrote a summary of all the whisky acquired from Jan. 8, 1908 to Jan. 18, 1909:

+48 bottles used in 2 months

The bottled cocktails (in rich abundance) came from Park & Tilford [NY merchant], Claude [the butler] says.

Vibrator Oct. 24 (the first one?)

(The other one bought with case? Inquire.)

Jan 8/08 to Jan. 18/09——11 cases.

I did not use more than 3 bottles of this during the year. I used 5 bottles sent me by Mr. Carnegie.

½ case per year is about all I need.

When she [Lyon] left us, her first order for home consumption was 1 case & a lot of wine [L-A MS].

Note: here Clemens claimed that Isabel Lyon consumed 48 bottles of whisky in two months! See Hill 231.

The Armstrong Assoc. of New York per Marguerite Palmie wrote to advise Sam they were reserving a box for him at Carnegie Hall on Feb. 23. They'd "secured the President-elect, Mr. Taft, to make the principal address at a meeting for the discussion of Hampton and the Southern work generally....Booker T. Washington will also speak and Governor Hughes has been invited to preside." The Hampton student chorus would sing plantation songs [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 19 M.L.H."; no record was found of Clemens attending.

The Republican Club of New York wrote to enclose 40 cents in additional postage for return of the print sent of the Quaker City. He asked for an acknowledgement when the print was returned [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 27 M.L.H."

The New York Times, p.4, "Roosevelt Asked to Police Dinner," announced that Mark Twain was among those invited to the Police Benevolent dinner on Feb. 8.

January 18 Monday ca. – In Redding, Conn., Mary L. Howden ("Miss Mollie") wrote for Sam to Diana Belais.

3 Dear Mrs. B. / Mr. C has had your letter in his room for some days and now asks me to write you for him to say that he regrets not being able to grant your request. So many have come to him of a similar nature that it is impossible for him to write letters of introduction to any one or really have any [illegible]. Mr. C has come to live in the country to be away from all activities as he finds that even the smaller ones exhaust him and that he must live in great quietness here in order to do even a small amount of work [MTP].

Mary also wrote for Sam to John Larkin. "4) Dear Mr. Larkin X sending this tax notice to you and asking that you'll kindly notify the tax commissioners that he is no longer a resident of the city of N.Y." [MTP].

Mary also wrote for Sam to Miss S. "2 Dear Miss S. / X and thank you very very much for the little volume of letters which arrived sometime since. He has been overdriven with work, [with] guests, with books that he has had on hand, that he has only just now reached the point where he can acknowledge the receipt of the vast number that come to him [about Christmas] time /Sincerely yours. / not secy" [MTP].

Mary also wrote for Sam to other various unidentified persons, as follows: Note: these ca. Jan. 18 letters are shorthand drafts of the letters that survive, and so lack identification; note each is numbered, from 2 to 11, then 3, 4 and 5 again, suggesting they were done in two different batches, perhaps on different days.

" 5. / Dear sir X me to say that your letter didn't reach him [until Monday] [then] too late to reach the outgoing post. Mr. C is leaving for N.Y. on Wednesday-morning [illegible] his business in town the [illegible] practically [illegible]. Can you not make an [arrangement] to come up next week say Monday, on the 8:50 train from N.Y. to R. station.”

“6 / X thank you very much for your letter and the [offer] and the books [and] to say that he has come to R to live and doesn’t expect to be in NY.”

“7 / X-in answer to your letter, say that he regrets not being able to grant your request but that he is now a citizen of Conn. and [illegible] doesn’t feel that he [illegible] interfere with the [illegible] of N.Y. state.” Note: see Jan. 20.

“8 X to acknowledge with many thanks your check for $20. He has been overdriven with work and engagements so has been unable to autograph all of the books that you sent he thinks he will be finished today. As Mr. C’s secretary I would like to say that much autographing [has become a] great burden to Mr. C and that you have to wait the right time to present such matters to him. This I am [quite sure] you’ll understand knowing as you do how full Mr. C’s life [really] is”

“9. Dear sir / X to say that the book you sent him for him to autograph has gone to you coming as [it did] and just at Christmas time it lay in his room for a long time among other books and [that he has autographed it for you with [illegible] and thanks you for your kind wishes and your pleasant note”

“10 Dear Madam / X to thank you for your letter and the compliment contained in it and to say that he regrets not being able to grant your request. He wishes me to say that his name now stands as V.P. on a great many boards and that he finds himself obliged to withdraw from [associations] instead joining in new ones. He has come into the country to live very quietly and withdraw from many activities”

“11 Dear Sir / X to thank you very much for your invitation for the dinner to be given on Feb. 11th in honor of Mr. Carnegie. To say that he is obliged to decline it as he has come to the country to live and doesn’t expect to be in N.Y. on that date”

“3. Dear Sir / X and say that he must refer you to his publishers Messrs. H-F Sq. for permission to include the sketch you mention in your collection if you’ll write to them saying that Mr. C has referred you to them they will give you all necessary answer as they alone possess the authority to grant the permission you ask for / Very truly yours”

“4) Dear Sir / X and thank you for your note and say that he regrets not being able to grant your request. That even if he had time and inclination to write the sketch you ask for he would be prevented from doing so by his contract with his publishers which doesn’t allow of his writing anything for anyone but them.

“5) same as No 4” [MTP]. Note: see also Jan. 19.

January 19 Tuesday – In Redding Clemens wrote to Frank Cavendish Lascelles, English actor and pageant director who had visited on Jan. 16-17:

Dear Mr. Lascelles: / Mr. Clemens asks me to say that he is very willing to have you burgle the enclosed, & with it sends his warm regards. / Sincerely Yours / Isabel Lyon

TO THE GUEST

Be calm, be patient—let the ostensibly hot water run a long time: Then it will become really hot [MTP].

Mary L. Howden (“Miss Mollie”) wrote for Sam to an unidentified man.

“Jan. 19, 1909 / 1. / Dear Sir / X and say that he will be happy to have his name known as one of the Hon committee [and he] expects that he will be [awhile] in London in May 1909. Mr. C asks me to thank you for your pleasant message. / Very truly yours" [MTP]. Note: the fact that this surviving draft is numbered 1 and dated, suggests that perhaps one batch placed in ca. Jan. 18 also goes with this day. See another similar TS of a shorthand draft for Jan. 28.

Charles J. Brown for Brown Brothers Co. Nurseries, Rochester, NY wrote to solicit "trees and plants for the coming spring," free catalog upon request [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 27 M.L.H."

W.T. Hall for The Dothan Eagle (Dothan, Ala.) wrote to Sam. "A banker acquaintance of mine, living out of town, in speaking of the writings of Mark Twain, said that he would give $10 to find the book, or to get the story, which you wrote years ago, (I think while editor of the Express) telling of the experience of the graveyard that moved, and passed by your house" [MTP]. Note: IVL wrote: "A Curious Dream in Sketches Old & New"

R.E. Hare for Hare & Chase, Ins., Phila. wrote to ask Sam where he might get a copy of Sam's article "The Burglar Alarm" he saw "many years ago" in a newspaper [MTP].

Harper & Brothers wrote to Isabel Lyon. "I enclose, herewith, a proof of "A CAPABLE HUMORIST" for Mr. Clemens' reading. May I ask that it be returned as soon as this can conveniently be done?" [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 27 M.L.H."

Mary Johnson wrote from Auburndale, Mass. to ask Clemens if she might send Moloch, a little book of hers about vivisection [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 27 M.L.H."; not in Gribben.

Rudyard Kipling wrote to Ralph W. Ashcroft about Mark Twain's Proposed Change in copyright Law. "Needless to say I am very interested in Mr. Clemens' action in regard to literary property and wish him success in it" [MTP]. Note: this reference is from a 1928 auction of letters by the American Art Assoc. NYC, and also includes "ghost" references to the letters of others to Ashcroft, including Andrew Lang, Joseph Conrad, George Meredith, William Wymark Jacobs, Sidney Lee, Frank Thomas Bullen, Gilbert Parker and Rider Haggard. Copies of the actual letters are not in the MTP files.

Mrs. P.J. Lewis wrote from Danbury, Conn. to send Sam some of her husband's troches she hoped would relieve his bronchitis [MTP]. Note: troche: a small, circular medicinal lozenge.

January 20 Wednesday – Sam went to New York City, accompanied by Isabel Lyon [Feb. 5 to Blackmer]. He would not return to Stormfield until the evening of Jan. 30.

In the evening Sam attended the annual dinner at Delmonico's, given by the Directors and faculty of the New York Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital. The New York Times reported on the function:

TWAIN TALKS TO DOCTORS.

"Dr. Clemens" Describes Imaginary Medical School at His Country Home.

At the annual dinner of the Directors and Faculty of the New York Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital at Delmonico's last night Mark Twain, a member of the Post-Graduate Corporation, and appropriately introduced as Dr. Samuel L. Clemens, told of the imaginary establishment of an imaginary branch of the Post-Graduate School at his home in Redding, Conn. He recounted the imaginary ailments of the imaginary patients, and told of the disagreements in diagnosis between himself and the other members of the Faculty—to wit: a horse doctor and an undertaker.

Dr. Clemens, who wore his now famous white suit of dinner clothes, and seemed to be comfortable in them, also talked at some length about his celebrated burglars. He declared that he had never lost anything through burglars; on the contrary, he had been a gainer, he declared, because the burglars had frightened away some undesirable servants.

"I desire to honor two noble institutions," said Dr. Clemens, "both of which are teachers. One is the Post-Graduate and the other the Children's Theatre, of which I am proud to be the President.

"I may say, as a member of the Post-Graduate Corporation," he added, "that I have been practicing up there in Connecticut for seven months, and the population is thinning out—the public is growing less."

Dr. George N. Miller, President of the Post Graduate, who presided paid a tribute to the late Dr. D. B. St. John Roosa, who was the founder of the institution and its President up to the time of his death last year.

Dr. Miller declared that the legacy of $2,000,000 left to the institution by Frederick Charles Hewitt of Oswego, N.Y. was "the same as in the treasury now" despite the contest of Mrs. Hewitt's will.

Other speakers were Dr. Bache Emmett, Dr. W. S. Thayer of Johns Hopkins University, Dr. Musser of Philadelphia, Dr. Adami of Montreal, Dr. Samuel Lambert, Dr. Simon Flexner, and Dr. Charles L. Dana.

Among the 150 present were Dr. Frederic Brush, Superintendent of the Post-Graduate Medical School; Dr. Arthur F. Chace, Secretary; Dr. K. K. MacAlpine, Dr. G. R. Pleek, and Dr. George I. Miller.

E.C. Babcock for the Osborne Co., NYC wrote to Sam. "At the suggestion of Mr. Samuel J. Woolf, we have made a reproduction of a portrait of you painted by him. This picture we are planning to issue as an art calendar, but before doing so, we would like to know if you are entirely satisfied with this particular portrait" [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 27 M.L.H." See IVL's journal for Feb. 13, 1906, which clearly shows the portrait was unsatisfactory.

Earle R. Clemens for the Rhyolite (Nev.) Herald wrote to ask Sam for a short story "about the old days in Nevada." He remarked he should be a relative, given his name [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 29 M.L.H."

Curtis Lubin for Town & Country replied to Clemens or Lyon's Jan. 19, saying he would be "most pleased to come to Redding on the train leaving New York at 8:50" on Jan. 25 [MTP]. Note: see Jan. 14 from Lubin.

January 21 Thursday – Sam was in New York City.

Harry Windsor Dearborn for Henry W. Marsh sent an engraved card invitation to tea on Thursday afternoon, Jan. 21 from 3 to 6 p.m. at the residence of Mr. & Mrs. Henry W. Marsh, NYC [MTP].

Mrs. Emma Sheridan Fry wrote to notify Sam of her resignation from the Educational Theatre, enclosing a copy of her resignation to Minnie Herts, which stated her inability to work with Mr. Heniger, "your young Stage Director" [MTP]. Note: Fry wanted no editorial interference.

John B. Godwin of Waverly Magazine, Boston wrote to ask Sam's permission to publish his speech given for the Lincoln dinner in New York in 1901 [MTP]. Note: IVL wrote: "Don't remember anything about it"; see Feb. 11, 1901 entry with NY Times article on his speech (Vol. III).

Enoch Harpole, Chicago attorney, wrote noting that many diseases, like Bright's disease or Rigg's disease were named after eminent doctors. He offered to "hunt up" some disease that might be called "Twain's complaint" or disorder [MTP].

Charles Fiecces wrote from Toledo, Ohio:

I know it is a going to affront you to know who this letter is from it is from a poor Negro barber that has thought of you many a time and more so ever time I see your name in the papers. I have told a lot of my barber companions about you but they have laughed at me when I told them I have shaved you and they have said I was crazy. I remember quite well in 1886 when the Steamer India was plying between Buffalo and Duluth, Minn. [MTP]. Note: see June 22 to 27 1886 (Vol. II) entries, when the Clemens family took a five-day trip on the steamer India from Buffalo to Duluth on their way to Keokuk.

January 22 Friday – Sam was in New York City.

George King wrote from Clinton, NY to Sam. A local news article made George recall being in Orion's office 45 years before as a carpenter and millwright in the employ of the "silver state reduction works." He'd read all of Mark Twain's books and remarked on several. He recalled being in the choir with Sam at "good old Father White's church." He spent several pages mentioning names from the 1861-1865 period, including Deacon Taylor, H.B. Pomeroy, Ben Small, Mr. Wasson, Atty Gen Edwards, W.D. Toeringson, Jim Sturdevant, Abe Curry, Mr. Kinkead, H.M. Yerrington, and J. Neeley Johnson, ex-governor of Calif. [MTP]. Note: see also the Nov. 23, 1908 from J.T. Lockhart who also mentioned "Parson White."

January 23 Saturday – Sam was in New York City with Isabel Lyon, who became ill and was forced to return to Stormfield, where she kept her bed for a couple of weeks [Feb. 5 to Blackmer]. Notes: Sam would return home on Jan. 30. Isabel would suffer a mental and physical breakdown, caused perhaps by her great volume of work, and a growing conflict with Clara Clemens. It may have been a standard hen-house issue of control and of access to Sam's time and attention. She stayed in bed back at Stormfield and is mentioned in several of Clemens' letters after he returned to Stormfield on Jan. 30. On Feb. 23, Isabel Lyon went to her mother's in Hartford to recover more fully from her breakdown. She then announced her engagement to Ashcroft. In the meantime, Clara investigated the books for Stormfield, gathering ammunition which led to Lyon's dismissal.

Walter C. Bellows for the Children's Educational Theatre wrote to Sam inquiring about putting on Huck Finn as a play [MTP]. Note: IVL directed him to apply to Miss Elizabeth Marbury.

Poultney Bigelow wrote (before Jan. 23) to Sam.

My dear Mark Twain — / Are you in town, this Saturday 23—?

If so will you come dine at the Royalton in 43 str. West, between 5th and 6th next the Hippodrome. Only a few congenials, maybe 8 in all—singing and smoking. Please bring Clara with you if you can come and she be free. I am here for a week & then a week to Boston [MTP].

Samuel H. Gressitt wrote from Baltimore, Md. to Sam, having returned from a world trip. In Egypt he met a guide who claimed to have been Twain's guides when visiting the pyramids. Gressitt asked how many minutes it took Clemens to climb the Great Pyramid and if he climbed others [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Doesn't remember but it can be found in the book"; see Oct. 5, 1867 entry (Vol. I) for visit to Pyramids.

Anna Heinrichs for the Papyrus Club of St. Louis wrote to ask Sam for "a little letter" they might read at their Feb. 19 meeting [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 27 M.L.H."

John E. Rosser wrote from Nacogdoches, Texas to ask Sam for 200 words on the subject "Why do we laugh?" If anyone might answer that question, he felt Twain could [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 29 M.L.H."

Samuel Johnson Woolf wrote from NYC to enlist Sam to go see his brother's play The Vampire at the Hackett Theatre. The play was rec'd with mixed reviews and Woolf, who had painted Sam's portrait and learned Clemens' first play got poor reviews, felt "a word" from Clemens would help. "I shall have a box at your disposal," and asked if he might "end him a line" about the play [MTP].

January 24 Sunday – Sam was in New York City.

J.C. Hawkins for the Missouri Univ. Savitar wrote to ask Sam for “a small literary contribution.” He mentioned the 1906 Savitar which had been dedicated to Clemens, “the greatest Missourian” [MTP].

Anna Rosenkranz wrote from Bromberg, Prussia to ask permission to translate Eve’s Diary into German for their newspapers [MTP].

January 25 Monday – Sam was in New York City.

Dr. Henry M. Chase and the Boston Dispensary Staff sent an invitation card for a dinner on Jan. 25 at 7 p.m. at the Hotel Brunswick, Boston [MTP].

Herbert F. Knowles, “a complete stranger” wrote from Hartford to Sam. Knowles was writing an article, “How I felt after my first smoke” and asked for “a few lines relating to your experience” [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Jan 27 M.L.H.”

W.H. Smith wrote from Huntington, Ind. to ask if he might use Sam’s sketch “Jim Wolfe and the Tomcats” in a publication made for local distribution [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Jan 29 M.L.H.”

A. Vogt, playwright wrote from Dallas, Tex. to ask Sam’s help in gaining a manager to produce any of his eight plays [MTP]. Note: IVL: “ansd”

George W. Wharton wrote from NYC to ask Sam to “raise his powerful voice” against the building of “a great Court House in the McDougal St. corner” of Washington Square [MTP]. Note: “Mr. Clemens has ceased to be a resident of NY. In his opinion, if it is a question of politic, then no citizen’s personal appeal will avail.”

January 26 Tuesday – Sam was in New York City.

January 27 Wednesday – Sam was in New York City.

Mary E. Boynton wrote before this date to ask Sam to appear before a “very enthusiastic Staten Island audience.” What were his terms? [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Jan 27 M.L.H.”

George Dickson wrote from Alton, Ill. enclosing a formal studio portrait of himself, having been called “Mark Twain” by his friends (in file; not much resemblance). Would Clemens send one of his pictures? [MTP]. Note: “Ans. Jan 27 M.L.H.”

Julia Langdon Loomis (Mrs. Edward E. Loomis) wrote from Elmira to Sam. The letter is faded and bled through and difficult to read but she complains they’ve been missing seeing him in town [MTP].

L.H. Mayer wrote from NYC to ask Sam for one or two signed pictures of himself to be sold at the Fair of the Working Girls’ Vacation Society [MTP].

F.J. Nilan for Western Union wrote to ask Sam for an additional 35 cents in charges for the telephoning of a telegram to Jean Clemens, c/o Dr. Harland, Gloucester, Mass. on May 24, 1908 [MTP].

K.V. Roedern wrote a poem to Sam from Hillbourne Club, Katonah, NY, about activities there [MTP].

Mrs. Samuel S. Sanders, “frightened from my own audacity” in addressing him, wrote from Weyland, Mass. to discuss her genealogy, though her family name was spelled “Clemons” [MTP].

William M. Schwitzer wrote from NYC to invite Sam to the annual dinner of the Bibliophile Society on Feb. 1 at the Hotel Astor. "Our roster fairly bristles with notable names—I am sure you know them all" [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 27 M.L.H."

Mrs. A.A. Wolcott wrote to Sam, enclosing a three stanza poem based on the poem placed upon Susy Clemens' tombstone [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 29 M.L.H."

January 28 Thursday – Sam was in New York City.; In Redding, Conn., Mary L. Howden ("Miss Mollie") wrote for Sam to Mrs. L.T. Guilford.

1) Dear Madam

X and to say that as many ladies have written papers on him for their [lunch] societies for many [years past] it is not necessary for him to grant permission. He wishes me to say that he would be glad to answer your letter with his own hand but that the mail is so voluminous that it is [impossible] for him to attend to any of it personally [MTP]. SEE below:

Before Jan. 28, Mrs. L.T. Guilford wrote from Platteville, Wisc. to Sam, having been appointed by the Tourist Club of her town to prepare a paper on Mark Twain and wished his permission in writing [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Jan 28 M.L.H."

January 28 Thursday ca. – Sam was in New York City. In Redding, Conn., Mary L. Howden ("Miss Mollie") wrote for Sam to Samuel Johnson Woolf, Secretary of Holbein Studios, 139 W. 55, N.Y.C.

Dear Sir

X is not in R at present has been away for some time and the date of his return is uncertain. I can say for him [illegible] that it is [impossible] for him to write critical articles of any kind. Even if he had time and inclination to do so he would be prevented by his contract with his publishers. This contract is so binding Mr. C. is unable to overstep its limits for intimate friends and strangers have no claim upon him whatsoever [MTP]. Note the uncertainty of Sam's return from NYC.

January 29 Friday – Sam was in New York City and enjoyed a birthday dinner party for H.H. Rogers, "a pretty large one, for it is a big family when they all get together" [Jan. 31 to Sturgis]. Note: this would be HHR's last birthday.

In Redding, Conn., Mary L. Howden ("Miss Mollie") wrote for Sam to an unidentified woman. Jan 29. "1) Dear Madam / X [thank] you for your kind letter and for sending the verses which he is glad to see. He wishes me to say that he is sorry not to be able to answer your letter with his own hand but his correspondence is so voluminous that it is [impossible] for him to attend to it personally" [MTP].

Gerald Keith, a high-school student in Brockton, Mass. wrote to Sam perplexed about the footnote in Ch. 20 of RI about the 16th chapter of Daniel in the Bible [MTP].

The Republican Club of New York City wrote to Sam, having rec'd the print back of the Quaker City, and advised he'd purchased the print from J.B. Bradley dealer on the corner of Nassau and Liberty Street for $5. Evidently Sam had inquired as to the source [MTP].

January 30 Saturday – In the evening Sam returned to Redding, Conn. from N.Y.C. after a ten day visit [Jan. 31 to Sturgis].

Sam's brief article, "The New Planet" ran in Harper's Weekly. Hill calls it "uninspired" [218].

Sara Lippman wrote from Phila. to ask if she might send one of his books for his autograph [MTP].

Charles P.G. Scott for the Simplified Spelling Board sent a printed "Call For Third Annual Meeting, April 6 and 7, 1909" [MTP].

January 31 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

My dear Annianlouise—

I have been in New York ten days, visiting friends, & got back home with some guests yesterday evening by the light of the fresh snow, no lanterns being needed & none displayed either at the front door or in the loggia. So the days are really lengthening, & I am so glad!

Mr. Rogers had a birthday, night before last, (69) & a family dinner-party—a pretty large one, for it is a big family when they all get together. He was a happy man, for the last rail of his railroad was laid down & spiked that morning—a road just twice as long (lacking 6 miles) as the distance from New York to Boston; & he has built the bulk of it since the panic began & all large enterprises were hampered, crippled, & thrown into confusion. A stately achievement for a man his age. The first through train will leave Norfolk tomorrow for the terminus, 446 miles west'ard.

Benares [Ashcroft] went to England for me a month or more ago, & is on the ocean, now, homeward bound & aware that there's trouble awaiting him when he arrives at this house on the evening of the 6th of February: for I sent a message by him to the English angel-fish, & he has confessed, himself, by letter to Miss Lyon, that he utilized that opportunity to flirt with her. I think he hunts for trouble. The last time Margaret was here we took her home to her school at Irvington-on-Hudson, & they flirted all the way, in the most mutinous disregard of my authority.

The burglar notice is to appear in "Country Life in America," but I don't know the date. The article is by that gifted and charming lady Mrs. Doubleday, who writes the books about the birds.

1 p.m. I think I will get up, now, & talk with the guests while they feed. / Affectionately ...

[MTP; MTAq 246-7].

Sam's new guestbook entry:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Frederick T. Leigh	" " [New York]	Jan. 31 1909
Sara Leigh	" "	" " "

Sam inscribed a copy of Eve's Diary with an aphorism to Sarah Leigh, who was a guest at Stormfield with her husband Frederick: "To Mrs. Sarah Leigh, with the kindest regards of the Author. Clothes make the man, but they seldom improve the woman. Truly Yours Mark Twain Jan.31/09 Stormfield." [MTP: Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogs, Dec. 11, 1956, No. 1719, Item 137]. Note: Frederick Leigh was treasurer of Harpers.

February – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Laura H. Frazer, childhood sweetheart.

Dear Laura,

Who of this list, have passed away? You will not be able to tell me in all cases, but tell me those you know about.

In case of the dead, strike a thin line through the name, thus, John Garth (a line through) and leave the names of the living untouched. Then return the list to me. Can you do this for me? A good many on the list were schoolmates and playmates of yours and mine. If you can call to mind others, still living, please give me their names. It is lonesome. Miss Lyon is sick and there isn't a guest in the house. However, Clara is bringing a lot tomorrow. Paine and Louise have sailed for Europe, to go over the ground traversed in 'Innocents Abroad' and make notes. It is Louise's first venture from home, and she is the delightedest child I have seen in a hundred years.

Affectionately, S. L. C.

The list: Bennie Blankenship, Danie Blankenship, Arch Fuqua, Bill Kaufman, Irving Ayres, Lub Ayres, George RoBards, Lora Dunlap, Line Dunlap, Jim Forman, Ruel Gridley, Jennie Brady, Margaret Kooneman, Samy Craig, Joe Craig, Nannie Owsley, Tom Collins, Mary Nash, Mary Miller, Theodore Eddy, Theodore Dawson, Clay RoBards, Ed Stevens, Lige Hawkins, Charley Buchanan, Sophia Hawkins, Ada McVeigh, Artemesia Briggs, John Brown, Riter Levering, John Garth, Helen Garth, John Briggs, John RoBards, Jimmy McDaniel, Alec, [sic] Lacy, Mary Lacy, Heney Meredith, Laura Hawkins, Sara RoBards and sister, Mary Moss, Neal Moss, Ray Moss, Andy Fuqua, Kitty Shoot, John Shoot, Fanny Parey, Becky Parey, John Meredith, Will Bowen, Sam Bowen, Mary Bowen Green, Sam Nash, Bill Nash, Bill Pitts, William T. League, David Garth, Ed Pierce, Roberta Jones, Big Joe Buchanan, Mrs. Horr, Miss Horr, Miss Terry, Miss Newcomb, Sam Honeyman, Lavinia Honeyman, Tom Blankenship [Hannibal Evening Courier Post, Mar. 6, 1935 p. 3C]. Note: see Frazer's Mar. 16 reply.

Sam also wrote to an unidentified publisher or bookseller asking for the second volume of IA in red cloth to be sent "right away" as he wanted it for "Payne" who was sailing soon [MTP]. Note: See Feb. 3 inscription to Louise Paine, which cinches this for Albert Bigelow Paine, who was going to Europe to retrace Sam's travels in IA. Sam insisted on spelling it his way.

Albert I. Frye wrote to Sam [MTP]. Note: also dated Aug. 1908; see that entry.

Sara Lippman wrote to Sam thinking he'd misunderstood her request—of course she would send him one of his books for an autograph—she was not asking him to send a book [MTP].

February 1 Monday – Mrs. Mary Stewart Gatter wrote from Newburgh, NY to ask Sam for a signed photo to sell to the benefit of St. Luke's Hospital [MTP].

Winifred Holt for the NY Assoc. for the Blind wrote to thank Sam for the use of his name at their Bal de Tete [MTP].

New York Assoc. for the Blind wrote to Sam [MTP].

Robert Chapin Pepper for Gamma Delta Psi Alumni Assoc., Springfield, Mass. wrote to Sam "wondering if there would be any possibility of your being induced to address an audience in Springfield" [MTP].

Young Men's Lincoln Club of Five Points, NYC wrote to ask Sam to send a "sentiment about Abraham Lincoln" for their Third Anniversary Celebration [MTP].

Bridget W. Guinness (Mrs. Benjamin S. Guinness) wrote to invite Sam to dine on Thursday, Feb. 11 at 8:30. "It wd be so nice to see you again & I'm so glad you have not forgotten me ... White clothes please" [MTP]. Note: file puts this as "before Feb. 3" and since the card is headed "Monday" it is placed on this day. The blue postcard was not mailed so likely delivered.

February 2 Tuesday – John W. Davis for NY Education Dept. wrote to ask Sam to use an excerpt from TA for a reader he was preparing for use in public schools [MTP].

James Ephraim McGirt, "a New Negro Poet" wrote from Phila. to ask Sam for "an expression...in regards to the merits of" his work. A flyer with McGirt's photo is in the file [MTP].

February 3 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Mai H. Coe and William Robertson Coe.

Dear Coes:

It has arrived, & Miss Lyon, who is ill in bed & under contract with the doctor to keep perfectly quiet for ten days, has gone into raptures & frenzies & convulsions of admiration & delight over it. But a happy earthquake doesn't hurt a patient, it sets the drowsy circulation going at lightning-express gait, & does good. And that is what has resulted in this instance.

It surely is the most beautiful thing & the most sumptuous I have ever seen, & I thank you heartily. It would be too fine for some people, but it fits me, because I was born a king & got changed in the cradle.

You ought to be here now, to enjoy the spectacle of the white hills & vales, & I would wish you were here if Miss Lyon were not out of commission. But I know I can trust you to keep your promise & come by & by.
/ With the best love of / SLC [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Maud W. Littleton (Mrs. Martin W. Littleton) in N.Y.C.

Dear Mrs. Linthicum:

Miss Lyon says yes; & so we shall hope & expect to see the Linthicums & Lady Constance & Sir Edward arrive here Saturday after next. And she says won't you please pass this invitation on, to the parties of the second part?

Miss Lyon is ill in bed, therefore I am secretary, wherefore brevity's the word, brevity being the soul of indolence. / With love, / ... [MTP].

Sam also inscribed a copy of IA to Louise Paine: "To / Louise Payne, [sic] M.A. [Member Aquarium] / with the love of / The Author / === / He laughs best who laughs least. / Truly Yours / Mark Twain / Stormfield, / Feb.3/09." [MTP].

Mary L. Howden ("Miss Mollie") was replaced by a male stenographer, William E. Grumman on this day [Hill 208, 229].

Percy A. Clisdell wrote from Buenos Aires, Argentina to ask Sam for two autographed photographs. A newspaper clipping is in the file from the Buenos Aires Herald along with Clisdell's business card from General Electric Co. as South American manager, and Don Juan McMillan, who was to receive the photographs [MTP].

Richard J. Echols, "a poor cripple," wrote from Eusley, Ala. to ask Sam how he might publish his book—how did Sam manage his? Did Sam have money to help himself or did someone help? Echols needed to help support his aged mother [MTP].

Harrison Maitland for Culture Club Bureau, NYC wrote to tout a service of sending gifts by their staff of "competent, cultured people" [MTP].

Laura J. Post wrote on a small name card, 24 East 33rd Street: "I shall be happy to see you next Friday afternoon at four o'clock. It may interest you to see the gift which will be presented to Madame Sembrich on February sixth" [MTP].

February 4 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a postcard (with a picture of Stormfield) to Ruth Woods in Philippi, W. Va.: "Thank you ever so much, dear Ruth, for suggesting it, but the truth is I am much too old & indolent to take up writing again. / Sincerely your friend / SL. Clemens" [MTP].

Henry M. Chase wrote to Sam enclosing "a memento of the dinner given to the Board of Managers of the Boston Dispensary...it contains much of interest in the life of the institution." No "memento" is in the file [MTP].

Margaret Chenoweth wrote from Birmingham, Ala. to congratulate Sam on his 73rd birthday and to repeat how proud she was of the card he'd sent in 1908. "Your little admirer..." [MTP].

Dodge & Morrison, Architects, NYC wrote to solicit Sam as president of the Children's Theatre for them to present plans for the new building [MTP].

Edward Freiborger for The Friars, NYC wrote to Sam, remembering his "Babies" speech in Chicago in 1879. He was now devoted to drama in NYC. He asked if Sam could donate a set of his books for the Friars' library [MTP].

Russell & Erwin Mfg. per W. Donaldson wrote to poke Sam for $862.90 on their bill of Dec.2 "for Hardware furnished at your house at Redding..." [MTP].

February 5 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer.

Good! I've heard from you at last. Often & often, in the last week or so, I have said to myself, "What can have become of my Margaret?" Yesterday I said to Miss Lyon "I mean to take paper & pen & give her a scolding." She took no notice of it in words, but her unbelieving face said, "If Margaret waits till you scold her she'll have to wait a good while." I suppose it's true. In fact I know it is. On paper, anyway. Next time I'll take to the telephone.

Meantime I'll tell you what is the fact: you may always leave me letterless 3 weeks & I won't complain—then if you don't write me, dear heart, something will happen! It will happen at the end of this month if I don't hear from you, you busy little scamp.

You've been having very industrious good times, dear, & you are entirely excusable for not writing me.

We went down to New York 16 days ago, (Jan. 20) & we were going up to see you on the 23^d, but Miss Lyon had to return home. I was ever so disappointed. She didn't get back to New York. The doctor put her to bed, & she has never been out of it since.

We had a wireless from Benares [Ashcroft] yesterday, saying his ship would reach New York tomorrow (Saturday) in time for him to take the 3.32 for Stormfield. I wish you were coming with him. No—it wouldn't do, you would get to flirting with him; & if I were not along he couldn't protect himself.

Look at the handwriting of this enclosed letter. When I saw the superscription I was so glad! And then I found it wasn't from you, after all. But dear me the resemblance is strong. Burn it, dear—I've answered it.

Yes, I'll give your love to Miss Lyon & Ashcroft, because you have been good & have given me more than you give to them.

Spring's a-coming! Then you'll come, too, & your mother. And the Misses Tewksbury, too, I hope.

How are the cats? Oh, well, you ought to see Danbury! (I've forgotten the name you knew him by.) He is the handsomest creature afloat. And so wise, & so thoughtful. Night before last he made a spring & landed on the table & hit a ball a wipe with his paw just as Mr. Payne [si] was delivering a shot. It lost Payne the game, and he was so aggravated! He got no chance to win another.

With lots of love, you dear child— / S L C [MTP;MTAq 247-8].

February 6 Saturday – Sam's new guestbook:

Hawaii Promotion Co. per Harry P. Wood wrote to Sam. "Your charming letter, acknowledging receipt of the Koa Mantel piece, came duly to hand." He reminded Clemens of his request for a photograph, negatives and a couple of prints, showing Sam "standing or sitting near the Aloha Mantel" [MTP]. Note: the MTP has no such photograph, and no record was found that one was ever sent.

February 7 Sunday – Clara Clemens and Ossip Gabrilowitsch arrived at Stormfield; at least this date was given in the guestbook. However, on Feb. 8 in a letter to Frances Nunnally, Sam misdated it Feb. 9, which may present confusion. Victor Fischer of the MTP confirms that the Feb. 8 letter was misdated.

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Ossip Gabrilowitsch	“ “ [New York]	Feb. 7 [& following days]
Clara Clemens	“ “	“ 7 “ “ “

G.O. Shields wrote to Sam, enclosing a large advertisement on his lecture “Wild Animals and Snowslides in the Canadian Rockies,” Feb. 6th at 8 p.m. Shields wrote on letterhead of A. Huffaker, M.D., Carson City, Nevada. “It may interest you to know that I am writing this in the room in which you had your office when you lived in this historic city. / Dr. Huffaker owns the house now and it is one of the noted landmarks of the town” [MTP].

February 8 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote “the newest postcard” (“Posing for Admiration”) to daughter Jean.

Your letter has just arrived Jean dear, & is very welcome. Ashcroft is back from England (whither he went on business for me)). Clara & Gabrilowitsch have arrived on a flying visit. Miss Lyon is still in bed in the doctor’s hands. we’ve got a new stenographer—a be one this time—to whom I can dictate [one word canceled] cuss-words if I want to. That’s all the news, dear. Never mind about the mud, it won’t show on that smoke-complected puppy.

With love & kisses—

Father

[in left margin:] These are the newest postcards [MTP]. Note: see insert postcard.

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally.

You dear Francesca, I find your last (Jan.11) in my letter-drawer, marked “not yet answered.” I remember, now—I answered it in imagination & stopped with that; just as] a person winds his watch in imagination, with the result that presently the watch stops.

Soon afterward I went to New York & stayed 8 days. I thought I might never go again, & so I might best make a long stay.

Miss Lyon is sick abed these two or three weeks. It is a sort of nervous break-down, attributable to too much work & care. But she is mending.

Ashcroft has been to England for me, & has just arrived back. He saw a number of your acquaintances & mine. Also he went to the English angel-fish's house to carry a message from me, & she answered the door-bell herself. He asked—in his punishable way—"Are you Dorothy?" and answered "Yes—are you Mr. Ashcroft? We do not know how she was able to make that guess. He dined with her & her parents, & they all went to the theatre.

Dr. Quintard has been here to-day, with a friend: Clara & Gabrilowitsch came yesterd[ay], Ashcroft will arrive again to-night, & Martin Littleton & his wife will come for over Sunday. We have had 141 guests since the end of June—and very very good times. You talk as if maybe you can't come at Easter, & it makes me ever so sorry. Your parents have the first claim, but I am not going to stop hoping yet a while.

I hear Ashcrofts wheels a-churning along; I'll run down & welcome him. Good-bye, dear heart, with lots of love— / S L C

The plumber is coming Feb. 23^d; a girl you would greatly like. She isn't a M. A., but is not without good qualities, nevertheless. She is official plumber of Stormfield, by her own request, but doesn't know how to plumb. Name, Margery Clinton [MTP; MTAq 248-9]. Note: from entries in the guestbook, it seems clear that Clemens wrote this letter on Feb. 8, and misdated it, Apr. 9, which the MTP had cataloged it as. I wrote to Victor Fischer of the MTP explaining the evidence for a Feb. 8 date and he agreed on Apr. 7, 2011.

A.B. Johnson for NJ State Christian Endeavor Union, Newark N.J. wrote for his boy to ask Sam how Clemens acquired his nom-de-plume [MTP].

Lieutenants' Benevolent Assoc. of NYC Police sent an engraved invitation to their annual dinner on Feb. 8 at the Waldorf Astoria [MTP].

February 9 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent the “Posing for Admiration” postcard to Margery Hamilton Clinton. “Ashcroft has must arrived with the news—and your date—Tuesday the 23^d. You are a very dear plumber, & will be most welcome. Bring several changes of soldering irons—for you must stay as long as you can. / Affectionately” [MTP].

E. Mayban Denbeigh wrote from NY asking for “a little message” to read to her literary club [MTP].

Richard Lloyd Jones for Lincoln Farm Assoc., NYC wrote to advise Sam that the Feb 8 meeting would be postponed until Feb. 23 [MTP].

February 10 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a note of introduction “To any friend or acquaintance of mine” for Albert Bigelow Paine, “my biographer & particular friend, who is seeking information concerning me for use in his book.” [MTP]. Note: Sam may have written several of these as two survive, UCCL # 07666 and 08345.

Gribben gives us an item from Sam's A.D. for this day: “While Clemens worked on the manuscript for ‘Is Shakespeare Dead?,’ he intermittently read aloud from Macbeth to Isabel Lyon on 10 February 1909 (IVL's Notes, Berg Collection, TS in MTP)” [628].

American Architect & Building News ran an anonymous article, “Mark Twain’s House at Redding, Connecticut” [Tenney 46: The Twainian Oct. 1939 p.4]. In his third supplement, Tenney adds: “A description of the ‘Stormfield’ house, with a floor plan for the first floor, two photographs of the house, and an autographed photo of MT on the loggia. Text of autograph: ‘The loggia, a production of Howells & Stokes, together with its principal decoration, as furnished by Mark Twain. Oct. ‘09’” [Tenney, ALR Third Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1979) 193-4].

Harold Clemens wrote from NYC to Sam, redirecting a misguided letter intended for Sam [MTP].

Alice Colby wrote from Hamilton, Mo. to ask Sam for a statement of opinion on “The American Girl” for their club reading [MTP].

Max Hinrichs wrote from German to Sam. The letter in German “is a long-winded letter from a student of the law who attempts to be funny by explaining on three pages what he doesn’t want before he finally gets around to saying that he would appreciate an autograph from Twain. The sender is Max Hinrichs, Poldingstr. 17, III, Deutschland, province of Schleswig-Holstein” [MTP]. Note: translation and summary courtesy of Holger Kersten.

Knickerbocker Publishing wrote to confirm for their forthcoming National American Biography whether Sam was one of five, seven or eight children [MTP].

Francis M. Verdi, George Pildrilen, Jacob Delmonte, and Bernard Weisberg wrote for the Educational Theatre for Children to explain recent events of Mrs. Emma Sheridan Fry’s resignation, with whom they sympathized. They asked Clemens to use his influence to reinstate her and listed 23 names in support of their view, and who would leave the group after the Boston performance [MTP]. Note: see Jan. 21 by Mrs. Fry.

February 11 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Beatrice M. Benjamin, granddaughter of H.H. Rogers.

O, come, dear heart, all this enthusiasm over a comparative stranger! But you have studied it over, & know whether it is warranted or not; so it isn’t for me to criticise.

I saw the announcement in the papers, & was properly & sincerely joyful, for your very dear sake. You said you would bring him up here for official inspection & approval: a formality, merely a formality it is true, but it is best, in organized societies, that formalities be observed, & not lightly set aside.

So you must keep your word. And I do hope you can bring your parents too. In Miss Lyon’s opinion your father was altogether delightful in Bermuda, & was “the life of the wake” there; & I think he is the life of the wake all the time.

We are “full up” for this present month, but March is vacant, & I hope you will hurry & name a date in it before it gets a chance to be unvacant—any date you please—& give me day & train & I will attend to transportation from our RR station to the house. Most of our guests manage to shirk business sufficiently to give us a full week-end—that kind of week-end begins with the Friday, you know—and I hope you can manage it too.

I suppose it could be possible that the roads would be in automobiling condition in March—in that case Will Coe can chart your course for you. We can put up your auto & find quarters for your chauffeur. (Darn that dam word, I never know how to spell it.) And I wouldn’t spell it right if I could.

It isn’t likely that I’ll be going to New York, for I get homesick the minute I get out of sight of the house; but if the hangman should send for me—and this is always likely to happen to the pets of the Deity—I’ll be sure to let you know.

There: with a great deal of love from your oldest friend / ... [MTP].

Charles B. Fager, Jr. wrote from Harrisburg, Penn. to ask if Sam would be willing to lecture for the teachers of Harrisburg [MTP].

Thomas R. Slicer, minister, All Soul's Church wrote from NYC to Sam. After praising a play he saw at the Children's Educational, Slicer announced 300,000 members of the new Optimist Club, with an attendant Optimist Publishing Co. and issuance of Optimist's Magazine in April. He asked if Sam would write something for the magazine [MTP].

February 12 Friday – Isabel Lyon's journal noted that Sam was in bed reading "Quakenbores [sic] book on Natural Philosophy" in bed with "a cigar between his teeth". Note: A Natural Philosophy, etc. (1899) by George Payn Quackenbos (1826-1881) [Gribben 565].

George Brunton for the Boone Iowa News-Republican wrote to ask Sam for a letter of encouragement for their YMCA [MTP].

Archibald Henderson wrote from Chapel Hill, NC to advise Sam he was sending under a separate cover a typed MS of an article he'd written about Twain for Harpers. "You will please me by using the blue-pencil as vigorously as you wish. And, "Mr. Coburn writes me that he has developed the pictures he took at 'Stormfield', and that they are 'corkers', to use his expression." He also mentioned he'd sent a "little article" of his in the Atlantic, which he trusted Sam had rec'd [MTP].

Arthur Hillman wrote from Wilkes-Barre, Penn. to Sam. Hillman had "chanced upon a volume dealing with the practice of Thuggee," and recalled in FE Twain's work on the subject, from which Sam had consulted a government work, which he thought must have been tedious reading. The implication is that Hillman forwarded or enclosed the volume he wrote of, since he asked Sam to accept it [MTP].

Robert Underwood Johnson for Century Magazine wrote to Sam. "Knowing your deep interest in theological works I am sure you will be glad to read my son's book 'The Eternal Boy' which he tells me he is sending you." He hoped to see Clemens Saturday at the luncheon of the Academy [MTP].

February 13 Saturday – In Redding, Conn., Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam and Isabel Lyon to professor Archibald Henderson at UNC, Chapel Hill, N.C.

Dear Dr Henderson

Miss Lyon has been in bed for nearly four weeks, & I only got back a few days ago—so that explains why your letter to her has remained unanswered[.] She is still in bed, but wishes me to write & enclose an account of Mr. Clemens' life which his nephew, Sam'l Moffett, wrote some years ago, & which is authentic as to events & accurate as to dates. She wishes me to explain that, while he would be glad to have you write the book, he can't FORMALLY AUTHORIZE you to do so, owing to his arrangements with Mr Paine and the Harpers, but he will be glad to read your MS. and indicate any corrections or additions he would like made. We know of no critical literature in re. Mr Clemens—you would virtually be the prince in that line. We want you to feel that you would have the moral support and real interest of Mr Clemens in your work, but he (and Miss Lyon as his literary executor) feel that they must not, even in the slightest respect, violate the spirit of existing arrangements, which they might be doing if formal authority were extended to you to write the book.

Trusting that this will fully explain Mr Clemens' position, / I remain, / Yours very sincerely /R. W. Ashcroft

P.S.

Mr. Clemens & Miss Lyon send their warm regards & hope to have the pleasure of seeing you here during the summer [MTP].

Archibald Henderson wrote to Sam, enclosing the typed copy of the article he wrote about Twain for Harpers. "I wrote you a letter yesterday. I should be glad to have the MS. back as soon as you finish with it—& O.K. it" [MTP].

Herbert Lane for Curtis Publishing Co., Phila. wrote a rather "foggy" letter to Sam, all of which amounted to a solicitation for him to send writing or refer to them someone who might [MTP].

Clemens dated the first page of his longhand draft of "Is Shakespeare Dead?": "Dictated Feb. 13, 1909" [Hill 217].

February 14 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a reply on a postcard to Mary (not further identified).

Goodspeed's

Picture postcard, no postmarks, not addressed black ink, 2 sides

Front:

Picture of SLC, Jean and someone else—SLC sitting inside window, looking out, and another man standing beside him. Jean standing on outside looking in. [photograph is actually of SLC with Lyon and Ashcroft]
Underneath the picture is written:

Mary, machree,
These are the three
That loveth thee.

OVER

The following is written on the other side:

"You will refrain from turning your nose up at the grammar; it is good enough grammar for a person of your size. You let it alone, & confine your attentions to the sentiment. / Mark" [MTP].

Delbert Dotson, "a perfect stranger in Montana" wrote from Newlon, Mont. to ask Sam's advice on copywriting his comic book [MTP].

J.C. Reeve, Jr. wrote from Freeville, NY to ask Sam to re-edit TS and exclude "expressions of like grade" compared to a list he gave. Reeve wanted to use such an edition for schools. He also asked what year was the TS setting, and "what motive had the author in writing it?" [MTP].

February 15 Monday – Charles E. Hinckley for W.A. Hunter & Co., Nashville, Tenn. wrote to Sam.

I have the honor to say that you are directed, for naval purposes, to read the accompanying article [not in file] and report to the secretary of the navy at Washington, D.C. the proper way of putting our naval vessels through the Suez Canal without so much flub-dub about the pilots. Talk about a little old eighty-seven miles on the Mississipp? Huh!...

late Captain Steamer "Copperopolis" San Francisco to Sacramento.

P.S. / I heard your first failure at Platt's Hall and was just as much ashamed of you as were the editor of "The Bulletin" and his wife [MTP].

Wallace Rice wrote from Chicago to Sam (enclosed in Peter Dunne's of Feb. 16), using Peter Dunne and Elizabeth Wallace to introduce himself, and asking if he might dedicate his book of three articles on American Humorists to Mark Twain. Also, might he “place in the third volume a dozen brief extracts, none...more than a hundred words...” from Twain's works? [MTP].

Herbert Vandyke wrote from NYC to Sam, enclosing the names of five subscribers to the Mark Twain Library at Redding, compliments of Harry Windsor Dearborn [MTP].

February 16 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn., Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam to Archibald Henderson, professor at UNC, Chapel Hill.

Dear Dr Henderson:

Mr. Clemens' comment was: “Mightily interesting and very ingenious.” And he was deeply touched with your reference to Mrs Clemens.

There are but two emendations—that relating to Miss Lyon's building of Stormfield, & that relating to his age when he & Mrs Clemens started out on their debt-paying tour. The house—in its design & decorations—is totally a product of Miss Lyon's mind, and Mr Clemens desires that credit be given her. / Yours very Sincerely / R. W. Ashcroft [MTP]. Note: Hill points out that Sam's credit to Lyon together with Clara's prior decoration of 21 Fifth Ave. proved one source of conflict between the two women [205].

Isabel Lyon wrote to Harriet Whitmore Enders that Ralph W. Ashcroft and she were to be married. Hill quotes from her letter:

“The psychic moment hasn't come yet for telling the King...it won't make any difference in my life work with the King. I'll stay right here, and Benares will come when he can to be with us both” [218]. Note: this was one week before Isabel left to recuperate in Hartford with her mother.

Finley Peter Dunne for American Magazine wrote to Sam enclosing the letter “from a very old friend” (Wallace Rice; Feb. 15). Also, “As president of the — — Human Race Association I intend to call a meeting of our organization very soon. From a number of applications I have chosen you as Caterer and your house as the meeting place...Until then, oh Wise but Wicked! / Ever yours...” [MTP]. Note: MT wrote on the letter in black ink: “From ‘Mr. Dooley’ / ans”

Japan Construction Co., NYC wrote to ask if Sam would like a “Japanese garden” on his grounds [MTP].

Caspar Whitney for Collier's Weekly wrote to ask Sam what the country or outdoors meant to him; he was writing “several distinguished Americans the meaning of the country to them...” He added, “I meant to talk this out the other night when I had the great pleasure of dining with you at Rob Collier's, but the honest God truth is, I was so entertained by your talk of the West and of Zola's extraordinary book, — I entirely forgot it” [MTP]. Note: which of Emile Zola's books is not clear.

February 17 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Oh, you sweet Francesca, what a charming Valentine it is! Dear me but you are beautiful, you little rascal! We all think it just a shade, or maybe part of a shade, more beautiful than the exquisite Atlanta picture of you. Am I to put all the pictures of you out of sight except this one? Is that your idea? It isn't going to happen. I'll merely change them around, from time to time. At present the London picture of you & me is on my dressing-table, here in my bed-room, & the Atlanta gem & the enlarged picture of you & me standing with the pergola-pillars for a background hang in the billiard room. For a time I will keep the new one with me until it is framed, then transfer it & let it glorify the Aquarium—or the “Tank,” as we sometimes call it.

It came in the mail an hour ago, & Ashcroft brought it to me as soon as he had finished his breakfast. It nearly took my breath away. He has just left for New York. He is to get it framed, & bring it back when he comes day after tomorrow for the week-end. The inscription is to be cut out & countersunk in the picture-mat. I am strenuously at work on an article taking sides in the Bacon-Shakespeare controversy, but I can't possibly resume until I've thanked you for this lovely reproduction of your lovely self.

By my calculation you will be snatched up & married by some daring young adventurer within a twelvemonth; & if he is up to standard he will get my blessing—otherwise, bricks in place of it. Fetch him here & let me look him over & make up my mind as to whether I'll have him in the family or not. Beatrice will fetch her young person up, next month, for judgement. She confided to me very privately a fortnight ago, that possesses such a person. She is twenty, & I have known her 16 years. See that you give me early notice, too. It is my right.

My, you ought to see the place this morning! The sun is brilliant, there's a wind blowing, the tall grasses & the shrubs are bowing & scraping, every blade is strung with ice-beads, every bead is white, or blue, or green, or yellow, or red; and so from every window you see a wide & flashing & fiery splendor of diamonds, emeralds, rubies, & all the other imperial jewels you can name or think of. Alas, alas, & you not here!

Most lovingly, you' dear child— / S L C [MTP; MTAq 249-51].

Note: the latter source offers this on Sam's MS he was "hard at work" on: "Between January and March 1909 Clemens worked on his manuscript "Is Shakespeare Dead?," in which he disputed the authorship of Shakespeare's plays. Clemens quoted extensively from a manuscript by Granville George Greenwood (1850-1928), The Shakespeare Problem Restated (1908) without credit, and no one close to him was enthusiastic about the project. Harpers was obliged to publish it, according to the terms of their contract. Lyon recorded that John Albert Macy sent Greenwood's book, which arrived on Feb. 5, 1909. See Feb. 25 to Macy; also Gribben 276.

Mrs. F.M. Andrews wrote from Memphis, Tenn. trying to trace the genealogy of her great uncle Isaiah Sellars, whom she thought was a character in one of Sam's books [MTP].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to advise Sam that he'd been in error when he said Harpers published Ignatius Donnelly's "Cryptogram"—it was his "Atlantis" which they published. The former was impossible to find. "I am sending you to-day two pamphlets which are rather rare on the controversy, and from time to time will send you other Bacon-Shakespeare material.../ A little Stormonth Dictionary was sent you yesterday, which I hope you will like as much as I do. It has the only decent synonyms of any book I know" [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Thank him ever so much for the interest he has taken"

Elmira Press Club per J. Maxwell Beers, Milo Shanks, John M. Connelly, and Grant De Ved were listed on a printed "Annual Banquet Bulletin" sent for Feb. 27 at 7:30 p.m. at the Hotel Rathbun, tickets $3 [MTP].

Lilian A. Gibbs wrote from Peterborough (NH) to enclose a drawing from a newspaper cutting of Mark Twain. The hand seems to be a child's [MTP].

Frank Cavendish Lascelles wrote from the Savoy Hotel, London (on S.S. Lusitania notepaper) to bid Sam "Au Revoir" [MTP].

February 18 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margery H. Clinton in N.Y.C.

Very dear Plumber:

(who doesn't know how to plumb):

Benares is away, the business part of the mail is in the hands of the stenographer, Miss Lyon is feeble & can undertake only of the personal letters—so I have stopped work & assumed charge of the other a, selecting your letter to her as a part of that third & adding it to a pair of letters to me, thus completing the tale. I will resume work presently—interesting work it is: throwing bricks at Shakspeare; for privately I'm a Baconian—not a recent one, but a Baconian of 50 years' standing. Does that shudder you? Very well, I will tie you in a chair when you come, & read it to you, & make you shudder some more.

The 3.32 train Tuesday? Yes, that is the right one, the only right one. I thought of your staying longer, & I told you to bring a change of soldering-irons, but you shall be indulged: you shall go away on Saturday (not Friday). This on condition that you come back later & stay a week; & longer if you can. Not many who know you would let you off as easy as I'm doing.

I wish you could have been here through this long illness of Miss Lyon's. Nothing but rest was prescribed by the doctor, & you would have been the very person to furnish it & to ward off the irritations.

With love to you, best & respectful regards to Miss Caroline, & welcome to you both— / SLC [MTP].

Sam also answered the Feb. 16 from Finley Peter Dunne at The American Magazine, N.Y.C. addressing his reply, “(or, in his absence in jail)”:

Dear Peter:

To the G. D. A. meeting, hail & a hearty welcome! Name the date—& name it quick. Put it in March—any date you please—& name it before the month gets to filling up. What is left of February is already full-up, but I shall hold-up March till I hear from you. Commit Howells & Rob to a date, then impound them. Meantime, consider & determine the commissariat requirements, aside from the whisky—I've already got that. The Association has been separate & wandering & voiceless too long—let's not fail to get together this time & make a noise.

Miss Lyon has your friend's letter & will see that it is answered within a couple of days. We are short-handed. Miss Lyon's stenog is doing the business part of the morning's mail, but Ashcroft is away & Miss L & I have divided the personal part of it betune us.

Adieu, good-bye, aufwiederschen, O only righteous one! / Yours ever / Mark [MTP].

Harry Windsor Dearborn for the Robert Fulton Monument wrote to advise Sam that Frank Lascelles sailed on Feb. 17, and to offer progress for the permanent monument to Fulton and a Historical Pageant to be held in NY [MTP].

Arthur E. Dole for New Hampshire Governor's Ball sent a printed invitation to the Governor's Ball on Feb. 18 at the “new State Armory, Concord,” tickets $5 [MTP]. Note: New Hampshire.

N.A. Kimmish wrote from Lincoln, Nebr. to ask for Sam's autograph [MTP]. Note: “Auto sent Mch 28”

New York Evening Telegram wrote to ask Sam for “a few lines” of “personal view” on Omar Fitz Gerald and his Rubayat (translator) [MTP].

Henry B. Quinby, Governor of N. Hampshire sent an engraved card for a reception and ball at Concord on Feb. 18 [MTP].

Before Feb. 18 Bridget W. Guinness, replied to an invitation for a musicale at 21 Fifth Avenue on Thursday, Feb. 18 at 9 p.m. “Dear Mr. Clemens. Does this mean Tuesday 18th or Thursday 20th as Thursday is not the 18th. What reply am I to make?” [MTP].

February 19 Friday – John N. Ryan for Equitable Life Assurance, NYC wrote to ask Sam for “something from you” for the Year Book for the Pleiades Club, NYC [MTP].

A.H. Tomlinson wrote from Swathmore, Penn. to Sam. He'd sent a copy of “The Man That Corrupted Hadleyburg” and asked that Sam sign it with a few words and place the date on it [MTP].

February 20 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer.

Attention, you dear little tyke!

You will have a long vacation at Easter: can't you & your mother spend it with us? I do hope so. When Ashcroft-Benares goes to New York Tuesday, I want him to catch your mother on the telephone & discuss the matter with her. / With lots of love [MTP; MTAq 251].

Sam's brief article, "A Capable Humorist" ran in Harper's Weekly. Hill calls it "uninspired" [218]. See also [Tenney, ALR Second Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1978) 176].

Sam's new guestbook (signed):

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Mary Lawton	New York	Feb. 20
Clara Clemens	N.Y. & Stormfield	" "

Herman Bernstein wrote from Brooklyn to Sam. "I take the liberty of sending you a few extracts from Leonid Andreyev's story of the Seven Who Were Hanged" and asked if Clemens would "write a few lines as an introduction to Andreyev's story, which Bernstein planned to have published in book form [MTP]. Note: two enclosures are in the file, one an article from The Independent, "A Story Which Will Never Be Finished" by Andreyev, and the other a full page from the Nov. 8, 1908 NY Times, title of "The Seven Who Were Hanged." Not in Gribben.

Archibald Henderson signed a Registry Return Receipt to Sam confirming the return of his MS [MTP].

Lotos Club per Alexander C. Humphreys wrote to invite Sam to a dinner for Andrew Carnegie at the club house on Wed., Mar. 17 at 6:30. "The Board sincerely hopes that you will be able to accept, and be prepared to say a few words" [MTP].

February 21 Sunday – In Redding, Conn., Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote for Sam to prof. Archibald Henderson, University of N. Carolina, Chapel Hill. "Dear Dr Henderson: / We spell it: 'UMPAWAUG'—not 'Umpawag, as you had it" [MTP]. Note: Umpawaug, named after Indians who deeded land in 1686; a district, and road in Redding, Conn. Also a cemetery, across the road from the original Mark Twain Library, which began in a chapel.

February 22 Monday

February 23 Tuesday – Isabel Lyon left Stormfield to recover from her breakdown at her mother's house in Hartford. She was there ten days. Hill writes of Clara Clemens' arrival and of the ensuing controversy of suspicion:

Just as Isabel left for Hartford, Clara and her friend Mary Lawton arrived in Stormfield for a visit [see note below]. Clara had been persuaded by Miss Lawton and Dr. Quintard that the financial restrictions that Miss Lyon had placed on Clara were unwarranted, and she apparently began insisting to her father that Miss Lyon was embezzling his money. Clara's nagging had an effect on her father that was noticeable even to outsiders [218]. Note: The guestbook shows Clara and Lawton's arrival at Stormfield three days prior, on Saturday, Feb. 20. Hill then quotes from a letter from Mrs. Albert Bigelow Paine to her husband, who was now in the Holy land.

...poor old man is being driven almost crazy, and he said that until three weeks ago he thought he was happy and well off, but since then it has been h—— and that if things did not get better he would cut his G—— D—— throat—It would not be surprising what he might do—

Mr. Ashcroft and Miss Lyon are to be married! And it's a sworn secret just now, but I suppose soon, what can he be thinking about but I suppose they think that is the only way out and the only thing to do since they have criticized Clara [218-19].

Frank R. Lawrence for Lotos Club wrote to Sam, inviting him to speak at a dinner honoring Andrew Carnegie [MTP]. Note: see Feb. 25 to H.H. Rogers; Sam initially declined due to "keeping Hotel," but after changed his mind and accepted, if he could dine elsewhere, arrive after 10 p.m. and not be a scheduled speaker.

Sam's new guest book:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Miss Margery Clinton, O.P.	N.Y.	" [Feb.] 23
Miss Caroline Rogers	" "	" [Feb.] 23

Sara Lippman wrote before this date from Phila. that she was sending her copy of TS for Sam to sign [MTP]. Note: "Book returned Feb. 23, 1909" on reverse.

National Arts Club sent an engraved card of invitation at a reception for the opening of the John W. Alexander Retrospective Exhibition, Feb. 21 [MTP].

James Roby wrote from Berlin, Conn. to Sam hoping to be able to quote Sam's remarks on Simplified Spelling in the NY Tribune. Roby wrote three pages about the nation's illiteracy and the need for a common language with simple spelling [MTP].

February 24 Wednesday – Elizabeth P. Brown wrote from NYC to Sam.

I shall put yesterday down as one of the days in which something really happened for it was last evening that your letter came.

Irene was a dear to suggest your writing—and you—what shall I say about you for doing as she suggested?

Anyway, I thank you very much indeed. [She regretted not being able to speak to him the day he called at her school. She thought Irene Gerken] "a most bewitching little miss" [MTP]. Note: IVL: "From Irene's teacher, Miss Brown"

Anthony Hope Hawkins wrote from London to thank Sam for a signed book his friend had "extorted" from Clemens. "I hope you are as well and flourishing as when we last met in this land" [MTP].

C.F. Stromeyer, furniture, NYC wrote that they were holding some articles for him but had no orders for same. What disposition should be made? A couch, side chair, arm chairs and a music box [MTP]

February 24-28 Sunday – Isabel Lyon wrote to Sam, confessing she and Ralph W. Ashcroft were to be married.

I've been thinking it all over—this, about Benare....I can't go on alone carrying the dear weight of wonderful Stormfield direction. Together we can work for you. And you will have his love joined with mine, and my love strengthened by his to stand by you and yours as long as you need us. .

...So I think, dear beautiful King, that before I come back to you, we'll go quietly to New York and be married [MTP; Hill 219].

February 25 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to John Albert Macy.

Dear Mr. Macy: / Thank you for Greenwood's book. I have read it most carefully, and have stolen meat enough from it to stuff yards and yards of sausage-gut in my vast Autobiography and make it look like my own. And really the gut is mine. My, but I have enjoyed that book!

With love to you all,
Clemens.

Don't forget to send that other book [MTP]. Note: Clemens worked on his manuscript "Is Shakespeare Dead?", in which he disputed the authorship of Shakespeare's plays and quoted extensively from a manuscript by Granville George Greenwood. See Feb. 17 to Nunnally, notes.

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Dear Mr. Rogers: / I love you, & I love Frank Lawrence, & I love St. Andrew; & so I would strain many points to Yes a proposition from you, when I believe God to be on your side, as in the present instance. (And, I may add, as usual.) But I can't come, because I am keeping hotel, & no train comes or goes without bringing me a guest or robbing me of one—& so I am always on deck. All my beds—as usual—will be full on St. Patrick's Day, & I shall be here to collect the tips. You must thank Lawrence for me, & give him my love.

I note what you say: That you & Mrs. Rogers are coming as soon as there's good automobiling. I am very glad & shall watch the roads./ With love to you both, / S. L. C. [MTHHR 658-9]. Note: Frank R. Lawrence, president of the Lotos Club, wrote on Feb. 23 asking for Sam to speak at a dinner in honor of Andrew Carnegie on St. Patrick's Day, March 17. At first he declined, then changed his mind.

Beatrice M. Benjamin wrote from NYC to thank Sam for his letter and the "excellent picture." She was "most anxious" to see his new house [MTP]. Note: H.H. Roger's granddaughter.

February 26 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Jean now at the Unkeway Farm in Babylon, Long Island, N.Y.

You dear Jean, I was glad to hear from you. I have a photograph of your house, & I think it is most attractive. For your sake I hope it is as pleasant as it looks.

That poor old Geronimo! I am glad his grand old patriot heart is at peace, no more to know wrong & insult at the hands of the Christian savage.

I am enjoying these days; for after long idleness I am at work with the pen again—on an article of considerable length: throwing bricks at Shakespeare; bricks which have lain piled in repose for fifty years; it has been just that long that I have held the belief that he didn't write a line of the Plays & Poems that pass under his name. I think he & Mother Eddy are just about a pair—a pair of humbugs.

Miss Lyon has gone to Hartford for ten days, sick. She went three days ago.

Mary Lawton is here for a few days. She has got the leading part in a fine play, Clara says, & will appear in it next winter.

Dear me, how the wind does howl & rage around this house the past three days and nights! It is as good & fine as being in mid-Atlantic in a tempest. The place is well & happily named.

Jean, the idea is that these formidable new war-inventions will make war impossible by & by—but I doubt it. Man was created a bloody animal, & I think he will always thirst for blood & will manage to have it. I think he is far & away the worst animal that exists; & the only untamable one. The wild creatures the President is going to Africa to hunt are very much his superiors in morals, conduct, disposition & respectability, I think.

With love & many kisses— / Father [MTP]. Note: Geronimo, born Goyahkla, Goyaalé: "one who yawns" (1829-1909), chief of the Chiricahua Apache, died on Feb. 17; he fought for decades against both Mexico and the U.S. The Mexicans named him Geronimo.

February 27 Saturday – Pieter Bausch wrote from Amsterdam, Holland to thank Sam for his letter and for the $50 sent. A photo of a somber Mr. & Mrs. Bausch is in the file [MTP]. Note: "P. Bausch / Interesting (Photo)”; Sam paid Bausch in order to use his letter in his Autobiography. Bausch kept writing until he became a pest and Sam would not answer. Bausch then wrote to Harpers.

Lewis H. Machen wrote from Alexandria, Va. to Sam. “I was glad to know, from the letter of your secretary received last month, that no responsible person had ever succeeded in fastening upon you the charge of being a humorist.” He wished to give an illustration for the next edition of CS, and also told a humorous anecdote about the flea, a subject which he noted from “A Tramp Abroad” and also “Tom Sawyer Abroad” [MTP].

February 28 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margery H. Clinton.

Dear Plumber who can’t plumb:

If opportunity offers, you must shake hands with Mr. Taft for me, that able & lovely man. And can’t you also do the like for yourselves—you & your beautiful pal?

I inquire to know.

With love & best wishes to you both [MTP].

March – The Virginia Railway and H.H. Rogers sent an invitation to a dinner for H.H. Rogers upon the completion of the Virginia Railway. Endorsed: “Accept formally. S.L.C.” [MTP; not in MTHHR].

Paul Thompson’s article “A Day with Mark Twain” ran in Burr McIntosh Monthly, p. 22-4. Tenney: “Superficial description of a visit to MT at his ‘Stormfield’ home in Redding, Connecticut; illustrated with two photographs of MT and two of the house” [48].

March 1 Monday – On or about this day Jean Clemens moved from Babylon, Long Island (she hated it) to a cottage named “Wahnfried,” in Montclair, N.J., supervised by Miss Edith Clapp, a nurse. Jean had still not seen Stormfield [Hill 225]. Note: on Mar. 3 Sam replied to a non-extant letter from Jean; allowing a day each way would put Jean’s letter and probably her arrival in Montclair, to this day.

Sam’s new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks

Harry O. Knerr wrote a fan letter of praise to Sam from Allentown, Penn. with a request “to receive a line from you and enjoy the realization of my dream” [MTP].

Walter S. Ottinger, a deacon in a Congregational Church which had lost members to Christian Science, wrote from Phila. to ask Sam his views on Mary Baker Eddy, if not published elsewhere [MTP].

March 2 Tuesday – Andrew Chatto wrote to Sam. “I am sending for your kind acceptance an early copy of a drama on ‘Joan of Arc’ which I hope may be of interest to you. It is written by a young friend of mine and I think it has merit” [MTP].

Miriam Sutro Price for Public Education Assoc., NYC wrote to ask Sam if he would “join their association and help us in our work for public schools?” [MTP].

March 3 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Helen Kerr Blackmer (Mrs. Henry Myron Blackmer) in N.Y.C.

Dear Mrs. Blackmer:

I thank you ever so much for the promise conveyed through Ashcroft Bishop of Benares, to give us your presence during one-half of Margaret's Easter vacation, & to fetch that little rascal along with you. I haven't any more sense than to keep her pictures where I can't help seeing them wherever I go: in the billiard room, in the library, in my bedroom; & so I am kept afflictedly reminded all the time that I haven't seen her for centuries.

Miss Lyon has gone away for a rest, by the doctor's command. She is in Hartford, & her mother is close by.

We have been having a rather wet summer this winter, but it has been very pleasant, just the same.
Thanking you again, I am / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean, c/o Miss Edith Clapp in Montclair, N.J.

Jean dear, I think you will gain a large weather-advantage by the change, for I have always heard that Montclair justifies its name, being on elevated ground & having a finer and wholesomer quality of air than is usually findable in the Atlantic regions South of Maine. I have visited several wealthy country-seats on Long Island, & was not attracted by any of them. Their water-glimpses were inane and interestless, & their land-surroundings were poor when natural, & a trifle poorer when artificialized. I am furnishing only my opinion, not other people's. However, I don't attach value to other people's opinions about anything. I am glad I am not other people. They are ignorant & stupid, & I couldn't bear to be that.

Why, dear heart, Wahnfried [cottage name in Montclair, N.J.] strikes me most pleasantly. It suggests healing rest & refuge & peace for tired & worried & over-worked brains; ships at anchor after hard & stormy voyages; heaven for poor scared folk who never went to church, nor contributed money to convert & degrade the heathen, & consequently were fully expecting to go where the rest of the Christians go.

Oh no, dear, that name is all right. I think it is beautiful.

Miss Lyon went away a week ago to Hartford to have several weeks' rest near her mother, & try to beat a threatened breakdown. She thinks she is improving. She had been sick abed several weeks when she left here.

I am having a good time all by myself dictating to the stenographer (Autobiography) a long day-after-day scoff at everybody who is ignorant enough & stupid enough to go on believing Shakespeare ever wrote a play or a poem in his life, or even so much as a single line of literature of any kind. I am the only member of the human race I have ever much admired; & I have always been privately ashamed of the other members; but now that I've been reading half a dozen Shakespeare-Bacon controversy-books, I am more ashameder than ever. That is, ashamed of so-called great intellects that still believe in Shakespeare & employ their alleged large powers in trying to keep that convicted sham on his pedestal. As a transparent sham he can give Mary Baker G. Eddy the odds of the game & beat her.

With lots of love, dear heart,
Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Well, dear, so you are going abroad in June. It's the very best month for it, & you will have a good time. If I were 60 years younger I would pack my grip & go along with you. Louise Paine, M. A., went abroad a fortnight ago—her first trip, & she was wild with delight. She went with her father, who is my biographer, & they will go over the ground I traveled in the "Innocents Abroad" 42 years ago, & make notes.

Dorothy Butes, M. A., is coming abroad (to visit me—she's a Londoner) next August. Francesca M. A., is going abroad in June. Hellen Martin, M. A., will go abroad in May; Dorothy Harvey, M. A. has already gone abroad. It's a frisk-about lot, my angel-fishes. I can't keep enough of them in the Tank to make a show.

Miss Lyon has been sick abed several weeks, & has gone to Hartford to have a good long uninterrupted rest with her kin. Indeed she needs it. We have had guests all the time & she has overworked herself.

Good-bye & good times to you dear. / With lots of love ... [MTP; MTAq 251-2].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Sturgis.

Dear Annianlouise:

Of course I would have answered your invitation immediately, one way or the other, as courtesy & custom require, but there wasn't time, because your dance was to take place the evening of the 19th, and I didn't get your letter until 6 p.m., the 19th, so I knew you would not be expecting me. But I couldn't have gone anyway, because railway travel kills me dead, & I have to avoid it; & indeed always do avoid it when it isn't a life-&-death matter. I had a life-&-death matter on hand in New York at that time—an old, old, mouldy, & long-forgotten stand-over engagement for Feb. 20th which I wasn't ever expecting to be called upon to fulfill. So I went down on the 20th—& got stranded & didn't get back for 8 days.

I was greatly interested in what you said about those wonderful little foreigners whose schools you & your father visited, for I have had friendly pleasant contact & acquaintanceship with a good many of their blood on the East Side, through being President of the Children's Educational Theatre the past two or three years, & I have a vast admiration of them. I think we turn out some excellent little actors & musicians there—little folk whose English is faultless, yet I don't suppose they can spell their own names without wrecking the alphabet, & of course neither they nor anybody else can pronounce them. Certainly not without prayer for strength & guidance, beforehand.

You must not forget to let me know when you are starting South in the Spring, for we want a visit out of you then. I am housekeeper, these past 2 weeks, & am winning credit for my work in that line. I have had 3 young-lady guests, & can get a recommendation from them. Also, I had my daughter here 4 days, & can get one from her. A good one, too—the best kind: that is to say, she is coming back day after tomorrow to endure it again. Benares helps me over the week-ends, & is learning.

Miss Lyon went to Hartford a fortnight ago, by the doctor's orders, to be with her kin & have an extended & uninterrupted rest. She had been sick, abed several weeks, & was near to a nervous breakdown. She is improving, now.

Nein, ich fahre nicht nach Bermuda; I prefer Stormfield, in all weathers. / Very affectionately / ... [MTP; MTAq 252-3]. Note: Sturgis' invitation which Clemens received on Feb. 19 is not extant. During these stays by Clara Clemens, she investigated the household books, gathering "evidence" of Lyon's pilfering of funds, by which Lyon was dismissed.

David C. Sanford wrote from Redding, Conn. to Sam. A Civil Engineer and Surveyor he asked if Clemens ever had work in his line to write him. He gave a brief summary of his experience [MTP].

March 4 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a memo to Ralph W. Ashcroft.

Memo. for Mr Ashcroft.

Draw up codicil to will, whereby, at age 55, my daughter Clara may have her ½ share of estate, Jean's share to remain in trust during her (Jean's) lifetime. If Jean dies before Clara, & Clara is her sole or partial legatee, this property to remain in trust until Clara is 55. If Clara dies before Jean, & Jean is Clara's sole or partial legatee, this property to remain in trust during Jean's lifetime.

Advance Dr J. E. Clemens, New Orleans, La, $500. against his 5 notes for $100. each at 6% first note maturing one year from date & the rest, one every 2 months thereafter. No security to be required / SLC [MTP]. Note: Dr. J.E. Clemens is unidentified. This may be James Ross Clemens of St. Louis.

Sam also wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Dear H. H. / I think it likely that I shall go to the Lotos-Carnegie banquet, 17th of March, after all. It was getting so difficult to keep on declining & explaining, that night before last I suspended payment in that kind, & said I would go, & would very much like to go, if I could be privileged to feed elsewhere & arrive at 10 p.m.; & if also I might stipulate that my name be left out of the list of pledged speakers, so that I would not have to propose a speech, & needn't speak at all unless moved by the spirit so to do.

The terms seem to me to be fair, & so if I get word that they are accepted, I'll go down on the 17th by the 10.30 express, arriving at the Grand Central at noon. In which case, am I going to find eatables, drinkables & lodging at your tavern at reduced rates?—on account of the country having lost the creator & propagator & promoter of its prosperities to-day. / With love to you both, ... [MTHHR 659-60]. Note: this last note refers to inauguration of William Howard Taft, who replaced Theodore Roosevelt as President. March 4 used to be inauguration day; since 1933 it has been Jan. 20.

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day 14 years were added to the copyright term.

Clemens purchased The Jungle Book and The Second Jungle Book by Kipling from G.P. Putnam's Sons, NYC, and would pay the bill on Apr. 10. Gribben adds: "Subsequently Mark Twain utilized Baloo the bear and Hathi the elephant in his 'A Fable,' published in the December 1909 issue of Harper's Magazine" [378].

Jon R. Harrison wrote from Dombartonsire, England to thank Sam for an autograph sent. He enclosed the stamps he was unable to get before [MTP].

John Albert Macy wrote from Wrentham, Mass. to Sam. "A set of proofs of Mr. Booth's book as far as it has gone will be ready for you in about a week. I hope you will find it better sausage meat even than Greenwood and that you will load a ton of it into your Autobiography." He wrote of Helen Keller reading acrostics in braille, observing that "Her mind works absolutely right in the realm of pure reason and mathematics. She can do geometry in her head. I know that you cannot do that because I have seen you miss the same billiard shot eight times in succession" [MTP]. Note: William Stone Booth, Some Acrostic Signatures of Francis Bacon, etc. (1909); see Gribben p.77.

John L. Nelson for Thomas J. Caie & Co., Cleveland Ohio wrote to advise Sam of the death there of one eleven year old, Henry Wick, Jr. (clipping enclosed) and to relate the story of Nelson selling books to Wick's mother after going back and being asked by the boy for Mark Twain books only [MTP]. Note: on the reverse: IVL: "Say that the letter has given me a rare delight but it brought the tears. Tears partly of pleasure partly of the sincerest sorrow for that poor mother."

March 5 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam began a postcard to Dorothy Quick, which he lost in his table drawer and which he then found and finished on Mar. 31.

[written across photograph of SLC with Lyon and Ashcroft:]

L. If you could only repent!

C. Alas, I can't. And won't.

A. Try. Do try.

C. I won't. I feel ready to cry because I didn't do it some more.

[written below photograph and on the back:] March 5. Dorothy dear, have I sent you this before? The likenesses are very good, I think [MTP]. Note: see Mar. 31 entry.

John Mead Howells wrote from NYC thanking Sam for his check through Mr. Ashcroft, and returning $44.70 in overpayment [MTP].

National Geographic Society per O.P. Austin wrote to Sam that he'd been nominated for membership and enclosed information (not in file) "as to the work and purpose of the Society" [MTP].

March 6 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. an unidentified person wrote for Clemens to Harry A. Lounsbury.

Dear Mr. Lounsbury : / Mr. Clemens, who is, as you know, very satisfied with the manner in which you have attended to his needs in the past, wishes me, however, to call your attention to the following matters:

It seems that you charge $2.50 for a double team, whether using the coupe, the surrey or one of your own wagons, while Read & Smith are willing to perform this service for $2.00. Mr. Clemens, therefore, thinks that you should reduce your charge to $2.00 for this service.

Mr. Clemens furthermore does not now approve of the joint ownership of the surrey, and would like an offer from you for his ½ share.

He also hopes that you will, in the future, as in the past, use every effort to minimize the expense of his livery, etc, by picking up express packages at the station whenever you are there on his or your own business.

Referring to enclosed bill, kindly let us know what the undated item of $6.00 for teams is. In future, kindly explain on the bill what the character of the work is that you perform and also please specify what the express, freight or telegraph charges are for. / Yours, sincerely, [MTP].

J.N. Ashburn wrote from Cleveland, Ohio to Sam.

My dear Twain:—

It is not from curiosity that I address you, but because I have something to say. One of your twenty or thirty year-old books—The Prince and the Pauper—was placed in my hands a few days ago, and I read it for the first time. I had passed it by heretofore because I thought the title too young for a seventy year old man. However it proved a very interesting book to me, and I thank you for throwing it out to the world and myself for stumbling upon it. You may guess my surprise when I discovered that my little History of the Eighty-Sixth Regiment O.V.I. involved the family of your sub-hero—De Courcy. The 3d Brigade, 2d Division, 9th Army Corps, Army of the Ohio, was commanded by John F. de Courcy in 1863-64. He was then without title, except a military one. In 1874 he became by inheritance 31st Lord Kingsale, Baron Courcy of Courcy, and Baron of Ringrone in the Peerage of Ireland. My Colonel, Wilson C. Lemert, (we served under De Courcy) in later years visited his ancestral Castle, which is located 9 miles north of Belfast Ireland, and known as Carrick Fergus. He married in 1864, succeeded to his title in 1874, and died in Florence, Italy, in 1890, without issue. I have an obituary taken from The London Illustrated News of November 1890. He was a stern officer and a strict disciplinarian. His picture, as we knew him is reproduced in my history. His right eye was defective and his photographs are profiles. If this interests you I would be glad to hear from you. If not, to the waste basket. ... [MTP]. Note: After Mar. 8 Sam replied.

L.M. Ellis wrote from Omaha, Nebr. to Sam. “Enclosed is picture of a bald headed man who lives here & who is running for office—A young fellow here—a mere school boy) had carved it up into a fair resemblance to yourself. I send it that you may see how well known to the rising generation are your prominent features. The boy carved it from memory” [MTP]. See Insert

Frances Grant Teetzel wrote from Wisc. to Sam, noting that the January Century had a poem of his that Sam might like to read. He asked for Sam’s suggestions for a publishing company as he had “a number of things to get out, but know of no publishing house available” [MTP].

George Leon Varney wrote from Oshkosh, Wisc. on State Historical Society letterhead to ask Sam his favorite poetry. This was for a book he was preparing “The Favorite Poems of Great Men and Women.” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “My favorite / by long odds / is Omar Khayyam”

Marion Wallace wrote to Clemens: “Will you kindly use your influence with Mark Twain and induce him to send his autograph...?” in a child’s hand [MTP]. Note: “Mch 23, ‘09”

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

On July 19, 1909 Charles T. Lark reported after searching cancelled checks at the Liberty National Bank, that he found one signed “S. L. Clemens per I. V. Lyon, Secy”. This check was No. 3299 dated March 6th, 1909, drawn in favor of Giuseppe Cherubini, servant, for the sum of $75 [MTP]. Note: See July 19 letter from Lark.

March 7 Sunday

March 8 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margery H. Clinton.

I am very very glad, dear Plumber, that you & Miss Caroline had such a pleasant time in Washington & had such an enjoyable meeting with the President. You can't help but like Mr. Taft. The country likes him, & respects him; & I want him to make the best people in the country continue to respect him—and every now & then dislike him—sure proof, in a public servant, that he is doing his whole duty, as he sees it, regardless of personal consequences. He has the natural gifts, the culture, the experience, the training, the sanity, the right-mindedness, the honesty, the truthfulness, the modesty, & the dignity properly requisite in a President of the United States, the most responsible post on the planet. In a word, he possesses every qualification the other one was destitute of.

In selecting Mr. Carpenter as your medium of communication you did just the smart & diplomatic thing. You managed cleverly with the butler, too. But it was a pity you had to wait two hours. You couldn't help that, but if I had been there it wouldn't have happened; for by grace of long experience I am hardened to doing, without a pang, lawless things which you wouldn't be able to essay without considerable shrinkage of principle. But we'd have gone in ahead of the Governor, sure!

We miss you here, & we'll be glad when you & Miss Caroline come back; & not merely glad but very glad.

I am sending you my love; also Miss Lyon's, who is engaged to the Bishop. I've had suspicions this good while [MTP]. Note: Isabel Lyon and Ralph W. Ashcroft became engaged during her stay at her mother's in Hartford.

Sam also wrote to George B. Harvey.

Dear Colonel:

I suppose the press has done its carefulest best to do itself distinguished credit in its bowings of the one President out & the other one in, but I think it a bettable proposition that you have surpassed them all. Yours are certainly masterpieces, in fitness, fairness, wisdom, depth, candor, compactness_[5] lucidity, grace of style, felic_{[i]t}ous expression, &—the right & proper crown for these high excellences—the composure, the gravity & the fine dignity meet for the occasion. Those remarkable essays will bring you many congratulations—I do not want mine to be the last. / Yours ever [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Wallace Irwin (pseudonym “Hashimiro Togo”).

“The aged & mouldy, but good & wise Mark Twain, benefactor of the human race,—say-so of Hon. public—has received the book of Japanese Schoolboy, other benefactor of Hon. human race, & sends very heartiest thanks, & cannot keep from reading it all the time, & chuckling & enjoying. /M. T.” [MTP]. Note: Irwin's Letters of a Japanese Schoolboy first ran in Collier's Weekly for Aug. 8, 1908, and was made into a book which Clemens here refers to. See Gribben 347.

Sam also began a letter to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.) that he finished on Mar. 9.

Mariechen dear, I certainly love you, but that is only because I can't help it; for you are the most vexatious rascal of a niece that helps to inhabit this planet. You are in a class by yourself, & it's well it is so, for there isn't room between the horizons for two of you. Two? It would make chaos, & things would stop going.

I'm well aware that when you say you'll do a thing, you really mean it—at the moment. But that's the end of it. I am like the average person: sometimes I break a promise, but you never keep one. Yes, dear, you are in a class by yourself. I know you are honestly intending to come here, & I know you will gladden me by telling me the day & train; but you know perfectly well that when I go to meet you I shan't find you at the station, & shan't learn why, until I've grown another bunch or two of white hairs. Now I'll wait & see. If I am as good a prophet as I always used to was, it will come out just so.

And you did get the picture? I knew it (probably) arrived last year, because I got the bill for it & for the customs & duties, but I guessed it had been misdirected, so I blew the photographer up, & then he blew me up; so he & I stand even, now, & on the same pleasant terms as ever. I had it sent direct to No. 26 for some reason or other, instead of to my house—because I was expecting to be away, I think. It's a high-art picture—Barnett couldn't make a failure if he tried.

I'm going down dentisting & banqueting, March 17, & shall dine & sleep at H. H.'s, if he hasn't raised the price; but that I shall have any glimpse of you, dear, is much too much to expect, for you are the very invisiblist of all the invisibles. But you can't help that. Land, you're made so!

You are the hardest lot I know, but I love you all the same. / Your affectionate old / ass of an / Uncle Mark [MTP]. Note: H. Walter Barnett, English photographer; see entries Vol. III. Clemens added to this letter the following day.

H.H. Rogers wrote to Sam concerning the St. Patrick's day dinner for Andrew Carnegie.

Dear Mr. Clemens: / I received in due time your letter of the 4th. of March. A proper time for you to crawl back into politics by way of the Lotos Club.

I have communicated with Mr. Lawrence through his Secretary, and he replies that he can speak for Mr. Lawrence and, in fact, for all the Lotos Club, in saying that they would obey Mr. Clemens' commands to the letter, and that they would be very glad to reserve a room for you in the new Club; but think you would prefer to stay at my house while you are in town, all of which I herewith approve.

They are very glad that you have changed your mind, and I imagine that you will receive some communication, either from Mr. Lawrence or his Secretary, concerning the truthfulness of my statement.

I notice that you are to come down on the 17th. on the 10:30 express, arriving at the Grand Central at noon, and also that you expect to find eatables, drinkables and a bed at our Tavern, subject to such changes as it seems pleasant to me. I am going to ask Mrs. Rogers to answer this letter, in order to have it correct. / Yours truly, / H H Rogers [MTHHR 660].

Howells & Stokes wrote to Ralph W. Ashcroft (mis-catalogued to Clemens) [MTP].

Ellis D. Robb wrote from Eldora, Iowa to send Sam a clipping from a Chicago newspaper (not in file) [MTP].

March 8 Monday after – In Redding, Conn. Sam gave instructions for a reply to the Mar. 6 from J.N. Ashburn.

You can at least tell him that I have most heartily enjoyed what he has said about the de Courcy & that it resurrects the interest which I felt in him so many years ago Resurrects it to such a degree that I think I'll take an easy opportunity to pick up the book & read it again. With before me the fine & respect-commanding picture which you have made of the man who was representing him three centuries later [MTP].

March 9 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam added to and finished his Mar. 8 to Mary B. Rogers:

Next Day—which is to-day, the 9th. Letter from H. H., trying hard to say he hasn't any room, but will refer the matter to Mrs. Rogers. I know what that means: he is going to raise the price. He thinks I can't help myself—can't get in elsewhere. But I can: I've already arranged it, conditionally.

Will you tell Benjamin Miss Lyon & Ashcroft are engaged to be married? I guess it won't astonish him much [MTP].

Clarence O. Bigelow, Druggist wrote from NYC to Sam: “In accordance with your instructions of Mar. 6th. We have entered the name of Miss Clara L. Clemens, #17 Livingston Place, New York, on our books for a charge account, and have duly notified Miss Clemens to that effect” [MTP]. Note: see Jan. 1 entry; Sam paid rent for Clara.

J.B. Cheyney for the Boston Post wrote to ask Sam to comment on the upcoming Centennial of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes’ birth [MTP].

Caroline M. Fordon for YWCA, Elmira wrote to ask Sam to come and talk to the girls [MTP].

Luther Halsey Gulick for the Playground Assoc. of America, Pittsburgh, Penn. wrote to advise Sam he’d been “appointed a Vice-President of the Third Annual Congress” of their group, May 10-14. “Will you not help us hasten that needed millennium when no child need play in the dirty, dangerous streets for want of a safer playing place?” [MTP].

New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad per A.B. Smith wrote to Sam. “...will you please advise if the cutting out of the Redding and Topstone stops on train #235 and consequent quickening schedule of this train will be detrimental to the interests of the Redding locality” [MTP].

Alfred B. Williams for the Richmond News Leader wrote a fan letter to Sam about how much his 78 year old uncle loved CY [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Appreciation”

March 10 Wednesday – Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP. In a note in the L-A MS, Clemens wrote, “About 10th (suspicious) Duneka examined securities. Reported 12th.”

Norman Libby for the Bridgton Public Library wrote to Sam c/o Harper’s, noting that the American Library Association had classified JA as fiction; Libby had accepted it as biography—which did Sam intend, fiction or biography? [MTP]. Note: source indicates Sam’s reply was after Mar. 12; see entry. On the reverse: IVL wrote: “Never departed from history when I make Joan speak or make any statements about her...”

Ellis D. Robb wrote from Eldora, Iowa to send Sam another article from the Chicago Record-Herald about the Pilots of the Mississippi. His friends at Keokuk had told him many stories about Sam’s “Roughing It days” and wanted Clemens to know his books gave him “many a pleasant hour” [MTP].

Lora White-Kesler wrote from Carthage, NY to ask Sam where she might obtain his story of Oliver Cromwell and a child which she thought was titled, “The Three Disks” [MTP].

March 11 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam began a letter to daughter Clara that he finished Mar. 14, expressing concerns about her suspicions of theft by Isabel Lyon from household accounts. Some time previously, while Lyon was recovering from her breakdown in Hartford, Clara began investigating for irregularities in the household finances. Sam’s reference to losing sleep “again” indicates Clara had voiced her suspicions sometime prior to this day, and Ashcroft had been asked for a reporting of the books. Since Ashcroft and Lyon had recently become engaged, the shadow of suspicion also fell on him, but Clemens voiced caution until Ashcroft’s reports could be examined. At this point Clemens asked his daughter for evidence, not conjecture; further, he defends the character and actions of Lyon and Ashcroft, a defense he would ultimately drop into the acid of betrayal. What led to Clara’s suspicions? Secondary studies usually suggest jealousy for the attentions of her father, yet if this were the cause, she might have expressed concerns a year or more before. The source of the conflict stemmed primarily from restrictions placed on Clara’s spending—restrictions Lyon put in place based on austerity demands from Col. Harvey and Frederick Leigh of Harper’s, and Clemens himself. Hill suggests a further motivation:

But underlying the financial charges were moral ones. Miss Lyon had apparently been willing to point out that some of Clara's activities with Will Wark [Charles E. Wark ("Will") her accompanist] were of dubious propriety—indeed, of the identical sort that had prompted Clemens to withdraw his support of Gorky and to regret having Elinor Glyn print his convictions about human instincts [219-20]. Note: Wark was a married man.

Sam's letter to daughter Clara:

Strictly PRIVATE. If these contents must be revealed to Mr. Jackson, I am willing, but no detail of them must go to any other person.

March 11/09

½ past 2 in the morning:

Clara dear, I am losing sleep again over this matter.

When I wrote you, I believed I had placed it in a sound & effective way of settlement—a clear & understandable way. I believed that an itemised report to me, covering a year or two, of income & outgo, would furnish the information required. I am of that opinion yet.

The materials are all here: Publishers' statements; Bank deposits, checkbooks, &c. And so I had asked Ashcroft to get up that report. The report for the past 12 months will be gotten up now; the previous 12 to follow.

I supposed everything was peaceful & serene again. But your letter abolished that dream. It indicated that you & Mr. Jackson are not satisfied. You had asked for something which Ashcroft had met with a couple of objections. That surprised me. I had already asked him for all the essentials & had encountered no objections.

(To-night he explained.) In formulating an answer to your letter I had already set down as one of its items an objection on my own part: I would not allow the checkbooks to go out of the house.

Yes, Ashcroft objected. It had been proposed to put my affairs into the hands of professional accountants. That is premature, & must be postponed till there is occasion for it. That is to say,

When Ashcroft hands me the two reports I have asked for. They can be examined by competent friends of mine & yours, & compared with the check-books & bank deposits. If they fail to tally; if there are discrepancies that look suspicious, let the accountants take hold of the matter.

To put them on the work now, argues suspicion of Miss Lyon's honesty, & Ashcroft's—charges it, substantially. I have no such charge to offer, there being no evidence before me to found it on, & there being no suspicions in my own mind to base it on.

We will wait for Ashcroft's reports. Unless you can furnish evidence. Not theory, not guess, but evidence.

If you can do this, we will proceed. If you cannot, we will wait for the reports, & see what competent friends have to say after examining them.

And so you have no further use for a lawyer until the reports arrive. Say that to him when you get this letter.

In my belief, you will not need a lawyer's services again.

Continuation.

Among the notes I made (for letter) this was one: "While we are hunting eagerly for *dis*service, are we forgetting to hunt for service?"

It is a thought which does not make me feel very comfortable. Miss Lyon came to your mother as secretary, at $50 a month. She has never asked for more. Yet she has been housekeeper 4 or 5 years, with its many vexations & annoyances. She could not have been replaced at any price, for she was qualified to meet our friends socially & be acceptable to them. This service has been beyond computation in money, for its like was not findable.

And she has been a housebuilder. In this service—a heavy one, an exacting one, & making her liable to fault-finding—she labored hard for a year. I would not have done it at any price, neither would you. Would you have undertaken that job? I think not. Could we have found anybody, so competent as she, to take it? Or half so willing, or ' half so devoted? There isn't a decorator in New York who can compare with her for taste & talent. These services of hers have been very valuable; but she has charged nothing for them. [bottom half of one page and top half of another torn away to cancel] OVER

[on the back: I never knew nor asked what we paid our idiot in New York, but Mrs Littleton has paid her $4,000 for her grotesque services in planning her parlor floor suite. She must have studied mainly from the nude; the place looks naked.

over]

Anybody can get his mind poisoned, & I have not wholly escaped, as regards Miss Lyon. But it is healthy again. I have no suspicions of her. She was not trained to business & doubtless has been loose & unmethodical, but that is all. She has not been dishonest, even to a penny's worth. All her impulses are good & fine. She makes friends of everybody, & she loses no friends. The Whitmores & the Danas she served under their roofs for years, & they have nothing but affection & praise for her. She has several talents, & they are much above common; & in the last three or four years she has developed literary capacities which are distinctly remarkable. She has served me with a tireless devotion, & I owe her gratitude for it—& I not only owe it but feel it. I have the highest regard for her character.

She has wrought like a slave for that little library & has set it firmly on its feet—almost alone, & without charge.

And all by herself she has beaten the game that was to have robbed a poor old neighbor of ours of his homestead.

And what shall I say of Ashcroft? He has served me in no end of ways, & with astonishing competency—brilliancy, I may say. During 4 years he has fought my Plasmon fight against desperate odds—a night-&-day month-in-and-month-out struggle, through lawsuit after lawsuit & machination after machination, never complaining, never losing hope, & has won out at last, scoring victory all along the line. In not a single suit did the old company of thieves win their case. It has not cost me a hundred dollars. The result is a rescued property which is now solely in the hands of himself, myself & the London Company. He has always reported to me every move he made, & its result. He has persistently kept after Sir Thomas Lipton (who greatly admires him) for two years, with steady progress toward success, & to-day it looks as if he is going to land him. In any case he has pulled that great property out of what seemed to me & to others a disastrous & hopeless hole, & it is safe & secure now.

He (first, I think—certainly independently of Larkin) invented the Mark Twain Co—a stroke of genius, & this family owns all of the stock. It may supersede copyright-law some day. [in margin: P.S. I am empowering Mr. Duneka to examine the Safety Deposit box & report to me its contents, together with the nature & scope & ownership of the Mark Twain Co. I will keep this letter until I can add his report to it. Till Saturday or Sunday.]

He has now completed the purchase (this is not to be mentioned for a while yet, till the deed is recorded) of the adjoining farm of 125 acres, farm buildings & stock, for $7,200 & saved us $600 thereby.

He has put my London Plasmon interest in good shape, & that concern has begun to prosper again.

However, his services have been absolutely endless—and they are daily, & constant. OVER [on the back: I think I told you how near he came to making $100,000 house-building cost & more for me at the storm-centre of the panic. I was sending an order to buy a copper stock at 25—it was selling at 27. He advised me not to risk losing a small fortune by trying to get the last cent out of the chance—he said give the order to buy at market. If I had done it I'd have gotten it at 27—but I didn't. It took me 24 hours to get wise, then it was too late. The Trust Co failed, & swallowed nearly all my cost, & by & by I had to sell good securities below cost, to get money for my necessities & obligations. It was my fault alone that he didn't make the small fortune for me. The purchase at 27, of 2,000 shares would have increased my holding to 3,750 shares & leveled the whole cost down to 38. When I owned 500 shares (cost 53) he wanted me to sell at 65; I took Mr. Rogers's advice & bought instead. I would buy that stock to-day at 47 (the last quotation I have noticed) if I had the money to spend. For it will be back at 65 & maybe 70 before the year is out. I once bought it at 43 & sold it at 69.

I know Ashcroft & Miss Lyon better & more intimately than I have ever known any one except your mother, & I am quite without suspicion of either their honesty or their honorableness.

Miss Lyon is a sick & broken-down woman, & I want her to be left in peace until the Ashcroft reports exhibit evidence to go upon in exposing my private affairs to the professional accountants, & her to unnecessary & unjustifiable humiliation. Dismiss your lawyer until then—unless, as I have before suggested, you have in your hands something definitely & demonstrably incriminating.

I wouldn't let Jean (four years ago), charge Brush's Italian servant with theft upon suspicion & demand his arrest. Jean was resentful at the time, but felt better about it when Mrs. Brush (3 months later) found the silver where she had put it herself & long ago & forgotten it. Meantime the man—dismissed, with public reproaches—was gone. Also his character.

Good-bye, dear heart, it is half past 6, & I am tired.

With lots of love

Father

[MTP]. Note: between this day and Mar. 14, it would seem Clara's suspicions led to evidence of misappropriation by Lyon and/or Ashcroft; see Mar. 14 when Sam added a PS. Note also that this letter took Sam four hours to draft, from 2:30 to 6:30 a.m. The reference to Brush, George de Forest Brush, painter, might have been in 1904 in Florence (see Jan. 22, 1904 entry) or in 1905 or 1906 at Dublin, N.H. Jean was friends with Nancy D. Brush.

Later in the day Sam also wrote to Maud W. Littleton (Mrs. Martin W. Littleton) in N.Y.C. about his forthcoming trip to NYC for the Lotos dinner honoring Andrew Carnegie:

Dear Mrs. Linthicum: / It is lovely of you to invite me. It stands thus: I seem to be due at H.H. Rogers's, but maybe I ain't. I shan't know absolutely until I reach the Grand Central at noon the 17th. If I am due, there'll be an auto waiting for me there. If there ain't no auto I shall think there's been a misunderstanding, & I'll get a cab & rush to your house. If I find you bedless, don't bother a bit about me, I'll fly to Mr. Coe's or Dr. Rice's & break in.

Between now & the 17th I shall expect to be able to send you a definite word. / With love to you all / ... [MTP].

Clara Clemens had an interview with Dr. Frederick Peterson, Jean's physician, about the possibility of Jean returning to live at Stormfield [Hill 225].

Edgar D. Russell wrote from New Haven, Conn. to Sam. "As a competitor for a position on the editorial board of the YALE NEWS, I want to ask you for an article on the value of a college education to a literary man" [MTP].

John Wanamaker wrote from NYC to advise that his dept. store opened an account for Clara Clemens [MTP].

H.E. Watters for the Hall-Moody Institute, Martin, Tenn. wrote a question to Sam that he was sending to "a number of America's strongest men in all walks of life" —"What do you consider the most conclusive proof of the inspiration of the Scriptures?" [MTP].

March 12 Friday – In a note in the L-A MS, Clemens wrote, "About 10th (suspicious) Duneka examined securities. Reported 12th." Note: securities? Hill writes of the Lyon-Ashcroft MS:

Ashcroft was "guilty" of selling Clemens Spiral Pin stock, of having fired Horace Hazen, of having presented a number of legal documents for Clemens' signature which the forgetful old man could not remember signing, and of having an excessively florid prose style.

But the Clemens family comes off more poorly than the Ashcrofts do in the "Ashcroft-Lyon Manuscript"; all three Clemenses were illogical and lacking in compassion; and Clara's and Jean's harassment of the defenseless and high-strung secretary and her mother was needlessly vicious. The manuscript is a geyser of bias, vindictiveness, and innuendo. It proceeds in no systematic order, and it ends with the quite irrelevant and almost irrational comment about Peary and Cook both discovering the North Pole. It is obvious that Mark Twain was unable to maintain comic distance from the material or intelligent involvement with it [231-2].

William Dean Howells wrote to Sam that he'd "found about 40 or 50" of Sam's letters, which were "of the time when this night was blackest with you, and I can't read them. But I know you can, because you have the best courage of any man, and because as the years pass...our grief for the lost, which is all we have left of them, and like to feel our hearts bleed again" [MTP; not in MTHL]. Note: "Ans Mch 13"

Sam's new guestbook (all signed):

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Beatrice M. Benjamin	New York	Mar. 12, 1909
Alexander D.B. Pratt	do.	do.
Wm Evarts Benjamin	New York & Ardsley	Mar 12 th '09	[* note below]

William Evarts Benjamin wrote in the Remarks column: "As one drives from the station the chief mark on the landscape and as one leads a lazy loafish take it easy sort of life here I should call it Easymark. Even the water don't rush here, it sorter saunters from the tap, seems to have that tired feeling and gives a graceful gurgle if you stop it. But you can get wet!"

Frederick A. Duneka wrote to Sam, enclosing a list of Sam's Safe Deposit box in the Produce Exchange. Sam suspected Ashcroft of taking the organization papers of the Mark Twain Co. from the box. Duneka's letter is not extant but referred to in his Lyon-Ashcroft MS section XIV. It turned out that Sam's fear about the papers giving rights to his real estate, and not simply his literary assets, was ill founded.

Nannie Manook wrote from London to ask Sam to sign the enclosed postcard [MTP].

March 12 after – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to Norman Libby's Mar. 10 query as to whether he intended JA as biography or fiction. Sam wrote on the bottom of Libby's letter:

"never departed from history when I make Joan speak or make any statements about her—It has been my experience that all intelligent persons know that it is history that they cannot get for themselves on this side of the water, as it is not translated" [MTP].

William Dean Howells wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam.

My dear Clemens: / I have found about 40 or 50 more of your letters, which will be about all, I think. Shall I send them, or bring them when I come to see you after Pilla gets home? You know you said I might come.

The letters are of the time when this night was blackest with you, and I can't read them. But I know that you can, because you have the best courage of any man, and because as the years pass we like to renew our grief for the lost, which is all we have left of them, and like to feel our hearts bleed again. We pretend otherwise, but this is the truth, and it is strange enough. The anguish of another wrings our hearts, but we can bear our own after while. Yours ever / W.D. Howells [MTHL 2: 841-2]. Note: Sam's letters referred to here were likely during the years after Susy's death.

March 13 before – Robert J. Collier sent an engraved invitation for Sam to meet Theodore Roosevelt at breakfast on Saturday, Mar. 13 at noon at 752 Park Avenue, NYC [MTP].

March 13 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Mrs. Helen Kerr Blackmer at the Woman's Club, N.Y.C. (Margaret Blackmer's, mother).

Dear Mrs. Blackmer:

“Saturday April 10, to remain until late Monday afternoon.” Indeed I am very glad to have that much, altho’ I’m greedy for more. And so I thank you right sincerely. You will tell us your train, so that we can meet you.

I shall arrive at H. H. Rogers’s house, 3 East 78th at 12.30 next Wednesday, 17th, & stay a couple of days, & I must have a glimpse of Margaret. If she is going to be in town I hope you will telephone me at Mr. R’s house. If she isn’t I must try to find time to make a flying trip to her school.

Yes, Atlantic City will freshen the child up, I am sure. It will be pleasant & valuable change for her. / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Mar. 12 from William Dean Howells. “Dear Howells: / Bring the letters when you & Pilla come—to bring them will put you under obligation to come, & I do hope you will let us see you both as soon as Pilla return from Bermuda. Ah, those letters! remembrances of that dark time. I think I could read them now, but I am not sure./ Yours ever” ... [MTHL 2: 842-3]. Note: Howells made his first visit to Stormfield—without Mildred—on Mar. 23 to 26 March (Stormfield Guest Book MTP).

Sam also wrote a notice for Stormfield Guests about the delay in getting hot water to the faucets:

TO GET HOT WATER.

Turn the starboard faucet & trust in God. Go back to bed & wait. It will come—be patient. There are 9 climates between the faucet & the kitchen. Let 8 of them drain into the tub undisturbed. Lay for No. 10. It is the one you want. Allow one minute for each climate; you will have your reward.

Do not try to hurry this water. Just wait. Do not try to assist it by flattery, persuasion, compulsion, nor by any other of the usual expedients. I save prayer alone: it cares not a Gatun Dam for prayer. / SLC / Stormfield, March 13/09 [MTP].

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, “The signing of a hatful of contracts—the gloomy beginning of the sunny end.”

Dr. Frederick Peterson, Jean’s physician visited Stormfield to consider the possibility of allowing Jean to stay at Stormfield [Hill 225]. Note: see Mar. 14 entry.

Ralph W. Ashcroft signed four notes of $250 each payable to Clemens to secure the balance of Isabel Lyon’s debt for renovation of the “Lobster Pot,” now called “Summerfield.” Lyon had claimed that the cost for fixing up the house Sam had given her was $1,500; Sam forgave $500 of it for a Christmas present in 1908, leaving $1,000 due. Harry Lounsbury, however, claimed the cost of work on the house came to $3,500 [Hill 226].

Two contracts were signed this date between Samuel L. Clemens and Isabel Lyon, the first for a compilation to be titled, “Life and Letters of Mark Twain,” and the second making Lyon the “literary and social secretary” of Clemens. Both documents were witnessed by Ralph W. Ashcroft and H.W. Hazen, and notarized by John N. Nickerson. On the face of the first contract Sam wrote, “Canceled Apl 15 by written notice at the same time tht the other paper [contract of this date was canceled.” On the face of each contract Sam wrote “Canceled Apl 15 by written notice, to take effect May 15, 1909. / Two month’s salary paid by check. / SLC” [A-L MS]. Note: entire contracts, just over a page each, can be seen in the source.

Helen F. Brockett wrote on D.A.R. notepaper to send Sam her father’s bookplate and ask for his in return. Her father as Edward J. Brockett. “Do celebrated men ever indulge in fads? Or do they leave that to ordinary mortals?” And, “Is it really so very troublesome, being great?” [MTP].

W. Ellis, a Major in the US Army, wrote from Fort Terry, NY to advise he was sending “under separate cover my gold medal essay on ‘Enlistments in the Army’” and asked for Sam’s brief statement of his views on the matter [MTP].

McLane Tilton, Jr. wrote from Pell City, Ala. to Sam to settle an argument with a friend. “...we shortly start for Germany to see that chain in the channel of the Neckar if we have to dive to do it. I say it is there. He says contra. We have a bet up and I am looking to you for a tip so that I can either hedge or tap his pile” [MTP].

Edwin Wildman for the Chemung County Society wrote to once again invite Sam to the Annual banquet [MTP].

March 14 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam finished his Mar. 11 to daughter Clara. Note the change in tone and Sam’s resignation derived from the investigation:

P. S.

Sunday, Mch 14.

Nothing is as it was. Everything is changed. Sentiment has been wholly eliminated. All things in this house are now upon a strictly business basis. All duties are strictly defined, under several written contracts, signed before a notary. [bottom third of page torn away to cancel]

All services rendered me are paid for, henceforth.

But there is no vestige of ugly feeling, no hostility on either side. The comradeship remains, but it is paid for; also the friendship. Stormfield was a home; it is a tavern, now, & I am the landlord.

Duneka’s Report: He examined the box & made a list of its contents. After which, he asked for Ashcroft’s list & compared the two. They tallied exactly.

He examined the Mark Twain Co, & found that I am the Co in my own person, with full control.

Zoe Freeman becomes Vice Pres & Director, in place of Miss Lyon.

I sign all checks, in future.

Ashcroft assumes the remaining $1000 of money borrowed of me by Miss Lyon to renovate her house, & gives his notes (4) for $250 each.

Jesus, what a week!

Most lovingly / Father [MTP].

Note: The fact that Isabel Lyon was removed as director in the Mark Twain Co. and Ashcroft asked to give his notes for the money she owed, suggests that suspicion, at least, if not evidence of wrongdoing, remained. Hill writes:

“Since Isabel’s functions were now to be totally social, Clemens revoked her power of attorney to sign checks for him—a power she had possessed and exercised since May 7, 1907” [222].

Hill writes of a visit Sam and Albert Bigelow Paine made to Dr. Frederick Peterson:

On the fourteenth, Clemens and Paine called on the doctor to try to convince him that Jean’s presence at Stormfield would not upset either Jean or her father—“he was reluctant to believe me. I fact didn’t believe either of us.” Peterson finally agreed, full of apprehension, to allow Jean to make a one-week trial visit to Redding, and Clemens” would write Jean she was now welcome [225]. Note: Sam did not write Jean this until Apr. 19. See letter in entry. Jean would log in at Stormfield on Apr. 26.

Pieter Bausch wrote a 26 page letter from Amsterdam to Sam, again thanking for the $50 that Sam had paid to use a letter from Bausch in his autobiography [MTP].

Alexander Ross MacMahon wrote from Norwalk, Conn. to invite Sam to a “Young men’s banquet some time during April” [MTP].

Thomas W. Saunders, a third generation tailor, wrote from Hartford, Conn. to Sam, horrified at all the black worn by American men, and wishing to promote silver-gray suits. He also complimented on FE [MTP].

March 15 Monday – In a note in the Ashcroft-Lyon MS, Clemens wrote, “About 15th took A[shcroft] to vault & removed signatures. He a smile.”

Ruth A. Dorms wrote on notepaper from “The Woman’s Club of Ansonia, Derby, and Shelton” (Conn.) to invite Sam to give an afternoon lecture [MTP].

March 16 Tuesday – Laura Hawkins Frazer wrote from Hannibal, Mo. to Sam that she thought her letter marking their old Hannibal schoolmates and friends had “miscarried.” She offered to send another. She also had heard through Mrs. Paine that Albert and Louisa Paine were enjoying their trip. Would Sam go to Bermuda again this year? She mentioned several clippings enclosed but these are not in the file [MTP].

Lincoln National Bank for David C. Grant wrote to Sam acknowledging receipt of $200 for the credit of Clara, and have made note of his directive to transfer $200 twice monthly for her [MTP].

Julia Delafield Longfellow for the Woman’s Municipal League, Riverdale, NY wrote to ask Sam for help in getting the Interborough Railroad Co. to reserve one car during rush hours for the exclusive use of women [MTP].

March 17 Wednesday – Sam recorded the last time he ever saw Ralph W. Ashcroft, and included Horace Hazen’s explanation of his note of “discharge”:

Up to this time Ashcroft had rendered a weekly Statement every Saturday in accordance with the requirements of one of those 13th of March contracts (the ingenious one that cunningly neglected to mention any “consideration” & was therefore worthless): & he slipped in on that errand on Saturday the 17th; did the work, then slipped away again. I saw him from my windows disappearing down the road in the distance, & have never seen him since, I think.

Miss Lyon lingered along about a few days. She came mornings about 10, & went home to her cottage about 5. She had nothing official to do, for I was attending to the secretary-work myself, with Mr. Grumman the stenographer. Still, she lingered, fussing at her trunks in the attic & busying herself in various ways with her own affairs.

I wished she would go, but I couldn’t tell her so.

The next thing that happened was, that Horace appeared. I asked him to explain the mystery of the Norfolk letter.

“How did you come to say Miss Clara had discharged you when it wasn’t true?”

He was very penitent, & said he was ashamed of himself & sorry he had done it.

“Well, then, what possessed you to do it, Horace?”

Then it came out that Ashcroft made him do it!

“Ashcroft? How could Ashcroft make you do it, & be away down in Virginia?”

“No, Mr. Clemens, he was here. On the 30th of March I had my talk with Miss Clemens, & she raised my wages to $45 & an extra [day off], & he I was satisfied. Mr. Ashcroft was not [several illegible and cancelled words] here then; he had gone to New York on the noon train. Next morning—31st—you & Miss Clemens went to New York by the 10.31, & Mr. Ashcroft came up by the noon train & got to the house about 2. He told me I was going to be discharged, & I’d better quit before I was discharged. He said Miss Clemens was going to discharge all the servants. He told me to write a letter to you, & he made me say ‘discharged.’ That was his word. I said it wasn't right, because I hadn't been discharged, but he said use that word, & he made me use it, & said it would be worth a month's wages to me."

"Why this is splendid; it's like a romance! Go on."

"Mr. Clemens, I don't think I would have sent that letter that way, I would have changed it."

"Why didn't you?"

"I couldn't, because as soon as it was finished he took it."

"Took it away with him?"

"Yes, sir. I didn't see it any more. He left for New York next morning, April 1, by the 7 o'clock train."

Isn't it interesting? And isn't it just like the cheap villain in a seventh-rate play? [MTP: L-A MS XIII].

Note: see Apr. 2 for a continuation.

In the evening, Sam attended the Lotos Club dinner in honor of Andrew Carnegie. The New York Times reported on the event, Mar. 18, p.9:

CARNEGIE HONORED BY CLUB HE FINANCED

How He Came Forward at Critical Period of 1907 Panic Told at the Lotos Club Dinner.

MANY PAY HIM TRIBUTE

President Lawrence, Ex-Ambassador Tower, Editor McKelway, and Others Speak—The Laird's Happy Reply.

Andrew Carnegie was the guest of honor last night at the first dinner given by the Lotos Club in the club's new home, at 110 West Fifty-seventh Street, whose very existence at this time was due, President Frank S. Lawrence announced, to the generosity and liberality of Mr. Carnegie at one of the most critical periods in the club's history.

The occasion was made a great feast of friendship and good-fellowship, with Mr. Carnegie as the chief figure. Tributes were paid to his worth as a citizen and his wisdom and generosity as a philanthropist by Mark Twain, introduced as "St. Mark" Twain; Charlemagne Tower, ex-Ambassador to Germany, Richard Watson Gilder, St. Clair McKelway, President John H. Finley of the City College, the Rev. Dr. Nehemiah H. Boynton of Brooklyn, Dr. Henry S. Pritchett of the Sage Foundation, and others.

One of the most humorous and charming of the addresses of the evening was delivered by Mr. Carnegie himself, who was almost boyish in his fun-making, and literally bubbling over with enjoyment of the affair.

Mr. Carnegie sat at the right of President Lawrence, the toastmaster, and immediately in front of a handsome life-size painting of himself.

...[deleted about Carnegie]...

"We have heard a good deal about St. Patrick this evening," said the toastmaster. "We have heard from St. Clair, and now we shall hear from St. Mark."

Mark Twain began by saying: "I am glad I have got my due. At last I am ranked with the saints, where I belong."

Mr. Clemens said it was hard to be complimenting and complimented as Mr. Carnegie had been. Mr. Lawrence had said the Laird of Skibo had helped the club out when it was in difficulties, but he had no doubt Mr. Carnegie had received the inspiration at a dinner at which he (Mark Twain) was the guest of honor. "But," he went on, "he gets all the credit and I get none.

"Now, he is trying to look indifferent, but he is not deceiving anybody. To hear him talk, everybody in this country who amounts to anything came from Scotland. I am not denying it, but it is simply immodest for him to say so. He and St. Patrick and all the rest came from Dumfermline, from what Tower and St. Clair McKelway say, and you wonder if Columbus wasn't of those Dumfermline folks, too. St. Clair McKelway just piled the compliments on, saying he even wanted to pay more taxes than they charged him. It is all right; he deserves it all, and if these others hadn't said it I would have had to say it myself."

Some of those present were Samuel Untermyer, Charles W. Fuller, Dr. W. W. Walker, Ernest W. Behrens, A. A. Allen, J. R. Andrews, William Berri, George A. Hearn, Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, Ezra De Forest, Col. George Harvey, J. W. Harper, C. J. Fitzgerald, J. A. Flagler, Richard C. Velt, William A. Libby, Henry Wollman, J. Takamine, Martin Saxe, John F. O'Rourke, Supreme Court Justice Charles F. McLean, J. H. McKinley, and Chester S. Lord.

March 18 Thursday – Ralph W. Ashcroft and Isabel V. Lyon married [MTHHR 662n1]. The New York Times ran a squib on the marriage on p. 5:

Mark Twain's Secretary to Wed.

Miss Isabel Van Kleeck Lyon, private secretary to Mark Twain, will be married tonight to Ralph Ashcroft, manager, of 24 Stone Street. They obtained a license at the City Clerk's office yesterday. Mr. Ashcroft is a widower.

The Times ran a follow up squib on Mar. 19:

Mark Twain's Secretary a Bride

Miss Isabel V. Lyon, Mark Twain's social and literary secretary, was married yesterday to Ralph Ashcroft, who is a close friend of Mr. Clemens and his business adviser. Mr. Clemens was present at the ceremony, which was performed by the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant at the Church of the Ascension, Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street.

Hill provides us with a bit more detail:

On March 18, 1909, the Reverend Percy Grant married Ashcroft and Miss Lyon in New York City with, as Clemens put it, nine persons present if God was there. Clemens himself was there, anyhow, and the couple, strangely morose and distant according to Clemens' testimony, made the trip back to Redding in complete silence. Clemens also noted that the newlyweds chose to occupy separate bedrooms at Stormfield the night of the wedding [222]. Note: years later Lyon maintained the marriage was one of convenience.

Sam gave a house ("the Lobster Pot") with sixteen acres adjoining Stormfield to Isabel Lyon as a wedding gift. It would soon become a tug of war between Clemens and the Ashcrofts, as on June 18, Sam would have a writ of attachment placed on her property after discovering "irregularities" in the books.

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, "The thieves frightened into marrying." Clemens felt that the marriage was a way they might escape testifying against each other. In the Lyon-Ashcroft MS Clemens describes the wedding scene, colored, of course, by his later enmity toward the pair:

The church was cold & clammy, which was quite proper. Miss Lyon's mother was there, some Ashcrofts were there, the two Freemans were there, I was there. Also Mrs. Martin W. Littleton, and God. If he was there. Reverend Percy Grant intimated that he was; even said he was. Nine in all.

Miss Lyon acted the happy young bride to admiration. She almost made it look real. The reality itself could hardly have been more sweetly and gushing by & artfully artlessly girlish. And when she knelt on a priedien & bowed her head reverently, with her bridal veil flowing about it & Percy Grant stood grandly up in his consecrated livery, with hands & chin uplifted, & prayed over her—well, it was stunningly impressive & rotten, & I was glad I was there to see.

There was no bridal trip. Mr. & Mrs. R.W. Lyon-Ashcroft came back "~~home~~" & took up night-quarters at their house & day quarters at mine.

In these days, we had guests in the house all the time, & the new bride was in great form as salaried Social Secretary & Ornament. She was the liveliest of the lively, the joyest of the joy. Clara was now in command, as housekeeper. The Ashcrofts & I were soon friendly & sociable again, & I hoped & believed these conditions would continue. Clara hoped the opposite.

Minnie R. Dwight for Holyoke Daily Transcript (Mass.) wrote to ask Sam for a short story for children for the Holyoke Fair [MTP].

March 19 Friday – Von Beck Canfield wrote from Brooklyn to Sam.

Dear Sir:

In the early years of your travels and writings, there was with you a companion by the name of Hector Kingman—a distant cousin of mine—In one of your books, I am told, you related a story about a “Queen Ann” musket which Kingman when young loaded with stones, etc. (we still have the musket”) Can you tell me, and will you be kind enough to do so—in what book that anecdote occurs? I trust you will at least answer [MTP]. Note: Sam replied Mar. 24.

James B. Craighead for the Stonewall Plantation, Nodena, Ark. wrote to argue against the “canalization” of the Mississippi by dredging, which he felt would be “a great waste of the people’s money.” He asked that “this matter discussed and plainly shown in your serious and argumentative manner may do much to prevent” such a waste [MTP].

John H. Johnston wrote from NYC to praise Clemens for JA, asking what was it about Joan that made her such a wonder? He theorized it was the same thing that happened to Paul on the road to Damascus, to Shakespeare, and Walt Whitman—“they all came into Cosmic Consciousness, a condition we all come into in greater or less degree before we amount to much spiritually or mentally” [MTP].

Leonard C. Whitmire, a 13 year old boy, wrote a fan letter from Waverly, Iowa to Sam. His mother a librarian, he’d read all the Hillcrest Ed. of Twain’s works and thought Capt. Stormfield’s Visit to Heaven “was the funniest thing...” [MTP].

March 22 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Mar. 19 from John H. Johnston. “Messages like yours can never lose their value” [MTP: Swann Galleries catalog May 2, 1957, No. 468, Item 317].

The Peace Society of NYC per William H. March 23 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote an advertisement to the public for the Redding Times. Under a photo of Stormfield, Sam wrote, “Mr. Sunderland built my house, & I can recommend him in the strongest terms, as a builder, to any who may need his services. / Mark Twain” [MTP]. Note: see prior entries on the Sunderlands, father & son.

From the Mark Twain Library Association minutes, meeting at Stormfield:

March 24

On Wednesday afternoon at 4.30 P.M.—was held the 3rd quarterly meeting of the officers of the M.T.L.A. contrary to the usual custom of meeting at the Library, the officers met at the residence of our President, Mr. S.L. Clemens. Dr. E.H. Smith and Mr W.E. Grumman were unable to be present, and only three comprised the meeting, Mr. H A Lounsbury, Mrs. Ralph Lyon-Ashcroft & the Sec. No business was transacted, but it was decided to put through a matter voted on in our previous meeting, that of having the by-laws printed, and a copy to be given to each person taking books from the library [copied by Tenney, Nov. 15, 1981]. Note: Isabel Lyon and Ralph Ashcroft had married Mar. 18, some six days prior.

Margaret Smith Cobb wrote from Garberville, Calif. to ask Sam’s help in finding a publisher for her book; she mentioned being encouraged by Ambrose Bierce and Joaquin Miller, this last sent a rose-scented letter on rose-colored paper that was entirely illegible to her [MTP].

March 27 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to John Albert Macy, who had sent Sam Granville George Greenwood’s book, The Shakespeare Problem Restated (1908) and Some Acrostic Signatures of Francis Bacon, etc. (1909) by William Stone Booth.

Dear Mr. Macy: / Alas!

I can’t (by sticking strictly to the directions given) succeed in digging out any of the acrostics submerged in the Shakespeare text.

Page 581. By beginning with the initial “A” and afterward using terminals only. I can get Antonio in the prescribed twenty (20) lines, but not Bacons.

I am not instructed to go back and find a “B” and start over again.

Next, I am to begin at the bottom with an initial “F” then travel to the right and upward, confining myself to terminals; I promptly run ashore. If I can’t be allowed to also use initials, I can’t arrive. (And there is no terminal “R”)

However, what I mainly want to speak of, is this: The reader’s job should be made easy, not difficult. Each letter of an acrostic should be printed in the margin opposite the line it belongs in, so that the reader will have no head wearying hunting to do. He won’t do that hunting, anyway, for he is human, and the human being is an ass. He will puzzle over ten (10) acrostics, suffer defeat, and deliver his verdict to any that will listen: “The acrostics are not there”—and he will not examine another one.

It is too bad, too bad, too bad!

With the acrostic letters indicated for him, the unconverted could be converted, but not by any other process.

How soon do you want the proofs back?

With love to you all, / ... [MTP]. Note: see Gribben 77 and 276.

Kathryn A. Burgess for the Int'l Sunshine Society, Brooklyn, wrote to invite Sam to the May 20 function at the Hotel Astor [MTP].

Julius A. Seloyd wrote from Dixon, Ill. to Sam, mentioning he'd asked permission to send his book about a year before that he “had under way, in order to show him an apparent case of rank plagiarism in said book. Such it is not—only another case of great minds running in the same channel.” He'd been called “Dixon's Mark Twain” and was anxious to send his book. He felt Clemens might never see the letter so addressed it to “My Dear Secretary” [MTP].

March 28 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Dear heart, where are you going to be—well, about the 10th or 12th of April? Because at that time I shall be publishing a booklet. Shall I send it to Atlanta, or to St. Timothy's?

Next Thursday, April 1st, I am going down to Norfolk, Va., by steamer, & shall sail thence for New York on Monday the 5th. Mr. Rogers will be celebrating the opening of his big railroad Saturday night, the 3^d—no, Norfolk will be celebrating him with a banquet, that night. It's the merchants & other business men. I have not asked for any privileges, but in their kindness they have volunteered them without the asking, & I am most sincerely thankful: I am allowed to stay away until the banquet is over & the speeches begin: 10 p.m.; & am not required to come in black clothes. I cannot endure long banquets—the fatigue is too great; & as for black clothes, my aversion for them is incurable.

I note your promises to bring him here for inspection & possible approval. Don't forget it. It took me only two days to size-up Beatrice's young man & accept him. Now then, go carefully, don't be rash. When you find yourself inclining toward a candidate, banish him from your presence & banish the thought of him from your mind, until you & your parents have had plenty of time to talk him over & arrive at a decision. It is the only wise way. You'll not take him; nor his successor, either; nor his successor's successor; but you will take No. 4 or No. 5, & be glad you let the others go. And so shall I. I reckon there's a young fellow creeping into your mind now. Throw him out—& follow the above prescription. It's a hundred to one he isn't the right one. You are the very dearest sweetest Francesca there is; & you are not to waste yourself. / Lovingly [MTP; MTAq 255-6].

March 29 Monday – Raymond A. Blakemore wrote from Boston to advise Sam that he'd invented a “word counter” to be attached to a typewriter, and asked the favor of Sam's opinion if “such a machine would be of material advantage to you and other authors” [MTP].

George H. Brennan wrote from NYC. Brennan had met Clemens “several years ago” as a reporter on the Boston Herald, and again “one day last summer on the top of a Fifth Avenue coach.” Thus he had the courage to send a copy of his “theatrical story ‘Bill Truetell’ which had been published [MTP].

S. DeWitt Clough wrote from Chicago to advise Sam he was sending a copy of Backbone. Some chapters in the book “may suggest experiences of your own...”. He also enclosed (in file) a title page from Success Thoughts, a book he was preparing—“Will you help me to help others by furnishing just a brief chapter from your own successful experience [?]” [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben.

Stuart Hilder wrote from Washington, D.C. to confirm a story he'd heard about being called to dinner was indeed given by Mark Twain [MTP].

Adah Price wrote from Delta, Colo. to Sam after having read RI which had taught her how to laugh again after great tragedy [MTP].

Bruce R. Silver wrote from Roxbury, NY to ask Sam for “a statement” approving of the resolution that all important international differences should be settled by arbitration. This for a school debate [MTP].

Sam Sullivan for Wallace & Co., Grocers, NYC wrote to Sam that he’d left Charles & Co. and opened his own store. He would like to fill any orders Clemens might have [MTP].

March 30 Tuesday – Sam described the beginning of a controversy concerning the recently hired servant, Horace Hazen:

On the 30th of March Clara reported to me that Horace Hagen wanted an advance of wages & another afternoon & evening off. I said “satisfy him if you can.” He wasn’t much of a butler, but he was improving. He was a country lad, nineteen years old, very slim, & apparently nineteen feet high, but this was an optical delusion, he was only 6 feet 2. He was a good fellow, & of good character, & was the son of a farmer-neighbor [William E. Hazen] whose forbears had occupied the farm since the earliest times. His wage was high enough—$35 a month—but he was learning, & would soon be worth more [MTP: L-A MS]. Note: see Mar. 31, Apr. 1 entries concerning Hazen.

March 31 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam finished the “lost” Mar. 5 postcard to Dorothy Quick.

March 31. Dear me, I wrote that 3 or 4 weeks ago, & I must have been called away, as I did not finish it. I have now found it in my table drawer, with two other unfinished letters, written the same week. I give you my word, dear heart, that I had not been drinking.

I am just leaving, now, for Virginia, with Ashcroft, to be gone a week or ten days. / With lots of love, / SLC [MTP].

Clara & I left for New York the next morning. In the course of the three-mile drive to the station I asked about Horace, & she said he & she had agreed upon $45 per month & the extra off-time he had asked for.

I spent that night at the house of H.H. Rogers, & arranged for next day’s journey. To Norfolk, Virginia, to speak at a banquet in his honor, & witness the glories which⁴ were to be poured out upon him by the people—for he had built a great railway 446 miles long, ~~down~~ all by himself, down there, & secured for that region a vast & permanent prosperity. ~~But~~ Ashcroft was to go with me & take care of me, & baby me & protect me from drafts, & so-on & so-on, just in the old-time way, the old charming way, the old happy way, & just as if nothing had ever happened to interrupt our heaven-born relations [MTP: L-A MS XI].

William Maily for the NY Evening Call wrote to Sam. “I hope you have not forgotten my recent letter regarding a contribution of one or more of your books for the Fair of the Evening Call, to be held at Grand Central Palace” which opened on Apr. 3. He had not heard back from Clemens [MTP].

April – Sam inscribed a photograph of himself seated for Elizabeth, not further identified [Ebay, Bestdarnautographs, 2010].

Sam also inscribe a photograph of himself (in a two-piece white suit smoking a cigar) to Sir Gilbert Parker: “To / Sir Gilbert Parker / with the love of / Mark Twain / April/09.” [Sotheby’s, June 19, 2003, Lot 133]. Note: this photo was used for the cover of Sotheby’s catalog for the Mark Twain Collection of Nick Karanovich.

Sam also wrote a note in black ink on a box containing an old tintype of Orion Clemens: “Tintype of Orion Clemens / in a Guinea-gold hoop / mother use to wear / in the 40’s. At the time it contained a lock of her / mother or grandmother’s / hair / SLC. Apl. 1909” [MTP]. See insert.

Country Life in America ran an anonymous article, “Stormfield, Mark Twain’s New Country Home. How the Humorist Built a House Without Seeing It—An Italian Villa in the Connecticut Hills—The Second in a Series of Articles on Country Homes of Notable Americans,” p. 607-11, 650-51. Tenney: “A description of the house at Redding, Connecticut, illustrated by pictures of the house and MT at his ease there, and a facsimile of his ‘Notice. To the next Burglar’ warning that hung in the billiard room” [47].

April 1 Thursday – Sam was in New York, having spent the night at the home of H.H. Rogers. A 3 p.m. he caught the steamer Jefferson for Norfolk, Va. to attend a banquet honoring H.H. Rogers for opening a new railroad there [Mar. 28 to Nunnally]. The New York Times, p.1, Apr. 2, 1909 reported their departure:

H.H. ROGERS OFF TO VIRGINIA.

Mark Twain and Others Accompany Him to the Opening of His Railway.

H.H. Rogers, accompanied by Mark Twain and a party of railroad men, sailed yesterday [Apr. 1] for Norfolk on the Old Dominion liner Jefferson. They are to be present at the formal opening of the Virginian Railroad, of which Mr. Rogers is President and principal stockholder.

On their arrival to-day, the party will be entertained by a local committee and in the evening a dinner will be given to Mr. Rogers, whose enterprise and capital made possible the construction of the new line. Other guests will be Gov. Swanson of Virginia, Senator John W. Daniel, Thomas Martin, and others prominent in Virginia and elsewhere.

Besides Mark Twain, those accompanying Mr. Rogers were U. Broughton, H.H. Rogers, Jr., James M. Beck, Melville E. Stone, Charles Lancaster, W.R. Coe, W.E. Benjamin, G.H. Church, J.S. Hopkins, and R. Ashcroft.

Sam recorded the trip and the continued controversy about the firing of Horace Hazen:

We went by boat, sailing at 3 p.m., along with the other guests. We were together, & even so content & comfortable until midnight, when he [Ashcroft] tucked me in, placed my books, tobacco, pipes, cigars, matches, & hot-whisky outfit conveniently, then went his way. We had sat together at dinner; we sat together at breakfast in the morning; we drove together to the hotel in Norfolk; we were inseparable in all our goings & comings that day. It was all exceedingly pleasant & sociable.

Then came an incident. Toward dinner time he came into my room with an open letter in his hand, & astonished me by saying,

“Miss Clemens has discharged Horace!”

“No such thing; she’s done nothing of the kind.”

“Yes, but she has!” & his little rat-eyes twinkled with malicious joy.

“How do you know she has?”

“Horace says so. This letter is from Horace, & he says just that; uses that expression.”

“Does his saying so make it so?”

“Yes it does, because Horace is absolutely truthful in absolutely. He doesn’t know how to lie.”

“He has lied this time, all the same, unless something has been happening since I left to cause his discharge.”

“Well, he wasn’t going to stay, anyway.”

“He wasn’t? How do you know?”

“He told me so, himself. He said he would not serve under Miss Clemens for any 1 wages in the world.”

“He said that to you?”

“Yes.”

“Did you recognise that he had insulted you? Did you try to knock him down?”

(Ashcroft's silence meant no.) "Where you skunk enough to take that?" (Some more silence.) "When did he tell you these things?"

"The night before you left."

"Why, you were in New York! You went down that morning."

That seemed to embarrass him for a moment or two, then he said, "I had to go back to attend to some things."

"Then Horace must have told you those things in my house. Did he?"

"Yes."

"You knew my daughter & I were going away in the morning. Why didn't you report that conversation to me, so that we could secure a butler in New York?"

He was getting pretty uncomfortable; words did not flow easily with him. He finally made out to say he hadn't believed Horace was in real earnest, but was only irritated about something & would cool off & change his mind. Then he added:

"But it didn't happen. He has been discharged; & as it was without notice, he is entitled to a month's wages & wants it."

"Wants it, merely on his testimony, uncorroborated, that he has been peremptorily discharged? Well, he won't get it right away. That I know."

Those rat-eyes glinted again joyfully, & Ashcroft said—

"He's already got it!"

"What do you mean?"

"That was his check that you signed this morning, & I sent it off in the noon mail."

"Well, upon my word! You do seem to be in a most extravagant hurry. You are my salaried business conscience, my business adviser, my business nurse, my business sentinel on the watch-tower to see that nobody slips up on me with an undocumented & unverified claim, & this is your first official act! Why, Ashcroft, child as I am, I know more about business than that, my self. Get that check back! And don't lose any time about it."

He pretty meekly confessed that perhaps he had been a little premature, & said he would go at once & telegraph Horace.

I would give a good deal if I had kept still & allowed that check to be collected. But I didn't know Ashcroft then, & so I lost my chance. ~~to jail him.~~

I took Horace's letter, read it, & put it in my pocket. There was no envelop. There had never been one, but I didn't know that. I insert it here. For certain good & sufficient reasons, it is an interesting document.

[Horace's Letter follows:]

Redding Conn.

Mar 31st 09

Mr S. L. Clemens,

Dear Sir: having been discharged from your services on this 31st day of March 1909 by Miss Clara Clemens but having agreed to stay until April 5th 1909 according to my contract I am entitled to a months salar[y] for which I would consider a fvor if you would send me on or before that time.

No words, can express my gratitude for your kindness shown me since being in your employment and beleive me my dear sir I feel greatly indibeted to you.

Again thanking you and hoping to hear and see you often.

I beg to remain

Your humble servent.

H.W. Hazen [MTP: L-A MS XI].

F. Lyman Browne for Consolidated Typewriter Exchange wrote to Isabel Lyon about the "exact kind of paper" wanted to fill her order of five reams [MTP].

Steven Henry Thayer for The Author's Club, NYC wrote that they were engaged in obtaining “as full a representation” of each author’s works “as is practicable” and then listed Twain’s works that they had, desiring those missing [MTP].

April 2 Friday – Clemens recorded this day’s events and of Ashcroft carrying Horace Hazen’s forced letter of “discharge” on the trip to Norfolk:

On the 2d I took Ashcroft with me to lunch with two ladies at The Hotel Gotham, & he was very sweet & nice, & the ladies liked him ever so much, & he had that letter in his pocket all the time, & was under contract, since March 13th, to look after my business matters & take good care of them. We joined Mr. Rogers & the others on the boat at mid-afternoon, & Ashcroft, with that letter in his pocket, dined with those people, swapped anecdotes & other sociabilities with them, & in these & in all ways allowed them to treat him just as if he were a gentleman. And three of them were fellow-countrymen of his—Englishmen: Mr. Broughton & Mr. Coe, sons-in-law of Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Lancaster of Liverpool, the city Ashcroft was born in.

Clear till bedtime Ashcroft, with that letter in his pocket, was as tenderly & watchfully & affectionately attentive to my slightest needs or desires as ever; & next day in Norfolk it was this same; & I think it was late afternoon of that day that he came into my room looking greatly surprised, with Horace’s open letter in his hand, & said—

Isn’t it romantic! Isn’t it stacy & charming! [MTP: L-A MS XIII].

National Geographic Society per O.P. Austin, Wash. D.C. sent a pre-printed postcard “to acknowledge the receipt of your application for membership” [MTP].

April 3 Saturday – Sam and H.H. Rogers attended the banquet in Norfolk, Va. celebrating the completion of Rogers’ railroad there. The New York Times of Apr. 4, reported the event on p.10:

VIRGINIANS GIVE PRAISE TO ROGERS

Show Recognition of His Accomplishment in Building the Virginian Railway.

$20 BANQUET IN NORFOLK

Rogers Says Road is a Business Enterprise, but His Interests Are Common with State

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., April 3.—As a mark of recognition of the successful accomplishment of Henry H. Rogers in the building of the Virginian Railway a dinner, the most elaborate ever spread in Norfolk, was tendered Mr. Rogers here tonight.

Two hundred and fifty of the most distinguished men of the Old Dominion and places beyond her borders assembled to honor him. The main dining room of the Monticello Hotel was banked with flowers and festooned with flags as it has never before been. And the dinner—it was almost too rich for people who are partial to the dollar-a-plate variety. This cost $20. Rogers was lionized. Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) who is his guest here, was surprised at the magnificence of the feast.

The speechmaking commenced a few minutes before 10 o’clock. Judge William H. White, President of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad, served as toastmaster.

Just as Judge White arose for his speech Mark Twain, who had remained out of the room while the dinner was being eaten, made his appearance at the door adorned in a white flannel suit and other negligee attire. He was at once recognized.

A great ovation was accorded him. He took a seat on the left of the toastmaster, Mr. Rogers being on the right. After the applause for Mark Twain had subsided the toastmaster arose to make his speech.

Judge White's Speech.

"The occasion which has brought us together is one very much out of the ordinary. The men of affairs of other communities have assembled to pay tribute to some guest who has achieved a large and lasting good for the community life, but it has been reserved for us to have as our honored guest tonight one who, single-minded and alone, has constructed a great railway from the distant mountains of West Virginia to the Atlantic Ocean here at our door. It is this product, this manifestation of individual wealth and sagacity that lends special significance to the occasion.

"In building the Virginian Railway from mountain to ocean, a monument has been erected to its author which will survive all the other masterful successes of his long and eventful life. In conception, construction, and selection of its route and traffic the same practical sagacity has been displayed which has made success for Mr. Rogers in all of his life work.

"He has selected as the commodity to supply most of his traffic one of the finest varieties of coal known to our manufacturing interests, a commodity growing in demand more rapidly than any other, and more essential to the material growth and development of our land. He has selected the most approved grades and methods known to modern railroad construction, and he has located his deep-water terminals with unerring provision.

"Wisdom, almost prophetic in character, has governed the builder of this great artery of trade, destined to become a most important factor in the life of this State and community."

Mr. Rogers's Speech

Mr. Rogers said in part:

"It is a great honor, and I shall not deny a great pleasure, to be your guest on this occasion. I am not gifted with the art of oratory, and am forced to say my thanks in plain and homely words. Yet they are none the less heartfelt. I make no pretense that the building of the Virginian Railway was intended wholly as a public service, and it is a business enterprise. I have faith that the resources of this Old Dominion State, when properly developed, mean a great deal, not for you who live here alone, but for the whole country.

"And I have simply sought to bear what share I could in the development of these resources. You gentlemen of Virginia and I have a common interest. I shall endeavor to deal fairly by you and I am sure you propose doing the same by me. Again I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the honor you have conferred upon me."

This morning Mr. Rogers and others left by special car for an inspection of the Virginian Railway's great terminal property at Sewell's Point, located a few miles beyond the corporate limits of Norfolk, where the Elizabeth River empties into Hampton Roads. Mr. Rogers spent some time on the great steel pier leading out from shore, and from which the coal brought from West Virginia will be dumped into ship bottoms foreign and coastwise. While on the pier Mr. Rogers witnessed the loading of the steamboat Everett of Boston with 7,200 tons cargo coal, this being the first cargo vessel to be loaded therefrom.

The party start from here for an inspection of the Virginian system, extending from Norfolk to the coal fields of West Virginia, a distance of nearly 450 miles.

April 4 Sunday – In Norfolk, Va. Sam telegraphed Clara about Horace Hazen's note, that he had been discharged [MTP: L-A MS]. Note: the telegram is not extant.

April 5 Monday – In the evening Sam sailed for New York City, where he evidently stayed two days before continuing on to Redding, Conn. [Mar. 28 to Nunnally].

The Norfolk LEDGER-DISPATCH reported Sam's presence in Norfolk on this day:

MARK TWAIN DELIGHTED THE LITTLE ONES

Famous Humorist at the City Kindergarten and the High School TOTS GIVE HIM A DOSE OF HIS OWN MEDICINE

It Was "Medicine," Though That Thousands Have Taken With Pleasure—Dr. Clemens Leaves for Home Tonight

Dr. Samuel L. Clemens heard a considerable number of younger children somewhat haltingly but never the less delightfully repeat today a certain story written by one whom they have been taught to look upon as illustrious.

The story is the story of Joan of Arc, by Mark Twain, and the telling of it to Dr. Clemens was held by the Norfolk women interested in the kindergarten who maneuvered to bring it about, as a pretty good turning of the tables upon the world's favorite humorist and historian, who apparently shared their view afterward.

The plotters asked Dr. Clemens today to visit the Atlantic City Kindergarten which is in charge of Miss Lillian Wadsworth and he took the bait. Then they prepared to have the children tell him his own inimitable story, of the French girl, which story is now the kindergarten classic.

The ladies were at the Lynnhaven Hotel preparing to transport Dr. Clemens to the kindergarten in a Rambler bubble which he had just blown, when Superintendent of Public Schools R. A. Dobie and School Committeeman H. B. Bagnall called at the hotel to ask Mark to address the High School scholars. They found that the kindergartners had him booked, but proposed to let the high school scholars have him after the kindergarten visit, which was imminent, was over. They, therefore, took Messrs. Dobie and Bagnall into partnership and all bundled into the auto with Mark and Secretary of Mark Twain, Incorporated, Ralph Ashcroft; and set off on the expedition.

At High School Also.

After the visit to the kindergarten, which seemed to give great delight to Doctor Clemens, Messrs. Dobie and Bagnall took him to the high school where he made one of his famous speeches. There is very little studying likely to be done today in at least two schools in this town in which the boys and girls, little and big, are perfectly wild.

Dr. Clemens who declined to go out on the inspection tour of the Virginian Railway with his friend, H. H. Rogers, and party, yesterday but decided to return with Mr. Ashcroft to New York tonight aboard the Old Dominion liner Hamilton, spent several hours yesterday watching the Sunday school children and the church-goers traversing Freemason street, apparently studying us with a view to making literature of us.

Once, when in the vicinity of the Church of the Disciples, some one told the Doctor that Mrs. Thomas Miranda, of Norfolk, was that artist who discovered some years ago the shadowy outlines of a child in a photograph of Mark, the child apparently whispering in the writer's ear. Thereupon, Mrs. Miranda, accompanied by her husband, came out of the church and both were introduced to the author, and called upon the Doctor at his hotel later.

His triumphant progress about Norfolk yesterday, during which he was introduced to many folks here, was attended by many diverting incidents and his brilliant wit flashed at brief intervals.

When he returned to the Lynnhaven, after his walk, to say good-bye to Mr. Rogers, who left the city at eleven o'clock, for the run over the road which will end at Deepwater and allow the party to reach New York next Thursday, Mr. Rogers saw him pick up his overcoat and immediately charged him with attempting to make off with another man's coat.

Mark protested that the coat was his, as it really was, but Mr. Rogers said that he knew Mark's coat and also his other one and that this was neither. This badinage which was much enjoyed by everybody in the neighborhood did not end until Mr. Rogers bade Mark an affectionate farewell, inquiring, first, however, his plans, and ascertaining that Mr. Ashcroft was to remain with him and look after his comfort.

Home at Redding.

"You are going straight to New York, are you," asked Mr. Rogers, "You are going right to my house, aren't you?"

"No," said Mark, "I have an engagement which I must fill and then I shall go right on to Redding." Redding, Conn., where he has his home is that place where he said, during the late panic when some rich men were rightly and some erroneously reported to be pinched for money, he would give Mr. Rogers a lot if he needed a home.

It also is the place where he put out the famous notice to burglars asking them to take what they wanted without waking him. During the chafing between him and Mr. Rogers yesterday, Mark asked his friend to speak to Manager Johnston, of the hotel, and assure him that Mark was a nice man and probably would pay his hotel bill some time.

"Where is the manager?" inquired Mr. Rogers.

"He is hiding behind a screen," said Mark.

The manager does not seem today to be apprehensive over his bill. Indeed he has placed a big automobile at the service of his famous guest.

Son of Uncle Remus.

A visitor who was received at the Lynnhaven today and whose call was highly appreciated by Dr. Clemens is Evelyn Harris, son of the late Joel Chandler Harris, "Uncle Remus," whose close friend and admirer Dr. Clemens is. There has been a stream of callers today. It is suspected that he will have something of an ovation at the Old Dominion pier, when he sails tonight.

Dr. Clemens' absolute disregard for conventionality was never better shown than yesterday. With his private secretary, he had been taking a stroll along Freemason street, the street of the churches, in Norfolk, and happened to pass the Freemason Baptist Church just as services had been concluded.

Dr. Livius Lankford, one of the deacons of the church, was one of the first to spy the eminent humorist, and he promptly introduced himself, concluding the introduction with an invitation to dinner. Dr. Clemens as promptly accepted.

"But, Dr. Clemens," protested his secretary, "you have an engagement at half past four this afternoon."

"Guess I am man enough to break it," said Mark Twain.

He dined with Dr. and Mrs. Lankford at their home, Edgewater, Dr. Burnley Lankford and his wife being the other members of the party, and returned to the city later in the touring car of W. H. H. Trice, in time to keep his engagement.

Mark Twain continued his visit at the High School for about one hour. He met and addressed the boys and girls of the school separately and was on each occasion given great ovation by the pupils. He shook the hand of each present. The enjoyment of the occasion seemed quite as great on the part of Dr. Clemens as on the part of the pupils.

MARK TWAIN STORY.

After the children of the kindergarten told Mark his story of Joan of Arc, he delighted them by telling a beautiful story of a gold shell which he had with him and showed the shell to each of the youngsters. To Miss Wadsworth, whom he thanked for the courtesy of her reception of him and for the privilege of visiting a kindergarten for the first time in his life, he said that he had enjoyed his novel experience tremendously.

Boys Would Have Him.

At the High School later, he delivered an address to the girls which they applauded to the echo but he said that he had no time to fool away talking to boys. The boys, however, would not have it so, came into the girls' room in numbers and hauled the author into their room where he finally addressed them.

Among other diversions he chafed Norfolk with little mercy, saying that they can tell a story here with such art that the reader will believe it to be true. A case in point, he said, was a story which he read in one of the morning papers here a day or two ago in which it was asserted that the water borne commerce of this port is something near as big as that of Liverpool. That is not true, he said.

S. DeWitt Clough wrote from Chicago to Isabel Lyon regretting that Clemens would be unable to write for Success Thoughts but still wanted an opinion of Backbone [MTP]. Note: the latter work (1911): "Found within this book are hints for the prevention of jelly-spine curvature and mental squint. It lends a straight-up antidote for the blues and a straight-ahead cure for grouch." (Google books).

April 6 Tuesday – Sam reached New York City, and stayed the night at H.H. Rogers’ home [MTP: L-A MS].

Oscar Williams wrote from Westport, Conn. to offer a farm for sale [MTP].

April 7 Wednesday – In NYC in the a.m., Sam went to see Clara to get to the bottom of the firing of Horace Hazen:

We reached New York from Norfolk later on Tuesday the 6th of April. I stayed at Mr. Rogers’s house, & went to Clara’s apartment in Stuyvesant Square the next morning [Apr. 7]. I had telegraphed Clara on the 4th that Horace had pronounced himself discharged. She had sent at once for Claude [Benchotte]. He had a place, but could give notice & come to us on the 15th— “& very gladly,” he said, “on condition that he was not to serve under Miss Lyon.” (She was still “Miss Lyon” to everybody—including her husband.) Clara had telephoned the news to Katy, at Stormfield, & who telephoned back, “I told Miss Lyon right away, & she was so scared she was as white as a ghost, for she knows what Claude thinks about that two-o’clock-in-the-morning incident, & that was why she made up her mind to drive him off the place & keep him from talking.”

I showed Horace’s letter to Clara, & she said it was totally false; that she hadn’t discharged him, & hadn’t thought of such a thing. I asked her to put the gist of it in writing—which she did, on the back of the letter. I was perplexed to a stand-still. I was not able to construct a plausible guess at how Horace had come to write the letter. neither could Clara, but she chanced the idea that “those Ashcroft’s are in it somewhere.”

At mid-afternoon Ashcroft saw me to the station—& bought my tickets & helped me aboard the train, according to old custom. Then he telephoned the lioness at “Summerfield” & she called up Stormfield & said to Terese excitedly—“Get Horace out of the house! Get him out at once! Mr. Clemens is coming, & is in a perfect rage.”

In rage! Another of her lies. I hadn’t anything to rage about. For I hadn’t found out, yet.

Miss Lyon was at Stormfield when I arrived, & she exclaimed with the most gushing & best-acted delight her art could furnish,

“Oh, I am so glad Claude is coming back! The best servant that ever was; the most honest, the most competent; I did so hate to lose him, & said he would walk over burning plough shares any time, to serve me. He’s just a dear!”

[Clara’s note on the back of Horace’s follows:]

I did not discharge Horace. On the contrary before I left Redding the new arrangement was that Horace was to have his wages raised to $45 a month and be allowed one extra night a week.—

Horace had discharged himself.

Sam returned with to Redding, completing his trip from Norfolk, Va. Ashcroft stayed in NYC for a day or two then went to Stormfield [Apr. 8 to Macy; MTP: L-A MS XI].

W.F. Borde for The Society For Italian Immigrants, NYC wrote to ask Sam if he’d join their society, leaflet enclosed (not in file) [MTP].

Lieutenant F.P. Camperio, naval attaché to the Italian Embassy, Wash. D.C. wrote to ask for an autograph [MTP].

April 8 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to John A. Macy.

Dear Mr. Macy: / I emptied into my Autobiography some remarks about Mr. Greenwood’s able book, and then took a notion to slam them into Harper’s Monthly; but that would put them off much too long; so I made a booklet of them, to be issued to-day. Now that is too early by three entire weeks, as I found last night when I got back from a week's absence in the South and read your letter. It's vexatious! but let it go, it can't be helped.

I do hope your average reader will not try to read Mr. Booth's book as I am obliged to read all books; a ten minute glance per day—or per week—with never a chance for one glance till the preceding one has been well and thoroughly forgotten.

I'm telling the Harper's to send the booklet to you at Boston and also Wrentham, / Yours ever ... / [MTP]. Note: see Mar. 27 for Macy.

Mark Twain Adds 150 Acres to Farm.

REDDING, Conn., April 8.—Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) has purchased 150 acres of land adjoining his recently acquired property. The "farm," as the author calls his beautiful estate, now comprises 350 acres of agricultural and wooded tracts, near the centre of which is the Clemens home. The house, an inviting abode, rises from a knoll that commands a far view of the surrounding country.

William H. Allen for Boston Browning Society, Boston, wrote to advise Sam of a May 7 celebration of Browning's birthday, where original tributes in prose and verse would be read. "Will you not honour the occasion by sending us something, or, still better, by coming in person to read it?" [MTP].

Hyrell Hawkes wrote from Hamilton, Ill. to Sam. Hawkes had an old desk that his father bought from Orion before he went West. The desk had belonged to Sam's father. "In one of the numerous small drawers was found a sheet of the Hannibal Commercial Advertiser Sep 14, 1839—with Clemens Esq written across the side." He had rec'd several offers for the desk but thought it might mean more to Sam than to anyone [MTP].

Edwin Wildman for M.A.P. Magazine and News Service, NYC wrote to Sam. The magazine was preparing an article upon "Those Who Make Us Laugh" and asked Sam's view on "What is Humor?" [MTP].

April 9 Friday – Sam recorded events at Stormfield "a day or two" after his Apr. 7 arrival from NY:

As I have said, I reached Stormfield on the 7th of April. Things were buzzing so to speak. Ashcroft came up a day or two later. Meantime I had not happened to see anything of Horace, & was too busy to look into his case. When Ashcroft arrived he paid Horace to date, & I signed the check. He paid him at the old rate—a confession, apparently, that Horace had not been "discharged," & that Ashcroft knew it.

Yes, things were buzzing. Clara wanted Miss Lyon discharged & sent out of the house at once. I said her first month on the March 15 contract would be computed on the 15th of the current month & I would then give her a month's notice & let her retire to her own house.

Clara wanted Miss Lyon's trunks, in the attic, searched for stolen goods. This astonished me! Did she think Miss Lyon that kind of thief? Yes, she thought she was; & believed she had more than merely plausible reasons for it [MTP: L-A MS XII]

Connecticut Institute for the Blind per J. McC. Bellows wrote to solicit "an offering" from Clemens for their continued good work. They wrote that Joseph Twichell would vouch for them. Clemens had been a past contributor and was on an enclosed list [MTP].

April 10 Saturday – In Redding, Conn., Isabel V. Lyon wrote for Sam to Frederick T. Leigh.

“Tell the Major to bring out the Stormfield book at a dollar & we’ll see if what he says is true. Nobody’s word is worth a damn anyway, & now we’ll have figures to prove it.”

Dear Major Leigh:

This is what Mr. Clemens said to me this morning. So you have your authority now to “go ahead”; but Mr. Clemens said that you’d better keep this letter as he might forget that he had authorized the publication of Captain Stormfield at a dollar, & here is your proof.

He is well & rested, & sends you many affectionate messages, & the hope that he will see you soon again.
/ Very Sincerely Yours / I. V. Lyon [MTP].

“Noon, April 10. Margaret is due [Blackmer] to arrive here with her mother at 5:45 this evening.

It is an event: an event like the advent of spring after winter. The scamp will be welcome. Also her mother.” [Note: on the following page:]

Century Theatre Club, NYC per Adele Durant Holt wrote that the Club wished to make Clemens an honorary member but did not want to do so without his permission. They wished to show in this small way their appreciation for his help with the Educational Theatre [MTP].

Josephine Lamden Kay wrote a long letter from Atlanta, Ga. to praise Sam’s writing of JA [MTP].

William Goodrich Wilcox wrote from Ft. Smith, Ark. to praise Sam’s writing. “...with the exception of Dickens and the Bible you have told more Truth and lies than any author.” He wrote 15 small sides of a letter telling his life story [MTP].

The New York Times, Apr. 10, p. BR205 under “Topics of the Week” ran this announcement:

Mark Twain has written a book called “Is Shakespeare Dead?” which is published by Harpers this week. It is not exactly a learned Shakespearean treatise, nor is it fiction altogether. There is something in regard to Shakespeare in the book, however, and there is also a good deal about Mark Twain, including his life on the Mississippi and his experiences in the Far West.

April 11 SundayApril 12 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka.

Dear Duneka: /PAGE 31 OF VOL II, “Letters of James Russell Lowell.”

That page is what I want, (to read at a banquet to Jerome May 7.) Tear it out & send it to me. It is part of a letter to E. L. Godkin (1869), & is just what I want as a text, in case I should wish to get up & talk. / Ys ever / Mark [MTP].

Sam went to New York City and likely stayed overnight with the H.H. Rogers; he was to attend daughter Clara's concert the following evening. He recorded the trip:

On the 12th ~~or 13~~ I went down to attend Clara's concert on the 13th. I went to the concert with the Rogerses. No Ashcrofts along. A month earlier, it had been planned that the Ashcrofts & I would go there together; but things were changed, now; that pair wanted none of Clara's music, & Clara was not yearning for any Ashcrofts [MTP: L-A MS XII].

In his L-A MS, Sam also included a letter to him from Isabel Lyon this date:

April 12/09

Dear Mr. Clemens

Please read this, for Mr. Ashcroft tells me that there has been some misunderstanding about the few garments I've bought, but which I never would have bought if Miss Clemens in all sweetness & generosity did not tell me to buy, after a morning about 2 years ago when I had been angry because Miss Hobby was drawing five dollars a day & was shirking her work. She came from your room & said that she had said to you that it was wrong for Miss Hobby to be paid just double the amount & salary that I drew, & that I must at last buy my clothes since I would not accept an advance of salary. She said I had to travel about with you etc. etc. Then I did buy a little suit at Altman's & told her, but she was very very dear, said "Oh don't mention those little things." She was the dearest creature; & said that you felt it was only right that I should have my garments as I had my Mother to support entirely from my salary. I have bought very little but can so easily itemize all of it. I have some silk here that I bought to wear only in your house & fortunately has never been cut into, so it is yours as I have laid to Benares & the other articles I shall be to very glad to pay for.

One thing more. I have been careful not to buy things where Miss Clemens would buy so that there could be no conflicting of accounts. I shall be glad to have you show this letter to Miss Clemens & she will know by what I own, wear, how little I have purchased. I have—but never mind.

I.V. Lyon [MTP: L-A MS XII].

April 13 Tuesday – In the evening Sam attended daughter Clara's concert at Mendelssohn Hall, NYC. The New York Times, Apr. 14, p.11, gave her performance mixed reviews, as did other city papers. One unnamed paper follows the Times report:

MISS CLARA CLEMENS SINGS.

Mark Twain's Daughter Heard at Recital with Miss Littlehales.

Miss Clara Clemens, contralto, daughter of Mark Twain, and Miss Lillian Littlehales, cellist, gave a recital at Mendelssohn Hall last night. Miss Clemens sang songs by Haendel, Scarlotti, Coldara, Schubert, Schumann, Strauss, Gabrilowitsch, Debussy, Tirindelli, Sjorgen, Bath, White, Chadwick, and Vannuccini, and Miss Littlehales played a sonata by Johann Ernst Gailliard and the obligato to Vannuccini's "La Visione," which Miss Clemens sang.

It seems a pity that a singer with as good a natural voice as that of Miss Clemens, who sings with so much feeling, should not use her voice to better advantage. Her tones last night were too often uneven and muffled.

Miss Littlehales showed in her playing good technique and true feeling. The audience was moderately enthusiastic.

And from an unnamed newspaper collected by Thomas Tenney at the Mark Twain Library, Redding, in 1981:

Mark Twain Attends His Daughter's Concert

Miss Clara Clemens Heard in a Numer of Delightful Songs at Mendelssohn Hall.

Mendelssohn Hall was given over yesterday to the musical children of eminent fathers. Following a recital in the afternoon by Karl Klein, the violinist, son of Composer Bruno Oscar Klein, Clara Clemens, the singing daughter of "Mark Twain," was heard in the evening in conjunction with Lillian Littlehales, the 'cellist.

Miss Clemens is a beautiful young woman and has the foundation of a great contralto voice. There are occasional evidences in her singing of an unripeness which with practice and a good instructor can easily be eliminated. Some of the notes in her middle register are magnificent, but her high and low notes are faulty.

Miss Clemens's programme was most attractive and diversified. She sang songs by Handel, Schubert, Schumann, Gabrilowitsch (a charming love-song, dedicated to Miss Clemens), Strauss, two iridescent things by Debussy and several others.

....

Mark Twain was seated among many other literary lights and fashionable listeners and applauded his daughter's efforts discreetly.

[See also article from the New York Evening Post, Apr. 14, "Miss Clemens and Miss Littlehales" MTP Autodict. 4]

Likewise, the NY Sun called Clara "A Young Contralto with Excellent Voice but Unfinished Technic" [Apr. 14, p.7]. Note: William Dean Howells was present for the performance [MTHL 846n2].

Mrs. Samuel McKnight Green, Jr. wrote from St. Louis to ask Sam for the D.A.R. to "write the words for our patriotic State Song" [MTP].

S. Louise Patterson wrote from Cleveland, Ohio: "I am deeply interested in your library for the farming community around you, and take pleasure in sending you a copy of each of my books for this worthy enterprise" [MTP]. Note: Patterson was the author of several books on cats, including, Pussy Meow: The Autobiography of a cat.

April 14 Wednesday – Sam spent part of the day in NYC; likely he spent the night of Apr. 13 with the H.H. Rogers family. He recorded a talk with Ashcroft that took place on this day:

On the 14th I was still in New York I suppose, (a part of the day) because I had a talk with Ashcroft which I think must have occurred about that time. He told me Clara's feeling against Miss Lyon had reached such a pass that Miss Lyon believed Clara was going to have her trunks searched; also that she was going to have her arrested—& so Miss Lyon was in a state of pitiable humiliation & distress.

Then Ashcroft cried.

I said—

"Arrest her? Nonsense. On what ground?"

"Because she has a suspicion that—"

"Well, that is nonsense, too. Clara would apply to a lawyer, & the lawyer would not allow her to proceed upon a mere suspicion."

Miss Lyon's fright was a self-accusation, but I didn't know it, & was not suspecting it. Clara's suspicions were well grounded but I thought they were merely grounded upon resentment & dislike [MTP: L-A MS XII]. Note: Sam then continued on to Stormfield. Sam did give Clara the keys to Lyon's trunks, but convinced her to spare Lyon "that humiliation." Later, Clara discovered that Lyon possessed Livy's carnelian necklace. A letter by Paine to attorney Lark is in the latter source and pronounced Isabel Lyon a thief [ibid. XV]

Charles T. Howard wrote from Providence, R.I. to Sam: "Are you willing to sign one of our books for me? ... May I send the book?" [MTP]. Note: "Yes, but put it in a reversible wrapper, with address written on it"

Lawrence Irving wrote to Sam that he was giving two matinees of a comedy—would Sam honor him by attending to either? [MTP]. Note: IVL wrote: "Mr. Clemens has asked for a box for the 27th"

April 15 Thursday – Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, "The Lioness abolished." In his L-A MS "letter to Howells" he gave particulars:

On the 15th I gave Miss Lyon a month's notice—sent it to her room by a maid. In the forenoon. Claude [Benchotte] (butler) arrived at noon. In the afternoon Miss Lyon sent me her reply by a maid. She had been married about a month, but was still called by her unwedded name, & she was still using it herself, & so it came natural to her to sign the present note in that way.

[here Mark Twain indicates a note should be inserted]

[on a new page, Mark Twain indicates: Miss Lyon's Note]

April 15/09

Dear Mr. Clemens

Thank you so much for doing in so kind a way, the thing that I have been expecting.

The original letters that I have had charge of, are all in the house, & I shall be glad to inform Miss Clemens about the collecting which has not gone beyond the letters Mr. Howells sent.

And I now accept my dismissal from your service, to take place at any time you shall chose within the month, with thanks inexpressable, for the wonder & beauty you have brought into my life.
(over)

I am

with great respect &,

Your secretary

Isabel V. Lyon [MTP: L-A MS XIII].

Note: the above paragraph from Clemens was included in his "letter to Howells" and dated July 11, 1909.

Clemens also received a letter from daughter Clara:

On the 15th I was home again, & received a letter from Clara, about a housekeeper to take Miss Lyon's place. Miss Lyon had stipulated in her contract of month earlier that she was to be Social Secretary only, & have nothing to do with the housekeeping. The Miss Hindhaugh mentioned was a lady who was highly educated & had been rich but lost her money three years before, & from that date had been serving as housekeeper & secretary in the family of a Columbia-University professor at $30 a month. That is, for nine months of the year. The family went away each summer, but left her behind without salar. She was very willing to come to us at Clara's offer—$50 a month—but she didn't come, because when the professor heard about it he raised her wage to $50—vacation included. She liked the family very much, & they liked her as much.

This is Clara's letter:

(Insert it here) [MTP: L-A MS XII].

Clara Clemens wrote from NYC to her father about a replacement for Isabel Lyon; the letter is included in the Lyon-Ashcroft MS, part XII as follows:

Dearest Marcus

Even if Miss Hindhaugh can not come on the 1st of May once can get along perfectly without anyone for awhile as Jean will be in Redding [Mark Twain makes his own revision on Clara's letter: Jean will be at Stormfield in Redding] and I shall be there a great deal & with such servants as Claude and Teresa the house almost runs itself.—

Of course I don't believe Horace because he could never for a minute have fancied that I discharged him whatever else he might have missundertood.

I think it was a little scheme to make you the pay the higher wages for otherwise he would have addressed me on the subject instead of you.

But fortunately in [he] has been a benefit to us instead of an annoyance. Somebody else may have put the idea into his head. Who knows?

Last night I sang at the Small Musicale without nervousness & consequently with success.

Tomorrow we go to Boston & I shall stop with Katie at Marie Nichols' home 1100 Beacon Street

I am glad that you are well again.

With a great deal of love.

Clara

You will give Miss Lyon her notice right [a]way I hope.— [MTP: L-A MS XII]. Note: Clara performed at the large concert on Apr. 13, and Clemens received this letter on Apr. 15, so this must have been dated on Apr. 15, and her "Small Musicale" took place on Apr. 14.

John Larkin, Atty NYC wrote to Sam about the Fentress Land Company: "I have a letter from Colonel McNutt, who is conducting the case as you remember, in which he states that he wishes to take your depositions...Would it be more convenient to have the hearing, (which will be short) at Redding, or could you manage to attend at my office?" [MTP].

John Albert Macy wrote from Wrentham, Mass. to Sam.

"We thank you for the copies of your book [Is Shakespeare Dead?], which we have all enjoyed. It is so telling, deadly, convincing. It not only does up this case but is a great chapter in your big book of argument against superstition, against that colossal failure, Carlyles 'Man Thinking'. He don't" [MTP].

April 16 Friday – Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

April 17 Saturday – At 3 a.m. in Redding, Conn., Sam began a letter to William Dean Howells, that he added to at 10 a.m.

My pen has gone dry, & the ink is out of reach. Howells, Did you write me day-before-day-before yesterday, or did I dream it? In my mind's eye I most vividly see your handwriting on a square blue envelop in the mail-pile. I have hunted the house over but there is no such letter. Was it an illusion?

I am reading Lowell's letters, & smoking. I woke an hour ago & am reading to keep from wasting the time. On page 305, vol I., I have just margined a note:

"Young friend! I like that! You ought to see him now."

It seemed startlingly strange to hear a person call you young. It was a brick out of a blue sky, & knocked me groggy for a moment. Ah me, the pathos of it is, that we were young then. And he—why, so was he, but he didn't know it. He didn't even know it 9 years later, when we saw him approaching & you warned me, saying,

"Don't say anything about age—he has just turned 50, & thinks he is old, & broods over it."

Well, Clara did sing! And you wrote her a dear letter.

Time to go to sleep. Yours ever / Mark.

To W.D. Howells

When I wrote you at 3 this morning I did not know I was laying an egg that would hatch out in the course of a few hours & produce a cunning & handy scheme, but I know it now. I am glad. For I like to see my mind perform according to the law which I have laid down in "What Is Man": the law that the mind works automatically, & plans & perfects many a project without its owner suspecting what it is about; the mind being merely a machine, & not in even the slightest degree under the control of its owner or subject to his influence.

My mind's present scheme is a good one; I could not like it better if I had invented it myself. It is this: to write letters to friends & not send them.

I will now try it on you as a beginning, & see how it works. Dictating Autobiography has certain irremovable drawbacks.

1. A stenographer is a lecture-audience; you are always conscious of him; he is a restraint, because there is only one of him, & one alien auditor can seldom be an inspiration; you pay out to him from your own treasury, whereas if there are five hundred of him you would pay out from his: he would furnish the valuable part of your discourse—that is, the soul & spirit of it—and you would only have to furnish the words.

2. You are not talking to yourself; you are not thinking aloud—processes which insure a free & unembarrassed delivery—for that petrified audience-person is always there, to block that game.

3. If it's a she person, there are so many thousands & thousands of things you are suffering to say, every day, but mustn't, because they are indecent.

4. If it's a religious person, your jaw is locked again, several times a day: profane times & theological times. I had a person of that breed for a year or two. The profanity cruelly shocked her at first; soon she became reconciled to it; presently she got to liking it, next she couldn't get along without it; but from the beginning to the end there was never a time when she could stand my theology. She said she wouldn't give a Gatun Dam for it. [likely Josephine Hobby.]

5. Often you are burning to pour out a sluice of intimately personal, & particularly private things—and there you are again! You can't make your mouth say them. It won't say them to any but a very close personal friend, like Howells, or Twichell, or Henry Rogers.

But that scheme—that newborn scheme—that splendid scheme—that all-comforting, all-satisfying, all-competent scheme—blows all these obstructing and irritating difficulties to the winds! I will fire the profanities at Rogers, the indecencies at Howells, the theologies at Twichell. Oh, to think—I am a free man at last!

Do you see? Talking to the same, same, same old one-character stenographer all the time, is talking to the vague—there's no definite target; but the scheme furnishes a definite target for each letter, & you can choose the target that's going to be the most sympathetic for what you are hungering & thirsting to say at that particular moment. And you can talk with a quite unallowable frankness & freedom, because you are not going to send the letter. When you are on fire with theology, you'll not write it to Rogers, who wouldn't be an inspiration, you'll write it to Twichell, because it would make him writhe & squirm & break the furniture. When you are on fire with a good thing that's indecent, you won't waste it on Twichell, you'll save it for Howells, who will love it. As he will never see it, you can make it really indecenter than he could stand; & so no harm is done, yet a vast advantage is gained [MTHHR 2: 843-5]. Note: some pages missing; see notes in source.

Sam also wrote to Garnet Joseph Wolseley (Lord Wolseley; 1833-1913).

My dear Lord Wolseley:

It is long ago—8 or 9 years. I arrived late—it was a Fourth of July dinner & the last speakers were gasping out their feelings to half a crowd & many empty & emptying seats, & you halted me on my way & I sat down & had a pleasant chat with you. You see I am trying to identify myself.

With this purpose in view: to inquire if you asked me for a copy of "1603?" I believe it was your very self, but truly & sincerely I am not charging it, & would not charge it upon any innocent man, since the classic I speak of, being a quite free conversation between Queen Elizabeth, Shakspeare, Raleigh, etc., is not a proper thing to charge any unoffending person with wanting.

When I came home I ransacked this country & searched several foreign countries where it had been republished in the dark, but I failed to find a copy. I had promised three copies while in England, & I had to fall short of those promises.

Was your lordship one of the three? I am merely a well-meaning person who is trying to keep his word, so I know you will forgive me if I am off the right track. Perhaps I ought not to have written "1603," but I was young then (34 years ago) & familiar with misdoing. Once I expurgated it, but then—well then there wasn't anything left, of course.

With the pleasantest recollections of that now ancient Fourth of July chat, I am

Your lordship's / Obedient servant to command, ... [MTP]. Note: Sam miswrote "1603" for "1601."

Charles Heinrich for The Germania Press, NYC wrote to Sam. "Why should not the Centennial of the Baptism of American be commemorated?" Heinrich listed the coining of the term "America" to May 5, 1507 in the town of St. Die, in the Vosges, Lorraine. "Now that the misconception of the naming of America can be rectified, and the mystery elucidated... Will you kindly let me know what is in your opinion the most appropriate procedure" [MTP].

April 18 Sunday – Sam's original guestbook, since replaced by the newer, more elegant gift from Mary B. Rogers, for some reason lists this date for Frederick E. Robson, Toronto, Canada. Under Robson's name: James Parks, Bank House, Birkdale, Lancashire 0.8 V. 09 [Mac Donnell TS 7].

April 19 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Jean in Montclair, N.J.

Dear child you will be as welcome as if it were your mother herself calling you home from exile!

Clara has just gone—for New York—but will return day after tomorrow. Lilly Burbank was here yesterday, & was delightful company. Clara will see if Julia & Edward Loomis can come now or a few days later. There was a wonderful singer performing here yesterday, & I did so want to know his name, so that I could offer him a building lot & free board for the summer, but Clara couldn't tell me, for she is as ignorant of birds as I am. This morning I saw a splendid blue-&-white shuttle sail across the sunny air, & guessed it was one of my favorites, the blue-jay. Danbury saw it, too, & started indolently away with an air intended to make me think he was going to church, but I am used to that look of his, & know all about it. If he comes back with feathers in his mouth, he will be bound over for trial till you come. / With heaps of love/ Father [MTP]. Note: this appears to be a reply to Jean's request to come home (not extant).

Sam also wrote to Joe Twichell, prefacing his letter with an older one written during the Boxer Rebellion days:

To Rev. Joseph H. Twichell, of Hartford.

Joe dear, I think I will write you a letter—but you'll never see it. The reason why you have plunged into my mind all of a sudden is, that among some old letters of mine that Clara has been collecting from friends, I find one to you which reads as follows:

[letter not included]

I had just finished reading that old Adirondack letter & was arranging to write you some malicious things about missionaries—just in a general way, to feed my long-time grudge against that criminal industry—when the morning paper arrived from New York, & these scare-heads caught my eye. [newspaper clipping pasted in:] Note: the news clipping was from the New York Sun, dateline Constantinople, Apr. 18, about American missionaries murdered in Adana, Turkey. Sam then continued:

When I wrote the above old letter the horrors of the Boxer revolt in China were making Christendom gasp & shudder—a revolt largely—mainly?—caused by the Chinaman's quite justifiable hatred of the foreign missionary; & I had recently been venting my opinions of two of those missionaries (Reed & Ament) in the North American Review. That pair of looters have never yet been whitewashed ~~ele~~ clean, Joe, & they never will be. Every attempt at it has failed; although the American Board did its best.

Joe, where is the fairness in the missionary's trade? His prey is the children: he cannot convert adults. He beguiles the little children to forsake their parents' religion & break their hearts. Would you be willing to have a Mohammedan missionary do that with your children or grandchildren? Would you be able to keep your temper if your own government forced you to let that Mohammedan work his will with those little chaps? You can't answer anything but No to those questions. Very well, it closes your mouth. You haven't a shadow of right to uphold & bid Godspeed to the Christian missionary who intrudes his depraved trade upon foreign peoples who do not want him. "Do unto others, etc." is a Christian sarcasm, as long as Christian missionaries exist.

Joe, it is a trade that does not pay—according to my ciphering. This morning's news figures out 1,000 murders; The Boxer revolt is charged with 5,000. Six thousand murders due largely to native hatred of foreign missionaries. Six thousand homes made desolate, ten thousand hearts broken, six thousand murderers manufactured, & provoked to do deeds of blood. All inside of ten years. To my mind the Christian missionary is easily the most criminal criminal that exists on the planet, & the lowest down in the scale of malefactors.

Here—read the morning's news, Joe, & repent, reform, & call that dear & sweet daughter of yours home from the Turkish missions; & meantime be thankful that her name is not in the list of the slaughtered: [newspaper clipping pasted in:] [MTP].

On this date Sam also wrote out new procedures for bill paying:

Rules regarding the payment of bills.

Any and all bills covering Stormfield expenditures shall be handed to Miss Clemens for her O. K. before they are paid.

When approved by her, said bills shall be given to the stenographer who shall keep a list of them and turn them over to Mr. Ashcroft periodically, Mr. Ashcroft signing a receipt for these bills.

Mr. Ashcroft shall thereupon ask Mr. Clemens to sign checks for these bills, and Mr. Clemens shall sign these checks.

Mr. Ashcroft shall not be held responsible for any delay in the payment of any Stormfield debts for which he has not received a bill duly approved by Miss Clemens.

On these terms I shall have to keep two or three clerks to do Mr. Ashcroft's work for him. I wonder where he comes in? The closing paragraph seems to indicate that his wordy humbug knew about his wife's system—which was, never to take the trouble to pay a bill until it was bald-headed with age.

Horace H. Jackson wrote from Bridgeport, Conn. to Sam, enclosing two poems. "having sold Mark Twain's publications for twenty-seven years I feel this is not presumption on my part..." [MTP].

April 19, after – Sometime after April 19, Jean Clemens was allowed to return to Stormfield to live [June 21 to Whitmore].

April 20 Tuesday – Sam recorded an incident for this date:

Five days later (April 20), Ashcroft brought me a penciled paper, in the loggia, & said he had directed Mr. Lounsbury to smooth the roadway around the "oval," & this was his (Lounsbury's) estimate of the cost—$54. Ashcroft said he had told him to go ahead. He asked me if that was right. I said yes. Afterward I wondered what business Ashcroft had to be meddling with the road. It looked like an impertinence. Then I examined the road, & found that it needed no repairing & that there was no occasion to waste money on it. But I found a place beyond the oval that needed repairing, & needed it very much. I went over it with Lounsbury, who said the cost would be $250. I told him to let the oval entirely alone, & proceed with this work—which he did. When Ashcroft next arrived from New York he asked Lounsbury who had authorized him to mend that road? Lounsbury told him. Ashcroft said, "Go on with it, if you want to take the risk."

Lounsbury couldn't understand this extraordinary remark. He reported it to me, & I couldn't understand it. It had a meaning, but at that time it was too deep for me [MTP: L-A MS XVI].

Sam received a bill from The Truth Seeker Company, NYC for one copy of The Worship of Augustus Caesar, etc. (1900) by Alexander Del Mar (1836-1926). The bill was paid on May 3, 1909 [Gribben 184].

Charles W. Leavitt, having learned that Sam had increased his property, wrote to offer Sam his services as a Civil and Landscape Engineer. He listed his clients [MTP].

H. Saito, an English teacher in Tokyo, Japan wrote to Sam of his “mission—that of interpreting the Japanese heart to the world...” and wishing to send him an English translation of a poem. Saito had lectured and quoted Mark Twain so often that he felt as if Mark Twain “was part of himself” [MTP]. Note: IVL: “Ans’d May 11, ‘09”

Rev. S.C. Thompson wrote from Rensselaersville, NY. In his six page letter he recalled his life’s events and of borrowing money then spending years to repay his debts. Clemens had hired him to be an amanuensis during the writing of GA. After being a sailor and spending time in England he returned to be a minister in a small town that shrunk with the growth of industry there. He enclosed an money order for what he felt he owed. Clemens began a 17 page “Notes” on April 23, 1909 that is noted by De Voto as intended for the autobiography. See entry [MTP].

April 21 Wednesday – Sam’s new guestbook:

In his copy of Letters of James Russell Lowell, Ed. by Charles Eliot Norton (2 vols.; 1893), Sam wrote a note about his own suicidal impulse in 1866 and dated it this date, 3 a.m.: In part:

It is odd that I should stumble upon this now, for it is only two days ago since something called to my mind my experience of 1866 & I told it at dinner. I put the pistol to my head but wasn’t man enough to pull the trigger. Many times I have been sorry I did not succeed, but I was never ashamed of having tried. Suicide is the only really sane thing the young or old ever do in this life. ‘Feeble Jerusalems’ never kill themselves; they survive the attempt. Lowell & I are instances” [426].

April 22 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Elizabeth Wallace.

Dear Betsy: / It is not conveyable in words. I mean my vanity—rotten joy in the dear and pleasant things you say of me, and in my enviable standing in your class, as revealed by the class’s answer to your challenge. So I shall not try to do the conveying, but only say I am grateful—a truth which you would easily divine, even if I said nothing at all.

You must come here again—please don’t forget it. We’ll have another good time. / Affectionately, / ...
[MTP: Eliz. Wallace, Mark Twain and the Happy Island 1913, p.128].

April 23 Friday – On a page of notes in the Lyon-Ashcroft MS, Sam wrote under the heading “Eavesdropping,” “Apl. 23 Clara went to Mr. Rogers. (His letter)” [L-A MS XIV]. Note: the letter from H.H. Rogers in the source as follows:

My dear Clemens:

I had a call this morning from Clara, when she told me of her troubles, and after she had said you knew of her coming to me, I ventured to say that I would be very glad to take up the matter, if you desired it, and see if I could straighten it out to your entire satisfaction.

I think I have read between the lines. In the last two or three years I had my suspicions of things, which you in your good natured way have overlooked. You may be sure I shall be glad to serve you, as ever, if you will but give me your approval. My judgment is that you should call in a competent lawyer and accountant to overhaul your entire affairs. This should be done with but little annoyance to you, and if you will but say to those people that you have decided to ask me to look into things, I am quite sure you will have no further trouble. I do not know how far you will be willing to go in this matter; but I am satisfied that somebody should take it up in a frank, earnest way in your interest. If you desire to see me in reference, I will be in New York until next Thursday, when I expect to go to Fairhaven for a short stay.

Clara was very considerate and dignified in her talk. Her story was very convincing, and making due allowance for her anxiety and trifling nervousness, the same was admirably and fluently told. I think she felt quite relieved when I told her I would be very glad to assume such burden in the matter as was necessary.

Yours truly,

[signed:] HH Rogers [MTP: L-A MS XIV].

On this day Sam began 17 pages (intended for the Autobiography) with the following heading:

To Rev. S.C. Thompson

A letter from him, after thirty-six years of ever-deepening, ever-broadening, ever-solidifying silence! And a tragic letter it is, too, full of pathetic human interest.

Notes: April 23, 1909

It is a brave long fight. Think of putting in a whole lifetime digging & delving & slaving & scrabbling for money to pay debts with! How pale the painted heroisms of romance look, beside it. They are achieved in an hour, & they clothe their hero with a shining glory that moves with him like the pillar of fire all the rest of his days, for men to see & admire; but Thompson's heroism, which is real, which is colossal, which is sublime, & which is costly beyond all estimate, is achieved in profound obscurity, & its hero walks in rags to the end of his days [MTP]. Notes: during my last trip to the MTP in Oct. 2012, I brought this document to the attention of Benjamin Griffin and Victor Fischer of the MTP, pointing out a file note, "Belongs with Autobiog—DV" (DeVoto); Griffin stated that he had sometimes come across such notes by Clemens and spoke of the difficulty of deciding what should be included in the current Autobiography volumes.

James M. Beck (1861-1936), attorney with Shearman & Sterling, NYC, wrote to Sam thanking him for Is Shakespeare Dead, which he'd read during a bout of insomnia. "Indeed it is the first pro-Bacon book that I have ever read that really impressed me." He was returning the book in hopes Clemens would write something on the title page [MTP]. Note: Beck was often referred to as "the great attorney," and had been assistant to the Attorney General under President McKinley (1900-1903).

John W. Nagle wrote from Lockport, NY to ask Sam where he might obtain the American Publishing Co. editions of his books, and was Clemens born in Hannibal or Florida? [MTP]. Note: IVL: "Ans'd Apr 26, '09"

Horace J. Stevens, editor for The Copper Handbook, Houghton, Mich., wrote to send a copy of his new edition, labeled Vol. VIII, "with new matter and emendations," since he understood Sam had some interest in copper mining [MTP].

April 24 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Robert J. Collier.

Dear Robert:—

If in my time I shall have your good and dear father's happy fortune, be glad for me, as I am glad for him; but grieve for those I leave behind, as I am grieving for yours.

With my love,

S.L. Clemens

[MTP: Peter F. Collier, In Memoriam 1910].

Robert J. Collier wrote to Sam somewhat before Apr. 24. Before, because Robert's father Peter, mentioned in this letter, died on Apr. 24. "The H.R. is justifying its name, — Harvey won't be in town till Friday, Peter is tied up every day this week and I have to stick to the office to clean things up before my father's return on Friday. / I shall try to get them all together next week and take them up in a motor for lunch with you" [MTP].

David J. Hill for the US Embassy in Berlin wrote to Harpers acknowledging Sam's gift of Is Shakespeare Dead? to the Emperor [MTP].

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, "Paine comes home." Note: Albert Bigelow Paine had been in London gathering material for Sam's biography.

Charles Warren Stoddard (1843-1909), Sam's old secretary during his 1873 London stay, died in Monterey, Calif. Clemens first met Stoddard in San Francisco among the literati who gathered at the Occidental Hotel. At that time Stoddard wrote poetry for the Era under the name Pip Pepperwood. See June-July 1864 and other Vol. I entries. In 1876 Sam wrote of Stoddard, "Poor, sweet, pure-hearted, good-intentioned, impotent Stoddard" [MTL 5:476].

April 25 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Apr. 23 from James M. Beck.

Dear Mr. Beck:

The truth is, we don't know who wrote Shakespeare. There is no evidence at all that S. did it; & as there was only one man alive that could have done it—and the Organum & all the other multiplicities besides (perhaps), the plausibilities favor the suspicion that he did it. We don't know that Joseph didn't beget the Savior; but we do know that (his general style & circumstances considered,) it was much too large a contract for him. There was One, & only One, at the time, that was competent & in all ways qualified for the vast production; & as this One could have achieved it & still have time enough left for His other prodigious industries, in the way of constructing universes & such things, the plausibilities favor the idea that He is the one fairly & justifiably under suspicion.

However, if you will run up here & give us a week-end, we will discuss & discuss, & enjoy & enjoy. Will you suggest a week-end that will be convenient for you? If by any chance it shouldn't fall right, I will suggest another. We generally have a guest or two on hand, & we try to have guests all the time.

I'm enclosing the autographs for the children, with my love; & I will write in the book & return it. And I will give you a very private (& unacknowledged) book of mine when you come.

Very truly yours / S.L. Clemens b'George, you wrote your letter on Shakespeare's birth-day [MTP].

C.B. Crosby wrote from Topeka, Kans. to ask Sam if he could send his great uncle's copy of TA for his signature. His great uncle was the late Ernest Howard Crosby of Hartford [MTP].

April 26 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Jean Clemens finally came home, signing into the guestbook and giving her address as "Stormfield" [Hill 226; guestbook below]. Note: Hill further points out that Jean would never leave again; that an adjoining 125 acreage with barns and livestock, called "The Italian Farm," became hers. The purchase had been arranged in Feb. for $4,200, and was one of his final acts as Twain's business manager.

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Jean L. Clemens	Stormfield	April 26, 1909

Sam sent a telegram to H.H. Rogers in N.Y.C.: "I WILL SPEND TOMORROW NIGHT WITH YOU" [MTHHR 661].

On a page of notes under the heading “Eavesdropping,” Sam noted that “Jean came,” and wrote underneath that phrase, “(Wilkommen letter?)” [MTP: A-L MS].

Also from this latter source:

Horace [Hazen] looked in again on the 26th of April, the day that restored to me, & we had another talk. He is a nice boy, a simple lad, & without guile. His mother says he cried the most of the day following the spiriting away of his letter, for he wanted to keep his place. I asked Horace to go home & write the history of the letter for me; & not to deal in generalities, but in particulars. He did so [MTP: L-A MS XIII]. Note: Horace’s complete explanation of how his letter of “discharge” was given following this paragraph.

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, “That abolishment broke down the wall that was built to shut Jean out of her home permanently.”

Florence M. Beecher, a girl age 14, wrote from Bethel, Conn. to ask if she might send one of her stories for his opinion [MTP].

April 27 Tuesday – Clemens went to New York City and spent the night with the Rogers family [Apr. 26 telegram to HHR]. Note: the nature of the visit, whether personal or business or both, is not known.

Pieter Bausch wrote a long letter of his travails in trying to publish his sketches and mentioned hope that a prior letter would be included in Sam’s Autobiography [MTP]. Note: Clemens wrote on the env. “No answer; NEVER try to do a stranger a kindness”; Clemens had paid Bausch $50 to use the “prior letter” in his Autobiography and also to help out a struggling writer. Bausch wouldn’t let go and became a pest.

April 28 Wednesday – Sam likely returned to Redding from NYC this day.

Andrew Carnegie wrote from NYC to Sam. “My Dear Friend / Thanks for your latest— / Is Shakespeare dead? Guess not—never going to die. Who was he—Don’t care much so we’ve got him. / Bacon, or Johnson, or any other man what matters it—A rose by any other name...” And, “Good bye we are off for Naples & a Westward overland to Paris & London, then ah then, The Heather Hills the barnies, the broom, the scream of he wild curlew....Awfully good of you to come to dinner / You never made a happier speech—great—& oh so funny—“ [MTP].

April 29 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Arthur Kyle Davis, Chairman Program Committee, Petersburg, Va.. [MTP]. See Insert below: Jpg from www.liveauctioneers.com

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally.

April 29/09, 4.30 pm.

Snowing hard.

No, it has just stopped. But it did snow hard, for 1 until a minute ago—4.30. Only the third snow of the winter—if one may call it by that large name.

You are a very dear Francesca, & you are a very sweet Francesca; but all the same you don't give me any dates. Why are you so abstemious about dates? It's an angel-fish failing—they don't care anything for dates. I am under command to be at Margaret's school to see a play, along about the end of May, but I can't get the date out of that child. And you don't tell me when I am to be at St. Timothy's. Give me some particulars, dear. Come! I rather expect to go to Baltimore all by myself. I shall get lost, I know it well.

1. Tell me on what date I must reach Baltimore—leaving Hoboken, or Jersey City, or one of these places about 1 p.m.

2. Tell me what hotel to anchor in, in Baltimore.

3. Tell me how to get to Catonsville, from Baltimore, & what time o' day to start.

4. Tell me how to get to St. Timothy's after I get to Catonsville.

Now you dear indolent child, sit down & answer me these questions. You don't want me to go astray & get eaten by the cows. You would always regret it. Are there many cows? And what kind are they?

I have needed & used the afghan you made for me almost constantly for these past 6 months. I was expecting to pack it away, now, but I see that that idea was premature.

Lovingly / SLC

5. Dear heart, one more: what is the name of the hotel in Catonsville?

There's 5 questions. Answer all of them!—do you hear?

I've been reading about myself in Harper's Monthly for May, & I do feel that some people can write most truthfully [MTP].

Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote to Sam.

April 29, 1909. / Dear Mr. Clemens: / I saw Mr. Rogers at his office this morning, at his request. His auditor will be here in a day or two, and will go over your accounts and affairs for the last two years; so that, in a very few days, your mind will be set at ease on that score, and your present worries lessened by the knowledge that your affairs have been honestly and conscientiously looked after by Miss Lyon and me.

Mr. Rogers seems to be of the same opinion that many of your other friends are, viz. that the ghastly treatment accorded to Miss Lyon during the past few weeks by a member of your family is a mightily poor return for the way in which she has, since Mrs. Clemens' death, looked after you, your daughters and your affairs. While it is, of course, impossible for her calumniator to make any reparation, I and other of your friends hold trust that you will, in this matter, uphold your reputation for fairness and justice, and make what reparation you yourself can. As you have already stated, the charges emanated from a brain diseased with envy, malice and jealousy, and it is only when one views forgets this fact that one views them seriously. However, irresponsibly conceived or not, they have been and are serious in their effect upon your comfort and well-being, and upon that of others, and must therefore be viewed from that standpoint.

There is no reason on earth why the rest of your days should be spent in an atmosphere of artificiality, restraint and self-sacrifice: and, while I don't suppose that the happiness that was your lot during the last six months of 1908 will recur in all its fulness and entirety, still I trust that you will, regardless of your philosophical theories, exercise your prerogatives of fatherhood and manhood in a way that will be productive of the greatest benefit to yourself. This I say regardless of what effect the expression of the sentiment may have on my relationship with you.

I am, / Yours, most sincerely, / [signed:] R. W. Ashcroft [MTP: L-A MS XIV].

[MTP]. Note: on a page of notes in the L-A MS, Sam wrote "Apl. 29 Ash's letter," then boxed and lined out the following: "About same date A's giveaway remark to Harry about selling my house" [L-A MS]. Note: Ashcroft reputedly told Harry Lounsbury that he could sell Twain's house any time he chose. See May 28 entry for the full story.

Henry Hamilton Harwood wrote from Richmond, Va. to Sam. "I should like to send you a copy of a little work I published recently on the Sonnets of Francis Bacon" [MTP]. Note: "Ans'd May 1, '09"

April 30 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a note, “How to get to Stormfield” to an unidentified person [MTP].

Pali (not further identified) wrote from Hawaii to send a contribution for Mark Twain’s Library and related his tales of being in Redding and of various personages there. He expressed regret that Hawaii had not been able to see Twain during his 1895 world tour (The Warrimoo was quarantined) [MTP].

May – Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that during this month, “Discovery of evidence proving Lioness a thief,” referring to Isabel Lyon.

Isaac H. Platt sent his book, Bacon Cryptograms in Shake-speare, and Other Studies (1905) and inscribed it to Clemens: “As a slight token of appreciation and admiration of Mark Twain’s knock-down to the old impostor William Shaxpur, the perpetrator of this feeble effort to the same end (an ill favored thing but his own) begs its acceptance and—if he may dare hope it—its perusal by the mightier champion. / To Samuel L. Clemens Esq. / with the compliments of / Isaac Hull Platt, / Challingford, Pennsylvania, / May 1909” [Gribben 549].

Harper’s Monthly for May included Archibald Henderson’s article “Mark Twain,” p. 948-55. Tenney: “Praises MT’s robustly national qualities, although ‘he is America’s greatest cosmopolitan.’ ‘But, after all, Mark Twain’s supremest title to distinction as a great writer inheres in his mastery in that greatest sphere of thought, embracing religion, philosophy, morality, and even humor, which we call sociology’” [47].

Harper’s Monthly for May also included Albert Bigelow Paine’s “Mark Twain at Stormfield: The House of Many Beatitudes” p. 955-59. Tenney: “On MT’s home at Redding, Connecticut, and his life there” [48].

May 1 Saturday – The New York Times reported on Sam’s latest work, Is Shakespeare Dead?

IS SHAKESPEARE DEAD?

Mark Twain has deserted the camp of the Shakespearites, and if he has not exactly committed himself to the cause of the Baconians, he comes very close to it. “Is Shakespeare Dead?” (Harpers, $1.25,) is a semi-serious consideration of the old controversy, and Ignatius Donnelly would rejoice at the arguments with which Mr. Clemens carries his points. After proving to his own satisfaction that one William Shakespeare of Stratford-on-Avon never wrote Shakespeare’s Works, for the very good reason that he could not have written them, Mark Twain concludes that perhaps Bacon did, or if Bacon did not, he could have written them if he had chosen to. All of which adds to the humor of the controversy and makes very interesting reading.

A chapter is devoted to the early experiences of Mr. Clemens with Shakespeare’s Works and the Captain of a Mississippi River steamboat. The Captain admired the works and read copious extracts, interspersed with strange and fearful commands to the youthful pilot. That was the beginning of Mark Twain’s desertion; he explains that he had to argue with the Captain, who believed implicitly in Shakespeare. Taking up the negative side, he assumed this mental attitude: “I only believed Bacon wrote Shakespeare, whereas I knew Shakespeare didn’t.” And he holds it still.

The book is a fragment of Mr. Clemens’s long-promised autobiography, and is full of the humor which has never failed him. Deep margins and an extract of twenty-one pages from another book—rather a large allowance for this small volume—give an effect of padding, but even in such meagre quantity the quality of Mark Twain’s writing is always assured of a wide welcome.

Logan G. MacPherson wrote from New Brighton, NY: “Your reception of a small book of mine two years ago was so very kind that I am asking the publishers to send to you a copy of another volume, which is just coming from the press. There was once, as you will remember, a yellow dog who was so kindly treated that he returned bringing May 2 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers).

Dear Mrs. Rogers: / I shall arrive at noon next Friday, & go at once down town on business, & back to No. 3 for dinner, provided there will be a bed for me & no extra charge. I return home next day. I'm due at the Jerome banquet Friday evening at 10.

If there's no vacant bed, or if you are to be away Fairhavenward, will you please telephone me here when you receive this?

My telephone address is

774 Danbury

~~(I'll get that No. in the morning—I'm in bed now.)~~

Yours ever / SL Clemens

Please don't tell Mr. Rogers. He would raise the limit [MTHHR 661-2]. Notes: from source point out that the new Rogers address was 3 East 78th Street, NYC. Also, that Sam was on a committee to arrange a testimonial dinner for District Attorney William Travers Jerome at Delmonico's on May 7. He wrote the note and the next morning opened it, provided his correct phone no., and lined out the above strikeout line.

Hill puts this as the day Clemens began the 429 pages of what has been called the "Ashcroft-Lyon Manuscript." He would work on it intermittently until Oct. 29 [230]. Note: Hill calls this "a geyser of bias, vindictiveness, and innuendo" [231]. Note: in the MS that Hill cites, we find beginning a multi-page letter to William Dean Howells, in which Sam rambles. Here is the first portion (misspellings of names emended):

Dear Howells: Those resentful & rather disrespectful references are to Clara Clemens. They are earned; for it was she that found The Ashcrofts out. You are acquainted with them, you like drama & melodrama in real life: we've been having it—strenuously—right under our roof for three years & never suspected it till now. Other people have suspected it almost from the beginning,—Harvey, Duneka, Major Leigh and David Munro for a year past. & Albert Bigelow Paine for two years—but Clara & I remained peacefully asleep. Lounsbury, that shrewd Yankee neighbor of ours, classified Miss Lyon & Ashcroft as "crooked" before he had known them a month. Our house-servants had arrived at a similar verdict more than a year ago, while we were still living in New York. Broughton & John Hays Hammond set Ashcroft down for a rascal & an Ananias early as two years ago. H.H. Rogers read "fraud" all over Ashcroft the first time he saw him. So did Edward Loomis.

And yet—how dull I have always been in reading characters! —I had the most absolute & uncompromising faith in the honesty, fidelity & truthfulness of that pair of rotten eggs all the while. Yes, & so had Clara.) Clara & Miss Lyon were like lovers. They called each other by pet names. Clara called Miss Lyon "Nana"; Clara's pet name was "Santa Clara." Uttered in their presence now, these names would act upon them as emetics.

Dear me, what a revolutionary work a couple of months can do! It is about that long ago that Clara's suspicions were aroused. By Dr. Quintard,. He thought Miss Lyon & Ashcroft ought to be asked to furnish an account of their stewardship. Ashcroft told me he heard Quintard tell Miss Lyon he believed she was dishonest. Ashcroft was indignant, & so was I.

But Clara was not in a good-natured mood, & she wanted to carry out Quintard's suggestion. Her mood resulted from two or three little things which had been happening. Well, little things can do large work sometimes; a lucifer match can start a small fire that will burn down a metropolis. One day Clara rang up a servant & gave n order; Miss Lyon heard of it & countermanded the order & added that all orders must pass thro' her. Another day Miss Lyon told me Katy had been angering the servants by refusing to eat at their table—"wouldn't eat with Italians." It was strange conduct for Katy, who had served us 28 years & had not been accused of putting on airs before. Miss Lyon told me she got it from Teresa & Giusappe. (Both denied it promptly.) I gave Katy a scolding. She seemed most thoroughly & comprehensively amazed; & said she had never said nor even thought of saying the thing which had been charged upon her. Clara was in a fury, & she stood by Katy, & said that Katy's denial of the charge was sufficient, & made the1 charge of a falsehood.

Then Miss Lyon assured me, in (in her oily way,) that it was not she that brought the charge to me! I wish to be damned if I didn't believe her!

Howells, this is very remarkable little tale that I am unfolding in this outwar to you is that your trained & alert literary instincts & appreciations are the best & most inspiring I know of to display it before: an audience that will beguile me into dwelling leisurely & lovingly upon it, & enjoying the taste of it in my mouth. It is a darling tale, & I can't consent to spoil it by writing it to Ashcroft. It would degrade my dignity beyond re-elevation to lower it to the level of that cad. I suppose you see he is a cad? He is 34 years old & a cipher in the world; I am nearly 74 & a figure in the world, yet he blandly puts himself on an equality with me & insults me as freely & as frankly as if I were his fellow-bastard & born in the same sewer. And do you know—he stepped in, yesterday afternoon on the heels of his letter, of smily & congenial as if nothing had happened. Paine was there (billiard room), & I was glad. It saved me from calling Ashcroft a son of a bitch—language which I never allow myself to use in society I mean to keep my temper, for I have a purpose. If I keep it & leave him unanswered, he will mow me under with similar letters, & I will add them to my tale, & you shall have them all. You would never guess how rich they will be. But I know about this; for (he fell upon John Hay Hammond two or three years ago, which his pen, & rained filthy & fury and unimaginable silliness upon him during two or three weeks—daily? No—almost hourly. A man like Hammond—lately an aspirant to the Vice Presidency of the United States—couldn't afford to reply to a louse like Ashcroft, of course, & so he remained silent. Ashcroft thought he was afraid) Man, let me tell you, Ashcroft would consider himself quite competent to carry on literary war with me. how that is true; I am speaking seriously. He is clever—& in many ways, too—but not with his pen. He does not suspect this. Do you know—he even composes poetry; & gets it printed, & gives it to the poor. I have read it, & not all of it is bad; some of it is tolerably good [Note: following parts II – XXI comprise the rest of the Ashcroft-Lyon MS, too long for inclusion here; segments of it are quoted in these pages for named or appropriate dates].

May 4 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Dear Mr. Rogers: / The check-books & vouchers which Ashcroft will have to place before your expert are my property, & I would be glad if you will keep possession of them for me, when the inquiry is finished. I don't want them to go back into Ashcroft's hands.

I shall spend Thursday & Friday in New York, with Robert Collier, for I think you are all in Fairhaven & your city house closed for the season.

Good night. I am praying for all of you. / S L C [MTHHR 662]. Notes: Sam had asked Rogers to look into his financial books following Clara Clemens' suspicions of wrongdoing by Ashcroft and Lyon, who married on Mar. 18. H.H. Rogers died on May 19, and thereafter Harry Rogers, Albert Bigelow Paine, and Clara continued the investigation. Paine had clashed with Lyon over his access to Clemens' letters [n1].

Karl Gerhardt wrote from N. Orleans to Sam.

Dear Mr Clemens — / So many years have elapsed since I saw you last in Hartford, that I suppose when you receive this, it will come in the nature of a surprise!

Recently I made an Equestrian sketch of Gen'l Beauregard and exhibited it: some notice being taken of it, as you will see by the enclosed clipping from (T.D.) [not in file] ... several people of prominence made two busts which also attracted some attention. ...

I believe I am making a bust of an old friend of yours one of your "Mississippi Chums" the late Mr John T Moore. I am glad to be able to tell you of my return to my beloved art and think I have gained by the long unforced rest...I suppose you heard of Josie's death poor girl—the picture of health in two short weeks gone—the victim of a rusty nail.

Perhaps I can reach toward you, and grasp your hand and tell you how sorry I feel for you in your bereavement—Well I'm living the simple life; but this return to modeling brings back sweet and bitter memories and I want you to know that my heart is very tender toward you and yours always...[MTP]. Note: IVL wrote: "Young man educated in sculpture by M.T."; John T. May 7 Friday – In the evening Sam attended and spoke at a dinner for District Attorney William Travers Jerome at Delmonico's. The New York Times, May 8, reported on page one:

JEROME REVIEWS HIS OFFICIAL YEARS

District Attorney Tells of What He Has Done at a Dinner Given Him by Friends.

NO HINT OF FUTURE PLANS

Speaker Says he Still Has Faith In Reform and Wishes to Work for Civic Betterment

District Attorney William Travers Jerome was entertained last night at a dinner at Delmonico's given by more than 300 of his friends and admirers, and every effort was made by the diners to express their confidence in the integrity and good judgment of the guest of honor in the conduct of his office.

It was for this purpose that the dinner was arranged by a committee of citizens headed by Joseph H. Choate. It was noteworthy, however, that there was no mention of Mr. Jerome as a future factor in politics. It was understood that this subject was taboo.

Mr. Jerome himself reviewed his entire official career, through the early stages of great popularity and the later times of criticism and discouragement, but said not one word of his future hopes and plans.

The dinner was given in the gold dining hall of Delmonico's, the only touch of color to the room coming from large American flags festooned over the speakers' table, and at either end of the hall. Most of the guest were lawyers, but they included also men of every shade of political opinion, men prominent in the official life of the city, members of the judiciary, and men prominent in literary and education life. Practically all the courts of the city except Special Sessions were represented.

Edward M. Shepard, who in the absence of Mr. Choate in Washington was toastmaster, presented Mr. Jerome as the first speaker. Mr. Shepard admitted that he had not approved all that the District Attorney had done, nor had always sanctioned his course in leaving other things undone. He said he had admired Mr. Jerome's personal and intellectual qualities, but far more because he had the strength not to yield to popular clamor in prosecuting suspected offenders when there was no evidence to justify such prosecution. "He has shown himself steadfast and courageous to do what he saw with the light of God it was his duty to do," said Mr. Shepard, amid applause.

Introduced as the last word on all public questions and public men, Mark Twain, who was one of the committee to arrange for the dinner, said in part:

"Indeed, that is very sudden. I was not informed that the verdict was going to depend upon my judgment, but that makes not the least difference in the world, when you already know all about it. It is not any matter when you called upon to express it; you can get up and to it, and my verdict has already been recorded in my heart and in my head, as regards Mr. Jerome and his administration of the criminal affairs of this county.

"I voted for Mr. Jerome in those old days, and I should like to vote for him again, if he runs for any office. [Applause.] I moved out of New York, and that is the reason, I suppose, I cannot vote for him again. There may be some way, but I have not found it out. But now, I am a farmer, a farmer up in Connecticut, and winning laurels. Those people already speak with such high favor, admiration, of my farming, and they say that I am the only man that has ever come to that region who could make two blades of grass grow where only three grew before. [Laughter.]

"Well, I cannot vote for him. You see that. As it stands now, I cannot. I am crippled in that way and to that extent, for I would ever so much like to do it. I am not a Congress, and I cannot distribute pensions, and I don't know any other legitimate way to buy a vote. [Laughter.] But if I should think any legitimate way, I shall make use it, and then I shall vote for Mr. Jerome."

Note: a silver card case dated May 7, 1909 from "The Committee" with a likeness of Jerome was presented to him, and included engravings of each committee member's signature, "SL Clemens" among them [Ebay item 120499862438, Dec. 1, 2009]. See insert card case:

May 9 Sunday – Sam recorded learning on May 9 or 10 of Lyon's use of his funds to renovate her house, before his $1,500 loan:

About the 9th or 10th Paine & I started to New York on business, & Lounsbury drove us to the railway station. On the way, reference was made to the cost of the rehabilitation of Miss Lyon's house—$1500. Lounsbury said—

“Fifteen hundred? Why, it cost thirty-five hundred!”

I said no, it couldn't be so, because Miss Lyon had given me the exact figures a day or two before Christmas— a shade less than $1500—& had told me that the work was all finished & that that was the sum spent upon it.

But Lounsbury held his ground. He got out his deadly memorandum book, in which he sets down everything, & from it he furnished the figures, the names, & the dates. The dates showed that Miss Lyon had spent about $2,000 of my money on her house before I had offered to assist her with a loan. This was plain, simple, stark-naked theft.

I did not find Mr. Rogers at the Standard Oil, but I gave the figures to Miss Harrison, Mr. Rogers's first secretary, & said I should intrude only this once upon the Investigation, but I would like to have these figures placed before Miss Watson. They probably made Miss Watson pretty sick—later it had that look. And they probably made Miss Lyon detest me—with a little Ashcroftian help in that direction; later it had that look. They gave the Ashcrofts a most difficult nut to crack. We now have the evidence of Ashcroft's attempts to crack it—attempts which sorrowfully failed. By & by I will exhibit those attempts, for they are interesting. So also is the letter to Mr. Rogers which accompanies them. If he saw the letter & Mr. Ashcroft's abortive figures, he passed from this life knowing Miss Lyon for what she was—a pretty hardy & very deliberate thief.

If Mr. Rogers had lived he would have settled the case privately. It could still—even then—be settled privately if wisely handled. I put it into the hands of John B. Stanchfield.

I speak of it as a “case.” It was become that, by this time. Originally, it wasn't a “case,” it was an inquiry; and inquiry instituted to satisfy Clara; an inquiry from which the Ashcrofts would emerge with characters pure and clean, white as snow, as I believed & proclaimed; an inquiry which would cover Clara with confusion & the Ashcrofts with glory.

But that stage had had its day, & was gone by. Things had happened—things like the Norfolk episode, which revealed Ashcroft as a very very small liar, sneak & swindler, & made me desire to get rid of him; also to get rid of the Ashcroft neighborhood. So I had a “case.” Mr. Ashcroft must be invited to cancel the Mark Twain Company contract of March 13, & his wife must be invited to deed her house & ground back to me [MTP: L-A MS XVI].

In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to H.H. Rogers.

Dear Mr. Rogers:

Lounsbury says the Ashcrofts have borrowed $1500 on the house & land I gave to Miss Lyon—this $1500 to be used in “squaring up with Mr. Clemens” & leaving them “free of indebtedness to him.”

It will hardly “square,” for the rehabilitations cost Miss Lyon more than $3,100.

If Ashcroft brings me the money he will probably want a receipt “in full of all claims” to date. In that case I will tell him to go & ask you for it, (and get it if he can), since this matter is in your hands, with full authority to act for me.

I'm coming down Tuesday to stay over night. If your tavern is closed I'll break in somewhere else. Wednesday I go to Deal Beach to discuss with the Colonel the proposition to let Collier have a cheap edition ($19) for 5 years, Collier to guarantee to sell so-many sets in that time. We began the discussion last Thursday. Collier exhibited telegrams (on a 5-year estimate) from all his general agents but ten, & the Colonel was visibly impressed. I am offering the Harpers half of the swag, but I want them to restore my guaranty of $25,000-per-annum for another 5 years. If we make the Collier-trade they can't decline, I think.

I left four dollars laying around. Will Mrs. Rogers send part of it to me now & the rest when I come? / Ys ever / [MTHHR 663].

May 19 Wednesday – At 7:20 a.m. in his home at 3 East 78th in NYC, Henry Huttleston Rogers died following a stroke. Clemens was on his way to visit Rogers without knowing of the death.

The New York Times, May 20, p.1, reported on the death of Rogers and Sam’s shock at learning the news:

H. H. ROGERS DEAD, LEAVING $50,000,000

Apoplexy Carries Off the Financier Famous in Standard Oil, Railways, Gas, and Copper.

ONLY HIS WIFE WITH HIM

Dead When His Physician Arrives—Associates Shocked, but Only a Ripple in Stocks—Funeral Tomorrow.

Henry Huttleston Rogers, one of the foremost of the country’s captains of industry, and a notable figure for many years in financial and corporation development in this country, died suddenly at this home, 3 East Seventy-eighth Street, at 7:20 o’clock yesterday morning, following a stroke of apoplexy, the second one he had suffered. He had been taken ill about an hour before he expired, soon after he had risen for the day. He died before his physician, Dr. Edward P. Fowler, could reach him from his country house at Pelham Manor.

Mr. Rogers was in his sixty-ninth year. As to his fortune, the estimates of Wall Street men varied yesterday from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000. Figures recently published showing the distribution of Standard Oil stock credited him with holding in his own name 16,020 shares in that corporation.

MARK TWAIN GRIEF-STRICKEN.

He Heard the News on Arriving in Town to Visit His Old Friend.

Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) for years one of the warmest friends of Mr. Rogers, arrived in town from his home in Redding, Conn., at noon yesterday intending to meet Mr. Rogers at the latter’s home, and heard the news of his death on arrival at the Grand Central Station.

A telegram apprising Mr. Clemens of the death of his old friend had been sent to Redding yesterday morning, but Mr. Clemens did not receive it, and did not know that Mr. Rogers was dead until after he arrived. As Mr. Clemens left the station he looked greatly grieved, and was leaning heavily upon the arm of his daughter, Miss Clemens, who had accompanied him to New York from Redding. Tears filled his eyes and his hands were trembling.

Several reporters who had met the Pittsfield express, on which Mr. Clemens came to New York, were at the train to meet him.

“This is terrible, terrible, and I cannot talk about it,” Mr. Clemens said to the reporters. “I am inexpressibly shocked and grieved. I do not know just where I will go.”

Miss Clemens explained that her father had left his home not knowing anything about the death of his friend, and had expected to enjoy the day with him. The members of the Rogers household, knowing that he was coming, had notified her as soon as the death had occurred, that she might break the news to him as gently as possible. The first intimation, she said, that her father received that Mr. Rogers was not living and in good health was from herself.

Mr. Clemens and his daughter lingered in the waiting room on the main station for a few minutes. Then Mark Twain, still leaning on his daughter's arm and looking toward the ground, walked slowly to the street through the Forty-second Street exit. Together they proceeded to the Subway station and boarded an uptown express.

Later in the day Mr. Clemens went to the home of Urban H. Broughton, son-in-law of Mr. Rogers, where they were joined by other friends of the family. After spending a few minutes there he reappeared and went away in a carriage. He did not go to the Rogers home and it was said that he had probably returned to Redding.

May 20 Thursday – M.W. Thompson for the Ionian Lecture Course, Univ. of Illinois wrote to ask Sam to lecture during the coming school year [MTP]. Note: “Ans’d May 26, ‘09”

May 21 Friday – At 10 a.m. Sam was a pallbearer at the funeral of Henry Huttleston Rogers, at the Unitarian Church of the Messiah, Park Ave. and 34th Street, NYC. Rev. Dr. Robert Collyer conducted the services, aided by the Rev. Dr. John Haynes Holmes, the church's current pastor. The body was taken for burial by train to Fairhaven, arriving in the evening [NY Times, May 22, p. 16, “Simple Funeral for H.H. Rogers”].

May 22 Saturday – Clemens inscribed his copy of The Mother and the Father. Dramatic Passages, (1909) by William Dean Howells: “S. L. Clemens / from W.D. Howells. / May 22, 1909” [Gribben 332].

Andrew Carnegie wrote from Stresa, Italy: his sympathies to Sam on learning of the death of H.H. Rogers:

Dear Friend / Our courier handed me the paper this morning calling attention to Mr Rogers passing away & my heart went out to you knowing that of all his friends you would miss him most—I have admired him for what he did for you & you for your devotion to him[.]

Gone & only sixty eight. & here you & I are left & both in good health tho older men.

Our courier was his & tells me that even when travelling he was followed by innumerable cables—Pity he did not retire years ago. I tell you my Friend no man is fit to meet business conditions in old age. I have seen too many fail. Fortunately you are clear of troubles & have only to moralize upon life as a looker on, so with me,—never to make another dollar was my resolve & I've kept it.—Mr Rogers had to hear the odium of a system, one blamed for unavoidable consequences. Rebates were part of transportation in the early days. Railways fot each other as private manufacturer did—Well, his memory be kept green in your heart & I doubt not history will do him justice because you will take care to rend him as your friend in need, showing the real man.

We are en route for Paris & London, Madam & Daughter & myself—the three all very well & entranced with this lovely spot— / Good night Saint Mark. / Ever your devoted / P S Madam wishes to be kindly remembered[.] She's an angel sure as you know [MTP]. Note: Andrew's “simplified spellings” left intact.

May 23 Sunday

May 24 Monday – Columbia University sent Sam an engraved invitation to exercises of Commencement Week, May 24 to June 4 [MTP]. Note: likely before this date; included abaseball game Yale v. Columbia on May 29.

May 25 Tuesday – Sam recorded going to New York to check with a secretary of the late H.H. Rogers, Miss A. Watson, who had been put in charge of looking into the financial records to see if the Ashcrofts had committed theft.

About the 25th of May Paine & I went down to New York. Stanchfield wanted the examination of checks & vouchers transferred to a man—a public & responsible account, incorruptible by injured-servant tears & maudlin sentimentality. So Paine & I went to the Standard Oil, & I delivered my message to Miss Watson in one of the private offices. She was very frosty; whereby I knew Miss Lyon had been crying down the back of her neck & saying damaging things about me; & that Miss Watson was further incensed against me because those deadly figures had damaged the Ashcrofts in her estimation, & she had failed to find any want to undamage them.

She was just a little inconsistent. In the beginning she remarked, gloomily, that the examination had cost her ten days of exhausting & frightful labor; whereas toward the end of her talk she remarked that the labor had been very light, because the vouchers & checks tallied so well that it was but little trouble to check them up. "Check them up." That was her expression. She used it again, a month later, when she sent her bill [MTP: L-A MS XVI].

Leaving the Standard Oil, Paine & I went chatting along uptown in the Subway, & got out at Astor Place. The talk was to this effect: since Miss Lyon had made so free with my check-book in rehabilitating her house, perhaps we might find other instances of this license besides those exposed by Mr. Lounsbury if we should inaugurate a hunt. Paine believed we could discover cases of "graft," at any rate. He mentioned one which had the look of a certainty: he was with Miss Lyon one day at Boiajin's (the Armenian rug-dealer) when she bought a ninety-dollar rug, & borrowed half of the money from Paine & said she would send the other half to the dealer by check. I will anticipate by remarking that the investigation-discloses revealed the fact, a few weeks later, that she had kept her word: she had paid the $45 with my check.

Then there was the Strohmeyer case. Miss Lyon had employed Strohmeyer to refit & re-upholster a couple of car-loads of furniture for us, & she said he was so grateful for her custom that he had rebuilt & perfected a large old mahogany table for her for nothing, & had told her he would have charged anyone else $65 for this work. We went to Strohmeyer & asked him if he had repaired the table, & he—innocent man!—suspecting nothing, told us all about it. He said it was a very fine old table, but just a ruin when it came to him. It was as good as new when he was done with it. He produced his work-shop's itemised bill—half a page of details—whereby it appeared that he had paid his workmen $33 for the work, & that he had charged Miss Lyon only $10. At the bottom of the bill the $10 was acknowledged. About this time he began to grow suspicious & a little nervous, & said no, he wouldn't have charged a stranger $65, but probably only $45. This didn't mend the matter much, since it was a confession that he had given Miss Lyon $33 worth of work for $10—a very plain case of graft. Paine remarked privately that it had been perfectly natural & characteristic in Miss Lyon to lie about the matter & boast of getting the work for nothing when she had really paid ten dollars for it. He said she couldn't tell the truth in any circumstances whatsoever—she had never learned how.

Strohmeyer caught the sinister drift of our inquiries, & he was a good deal embarrassed, & said perhaps he had charged Miss Lyon the full rate—yes, undoubtedly! The ledger would show. The ledger was brought. Unhappily it confirmed the $10. But also unhappily, it didn't stop there. There were several entries, & I asked leave to examine them. It couldn't be gracefully excused. There was a bedstead & a mattress—for whom? Miss Lyon's mother. It went to Summerfield [Lobster Pot] (Pure waste of stolen money; our attic was well stocked with bedsteads & mattresses in perfect condition—there was no occasion for Miss Lyon to buy such things.) And there was a seventy-dollar chair. My, but that was sumptuous! Whose palace was it for? Miss Lyon's. The several items in the ledger-account, bunched together, aggregated $115. At that time Miss Lyon had not been invited to borrow money of me. Evidently she was a capable provider for herself, when unwatched.

Next, Paine & I thought we would look into Miss Lyon's habit of delaying the payment of bills—if she really had that lazy & vicious habit. By letter we had already asked two or three of the big department-stores to go back over their books a year or two years, & tell me the dates when bills were mailed, & the dates when they were paid. Two or three had responded in the early days of the month (May.)

I had previously come across one such bill. It arrived when Miss Lyon had been gone about a week. It was 3 months old, & had a wail in it [MTP: L-A MS XVII]. Notes: Sam then inserted a bill for $13.95 for "Fit Mdse" from B. Altman & Co. first sent Feb. 1, and not paid till May 3.; also a schedule of bills dated May 5 of bills: when sent and when paid, from Dec. 1907 to Jan. 24, 1909; also a long list of bills from Wanamaker's Department Store from Feb. 1, 1906 to Feb. 1, 1909; also a statement from G.P. Putnam's Sons, NYC; These served to show Lyon's slow pay of bills.

May 26 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a postcard to Marjorie Breckenridge.

The summer is clothed in all its splendors, Marjorie dear, & it is beautiful here now. I have to go away & leave it for a while, but shall be back the middle of June, & by that time I hope you will be housed in that shady nook in the glen.

With love & good wishes / S L C [MTAq 258].

Sam also wrote to Dr. Livius Lankford of the Freemason Baptist Church in Norfolk, Va., replying to his May 1 letter (not extant). Sam had dined with the Lankfords on Apr. 5 during his visit there with H.H. Rogers. See entry.

My dear Doctor: / A discharged secretary left my matters in confusion, but I have at last found your letter of May 1st. The meal arrived, & I went down to the kitchen next morning at 7.30 & made & baked a pone or two for my breakfast, & taught the art to the cook. I have had corn-pone for breakfast ever since. I make it flat, the thickness of my hand, & brown it well; & such slabs as are left over I mend the roof with, when a slate goes missing. They are mighty solid & mighty fine-grained, but no matter, they are better than any other bread since the manna descended from heaven. I thank you ever so much for the meal, & shall certainly shout for more when it is used up.

I beg that you will remember me kindly to the three generations of the family. / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick in Plainfield, N.J.

Well, you dear Dorothy, where is the picture? You said you were having it taken & would send one to me—don't you remember?

I suppose you are glad the summer has come; & certainly I am. But I must lose some of it, for I am getting ready to go away, & shall not return until the middle of June.

I hope you are well of your bronchitis by this time, & that you will be careful & not bring on another attack; for I know a great deal about that disease by experience, & if one wants to be sick or must be sick, it is best to try something else.

Dinner-time! & I am not hungry. / With lots of love / ... [MTP; MTAq 259].

Sam also replied to a non-extant note from Elizabeth Wallace about the death of H.H. Rogers:

It is indeed, dear Betsy, a heavy stroke. It bruised many a heart: how many we shall never know, for his helpful kindnesses went far & wide, & made no outward sign. Here we shall not look upon his like again; here-after—but let us hope there is none.

Affectionately / SLC [MTP].

May 27 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to a non-extant from Poultney Bigelow.

Dear Poultney: / Indeed yes the invitation does hold good till September.

I, too, was invited to join the psycho-theologized band. Think of that: Sunday School inviting Satan.

Very well, I've seen an expurgated Don Quixote; also an expurgated Bible. They were merely sucked oranges. / Yours ever [MTP].

University of Missouri sent an engraved invitation to their 67th Commencement, May 30 to June 2 [MTP].
Note: "Declined May 27, '09"

May 28 Friday – Sam recorded a blunder by Ashcroft that led to the revocation of a power of attorney to Lyon and a search for a general power of attorney:

Toward the end of May our tempest in a teapot was puffing away at a great rate, & making a lively stir amongst the farms & hamlets scattered in the woodsy hills & vales of our neighborhood. Every day brought its fresh little event & added a new text for gossip. Whatever either side did or said was known next day all around, & discussed.

As soon as I had begun, in the front end of the month to ask merchants for two-year-old statements, Ashcroft heard of it. I was only looking for delayed payments, but he supposed I was on a still-hunt for graft. He probably knew Miss Lyon had covered her tracks fairly well in most cases, but he must have known she had been unwary in the Strohmeyer case, for he took measures to forestal me there. He wrote & asked Strohmeyer about Miss Lyon's dealings with him, & inquired if they had been entirely straight & correct. Strohmeyer's answer was an almost rapturous Yes. Before he knew that Paine & I were spies, he showed us that correspondence. A sorrowful man was he, later, I reckon, when Ashcroft found he had revealed everything to us & rendered the rapturous Yes worthless, as evidence, to be laid before the investigation-experts.

In those latter May days it was rumored that the Ashcrofts were getting uneasy, nervous, worried. Lounsbury said they were trying to mortgage Summerfield for $1500. What did they want with the money? They wanted it, according to Ashcroft, to square up with me. A month earlier, that amount would have sufficed for it, but not now. I had lent Miss Lyon $1500, but we were now aware that she had taken a couple of thousand more, before anything had been said about borrowing or lending.

Well, then, what did they want with the money? To run away with? Yes, that impression went around & was believed & discussed.

Next, it transpired that they had acquired the $1500.

About the 28th, Ashcroft made one his blunders. With all his smartness he was sure to do a foolish thing now & then—just as in the case of Horace & the imaginary “discharge.” The present blunder was a peculiarly stupid one. Young Harry Lounsbury was driving him from the station, & the two were exchanging gossip, when Harry spoke of a rumor that I was proposing to do so & so.

“He!” said Ashcroft, scornfully, “I can sell his house, over his head, for a thousand dollars, whenever I want to!”

Harry told this at home. His father told Paine; & Paine, greatly worried, came at once to me with it. I said there was nothing in it, it was only brag. But Paine was not satisfied. He said it meant that Ashcroft could do as he said. Had he a power of attorney? I said no—& nothing resembling one. I said Miss Lyon had a power of attorney to sign checks—nothing more, & that I had revoked it orally on the 14th of March. He advised me to revoke it in writing; which I did—& sent it by Lounsbury, who waited, & brought back Miss Lyon's written acknowledgment [MTP: L-A MS XVII]. Note: the revocation in writing was the day after, May 29. The remark made by Ashcroft to Harry Lounsbury started a search for the “smoking gun” power of attorney, which gave all rights of all assets to Ashcroft and Lyon. In a letter to William Coe on June 16, 1909, Sam claimed that they saw the power of attorney “by accident on the 29th of May, & hunted to cover in New York banks.” See June 16 to Coe.

May 29 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a short note to Isabel V. Lyon revoking in writing the power of attorney he'd given her and revoked orally some months ago. Albert Bigelow Paine signed as a witness [MTP].

Sam also wrote to an unidentified person about the appointment of Paine as his secretary and manager of his affairs [MTP: American Art Assoc.—Anderson Galleries catalog, Nov. 11-12, 1937, No. 4346, Item 89].

Lee A. White for Michigan University, Ann Arbor, Mich wrote to “beg” Sam to appear before the student body sometime during the following season [MTP]. Note: “Ans’d June 4, ‘09”

May 30 Sunday – Sam recorded that daughter Clara and Albert Bigelow Paine were still not satisfied about the possible existence of a general power of attorney that Sam may have given unaware to Ralph W. Ashcroft.

I was now satisfied, but Paine & Clara were not. They were still worrying over that boastful remark of Ashcroft’s. On Sunday the 30th they drove over to Nickerson’s place, & he remembered acknowledging my signature to a general power of attorney back in November or December. He thought it conferred power upon both Miss Lyon & Ashcroft. They came back & reported. I said Nickerson’s memory was astray & there was nothing to fret about, for I had not given a general power to anybody.

That was Decoration Day. Paine said I might be wrong & Nickerson right; so we must take no chances; we must go to New York & rummage the banks [MTP: L-A MS XVIII]. Note: Sam and Paine left for NYC the following day, where Paine found the Nov. 14, 1908 power of attorney. John N. Nickerson, notary.

May 31 Monday – Sam and Albert Bigelow Paine went to New York City and made a startling discovery:

We went down the next morning, Monday, & while I loafed in the Hotel Grosvenor, Paine went to the banks. Sure enough, in the Liberty National he found a power of attorney! A stately one, a liberal one, an all-comprehensive one! By it I transferred all my belongings, down to my last shirt, to the Ashcrofts, to do as they pleased with.

So this was what they had had up their sleeve all the time! This was why Ashcroft could say to Lounsbury about the road-mending, “Go ahead if you want to take the risk!” This was why Miss Lyon was able to say to the servants, “I am the only person in authority in this house, my word is law, & the only law, & I want you to understand it!” This was why Ashcroft could summon the servants on the 31st of March & say to them, “You better resign at once & save your faces, for you are all going to be discharged.”

Ashcroft had had this fraudulent document placed on record in New York, just as if it had been a deed. To his he had added another unusual precaution: he had had Nickerson’s authority as a notary certified in the Fairfield county clerk’s office, & the certification recorded. Nickerson’s seal wasn’t enough for him!

‘This swindling paper had been in force ever since November 14, 1908—about six & a half months—and I had never suspected it [MTP: L-A MS XVIII]. Note: see Nov. 14, 1908 entry. In XIX of the MS Clemens states that both John Stanchfield and Charles E. Lark, his attorneys, felt the signature on the power of attorney was Clemens’.

Amelia Dunne Hookway wrote from Howland School, Chicago: She was sending under separate cover pictures of their play of P&P promised last October and explained that the photographer had disappeared with the plates due to a hay fever condition [MTP].

J.B. Learmart wrote from Montreal, Canada to Sam. “I duly rec’d your recent book ‘Is Shakespeare Dead[?]’ with your autograph and the practical motto—‘Let us Save the tomorrow’s for work.’ Learmart was very happy and delighted. He took the liberty of sending a book, Across the Sub-arctics of Canada by Jos. W. Tyrrell [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben.

June – George Gordon Coulton (1858-1947) book From St. Francis to Dante, etc. (1907), was signed by Sam on the front pastedown endpaper: “SL. Clemens / June, 1909, / Stormfield. From James M. Beck” [Gribben 161]. Note: see other entries on Beck.

Bookman (NY) ran an anonymous article, “Mark Twain’s New Book and a Commentator” in their June issue. Tenney: “MT’s Is Shakespeare Dead? is a comic piece which ‘can be read through cheerfully in an hour’—yet a writer for the Boston Evening Transcript finds ‘depth and subtlety’ in it!” [47].

English Illustrated Magazine for June ran Peter Penn's article "Some American Humour," p. 299-301. Tenney: "Contains passing and superficial references to MT; praises his 'variety'" [48].

H.H. for the Princess Lwoff-Parlaghy wrote: "requests me to invite you to view her recent painting from life of the Poet / EDWIN MARKHAM, / before it is sent to the museum in Europe" [MTP]. Note: "Ans'd June 6, '09"

June 1 Tuesday – Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day was the "Discovery of the Blanket Power of Attorney," referring to the Nov. 14, 1908 document. In the L-A MS, section XVIII, however, he puts the discovery at Monday, May 31. Did the search take two days or one? Sam included in a copy of the document revoking the discovered power of attorney, signed by Clemens and received and recorded by John N. Nickerson, Redding Town Clerk, on June 3. Note: Clemens wasted no time after the the discovery in revoking the power of attorney. Ashcroft had done no real damage, perhaps the Ashcrofts had planned to take over the assets after Clemens' death.

Booth & Alexander Attorneys in Danbury, Conn wrote to advise Sam: "Our Mr. Alexander has been appointed a commissioner to take your deposition in the case of the Fentress Land Co. et al vs. Bruno Gernt et al, on interrogatories filed by the defendants. We presume you are familiar with the interrogatories, and that your attorney has been over them with you" [MTP]. Note: "ans"

Elizabeth Endicott Young wrote from Dedham, Mass. to ask if it was possible for Sam to come and speak to her club during next winter [MTP]. Note: "Ans'd June 8, '09"

June 2 Wednesday – Italian journalist Felice Ferrero visited Stormfield and interviewed Mark Twain for the most popular Italian newspaper in Italy, Corriere della Sera. Zuppello includes the interview in her 2008 paper for American Literary Realism. In part:

S. L. Clemens—the real name of Mark Twain—has two daughters, both remarkable musicians, both with a cosmopolitan education received in France, Germany, and Italy. Now that their mother is dead, they manage the house and work as secretaries for their father. The old humorist doesn't work so much now but he still smokes like a chimney, alternating cigars and pipe without a break. What a shame! Not that smoking has harmed him—at least the harm is not evident—but his smoking seems at odds with the harmony of the house. He has wonderful hair that has remained thick in spite of the years, with a marvellous white jacket perfectly matching his hair. As part of this "symphony in white," the old writer grows a thick moustache, though it is yellowed by tobacco and smoking. His daughters frequently chide him for his devotion to the pipe but he doesn't take offense: he is not only a good father but is an excellent man who tries in vain to hide under his surly appearance a heart as big as a house and who allows them to complain even while he smokes.

Mark Twain's personal integrity has required him to make sacrifices that others might have avoided. He invested his fortune in a publishing house that ten years ago suddenly went bankrupt. He was only a shareholder, although the most important one, and his responsibility to the company ended with its bankruptcy; but despite his age, he refused to hide behind the technicalities of the law. The publishing firm was in practice his own and he considered its creditors his creditors. He worked hard, wrote, gave lectures, and paid the debt to the last cent. Afterwards, he was able to easily restore his fortune with the money he earns by his pen.

Unfortunately, a trusted secretary who served him for many years has recently swindled him out of a good deal of property; and a male associate has stolen a number of bank shares, selling them for his own profit. However, his daughters are now old enough to save their father from more serious harm, and perhaps from financial catastrophe, by banishing every outsider from the vicinity of the family strongbox. In addition to the bank shares, the male associate stole a jacket from him. For this Mark Twain wants to take revenge: he wants to denounce the rogue before a judge when he is called to give testimony. The idea entices him, and he was still talking to me about it with great vehemence on the front terrace while I was climbing into the coach that would take me to the station.

“I am the king of buffoons; I am a dangerous person . . .,” he said.

“But father”—interrupted the daughter beside him—“you will make the gentleman miss his train.”

“Yes, I will drag him into court over the red jacket.”

And while the carriage left at a brisk pace, I admired the scene unfolding in the shade of Stormfield. The daughters laughingly ran their hands through their father’s ample head of hair and tried to pull the grand old man, the “king of buffoons,” into the house. To one side stood the smiling Claude [Benchotte], the French butler. Claude had worn a frock coat when I arrived, but this morning he wore only a short jacket. Was it because it was morning or because I had forgotten to leave him a gift?

Notes: Ferrero signed into the guestbook for June 2 (below) giving New York as his residence. Zuppello claims this was a two-day stay at Stormfield, though only this day is in the log. Zuppello also gives Oct. 5, 1909 as the date the interview appeared in the Italian paper, but then footnotes it as Sept. 6, 1909. This portion of the interview is the last segment; the prior described Stormfield and its environs, then gives the daily routine at the house. Claude Joseph Benchotte (1877-1941?), butler. The interview is not in Scharnhorst.

June 3 Thursday – Ralph W. Ashcroft wrote a registered letter to Sam, acknowledging the revocation of the Nov. 14, 1908 power of attorney, which was recorded by John N. Nickerson on this day (see entry). He added:

Mrs. Ashcroft’s helath has been seriously undermined owing to the unjust and unfounded accusations made against her, and she is on the verge of a breakdown. Her doctor orders immediately a complete change. As I have important business to attend to in England, some of which you are acquainted with, we shall probably sail in a few days to be gone about four weeks [MTP; Hill 227-8]. Note: the Ashcrofts sailed on June 8; see entry.

Hill writes

Apparently Stanchfield, who was handling the investigation of the Ashcrofts after Rogers’ death, suggested that it would be preferable to the Clemens faction if the couple remained in the United States until the results of the audit were available. The Ashcrofts chose to sail on June 8, in spite of Stanchfield’s request; nevertheless, Clemens’ claim that they fled surreptitiously to avoid prosecution was clearly false. Not only did Clemens have Ashcroft’s registered letter stating their plans; but when Stanchfield attached both Summerfield [“Lobster Pot”] and Mrs. Ashcroft’s house in Farmington, Isabel immediately booked passage to the United States to answer the charges [228].

June 4 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a postcard (picturing Stormfield) to Dorothy Quick.

“Dorothy Dear, it is too bad, but I shall be in Baltimore from the 8th to the 12th. This is an engagement I made with Francesca several months ago—she graduates on the 10th of June.

“It is a nice photo—thank you, dear, with lots of love—S L C” [MTP; MTAq 259].

Sam gave this day as the day the Ashcrofts left Redding for New York and Europe:

We now arrive at June 4. Stanchfield's official expert was getting toward the end of his examination of Miss Lyon's check-stubs & vouchers, & was asking her some rather embarrassing questions. There were things which she could not explain satisfactorily—things which proved her a thief; proved it beyond question. The Ashcrofts were getting very nervous.

When they got married—as before remarked—they had sent out some bushels of copper-plate cards announcing that the aristocratically-hyphenated Mr. & Mrs. R. W. Lyon Ashcrofts would be “At Home” at Summerfield “Saturdays in June.” When Friday the 4th arrived the countryside flocked along the country roads & to the little railway station to see the fine city-[k?]inds that would come. But they didn't see them. What they saw was the highly-hyphenated Ashcrofts slipping out & gliding away on the New York train! They never reappeared during that month.

They were scared. They were in flight, to save Miss Lyon from arrest. They believed they were she was in danger of spending her At Homes in the Danbury jail. They privately took passage in an obscure steamer for Holland, for a date half-way between the first & second At Homes (Tuesday, June 8.) Their intention was suspected [MTP: L-A MS XXI].

Robert Underwood Johnson for Century Magazine wrote to Sam, enclosing a letter he'd sent to the Post, referring to the June Century article, “Justice to Continental Authors” in which Johnson “tried to strike the high note of international good will.” Johnson noted he hadn't “heard a word of grateful appreciation in print from a single American author. I can set the key, but I must not do all the singing” [MTP]. Note: “ans”

June 5 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to a non-extant letter from James Beauchamp (“Champ”) Clark, House of Representatives, Washington.

Dear Champ Clark: / Is the new copyright law acceptable to me? Emphatically, yes! Clark, it is the only sane, & clearly-defined, & just & righteous copyright law that has ever existed in the United States. Whosoever will compare it with its predecessors will have no trouble in arriving at this decision.

The bill which was before the Committee two years ago when I was down there was the most stupefying jumble of conflicting & apparently irreconcilable interests that was ever seen; & we all said “the case is hopeless, absolutely hopeless—out of this chaos nothing can be built.” But we were in error: out of that chaotic mess this excellent bill has been constructed, the warring interests have been reconciled, & the result is as comely & substantial a legislative edifice as lifts its domes & towers & protective lightning rods out of the statue book, I think. When I think of that other bill, which even the Deity couldn't understand, & of this one, which even I can understand, I take off my hat to the man or men who devised this one. Was it R. U. Johnson? Was it the Authors League? Was it both together? I don't know, but I take off my hat, anyway. Johnson has written a valuable article about the new law—I enclose it.

At last—and for the first time in copyright history—we are ahead of England! Ahead of her in two ways: by length of term, & by fairness to all interests concerned. Does this sound like shouting? Then I must modify it: all we possessed of copyright-justice before the 4th of last March we owed to England's initiative.

Truly Yours / S L. Clemens

Private. I'm coming down next winter to suggest a slight change in one of the clauses to you [MTP].

Sam also replied to the May 31 from Mrs. Amelia Dunne Hookway.

Dear Mrs. Hookway: / I have been deeply move[d] by₁ your letter. Beyond reasonable question you must be the happiest₁ woman “on live”—to borrow the quaint phrase of the Arthur-Tales—because you are so near to the children; so near to so many children; so haloed with them, so submerged in them, so set round about with a glory of them; so a part of their very life, & the best part, the most precious part, the joyous part: yes, & contriver, creator & promoter of that joy. If I were going to begin life over again I would have a Children's Theatre, & watch it, & work for it, & see it grow, & blossom, & bear its rich moral & intellectual fruitage; & I should get more pleasure, & a saner & healthier profit, out of my vocation than I should ever be able to get out of any other, constituted as I am. Yes, you are easily the most fortunate of women, I think.

If praise were needed for Mr. Bennett's article I could furnish it, but it needs none; & I should not be able to express all the delight & deep satisfaction it gives me, in any case.

Instead of writing to thank you when the photographs come, I will thank you now. / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Robert Underwood Johnson in N.Y.C.

Dear Johnson: / I had just finished answering a note from Champ Clark when your letter came this morning. I kept a copy, & will mail it to you with this. I judged he meant me to write him *un*privately, & I did. Paine had a copy of your Post article on hand, & I borrowed it & enclosed it to Clark. / Yours evermore / ... [MTP].

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, “First Saturday ‘At Home’ of ‘Mr. & Mrs. R.W. Lyon-Ashcroft.’ It was utilized in scurrying away from home.”

June 6 Sunday

June 7 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Amelia Dunne Hookway.

Dear Mrs. Hookway: / The photographs have come, & they were a charming surprise to me, they so far exceeded my expectations. Certainly the staging & costuming of the piece were beautiful; & little by little, & bit by bit, I gathered the piece itself from the 85 letters of the children, much as one patches one of these incoherent puzzle-things together & finds that it's a picture—a picture that is graceful, & orderly, & full of life & color.

The letters arrived at the right time—at the beginning of the first free afternoon I've had this year; so I sat down & read them all. Once or twice in my life, no doubt, I have received 85 letters in one mail, but I haven't received 85 interesting ones in one mail until now.

With many, many thanks / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP]. Note: see prior to Hookway.

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally in Catonsville, Md.

Yes indeed, you dear Francesca, I shall be proud to be a member of the Epsilon theta Psi & wear the pin at Commencement—and thenceforth.

Albert Bigelow Paine & I will go to New York tomorrow morning, & to Baltimore the next afternoon. Maybe you will be at the hotel when we arrive. I hope so. And maybe the entire four of us can go down to Catonsville together next morning. What do you think, dear. / Lovingly / ... [MTP; MTAq 260].

Sam also wrote to Elizabeth Wallace.

Dear Betsy—

I'm leaving home for 5 days, & the article will arrive here after I am gone, but I can tell you now that I'm not afraid to have you print anything you have written with me for subject—I don't need to see it first. I know all about it anyway, because Margaret's mother told me how charming it is. I saw her only a few days ago, when I went down to Irvington to see that dear little rascal play Puck in A Midsummer Night's Dream. She did it well, & I was proud of her.

My present journey is to St. Timothy's School, at Catonsville, 20 miles from Baltimore, where Francesca, another of my Fishes, will graduate next Thursday.

And thanks for the Kipling verses! / Affectionately / ...

P.S. The MS. has arrived, & I unseal my just-finished letter to say how grateful I am that you are able to say such beautiful things about me, & to feel them. I thank you out of my heart.

I can suggest a correction or two, of no importance:

1. The Oxford degree is Litt. D.

2. My recollection is that the life of Henri IV was attempted 18 times—once for each year of his reign—a pretty striking coincidence, you see!

On page 30 it may be well, for Miss Lyon's sake, to strike out her name.

The Ashcroft's have wrecked their life—& so foolishly! Where do you think you could find a poor, & obscure, & inconsequential pair so high & influentially & promisingly situated as they were? They are in disgrace—in irremediable disgrace—and nothing to blame for it but their own greed & treachery. She was borne from her house sick, yesterday. Will she ever be brave enough to return? It is not likely. Such a little while ago her balloon was sailing in the blue & drenched with the sun - - & now!

Their designs were large, & daringly planned, but we think we have squelched them in time.

I want to keep your MS 6 days if I may [MTP]. Note: Margaret Blackmer was the “little rascal” Clemens referred to.

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, “Ashcroft recognizes that the expert's figures are damning.”

Dr. George S. Brown wrote from Birmingham, Ala. to Sam.

My Dear Mr. Clemens; — /When you so kindly permitted me to call on you about a year ago, merely because I happened to be a native of Hannibal, you did not allow me to thank you as I wanted to, for the great amount of good your books have given me from the time you wrote the first one. Of course you knew I would not do it well and you had already heard all the varieties. Really tho, in giving you thanks, I did want to claim the small distinction of having been a boy in Hannibal. I was a poet too (albeit a dumb one) for I remember at that age of fourteen (thirty five years ago) discoursing to the effect that your books had the power to lift me from any depth of melancholy and that they helped me to be good because they showed that to be good was to be sensible. The meaning of every sentence you have ever written is so crystal clear that my egotism suffers a little with the thought that I have little advantage over your other lovers in knowing The Cave, Soap Hollow, Hollidays Hill, The ferry Landing and that “the river road is a rocky one” and that I had an Aunt who talked like “Aunt Polly”. Still never a week goes by that I do not read about Tom and Huck because they bring back to me the smell of the blue-grass woods and the tropical growth of the riverside until my heart swells and the tears start. Even though your picture of it is all so clear that your friends on the under side of the world can see it as I do, I have one small distinction yet to treasure in that it is all interwoven with the infinite tenderness, the faces of lost childhood friends and the yearning sadness of my lost youth.

In the centuries to come Stratford-on-Avon will be visited as the grave of the only man who knew who wrote the Shakespeare plays and bought them cheap. You have immortalized Hannibal and for all time it will be the Mecca of all men and women who would do homage to the one who taught the sanest morality since Christ. Dear Sir I have to thank you for about the only state of mind I have that is worth having. I am very grateful to you and—I love you more than one man could tell another. I tell it to you as tho doing my devotions. / Most gratefully, affectionately and respectfully... [MTP]. Note: on the env. June 8 Tuesday — Clara Clemens' 35th birthday. Sam left for New York and Baltimore with Albert Bigelow Paine. They would spend the night in NYC and leave for Baltimore and Catonsville, Maryland on June 9 [June 7 to Nunnally].

Sam noted in his guestbook (page ending May 4) and his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, “He [Ashcroft] & his wench surreptitiously fly the country.” He claimed in his guestbook that they had promised to wait until Stanchfield completed his investigation, but sailed anyway. Hill also gives June 8 for the date the Ashcrofts sailed for England [228]. Note: the NY Times shows no steamers bound for England on this day, but two, the Lusitania for Liverpool and the Oceanic for Southampton on June 9 [June 8, “Shipping & Mails, p.13]. It may be that the pair stayed in NYC and sailed early on one of these on June 9. In his L-A MS, section XXI, however, Clemens claimed the pair did leave on June 8 “in an obscure steamer for Holland.” See June 12, Charles T. Lark to Albert Bigelow Paine.

June 9 Wednesday – Sam and Albert Paine arrived in Baltimore and took rooms at the Belvedere Hotel. Sam refused to see all reporters, who were clamoring for his response to charges of plagiarism for not fully crediting Greenwood in Is Shakespeare Dead? In the evening, in response to a written question on the matter, Sam gave a reply (see article following the next).

The release of Sam's latest work, "Is Shakespeare Dead?," which failed to fully credit the contribution of Granville George Greenwood, M.P. in his book The Shakespeare Problem Restated, caused a great flap from Greenwood's English publisher, John Lane, and was widely reported in American newspapers. The New York Times, never a great friend of Twain's, asked the inflammatory question on p. 1:

CAN MARK TWAIN BE A LITERARY PIRATE?

London Publishers Accuse Him of Appropriating from a Volume on Shakespeare

AND DEMAND REPARATION

Won't Let His Book, "Is Shakespeare Dead?" Be Sold in Great Britain—
Fuss Over an Error Haste.

Mark Twain went to the office of his publishers, Harper & Brothers, in Pearl Street, one day last Spring, and left some manuscript, asking that it be put into book form and published right away.

"It's part of my autobiography," explained the author, "but I thought I'd like to have it put in covers and printed now."

The publishers hurried matters and it was not long before the manuscript assumed the form of Twain's latest book, "Is Shakespeare Dead?" The book, in a green cover, was put on the market in April.

The author admits that he incorporated in the book a larger part of a chapter from a volume called "The Shakespeare Problem Restated," written by George G. Greenwood, M. P., of London. It takes up 22 of the 150 pages in Mark Twain's book. The humorist mentioned Mr. Greenwood's book in his own work, but neglected to mention Greenwood's name. Because of this oversight there has arisen a bristling little controversy. Mr. Greenwood's publishers, the John Lane Company of London, with offices in West Thirty-second Street, this city, have sent word to Harper & Brothers that they will not permit Mark Twain's book to be circulated in England until the plates are altered, giving Mr. Greenwood the credit that they maintain should go to him. They have no power to prevent the sale here.

Verdict Against Shakespeare.

In his Shakespeare book, Mark Twain puts forth the argument that Shakespeare could not have written the plays ascribed to him because the author must have been a lawyer. He arrives at this conclusion because, as he says, of the "peculiar freedom and exactness of legal phraseology" that, he finds, occurs frequently in Shakespeare's plays. There is nothing, he holds, to show that Shakespeare knew anything of law. Mark Twain reprints the chapter from Mr. Greenwood's book to bear out this theory, and it is this appropriation, without using Mr. Greenwood's name, that has caused the member of Parliament, through his publishers to protest.

In Mr. Greenwood's book the chapter in question, entitled "Shakespeare as a Lawyer," is the thirteenth, while Twain uses it without change in his own book, with the same caption, as the eighth chapter.

At the bottom of the page on which the chapter starts there is the simple announcement; "From Chapter XIII of 'The Shakespeare Problem Restated.'" Mr. Greenwood's publishers have written several letters to Harper & Brothers, in one of which they insist that for Mark Twain to ignore Mr. Greenwood was "a violation of all codes"—in other words, unethical.

What John Lane, head of the English publishing house thinks of the situation is explained in the letter sent from his office in London, over which is placed the caption "Literary Larceny."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Dear Sir: A friend in Philadelphia has kindly sent me a copy of Mark Twain's recently published work, "Is Shakespeare Dead?" I find that of its 150 pages no less than 22 are taken bodily from "The Shakespeare Problem Restated," by G. G. Greenwood, M. P. It is true that he mentions the work, even commend it, but nowhere is there any reference made either to its author or to its publisher.

Publisher Not a Humorist.

Mr. Clemens is a humorist with a world-wide reputation. He can view a burglary at his own house with a Socratic detachment of unconcern sufficient in itself to discourage the American Bill Sikes. He can pin on his door or gate (I forget which) a notice giving direction to the cracksman as to the whereabouts of the plate basket.

I can do none of these things; they are foreign to my nature. I am not a humorist, I confess it frankly, and I fail to see the point of this Mark Twain's latest joke. Good taste sometimes limits the boundaries of humorous perception in this country.

Mr. Green dryly remarked when he heard the compliment paid him: "Mr. Clemens may urge that he would not be one that 'filches from me my good name.' " But why not show a like consideration for my feelings as the publisher? the unwritten law, said, I believe, to be the only law popular in America, leaves no room for settlement. An author may filch whatsoever he pleases from a publisher, even his name, without any risk of conviction. It's the one compensation literature has to offer.

That there should be a class of American publishers addicted to the amiable pursuits of one of their National heroes we have become accustomed if not reconciled to; but that a distinguished man of letters should follow that lead fills me with pained surprise. Had Mr. Greenwood or I been applied to, we should have been proud to accord our permission.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Clemens and his publishers were entirely at the mercy of Mr. Greenwood and myself as regards the English edition of "Is Shakespeare Dead?" And the only claim that we can make to being humorists is that we have given the necessary powers without which at least one of Mark Twain's book would have been denied to Europe.

It is not to the law that I appeal that protects Mark Twain—but to the courtesy that should exist between writers, distinguished or otherwise. I regret that Mr. Clemens should have taken advantage of the laws of his country instead of those of custom. If those laws permit a humorist to make demands upon another man's work no consideration—not even that of an assured position in the world of letters—should be allowed to stand in the way of his acknowledging his indebtedness just as if he were amenable to the same standards as the man in Grub Street.

Some weeks have elapsed since the matter to which this letter refers was brought to the notice of Mr. Clemens's publishers, and I presume he was informed of any protest, yet no word or apology or explanation has been vouchsafed to Mr. Greenwood.

It was probably a similar experience that prompted that eminent divine, Robert South, to write:

"Is my friend all perfection, all virtue, and discretion? Has he no humours to be endured?"

I am yours faithfully. JOHN LANE

What the Harpers Say.

When inquiry was made at the offices of Harper & Brothers yesterday, one of those in authority made this explanation:

"Mr. Mark Twain was in a great hurry to have the book printed. He gave the manuscript to us and said he was anxious to have us rush it as fast as we possibly could. There is a rule in this office that none of Mark Twain's copy shall be changed—not even a comma. He is always very particular about that, and his wishes are respected.

"So the manuscript, exactly as he gave it to us, with the title, 'Is Shakespeare Dead?' was put into book form as quickly as we could do it.

"No one thought of looking particularly to see if Mr. Twain had given credit to Mr. Greenwood. It was noticed that the book itself was credited, and that seemed sufficient. Later on, when the John Lane Company called our attention to it, we learned that Mark Twain had failed to speak of Mr. Greenwood. We felt very sorry about it then, but it was too late to recall the edition. We don't put the blame on Mark Twain exactly. Of course, if we had noticed the omission we would have called his attention to it. Quite likely it escaped his notice, as it did ours. He didn't mean to be unethical."

The correspondence that passed between the John Lane Company and Harper & Brothers was shown to THE TIMES reporter. It began with a letter written by the Harper firm on March 29 saying that Mark Twain had written "a little bit of a book called 'Is Shakespeare Dead?' largely devoted to advertising George Greenwood's book, 'The Shakespeare Problem Restated.'" The letter went on to say that "in this little monograph Mr. Clemens wishes to use nine pages from Mr. Greenwood's book, as this forms the basis of his praise." A postscript says: "Of course, we are writing at Mr. Clemens's request."

The John Lane Company, through its manager, Rutger Bleecker Jewett, replied to this letter, giving permission to Mark Twain to quote from Mr. Greenwood's book as much as he pleased, but it was in Mr. Jewett's mind, he said yesterday, that Mark Twain would not neglect to mention Mr. Greenwood's name. Shortly after the book was put out Harper & Brothers received another letter from Mr. Jewett, this one in a different tone.

"Is Shakespeare Dead?" had found its way to London, and Mr. Greenwood had seen a copy of it.

They Were Indignant.

In his letter Mr. Jewett wrote that Mr. Greenwood and Mr. Lane, the publisher, were "both justly indignant" that Mr. Twain had refrained from using Mr. Greenwood's name in connection with the liberal passages taken from the latter's book. "They have refused to allow Mr. Clemens's book to be imported into England," he added. In reply, Harper & Brothers explained that they had intended making formal acknowledgment to Mr. Greenwood in a prefatory note in Mark Twain's book, but that it was overlooked in the rush.

"We may say," the letter continued, "that at the author's request this book was issued more hurriedly perhaps than any volume we have ever published. Only eighteen days elapsed between the time we received the manuscript and the appearance of the finished book."

Harper & Brothers added that a new edition of the book was forthcoming, and that it would be sure to have a reference to Mr. Greenwood.

The next day Mr. Jewett wrote back to Harper & Brothers, saying:

"We note from your admissions that Mr. Greenwood's contention is correct, viz., that he has not been given proper credit in Mr. Clemens's book. You write that you think Mr. Clemens's book is largely devoted to advertising 'The Shakespeare Problem Restated,' claiming that it is the crux. Both Mr. Greenwood and Mr. John Lane consider that Mr. Clemens has transgressed all codes in not giving proper credit to Mr. Greenwood as the author of this book, and to Mr. Lane the publisher.

Divergent Views of It.

"How Mr. Clemens's book can be considered by him or by you as a work devoted to advertising Mr. Greenwood's previous work is beyond our comprehension, if Mr. Clemens has studiously omitted the name of the author and publisher of the book he so kindly undertook to advertise. Mr. Greenwood demands the following before he is willing to consent to allowing the book to be published in England.

(1) That the plates shall be altered so that full acknowledgment shall be made both to author and publisher before any further edition be printed;

(2) That at the end of every copy of the English edition and of all copies of the American edition published after May 10 a full-page advertisement shall appear, to be supplied by me.

"This seems to me the least that can be done to make some amends for the injustice which has been committed in such a very extraordinary manner."

Ten days after receiving this letter, on May 21, Harper & Brothers sent a reply saying they would give credit in the next edition of "Is Shakespeare Dead?" to Mr. Greenwood and to the John Lane Company, but nothing was said of any page advertisement. The Lane Company reiterated its demands, and there the matter stands.

"Is Shakespeare Dead?" is being sold here unrestricted, but in England the John Lane Company, protected by copyright laws which do not extend to their books in this country, are watching to prevent a copy of Mark Twain's volume from being marketed.

"We don't like to be discourteous about this," said Mr. Jewett, "but we feel we must protect the authors who put their confidence in us. Mark Twain should have been more careful."

In going into his argument of the authorship of the Shakespeare plays Mark Twain in his book says:

"If I were required to superintend a Bacon-Shakespeare controversy, I would narrow it down to a single question—the only one, so far as the previous controversies have informed me, concerning which illustrious experts of unimpeachable competency have testified: Was the author of Shakespeare's works a lawyer—a lawyer deeply read and of limitless experience?"

"I would put aside the guesses and surmises, and perhapses, and might-have-beens, and could-have-beens, and must-have-beens, and we-are-justified-in-presumings, and the rest of those vague spectres and shadows and indefinitenesses, and stand, or fall, win or lose, by the verdict rendered by the jury on that single question. If the verdict was yes, I should feel quite convinced that the Stratford Shakespeare, the actor, manager, and trader who died so obscure, so forgotten, so destitute of even village consequence that sixty years afterward no fellow citizen and friend of his later days remembered to tell anything of him, did not write the works."

An effort was made yesterday to see Mark Twain, but he was not at his home in Redding, Conn., and could not be reached.

The Times also ran a June 9 dateline from Baltimore on June 10, p.1 recording Sam's reaction to the controversy:

AN OVERSIGHT—MARK TWAIN.

Tells Why Proper Credit Was Not Given to English Author.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, June 9.—Mark Twain arrived in Baltimore late this afternoon and went to the Belvedere, where he denied himself to all newspaper men. Shortly before midnight, however, in answer to a note sent to his room asking if he had any reply to make to the complaint that he had incorporated in his latest book, "Is Shakespeare Dead?" a chapter from a volume called "The Shakespeare Problem Restated," written by George P. Greenwood, without giving credit, Mr. Clemens wrote the following:

"It was merely an oversight in not giving the proper credit."

Mr. Clemens will go tomorrow to Saint Timothy's School for Girls at Catonsville and make an address to the graduates [Note: T. Smith claims he stayed at the Hotel Bellevue, where he suffered a heart attack on this night. p. 27]

Lilian W. Aldrich wrote her "deep and understanding" sympathy to Sam about the death of Rogers [MTP].

June 10 Thursday – Clemens and Paine traveled 20 miles to Catonsville, Maryland and St. Timothy's School for Frances Nunnally's graduation. Clemens' commencement speech was his last public speaking performance. The speech as reported by Baltimore News, "Advice to Girls," in Fatout:

I don't know what to tell you girls to do. Mr. Martin has told you everything you ought to do, and now I must give you some don'ts. There is nothing for me to do but to tell you young ladies what not to do. There are three things that you should never do on any occasion.

First, girls, don't smoke—that is, don't smoke to excess. I am seventy-three and one half years old, and have been smoking seventy-three of them. But I never smoke to excess—that is, I smoke in moderation, only one cigar at a time.

Second, don't drink—that is, don't drink to excess.

Third, don't marry—I mean, to excess.

Now, if you young ladies will refrain from all these things you will have all the virtues that anyone will honor and respect.

Another thing I want to say, and that is that honesty is the best policy. That is an old proverb; but you don't ever want to forget it in your journey through life.

I remember when I had just written Innocents Abroad when I and my partner wanted to start a newspaper syndicate. We needed three dollars and did not know where to get it. While we were in a quandary I espied a valuable dog on the street. I picked up the canine and sold him to a man for three dollars. Afterward the owner of the dog came along and I got three dollars from him for telling him where the dog was. So I went back and gave the three dollars to the man whom I sold it to, and have lived honestly ever since [Fatout, MT Speaking 645-6:].

Note: for some reason Fatout names the wrong school—Misses Tewksbury's school where Margaret Blackmer was enrolled. Also, on Sept. 28, 2009, a photograph album went on sale on eBay with 165 snapshots, many of Clemens, Nunnally and others at the ceremony which was held the next day, June 10 (see insert photo).

Dr. Edward Everett Hale died in Boston at the age of 87. He is best remembered for his 1863 short story, "The Man Without a Country." Hale was third on Mark Twain's 1905 list of ten nominees to join the American Academy of Arts and Letters [Gribben 285; NY Times, June 11, 1909, p. 9].

George E. Day for YMCA, Somerville, (Mass.) wrote to ask Sam for a lecture or reading [MTP]. Note: "Ans'd June 12, '09"

T. Fisher Unwin wrote from London to Sam. "I send you herewith a copy of "The Pools of Silence" by Mr. H. de Vere Stacpoole. This book deals with the present situation in the Congo, and as I think, in a sincere and striking way. The public at large hardly realises, perhaps, that the position of the affairs in the Congo remains practically unchanged" [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben.

The New York Times, p. 6 ran a squib from the Brooklyn Eagle:

Mark Twain's Alibi.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

Mark Twain would do, or commit, or suggest, or abet, or connive at no unnecessary wrong—in the absence of Col. George Harvey, who is today delivering an address at the University of Kansas, in Lawrence on "The Power of Tolerance."

The physical absence of Col. Harvey in Kansas establishes a moral alibi for Mark Twain whether in Manhattan or Connecticut or elsewhere.

June 11 Friday – The New York Times ran a follow-up article, p.3 on the plagiarism flap over Sam's work, "Is Shakespeare Dead?" datelined June 10, Baltimore:

TWAIN'S FOOTNOTE LOST.

Wrote One, He Says, Crediting Author and Publisher of Borrowed Matter.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 10.—Referring to the charges of plagiarism, in connection with his book, “Is Shakespeare Dead?” Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) today said:

“In writing my book I took the liberty of using large extracts from Mr. Greenwood’s book ‘The Shakespeare Problem Restated.’ I made use of the extracts because of the great admiration which I have for that book, and with the full permission of the publishers. I added a foot note in which I gave full credit to both author and publishers. The book was put through the press in great haste, and somewhere, nobody seems to know where, the foot note was lost, probably in the composing room. That is the sum and substance of the whole story.”

“But of course the John Lane Publishing Company of England, the publishers of Mr. Greenwood’s book are good advertisers. Now, one of Mark Twain’s book, so they tell me, is considered worth while reading. I know, at any rate, that my books have always sold well. But to have a man like Mark Twain steal portions from another man’s book makes that book something extraordinary.

“Messrs. Lane are well aware of this fact, and it is to be regretted that a mistake in the mechanical department of another publishing house should be made much of to accuse falsely one who has already won fame in the literary world and to put in a false light another who is the most modest and retiring of men.”

Charles C. Jorgensen wrote from Chester, Penn. to relate an event in 1873 on the S.S. Batavia and wondered if Sam recalled it. Jorgensen was a member of the crew. “...one day, while I was on the lookout, you came forward and stood looking over the Port Bow. —one of my shipmates came up behind you, and made the traditional Chalkmark—over which you were not supposed to pass over, until you had paid a fine; however, you were permitted to return aft on your promise of payment. —Later on 10 Shillings was sent with your compliments, which I know was greatly appreciated by all concerned” [MTP].

Edward Eugene Loomis for the Delaware, Lackawanna, NY Railroad wrote to Sam.

I send you herewith some correspondence forwarded me by Mr. Ashcroft just before sailing, in reference to certain privileges that have been granted the Edison people by the Mark Twain Company to produce moving pictures of “The Prince and the Pauper”. (I assume the Company has received the $150.00.)

You will not they now ask for a date on which they can take pictures of you at your home in Redding [MTP].

June 12 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a notecard (2x3 inches), likely a gift enclosure, to Gertrude (probably Natkin): “Dear Gertrude I send you my love. / Mark Twain / June 12/09” [MTP: James Cummins catalog, No. 64, Item 19].

Charles T. Lark, assistant to John B. Stanchfield, attorney, wrote to Albert Bigelow Paine concerning the flight of the Ashcrofts on June 8:

So the soiled birds had flown.

They had reason to be frightened, for, as a precautionary measure, Mr. Lark was intending to ask the district attorney of Twinfield County to place Miss Lyon’s case before the grand juror for said county & let him summon her, the grand juror to proceed whenever he should get further instructions. Nothing further was to be done in this direction until all effort to settle the matter out of court should fail. It was my duty as a citizen to jail Miss Lyon, but she was a woman & the thing was so revolting that my citizenship was hardly equal to it. If it had only been Ashcroft! That would have been another matter, & my citizenship would have stood the strain most elegantly [MTP: L-A MS XXI].

June 13 Sunday – According to Sam’s guestbook entry on the page ending May 4, this was the day it was discovered that the Ashcrofts had sailed for England on June 8. June 14 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to an unidentified man.

Dear Sir: / Yes, I remember it. When I was reading your letter aloud to my daughter this morning & came to your reference to my assembling myself in the port bow, I turned away my head & said “I will make a guess at what is coming: those boys are going to chalk me.” My guess was right. I remember the storm, & the water-logged vessel & the gallant rescue vividly. / Truly Yours / ... June 15 Tuesday – James B. Shropshire wrote a fan appreciation letter from Brooklyn to Sam. His quill was quite worn out [MTP].

June 16 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to William Robertson Coe.

Dear Mr. Coe: / I was glad to hear from you, & I wish you had come yourself, & brought your letter & Mrs. Mai. I am in the doctor’s hands, as a foreguessed result of the Baltimore trip, which was a hard one for an old person, for it was cold & rainy; but the engagement was five months old & had to be kept.

Perhaps it might inflame Lancaster’s feelings still more to know that I wrote a part of the Eulogy three years ago & Mr. Rogers would not let me publish it; that I finished it a year later; was not satisfied with that finish, & destroyed it; re-framed it once more, two days after Mr. Rogers’s funeral, & again destroyed the product; that it will never be published until it is worded to suit me, if I have to wait seven years. The most of my books have had to wait several years until I could finish them to suit me. Whenever I have had anything of real importance to do, these waits have always occurred. I suppose Mr. Lancaster can sit down & knock off a Eulogy in an hour—any hour, any day—without any difficulty. But I am not built in that way. I was never in a hurry yet, on a piece of work that I wanted to do well. Eulogy? In the 6 unpublished volumes of my Autobiography Mr. Rogers is pervasive; the references to him & to his goodness, his greatness, his nobility, his charm, are scattered all through those books, & they are his best Eulogy—affectionate, grateful, spontaneous, unaffected; & they will still be read, & in them his kindly face & his lovable nature will still shine, a hundred years after all the hasty Eulogies of to-day shall have been forgotten.

Mr. Ashcroft & Miss Lyon are still being investigated, but the finish is near. Mr. Rogers began the investigation for me. I wish he could have had the happiness of seeing a paper which we heard of by accident on the 29th of May, & hunted to cover in New York banks. The most amazing document that has seen the light since the Middle Ages. It bears date Nov. 14 last, & is a General Power of Attorney which hands me & all I own & all I ever shall own, over to Ashcroft & Miss Lyon. Until June 1 I had never heard of that paper—yet I signed it. Come—match me this mystery if you can / Sincerely / ... [MTP]. Note: see Nov. 14, 1908 entry and notes from Hill p. 212-13.

Sam also inscribed his photo (in his white suit and standing in a garden) to an unidentified person: “Truly yours / Mark Twain / June 16/09” [MTP].

June 17 Thursday – K. Woltereck wrote from Wellesley College, Dept. of German, Wellsley, Mass. to ask Clemens: “1) Do you think Goethe has ever meant or would ever mean anything to America? 2) Has Goethe’s art ever influenced your art? 3) Whom do you consider the best living American Gothe Scholar?" [MTP]. Note: "Ans'd June 21, '09"

June 18 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally at Camp Esta-Nula, East Sebago, Maine.

Well, no, you dear Francesca, I have not been in good shape lately, but the doctor will come up from New York tomorrow & see if he can mend me up.

Don't you forget, dear, that when you go to West Point you & your brother must come & see us if you find you can manage it.

I had a very delightful time at your school, & I remember it with great pleasure. If I were not so inadequate in age & sex I would go there & take a term or two.

Remember me most kindly to your mother, please. And with great love to you, dear heart, / SLC [MTP].
Note: Sam was suffering from Angina Pectoris, the first twinges of heart disease that would result in his death.

From the Mark Twain Library Association minutes, meeting at Stormfield:

The annual meeting of the M.T.L.A. was held at the residence of Mr Clemens, on Friday the 18th of June, 1909, at 10 AM. Our vice president Dr E H Smith was unable to attend, but there were 12 members, beside Mr C. our Pres. present. The same officers were re-elected with the election of Miss Jean Clemens to fill vacancy of position of 3rd Vice President [Isabel Lyon]; but the vacancy made by the resignation of Mrs. Barnett on account of ill health was not filled by the election of anyone. The By-laws and Constitution were read by Mr Clemens, The Report of the Librarian was read, as were also those of Secretary and Treasurer, same reports being accepted. It was voted to write a letter to Mr Theodore Adams, signed by all the members of the Assoc. to show our appreciation of his gift of a piece of land situated at what is known as Sellick's Corners, where will be located the permanent-building for the Library. Also voted to send a letter to Mr. W. W. Sunderland for ½ the amount on the bill ordered, he donated that amount to the Society, therefore it was voted to send him a letter of thanks for his kindness. Meeting adjourned... [copied by Tenney, Nov. 15, 1981].

Clemens had a writ of attachment placed upon the property (the "Lobster Pot") adjoining Stormfield that he'd given to Isabel Lyon for a wedding present [NY Herald, June 20, 1909, "Mark Twain Levies Upon Cottage He Gave Secretary"].

June 19 Saturday – T. Fisher Unwin wrote from London to Sam, hesitant "to send you a book because I feel confident you must be crowded with presentation copies," referring again to Stacpole's book on the Congo [MTP].

June 20 Sunday – The New York Herald, p. 1, reported Mark Twain's lawsuit against his former secretary:

MARK TWAIN SUES FORMER SECRETARY

Asks $4,000 Damages and Levies on Property He Gave to Mrs. Ralph W. Ashcroft.

CAUSE OF ACTION SECRET

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Saturday.—A cottage and sixteen acres of land owned by Mrs. Ralph W. Ashcroft, who was once described by Mark Twain as the best secretary he ever had, was attached to-day by a deputy sheriff in a suit brought by Mark Twain to recover $4,000 from Mrs. Ashcroft. The land was once the property of Mark Twain. It adjoins his place at Redding, and was given by him to Mrs. Ashcroft as a wedding gift two months ago.

Until the return of Miss Clara Clemens, daughter of the humorist, from a concert tour of a few weeks ago Mark Twain, Ralph W. Ashcroft, his financial secretary, and Mrs. Ashcroft, who had been his private secretary long before her marriage to Ashcroft in April last, had dwelt in peace and harmony. Shortly after Miss Clemens' return the Ashcrofts left Redding. They are now abroad.

When Mrs. Ashcroft was Miss Isabel V. Lyon she, as Mark Twain's secretary, became so useful that when there was formed "Mark Twain Incorporated," she as well as her husband had an office in the new corporation. Those persons who are neighbors of Mark Twain at Redding are unable to understand the cause of the trouble.

The papers in the suit say Mrs. Ashcroft borrowed $3,000 from Mark Twain and that he wants $4,000 as damages. No details of the transaction are given in the papers. The property on which Deputy Sheriff Banks levied is valued on the tax books of Redding at $1,500. After Mrs. Ashcroft came into possession of the place she spent $700 in improvements.

Her husband was the plaintiff in an action for damages some months ago in which John Hays Hammond was defendant.

Ralph W. Ashcroft has for several years been Mark Twain's financial secretary, and it was while he was serving in that capacity that he met Miss Lyon. She formerly lived in Mark Twain's household, in lower Fifth avenue.

June 21 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Franklin G. Whitmore in Hartford.

Dear Brer Whitmo?—

Have you our old Hartford check-books? If you have, will you send them to me? I don't want the vast one from which we used to pay the robber Paige; it is those from which we paid our household expenses that I want.

Jean is no longer an exile; she has been with us two months, & maintains perfect health, robust health, now that she is free of the privations & irritations & captivity of the sanitariums. She is out doors all day, riding, driving, & managing her farm. I believe she could have been with us a year ago as well as not.

Clara has virtually forsaken her New York quarters, & lives with me nearly all the time, now. So I've a family again, you see. I suppose Jean's banishment was necessary for her recovery, but I hope it will never have to be repeated.

With love to you & Mrs. Whitmore, & hoping you will give us another visit,

Yours affectionately

SLC

P. S.

Do you remember the last time I was in Hartford you had a letter from some hospital in Texas saying my cousin Fred Quarles was there, & a small monthly sum for tobacco, &c., would be a help to him? If you can get on his track again & send him $5 a month for me, I should like it [MTP]. Note: William Frederick Quarles (1833-1898) was the youngest son of Sam's uncle John Quarles [MTA 1: 218.25; 533]. Note: Fred died in 1898, so one wonders what brought him to the attention of Clemens some eleven years later. The children of John Adams Quarles and Martha Ann Lampton are listed on familytreemaker website as follows:

1. Benjamin Lampton Quarles, b. May 06, 1826, Overton, Tennessee. (d. 1902)
2. James T. Quarles, b. December 21, 1827, Overton, Tennessee. (d. 1866; shown as James A. in MTA 1: 533)
3. Margaret Quarles, b. June 17, 1830, Monroe, Missouri.
4. Frances L. Quarles, b. April 08, 1832.
5. William Frederick Quarles, b. December 15, 1833, Tennessee (d. 24 Mar. 1898)
6. Tabitha Hawes Quarles, b. February 01, 1836. ("Puss" Greening)
7. Sarra J. Quarles, b. June 22, 1838, Florida, Monroe, Missouri.
8. Polk Quarles, b. 1842, Clinton, Monroe, Missouri.
9. John Knox Quarles, b. October 15, 1844, Missouri.
10. Martha C. Quarles, b. January 25, 1848, Missouri.

11. Jane Clemens Quarles, b. July 09, 1850, Missouri.

Paine writes of this afternoon with Clemens, when Sam was reading A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom (1901) by Andrew Dickson White (1832-1918).

June 21. A peaceful afternoon, and we walked farther than usual, resting at last in the shade of a tree in the lane that leads to Jean's farm-house. I picked a dandelion-ball, with some remark about its being one of the evidences of the intelligent principle in nature—the seeds winged for a wider distribution.

"Yes," he said, "those are the great evidences; no one who reasons can doubt them."

And presently he added:

"That is a most amusing book of White's. When you read it you see how those old theologians never reasoned at all. White tells of an old bishop who figured out that God created the world in an instant on a certain day in October exactly so many years before Christ, and proved it. And I knew a preacher myself once who declared that the fossils in the rocks proved nothing as to the age of the world. He said that God could create the rocks with those fossils in them for ornaments if He wanted to. Why, it takes twenty years to build a little island in the Mississippi River, and that man actually believed that God created the whole world and all that's in it in six days. White tells of another bishop who gave two new reasons for thunder; one being that God wanted to show the world His power, and another that He wished to frighten sinners to repent. Now consider the proportions of that conception, even in the pettiest way you can think of it. Consider the idea of God thinking of all that. Consider the President of the United States wanting to impress the flies and fleas and mosquitoes, getting up on the dome of the Capitol and beating a bass-drum and setting off red fire."

He followed the theme a little further, then we made our way slowly back up the long hill, he holding to my arm, and resting here and there, but arriving at the house seemingly fresh and ready for billiards [MTB 1506-7].

Charles E. Miner wrote to Sam. "I am directed by Mr. Collier to send you the enclosed petition for dissolution of the Educational Theatre, and to ask that you sign the petition in the places indicated" [MTP]. Note: this is catalogued as from Robert J. Collier; petition not in file. "Ans'd June 22, '09"

June 22 Tuesday – Pieter Bausch wrote from Amsterdam to Harper's about Sam's non-answers to Bausch's last letters. Though catalogued to Clemens, it is clearly not to him; see July 2 Duneka to Clemens [MTP]. Note: "Ans'd July 6, '09"

June 23 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Joe Twichell.

Dear Joe:

I have escaped the interviewer thus far. It has been difficult, still I have escaped.

The public probably think the Ashcroft incident a very trifling matter, & the newspapers doubtless think the same. That is my protection.

Last August, at Sam Moffett's funeral, the heat broke me (with the help of fatigue,) & I was forbidden to stir from Stormfield until frosty weather should come. Two weeks ago I had to go to Baltimore, & this time cold & rain & fatigue knocked me out. Dr. Quintard came up & today & examined me, gave very positive orders that I am not to stir from here upon any account before autumn. However, I would not have ventured anyway.

With lots of love to yous / Mark.

[in left margin:] It's fine to have Jean at home again!

[in right margin:] Damn that reptile Miss Lyon for keeping her out of her natural home so long [MTP]. Note: Sam was likely right to blame Lyon for Jean being kept away, as several instances show Lyon was afraid of Jean's epileptic attacks. That Jean attacked Katy Leary does not show as proven, and may have even been concocted by Lyon.

Paine write of an exchange with Clemens this morning:

June 23. I came up this morning with a basket of strawberries. He was walking up and down, looking like an ancient Roman. He said:

“Consider the case of Elsie Sigel what a ghastly ending to any life!”

Then turning upon me fiercely, he continued:

“Anybody that knows anything knows that there was not a single life that was ever lived that was worth living. Not a single child ever begotten that the begetting of it was not a crime. Suppose a community of people to be living on the slope of a volcano, directly under the crater and in the path of lava-flow; that volcano has been breaking out right along for ages and is certain to break out again. They do not know when it will break out, but they know it will do it—that much can be counted on. Suppose those people go to a community in a far neighborhood and say, ‘We’d like to change places with you. Come take our homes and let us have yours.’ Those people would say, ‘Never mind, we are not interested in your country. We know what has happened there, and what will happen again.’ We don’t care to live under the blow that is likely to fall at any moment; and yet every time we bring a child into the world we are bringing it to a country, to a community gathered under the crater of a volcano, knowing that sooner or later death will come, and that before death there will be catastrophes infinitely worse. Formerly it was much worse than now, for before the ministers abolished hell a man knew, when he was begetting a child, that he was begetting a soul that had only one chance in a hundred of escaping the eternal fires of damnation. He knew that in all probability that child would be brought to damnation — one of the ninety-nine black sheep. But since hell has been abolished death has become more welcome. I wrote a fairy story once. It was published somewhere. I don’t remember just what it was now, but the substance of it was that a fairy gave a man the customary wishes. I was interested in seeing what he would take. First he chose wealth and went away with it, but it did not bring him happiness. Then he came back for the second selection, and chose fame, and that did not bring happiness either. Finally he went to the fairy and chose death, and the fairy said, in substance, ‘If you hadn’t been a fool you’d have chosen that in the first place’

“The papers called me a pessimist for writing that story. Pessimist — the man who isn’t a pessimist is a d —d fool.”

But this was one of his savage humors, stirred by tragic circumstance [MTB 1507-8] Note: Elsie Sigel was the granddaughter of General Franz Sigel. She was mysteriously murdered while engaged in settlement work among the Chinese.

Elizabeth Jordan wrote on Harper’s Bazar letterhead to Sam, asking to send two copies of IA for his signature, one for Herr Wilhelm Bartling of the North German Lloyd Co. in Bremen, and another for herself. She enclosed 25c for postage [MTP]. Note: though in the past Sam often hated such requests when sent by Whitmore and others, he complied with courtesy on June 26, signing the books Jordan sent and dispatching Jean to mail them.

Miss A. Watson, secretary to the late H.H. Rogers wrote a note and a bill for services provided in looking into the books of Ashcroft-Lyon for improprieties:

Dear Sir:— / Miss Harrison informed me that in her presence Mr. Rogers told you that we would render a bill for the work performed in this office on your accounts. The statements handed your representative were in such condition that an expert would have very little trouble checking them up, and in view of that fact hand you herewith bill for one hundred and fifty dollars. / Yours truly, [signed:] A. Watson [MTP: L-A MS XVI]. Note: Sam added after including this letter in the source:

Evidently she thought I might dispute the bill—otherwise there was no occasion to make that opening remark. I sent the check, & observed that I was aware that Mr. Rogers had made the remark. Which was true. But he didn’t make it in that form; he didn’t say “this office,” he spoke of a person—a he, not a she—& he was jesting at the time. At his dwelling-house, speaking seriously, he had said, “Our man will not charge you as much as a public accountant.”

When Stanchfield's expert took hold of the matter, he didn't find it so very simple & easy, he found it considerably tangled & obscure in places, & not bearing any strong resemblance to a "checking-up" picnic.

He worked over it a couple of weeks, translated it into good clear figures, put his fateful finger on the sore place, & charged me only $250; & when he was done....but I haven't come to that, yet [Ibid].

June 24 Thursday

June 25 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to “any Inspector of Customs on the Hamburg-American line, Hoboken.”

Dear Sir: / I suddenly learn that the Kaiserin Augusta Victoria is due to-morrow, whereas I was not expecting her so soon. Miss Mary Clark is on board, & is bringing a dog for my daughter, Miss Jean Clemens.

I have not time to inquire what measures I ought to take, in order to get admission to the dock for the bearer of this note (my man-servant George O'Connor,) therefore I beg you to grant him admission, so that he can relieve Miss Clarke of her burden & carry out the customs formalities & requirements in her place.

If I am asking more than is usual, you may report me to my friend the Collector of the Port & I will make the due amends. / Very respectfully / ... [MTP]. Note: Sam spells Clark and Clarke.

June 26 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to Elizabeth Jordan's June 23. The MTP shows this as two letters, the first being merely a sentence Sam wrote on the back of Jordan's incoming: “Wir hätten sollen alle des Morgens um die Arbeit vorbehalten müssen. Let us save the tomorrows for work” [MTP]. The second short note: Dear Miss Jordan: I have with pleasure autographed the books, & my daughter Jean will do them up & forward them to you. / With many many thanks for the weather—if it is you that sent it— / Sincerely yours /” ... [MTP].

The investigation of Isabel Lyon and Ralph W. Ashcroft by Sam's attorney was completed with damning judgment found against the pair [June 28 to Coe].

J.B. Lazear wrote from Denver, Colo. to advise he had two letters by “Hon. [illegible word] Clemens in 1854, when he was visiting West Point.” He offered to send one [MTP]. Note: Sam was not at West Point in 1854.

June 27 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to William R. Coe.

Dear Mr. Coe: / Well then, good-bye & a pleasant trip! Perhaps you will run across those fine hyphenated Lyon-Ashcrofts in the court circles of England. They took to the water when the investigation began to get pretty warm. They had said they were not afraid, & had promised my lawyer to stay here till it was finished. It was finished yesterday. The result proves that Miss Lyon did well & wisely to travel for her health.

As per the doctor's orders, I must not go out of sight of this house the whole summer; nor walk more than half a mile on a stretch; nor run up stairs; nor do any other customary or agreeable thing; & moreover, I must cut my smoking away down! (It isn't going to happen. I shan't diminish it by a single puff.)

This is my second attack. It comes of the fatigue of the Baltimore trip, June 9. The first one was last August—a trip to New York on the blistering 4th.

And so you are sailing day after tomorrow. Fair weather for you! And come up & see me when you get back. / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP].

June 28 Monday

June 29 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Helen Keller.

Dear Helen: / In that booklet I courteously hinted at the long-ago well established fact that even the most gifted human being is merely an ass, & always an ass, when his forbears have furnished him an idol to worship. Reasonings cannot convert him, facts cannot influence him. I wrote the booklet for pleasure—not in the expectation of convincing anybody that Shakspeare did not write Shakspeare. And don't you write with any such expectation. Such labors are not worth the ink & the paper—except when you do them for the pleasure of it. Shakspeare the Stratford tradesman will still be the divine Shakspeare to our posterity a thousand years hence.

I am chained to Stormfield, by the doctor's orders; not to stir a rod from the premises until the cold weather comes. / With love to you / ... [MTP].

June 30 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Frederick A. Duneka who had forwarded a letter from Granville George Greenwood to Greenwood's publisher, John Lane, listing three errors Sam had made in "Is Shakespeare Dead?"

Dear Duneka: / Why, they are mere slips of the pen. Anybody but a turnip can see that. Then why correct them? To educate the turnip? Just leave them alone. Once, by a mere slip of the pen, I spoke of the "raising of Lazarus, b'Jesus." Of course I meant BY Jesus; anybody but a turnip would know that. People insulted me by wanting me to correct it. I told them in French where to go. / Yours sincerely / Mark [MTP].

The New York Times, p. 7 ran a short article which included Mark Twain in another financial failure:

EDUCATIONAL THEATRE FAILS.

Directors Petition to Dissolve Corporation Owing to Lack of Funds.

Supreme Court Justice Giegerich issued an order yesterday directing Attorney General O'Malley and Miss A.M. Herz to show cause on Aug. 9 why the Educational Theatre, at 217 East Eighteenth Street, should not be dissolved as a corporation.

The petitioners, who are also members of the Board of Directors, include Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) Robert J. Collier, Charles S. Miner, and Otto H. Kahn, say the theatre, which was incorporated under the laws of the State of New York in October, 1908, was to be supported by voluntary contributions, and the necessary funds to carry it on successfully have not been forthcoming.

July – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Charlotte Teller.

My dear Charlotte Teller— / Your news is interesting, & if I were not a prisoner I would go to New York & see you & hear all about it, but that will have to be postponed a few months. I developed the "tobacco heart" last August by an over-fatiguing trip to New York in the hot weather, & I brought on another & severer attack six weeks ago by a trip to Baltimore. Since then I am a prisoner in the house, & do no work, & see nobody, & avoid matters of interest to me. Under these restrictions I am getting along promisingly; at least durably, & fairly comfortably, for a person 74 years old & not used to being subjected to constraint. But when the cold weather comes I suppose I shall have my liberty again; then I shall go & see you & hear the details of your good news. / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Elizabeth Wallace.

Dear Betsy, it was a difficult letter to write, but you did it well. You are silent where I also ought to have been silent, & not wounded you with harsh words about your friends where you had not asked for any confidences.

To change the subject: will you come? And bring or send Mr. Salisbury? For you & he are of the sort that can entertain themselves and be entertained by the household, counting me out—mainly. I can't ask any other kind, for I went to Baltimore early in June, & the fatigue & the raw weather brought a return of what happened in August last. So I can stand but little fatigue, & am not down stairs much. I was warned to stop smoking; which I did, for two or three days, but it was too lonesome, & I have resumed—in a modified way: 4 smokes a day instead of 40. This will have a good effect. On the bank balance.

I have delayed scandalously in the matter of returning the MS, but I will have it mailed today or tomorrow sure. / Affectionately / ... [MTP].

The July issue of American Medicine included an article titled, "The Psychology of the Tobacco Habit," p. 359-72. Tenney: "Focusing on the disregard of smokers for the comfort of others, takes as one example MT (who went off with Rudyard Kipling to an isolated area), smoking while waiting for the conferring of an honorary Oxford degree (366-7). 'The psychological question is what was in the mind of Mark Twain which caused him to so forget, or disregard the etiquette of common decency as to force his habit, where he says he knew it was contrary to established custom' (366). Moreover, 'His tobacco conduct in that particular instance, is not however peculiar to him, not because of his peculiar characteristics; but, in his obdurate forcing of the tobacco habit upon defenseless Oxford, he was following the usual custom of the tobacco conduct which, apparently without so much as the suggestion of a thought of care as to the wishes of others, brazenly obtrudes upon the defenseless' (367)" [MTJ Bibliographic Issue No. 4, Spring 2004 p. 9-10].

July 1 Thursday – The Mark Twain Library Association held another lawn party to raise funds at the home of Harry A. Lounsbury. The minutes reveal "not a very large attendance, but the profit was pleasing." It is not known if Clemens attended [MTLA minutes copied by Tenney Nov. 15, 1981].

July 5 Monday – Paine writes of “happier” events:

We have invented a new game, three-ball carom billiards, each player continuing until he has made five, counting the number of his shots as in golf, the one who finishes in the fewer shots wins. It is a game we play with almost exactly equal skill, and he is highly pleased with it. He said this afternoon:

“I have never enjoyed billiards as I do now. I look forward to it every afternoon as my reward at the end of a good day’s work.”

[His work at this time was an article on Marjorie Fleming, the “wonder child,” whose quaint writings and brief little life had been published to the world by Dr. John Brown. Clemens always adored the thought of Marjorie, and in this article one can see that she ranked almost next to Joan of Arc in his affections.]

We went out in the loggia by and by and Clemens read aloud from a book which Professor Zubelin left here a few days ago—‘The Religion of a Democrat’. Something in it must have suggested to Clemens his favorite science, for presently he said:

“I have been reading an old astronomy; it speaks of the perfect line of curvature of the earth in spite of mountains and abysses, and I have imagined a man three hundred thousand miles high picking up a ball like the earth and looking at it and holding it in his hand. It would be about like a billiard-ball to him, and he would turn it over in his hand and rub it with his thumb, and where he rubbed over the mountain ranges he might say, ‘There seems to be some slight roughness here, but I can’t detect it with my eye; it seems perfectly smooth to look at.’ The Himalayas to him, the highest peak, would be one-sixty-thousandth of his height, or about the one-thousandth part of an inch as compared with the average man.”

I spoke of having somewhere read of some very tiny satellites, one as small, perhaps, as six miles in diameter, yet a genuine world.

“Could a man live on a world so small as that?” I asked.

“Oh yes,” he said. “The gravitation that holds it together would hold him on, and he would always seem upright, the same as here. His horizon would be smaller, but even if he were six feet tall he would only have one foot for each mile of that world’s diameter, so you see he would be little enough, even for a world that he could walk around in half a day.”

He talked astronomy a great deal—marvel astronomy. He had no real knowledge of the subject, and I had none of any kind, which made its ungraspable facts all the more thrilling. He was always thrown into a sort of ecstasy by the unthinkable distances of space—the supreme drama of the universe. The fact that Alpha Centauri was twenty-five trillions of miles away—two hundred and fifty thousand times the distance of our own remote sun, and that our solar system was traveling, as a whole, toward the bright star Vega, in the constellation of Lyra, at the rate of forty-four miles a second, yet would be thousands upon thousands of years reaching its destination, fairly enraptured him.

The astronomical light-year—that is to say, the distance which light travels in a year—was one of the things which he loved to contemplate; but he declared that no two authorities ever figured it alike, and that he was going to figure it for himself. I came in one morning, to find that he had covered several sheets of paper with almost interminable rows of ciphers, and with a result, to him at least, entirely satisfactory. I am quite certain that he was prouder of those figures and their enormous aggregate than if he had just completed an immortal tale; and when he added that the nearest fixed star—Alpha Centauri—was between four and five light-years distant from the earth, and that there was no possible way to think that distance in miles or even any calculable fraction of it, his glasses shone and his hair was roached up as with the stimulation of these stupendous facts.

By and by he said:

“I came in with Halley’s comet in 1835. It is coming again next year, and I expect to go out with it. It will be the greatest disappointment of my life if I don’t go out with Halley’s comet. The Almighty has said, no doubt: ‘Now here are these two unaccountable freaks; they came in together, they must go out together.’ Oh! I am looking forward to that.” And a little later he added:

“I’ve got some kind of a heart disease, and Quintard won’t tell me whether it is the kind that carries a man off in an instant or keeps him lingering along and suffering for twenty years or so. I was in hopes that Quintard would tell me that I was likely to drop dead any minute; but he didn’t. He only told me that my blood-pressure was too strong. He didn’t give me any schedule; but I expect to go with Halley’s comet” [MTB 1508-10]. Note: Charles Zubelin (b. 1866). Religion of a Democrat (1908) [Gribben 798].

Dear Marjorie—

I am very glad you are back again. I would come & see you, but the doctor does not allow me to walk so far, & I don’t drive because I don’t enjoy it. So you must come & see me. I am oldest, anyway, you know. / Lovingly S L C [MTAq 261].

July 7 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam inscribed copies of TA, TS, and HF with aphorisms to Emily G. Byng (Lady Stafford):

Whenever you find you are on the side of a majority, it is time to reform.

We ought never to do wrong when people are looking

None but the dead are permitted to speak truth [MTP].

July 8 Thursday – Mrs. Henderson wrote from Ayrshire, Scotland to ask for Sam’s autograph [MTP].

Independent ran an anonymous review of “Is Shakespeare Dead?”, p. 90. Tenney quotes: “It is ill-knowing how to take a humorist when he writes of serious subjects. Otherwise it would be natural to suppose that Mr. Clemens in his skit on Shakespeare had set out to hoist the Baconians with their own petard. At all events for the ingenuous reader he has come pretty near to reducing the Baconian theory to an absurdity. In saying the most that can be said for it, he has delivered a feeble argument with such violence as to make it seem like an exquisite parody....” [Tenney: “A Reference Guide Sixth Annual Supplement,” American Literary Realism, Spring 1982 p.11]. Note: it is interesting that even after many years of serious writing and advocating various causes, that Twain would still be regarded here, and presumably by others, as merely a “humorist.”

July 10 Saturday – Joe and Harmony Twichell finished a two-day stay at Stormfield.

July 11 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a Stormfield picture postcard to Dorothy Quick.

Dorothy dear, I’ve been intending to write this good while, but I am on the sick list & can’t very well do things. I went to Baltimore, June 8, & the journey, & the weather together broke me down. I haven’t had a well day since. Lately I keep my room almost all the time, & I don’t like the confinement much. A journey to New York last August gave me my first setback, but I soon got over that one. I shall get over this one by & by, but not right away. The old saw says “go it while you’re young”—& that is what I advise you to do, dear. / With lots of love / ... [MTP; MTAq 261].

Sam also wrote in his Lyon-Ashcroft MS for this date:

Sunday, July 11, 1909. The Twichells (Rev. J. H. & Harmony) spent yesterday & the previous day here. That made an interruption. But this letter can stand interruptions. There is no hurry about finishing it. It is my only employment; also my only diversion, except billiards—daily from 5 to 7 p.m. with Paine; for I have at last acquired a “smoker’s heart,” by 60 years’ diligent effort in that direction, & am forbidden to make journeys, or take walks, or run up stairs, or accumulate fatigue in any other way. I have to hold still, & keep quiet. Very well, I have a talent for it [MTP: L-A MS XIII]. Note: the remainder of this letter is placed on April 15 entry, as it is a description of giving Isabel Lyon notice.

July 13 Tuesday

July 14 Wednesday – Isabel Ashcroft (Lyon) returned from her honeymoon to respond to the attachment Clemens had placed on her house, “The Lobster Pot.” The New York Times, p. 4, July 15, reported on the conflict and her return. The Ashcrofts had sailed from the US on June 8.

WANTS MARK TWAIN TO EXPLAIN TO HER

Mrs. Ashcroft Hurries Back from Her Honeymoon Abroad to Find Out About $4,000 Suit.

FORMERLY HIS SECRETARY

She Thinks the Attachment on the Humorist’s Gift House is the Work of His Daughter.

Mrs. Ralph Ashcroft, who until her marriage a few weeks ago, was Miss I. N. [sic] Lyon, secretary to Mark Twain, arrived yesterday on the Cunard liner Carmania to learn why Mr. Clemens had obtained an attachment of $4,000 against the house in Redding, Conn., he gave her when she got married.

She is a demure-looking woman, but was wroth when she landed, for she had to leave her husband and cut short their honeymoon to return to America. She lays the blame for it all on Miss Clemens, daughter of the humorist, whose artistic temperament, she said, often led her in the wrong direction.

Mrs. Ashcroft was met at the pier by her mother, and after a day in New York she will beard [sic] Mark Twain in his country home, Stormfield, to learn the true inwardness of the attachment and seek an adjustment of the matter.

“Two weeks ago in London I was notified that Mr. Clemens had sworn out an attachment against the house he gave me,” said Mrs. Ashcroft. “I came home as soon as I possibly could, leaving my husband behind. I cannot think that Mr. Clemens is responsible for what has happened. He and I were the best of friends, and he has treated me almost as would a father.

“For seven years I was closely associated with him. I relieved him of every care I could, and he gave me the house, and later lent me the money with which to furnish it. This money, both understood, was to be paid back when I could do so. Knowing him as I do, I cannot believe that he attached the property.

“I believe the whole trouble is caused by his daughter. Miss Clemens is of the artistic temperament, but in this affair I believe that she has been wrongly advised into taking a step she would never have taken had she the right understanding of the case.”

Mrs. Ashcroft said she intended to take steps at once to adjust the matter. She thinks that the whole trouble must be due to some mistake. She said that no request had been made by her former employer for a return of the money. Indeed, she said, that several times she had refused suggestions from him that she consider the cost of fixing up and furnishing the house as a gift from him.

“If Miss Clemens knows all about the case, and I notice that she says she is fully informed as to her father’s affairs, she must know that every step in the restoration of the house was done not only with her father’s knowledge but with his approval,” continued Mrs. Ashcroft. “She does not exhibit a surprising knowledge of affairs when she presented her case, for in spite of what is said to the contrary, every cent that was expended for renovation I incurred a liability to pay.

“Mr. Clemens has notes amounting to nearly $1,000, which were signed by my husband when the first rough estimate was made of the cost of fitting up the place. Mr. Clemens made a written agreement with Mr. Ashcroft to accept his notes for the balance of the indebtedness outstanding upon the completion of repairs.

“The whole case will be settled, but the shame of it is that I should have been placed in an improper and false light.”

Mr. Ashcroft was formerly financial secretary to Mr. Clemens. It is said that both left the humorist’s service because of differences with Miss Clemens.

Note: other NY papers ran similar articles, including one by the NY Herald with a 7-inch photograph of Isabel, July 15, “Ashcrofts Back; Twain Drops Suit”.

Paine recorded a continuation of discussion with Clemens about philosophy:

July 14, 1909. Yesterday's dispute resumed, I still maintaining that, whereas we can think, we generally don't do it. Don't do it, & don't have to do it: we are automatic machines which act unconsciously. From morning till sleeping-time, all day long. All day long our machinery is doing things from habit & instinct, & without requiring any help or attention from our poor little 7-by-9 thinking apparatus. This reminded me of something: thirty years ago, in Hartford, the billiard-room was my study, & I wrote my letters there the first thing every morning. My table lay two points off the starboard bow of the billiard-table, & the door of exit and entrance bore northeast&-by-east-half-east from that position, consequently you could see the door across the length of the billiard-table, but you couldn't see the floor by the said table. I found I was always forgetting to ask intruders to carry my letters down-stairs for the mail, so I concluded to lay them on the floor by the door; then the intruder would have to walk over them, & that would indicate to him what they were there for. Did it? No, it didn't. He was a machine, & had habits. Habits take precedence of thought.

Now consider this: a stamped & addressed letter lying on the floor—lying aggressively & conspicuously on the floor—is an unusual spectacle; so unusual a spectacle that you would think an intruder couldn't see it there without immediately divining that it was not there by accident, but had been deliberately placed there & for a definite purpose. Very well—it may surprise you to learn that that most simple & most natural & obvious thought would never occur to any intruder on this planet, whether he be fool, half-fool, or the most brilliant of thinkers. For he is always an automatic machine & has habits, & his habits will act before his thinking apparatus can get a chance to exert its powers. My scheme failed because every human being has the habit of picking up any apparently misplaced thing & placing it where it won't be stepped on.

My first intruder was George. He went and came without saying anything. Presently I found the letters neatly piled up on the billiard-table. I was astonished. I put them on the floor again. The next intruder piled them on the billiard-table without a word. I was profoundly moved, profoundly interested. So I set the trap again. Also again, & again, & yet again—all day long. I caught every member of the family, & every servant; also I caught the three finest intellects in the town. In every instance old, time-worn automatic habit got in its work so promptly that the thinking apparatus never got a chance [MTB 1511-12].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

July 15 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally in Camp Esta-Naula East Sebago, Maine.

I can answer your question definitely, now, Francesca dear. It is heart-disease. Not the best kind, but good enough for the purpose. It is decided that I have what is technically termed a "tobacco" heart. This will move even the wise to laugh at me, for in my vanity I have often bragged that tobacco couldn't hurt me. Privately & between you & me, I am well aware that I ought to laugh at myself—& would if I were a really honest person.

However the victory over me is not much of a victory after all, for it has taken 63 years to build this disease. I was immune that long, anyway.

No, as I have said, this is not the best form of it. The best form is the one which plucks the life out of you suddenly, or by a lightning-stroke; whereas this one is slow & tedious & procrastinating, & you have to wait & wait & wait till you get run over by a freight train before you can get rid of yourself. Meantime it subjects you to many many many inconveniences. For instance, you can make no journeys, even short ones; you must spend about 20 of the 24 hours in your room—& mainly in bed; you must smoke only 4 times a day instead of 40; & finally, you must do very little work. If you neglect any one of these things, the blood-pressure increases & the pains come. It is the pains that persuade you to behave yourself—nothing else could do it. Every day when the pains come, you reform; you reform right away, & you do not misbehave again for hours & hours.

Are there any compensations? Plenty of them. As a rule the pains come only about twice a day; & the rest of the day is comfortable, & also agreeable. Idleness is my occupation; life is become a continuous holiday; a pleasant one, too, on the whole.

At West Point you were “interested in seeing all the buildings.” Buildings? That isn’t any way to spell Cadets. Go straight back to St. Timothy’s & start over again. / With lots of love / ... [MTP; MTAq 261-2].

The New York Times ran a squib datelined Redding, Conn. July 15:

MRS. ASHCROFT NOT SEEN.

Former Secretary, Whom Mark Twain is Suing, Did Not Call on Novelist.

Special to The New York Times.

REDDING, Conn., July 15.—Mrs. Ralph W. Ashcroft, a former secretary of Mark Twain, who is being sued by the author for $4,000, and who has just got back from England, where she was on her honeymoon, did not see Mark Twain today, nor has she yet come back to her home here.

Miss Clemens and Mr. Clemens’s secretary saw a TIMES reporter at Stormfield, the novelist’s home, and said that Mr. Clemens would have nothing further to say about the matter, which was in the hands of his lawyer.

July 16 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a one-liner to Eugene T. Skinkle: “Sir: YES, I done it. / M.T.” [MTP: Chicago Tribune, 24 April 1910]. Note: Skinkle published a book, Practical Ice Making and Refrigeration (1897). See July 12. Sam answered Skinkle’s questions about CS; it is noted the Chicago paper carried this but three days after his death. Jean wrote on her father’s reply: Mr. Skinkle, this answer to your question isn’t exactly voluminous but Father [illegible word] it covers the ground! Very truly yours / Jean L. Clemens”

July 17 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote three notes to unidentified persons authorizing Albert B. Paine to take the contents of Sam’s safety deposit box. The second note survives [MTP: AAA-Anderson Galleries catalog 4346, Nov. 11-12 Nov. 1937, item 89]. Note: Hill points out that Paine was made manager of Clemens’ business affairs on this day, and “had the restrictions removed from his use of unpublished material in his biography” [242]. See also July 24.

Sam also inscribed a 9”x11” head and shoulders photograph of himself: “To Charles T. Lark 17 July ’09 Mark Twain” [Alexander Autographs, Sale 38 Lot 1337 Nov. 8, 2008]. Note: Charles T. Lark with Collin, Wells & Hughes attorneys, was involved in the Ashcroft investigation and also a witness to Clemens’ will.

Sam also wrote to Lark, listing amounts for services to Ralph W. Ashcroft which he felt were due him:

Mr. Lark, I have examined the synopsized account of the Ashcroft claims which appears in your letter to Mr. Paine. It is but right and proper that I should offset it with some counter claims.

Apparently Ashcroft charges for his services in two ways, according to convenience: sometimes by the day ($10), sometimes by the piece.

Due to Me.

For a letter to Lord Northcliffe, proprietor of the London Times, strongly recommending Ashcroft and vouching for him - - - - $1,000

For introducing him to Sir Thomas Lipton - - - - 3,000

For getting him acquainted with the Lord Mayors of London and Liverpool, many M. P.s, and many London journalists - - - 500

But for me he could not have gotten access to these prominent and useful men.

Commission for acquiring a subscription of $12,000 from myself for his hairpin companies, upon his representation that it was a Good Thing - - - - $2,400

For beguiling Mr. Stanchfield to sink $6,000 in those things 1,200 Debtor to me in $2,500 for 50 shs of Milk Product stock bought for me without my privity or consent 2,500

For entertaining him under my roof in New York in Stormfield an average of twice per week during 8 months per year for two years, at $10 per day 1,200

For concealing from Lipton and the courts and newspapers what in Norfolk, Va., last April, he cheated me out of some money, by fraudulently using another man's name, and by various falsehoods 5,000

For concealing from the press and the criminal courts that his wife, last spring, embezzled an heirloom greatly valued by my family, and was not able to get away from the fact 5,000

Charging by the piece, and arranging one's own terms without previous arrangement with the other party, is a system which is acceptable to me.

Memoranda.

[L-A MS]. Note: the "Memoranda" suggests this letter was not sent, or one was prepared from this list.

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, "Ashcroft Turned out of the Lobster Pot," which was the house Clemens gave to Isabel Lyon. Hill gives particulars on p. 234, but Jean Clemens accompanied attorney Charles T. Lark to Summerfield (the Lobster Pot) to confront Isabel Lyon Ashcroft:

On Saturday, July seventeenth, I accompanied Mr. Lark when he went down to "Summerfield" between 10.30 and 11 o'clock a.m. He wished to see Mrs. Ashcroft, but we were met at the door by Mrs. Lyon, her mother, and told that Mrs. A. was ill and consequently unable to see us. When Mr. Lark asked whether there was any likelihood of his seeing Mrs. Ashcroft in the afternoon, her mother answered that there might be and that she would let him know by telephone.

We had hardly reached "Stormfield" when that message was sent, that Mrs. Ashcroft would see Mr. Lark between two and half past. At the same time, the request was made that he go alone, which he was unwilling to grant, as he wished me to be there as witness of everything that was said and done.

Immediately after lunch, we again drove down to "Summerfield." This time we were admitted, Mrs. Lyon being dressed, now, in a black satin or satin waist and black stuff skirt.

Mrs. Lyon said she would call her daughter, but I had not as yet seated myself on the sofa, beside Mr. Lark, when she entered at the other end of the room which runs lengthwise across the width of the house.

Mrs. Ashcroft was very simply dressed in a white waist, skirt and belt. She wore no ornaments of any kind; merely her wedding- and a seal-ring. Mrs. Ashcroft didn't speak to me. She bowed as she came in, looking at Mr. Lark, while I merely pronounced her name, as I seated myself.

Mrs. Lyon sat down in large arm-chair nearly opposite Mr. Lark, only a few feet away, while Mrs. Ashcroft seated herself in a very small chair a little at my left, so that I was between her and Mr. Lark.

For several moments nothing was said. Then Mr. Lark began by saying that as we had read in the papers that Mrs. Ashcroft had returned from Europe in order to settle the difficulty with Mr. Clemens and was going to Redding for that purpose, it had been considered best for him (Mr. L.) to go down and see her, since she had not appeared at "Stormfield". Mrs. Lyon broke in, there, and begged Mr. Lark to treat her daughter like a lady, whereupon Mrs. Ashcroft pretty shortly asked her mother to keep still and not interfere, while Mr. Lark answered that he had no intention of treating her otherwise than as a lady. Then he suggested, that, as some of the things he had to say would be trying for her to hear, perhaps Mrs. Lyon would prefer to withdraw. No attention was paid to the suggestion, so he continued with the matter in hand.

For some time Mrs. A. pretended ignorance of what the attachment was made for. Then, when she saw that it was useless to deny her knowledge of the cause, she tried to make out that she had been allowed to see no check-books and been unable to prepare any statement whatsoever. Mr. Lark told her that she and Mr. Ashcroft, together, had made a statement of the cost of putting her house in order and that that statement was absolutely incorrect. Mrs. A. then said that if she could have the bills she would prove that the amount stated as above her estimate, was incorrect. Mr. Lark asked by whom most of the work had been done, after telling her that in one instance, when the work on "Stormfield" had amounted to $61.00 and that at "Summerfield" to over $450.— she had paid the whole with one check and written on the stub "for "Stormfield." Mrs. A. said that the only people who had worked for both places, were Adams, the carpenter Lounsbury (Jack of all Trades) and Hull, the plumber and that their work had all amounted to very little. To that Mr. Lark answered that it was Hull's bill of over $400.00 which she had put down as work down at "Stormfield." That silenced her for a moment and she changed her tack, trying to look Mr. Lark out of countenance with a long, pathetic, absolutely unwinking gaze. She failed, of course, and wearily said she "was very sorry," if she had done wrong. In the course of the conversation, Mrs. Ashcroft said, in answer to the accusation that she had drawn checks to pay for the repairs on her house with Father's money, as far back as the summer spent in Tuxedo (1907), that Father had told her to do so. Mr. Lark said Father had no recollection of giving her permission to borrow of him until the summer of 1908, when she had said she would have to mortgage her place, in order to pay for the repairs.

Mr. Lark finally stated that if she Mrs. Ashcroft would deed back the property, he believed Father would drop his suit. That is to say, if she deeded the property and paid the mortgage, which, after what she had once said, she had no right to do. Then he went on to explain that when Father had given her the property, she had suggested that it be only a life possession for herself & her mother, reverting to Clara & me upon their death, which Father had not considered necessary but had not declined. That clause was not in the deed, however, but that Mrs. Ashcroft had said she would never sell the place, whereas in mortgaging it, she had already practically sold it. She answered that there was no paper showing that she mustn't sell the place, to which Mr. Lark acceded but said she had broken her word in the matter.

Then he drew attention to the amazing checks drawn for "house money" which had amounted to $4000 [inserted by SLC: ($7,000?)] which we had not succeeded in explaining as no such amount had been used before. The servants were almost invariably paid by check and so were all bills of any consequence. Mr. Lark went on to say that if she deeded the property & paid the $1500 mortgage, Father would still be the loser of about $3000 but that, to put in bluntly, what he most wanted, was to get her out of the neighborhood. At intervals, Mrs. Ashcroft said she couldn't give up her home, that she would raise the money to pay everything back with, that she had borrowed from Father with the understanding that she was to pay when she was able to, that she was very sorry, must think a while, first, was unable to do so, must talk it over with her mother, must see her lawyer before deciding.

Mr. Lark asked Mrs. Ashcroft if she was supporting her mother in part of 1907 & '08 to which she answered that she was, in the winter, that during the summer of 1907 her mother had lived with her sister, (Mrs. Ashcroft's) in Hartford. When Mr. Lark drew attention to the fact that Mrs. Lyon's board would use up the greater part of Miss Lyon's salary of fifty dollars per month, they both answered that the board had never exceeded eight and a half dollars per week. After which he remarked that that left Miss Lyon fifteen dollars to dress on, to which she responded that Father had given her permission to buy such clothing as she needed, because she had several times declined a higher salary. I told Mr. Lark that that permission had not been given in New York but here, last winter.

In reference to the large amount of house money drawn, Mrs. Ashcroft made a feeble effort to make out that she had used a large amount of it in paying for the furnishings of "Stormfield," which had to be paid for in cash, at Macy's. She volunteered that she could explain the excess, if only she were allowed to see the books and also, that she never had a bank account that amounted to anything. Mr. Lark caught her at once on the furnishing statement & showed her the item in the accountant's record of her checks, where she had paid for the furnishing. A little later, he caught her again. When speaking of the mortgage, she said she could pay it all, as she hadn't touched it since she had deposited it. When asked how it happened that she had just said she hadn't an account, she explained that she had placed the mortgage-money in the Liberty Bank, whereas her other small account was at the Lincoln.

Mr. Lark explained that Father was making this offer of settling the matter out of court, because Mrs. Ashcroft was a woman, that if the trouble had been with a man he wouldn't have thought of it and that he, personally, believed him far more generous than he would be in similar conditions. He also said that as the matter remained unsettled, Father was growing more and more angry about it, realizing, as he did, the ingratitude of her conduct, after being treated practically as a member of the family for nearly seven years, and that he was also feeling that he was not doing his duty as a citizen. He went on to say that if Mrs. Ashcroft felt unwilling to accept the proposition now made, that the complaint had been made out by the Grand Juror of the district and would be handed in. When she didn't understand what that meant, he explained that the complaint would be given to the prosecuting attorney of this county. Mrs. Lyon showed that she knew what that meant, but either Mrs. Ashcroft didn't fully grasp the idea, or she controlled herself admirably.

Once Mrs. Ashcroft seemed on the point of breaking down, whereupon her mother went & soothed her for a few moments.

Mrs. Lyon asked just what would be included in the deed, whether any of the furniture, or not, to which Mr. Lark responded that it meant merely the house, barn and land, which were the same, except for the water improvements, for which Father had paid, as when he gave them.

Mrs. Ashcroft repeated that she was very sorry, at least four times and twice that she would raise the money to pay everything back with, once before, and one after, she had told Mr. Lark to do as he chose, that she and her mother "had each other" and were satisfied with that.

When Mrs. Ashcroft wanted to see her lawyer before deciding & then go in New York to see Mr. Stanchfield, Mr. Lark suggested that that might not be desired, because in doing so, she would be out of the jurisdiction of the state.

Finally, at 3.35 P.M. Mrs. Ashcroft gave in and Mr. Lark said he would return with the deed, for signature, Monday morning, July nineteenth, as we were leaving, they both very nearly had hysterics and as it was, were weeping in each other's arms. Once, after saying she was sorry, Mrs. Ashcroft called on her mother to back up her statement that she had never drawn up any checks falsely, saying: "You know I wouldn't do such a thing, don't you, Mother?," to which Mrs. Lyon of course answered: "No, dear, of course you wouldn't." To which Mr. Lark said: "Mrs. Lyon, you were not the a witness on those occasions, the checks are the witnesses of that fact."

After we reached "Stormfield," it was found that the deed could be obtained from Mr. Nickerson at once, thus saving Mr. Lark the trip on Monday.

So once more I went down to "Summerfield," this time on foot, accompanied by Mr. G. M. Acklom. We were met at their entrance, at 6.15 P.M.. Mr. Acklom remained with the horse, while Mr. Nickerson, Mr. Lark & I went in. We found the ladies quieted down somewhat, but ready to break down.

While Mr. Nickerson read the deed aloud to Mrs. Ashcroft, in the small back parlor, Mr. Lark & I remained in the large room, while Mrs. Lyon did the same, sitting with her back to us, looking out of the window opening down the hill. When the reading was over, Mrs. Ashcroft showed no unwillingness to sign it, or to draw the mortgage-check, although she was very nervous, indeed. She wasn't sure of the date & for a moment, seemed uncertain how to draw the check. Mrs. Lyon once more asked about the furniture, saying she had brought a lot of it from Farmington. She was again told the furniture would not be taken and then, when they asked how soon they must move out, tearfully remarking that they had nowhere to go to, as the Farmington house was let, Mr. Lark first said they could remain until Sept. 15th, which was the date Mrs. Lyon asked for, but after we stepped outside, I reminded him that Sept. 15, gave them two days of two months and that Sept. 1st seemed sufficient to me, so he stepped back and told them that after all, six weeks ought really to suffice them in finding a place to move to.

When Mr. Nickerson handed Mrs. Ashcroft the dollar bill, necessary, to make such a proceeding legal, she tore it in half, half screaming and exclaiming that she would not take it. So Mr. Nickerson carefully picked the two pieces up and put them in his wallet.

Just before leaving, Mr. Lark told Mrs. Ashcroft that he thought Father now release the lien on their her Farmington house.

Soon after we reached "Stormfield," Mrs. Lyon again telephoned, asking whether they must still live in daily dread of further trouble. In answering her, Mr. Lark said he was pretty sure that Father would bring no other suit, but that that was of course for him to decide.

July 18 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Clara:

Clärchen dear Jean is a surprise & a wonder. She has plenty of wisdom, judgment, penetration, practical good sense—like her mother—& character, courage, definiteness, decision; also goodness, a humane spirit, charity, kindness, pity; industry, perseverance, intelligence, a clean mind, a clean soul, dignity, honesty, truthfulness, high ideals, loyalty, faithfulness to duty—she is everything that Miss Lyon isn't.

She went twice with the lawyer, & saw Miss Lyon stretched upon the rack. It was necessary. There had to be a witness, or Miss Lyon would deny on a Sunday what she confessed on a Saturday, & there wasn't another witness to be had but Paine or me—& of course neither of us would do.

Oh, the irony of it! that reptile Lyon mistress of our house these several years & Jean barred out of it & as being an impossible!

Jean has had great pleasure in Mr. Acklom's visit. He is 45 years old, I should say, & is the good kind of Englishman. You may remember his excellent father and mother, at Agra—at Colonel Loch's house, the Residency; & they were with us as far as Ajmere.

God will punish Paine. I know it. Because he is so intemperately glad over yesterday's tragedy.

I send my love, & I hope you and Gabrilowitsch will pay us a call soon.

Dear Mr. Pape, / By command of physicians, I am not to stir outside the limits of this farm for the next half year to come. Otherwise I would be there on the 4th of August and do my share in welcoming the President.

Jean sends cordial greetings to you and Mrs Pape... / Sincerely yours, / SL. Sam was declining all invitations due to his heart condition. Eric L. Charles T. Lark for Collin, Wells & Hughes wrote to Sam.

Dear Mr. Clemens:— / At ten o'clock this morning I went to the Liberty National Bank, had the Ashcroft check for $1,500 certified, and am enclosing herewith duplicate slip showing that the same was deposited to your account.

I had a very satisfactory talk with Mr. Freeman and found that the only cancelled checks which he had on hand were Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, all signed by you personally on May 24th, June 4th, July 1st and July 6th, 1909 for $1,000, $2,000, $1,000 and $2,500 respectively. A transcript of the account shows that there were no funds checked out of your account in this bank during the month of April, and only one check after April other than those above specified, and that was on May 1st for $1,000.

I also called to see the officials of the Lincoln National Bank this afternoon, and of a large number of cancelled checks which they have I found but one was signed "S. L. Clemens per I. V. Lyon, Secy". This check was No. 3299 dated March 6th, 1909, drawn in favor of Guiseppe Cherubim for the sum of $75.

In case Mrs. Ashcroft or Mrs. Lyon should by any chance see you or should telephone, please remember not to promise immunity in consideration of the re-deeding of the property ["Lobster Pot"] and the payment of the $1,500 above mentioned, but simply tell them as I told them at the time of our interview, that any further action on your part with reference to the accounts must be left wholly to your discretion, without promise of any forbearance whatsoever. You understand we must not place ourselves in the position of in any way compromising any criminal action which we might be called upon to take.

Thanking you for your many courtesies...[MTP].

July 20 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Charles T. Lark, had decided he needed Isabel Lyon's signature on a lease agreement which would legalize the Sept. 1 date for her to leave. This time accompanied by Clara Clemens, he returned to the Lobster Pot to secure Lyon's signature. Clara wrote an account of the meeting:

CLARA'S NARRATIVE.

[in Clara L. Clemens's hand:]

On Thursday the 20th of July Mr. Lark came out to Redding with the intention of presenting a lease to Mrs. Ashcroft which would permit her and her mother to remain in the house 'till the first of September; they had asked for this permission in the interview on the preceding Saturday at which my sister was present.

Mr. Lark was obliged to wait while Mr. Nickerson prepared the lease which required nearly two hours and then desiring a witness Mr. Lark asked me to accompany him to Mrs. Ashcroft's house. Mr. Lounsbury also went with us but on arriving there we were first asked by Wells, their man, to wait a moment and were then met by Mrs. Lyon instead of Mrs. Ashcroft.

Mrs. Lyon came onto the porch by the kitchen door with the announcement that Miss Lyon was ill in bed. Never having known Mrs. Lyon except as a calm reserved woman it was a surprise to see her attack Mr. Lark in great excitement and anger. Her face was flushed and she gesticulated nervously as she addressed him in a loud tone of voice:

"You took an unfair advantage of us last Saturday and did not keep your word for you promised us to go away and bring back the deed in two or three days but instead of that you came back with it the same day and therefore it is not legal. My daughter does not even know what she signed and we are both of us crazy; you intimidated her into giving her signature by threatening to arrest her if she didn't—and you never would have dared to do such a thing if there had been a man in the house"—by this time she was fairly screaming and although Mr. Lark attempted to interrupt her and deny her statement that he had threatened her daughter with arrest on the previous Saturday she would not listen to him but continued to talk in a stream of words expressing resentment and rage.

Mrs. Lyon had not once looked at me, nevertheless at this point I turned to her and said—

"Mrs. Lyon, I don't see why it should ever have been necessary for us to ask your daughter to return this property, why wasn't she eager to do it of her own accord?"

It was evident now by her reply that up to this moment she had merely been reciting a part which had been taught her either by her daughter or her daughter's attorney for when she answered my question it was with a burst of genuine feeling that could no longer be suppressed by legal advice. "Do you think I want to stay here another day, do you think I want this horrible land or house or anything remotely connected with the Clemens family? No—no—no. We're packing to get out as fast as we can"—

"Very good then Mrs. Lyon—I interrupted—that is all that your daughter signed last Saturday, she merely returned what you do not want yourselves & what we have no use for as property but what we do want because of the circumstances which make your daughter's presence so unpleasant." To this Miss Lyon made no direct reply but half sobbing exclaimed "if you had any pity any pity"

"I have great pity for you Mrs. Lyon I answered but none whatever for your daughter—"

She wailed on "I have never had one happy day in this house not one" and here Mr. Lark ventured an unfortunate small remark which threw Mrs. Lyon into hysterics. He said: "I know how unhappy you must have been for your daughter treated you so horribly."

"My daughter treated me horribly? she screamed rushing up to Mr. Lark, how dare you say such a thing? She has always been good to me, how dare you, how dare you?"

Mr. Lark and I tried to appease her and persuaded her to sit down on a bench at the back of the porch; the others then having withdrawn a little, Mrs. Lyon still weeping began to talk with me somewhat more quietly. "How could you accuse her of such things after her seven years' of devotion to your family, she lived for you all and worked so hard in your interest"—

"That was what we believed I said and we appreciated it and for that reason my father gave her this place & lent her money for the repairs—"

"She worked so very hard, Mrs. Lyon continued—looking after the servants and the household"

"And Mrs. Lyon that is why we offered to get a housekeeper which she refused—or two raise her salary which she refused. We tried to make her feel that she was one of us and when she did not wish to accept a higher salary for her increased services I told her to at least buy herself dresses now and then which she was willing to do. But I can't talk about all this with you Mrs. Lyon, there are so many things that are impossible to say to you about your own daughter."

"But what is it all anyway asked Mrs. Lyon, we haven't any money we haven't a bit—"

"You haven't any—no" I replied

"Nor has Isabel"—she said

"No I suppose not"—I replied

"Well then who do you think has it, Mr. Ashcroft?" she asked.

"It does not matter who has it Mrs. Lyon for it is not the money we want, it's merely this house and land and that you have relinquished." She was still sobbing and moaning all the time she talked. "Why did your father give power of attorney to my daughter and then deny it afterwards?" "He denied, I replied, having seen the extraordinary paper by which Miss Lyon could possess herself "of everything and ruin us if she chose."

"But she didn't use it" Mrs. Lyon said.

"No, Mrs. Lyon she hadn't yet and I do not believe that your daughter did all these things by herself. Of course she was influenced by it was a terrible thing for her to be influenced when she held that powerful and trusted position."

"Yes—yes—Mrs. Lyon muttered as if dazed by it all, and then repeated the remark she had made earlier about her faithful devotion to us.

"I used to think so, I answered until I heard from various sides in N.Y. that she was telling lies about me and betraying my confidences—she changed very much in the past two years."

"Yes she has changed, Mrs. Lyon admitted, but she has been very ill for some time; and then why did you not answer the letter she sent your father asking whether it would be all right for her to go to England instead of waiting 'till she got over there and then shaming her by attacking her property and letting it all come out in the newspapers?"

"My father never received any such letter,[" I answered ["and besides Mr. Stanchfield telephoned to Mr. Ashcroft in N.Y. and told him not to go to England as he need him & Mrs. Ashcroft here. The whole thing got into the papers through the Bridgeport notary and not through us for certainly we did not care for this newspaper talk"—then feeling somewhat irritated that I should be filling the position of the accused called upon to account for my actions I broke out rather vehemently and said

"Mrs. Lyon your daughter is guilty—guilty"

"Guilty of what?" she asked at these words she rose with a gesture that made me draw back but rushing past me she appealed to Mr. Lounsbury & Wells who were standing a few steps away from the porch out on the grass, repeating over & over again at the top of her lungs

"Do you hear what Miss Clemens says? She says my daughter has been guilty of stealing—of stealing." Her screams were heard up at my father's house some distance away. [inserted in SLC's hand: (Half a mile, or nearly that.)]

I regretted my remark and once more we all had to make an effort to quiet her begging her to think no more of any of it but she was half crazy with unhappiness and reiterated many times that she had never been in such a position before and could not live through the disgrace of it. Finally she turned to me & said: "Why didn't you come and settle it all with us instead of going to law about it and ruining our name for life?"

["I might have gone to you,"] I replied ["but what good would it have done to go to your daughter? Didn't she live for weeks in the same house with me after she knew that there was something the matter without offering to make any explanation of any kind? We lunched and dined together daily after she knew that she was suspected but she remained silent. There never would have been all this trouble anyway if she had simply left our vicinity instead of insisting upon staying here."

“But she has done nothing wrong, Mrs. Lyon continued, she couldn't. Yet think what we have got to face. All her friends ask her why she does not refute the accusations but of what use is it for her to refute them, your father is the only one who can do that, oh! I have always believed in my God in Heaven. I had faith in my Redeemer, but what trouble I have had and still have.” She had such a tragic expression in her face that one or two tears dropped from my eyes onto her dress and when she saw them she drew me down with one arm about my neck and poured forth a fresh appeal for her daughter’s name “Please say in the paper that she never did anything that wasn’t perfectly honorable and straight”—

I glanced at Mr. Lark and then said “Would you like us to say that she has made restitution and that her accounts had gotten mixed because of overwork?”

At first Mrs. Lyon said yes but then concluded it was better to say nothing more. She seemed suddenly to be almost prostrated and kept exclaiming “I feel so sick, so sick”—so we helped her into the house and got her onto the sofa.

When I leaned over to say goodbye she said in a low tone “you nearly killed her when you suspected her of taking things that time in the garret when Dorothea Gilder was there—”

I replied that I had only asked her about some beads which had been in an old cabinet for years & were now missing. “Well didn’t you find them?” she asked. “Yes, I answered, but not in the same place.”

Then Mrs. Lyon in the midst of sobs drew me down still nearer and whispered in my ear “if she ever did anything wrong it was because she was ill.”

Mr. Lark then suggested our going & we left her in the care of Wells [MTP: L-A MS XXI]. Note: paragraphing and other minor TS errors corrected. See also Hill, 234-6, which includes a detailed account of the audit performed by John Stanchfield’s accountant, Mr. Weiss.

August 4 Wednesday –The New York Times, p.1 continued to report on the conflict between Mark Twain and his former secretary:

ASHCROFT ACCUSES MISS CLARA CLEMENS

Says Mark Twain's Daughter Made Charges
Because She Was Jealous of Her Success.

QUOTES HUMORIST'S LETTER

In It He Praised His Secretary and Rebuked
Daughter for Complaints—No Diversion of Funds.

Ralph W. Ashcroft, manager of the Mark Twain Company at 24 Stone Street, whose wife, for years before her marriage was private secretary to Mr. Clemens, was sued by the humorist to recover $4,000, gave out a statement yesterday in which he warmly defends his wife against insinuations that she misused Mr. Clemens's money.

Mr. Ashcroft, in his statement, accuses Miss Clara Clemens, daughter of the humorist, of having been envious of Miss Lyon's achievements as secretary to her father. Miss Clemens, he says, wanted to have Miss Lyon removed from her place.

Mr. Ashcroft declares that it was without the knowledge of the humorist's New York lawyers that the cottage at Redding, Conn., adjoining the Clemens estate, which he gave to Miss Lyon, was attached in his recent suit. He gives excerpts from the author's letters to indicate the high opinion he once had of Miss Lyon. This is the statement:

"Since my return from Europe, a week ago, I have thoroughly investigated the occurrences connected with quarrels forced on Mrs. Ashcroft by Mark Twain's daughters, and have heard what both sides have to say in the matter.

"To understand the matter in its true light, it is necessary to hark back to the Summer of 1904, when Mrs. Clemens died in Italy. Mrs. Ashcroft (then Miss Lyon) was Mark Twain's secretary. When his wife died, Mark Twain was like a ship without a rudder, and, as Henry H. Rogers said to me a few days before he died: 'At that crisis in his life, Clemens needed just such a person as Miss Lyon to look after him and his affairs, and Miss Lyon came to the front and has stayed at the front all these years and no one has any right to criticize her.'" Daughters Jealous of Miss Lyon.

"For two years or more after their mother's death, both girls were in sanatoria most of the time, and the younger daughter has been under the care of nerve specialists ever since. Under these circumstances, Miss Lyon naturally became Mr. Clemens's hostess and person of affairs and how well she fulfilled the position is known to all who met her in those capacities. Both daughters, however, became jealous of her, were afraid that Mark Twain would marry her, and often endeavored to destroy his confidence in her. She probably would have been supplanted two or three years ago, but the elder daughter had musical and other ambitions, and thought more of them than of taking care of her old father and filling her mother's place.

"One's vocal ambitions, however, sometimes exceed one's capabilities in that direction, and the bitter realization of this has, in this instance, caused the baiting of a woman who has earned and kept the admiration and respect of all of Mark Twain's friends. Mark Twain well has said of her: 'I know her better than I have known any one on this planet, except Mrs. Clemens.' When one of his daughters made an attack on her about two years ago, he wrote this:

I have to have somebody in whom I have confidence to attend to every detail of my daily affairs for me except my literary work. I attend to not one of them myself; I give the instructions and see that they are obeyed. I give Miss Lyon instructions—she does nothing of her own initiative. When you blame her, you are merely blaming me—she is not open to criticism in the matter. When I find that you are not happy in that place, I instruct her to ask Dr. Peterson and Hunt to provide change for you, and she obeys the instructions. In her own case I provide no change, for she does all my matters well, and although they are often delicate and difficult, she makes no enemies, either for herself or me. I am not acquainted with another human being of who this could be said.

It would not be possible for any other person to see reporters and strangers every day, refuse their requests, and yet send them away good and permanent friends to me and herself—but I should make enemies of many of them if I tried to talk with them. The servants in the house are her friend, they all have confidence in her, and not many people can win and keep a servant's friendship and esteem— one of your mother's highest talents. All Tuxedo likes Miss Lyon—the hackmen, the aristocrats and all. She has failed to secure your confidence and esteem, and I am sorry. I wish it were otherwise, but it is no argument since she has not failed in any other person's case. One failure to fifteen hundred successes means that the fault is not with her.

The Expense Accounts Explained.

"The only person, so far as I know, who has charged Mrs. Ashcroft with dishonesty is Clara Clemens. Mark Twain has not and his lawyers have not. As is the custom in all large households, so it was in the Clemens household—money was drawn from the bank in cash to pay the thousand-and-one debts and expenses that it is not convenient to pay by check. When Mark Twain placed all of his financial responsibilities on Miss Lyon's shoulders (in addition to her other manifold duties) he did not tell her to employ a bookkeeper to keep a set of books, and she simply followed the custom that had been in vogue under Mr. Clemens's regime, to wit: no books of account were kept (other than the check book) and no itemized or other record was kept of cash expenditures. Miss Lyon was never asked to keep any such record, and did not do so.

"Clara Clemens now insinuates that Miss Lyon embezzled a large part of the money she drew from the bank in cash. Fortunately Miss Lyon is in a position to prove that the bulk of the money was paid to Clara Clemens herself for the expenses of concert tours and the delightful experience of paying for the hire of concert halls destined to be mainly filled with 'snow' or 'paper,' for the maintenance of her accompanist, Charles E. Wark, and to defray other cash expenditures that an embryonic Tetrezzini is naturally called upon to make. Returning home one day from an unsuccessful and disheartening tour Clara Clemens simply couldn't stomach the sight of Miss Lyon's successful administration of her father's affairs. So it became a case of 'get rid of her by hook or crook' and she endeavored to enlist my sympathies and services along these lines, with the result that—well, I married Miss Lyon.

"Mr. Clemens's New York lawyers now state that Mrs. Ashcroft's cottage was attached without their knowledge or advice. They also now state that they did not know that Mr. Clemens and I had made an agreement regarding the money he advanced for the rehabilitation for the cottage, which agreement makes his suit against Mrs. Ashcroft for this indebtedness absolutely groundless and farcical, in that no one can sue for a debt which has been partially paid and the balance of which is not due.

"The agreement is as follows:

Redding, Conn., March 13, 1909. Received from R. W. Ashcroft his notes for the sum of $982.47, being estimated balance due on money advance to Isabel V. Lyon for the renovation of "The Lobster Pot," this receipt being given on the understanding that said Ashcroft will pay in like manner any further amounts that his examination of my disbursements for the fiscal year ending Feb. 23, 1909, shows were advanced for like purposes.

S. L. CLEMENS. (Seal.)

I agree to the above and to make said examination as promptly as my other duties will permit.

R. W. ASHCROFT. (Seal.)

An Amicable Settlement.

"The matter has been settled amicably as far as Mark Twain, Mrs. Ashcroft, and I are concerned, and the adjustment will be consummated as soon as the proper papers can be drawn up, although it may be necessary for Mrs. Ashcroft to commence suit against Mark Twain to set aside the deed transferring the cottage to him, simply to protect her legal rights for the time being; as, while we believe that Mark Twain and his lawyer, John B. Stanchfield, will abide by their promises, still there is always the contingency of the death of either or both to be provided against. If Mr. Rogers had not died so suddenly and unexpectedly the affair would have been settled long ago without any publicity. It is an unfortunate occurrence all around. I am still manager of the Mark Twain Company, and shall so remain for the present. My contract has nearly two years to run."

Efforts to talk with Mr. Clemens at his home in Redding last night were futile. A TIMES reporter called up the humorist's home on the telephone, was informed that he had retired, and that, under no circumstances, would any word of Mr. Ashcroft's statement be conveyed to him. It was stated that Miss Clemens was at home, but that she, too, had retired, and that no communication would be taken to her until morning. It was also found impossible to reach John B. Stanchfield, Mr. Clemens's lawyer.

August 5 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to John Brown, Jr. ("Jock") in Edinburgh, Scotland.

Dear Mr. "Jock:" / Don't you think you can find for me, among your father's papers, a fugitive scrap of that dear little Marjorie's penmanship? If you can, I will take good care of it & return it to you as soon as the engraver is done with it.

I suppose I am asking the impossible; still, I will hope, anyway. Thirty-six years ago your father gave Mrs. Clemens a copy of his Marjorie, in the parlor of Veitch's hotel in George street, & read passages to us—about the multiplication, & the terrific name Marjorie called "John," &c., &c. I remember it so clearly, so vividly! / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP].

Paine writes of an exchange with Clemens on this day:

August 5, 1909. This morning I noticed on a chair a copy of Flaubert's Salammbô which I recently lent him. I asked if he liked it.

"No," he said, "I didn't like any of it."

"But you read it?"

"Yes, I read every line of it."

"You admitted its literary art?"

"Well, it's like this: If I should go to the Chicago stockyards and they should kill a beef and cut it up and the blood should splash all over everything, and then they should take me to another pen and kill another beef and the blood should splash over everything again, and so on to pen after pen, I should care for it about as much as I do for that book."

"But those were bloody days, and you care very much for that period in history."

"Yes, that is so. But when I read Tacitus and know that I am reading history I can accept it as such and supply the imaginary details and enjoy it, but this thing is such a continuous procession of blood and slaughter and stench it worries me. It has great art—I can see that. That scene of the crucified lions and the death canon and the tent scene are marvelous, but I wouldn't read that book again without a salary" [MTB 1516].

Royal P. Jarvis wrote from NYC to "express my keen enjoyment from reading over a number of times your latest "Is Shakespeare Dead?" As a teenager he'd read an article in the NAR by Ignatius Donnelly and had ever since been a doubter [MTP].

Dear Sir: / My view of the matter has not changed. To-wit, that Christian Science is valuable; that is has just the same value now that it had when Mrs. Eddy stole it from Quimby; that its healing principle (its most valuable asset) possesses the same force now that it possessed a million years before Quimby was born; that Mrs. Eddy the fraud, the humbug, organized that force & is entitled to high credit for that. Then, with a splendid sagacity she hitched it to the shirt-tail of a religion—the surest of all ways to secure friends for it, & support. She has no more intellect than a tadpole—until it comes to business—then she is a marvel!

Am I sorry I wrote the book? Most certainly not. You say you have 500 in Glasgow. Fifty years from now, your posterity will not count them by the hundred but by the thousand. I feel absolutely sure of this. / Very Truly Yours / ... [MTP].

August 10 Tuesday – The New York Times, p.7, noted the end of one of Mark Twain’s passions:

END OF CHILDREN’S THEATRE.

East Side Playhouse Dissolved Because of Lack of Funds.

Supreme Court Justice Goff yesterday granted the motion for the dissolution of the Educational Theatre for Children at Jefferson Street and East Broadway, which was opened in 1907 in connection with the Educational Alliance. The President of the Board of Managers was Samuel L. Clemens (“Mark Twain”) and among the members of the Board of Directors were Robert J. Collier, the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, and President [G.] Stanley Hall of Clark University.

It was expected to carry the enterprise along on voluntary contributions, but they were not forthcoming, and the matter of dissolution came up some weeks ago. There was no opposition to the decision of the Court yesterday.

On November of last year Mr. Clemens took several hundred of his friends to the theatre where they witnessed a performance of "The Prince and the Pauper," a dramatization of his story. It is said that of late Mr. Collier has contributed most of the funds toward maintaining the theatre.

Sam also wrote to Aage Toxen Worm.

A. Toxen-Worm, Esq— / Dear Sir: If the Herald is not acquainted with Blix's name & fame (which I doubt), his pictures would be a better introduction than anybody's words could furnish, I think. I think his Mona Lisa would be a sufficient introduction, all by itself. I possess the original, & it is a daily delight to me. It is a caricature, & yet it is the Mona her very self, so slight, so delicate & so unobtrusive in the holy smirk which Blix has insinuated into that reverend old graveyard face. It is very dear to me, because to me it is Mother Eddy, our own Mother Eddy when she has been doing the human race & is enjoying the memory of it all alone in private by herself. It may be that this caricature has its match in the world somewhere, but I will doubt until somebody points it out to me. / Very truly yours / ... [MTP]. Note: Aage Toxen Worm (1866-1922), born in Denmark as Conrad Henrik Aage Toxen Worm was a well known theatrical press agent, who for the last years of his life was associated with Shubert Theatrical Enterprises, New York.

August 13 Friday – Edward Eugene Loomis for the Delaware, Lackawanna Railroad wrote to Sam.

"I return herewith the 300 shares of Plasmon Milk Products Company stock you left with me sometime since, also correct Power of Attorney I have just succeeded in getting, authorizing me to sign for the other shares of the stock of this company that are due you" [MTP].

August 16 Monday – Paine writes of Sam's reading and of events in the evening:

August 16. He is reading Suetonius, which he already knows by heart — so full of the cruelties and licentiousness of imperial Rome.

This afternoon he began talking about Claudius.

"They called Claudius a lunatic," he said, "but just see what nice fancies he had. He would go to the arena between times and have captives and wild beasts brought out and turned in together for his special enjoyment. Sometimes when there were no captives on hand he would say, 'Well, never mind; bring out a carpenter.' Carpentering around the arena wasn't a popular job in those days. He went visiting once to a province and thought it would be pleasant to see how they disposed of criminals and captives in their crude, old-fashioned way, but there was no executioner on hand. No matter; the Emperor of Rome was in no hurry — he would wait. So he sat down and stayed there until an executioner came."

I said, “How do you account for the changed attitude toward these things? We are filled with pity to-day at the thought of torture and suffering.”

“Ah! but that is because we have drifted that way and exercised the quality of compassion. Relax a muscle and it soon loses its vigor; relax that quality and in two generations—in one generation—we should be gloating over the spectacle of blood and torture just the same. Why, I read somewhere a letter written just before the Lisbon catastrophe in 1755 about a scene on the public square of Lisbon: A lot of stakes with the fagots piled for burning and heretics chained for burning. The square was crowded with men and women and children, and when those fires were lighted, and the heretics began to shriek and writhe, those men and women and children laughed so they were fairly beside themselves with the enjoyment of the scene. The Greeks don’t seem to have done these things. I suppose that indicates earlier advancement in compassion.”

Colonel Harvey and Mr. Duneka came up to spend the night. Mr. Clemens had one of his seizures during the evening. They come oftener and last longer. One last night continued for an hour and a half. I slept there [MTB 1516-17].

August 19 Thursday – David Rutherford wrote from London, offering to illustrate for nothing:

Dear Sir, / In the “Idler” of February 1898 there appeared an article by Robert Barr in which he exposed a “system” advised by you for those in want of work and which had been acted upon very successfully in a number of instances by those who applied it. [...]

... My ambition is to illustrate your next book, if there will be no next book, then I would be gratified to illustrate any one of your works that has not already been done which could stand another edition. I have been at illustrating work for 15 years and have been working for various firms, but in my own name my work is practically unknown, now were you to favour and trust me with the work which I desire perhaps I should then be able to earn a living off my own bat for myself and family. I am quite young yet not yet 30, but I could go on wasting years in the service of others without credit just so long as I cared to and I don’t care to. [...] [MTP]. Note: for Sam’s reply see ? August 24 Tuesday – In his Lyon-Ashcroft MS Clemens wrote on Aug. 25 of this day:

Paine went down to New York yesterday (which was the 24th of August) to remove my stuff to the Lincoln Deposit, which is in 42^d street & handier. In the train, on his way back, he saw Mr. & Mrs. Peck, who have that big place over yonder on top of the ridge, the other side of our valley. Peck said he had seen Miss Lyon drink astonishingly, here at Stormfield; & Mrs. Peck said she had seen her in a Pullman car when she was stupid with liquor, & smelling of it, too. I must be miraculously dull, & miraculously unsuspicious, never to have noticed these things—at the time. Evidently when she was drunk to everybody else, I took it for hysterics—which was Ashcroft's name for it. If I had known how heavy our liquor bills were, I should have been obliged to suspect Ashcroft or Miss Lyon, one or the other, but I never looked at bills of any kind. Consequently I knew nothing of these liquor-freshets until the expert's investigation of Miss Lyon's checks revealed them.

August 25 Wednesday – William Dean Howells wrote from Carlsbad, Austria to Sam.

Dear Clemens: / Your friendly letter of prevention found me already taking quarts of cure, here. I hated abominably to come, but doctors and dear ones of all ages and sexes joined in thrusting me away. Surgeons suggested prying me open with cutlasses, and painted the process in glowing colors. But the next time I have bilious colic that ties me up in a double bow-knot I will get an osteopath to untangle me.

I was here before, you know, and it is all duller than the ditchwater one drinks: troops of yellow Jews with corkscrew curls before their ears; hordes of disemboweled and hipless hussies old [and] young; men with Tyrolean hats and goblets slung to their waists. The only good thing is the boiled ham.—I got the second volume of your Tramp Abroad out of the hotel library, and read it with the joy in you which never fails me. Read your Mrs. Eddy massacre just before I left home and gloated on every drop of her blood.

I have a fearful cold from a climate that boils you at noon and pierces you with Alpine cold at night. Pilla sends her love with mine to the whole lot of you. We hope to leave here two weeks from today and be in New York by October.—I hated so to come that I could not believe it real [MTHL 2: 847]. Note: source notes that the letter ended abruptly due to Howells running out of space. Howells referred to Twain's Christian Science, etc.

August 26 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Hélène Elisabeth Picard.

It is a lovely picture, dear France, & I am very glad to have it. Nothing else in the world is ever so beautiful as a beautiful schoolgirl, & certainly there is a prodigal wealth of that beauty in this picture. This Joan is to my taste!—fair, & comely, & sweet, & refined; whereas four artists out of five make Joan coarse & clumsy, & thirty or forty years old. They seem to think that because she was a peasant she couldn't have been otherwise. Then they spoil the argument by making the Virgin Mary, who was also a peasant, fair, & comely, & sweet, & refined—and white. Which she wasn't.

I wish I could have seen the thousand girls marching. It would have stirred me to know I was so close to Joan of Arc! to know that the ancestors of ~~one~~ some of these children played with her in the shade of the bois chenu; that I could touch one of these & send that contact quivering back five centuries along an unbroken stream of red blood & deliver the thrill of it into the heart of a comrade of the Maid of Orleans who had kissed her lips & spoken with her face to face.

You inquire how I am. I am not very well. Then how can I write letters? I don't; the others attend to it. This is the only one I have written since—since—oh, I don't know how long!

But I am very comfortable, & thoroughly well satisfied; for I am buried deep in the solitudes & silences of the woods & the hills, & don't ever want to see a city again. And shan't. The others go to New York every few days, but I never intend to go again. I am glad I built this house. It was a lucky thought.

With all good wishes / Sincerely Yours / S L. Clemens, C.S.

I most respectfully & affectionately kiss my hand to that little Scotch-French Jeanne d'Arc.

P. S.

I've broken the letter open for a reason that moves me to laugh. When the stenographer had typed it, he placed it, with other letters, on my daughter Jean's desk (she is my secretary), & she read it. She went driving, afterward, & I prepared the letter for the mail. But as soon as she returned she brought it to me & said I must open it and change something in it.

"Well, Jean, what must change?"

"You have said the Virgin Mary was not white."

"Very well, where's the harm?"

"Why, it's shocking!"

"You numscull! What is there about it that's shocking?"

"Can't you see, papa? The idea of saying the Mother of the Saviour was colored!" It's sacrilegious."

"Sac—oh, nonsense! Jean, in her day the population of the globe was not more than a thousand millions. Not one-tenth of them were white. What does this fact suggest to you?"

"I—I don't know. What does it suggest, papa?"

"It most powerfully suggests that white was not a favorite complexion with God. Has it since become a favorite complexion with Him? No. The population of the globe is now fifteen hundred millions; one thousand & six millions of these people are colored—two-thirds, you see, of the human race. There was not a white person in Nazareth, when I was there, except a foreign priest. The people were very dark. Don't you suppose they are the descendant's of Mary's townsmen? Of course they are. Now what have you to say, Jean?"

"Well, I can't help it, papa; the idea of a colored Mother of the Saviour is still revolting, & you must change it."

"My dear, I won't. To my mind one color is just as respectable as another; there is nothing important, nothing essential, about a complexion. I mean, to me. But with the Deity it is different. He doesn't think much of white people, He prefers the colored. Andrew del Sarto's pink-&-lily Madonnas revolt Him, my child." That is, they would, but He never looks at them." [MTP]. August 27 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margery H. Clinton in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Some day, dear Plumber, I shall be well enough again to see company; & then you & that exceedingly pleasant friend of yours must grant Stormfield another visit. I made a greatly-dreaded journey early in June (an old engagement & I was ashamed to cancel it) & it broke me down—just as I had expected. Not a large journey—only to Baltimore & back—but I was not in traveling-shape & it was a risk. I've been a prisoner here ever since. In the house. I don't go outside. I spend 4 hours downstairs daily— from 4.30 p.m. till 8.30; I spend the rest of the 24 in my room.

Still, I have rather good times—better than a body might think; for I can read as much as I want to, & smoke all the time. I stopped smoking, about a fortnight, because the doctor said smoking would kill me. But I thought it over & resumed. I don't care for death, & I do care for smoking.

You wrote me a kind note when I lost Mr. Rogers, & I never thanked you for it, because my mind was crammed full of the detestable Ashcrofts in those days, & the rage engendered drove out all other matters; but I thank you now.

Do you imagine I look like a sick person? I certainly don't. And I am not sick. I am as well as I ever was in my life; but the slightest physical exertion gives me a pain in the breast that is not endurable, sitting, standing, or lying down. So I go softly, warily, & don't provoke it.

I suppose you are out of town somewhere, as yet. Well, wherever you are, have a good time! / Affectionately / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Frances Nunnally.

Yes, I got the letter, dear heart, but I have been pestered so much with the pain in my breast that I haven't had energy enough to write or to make any other exertion. This condition of things makes a dull life for me, for I can't have company. Because I am of no use to a guest; I can't walk, I can't drive, & I am down stairs only 4 hours in the 24—from 4.30 p.m. to 8.30. All this is because the least exertion, the least fatigue, brings the pain. [in left-hand margin:] Keep on writing my, honey; I'll answer.

So you see I stick to my room & read. I do a plenty of reading, & of course there is a heap of entertainment in that.

Well, what a time you are having! You haven't been off your feet long enough to take a nap since the 10th of June. If I were as pretty a girl as you are, & as sweet, I should be flying around just like that, & being worshipped. I wish I was a pretty girl. However, it is no use to try; we all have our limitations.

Keep it up, dear! it's what youth is for. / With love / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Elizabeth Wallace.

Dear Betsy— / That rotten-hearted pair of professional thieves, liars & forgers have cleared out from this region, & are not likely to return. It is a great satisfaction, & a salute to my limitless hatred; & I have another: I am the reason they got married! It does me good to think of it. I said "You two are insane to think of marrying; don't do it; you will separate within two years." But they had to marry, & they knew it. There was no other way to save themselves. Each knew the other's crimes; each knew the other was treacherous by nature & would turn State's evidence at the first hint of danger; they had to marry, & shut each other's mouths—there was no choice. He told me frankly & without a blush that he didn't love her, he only wanted to be in a position to take care of her in her persistent & exhausting illnesses. He knew she got her illness out of a whisky bottle & was drunk a good half of her time, but I didn't know it. All the servants & some of the guests knew it, but I never suspected it. Her health is not bad, it is good. She always came out of a 3-day drunk sound & strong. When she used to lose her temper & carry on like a maniac, I took it for hysterics. [possibly inserted: Jesus!]

They are tied together & they can't get loose! It is a constant pleasure to me to reflect that I am the cause of it. "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord." I used to wonder at His taste. But that was because I was ignorant. Alas, there's a limit to our pleasures; we have to stop short of satisfying our whole appetite. It would shame me (see "gospel") to put her in jail; it is the only reason I haven't done it long ago.

Oh, think of the irony of it—chiefly it was the evidence of this thief that sent our two burglars to the penitentiary twelve months ago! Poor devils, they got nothing—not a penny's worth—and now they are prisoners for terms of 4 & 9 years. She was robbing me every day, & supporting her pal on the money; & because it would shame me to jail a woman, she is outside the bars.

There—it's the first time I've treated the subject with a pen. I have enjoyed it, for I am full of malice, saturated with malignity. I feel nearer to the Lord than I ever was before. I feel as He feels of a Saturday night when the weekly report is in & He has had a satisfactory clean-up of the human race.

I can't walk, I can't drive, I'm not downstairs much, & I don't see company; but I drink barrels of boiling water to keep the pain quiet; I read, & read, & read, & smoke, & smoke, & smoke all the time (as formerly,) & it's a contented & comfortable life. / Affectionately, / ... [MTP].

August 31? Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to David Rutherford's offer of Aug. 19 to illustrate Sam's next book for nothing, thereby applying what he perceived to be Mark Twain's "system" of rising in business. Sam wrote on Rutherford's letter:

“I advised nothing of the kind. I never advised the opera singer to work for the blacksmith for nothing; I never advised the illustrator to offer to work for the author, for nothing. Publishers employ illus—authors do not” [MTP].

September – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Marjorie Breckenridge.

I can't, Marjorie dear, my activities are pretty definitely suspended. I can't drive, I can't walk, I am a prisoner. I am as well as anybody—as long as I keep still; but the least little exertion gives me such a bitter pain in the chest that I could enjoy it more than anything in the world if somebody else had it.

You must look in on me, Marjorie, & if I get over this before you go away, I'll pay back. / Affectionately / ... [MTP; MTAq 265].

Sam also wrote to John Brown, Jr. (“Jock”).

Dear Mr. Jock

It was too late. Not too late to engrave Marjorie's signature, of course, for that wouldn't have taken ten minutes, but too late to get it in, for the printing of the Xmas number is already proceeding—as is the case with all the big magazines of course, at this late date. But I thank you for trying to help me, just the same, & I thank Mr. Mac Bean for his accommodating spirit—which shows he isn't a minister of the gospel, & not suited to that questionable trade. But Rev. St. Cuthbert is. Damn the Rev. St. Cuthbert, if I may be allowed the liberty!

Well, no, I'm not “keeping well.” Not for these past three months. But as I am out in the country—permanently—I don't mind it. I don't go out of the house, but the woods & the hills are all around me, & their enticing companionship is altogether satisfactory.

I will see that a copy shall go to you. / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP].

North American Review published an article, “Is Mark Twain Dead?” by Eugene H. Angert, p. 319-29. Tenney: “A spoof, purporting to demonstrate that MT died in 1906 in Europe and his subsequent public appearances are those of an imposter, and works bearing his name are those of a person lacking humor: he could not have written either the scholarly “Is Shakespeare Dead?” or Christian Science, and even if he could have written the latter, he would not have chosen to. Significantly, he did not sign the articles of incorporation of the Mark Twain Company. Angert proposes Elbert Hubbard as the author of works attributed to MT in recent years” [46].

Dear Mr. Dearborn: / By compulsion of age, I am barred from witnessing the Fulton-Hudson pageantries in person, but I am going to send my daughters Clara & Jean secretary, Albert Bigelow Paine to represent me. I know you & General Woodford would take good care of me, & so I will beg you to do the same by them, for my sake. / Sincerely Yours/ ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote a brief “MEMORANDUM” which he curiously included in the Lyon-Ashcroft MS, about the discovery of the North Pole:

September 7, 1909. Six days ago Dr. Cook sent a telegram from the Arctic regions announcing his discovery of the North Pole on the 21st of April 1908, & his name has been thundering around the whole globe ever since. During the past five days he has been the guest of the King of Norway, while the newspapers of all Christendom have been shouting his glories, not in columns, but by whole pages of costly telegraphic clatter.

And now, last night comes a telegram from Commander Perry, from up among the icebergs, saying he has discovered the North Pole! Discovered it a year later than Cook, according to the dates.

Half the world believed Cook, the other half didn’t. But the entire world believes Perry. I believe both are speaking the truth.

Well, it is a pity that two men did it. While it was the achievement of one man it placed him alongside of Columbus, away up in the very sky—apparently to remain there forever—discoverers whose feat could never be repeated, there being no more worlds to discover & no more poles worth discovering. But now that the honor is divided—well, the bulk of the value is gone.

Apparently Dr. Cook sat down among the icebergs to waste a year—in writing about about the discovery? If he really was so foolish as all that, he deserves to take second place—along with Adams, who didn’t push his discovery of Neptune, but let Leverrier get in ahead of him & take first place for good & all.

Paine adds a paragraph about Clemens’ reaction to the North Pole discovery:

September 7. To-day news of the North Pole discovered by Peary. Five days ago the same discovery was reported by Cook. Clemens's comment: "It's the greatest joke of the ages." But a moment later he referred to the stupendous fact of Arcturus being fifty thousand times as big as the sun [MTB 1517].

September 9 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Albert B. Paine wrote for Sam to Archibald Henderson.

My Dear Sir, / I have presented the matter of the pictures to Mr. Clemens. He never understood it before. The photograph entitled "Contentment" is here, autographed and neatly framed, and Mr. Clemens says we may send it to you if you would like to have it. Or, he will autograph the new picture you mention—both pictures—and the reprint of the Harper article. We find only one copy of the last-named here, and it is inscribed to Mr. Clemens himself, by you. What became of the other copy we cannot tell. In case you should send another copy and the pictures, you would better address them direct to me. I am attending to some business affairs for Mr. Clemens, and I should be pleased to give this matter my personal attention. / Very sincerely yours, / Albert B. Paine [MTP].

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, though he put a question mark by the date, "$18,000 guarantee for 5 years. New $25-edition."

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, "Ashcroft Bill for $8,000 'services' compromised for $1,000. / 2 years of M.T. Co. commission reduced to half year. / Ashcroft forced out of the M.T. Co." Note: Hill marks this day as the signing of "a discharge of all indebtedness and obligations to Ralph W. September 13 Monday – The New York Times, p.8, reported a resolution to the Clemens-Ashcroft conflict and law suits:

MARK TWAIN SUITS ALL OFF.

All Litigation Between Him and the Ashcrofts is Finally Dropped

The differences between Mark Twain and his daughter, Miss Clara Clemens, on the one side, and his former secretary Mrs. Ralph Ashcroft, and her husband have been settled without an appeal to the courts. All criticism of the conduct of Mrs. Ashcroft has been withdrawn and all suits have been dropped.

On their part the Ashcrofts ratify and confirm the conveyance to Mark Twain by Mrs. Ashcroft of the house, known as the Lobster Pot, which adjoins Mr. Clemens's estate at Redding, Conn., the gift of which to his former secretary on her marriage is understood to have been the beginning of the trouble. During the controversy it was contended by Mr. and Mrs. Ashcroft that the deed transferring the house back to the humorist had been signed by Mrs. Ashcroft under duress.

In addition Mr. and Mrs. Ashcroft have agreed to withdraw the suits which they brought against Mark Twain and Miss Clemens for defamation of character.

On the other hand Mark Twain has agreed to drop his suit against Mrs. Ashcroft for an alleged loan of $3,050 and has removed the attachment which he had caused to be placed on the property of his former secretary at Farmington. Reparation has also been made for the hard things which the Ashcrofts alleged had been said of them by the author and Miss Clemens. Mark Twain has signed a document acquitting Mrs. Ashcroft of all blame for her conduct of his affairs while she was in his employ as his secretary. Miss Clara Clemens has also to the satisfaction of Mr. and Mrs. Ashcroft retracted the criticisms she is alleged to have made on Mrs. Ashcroft.

Meanwhile, Mr. Ashcroft continues to be Secretary and Treasurer of the Mark Twain Company, which manages the business connected with the publication and sale of the humorist's works. It is understood that on the exoneration of his wife he offered to resign his place, but Mark Twain requested him to continue to hold it.

[Notes: Hill writes that "Clemens claimed the story was totally untrue and wrote a letter to Adolph Ochs, owner of the Times, claiming that 'the interviewer had a personal grudge against me, and the sub-editor who accepted the interviews without verification of their alleged facts had also a personal grudge against me'" [239].

Sam wrote to Adolph Ochs, owner of the NY Times about the above article. In full:

Private.
& confidential

My dear Mr. Ochs:

Obscurity and insignificance possess certain privileges which are denied to prominence and distinction. The oiler of your steam presses can slander you and your family in print, but you cannot undignify yourself with a reply. The oiler gets a newspaper-hearing solely on account of your prominence, not on account of any interest the public feel in him, or in his case. He could not get a newspaper-hearing for his grievance against another oiler.

Now these unknown Ashcrofts seem to have welcome use of the columns of the Times whenever they have any falsehoods to tell about me or my daughters, and we are necessarily obliged to endure this in silence. It seems unfair.

At last (a day or two ago), the Times speaks for them! tells their falsehoods for them, and personally tacitly vouches for their veracity! You will agree with me that this is an astonishing thing, and perhaps unprecedented. Can I go into print and defend myself and my daughters against the inventions of these outcasts? Would you do it yourself?

The facts in my case are simple; the matter is a private one, the public has no concern in it, and not the least right to know anything about it. Mrs. Ashcroft (Miss Lyon) was my secretary, and had authority to sign checks for me. She was caught stealing from my bank balance. She had been at it two or three years. An examination of her accounts by expert accountants appointed by H. H. Rogers and John B. Stanchfield proved the thefts, and she was requested to hand back the house I had given her. She did it. This satisfied a part of her delinquencies. There you have the whole thing in a nutshell. I did not bring a criminal action against her. The reward for my forbearance is these recurrent irruptions of falsehood in the Times. Mrs. Ashcroft gave up her house for one reason only—she could not venture into court to defend a suit.

I have before me the Times's personal explanation of the present condition of our matters, as published on Sunday or Monday: "Mark Twain Suits All Off."

The first sentence consists of five lines, and is true.

The next sentence is a plain simple unostentatious lie.

The opening sentence of the second paragraph talks benevolently of "ratifying and confirming." There was nothing of the kind. The sheriff attended to that.

Next sentence. About "duress." The deed was read aloud to Mrs. Ashcroft by the notary, in the presence and hearing of her mother, my lawyer, one of my daughters, and another witness. Mrs. Ashcroft signed it without saying anything about "duress."

The "suits" mentioned in the third paragraph are imaginary, I suppose. The Ashcrofts never contemplated any such thing—while in their right minds, at any rate.

Next paragraph. I have not agreed to "drop" any suit for an alleged "loan." There was no suit for a loan, the suit was to recover stolen money. Mrs. Ashcroft confessed the theft by signing the above deed.

Next sentence. No "reparation" has been made, and none will be made.

Next. I have signed no document "acquitting Mrs. Ashcroft" of blame for her treacherous conduct of my affairs, and I see no reason why I ever should.

Next. Miss Clara Clemens has "retracted" not a word she has uttered about that discredited mollusc.

Last paragraph. Mr. Ashcroft does not continue in office in the Mark Twain Company. His wife was not "exonerated." Mark Twain did not request him to "continue to hold his place." We elected a new board, and asked him to resign. Which he did. It happened just two days before he furnished the Times with this last grist of lies from his 600 h. p. mill.

It is quite plain that the Times interviewer—and the Times itself—were aware that the Ashcrofts were vile characters, since one of the interviews contained unassailable evidence of it: a private letter from me to one of my daughters. Evidence that they were thieves, also evidence that they were persons without any decency, in that they were willing to misuse the stolen property. That same interview contained a forged document purporting to have been written and signed by me—a document which would convict me of plain dishonesty in the eyes of any one who thought the document genuine.

None of the interviews was up to the standard of matter fit to print in the Times without examination as to their truthfulness, since they assailed the private character of a respectable family. That examination would certainly have been made, but for two quite apparent reasons: the interviewer had a personal grudge against me, and the sub-editor who accepted the interviews without verification of their alleged facts had also a personal grudge against me. The interview contained the name of my lawyer, Stanchfield, and application to him for the truth was at all times easy.

I think I may claim, with justice, that it is unfair for the Times, and also beneath its proper dignity, to allow itself to be used by its subordinates as a medium for the satisfaction and championship of their private grudges. I would like to know—if I may—who they are that hold these personal grievances against me, and what it is I have done to deserve them. They cannot surely be of a very serious nature; certainly not serious enough to move a large-minded man to take vengeance for them out of my unoffending daughters.

Truly Yours, ... [MTP; L-A MS].

James Beauchamp (“Champ”) Clark wrote from Bowling Green, Mo. to Sam.

One night last Summer, when I ought to have been studying the tariff, I suppose, —which, as you are aware, is a very lively subject—I got hold of your book, entitled “Is Shakespeare Dead?” and sat up all night reading it. In my judgment it is the best book you ever wrote, which is saying a great deal. You did not leave the Shakespeare claimants a leg to stand on, and I am glad of it.... If that copyright law don’t suit you, let me know and we will remodel it [MTP].

September 14 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Melville E. Stone.

Dear Stone: / I have been a sick man for several months, & shut up in the house by the doctors, & you go & choose this time to have a banquet, when I can’t come! I am sorry. But I don’t blame you—you couldn’t help it.

Along with this will go a statement by my legal counsel, Mr. Lark, correcting a few of the multitudinous lies which Miss Lyon’s tribe have been printing about my daughters & me for the past 4 months. Clara wants it in the Associated Press, but if I alone were concerned I wouldn’t take any notice of the rotten Ashcrofts. I caught Miss Lyon stealing money (she had been at it more than two years), & I bounced her. That is the whole of the dispute.

A noble good time to you! / Ys Ever / ... [MTP]. Note: Stone was manager for Associated Press.

Dear Mr. Clemens:

I need hardly tell you how much gratification it affords me to enrich my collection with your two manuscripts, “Life on the Mississippi” and “Pudd’nhead Wilson”. I am delighted with them and thank you sincerely.

I take pleasure in inclosing a check for the sum which Colonel Harvey suggests would represent a proper honorarium” [MTP]. Note: “J. Pierpont Morgan, enclosing $2,500. / (& answer)”; Robert Hirst of the Mark Twain Project confirmed that the Morgan estate still owned the manuscripts as of 2012.

September 15 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer in Lake Placid, N.Y.

You thoughtless little rascal, why didn’t you tell me where you were going to be, now? You are gone from Lake Placid by this time, & this letter won’t ever reach you.

Yes. Greenwich is not far from Redding, but I don’t suppose I can go there, because the doctors say I must not make any journeys, even short ones. So, you see, if it chances that I can’t go to you, you will have to come to me. Are you agreed?

You are very busy, as usual—like all of my fishes. But I’m not. Except in the matter of reading & smoking—which is not really business at all but pastime. However, there’s two hours of billiards every afternoon, with Mr. Paine.

I dreadfully want to see you, dear. When is it going to be? I want to see you, but I shan’t know you, you are growing so fast.

good-bye & take good care of yourself. / With lots of love / ... [MTP; MTAq 264-5].

Sam also wrote to J. Pierpont Morgan.

Dear Mr. Morgan: / Your letter of yesterday, with check, has arrived, & one of my high ambitions is gratified—which was to have something of mine placed elbow to elbow with that August company which you have gathered together to remain indestructible in a perishable world. I thank you sincerely. / Faithfully yours / ... [MTP].

September 16 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Sept. 13 from James Beauchamp (“Champ”) Clark in Bowling Green, Mo.

Dear Champ Clark:

I am glad I have made another convert. This makes two, for sure, for while I was at it I converted myself. Well, no—that happened earlier.

I think we’ve got a mighty good (& lucid) copyright law at last. Hereafter there’ll be no complexities to fuss over. Effort can be restricted to a single & simple detail—extension of the term. Ten or fifteen years at a time. In the end, the author will be lifted to the rank of the publisher & the shoemaker: he will be the actual owner of his property, & it can’t be taken from him at the end of a specified term & given to his partner. All copyright laws give the author’s property to his own publisher (partner) at the end of the term, & he takes the entire swag after that.

This is accomplished by what ~~he~~ is called “publisher’s courtesy.” If I & my copyrights die tomorrow it would add $50,000 a year to my own publisher’s profits & give not a penny to anybody else, for no reputable publisher would reprint my books & enter the field against my publisher. And my children? They would go hungry.

Is it possible that parliaments & Congresses do not know about this trick? For just 200 years they have strenuously legalized robbery & protected the thief without apparently being aware of what they were doing.

Last week the cablegrams said a public subscription was being taken up to save a grand-niece of Dickens’s from starving. She would be sharing a vast income with Dickens’s publisher if Parliament had not robbed one citizen to fatten another one. Dickens’s publishers & grand-nieces (by grace of “publisher’s courtesy”—otherwise “honor among thieves”) do not need any passing of the mendicant’s hat to save them from starving.

I was aiming to go to Washington next winter to conspire with you, but the doctors don’t allow me to travel, so I have to give that idea up. But you must come here—it’s only an hour & a half from New York; if you will, I promise to do my level best to make you good & happy. / Your friend / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Abbott Handerson Thayer, in Monadnock, N.H.

My Dear friend Thayer: / Jean tells me you wrote me. I have no recollection of it. It is most likely that Miss Lyon answered the letter on her own account & in her own way, written without consulting me, if she answered it at all. I was glad enough to have her answer silly & undesirable strangers without consulting me, but not friends. In those days I answered friends myself, tho’ not in these. I have a pain in my breast, now, that unfits me for talking & writing, so I have ceased from dictating & from using the pen, & all my letters are written now by Jean or by Mr. Paine—letters to friends, I mean; the stenographer manages the others.

I am sorry, very very sorry, if I have hurt you for I would not do that for anything. I hope you will forgive me. I have too strong a regard, too old a warm an affection, for all of you of the family, to purposely wound you.

Jean had a lovely time with the friends in Dublin & is full of it yet. My journeying days are over, or I should have been there myself. / Sincerely Yours / SL. Clemens [Archives of American Art, Thayer Papers online].

September 17 Friday

September 18 Saturday – Sam wrote across all columns of his Stormfield new guestbook:

September 18, anniversary. A year ago the burglars broke into the house at midnight. They were condemned to terms of 4 & 9 years. Persons of their sort had been plying their trade in the house for a long time, but we were not aware of it. This 18th closed all falatious [2 illegible words].

September 19 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam began a letter to Joe Twichell that he added a line to on Sept. 27.

Dear Joe— / Nine days ago it was all arranged, & the writings drawn & signed, & yesterday the last little details were accomplished which wiped the slate clean of all connection with that criminal couple & dismisse's them out of our lives. And by George! yesterday was an anniversary—the date that the two burglars broke into this house!

Now consider the unfairness of everything in this life: it was her testimony that sent those two hungry & hard-up poor devils to 4 & 9-year terms in prison!—her's! They got not a penny here, whereas she was stealing money from me every day of her life, & had been diligently at it—& liberally—for more than a year. She was stealing money without the excuse of need—& because of my low-quality citizenship she escapes jail; whereas they were in dire need, & all they got was jail.

And yet she is awfully punished:

1. She has lost her house & home;
2. She has married him! (& he her!)
3. She has to live in Brooklyn;
4. She adores Society—& is out of it for good;
5. And he? He's a stevedore, now. Much too respectable a calling for that sandhog [MTP].

September 20 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Albert B. Paine wrote for Sam to Archibald Henderson.

My Dear Sir, / I have your letters of recent date, also the photographs and pamphlets mentioned. Allow me to thank you for one of the pamphlet articles, which I remember reading with pleasure in Harper's Magazine. Mr. Clemens has autographed the various items, and I am having them sent to you by express, as the fact that they now contain writing would make them first-class mail matter. I hope that they will arrive safely, and that you will find them in accordance with your desires.

Concerning the bibliographical list you mention, I should be very glad to see it some time, and to make any suggestions that might tend to its enlargement. I have a large quantity of Mark Twain matter of various sorts. It is at present arranged chronologically, and not with a view to bibliographical consideration. Perhaps that will follow.

As to the completion of my biography of Mr. Clemens, that will require some time, perhaps two or three years longer. It is as you say, a big work. ... [MTP].

Sam noted in his after Sept. 25, 1909 letter that on this day, "Sold old MS for more than enough to square with Ashcroft." Note: See Sept. 10 entry.

William Ireland Starr wrote from Bridgeport, Conn. to advise Sam of the location of a color picture which was left by Mrs. Ashcroft (Isabel Lyon) "in the large drawer of the sideboard at the top of the main stairs at Stormfield" and hoped Sam might find it and send it [MTP].

September 21 Tuesday – Paine writes of a dream Sam related:

September 21. This morning he told me, with great glee, the dream he had had just before waking. He said:

"I was in an automobile going slowly, with 'a little girl beside me, and some uniformed person walking along by us. I said, 'I'll get out and walk, too'; but the officer replied, 'This is only one of the smallest of our fleet.'"

“Then I noticed that the automobile had no front, and there were two cannons mounted where the front should be. I noticed, too, that we were traveling very low, almost down on the ground. Presently we got to the bottom of a hill and started up another, and I found myself walking ahead of the ‘mobile. I turned around to look for the little girl, and instead of her I found a kitten capering beside me, and when we reached the top of the hill we were looking out over a most barren and desolate waste of sand-heaps without a speck of vegetation anywhere, and the kitten said, ‘This view beggars all admiration.’ Then all at once we were in a great group of people and I undertook to repeat to them the kitten’s remark, but when I tried to do it the words were so touching that I broke down and cried, and all the group cried, too, over the kitten’s moving remark.”

The joy with which he told this absurd sleep fancy made it supremely ridiculous and we laughed until tears really came [MTB 1517-18].

In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Helen Schuyler Allen in Franklin, N.Y.

It is altogether too bad, Helen dear, if I’m not to see you. I am not likely to see New York or Bermuda for a long long time. I don’t go out of the house.

But can’t you & your mother run up & see me? It is only a rail-trip of an hour & a half. I would dearly love to see you. Write & tell me, won’t you? / With love, yours [MTP; not in MTAg].

Sam also wrote to William Osler.

Dear Dr. Osler:

I wish I could say yes, it hurts me to say the other thing, but I have said it so long, now (3 years) & so often, that I am at last practically used to it, like the eels. I bound myself to say no in all cases because I found that dividing the matter up & saying yes in some & no in the others made embarrassments for me, & I have this extraordinary peculiarity: that I don’t like embarrass_{ments}. But I thank Mr. Thomas for the offered compliment, & you for forwarding it.

I hope you & Mrs. Osler will come out here in the country & see me when you are on this side. It would give me great pleasure.

With kindest regards & best wishes to you both, / Sincerely Yours / SL. Clemens

I should like to be remembered to Mrs. & Miss Porter when you see them [MTP]. Note: Sir William Osler; see June 3, 1908 listing for bio information.

A concert at Stormfield featuring Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Clara Clemens, and David Bispham took place; by Sam’s estimate 525 people came, filling up the house. The event was a benefit for the Redding Library (Mark Twain Library) and raised $372 for the cause [Sept. 22 to Ogden; Sept. 22 to Wallace]. Note: in a letter to her friend Marguerite Schmidt, Jean wrote that it was on this day that Clara and Ossip decided to marry. The wedding would take place on Oct. 6, 1909 [Hill 243].

The Mark Twain Library Association minutes gave two pages to the event, revealing that Mark Twain introduced the performers. The record here gives $378 raised [copied by Tenney at the Library Nov. 15, 1981].

Later in the day a tea was held for a dozen, including the Hawthornes, Jeannette L. Gilder and her niece. Then a private concert in the library until 10 p.m. which included the “team” of performers from earlier in the day, Mr. & Mrs. Albert Bigelow Paine, Jean Clemens and her dog [Sept. 22 to Ogden; Sept. 22 to Wallace].

September 22 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Mrs. Augusta M.D. Ogden in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. Ogden: / It is very pleasant to have a note from you. It is in a sense resuming relations with Tuxedo, where I have had the ill fortune to offend Mrs. Kane—unintentionally, but it grieves me just the same. It is quite natural for you to suppose it troubles me to be ailing & confined to the house these latter months, but it isn't really so. There are compensating advantages about it. I don't have to go to banquets & make speeches, & I don't have to do anything—not a thing. Not a thing except be prudent & not fatigue myself. It is an ideal life for a lazy person, & I was born lazy. When I found that Dr. Quintard was curing me, I discharged him. During 23 hours out of the 24 I am as comfortable as anybody. Not many ostensibly healthy people can say as much.

But I made a mistake yesterday afternoon. We had a concert here for the benefit of the village library. Team: Gabrilowitsch, David Bispham & Clara Clemens; I to introduce them. I ought to have done as commanded: done my introducing & gone back to my room. But there were 525 people in the house & I wanted to remain & get acquainted with them—which I did. It took several hours, & I am having the results to-day. But I had a good time!

All my tribe are packing off to New York to-morrow & next day, to be gone a week & see the great show. The whole family except the dog. It seems to me it isn't any way to treat an orphan. My, but I would like to see that show!

Would you mind called [sic calling] Margery up on the telephone & saying to her—not profanely, but gently, softly, kindly—that the plumbing in this house is getting into a perfectly Clintonian condition of wreck & rupture & comminuted disrepair?

With kindest regards to all your house—and thereto I beg to be remembered to any friends in Tuxedo that have not forgotten me— / Most sincerely yours / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Elizabeth Wallace.

Dear Betsy: / It is a lovely little book, & as rich in sumptuous imagery as is Shelley himself. The reading so moved me & charmed me that I read some Shelley under the inspiration of it. Thank you ever so much for sending it.

But the angel-fishes are not “company.” They are part of the family. They come, & dear me, how welcome they are! That little rascal will come, I think, when she gets located at Greenwich,—near by—where her next school is.

We got shut of those frauds & all settled up, finally & for good, on the anniversary of the day those other burglars raided the house. They got jail, poor devils; these didn't, but deserved it.

We had a grand time here yesterday. Concert in aid of the little library. Team.

David Bispham, vocalist.

Clara Clemens, ditto.

Mark Twain, Introducer of Team.

Detachments, & squads, & groups, & singles came from everywhere—Danbury, New Haven, Norwalk, Redding, Redding Ridge, Ridgefield, & even from New York; some in 60 motor cars, some in buggies & carriages, & a swarm of farmer-young-folk on foot from miles around: 525 altogether. If we hadn't stopped the sale of tickets a day & a half before the performance we should have been swamped. We jammed 160 into the library (not quite all had seats); we filled the loggia, the dining-room, the hall, clear to the billiard room, the stairs, & the brick-paved square outside the dining room door.

The artists were received with a great welcome, & it woke them up & I tell you they performed to the queen's taste! The program was an hour & three-quarters long, & the encores added a half hour to it. The enthusiasm of the house was hair-lifting. They all stayed an hour after the close, to shake hands & congratulate.

We had no dollar-seats except in the library, but we accumulated $372 for the Building Fund. We had a tea at half past 6 for a dozen—the Hawthornes, Jeanette Gilder & her niece, etc.; & after 8 o'clock dinner we had a private concert & a ball in the bare-stripped library, until 10: nobody present but the team, & Mr. & Mrs. Paine, & Jean & her dog. And me. Bispham did Danny Deever & the Erlkönig in his majestic great organ-tones & artillery, & Gabrilowitsch played the accompaniments as they were never played before, I do suppose.

It having been decided that smoking is in no way responsible for my malady, I'm smoking as much as ever, now. / Affectionately / ... [MTP].

To the Board of Directors of the Mark Twain Company.

Gentlemen: The purpose of this communication is to suggest that Mr. Ashcroft be asked to resign his position as Manager of the Company & cancel & make void his contract, upon the ground that he is not a fit person to ~~to~~ serve that office. My reasons are many, but I will state only one of them at present. Others will follow if required.

In Norfolk, Virginia, in the early days of April last, he procured a sum of money from me on false pretenses, by methods distinctly criminal in their character. He assisted his process by lies of his own, & by beguiling another man, though threats & persuasions, to lie for him. I have the evidence, & am ready to furnish it to you in detail.

At the time that he was guilty of this conduct he was under contract to conduct & watch over all my private business affairs for me—a contract upon which the ink was hardly as yet dry.

Respectfully submitted.

September 29 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Isabel S. Wayland (Mrs. John Wayland) in Stony Creek, Conn.

Dear Mrs. Wayland— / That bushel must be about due, now, & my mouth is watering. I thank you, thank you, thank you!

It is good to hear from you; I send my love to both of you, & I hope you are well. I'm not. I haven't had a well day for 4 months, & shan't have one for 4 more. I dasn't fatigue myself, because of the pain it causes my breast; & now, b 'George I've got the toothache—& how I am to get to New York I don't know. Perhaps Providence will provide. We have played it straight along without a change for more than 3 months, & I guess we shall always prefer it to any other.

By mid-October I cal'late to begin to shout for company again. The Littletons have already promised to come about that time, & I want you & Marjorie Clinton & the Freemans to fall into the procession. I hope to have 2 or 3 guests in the house forever more. / Always affectionately / ... [MTP].

Lotos Club wrote from NYC to invite Clemens to a farewell dinner for Melville E. Stone on Oct. 5 [MTP].

Autumn, 1909 – Sam wrote to the "Unborn Reader" as to William Dean Howells.

To the Unborn Reader,

In your day, a hundred years hence, this manuscript will have a distinct value; & not a small value but a large one. If it can be preserved ten centuries it will have a still larger value— a value augmented tenfold, in fact. For it will furnish an intimate inside view of our domestic life of to-day not to be found in naked & comprehensive detail outside of its pages. Its episodes have occurred in all lands & in all ages, but they have never near linked together in progressive order & sequence & set down as plain narrative of fact before; heretofore certain of them have been used in romances, but not otherwise. That employment of them has weakened them, not strengthened them, because, so used, they fail of the priceless quality of authenticity.

There are these conspicuous characters in this true tale of mine, this queer & shabby & pitiful tale—to—wit, I, a pair of degraded & sufficiently clumsy sharpeners, & I the born ass, their easy victim. These those characters have figured as clever inventions in many romances, but in this manuscript we are not inventions, we are flesh & blood realities, & the silly & sordid things we have done & said are facts, not fancies.

I have set this history down in the form of a letter—a letter to an old & sympathetic friend, a friend of thirty-five years' standing, the novelist William Dean Howells. This was to give me freedom, after freedom, limitless freedom, liberty to talk right out of my heart, without reserve. I could not talk like that to the general public, I could not strip myself naked before company.

Howells is all refinement, by nature & training. Now & then, when I have been obliged to be robust & indelicate in my speech, Howells was an embarrassment to me; I found I could not say things to him which I could not say to a lady. In these cases I have gotten over the difficulty by imagining I was talking to Colonel George Harvey. He is as robust as I am myself.

This original manuscript will be locked up & put away, & no copy of it made. Your eye, after mine, will be the first to see it.

If the Paston Letters had been a free-spoken private communication to a Howells of four & a quarter centuries ago, imagine the light it would throw upon domestic life in England in that old day! a life which is hidden in deep night, a life which is a sealed book to the world forever; & imagine the value of it!

My child! Your letter arrives late. I must rush a line to you right away, or you will be gone to New York before this reaches Albany.

I guess I will send this to New York—then it will be sure to reach you. Tell me, dear, when you & your mother can come after the 7th of October. The house will be empty, then, for two or three days right after the 7th. Will you drop me a line & give me your earliest date?

I suppose you are having a very good time flying around. I hope you are, anyway. / With lots of love / ... [MTP; not in MTAq].

Sam also wrote to Margery H. Clinton in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Plumber dear, you belong to a very tough profession—a profession that is always explaining. You & the clergy are just alike; you are always explaining the unexplainable, & charging war prices for it; always mending souls & holes & leaving them worse than they were before; always putting in washers that won't wash, always loafing & charging time for it, always soldiering when you ought to be soldering. Reform! reform!

But never mind, I think you'll do, just as you are. And besides, people that reform are always tougher than they were before. Many & many's the time I have tried it.

Can't you & Miss Caroline come up & give us a visit after the middle of October? Nature is getting ready to welcome you; the woods are already showing color, & I have begun to put on my autumn tints.

Who? Me? “Going to the Fulton celebration?” I should have the doctors on my back if I tried to travel. / Most respectfully / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote a postcard to Mrs. Edward Quintard. “A word of hearty greeting, my well-beloved Mrs. Quintard, & I do wish you could have come with the Doctor! / All happiness attend you! / SL Clemens” [MTP].

October 2 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Mrs. Helen Garth.

Dear Mrs. Garth: / Your letter left New York at noon Wednesday, & arrived here at breakfast this morning. It probably went around by Louisville because it couldn't get through the crowds of people you speak of.

I am very very sorry to lose your visit, but you will be coming east again by & by—you & Mrs. Annie—and then you must come.

With love to you both from the girls & me, / ... [MTP].

October 6 Wednesday – Clara Clemens married Ossip Gabrilowitsch at Stormfield. Joe Twichell performed the ceremony. The New York Times reported the event on Oct. 7, p. 9:

MISS CLEMENS WEDS MR. GABRILOWITSCH

Mark Twain, in Scarlet Cap and Gown, Sees His Daughter Married to Russian Pianist.

AVOIDS "CEREMONY DELAYS"

Humorist in Prepared Interview Says a Happy Marriage is One of the Tragically Solemn Things of Life.

WEST REDDING, Conn., Oct. 6.—Miss Clara L. Clemens, daughter of Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) was married at noon today to Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist. The wedding took place in the drawing room at Stormfield, Mr. Clemens's country home, with the Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Twitchell of Hartford, a close friend of Mr. Clemens, as officiating clergyman. The bride was attended only by her sister, Miss Jean Clemens, but her cousins, Jervis Langdon of Elmira, N. Y., and Mrs. Julia Loomis, wife of Edward Loomis, Vice President of the Delaware Lackawanna & Western Railroad, were present.

Miss Ethel Newcomb of New York City played a wedding march as the bridal party entered the drawing room. This room was prettily decorated with evergreens. Autumn leaves, and roses, and the bride and bridegroom stood beneath a bower of white roses and smilax.

While the ceremony was being performed Mr. Clemens was attired in the scarlet cap and gown which he wore when the Degree of Doctor of Literature was conferred upon him by Oxford University. After the wedding he wore a white flannel suit.

Forty guests from New York City were present and attended a wedding breakfast which followed the marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch left for New York this afternoon. After remaining in that city about a week they will go to Berlin, where Mr. Gabrilowitsch has taken a house. Later Mr. Gabrilowitsch will make a tour of Germany in concerts.

Mark Twain's Interview.

Mr. Clemens prepared the following characteristic interview "to avoid any delays at the ceremony," as he expressed it. Speaking of the bride and bridegroom Mr. Clemens said: "Clara and Gabrilowitsch were pupils together under Leschetizky, in Vienna, ten years ago. We have known him intimately ever since. It's not new—the engagement. It was made and dissolved twice six years ago. Recovering from a perilous surgical operation, two or three months passed by him here in the house ended a week or ten days ago in renewal. The wedding had to be sudden for Gabrilowitsch's European season is ready to begin. The pair will be married a fortnight from now. The first engagements are in Germany. They have taken a house in Berlin."

"Can you say a word or two about the Redding Mark Twain Library?"

"The village did me the honor to name it so. It flourishes. The people came to it from a mile or so around. We are all engaged in propagating the building fund, in a social and inexpensive way, through picnics, afternoon teas, and other frolics in the neighborhood, with now and then a full strength concert in my house at ostentatious prices. We had one last week with a team composed of Gabrilowitsch, David Bispham, and his bride, with me as introducer and police.

"We had an audience of 525. When I have a male guest I charge him a dollar for his bed and turn the money into the fund and give him an autographed receipt, which he carries away and sells for $1.10."

Doesn't Work, But Takes Exercise.

"Are you at work now?"

"No, I don't work. I have a troublesome pain in my breast which won't allow it, and won't allow me to stir out of the house. But I play billiards for exercise. Albert Bigelow Paine, my biographer and business manager, plays with me. He comes over every day for two or three hours. He has a farm half a mile from here upon which he raises hopes."

"Do you like it here at Stormfield?"

"Yes, it is the most out of the world and peaceful and tranquil and in every way satisfactory home I have had experience of in my life."

"The marriage pleases you, Mr. Clemens?"

"Yes, fully as much as any marriage could please me or perhaps any other father. There are two or three tragically solemn things in this life, and a happy marriage is one of them, for the terrors of life are all to come.

A funeral is a solemn office, but I go to them with a spiritual uplift, thankful that the dead friend has been set free. That which follows is to me tragic and awful—the burial. I am glad of this marriage, and Mrs. Clemens would be glad, for she always had a warm affection for Gabrilowitsch, but all the same it is a tragedy, since it is a happy marriage with its future before it, loaded to the plimsoil line with uncertainties.”

Among the guests at the wedding were Richard Watson Gilder, Mrs. Gilder and three daughters, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Wright of Boston, Mrs. E. F. Bauer and the Misses Flora and Marion Bauer of New York, Miss Lillian Burbank, Miss Marie Nichols, Mrs. John B. Stanchfield, Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Sprague, Miss Foot, Miss Comstock, Miss Mary Lawton, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Gaillard, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hapgood, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Bigelow Paine, and Miss Ethel Newcomb, all of New York.

[Note: this was the last time Clemens saw Richard Watson Gilder, who died on Nov. 18].

Sam’s new guestbook also listed these above guests.

Lystra writes of the wedding day:

...Clara married a man whom her father both liked and respected. “Only a few intimate friends were invited to the wedding, and everyone was in bright spirits,” the bride remembered, “like the October day that blazed brilliant in resplendent autumn colors.” Clara told Joseph Twichell, once again officiating at an important family ceremony, that she wanted the word “obey” deleted from the service. Jean was the maid of honor and wore a new white silk dress, trimmed with lace. Twain, never one to be upstaged, wore his Oxford robes. For her part, Katy was agitated. All the preparations had fallen on her and Jean—with one week’s notice. “I worked all the morning,” Katy remembered about the wedding day, “and I was looking after everything and everybody was calling me this way and that. I didn’t know who was there, hardly.” She was too busy downstairs to help Clara dress, but she watched her descending the stairs on her father’s arm. “She looked like a little cherub,” Katy recalled. Twain was very quiet before the ceremony, but during the reception he talked and laughed and bragged contentedly about his new son-in-law [241].

Harry Windsor Dearborn for the Robert Fulton Monument wrote to Sam. “...permit me to say that the Dutchess of Marlborough wrote a letter in the way of introduction to her cousin Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt presenting Mr. Lascelles, who saw him yesterday. Mr. Lascelles has also seen Mr. Cutting and others regarding a pageant to be held for our Association either at the unveiling of the memorial or the laying of the corner stone. Best of all, it has been arranged for Lord & Company to finance same.” Dearborn also offered his congratulations on Clara’s marriage [MTP].

Richard E. Johnston, theatrical manager, wrote from NYC with regrets he’d been unable to attend Clara’s wedding and asked for “something which I can send to the people explaining why Miss Clemens cannot fill her concert engagements” [MTP].

Maude DeHaven Ogan wrote from NYC to Sam enclosing pictures (not in file) and asking for a picture of Clara [MTP].

October 7 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent a telegram and then wrote a letter to Helen Schuyler Allen at the Hotel St. Andrew, N.Y.C. The telegram simply said: “Will write, wait for letter.” Here is his letter:

Helen dear, I am so disappointed to have to telegraph & postpone your visit, but there’s no help for it. For the past 3 days we have been working like beavers, & losing a lot of sleep; & so my daughter Jean & my secretary Mr. Paine are worn out & broken down & I reckon I am even a trifle worse than they are. The wedding is over, the bride & groom are gone, but the hard work promises to go straight on for a week to come—letters, telegrams, telephone messages, etc—they keep us busy; & the house has to be restored to what it was before the wedding—& that must be put off a little, so that the servants may rest-up. We have been obliged to postpone other visits by telegraph & letter.

Thunder! we didn't know what a wedding was like! But we know now. Dear heart, can you come seven or eight days from now? I hope so. Do try. We shall still be alive, I am sure.

Then you will take the train at Grand Central (Lexington avenue entrance) at 4.15 p.m.

Saturdays 1.15 p.m.

Tell me the train you take, so that I can send to the station for you.

With kindest regards to your mother & love to you. / ... [MTP].

May Cline wrote from San Diego, Calif. to ask for an autograph [MTP].

Richard E. Johnston wrote again to Sam asking where he could reach Clara by letter. "I must have something from her to send to the people whom I have made engagements with. They are furious with me, and it is all unfair. However, you see she should write a letter that can be published, in which she takes all the blame" [MTP].

Warren Mason, correspondent for the London Daily Express, writing from the Sun building in NYC, wrote to Sam. His newspaper "has begun strong campaign directed against continuation misrule of Congo." He asked if Clemens might telegraph "commendary methods" and how "public opinion of civilized world can best manifest itself" [MTP].

October 7-13 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent form letter announcements of Clara's wedding to Ossip Gabrilowitsch to: Harriet W. Enders, Richard Watson Gilder and Helena Gilder (Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder), George Bernard Shaw, and William Winter [MTP]. Note: no doubt many others were sent after the ceremony. On the back of one of the announcements, this to an unidentified person, was a list from 1885 of incoming letters from Feb. to Sept. 29. See UCCL #12003 for details.

Arthur Conan Doyle wrote from London to Sam.

I know that you feel as I do about the Congo. You have magnificently proved it in your book.

I am sending you mine "The Crime of the Congo" which brings the facts up to date.

It is written in the hope of making the people of England (and of America also) understand that they are themselves blood guilty if they do not interfere to control that which they have themselves helped to form. If Diplomacy fails then it must be force. How great to see the two English-speaking nations shoulder to shoulder in protecting the helpless.

If you could spare me a line, just to say that a great American sees it from the same standpoint it would indeed help us here in our struggle / With all affection & respect ... [MTP].

John Whitehead wrote from Surrey, England to send a poem to Sam, as he was doing to all the great men of the world. Sam had received Whitehead's book at Brown's Hotel in 1907 [MTP]. Note: not in Gribben.

October 10 Sunday – William Henry Bishop wrote from NYC to Sam after reading of Clara's wedding and noting in the article Sam mentioned a "troublesome pain in the breast" Bishop also suffered from such a pain that the doctors said wasn't heart problems nor consumption. "Would you send me a word about yours [pain] on the chance that the nature of this trouble may be explained" [MTP].

October 11 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to William Henry Bishop in N.Y.C.

My dear Bishop: / You have located my pain exactly—"the centre of the breast bone"—but the one in the lung is your private property. I lack it. A distinguished allopath referred mine to the heart, & began to empty drugs into me—(& I have a horror of drugs.) At the end of a fortnight it was plain that the drugs only relieved, they didn't reduce the number of attacks per day; so I stopped drugging.

Next, the osteopath said there was a bone out of true—nothing the matter with the heart. He adjusted the bone; came up again, after 3 days, & readjusted it; came after another interval & re-readjusted it. Then I discarded him. But retained the pain.

An old servant of ours said the hot-water bag would appease the pain temporarily. Very well, it did. Once. I said that if it was the hot water that did it on the outside (inconveniently) why mightn't it on the inside (conveniently.) So I tried it & it worked. I have drunk oceans of hot water since then (two months.) If half a glass doesn't stop it, I go on—go on filling myself up. With the certainty that the hot water will win out, presently.

There's a thermos of hot water at my elbow day & night. But that is for possible emergencies; in these latter days; the emergencies are pretty rare, now.

My daughter—who is not a physician & doesn't know anything—said the pain was due to indigestion; a curious idea, since nobody's stomach & bowels could beat mine for perfect performance. It may be that she is right. I don't know. Still, if I eat moderately, no pain comes; but every time I over-eat, it comes. I seldom over-eat now, therefore the pain & I are getting to be strangers. Moreover, I have stopped eating rich desserts—they often brought me the pain; especially if I assisted them by over-indulging in innocent stuffs_[1]

With cordial good wishes / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP].

October 12 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Helen Schuyler Allen at the Hotel St. Andrew, N.Y.C.

Dear Helen, my married daughter has changed her plans, & I have word this morning that she will sail next Saturday. So I shall be here alone in an empty house, with both daughters away & nobody but myself to welcome you & your mother, for the doctor has barred me from traveling, so it will not do for me to go down & see my daughter off. She will have to run up here for the good-bying, instead, if she gets time. But I shall be here, dear, & glad to welcome you & do the best I can to make you & your mother comfortable & at home.

The trains are—thus:

1.18 p.m. (Saturdays), to BRANCHVILLE (It does not stop at Redding.) Returning: (Sundays,) only two trains.

8.08 a.m. &

6.13 p.m.

I hope you can come, dear. If you find you can will you please let me know, by letter or telegram, so that I can send to the station for you? Branchville is 3½ miles from my house; it's a wee little station, & there aren't any cabs there.

But the country roads are beautiful, now, submerged in the autumn splendors. / With lots of love [MTP; not in MTAq].

Sam also wrote to Richard E. Johnston.

Dear Mr. Johnson: / I am as sorry as any one can be that my daughter Clara cannot meet those appointments. She is not here to speak for herself, but, as I understand the matter, it is this: The wedding was brought suddenly on, ahead of time, because Gabrilowitsch was leaving for Europe; and as the wound in his head (from the surgical operation of a month or two ago) was not yet healed; and he was weak from his long illness, the sudden marriage was decided upon in order that my daughter might go with him and continue to nurse him. They will spend two or three months in retirement in Italy, for rest and recuperation, by order of the physicians. Also, by their order, Gabrilowitsch has cancelled his European engagements by cable. I am very, very sorry for these untoward things, but you see how they came about, and that neither you nor I could have helped it. / Sincerely yours, / ... [MTP: Musical America, 23 Oct. 1909].

William Henry Bishop replied to Sam. “Your kind letter of medical advise just received. In consequence of it I feel better already. I beg to enclose my check for five dollars. I don’t want to put you in the painful portion of being found practicing without a license, so I adopt the happy afterthought of making this offering for your Redding Library.” Bishop was sailing to Naples on Nov. 6 with the wife [MTP].

The Chicago Daily Journal wrote to ask Sam if would “kindly send us the latest photo of yourself” [MTP].

October 13 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Oct. 12 from William Henry Bishop.

Dear Mr. Bishop: / The Mark Twain Library thanks you cordially, through me, its President, for your welcome contribution and forwards herewith its official receipt.

I offer to you & Mrs. Bishop my best wishes for a safe & pleasant voyage. / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Helen Kerr Blackmer (Mrs. Henry Myron Blackmer) in N.Y.C.

Dear Mrs. Blackmer: / It’s congratulations that are in order—nothing that could happen in the family could please me more. I wanted this wedding 8 years ago, when the engagement was broken twice in 6 months.

I am so glad Margaret is still around! I haven’t heard from that scamp for ages. Except at second hand, 3 days ago, through Betsy Wallace.

I can’t go to Margaret, for I can’t go anywhere—even to see Clara off; so I’ve got to require you & her to come to me. I do certainly want you. I wish it could be now, while the woods are so beautiful & the hickory-nuts raining on you as you pass along. Jean gathered a harvest of them yesterday—but not from Margaret’s trees & mine. I’m saving those. Fetch her along as soon as you can. The sooner the better. The woods were never lovelier than they are now. / Affectionately yours, & / with love to Margaret / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mrs. Augusta M.D. Ogden in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. Ogden: / Indeed yes! Greenwich is close by. Come up to luncheon. Come in the fresh hours of the morning & arrive early. I will provide the proper weather. I am studying for the ministry, & have a pull, as St. Exodus says.

Greenwich! Well—is everybody going to Grinnage? That is where my Margaret is—Margaret Blackmer. She ha’s entered school there— “Rosemary Hall.” I have a letter from her mother this morning conveying the news. By George I never heard of such a rush to one place before. And that a mere village!

Name your day. I am always at home, & ready. I do not go away, ever; even to see married daughters off on the steamer.

Drat that plumber, she is suspiciously silent. Do you know, the silence of a plumber always means meditation? & that a plumber’s meditations always mean business? business for the plumber, & expense for some lamb som’ers.

Sincerely yours
S. L. Clemens OVER

Gabrilowitsch is an exceedingly fine fellow & I am glad to have him on the family list. He has done me one service for which I am most thoroughly grateful: he has squelched Clara’s “career.” She is done with the concert-stage—permanently, I pray. I hate the word. I never want to hear it again. I had a “career” ~~of a~~ on the platform. I could not learn to like it; yet it was when I had escaped jail, & the fresh air of freedom ought to have been all-in-all to me, but it was not. I went back, of my own accord, & served out my time. And not only in California, but afterwards in New Jersey & Arkansas & another state—or territory, I do not remember which [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Anna M. Vilas (Mrs. William Freeman Villas).

Dear Mrs. Vilas: / I thank you so much for the Memorial, which I have read with the deepest interest. I had a warm place in my heart for Colonel Vilas, & a great admiration for his lofty gifts & character. I can still vividly see him, as I saw him twenty years ago, lacking a month, at the Grant banquet in Chicago, as he stood upon a table, with his lips closing upon the last word of his magnificent speech, & his happy eyes looking out in contentment over a sea of applauding soldiers glimpsed through a frantic storm of waving napkins—a great picture, a thrilling picture, & one which will never grow dim in my memory.

I thank you again, dear madam. / Sincerely Yours / ... / P.S. No, it was 30 years ago [MTP].

Note: William Freeman Vilas (1840-1908) gave a speech at the Nov. 13, 1879 Chicago banquet for Ulysses S. Grant, where Twain gave his famous “babies” speech. Vilas served in Grover Cleveland’s cabinet (1885-1889) and was a senator from Wisconsin (1891-1897). Sam wrote Livy on Nov. 14, 1879 remarking of Vilas’ speech, “O, wasn’t it wonderful.”

Ambrose Bierce wrote from Wash. DC congratulations to Sam on Clara’s wedding [MTP].

Sarah E.R. Fitzwilliam wrote from Chicago to give a dollar to the Redding Library and asked for Sam’s autographed receipt [MTP].

Richard E. Johnston wrote to Sam. “I received your letter and the same is very good. We are having copies of them made and we will send it to each person who has engaged your daughter” [MTP].

Lincoln National Bank per David C. Grant wrote to Sam that as requested in Sam’s Oct. 10 letter, they had a letter of credit for £500.00 made out to Clara; also they’d sent a draft for M.700.00 on Berlin, Germany sent to Jean L. Clemens, at her request [MTP].

Bernard S. Phelps, Phelps Shoe Co., New Orleans wrote to ask for an autograph [MTP].

George Morris Philips wrote to Sam, having mailed “Your Autobiography and First Romance” for Sam to “write a few words” in [MTP]. Note: “Howells story / answered”

October 14 Thursday – On this day or Oct. 15 in Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Clara at the Hotel Latham, N.Y.C.

“Mrs. Gabrilowitsch / Hotel Latham, 5th ave & 28th st. New York

“It is very distressing & I am sorry but the hospital will be ever so much better & safer for appendicitis than the ship. Gabrilowitsch is in luck again. Tell him so from me. / Marcus.” [MTP]. Note: Clara’s groom had appendicitis. They canceled their voyage to Europe and he was operated on. See Oct. 17 NY Times squib.

Joe Goodman wrote from Alameda, Calif. to Sam. “Dear Mark— / Your card announcing the marriage of Clara with Ossip Gabrilowitsch is just received. / God bless them! – and bless us all! / Yours ever” [MTP].

Mary E. Wood wrote to Sam enclosing a dollar for the Mark Twain Library and requesting an autograph in return for her Hillcrest edition copy [MTP].

October 15 Friday – In the evening the Mark Twain Library Association held “The Harvest Home Dance” at the barn of Meeker Jones. The attendance was “large” at this costume events, which ended with one of Sam’s old favorites, the “Virginia Reel” dance. The minutes do not disclose Sam’s attendance [MTLA minutes copied at the Library by Tenney Nov. 15, 1981].

John Bigelow wrote to Sam.

TO OPERATE ON GABRILOWITCH

Mark Twain’s Son-in-Law Has Appendicitis—Cancels Sailing.

Ossip Gabrilowitch [sic], the pianist, who recently was married to Miss Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain, did not sail with his bride yesterday on the steamship Kaiserin Auguste Victoria. He visited the vessel just before she sailed to get his mail. He found it inconvenient to sail at this time.

Mr. Gabrilowitch added that he expected to be operated on next Monday for appendicitis.

October 18 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Albert B. Paine wrote for Sam to prof. Archibald Henderson at Univ. N. Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Dear Prof. Henderson, / This is a line from both Mr. Clemens and myself, as the present state of Mr. Clemens’s health prohibits personal letter-writing on his part. He wishes to thank you for the newspaper clipping you sent him, and to congratulate you on the success of your article, both of which sentiments I desire to echo. I wish also to express appreciation of your very excellent article in the recent Harper Magazine. It is pleasant that they keep us side by side in that periodical—you in the lead, as is proper. / Very sincerely yours, / Albert B. Paine [MTP].

We are waiting—in some little anxiety—for news from Gabrilowit[s]ch. October 21 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Mrs. John Paul Jones.

Dear Mrs. Jones: / It is lovely of you to think of Clara. Gabrilowitsch had to go to the hospital (appendicitis) just as he & Clara were ready to step aboard the steamer for Germany. He is recovering with fair progress, & within a fortnight the pair expect to come up here & stay until he is sound & strong again. G. is pretty well run down. He was here in the house all summer recovering from three operations for the mastoid process. This is a quiet region, & suitable for invalids. The couple will occupy a cottage on this farm at an easy visiting-distance from this house; easy walking-distance—a third of a mile.

Indeed I should like to go & see you—many thanks for the invitation, dear Mrs. Jones. But I don’t suppose I shall ever make another journey until man’s best friend comes for me. By that fine phrase I am referring to the undertaker.

With affectionate regards to you all, / ... [MTP].

An unidentified person wrote from England to Sam. (Only the envelope survives) [MTP]. Postmarked Oct. 10 England, and forwarded Oct. 21 from Hartford.

A dictation in the Lyon-Ashcroft MS is headed “Miss Lyon’s habits,” and “Dictated October 21, 1909”:

Little by little the evidence comes out as to Miss Lyon’s drinking habits. Strohmeier’s man was here yesterday, and he spoke of an incident in this line, which occurred in the days when this house was being finally equipped inside for occupancy. He was here to put up window-shades and curtains. He heard Miss Lyon scream, and he ran into the room where she was. She seemed to be overmastered by hysterics, and cried out “hold my hands! hold my hands!” He held her hands, a dozen workmen came running to see what the screaming was about, and there they found the dramatic situation which I have just described. Among the inflow was Lounsbury. He was clam; he knew Miss Lyon’s breed of hysterics; he had had experience of them before; and he knew what to do. He drew a flask of whisky and said, “Give her this, it will quiet her. It got a welcome reception.

Miss Lyon was drunk, and Lounsbury knew it. On another occasion when she was hysterically drunk, she demanded whisky, and they gave her a third of a glass, which emptied the bottle. She demanded more, and was told there was no more to be had immediately, because Claude had the key of the wine-closet, and he was not about. She flew into a rage, and dashed the bottle against the wall, and broke it. I think Lounsbury was present on that occasion, too, but I will ask him, and make sure.

When Katie, Claude, and Miss Lyon were completing the clearing out of the house in Fifth Avenue, in September of last year, Miss Lyon ran out of liquor, and demanded a fresh supply. There wasn’t any. She said she could not do this kind of work without the help of restoratives, and ordered Claude to fetch a bottle of Scotch whisky from the Brevoort—which he did. By the testimony of Claude and Katie, she finished that bottle before bedtime.

Strohmeyer's young man said yesterday, that during the housebuilding—so the workmen said—Miss Lyon was not only pretty customarily and manifestly under the influence of liquor, but that she was quite generous with it with the men; in hurrying them up, she would encourage them with whisky, remarking that she herself found that she could work better with the help of a little stimulant of that kind.

A few days after she was discharged from here last spring, she visited the house one day, and before going asked Claude for a glass. He brought it, and also brought the whisky bottle, supposing she would want that also; but she said no, she had found brandy a better restorative when she was fagged than whisky. She produced a flask, and poured out a quantity measuring something more than a claret-glass, and drank it off neat, without water.

Katie says Miss Lyon always kept a bottle of cocktails in her room, in a cupboard, both in New York, and here at Stormfield, and that a bottle lasted her only about a day, and she was drinking a good deal of whisky, besides, Ashcroft was doing the same. Claude and Katie say he was a liberal drinker.

In the sixty-two days of July and August of last year, this house ordered—and also consumed—forty-eight quarts of Scotch whisky. Yesterday I examined the guest-book, and found there the names of a couple of generous drinkers of Scotch whisky. Apparently one of them was here two days and two nights, and the other one night. It is possible that between them they drank three quarts. In that two months two other men were here, who drink Scotch whisky, but as they drink it only at dinner, with water, in the English fashion, their consumption of that kind of whisky was necessarily slender, and they were only here one or two days anyway. In those days I drank Scotch whisky once in every twenty-four hours; and always after I was in bed, and ready for sleep. I took the same quantity always, a liquer glassful. While in those days I probably consumed a quart of Scotch whisky in a fortnight, nowadays a quart lasts me a month. If we allow that three or four guests drank four bottles in these two months, and I four, that makes eight. Miss Lyon always kept the key of the wine-closet herself, after we moved into the house, and perhaps she, with the help of Ashcroft, would be able to explain what went with the other forty quarts of Scotch whisky consumed under this roof in the sixty-two days of July and August, 1908.

We had many a guest in those old times. Nowadays a number of them speak quite freely of Miss Lyon's drunks, as observed by them; also they speak rather frankly of my dulness in not perceiving that she was a drunkard; and when they don't speak of my dulness in this connection, they doubt that I am telling the strict truth when I say that I did not know that she was a heavy drinker. And so, no matter which attitude they take, I come out without a compliment. I don't deny that I knew Miss Lyon to be a drinker, and that I knew it all of two years ago, but I did not know she was a heavy drinker. She came to my room with great frequency, both in the night and in the day, to borrow some of my whisky, saying she was out, and not feeling well, and my bottle was nearer than the wine closet. Now, in as much as she is a convicted thief and misused my check-book to steal money from me, it is quite likely, that upon a pinch she would steal whisky also. Katie says Miss Lyon used to hold up my bottle, and say somebody has been filching from it, and that without doubt it was Teresa. Teresa was born and reared in a land of light wines; circumstantial evidence pints, not to her, but to Miss Lyon, as the whisky thief [Section XXI].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

October 22 Friday

October 23 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent a postcard (picture of Stormfield) to Elizabeth Hatch (Mrs. John C. Hatch) in Maplewood, N.J.: “All sorts of congratulations & cordial good wishes, from a fellow-pupil (Dawson's School) of 60 years ago! /SL. Clemens” [MTP]. Note: Betty Owsley.

October 24 Sunday – Sam's new guestbook:

Arthur L. Sherman wrote from NYC sending a bill for the Library and a picture of his son (not in file) and a story of the boy being at death's door, then recovering after many surgeries and the reading of TS [MTP].

October 25 Monday – Lord Northcliffe wrote from Newfoundland to congratulate Sam on Clara's wedding. "I shall be in New York next month if by any chance you are there I hope you will let me clasp you by the hand" [MTP].

October 26 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Thomas Power O'Connor now at the Hoffman House N.Y.C.

My Dear Mr. O'Connor, / I am living here at Redding, sixty miles from New York, easy of access, though prohibited by my physician from getting away. Can't you run up and let me have a look at you? There is a train from the Lexington Avenue station at 8.50 in the morning, and one at 3.32 in the afternoon. These are express trains, and come through without change. Any time will suit me. Pick your own day and train, and let me know, and I will send for you to the station. Telegrams are delivered here, and you can also reach me by telephone, No. "774, Danbury, Conn." Won't you come? / Very truly yours, / ... [MTP].

C.G. Child for the Victor Talking-Machine Co., Camden, N.J. wrote to Sam, offering $1,000 for Sam to make records of "a few of your famous stories" [MTP].

October 27 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a note to Beatrice M. Benjamin (H.H. Rogers' granddaughter) in N.Y.C.: "This isn't to wish you many happy returns of the occasion, but only of its anniversary. I hope there will be a rich abundance of those, & that each succeeding one will be happier than its predecessor." The note was to be included in a set of Mark Twain books, red-bound, for her wedding on Nov. 7 [MTP].

Sam then wrote to Frederick A. Duneka of Harper's, instructing him to send Miss Benjamin the above books [MTP].

N. Lafayette-Savay for the American Civic Alliance wrote to ask Clemens to make "a short address" at their banquet on Dec. 11 [MTP].

October 28 Thursday – In the evening a dance was held at the "old Selleck house through the courtesy of Mr. Bergquist, the present occupant...at which the guests wore sheets, pillow cases & masks, quite a number were present, and all seemed to have a pleasant time" [MTLA minutes copied at the Library by Tenney Nov. 15, 1981]. Note: it is not known if Sam attended, though it is doubtful, as he was under a sort of "house arrest" by doctor's orders.

October 29 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a longer letter to Beatrice M. Benjamin.

Dear Beatrice: / It is unbearable to think of you, so old & dear a friend, getting married & I not there. I shall be if the doctor permits. But a person can't count upon doctors; they would not let me go to New York a fortnight ago to see Clara off when she thought she was going to sail for Europe. Any fatigue, any exertion disables me for a day or two; so I stay in the house all the time, & haven't been out of the yard for three months.

All this long time I have been trying to realize that it is you that are going to be married; but I don't succeed. To me there are three of you—& each of you a quite separate & distinct person, & unrelated to the other two. I see you clearest and know you best as a little chap; later I got acquainted with a girl of 14 at Fairhaven bearing your name; & five or six years later still I got acquainted with this other one: this tall one, this slender one, that has inherited the quite sufficient beauty of the others, & added to it. And so there is a confusion in my mind: I know it is you that is going to be married, but I don't know which one. That is, I don't realize . . . realize . . . I . . . well, I . . .

My mind is wandering. If all three of you . . . no, that would be unlawful, it would be bigamy. If . . . if . . . well, it seems to me . . .

I shall have a relapse, now, & it will be your fault, Beatrice. Always, these days, when I try to work my intellect I have a relapse.

Well, anyway, I hope you will be happy forever, dear, all four of you. This includes Mr. Pratt, that abnormally fortunate man. / Always affectionately / ... [MTP]. Note: see Oct. 27 to Benjamin, and also to Duneka.

Sam also wrote to David W. Seaver.

Dear Sir:

I remember your uncle very well, & very pleasantly, too, but I do not remember about the book.

I doubt if the book would interest me, but I shall be glad to see you if you will look in & give me a chance when you are passing. / Very truly yours / ... [MTP].

Possibly this day Sam also replied to Arthur Conan Doyle.

My dear Sir: / I have received your book, "The Crime of the Congo," with Leopold of Belgium's heartless trade-mark printed on the back of it—the photograph of a little black boy with a hand & a foot cut off for use as evidence to Leopold's representatives that certain of his rules for the government of the natives have been duly enforced. I do not mean that this is his confessed trademark, I only mean that this is the ~~one that is registered in heaven & is the real recognized right one~~ right one, the honest one, the veracious one ~~Would it be uncourteous in me to hope the king is going to wear it in hell? Would it? I do not wish to be uncourteous; I would not~~ [canceled page missing] trademark, anything will do. Let him choose for himself when he gets there. ~~the one the Congo State~~ the one he uses officially when he is disguised as the Congo State is pleasanter to look at & more innocent to the eye, but is misleading.

It seems curious that for about thirty years Leopold & the Belgians have been daily & nightly committing upon the helpless Congo natives all the hundred kinds of atrocious crimes known to the heathen savage & the pious inquisitor without rousing Christendom to a fury of generous indignation; all Christendom: statesmen, journalists, philanthropists, women, children. Even the Church, even the pulpit, even the rest of the cemeteries [MTP].

Thomas Power O'Connor wrote on New Hoffman House notepaper to Sam. "Of course I must see you before I leave America, but at the present moment, however, and for a fortnight to come I will be very busy every day and night. At the end of that time I shall try to have a weeks' freedom in New York and will then run down one day....I was glad to see the marriage of your daughter..." [MTP]. "Ans'd"

Miss Helen Roberts from Sheffield, England, wrote a fan letter to Sam. She was "a confirmed Baconian" [MTP].

October 30 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Helen Schuyler Allen in Hamilton, Bermuda.

Dear Helen: / I hope you & your mother reached your island safe & well. It was a short visit you gave me, but it was delightful, & it must be repeated some day & lengthened, if you'll be so good.

We have fitted up & furnished the small house that is a quarter of a mile from here & it is charming. We did it because we expect my daughter & her new husband to come up & take a little rest there from sickbed-vigils & surgical operations before they sail for Germany Nov. 20.

I wish you were back hear, dear! With lots of love to you, & proper modifications of it to your mother— / SLC [MTP; not in MTAq].

Sam also wrote to Helen Kerr Blackmer (Mrs. Henry Myron Blackmer) in N.Y.C.

Dear Mrs. Blackmer: / To-day you will be going to Myron; but by next Friday or Saturday (Nov. 5 or 6) Margaret will be out of jail, & if she doesn't commit any fresh crimes in the meantime I hope you'll come then.

We can't tell when Gabrilowitsch will be well enough to come up, but it doesn't matter, anyway—there'll be bed & shelter for you & Margaret. Do try to come—I am laying up good weather for you. / Affectionately Yours / & Margaret's /... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mrs. Augusta M.D. Ogden in N.Y.C.

Dear Mrs. Ogden:

It was shabby of me to furnish such weather, but I did it by accident, not intention. Try again, & I will do a great deal better, I give you my word.

Gabrilowitsch is improving quite satisfactorily, these days. / Sincerely Yours / SL. Clemens [in left-hand margin:] You never saw such plumbing. The flies come right through the screens, so does the dog [MTP].

October 31 Sunday

November – Paine writes of what Clemens had been reading this month, including Chivalry (1909) by James Branch Cabell. “He cannot say enough of the subtle poetic art with which Cabell has flung the light of romance about dark and sordid chapters of history” [MTB 1535; Gribben 122].

Atlantic Monthly for November issue ran “Atlantic Dinners and Diners” by Arthur Gilman, p. 646-57. Tenney: “A brief account of his Whittier Birthday-Dinner speech, with no indication that it gave offense” [47].

November 1 Monday

November 2 Tuesday – Janet Duff Gordon Ross wrote from Florence to congratulate Sam on Clara's marriage and to ask if he was ever going to return to Italy [MTP].

November 3 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent an order form to Harper & Brothers for their story, “Beasley's Xmas Party” to be sent to various of his friends (blank lines left for Sam to write in names) [MTP: Harper's Weekly Magazine, 18 Dec. 1909]. Note: “Beasley's Christmas Party,” by Booth Tarkington (1909); see Gribben 686.

Paine writes of the day's activities:

November 3. He said he could not sleep last night, for thinking what a fool he had been in his various investments.

“I have always been the victim of somebody,” he said, “and always an idiot myself, doing things that even a child would not do. Never asking anybody's advice—never taking it when it was offered. I can't see how anybody could do the things I have done and have kept right on doing.” I could see that the thought agitated him, and I suggested that we go to his room and read, which we did, and had a riotous time over the most recent chapters of the ‘Letters from the Earth’, and some notes he had made for future chapters on infant damnation and other distinctive features of orthodox creeds. He told an anecdote of an old minister who declared that Presbyterianism without infant damnation would be like the dog on the train that couldn't be identified because it had lost its tag.

Somewhat on the defensive I said, “But we must admit that the so-called Christian nations are the most enlightened and progressive.”

He answered, "Yes, but in spite of their religion, not because of it. The Church has opposed every innovation and discovery from the day of Galileo down to our own time, when the use of anesthetics in child-birth was regarded as a sin because it avoided the biblical curse pronounced against Eve. And every step in astronomy and geology ever taken has been opposed by bigotry and superstition. The Greeks surpassed us in artistic culture and in architecture five hundred years before the Christian religion was born.

"I have been reading Gibbon's celebrated Fifteenth Chapter," he said later, "and I don't see what Christians found against it. It is so mild—so gentle in its sarcasm." He added that he had been reading also a little book of brief biographies and had found in it the saying of Darwin's father, "Unitarianism is a featherbed to catch falling Christians."

"I was glad to find and identify that saying," he said; "it is so good."

He finished the evening by reading a chapter from Carlyle's French Revolution—a fine pyrotechnic passage—the gathering at Versailles. I said that Carlyle somehow reminded me of a fervid stump-speaker who pounded his fists and went at his audience fiercely, determined to convince them.

"Yes," he said, "but he is the best one that ever lived" [MTB 1534-35].

C.G. Child for the Victor Talking-Machine Co. wrote to Paine (though catalogued to Clemens). He gave details of the contract he might make with Twain for him to record some of his short stories [MTP].

Lillian I. Stivers wrote to Sam. She was a high school girl in Niles, Calif. and the "daughter of Lillian McCarthy-Stivers, the eldest daughter of the late D.E. McCarthy whom you knew in Virginia City, Nev..... It has been my mother's as well as my own great desire to receive a letter from you...mama told of your former friendship with grandpa; I then looked through some old papers and found a letter from you to grandpa. This letter however did not satisfy me as I wanted one of my own" [MTP]. Note: Denis McCarthy's daughter.

November 4 Thursday – Lotta M. Crabtree wrote on Brewster Hotel, Boston notepaper to ask forgiveness for "not having acknowledged at once the invitation to your daughter's wedding" [MTP]. Note: "Lotta" / Autograph Col"

John Wallace Crawford wrote from NYC to Sam, opening the letter with a verse which he said "comes right out of my Broncho soul..." He had been "very much hurt when I received a letter from Miss Lyon containing a statement to the effect that you had a contract with your publishers which prevented you from saying a kind word about my Broncho book and my letter to Miss Lyon was pretty warm, I assure you, but when she explained I apologized poetically" Now he was "decidedly anxious" to visit at Stormfield. A story enclosed and mentioned is not in the file [MTP].

November 5 Friday – William Dean Howells wrote from N.Y.C. to Sam.

Dear Clemens: / I wanted to come to you tomorrow and so did Pilla; but we are bound hand and foot with engagements Saturday and Sunday. I would propose myself for next week, only my brother Joe, on his way back to his consulate at Turks Island, is to be with us, and I can't leave. Let me offer for a later date. I have a good deal of talk in me, and I should like to hear some gab from you. I have been hearing your gab, for I have gone again to your books for my good night cheer and downhearted days, and found you as gay as you used to be, in those blessed short things of yours. There never was anybody like you, and there won't be. Just the same Clara and I held you up to obloquy when she called, the other morning. She's been having a high old honeymoon, hasn't she, poor girl, with appendicitis in the house the first thing. But surgery seems to follow us all. I came home to find my poor wife in bed, here, after an operation a in Boston hospital. She and her sister had kept it from Pilla and me, even sending their letters to be posted from Kittery Point; and we knew nothing about it till we went into her room here. She had some swollen glands removed, and an anxiety of twenty years standing. In 1889 I went with her to see a great New York specialist, and he divinely reassured us. The next day the family found him dead on the floor of his coupe after a drive home from Brooklyn. Such is life—and death. We found we were of the same age, and he said, "Well, how do you like your work?"

“How do you like yours?” “Well, I don’t jump to it.”—You see, I am trying to cheer you up now, in return for the gayety I got out of your books. Don’t thank me; I hate gratitude. Yours ever / W.D. Howells [MTHL 2: 848].

November 6 Saturday – Frank L. Dyer for National Phonograph Co., Orange, NJ wrote to Sam.

Mr. Edison has asked me several times to try to interest you in the subject of making phonograph records, preferably of some original matter. My friend, Mr. Thomas C. Martin, at my suggestion, has already had some correspondence with your Secretary regarding this matter, but nothing seems to have been accomplished. Recently you were kind enough to permit us to dramatize “The Prince and the Pauper” in moving pictures, and it occurs to me that possibly something might be done now with the phonograph record. Are you disposed to take up this matter for discussion? Of course, we are willing to pay very liberally for the record... [MTP].

G. & C. Merriam Co., Springfield, Mass. wrote to ask Sam if they might send a complimentary copy of the Webster’s New International Dictionary, as they were “seeking a verdict” on the work [MTP]. Note: MT: “Yes, send it. / SLC”

Spectator Magazine ran an anonymous review of “Is Shakespeare Dead?” p. 716. Tenney: MT’s ‘quaint humor, to say nothing of his more solid qualities, has won him innumerable friends wherever the English language is spoken. He has been for half a century the chartered libertine of literature, and anything that falls from his pen may count upon an indulgent reception.’ This new book makes ‘a strong demand upon our indulgence. It would be difficult to find any writer of repute less qualified by knowledge, or possession of the critical faculty, to enter upon such an undertaking than Mark Twain” [Tenney, ALR Second Annual Supplement to the Reference Guide (Autumn, 1978) 176].

November 7 Sunday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Beatrice M. Benjamin on her wedding day.

Dear Beatrice:

After all, I have to give it up, & ask you to convey my thanks & regrets to your mother & Mrs. Coe, whose kind messages have reached me. I do not get rid of that malady’s assaults. If I should have one at the wedding I should get more than my share of attention, for I should have to lie down in a pew. It is a great, a very very great disappointment to me; yet in a way it is one of those ill winds that partly justify themselves by blowing modified compensations. If I should go down to see you off I should naturally have to stay over a day, & see my married daughter off, too, whereas at bottom I do not wish to do that, as the chances are against my ever seeing her again, for the reason that she will be in Europe a long while, & I am not willing to go abroad again—at least until I can go sound.

In truth I’ve no business to want to see you off—on the supreme stage of the tragedy of life; but I do, I can’t help it. However, I think you & your “Alex” are booked for a happy & prosperous voyage, & that is a cheery thought for us that are left behind on the pier.

I have had a dream—a curious one & interesting; a dream in 2 Acts. Principal feature of the first Act, the wedding; principal feature of the other Act, myself. Your Act will come true anyway, & my act will come true if it does come true, otherwise it won’t. I can’t tell yet. According to the nature of dreams, my half of this one will come true if I tell it before the wedding. I think I won’t. But I will tell it the first time you & your other half come to see me, or by granted privilege I go to see you.

It was a lovely letter you wrote me from Atlantic City, & was just like yourself. I think your “Alex” is a man to be envied; indeed I know it.

Affectionately yours as from the earliest days, / ... [MTP]. Note: Beatrice’s incoming not extant.

Sam also wrote to Margery H. Clinton in Tuxedo Park, N.Y.

Dear Plumber: / I wish you & Miss Rogers would come & pay us that visit. I will promise to praise the plumbing every day, no matter what condition it is in. I am doing it now, although the billiard table is not plumb, & the balls always roll down to sou-west, no matter which way they start.

Come—name a day! and send me word. / Affectionately / ... [MTP].

Sam also replied to the Nov. 5 from William Dean Howells.

Dear Howells:

This week being occupied by Joe, can't you try the coming one, you & Mildred? You choose the date & name it; then if there is anything in the way, Jean & I can say so & propose another one. Not necessarily a Saturday—any day is good, here. And stay several days if you can spare the time.

This is wonderful weather; I hope it will last.

Mrs. Howells was splendidly heroic. A man couldn't have done that, & wouldn't; he would have advertised it. It takes a woman to do such things. I remember Dean Sage's wife doing similarly, a great many years ago. She waited till Dean was out of reach, up on the Restigouche, then she sent for the surgeon & had herself carved up, & kept it from Dean until he got back home.

A stranger came, half an hour ago. I do not quite make out what strangers are for. It would have been so much better for us all if this one had been caught by mistake 19 centuries ago & crucified. Then the other ne would have gone free, & that would have had pleasant results for everybody. If Mrs. Eddy would try martyrdom it would make her cult permanent; & besides, I would be her friend.

That stranger—— but never mind, let him go; he will die some day. Damn him he could have done it here if he had had any spirit of accommodation in him. / Yours ever / Mark [MTP; MTHL 2: 849].

November 8 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam replied to the Oct. 29 from Miss Helen Roberts.

Dear Miss Roberts: / I am not sure I understand the question, but it seems to be Am I jesting, or am I in earnest in believing Shakespeare did not write Shakspeare? If that is it, I am in earnest, & not jesting.

Indeed yes, I find the world delightful, & its inhabitants—entertaining. (That dash is not profanity, it is a pause, for time to think of the right word.) Of course the inhabitants are the world. Taking myself as a just & fair average, & thus as being in my own person the entire human race concentrated, I have examined the race daily, carefully, earnestly, honestly, for 30 years—with this result: I do not think much of myself.

Still, in some particular I do think rather well of myself, & complacently regard myself as superior to the rest of the race. For instance—however, this is a letter, not a book. I have a “philosophy”—(you used the word), but I don't know that I have exposed it anywhere—that is, intentionally. I printed it some years ago, anonymously, then suppressed it; it will never be published. ~~I have handed it confidentially to a couple of dozen prudent friends. Three of four of them understood it & believed in it, the others did not understand it, & couldn't be made to understand it; still, they had opinions about it just the same, & the opinions were not complimentary to me. “What is Man?” I think I will send it to you.~~

~~It doesn't say “.....”~~

No, it doesn't say it, but it leads straight up to it. ~~It did say it, in the closing chapter, but I struck it out. My courage failed me.~~ / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP]. Note: strikeouts left in here. Evidently Clemens thought twice about advertising he had shared his “philosophy” with friends, and/or sending a copy to Miss Roberts.

Sam received a copy of Oscar Garrett Wall's *Recollections of the Sioux Massacre and offered a letter of endorsement, this date.

Mr O G Wall— Dear Sir: I find your history of the Great Massacre blood-curdlingly & most pathetically interesting. I am able to endorse General Hubbard's compliment & highly commend the literary excellence of the book. Very truly yours SL. Clemens [Kevin Mac Donnell MT Forum post Apr. 24, 2011]. Note: Mac Donnell adds, "This letter was reprinted in facsimile in blood red ink as an advertising flyer for Wall's book."

Oscar Garrett Wall (1844-1911), was disabled early in the Civil War, and served as a state legislator in the Minnesota House of Representatives (1885-1886). Not in Gribben.

November 10 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to an unidentified person.

What went with about $10,000.

It now appears that I had 3 enemies on the Milk Products Board, whereas I supposed 2 of them were my friends. They pretended to be. They bought-in the dead Plasmon Co. & paid $7,000 of my money for it when they knew that its only valuable asset—the patents—had reverted to the London Company.

They sold me $5,000 M. P. stock for $2,500 cash, without asking me whether I wanted it or not.

At the same time, they sold $20,000 M. P. stock to the London Co at half the price they charged me—& not for cash, but goods.

They acquainted me with none of these swindles at the time. / SL. Clemens [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Elizabeth Wallace at the Univ. of Chicago.

Dear Betsy: / Happily it is congratulations, not condolences. We have known Gabrilowits[c]h intimately for 11 years—ever since Vienna days, when he & Clara were pupils of Leschitzki. They were engaged years ago—twice. Broken both times, to Mrs. Clemens's great regret. Gab is a very fine human being, in every way.

I get nearly as much delight out of this marriage as I do out of the irrevocable soldering together of that pair of thieves that nested in my bosom so long [Lyon & Ashcroft]

When I wrote you, I was not aware that a wedding was immediately impending. The hurry was caused by a surgical operation. It was not getting along very well, & Clara wanted to nurse the patient. There's been another operation since, so the nursing still goes on, in the hospital.

Jean abides with me, & runs a farm & keeps my accounts. I sign the checks myself. I won't trust that to anybody again. My, how they did skin me!

No, I haven't had any 7-page letters from Margaret—no letters at all, in fact. She & her mother were to visit us last week, but Margaret broke some school-rules & was put under ban.

My Bermuda fish has been here—Helen Schuyler Allen. She has grown considerably, but is as sweet & innocent & unspoiled a child as ever she was.

I sent you Booth Tarkington's little xmas book the other day. I hate xmas stories, but this one is bright & felicitous, & hasn't any religion in it, & I like it.

I've written a xmas thing myself, for the Bazar, but if it has any religion in it I didn't notice it. /Affectionately /... [MTP]. Note: "Beasley's Christmas Party" (1909) by Booth Tarkington [Gribben 686].

William Dean Howells wrote from NYC to Sam.

Dear Clemens: / All right; I will try to climb your hill some time next week; but as yet I can't name the day. It will be rather late in the week; and as Pilla has started in with her usual sore throat, I'm afraid she can't come with me. Joe sails Saturday, and that keeps me over this week.

Jean has kindly made a date for me, but I have to keep myself clear of the almanac for the present. / Yours ever / W.D. Howells [MTHL 2: 850]. Note: the Joe referred to was brother of Howells.

Paine writes of a conversation with Clemens on this day:

November 10. This morning early he heard me stirring and called. I went in and found him propped up with a book, as usual. He said:

"I seldom read Christmas stories, but this is very beautiful. It has made me cry. I want you to read it." (It was Booth Tarkington's 'Beasley's Christmas Party'.) "Tarkington has the true touch," he said; "his work always satisfies me." Another book he has been reading with great enjoyment is James Branch Cabell's Chivalry. He cannot say enough of the subtle poetic art with which Cabell has flung the light of romance about dark and sordid chapters of history [MTB 1535].

November 11 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Miss Lillian I. Stivers, Niles, Calif.

Dear Miss Lillian: / Surprises are frequent, & I am used to them, but a granddaughter of Denis McCarthy is a new kind, & away out of the common order. Pleasant, too. He was entitled to all good things, & a granddaughter is the top-stone of the pyramid, I judge. I should rank her there if I had one.

I wish you all prosperity & all happiness, for that dear soul's sake, & for your own. / Sincerely Yours / ... [MTP]. Note: Denis E. McCarthy, part owner of Virginia City Territorial Enterprise. See vol I entries.

New York Times Editors sent a printed invitation for Clemens to meet Commaner Robert E. Perry at dinner on Nov. 11, 7:30, Times Building [MTP]. Note: likely sent before Nov. 11

November 12 Friday – W.H. Fletcher for the Robert Fulton Monument wrote to Sam. "It has been my intention to acknowledge your letter about the Miller controversy....Mr. Vanderbilt, Mr. Cutting, Mr. Guggenheim and others were very glad to see you assert your rights against others in signing themselves as Acting-President." He conveyed notice about a dinner to be held on Nov.18 at the Hotel Plaza for the sailing to the Philippines by Colonel H.O.S. Heistand, and advised they were sending Harry Dearborn up to "explain the affair in detail" [MTP].

November 13 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Elizabeth Wallace.

Dear Betsy— / No, I haven't read it, but you make me want to read it—hungry to read it, in fact. I am all ready for it. Meantime, I've been writing "Letters from the Earth," & if you will come here & see us I will — what? Put this MS in your hands, with the places to skip marked? No, I won't trust you quite that far, an I. C. in good standing though you be. I'll read passages to you. This book will never be published—in fact it couldn't be, because it would be felony to soil the mails with it, for it has much Holy Scripture in it of the kind that prostitutes & Christians like, but which can't properly be read aloud, except from the pulpit & in family worship. Paine enjoys it, but Paine is going to be damned one of these days, I suppose.

The autumn splendors passed you by? What a pity. I wish you had been here. It was beyond words! It was heaven & hell & sunset & rainbows & the aurora all fused into one divine harmony, & you couldn't look at it & keep the tears back. All the hosannahing strong gorgeousnesses have gone back to heaven & hell & the pole, now, but no matter; if you could look out at my bedroom window at this moment, you would choke up; & when you got your voice you would say 'This is not real, this is a dream. Such a singing together, & such a whispering together, & such a snuggling together of cosy soft colors, & such kissing & caressing, & such pretty blushing when the sun breaks out & catches those dainty weeds at it—you remember that weed-garden of mine?—& then—then the far hills sleeping in a dim blue trance—oh, hearing about it is nothing, you should be here to see it.

Good! I wish I could go on the platform & read. And I could, if it could be kept out of the papers. There's a charity-school of 400 young girls in Boston that I would give my ears to talk to if I had some more; but—oh, well, I can't go, & so it's no use to grieve about it.

This morning Jean went to town; also Paine; also the butler; also Katy; also the laundress. The cook & the maid, & the boy, & the roustabout Jean's coachman are left—just enough to make it lonesome, because they are around yet never visible. However, the Harpers are sending Leigh up to play billiards; therefore I shall survive. / Affectionately / ... [MTP].

November 15 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Albert B. Paine wrote for Sam to prof. Archibald Henderson at Univ. N. Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Dear Professor Henderson, / Your article in the Deutsch'e Revue pleases Mr. Clemens very much indeed, and with his favorable opinion all in this house concur. Miss Jean Clemens who is very proficient in the German, is especially delighted with your facility in that language.

Very sincerely yours, / Albert Bigelow Paine [MTP].

The New York Times, p. 7, “Dinner to Col. Heistand” announced that Mark Twain would speak on Thursday, Nov. 18. Clemens did not go to New York on this week and did not speak at the dinner.

Margery Hamilton Clinton wrote to Sam. Only the envelope survives. It was sold on History For Sale, Sept. 13, 2009, document #3344. Evidently Margery simply addressed the letter to “Samuel L. Clemens, Stormfield, Conn.” Sam then crossed out Stormfield and wrote, “Redding Ridge” adding “Here’s some more inefficient plumbing, you see. There ain’t no P.O. at Stormfield.” He then sent it back to Margery with his Nov. 17 note. Clinton then mentioned the mistake in her Nov. 30 to Clemens (auction source credits Robert Hirst, MTP for this information.)

November 16 Tuesday

November 17 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Margery H. Clinton in Toronto, Canada, enclosing her envelope sent on Nov. 15.

Dear Plumber: / Then we’ll postpone until your return.

To-day I have been condemned by the doctor to go away for two or three weeks—I can’t stand the idea! Still, it can’t be helped, I suppose. I haven’t been in quite satisfactory shape for several months. / Affectionately Yours / ... [MTP].

November 18 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Albert B. Paine wrote for Sam to the American Civic Alliance, 507 5th ave. N.Y.C. Paine requested that Clemens wished to withdraw his membership in the Alliance [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Margaret Blackmer.

I don’t seem to remember you, dear. At first I thought it might be Margaret-of-the-Shell, but doubts intruded, because I knew she wouldn’t be a whole year getting ready to write me. However, you will be sure to see her, for she goes to your school; & when you see her & make her acquaintance, you will find her very sweet & lovely. And will you be so good as to tell her day after tomorrow, & am expecting to be back before the middle of December. Also that by that time I shall hope to be well enough to run down to Greenwich & see her.

And please give her a great deal of love from / S L C [MTP; MTAq 266].

Sam also wrote to Dorothy Quick.

Dorothy dear, I haven't been well for the past 5 months, & so I haven't stirred from home; but now I've got to make a trip, by the doctor's orders. I don't want to. But I must obey, I suppose. I sail for Bermuda day after tomorrow with my secretary Mr. Paine for company. Perhaps we shall be back by the middle of December—we can't tell, yet.

I wonder how big you are by this time! I suppose you have grown clear out of recognition. I wish I could have a glimpse of you one of these days—and I hope I can. / With lots of love / ...[MTP; MTAq 266].

Richard Watson Gilder, age 65, died at the home of Mrs. Schuyler Van Rennselaer in N.Y.C. He would be buried in his hometown, Bordentown, N.J. on Nov. 20 [NY Times, Nov. 19, 1909, p.1, "R.W. Gilder Dies of Heart Disease"].

Joseph B. Gilder sent a telegram to Sam. "Richard died today Helena asks if you can be pall bearer Saturday or Sunday. Please tell Clara" [MTP].

November 19 Friday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent a telegram to Joseph B. Gilder, c/o The Century.

I am very sorry as should have gladly been an honorary Pall Bearer, but am going to Bermuda tomorrow in obedience to the "Doctors" orders. Jean Joins me in deepest sympathy with M^{rs}. Gilder. S. L. Clemens [MTP].

William McKay Laffan of the New York Sun died during surgery. Paine writes about receiving the news and meeting Sam at the train. See Nov. 20 entry.

Cornelius Vanderbilt for the Robert Fulton Monument sent a telegram to Sam. "Best wishes from all present at Heistand dinner tendered by Robert Fulton Monument Assn. The great service you have rendered in helping to honor Fulton's memory will always be appreciated" [MTP]

November 20 Saturday – Sam met Albert Bigelow Paine at the train station in N.Y.C. to board the Bermudian for the voyage to Bermuda. In Robert Underwood Johnson's Remembered Yesterdays, p.133, we find the following, which denotes that he had time to go to the funeral for Richard Watson Gilder: "As Mark Twain entered the Church of the Ascension at the funeral service, he said to a friend, 'I wish that I were that man lying in there'." Note: Paine in MTB does not mention Sam attending the funeral. He writes:

Next morning [Nov. 20] there was other news. Clemens's old friend, William M. Laffan of the Sun, had died while undergoing a surgical operation. I met Clemens at the train. He had already heard about Gilder; but he had not yet learned of Laffan's death. He said:

"That's just it. Gilder and Laffan get all the good things that come along and I never get anything."

Then, suddenly remembering, he added:

"How curious it is! I have been thinking of Laffan coming down on the train, and mentally writing a letter to him on this Stetson-Eddy affair."

I asked him when he had begun thinking of Laffan.

He said: "Within the hour."

It was within the hour that I had received the news, and naturally in my mind had carried it instantly to him. Perhaps there was something telepathic in it [MTB 1541].

November 21 Sunday – Clemens and Albert Bigelow Paine were aboard the Bermudian en route to Hamilton, Bermuda. The ship encountered rough seas and Paine suffered from seasickness [D. Hoffman 135]. Note: I have not come across one instance where Clemens ever suffered from seasickness.

November 22 Monday – The Bermudian arrived in the islands on a rainy day. They took rooms at the Hamilton Hotel. D. Hoffman writes:

Confined by the rainy day, Clemens discussed the possibility of a new planet. To his mind, even if life was governed by the same great laws of nature that so perfectly regulated celestial movement, the vast dimensions of outer space signified the miniscule importance of the human race. More than thirty years earlier, he had written of Tom Sawyer being as thrilled “as an astronomer feels who has discovered a new planet.” Mathematical studies of perturbations in the orbit of Uranus now led Sir Percival Lowell to postulate an unseen planet beyond Neptune. “I believe in the new planet,” Mark Twain impishly wrote earlier in 1909. “I am so sensitively constructed that I perturbate when any other planet is disturbed. This has been going on all my life. It only happens in the watermelon season.... I know there is a anew planet. I know it because I don’t perturbate for nothing” [135]. Note: See n9, p. 175 in source. See also MTB 1541-2, which notes that Clemens brought along a book, The Pith of Astronomy (Without Mathematics): The Latest Facts and Figures as Developed by the Giant Telescopes, by Samuel Gamble Bayne (1844-1924) [Gribben 53].

November 23 Tuesday – Sam and Paine stayed at the Hamilton Hotel for the first three days of their visit, which D. Hoffman cites from Marion Allen’s diary as unexpected [135]. Paine writes of their activities the day after their arrival:

Within a day after our arrival we were driving about those coral roads along the beaches, and by that marvelously variegated water. We went often to the south shore, especially to Devonshire Bay, where the reefs and the sea coloring seem more beautiful than elsewhere. Usually, when we reached the bay, we got out to walk along the indurated shore, stopping here and there to look out over the jeweled water—liquid turquoise, emerald lapis-lazuli, jade, the imperial garment of the Lord.

At first we went alone with only the colored driver, Clifford Trott, whose name Clemens could not recollect, though he was always attempting resemblances with ludicrous results. A little later Helen Allen, an early angel-fish member already mentioned, was with us and directed the drives, for she had been born on the island and knew every attractive locality, though, for that matter, it would be hard to find there a place that was not attractive.

Clemens, in fact, remained not many days regularly at the hotel. He kept a room and his wardrobe there; but he paid a visit to Bay House—the lovely and quiet home of Helen’s parents—and prolonged it from day to day, and from week to week, because it was a quiet and peaceful place with affectionate attention and limitless welcome. Clifford Trott had orders to come with the carriage each afternoon, and we drove down to Bay House for Mark Twain and his playmate, and then went wandering at will among the labyrinth of blossom-bordered, perfectly kept roadways of a dainty paradise, that never, I believe, becomes quite a reality even to those who know it best [MTB 1543]. Note: Paine does not specify, but it’s likely the “later” trips with Helen Allen came days after this day. Clifford Trott would daily pick up Paine at the Hamilton Hotel and take him to the Bay House to collect Clemens and Helen Allen.

Lincoln National Bank per David C. Grant wrote to advise Sam of a charge to his account for “$707.56, for draft of £144 drawn by Mrs. Clara Gabrilowitsch” [MTP].

November 24 Wednesday – The last of three days’ stay at the Hamilton Hotel. Sam kept their rooms there but stayed mostly with the Allens at Bay House [Nov. 26 to Clara]. On Dec. 6, however, he wrote daughter Jean that the Allens wouldn’t let him stay at the hotel so he gave up his room. Likely Paine kept his room.

Sam was among 500 who signed a petition to Premier Stolypin of the Czar’s Cabinet, Russia to plead for an open and public trial for Nicholas V. Tchaykovsky (Nikolai V. Chaikovsky) and Mme. Breshkovsky, charged with revolution [NY Times, Dec. 2, 1909, “Americans Active for Tchaykovsky”; cable sent Nov. 24, 1909].

November 25 Thursday – Thanksgiving Day – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam joined the Allen family at Bay House for Thanksgiving dinner. He enjoyed it so much there that he stayed with them for the remainder of his Bermuda visit [D. Hoffman 135].

Sam inscribed a copy in Extract from Captain Stormfield’s Visit to Heaven to Helen Schuyler Allen. “Helen Dear. This story was told me by Captain Stormfield and is probably all true for he had been a sailor 65 years and could not lie . . . love. S. L. Clemens. November 25, 1909” [MTP].

November 26 Friday – In Hamilton Bermuda Sam wrote to daughter Clara.

Clärchen dear, I do hope Jean & the house are getting along well, for I don’t feel a bit like leaving this peaceful refuge. If I could be sure of Jean & the house’s happiness I wouldn’t sail from here till the 18th of December.

Everything—weather included—is in perfection here now. Paine & I drive in a light victoria about 3 hours every day, over these smooth hard roads, with the dainty blues & greens & purples of the sea always in sight. We have charming rooms in the new part of the hotel, & the table is very very good. I shall stay a good deal, both nights & days, with the Allens, but shall keep my hotel-quarters all the time. I am declining all social invitations that require me to be out at night or late in the afternoon, but I am going to Government House this afternoon, for that invitation has the quality of a command.

I hope Ossip is making good progress, & that you are getting rested-up. Paine thought you were looking pretty well fagged out. I’ve got a delightful magazine-article on the ways. It is full of interest, & I can fall back on it for refreshment whenever time may hang heavy on my hands. If I finish it too quickly, no matter, I can build it over again. / With best to you both— / Marcus [MTP]. Note: Sam’s article for the Bazaar was “The Turning-Point In My Life.”

Finley Peter Dunne for American Magazine, NY wrote to Sam with tongue firmly in cheek.

My dear and respected Subordinate in the G. D. / Human Race Association:

The enterprising gentlemen who are associated with me in this philanthropic undertaking have secured by unparalleled enterprise and prodigious expense, a photograph hitherto unpublished of the new comet in the literary sky, Mr. Henry M. Alden. I am opposed to publishing it. I believe they should not be carried away by Mr. Alden’s momentary popularity. I want them to wait until the patient judgment of the world has been delivered on works that have merit, but seem to me to be a little too flashy for permanence. Besides, I am opposed to the flashy school in literature. You and I, my dear friend, have tried to keep our art pure. Mr. Alden ought to prove himself before he can be considered worthy of a place in our gallery of distinguished artists, including in the past such names as James J. Jeffries, Captain Chance, Kyrle Bellew and others who shall be nameless (or should be). Still they think in this office that a picture of Mr. Alden would help our circulation in the Tenderloin, and they have had the cheek to ask me, to have the cheek to ask you to write an “appreciation” of this best seller—four hundred words they crave to go with the photograph. I am told Mr. Alden is prepared for the blow. I don’t want you to do it unless you can’t find any reason, personal, commercial, artistic or other for not doing it—unless indeed you are urged to do it by strong reasons of your own. I realize that it is too much for the magazine to ask, and not enough for me to ask, which I consider the obligations you are under to me for not calling the attention of the police to your nefarious billiard game while you are rioting in Capuan luxury on money wrung from a guileless friend.

Bob Collier and I have been planning to descend on you, but Rob has had his brains addled by having an intoxicated horse fall under him while hunting, and my liver has been so disturbed by constant meditation, that I have had to take a cure at French Lick Springs. But you may expect us soon, if the invitation has not been withdrawn and we are still welcome. Is there any possibility that you will be in New York this autumn, so that the three of us can have a mild spree, if only to lunch together?

Please present my regards to Miss Clemens, and think of me, in spite of this request for copy, as / Affectionately yours... [MTP]. Note: "Ans. Nov 30/09 / by Jean Clemens"

Maude Jordan wrote from London to wish Sam a happy birthday and to ask that he give her and her sisters his autographs on enclosed postcards and small photos [MTP].

November 27 Saturday

November 28 Sunday

November 29 Monday

November 30 Tuesday – Sam's 74th and last Birthday. Paine writes of the day and his gift:

On the morning of his seventy-fourth birthday he was looking wonderfully well after a night of sound sleep, his face full of color and freshness, his eyes bright and keen and full of good-humor. I presented him with a pair of cuff-buttons silver-enameled with the Bermuda lily, and I thought he seemed pleased with them.

It was rather gloomy outside, so we remained indoors by the fire and played cards, game after game of hearts, at which he excelled, and he was usually kept happy by winning. There were no visitors, and after dinner Helen asked him to read some of her favorite episodes from Tom Sawyer, so he read the whitewashing scene, Peter and the Pain-killer, and such chapters until tea-time. Then there was a birthday cake, and afterward cigars and talk and a quiet fireside evening.

Once, in the course of his talk, he forgot a word and denounced his poor memory:

"I'll forget the Lord's middle name some time," he declared, "right in the midst of a storm, when I need all the help I can get."

Later he said:

"Nobody dreamed, seventy-four years ago to-day, that I would be in Bermuda now." And I thought he meant a good deal more than the words conveyed.

It was during this Bermuda visit that Mark Twain added the finishing paragraph to his article, "The Turning-Point in My Life," which, at Howells's suggestion, he had been preparing for Harper's Bazar [MTB 1544-5].

Margery Hamilton Clinton wrote from Toronto, Canada.

Dear Mr. Clemens,

I am almost sure to-day is your birthday and want to send you the very best wishes. If it is not your birthday keep the wishes just the same.

I wonder where you have gone for your change of air. I suppose South—not up in this part of the World. I hope it will do you ever so much good. Affectionately ...

P.S. my mind must have been wandering when I addressed that envelope to you that you sent back in disgust [MTP].

December – Sam's article, "Marjorie Fleming, the Wonder-Child," ran in the Dec. issue of Harper's Bazar [Hill 250].

Sam signed his copy of A Dash at the Pole (1909) by William Lyon Phelps: "S L Clemens /from / Wm Lyn Phelps / Dec 1909" [Gribben 542].

Paine writes of Sam quoting Oliver Wendell Holmes' poem, "The Last Leaf":

One evening he spoke of those who had written but one immortal thing and stopped there. He mentioned "Ben Bolt."

"I met that man once," he said. "In my childhood I sang 'Sweet Alice, Ben Bolt,' and in my old age, fifteen years ago, I met the man who wrote it. His name was Brown. He was aged, forgotten, a mere memory. I remember how it thrilled me to realize that this was the very author of 'Sweet Alice, Ben Bolt.' He was just an accident. He had a vision and echoed it. A good many persons do that — the thing they do is to put in compact form the thing which we have all vaguely felt. 'Twenty Years Ago' is just like it 'I have wandered through the village, Tom, and sat beneath the tree'— and Holmes's 'Last Leaf' is another: the memory of the hallowed past, and the gravestones of those we love. It is all so beautiful — the past is always beautiful."

[Thomas Dunn English. Mr. Clemens apparently remembered only the name satirically conferred upon him by Edgar Allan Poe, "Thomas Dunn Brown."]

He quoted, with great feeling and effect:

The massy marbles rest
On the lips that we have pressed
In their bloom,
And the names we love to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb.

He continued in this strain for an hour or more. He spoke of humor, and thought it must be one of the chief attributes of God. He cited plants and animals that were distinctly humorous in form and in their characteristics. These he declared were God's jokes.

"Why," he said, "humor is mankind's greatest blessing."

"Your own case is an example," I answered. "Without it, whatever your reputation as a philosopher, you could never have had the wide-spread affection that is shown by the writers of that great heap of letters."

"Yes," he said, gently, "they have liked to be amused."

I tucked him in for the night, promising to send him to Bermuda, with Claude to take care of him, if he felt he could undertake the journey in two days more [MTB 1555-6]. Note: see also Gribben 319.

Gertrude Natkin wrote on a 2"x5" card with a picture of a young miss: "Dear Mr. Clemens—/ I want to wish you a very bright and happy New Year and hope that with its coming it will bring you health & happiness Marjorie" [MTP]. Note: she dates this only "Dec, 1909" but likely it came late in the month.

Putnam's Magazine ran an anonymous article in "The Lounger", p. 369-70. Tenney: "Brief comment on Clara's wedding to Ossip Gabrilowitsch, quoting MT's answer when asked whether the marriage pleased him: 'Yes, fully as much as any marriage could please me or perhaps any other father. These are two or three tragically solemn things in this life, and a happy marriage is one of them, for the terrors of life are all to come. A funeral is a solemn office, but I go to them with a spiritual uplift, thankful that the dead friend has been set free. That which follows is to me tragic and awful—the burial. I am glad of this marriage, and Mrs. Clemens would be glad, for she always had a warm affection for Gabrilowitsch, but all the same it is a tragedy, since it is a happy marriage with its future before it, loaded to the Plimsoll line with uncertainties.' Also contains comments by MT at a musicale in Redding (Sept. 21). The writer mentions having 'spoken of Mr. Clemens's country home more than once in these pages'" [46]. Note: the Sept. 21 concert for the Mark Twain Library, held at Stormfield. See entry.

December 1 Wednesday

December 2 Thursday

December 3 Friday

December 4 Saturday – John Bigelow wrote from Grammercy Park, NYC to Sam. "I hope you will pardon the liberty I have ventured to take with your name, in a note to the Chamber of Commerce which you will find on the 32^d page of a pamphlet which I send you under another enclosure...Yours truly..." [MTP].

December 5 Sunday

December 6 Monday – In Hamilton Bermuda Sam replied to a non-extant letter from daughter Clara.

Clara dear, I am very glad to hear that Ossip is improving. It constitutes happiness for both of you. Jean allows me to stay here till the 18th, & I am glad, for here I do not look at the newspapers when they come—not from purpose or principle, but because I feel no interest in news. I do not seem to be in the world or of it at all. Its affairs are not mine. Never in my life before, perhaps, have I had such a strong sense of being severed from the world, & the bridges all swept away. Even the billiard table has no interest for me. Paine & I have played only once. I lie abed until past noon (breakfast in bed.) I am the guest of the Allens; they wouldn't let me remain at the hotel—for which I am very thankful. For you can't make a home out of a hotel, & I can't be completely satisfied outside of a home. This one numbers 6 members, & is just the right size: Mr. & Mrs. Allen, Helen; a cat, a dog, & me. We drive 3 hours, afternoons; after dinner I help Helen get her lessons; she goes to bed at 8 & the rest of us at 9.

That dear Jean misunderstood me about the checks, but I have been explaining, this morning.
With great love to you & Ossip, & lots & lots of happiness— / Marcus [MTP].

Sam also wrote to daughter Jean.

Oh, you dear rascal, to reproach me so, & break my heart when I didn't deserve it! Bless you, I didn't distrust your intentions, & as for your honesty, I couldn't impeach it. No one can do that. You misquote me, dear, & you misunderstood me. I said "pay the servants & the butcher"—meaning, pay anybody who needs his money, but leave the other bills unpaid till I return. As for pocket money for you, it escaped my mind—I want you to have that, of course. I sent a rectifying cable to you immediately, so as to extinguish your inconveniences as quickly as possible.

Dear heart, I do trust you & I can't bear to have you think I don't. I could distrust your judgement (& my own), but not you.

I am very very very glad I can stay till the 18th—the change of scene & conditions makes a wholesome change in my mental-will. I have seldom thought of the Ashcrofts; & as for news of the great world, it does not interest me. The Times & the Herald have lain at my elbow 2 days, now—unopened. The sight of a newspaper stirs not a single quiver of interest in me.

You speak of a letter from Peter Dunne. I think you may send me that kind of letters—friendly letters & letters from friends, of an unirritating sort. I could answer some of them here—& if too lazy to do that, I could have the pleasure of reading them, anyway.

I hope you & Bébé will have a good time, & that you will continue to be unlonely.

Yes—get the muff & boa for my xmas to Katy. I shall be back in time to hand out the other xmas to the household.

The Allens won't let me stay at the hotel, so I have given up my room there. They are lovely, the Allens. I see Paine every day—& most of the day.

If you get this letter in time, you must tell me to thank Helen & her parents for giving me such a delightful home. It certainly is delightful.

With lots & lots & lots of love— / Father [MTP].

December 7 Tuesday – Clemens was in Bermuda. He took daily scenic rides after school hours [Dec. 14 to Nunnally]. D. Hoffman quotes from Helen Schuyler Allen's diary about Sam's daily routine:

He usually spent his mornings with his books. His books and his cigars were always with him. His bed was covered with books, manuscripts, and writing materials, while at the head of his bed stood a table with all kinds of smoking paraphernalia except cigarettes. Any spare moments were spent in reading, night or day; and he often had a book with him on the chance of an unoccupied moment. Carlyle's French Revolution, Pepys's Diary, Kipling's works, reference books of science, were always at hand, besides the late books of note sent him by every mail from Harper's Brothers [136].

December 8 Wednesday – Sam took daily scenic rides after school hours [Dec. 14 to Nunnally].

December 9 Thursday – Sam took daily scenic rides after school hours [Dec. 14 to Nunnally].

December 10 Friday – The New York Times, p. 11, “Bazaar For Sick Nurses,” announced that Samuel L. Clemens would be in charge of “the raffling of an automobile.” Sam, however, was in Bermuda and would not return for the event.

December 11 Saturday – Hill records the final folding of the American Plasmon Co.

Ashcroft, who retained his position in the company, told [Charles T.] Lark that the foundering organization would sink unless Clemens provided additional funds, a suggestion that was sensibly declined. Finally, by December 11, 1909, while Clemens was in Bermuda,

The office has been discontinued and all the bills of the Company have been paid through a pro rata contribution of the shareholders, our friend Ashcroft to this end actually producing the sum of $90 in cash. Mr. Clemens’s pro rata portion was $350, which sum was advanced by Mr. [Edward E.] Loomis.

The grand, decade-long scheme was over, having cost Clemens at least $50,000 in losses and an unpardonable expense of time and energy [252].

December 12 Sunday – D. Hoffman writes, “Nearly every Sunday [in Bermuda] he went to Prospect for the military band concerts. Once he had become a friend of the bandmaster, the entire program might consist of pieces Clemens suggested” [139].

Miss Angela Morgan wrote from Woodstock, NY to Sam, enclosing a page from the December number of Collier’s and which bore her poem, “God’s Man,” which Sam had given “interest and assistance” to her. She thanked him and considered herself “forever indebted” [MTP].

December 13 Monday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam inscribed an aphorism in a copy of PW to Bernard Walker. “Let us endeavor so to live that when we come to die even the undertaker may be sorry.—Page 77. Truly Yours, Mark Twain. With kindest regards to Mr. Bernand Walker. Bermuda, Dec. 13, 1909” [MTP: Parke-Bernet catalog, 4 May 1938, No. 38, Item 90].

At Stormfield, Jean wrote to William Lyon Phelps, professor of English Literature at Yale, thanking him for the copy of his book, Dash at the Pole (1909), which he’d sent to Clemens. Jean explained it was her duty to open all of Sam’s mail, and had read the book through [Thomas Tenney copy borrowed from Cyril Clemens, 1982]. Note: See Gribben 542.

December 14 Tuesday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Frances Nunnally in Atlanta.

Francesca dear, I received your last just before I left home, & was glad to see you were carrying on as joyously & as turbulently as ever I hope there has been no abatement, & that there won’t be any while you are young.

I reached here a month ago & had hardly registered at the hotel when an angel fish arrived with her mother & took me to their home by the sea, & I have been their grateful contented guest ever since. They have promised to give me a good long visit in the autumn

I have driven two or three hours every afternoon with my hosts, after school hours, over these fine roads, in this fine air, with the brilliant blues of the sea always in sight, & have thus driven the dyspeptic pain in my breast almost entirely away. Also the furious thoughts about Miss Lyon & Ashcroft, that pair of professional traitors & forgers.

We (Paine & I—he is my secretary) sail for home next Saturday (20th) & reach new York 22^d.

Dear heart, you must come & see me by & by. you said you would, you dear Francesca. / With lots of love / ... [MTP; MTAq 267].

December 15 Wednesday

December 16 Thursday

December 17 Friday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote a Bermuda postcard to Elizabeth Wallace. “Merry Christmas / & affectionate greeting / to Betsy / SLC / Blanche has been close-clipped & looks elegant—even spiritual” [MTP]. Note: Maude was the donkey used in the earlier visit; Blanche may have been another.

Sam also wrote, possibly on this day, a postcard with a picture of a Bermuda garden, a scene in “Fairylend” to Frances Nunnally in Atlanta: “Love & Merry Christmas / To Francesca M.A. / SLC” [MTP].

December 18 Saturday – Clemens and Albert Bigelow Paine sailed on the Bermudian bound for New York. In his Dec. 19 to Marion Schuyler Allen (Mrs. William H. Allen) Sam wrote, “We plunged into heavy seas before the waving handkerchiefs & the flag were an hour out of sight...”.

December 18-20 Monday – On board the Bermudian Sam wrote to Helen Schuyler Allen in Hamilton, Bermuda.

I knew how it would be—the deck steward is entirely out of the question. So is the stewardess—oh, entirely! Well, no matter—I will try to get along without any good-morning until I see Bay House again. My, but I do miss you, dear!

This is dreary weather—rainy, blustery, cold, clammy, rough—and everybody looks sorry to be alive. There are a few men on deck, but only two or three women—among these the lady with the wonderful voice.

Paine makes himself agreeable to her—between intervals. During the intervals he has to go away & enjoy his seasickness. (Col. Winter comes to the table—he & a young friend of his—but otherwise our table is vacant. There is no satisfactory place but the captain’s room. It is comfy there, & I like the captain ever so much. There’s lots of young first-voyage country-people on board, & they were boisterously hilarious yesterday while we were on soundings—then they disappeared & have been seen no more. I wish you were here, dear, I find it lonesome.

I told you something was happening the 17th. That presentiment was right. The king of Belgium, whom I detested, was dying; also a son of the Earl of Aberdeen was dying, of a motor-car accident. I love his parents, & am very very sorry for their bereavement. My presentiments seldom materialize, but they did this time.

Think! that infamous king has gone to Satanville unprepared. I wish I had written him some etiquette—etiquette that would make him do the wrong thing every time & get him into trouble with Satan. Satan is very particular. He is an uncle of mine.

Helen dear, beware of Arthur! O, beware of that snake in the grass, that precocious criminal, that ultimate decoration of the gallows!

What a murderous face he has! For one so young. He is the one who is creating that reign of terror in Paget. I am the only one who knows it, & he has implored me not to tell, because it is there that he gets money to spend on moving pictures.

Alas! alas! alas! / ... [MTP].

December 19 Sunday – On board the Bermudian Sam wrote to Marion Schuyler Allen (Mrs. William H. Allen) in Hamilton, Bermuda.

Dear Mrs. Allen:

I don’t know how to thank you & Mr. Allen enough for the perfectly charming time you have given me. I have never had a lovelier time, & I can’t get over being sorry that it had to come to an end.

This is not a comfortable voyage. We plunged into heavy seas before the waving handkerchiefs & the flag were an hour out of sight, & nine-tenths of the passengers were abed before dinner time. Paine succumbed early, & got extravagantly seasick, & that other pain (the one in my breast) kept me entertained until 3 this morning. There is still enough sea to make writing difficult.

Jean has been having an adventure, & I send you her letter. You needn't return it. Think of that excited & innocent Frenchman ordering that well-trained & obedient dog to lie down & keep still when he particularly wanted him to get up & 'tend to business! A very good dog. As soon as Jean said "Los!" (Go! fly! rush!) he reinstated his injured reputation.

I wish I was back in that hospitable Bay House. What a contrast its comfort is to the dismal ship! / With love to you all, / Affectionately yours / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to William H. Allen. Text not available [MTP].

The New York Times, p.8, ran a short squib, "Mark Twain Coming Home," that he would return on Monday with Paine.

December 20 Monday – The Bermudian arrived in New York City. Jean Clemens met Sam and Albert Bigelow Paine. According to Paine, Jean continued on to Redding, Conn. while Sam stayed "a day or two later." He described Jean as "blue and shivering with the cold," and felt "she should not have come." Likely she was accompanied by Katy or one of the servants [MTB 1547].

December 21 Tuesday – The New York Times, p. 1, ran an article on the arrival of Mark Twain from Bermuda and Sam's declaration that he would do no more work:

MARK TWAIN DONE WITH WORK

Humorist Says There'll Be No More for Him in This World.

"I am through with work for this life and this world," said Mark Twain on his arrival yesterday from Bermuda. He had said a good word for the suffragettes, and his reply came when he was asked whether he intended to lecture for the cause of votes for women.

"I have often been asked to lecture for the cause of women, but I am through with lecturing," he said. "I can't do it any more. The state of my health will not permit it. The fact is I am through with work. I have no new books in contemplation. There are five or six that were begun, but they are uncompleted. I have done almost nothing on them for the last few years. My health has not permitted it. Of course, I may do a trifle on my autobiography. There is still much to be done on it, but most of it will appear after my death as is known. I like to have some uncompleted work about me. It gives me something too when the humor for work seizes me. the last few years have found me seldom in the humor to write."

With Mr. Clemens was Albert Bigelow Paine. They were met by Miss Clemens, the writer's daughter.

Note: the above article may have been responsible for rumors that Mark Twain was dying. See Dec. 23.

December 22 Wednesday – Sam left NYC for Redding by this day, according to Paine [MTB 1547].

Frederick A. Duneka wrote from NYC:

"You may recall that we had a talk not very long ago about making some school books from your writings. I talked the matter over with Paine yesterday. The school book plan seems a good one in so far as it teaches the young where to go for the most limpid English.

"The object of this letter is to confirm the talk, and to say that in doing these books we can pay only ten per cent. royalty upon the price received for the book." He asked for Sam's approval and added "Colonel Harvey and the rest of us here think it is a good plan" [MTP].

Laura Hawkins Frazer wrote a postcard from Hannibal, Mo. to Sam and dated it Dec. 22-25. It had been a long time since she'd heard from Clemens and hoped his health was good; she congratulated him on Clara's wedding and wished Merry Christmas; she mentioned snow there [MTP]. Note: the card was not addressed nor stamped, so it may have been inserted in a letter. The front of the card is printed "The Season's Greetings" with a portrait of a Gibson-type woman.

Bessie Hazen in Georgetown sent a picture postcard of four cats on a bench and holly, and printed message, "A Joyous Christmas and a glad New Year"; "From your little friend Bessie Hazen" [MTP].

December 23 Thursday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote a short note to the Manager, Associated Press that ran in the NY Times (and possibly other newspapers) on Dec. 24, p.6, "Twain's Merry Christmas."

"I hear the newspapers say I'm dying. The charge is not true. I would not do such a thing at my time of life. I am behaving as good as I can. / Merry Christmas to everybody! / Mark Twain" [MTP].

See Paine's recollection of dinner this evening with Jean Clemens, in Dec. 24 entry.

R.W. Barkley wrote from NYC to detail over a page of single spaced type, suggested treatments using alternating electrical current for "hardening of the arteries, rheumatism (inflammatory) and ailments due to advancing years" [MTP].

Arthur Brisbane of the New York Evening Journal Publishing Co., NYC wrote: "I enclose a feeble effort to counteract the writing of some foolish gentleman on our morning paper's editorial page—he was preparing to bury you with a few kind words, apparently." He wished Clemens might enjoy Christmas. "You have given so much pleasure to other human beings that you ought to have a great deal yourself" [MTP].

Millie Suart, "a poor Soldier's widow" wrote from Battle Creek, Mich. to tell Sam her secret cure for dyspepsia—wood ashes steeped in boiling water, one tablespoon taken after eating [MTP].

December 24 Friday – In the morning Jean Clemens died in the bathtub. Dr. Ernest H. Smith, the examining physician of the county ruled Jean's death was due to drowning, evidently during a seizure [Hill 253]. The New York Times ran the sad story on page one, Dec. 25:

MISS JEAN CLEMENS FOUND DEAD IN BATH

She Was Overcome by an Epileptic
Seizure an Hour Before Her Body Was Discovered.

HAD PLANNED A HAPPY XMAS

On Wednesday Her Father Helped Her
Trim a Christmas Tree—Mark Twain Now All Alone.

Special to The New York Times.

REDDING, Conn., Dec. 24.—Miss Jean Clemens, youngest daughter of Mark Twain, was found dead in the bathtub at Stormfield, Mr. Clemens's country home near here, early this morning. Her body lay submerged in water when the young woman's maid discovered it, shortly after sunrise.

An attack of epilepsy, to which Miss Clemens had been subject for many years, is believed to have rendered her unconscious while she was taking her morning bath, with the result that she drowned in the water of the bath.

Mark Twain, her father, while heartbroken at the blow which has taken away the one daughter who had remained single to be his mainstay in his declining years, is bearing up bravely under the shock, and says that, in spite of his sorrow, he cannot help feeling glad that death came to his daughter at home.

He had feared for many months that she might be stricken while on horseback, far away on the lonely country roads, and that she might be mangled beneath the horse's hoofs. He had many warnings that his daughter might be stricken down. Less than a month ago she suffered a violent attack of epilepsy, and for several years she had been under the constant care of an attendant.

For several months Miss Clemens was in a sanitarium, but in April last had come to Stormfield in order to be her father's housekeeper and to help him in his literary work as his secretary.

Had Prepared for a Jolly Christmas.

Miss Clemens herself had no thought of death. Several days ago she invited one of her girl friends in New York to come to Stormfield to spend the holidays and elaborate plans had been made for a jolly Christmas.

This friend had been instructed to come today on the Pittsfield express, and Mark Twain had arranged with the New York, New Haven & Hartford officials to have the train stop at Redding, which is a flag station, at 5:19 this afternoon. A telegram was sent to her this morning informing her of what had happened and telling her not to come, but she evidently did not get the message, for she arrived according to arrangement, and was driven at once to Stormfield.

Miss Clemens and her father were up late last night discussing plans for Christmas Day and talking of the future. This morning about 6:30 o'clock Katie, one of the maids at Stormfield, who usually accompanied Miss Clemens wherever she went, rapped on her door and asked if she were ready to dress.

"No, Katie, you can wait an hour, for I am going to lie in bed and read," said Miss Clemens through the door. She often did this in the morning before arising, so the maid went away. An hour later she returned to the bedroom, which is on the second floor of Stormfield. Miss Clemens was not there.

Her Father Hears the News.

Katie went at once to the bathroom. One glance inside and the maid screamed in terror. She ran to the door of Mr. Clemens's room, who was still in bed, and told him that he had better come at once. Mr. Clemens hastily donned a bathrobe.

The servants were grouped around the bathroom door uncertain what to do. In a few minutes the body had been lifted from the tub, and a telephone call brought Dr. Ernest H. Smith, the family physician and County Medical Examiner, to the Clemens home. For a long time the doctor tried by artificial respiration to bring the young woman back to life, but it was useless. She had been dead at least an hour before he arrived, said the doctor later.

Soon after Dr. Smith arrived Mr. Clemens telephoned to Alfred [sic] Bigelow Paine, who has been assisting the author in writing his biography and who lives not far from Stormfield.

Mr. Paine and his wife were soon at the house and did what they could for Mr. Clemens. The news of Miss Clemens's death spread rapidly through the countryside, and there were many messages of sympathy and offers of help over the telephone. Many of Mark Twain's neighbors also called in person, and soon the reporters arrived. Mr. Clemens met them and told the sad story of his daughter's death.

"My daughter, Jean Clemens, passed from this life suddenly this morning at 7:30 o'clock," he said.

"All the last half of her life she was an epileptic, but she grew better latterly. For the past two years we considered her practically well, but she was not allowed to be entirely free. Her maid, who has served us twenty-eight years, was always with her when she went to New York on shopping excursions and such things. She had very few convulsions in the past two years and those she had were not violent.

"At 7:30 this morning a maid went to her room to see why she did not come down to her breakfast, and found her in her bathtub drowned. It means that she had a convulsion and could not get out.

"She had been leading a very active life.

"She spent the greater part of her time looking after a farm which I bought for her, and she did much of my secretarial work besides.

Her Last Talk With Her Father.

"Last night she and I chatted later than usual in the library, and she told me all her plans about the housekeeping, for she was also my housekeeper. I said everything was going so smoothly that I thought I would make another trip to Bermuda in February, and she said put it off till March and she and her maid would go with me. So we made that arrangement.

"But she is gone, poor child.

"She was all I had left, except Clara, who married Mr. Gabrilowitsch lately, and has just arrived in Europe."

In one of the downstairs room of Stormfield was today a half-trimmed Christmas tree, which the bereaved author pointed to while tears came to his eyes.

"My daughter was trimming the tree yesterday and I was helping her," he said. "She was so anxious that the lads and lassies of the neighborhood should have a tree, so we brought this one in and began to trim it for them. Tomorrow there were to have trooped in to see the tree and to get presents from it.

"It is all so very sad. Upstairs in my daughter's room are still a number of gifts which she had bought for some of her dear friends, and which were to have been sent out by her today. It will be a sad Christmas for poor old me."

Last Monday Miss Clemens went to New York with her maid to meet her father on his arrival from Bermuda. She took advantage of her presence in town to buy several Christmas presents for her friends. Some of these she sent by mail, and they will be received this morning about the same time that some of her friends learn of her death.

Death Was Clearly Accidental.

Dr. Smith, after leaving Stormfield, made out a certificate of death from accidental cause, which he sent on to Clifford B. Wilson, the Coroner at Bridgeport. In this the doctor stated that the primary cause of death was epilepsy and the secondary cause drowning.

"It was a plain case and no mystery about it," said Dr. Smith. "There have been two other cases of epilepsy here recently which met death in the same way. It is very common for an epileptic to fall unconscious in the water while bathing. One of the other cases here recently was drowned in three or four inches of water after being rendered unconscious by an attack of epilepsy.

"The bath tub in which Miss Clemens met her death was nearly full of water when I got there. She simply must have lost consciousness and sunk down beneath the surface. Mr. Clemens is bearing up bravely under the blow, and he will survive it, I am sure. He is strong and healthy for a man of his years."

Miss Clemens had recently attended to much of her father's mail. Only yesterday she telephoned to the Associated Press a statement from her father, contradicting the newspaper reports that he was in failing health.

A cablegram was sent today to Mr. Clemens's married daughter, who with her husband, is spending her honeymoon abroad. It told her of her sister's death.

Arrangements for the funeral have already been made. The body will be taken to Elmira, N.Y., and will on Sunday be buried from the former home of Mr. Clemens's wife. Miss Clemens will be laid at rest alongside her mother in the old churchyard at Elmira.

Mr. Clemens will not be able to attend the funeral. He is now 74 years old, and his physicians discourage the unusual fatigue that he would necessarily undergo on such a journey. For the present he will remain at Stormfield.

Mark Twain's Plans for His Daughter.

It had been Mr. Clemens's ambition for the pasty twenty years to provide a future home for his daughters, and to leave them a sufficient income to continue their existence after his death in the same comfort as they had before. As the copyrights on all his books are rapidly expiring, and soon will bring in no return, it occurred to him that if he wrote an autobiography, which might be brought out, a little in each volume, in a new edition of his works, which the publishers should publish after his death, that he might secure a new copyright for these volumes.

Much of this autobiography is finished, and the home for his daughters built, but there seems to be no occasion for either precaution at present.

Miss Clara Clemens, who is a musician, was married last Summer to Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the celebrated Russian pianist, and the two are now in Europe. Miss Clemens had been engaged to Gabrilowitsch twice before, and each time the engagement had been broken. Last Spring the pianist was seized with a desperate illness and spent some time in a hospital near the point of death. At that time Miss Clemens spent a great deal of time with him and they were married soon after his recovery and left for Europe.

Paine writes of the last time he saw Jean and of being sent for after her death:

On the 23d I was lunching with Jean alone. She was full of interest in her Christmas preparations. She had a handsome tree set up in the loggia, and the packages were piled about it, with new ones constantly arriving. With her farm management, her housekeeping, her secretary work, and her Christmas preparations, it seemed to me that she had her hands overfull. Such a mental pressure could not be good for her. I suggested that for a time at least I might assume a part of her burden.

I was to remain at my own home that night, and I think it was as I left Stormfield that I passed Jean on the stair. She said, cheerfully, that she felt a little tired and was going up to lie down, so that she would be fresh for the evening. I did not go back, and I never saw her alive again.

I was at breakfast next morning when word was brought in that one of the men from Stormfield was outside and wished to see me immediately. When I went out he said: "Miss Jean is dead. They have just found her in her bath-room. Mr. Clemens sent me to bring you."

It was as incomprehensible as such things always are. I could not realize at all that Jean, so full of plans and industries and action less than a day before, had passed into that voiceless mystery which we call death.

Harry Iles drove me rapidly up the hill. As I entered Clemens's room he looked at me helplessly and said:

"Well, I suppose you have heard of this final disaster."

He was not violent or broken down with grief. He had come to that place where, whatever the shock or the ill-turn of fortune, he could accept it, and even in that first moment of loss he realized that, for Jean at least, the fortune was not ill. Her malady had never been cured, and it had been one of his deepest dreads that he would leave her behind him. It was believed, at first; that Jean had drowned, and Dr. Smith tried methods of resuscitation; but then he found that it was simply a case of heart cessation caused by the cold shock of her bath.

The Gabrilowitsches were by this time in Europe, and Clemens cabled them not to come. Later in the day he asked me if we would be willing to close our home for the winter and come to Stormfield. He said that he should probably go back to Bermuda before long; but that he wished to keep the house open so that it would be there for him to come to at any time that he might need it.

We came, of course, for there was no thought among any of his friends but for his comfort and peace of mind. Jervis Langdon was summoned from Elmira, for Jean would lie there with the others.

In the loggia stood the half-trimmed Christmas tree, and all about lay the packages of gifts, and in Jean's room, on the chairs and upon her desk, were piled other packages. Nobody had been forgotten. For her father she had bought a handsome globe; he had always wanted one. Once when I went into his room he said:

"I have been looking in at Jean and envying her. I have never greatly envied any one but the dead. I always envy the dead."

He told me how the night before they had dined together alone; how he had urged her to turn over a part of her work to me; how she had clung to every duty as if now, after all the years, she was determined to make up for lost time [MTB 1547-9].

Sam began replying to the first telegrams by sending his own. Among those surviving:

Sam sent a telegram to Ethel Newcomb, in Orange, N.Y.: "I THANK YOU MOST SINCERELY, BUT NOTHING CAN HELP ME / S.L. CLEMENS" [MTP].

Sam also sent the same telegram message (as above) to Emilie R. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers) [MTP].

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

December 24 after – Alice Hegan Rice sent a letter of condolence [MTP].

December 25 Saturday – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent the same reply (telegram) to Annie Moffett Webster at 55 W. 10th St. N.Y. [MTP].

Paine writes of Christmas day:

It was on Christmas Day that they went with Jean on her last journey. Katie Leary, her baby nurse, had dressed her in the dainty gown which she had worn for Clara's wedding, and they had pinned on it a pretty buckle which her father had brought her from Bermuda, and which she had not seen. No Greek statue was ever more classically beautiful than she was, lying there in the great living-room, which in its brief history had seen so much of the round of life.

They were to start with Jean at about six o'clock, and a little before that time Clemens (he was unable to make the journey) asked me what had been her favorite music. I said that she seemed always to care most for the Schubert Impromptu. Then he said:

"Play it when they get ready to leave with her, and add the Intermezzo for Susy and the Largo for Mrs. Clemens. When I hear the music I shall know that they are starting. Tell them to set lanterns at the door, so I can look down and see them go."

So I sat at the organ and began playing as they lifted and bore her away. A soft, heavy snow was falling, and the gloom of those shortest days was closing in. There was not the least wind or noise, the whole world was muffled. The lanterns at the door threw their light out on the thickly falling flakes. I remained at the organ; but the little group at the door saw him come to the window above—the light on his white hair as he stood mournfully gazing down, watching Jean going away from him for the last time. I played steadily on as he had instructed, the Impromptu, the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria," and Handel's Largo. When I had finished I went up and found him.

"Poor little Jean," he said; "but for her it is so good to go."

In his own story of it he wrote:

From my windows I saw the hearse and the carriages wind along the road and gradually grow vague and spectral in the falling snow, and presently disappear. Jean was gone out of my life, and would not come back any more. The cousin she had played with when they were babies together—he and her beloved old Katie—Were conducting her to her distant childhood home, where she will lie by her mother's side once more, in the company of Susy and Langdon.

He did not come down to dinner, and when I went up afterward I found him curiously agitated. He said:

"For one who does not believe in spirits I have had a most peculiar experience. I went into the bath-room just now and closed the door. You know how warm it always is in there, and there are no draughts. All at once I felt a cold current of air about me. I thought the door must be open; but it was closed. I said, 'Jean, is this you trying to let me know you have found the others?' Then the cold air was gone."

I saw that the incident had made a very great impression upon him; but I don't remember that he ever mentioned it afterward [MTB 1549-51].

The New York Times, Dec. 26, p.1, dateline Dec. 25, reported on Sam's condition:

MARK TWAIN BEARS UP WELL.

Body of His Daughter, Accompanied by Household Servants, Taken to Elmira.

REDDING, Conn., Dec. 25.—Mark Twain has borne up well under the bereavement which came to him yesterday in the death of his daughter, Miss Jean Clemens. Today he was fully composed and gave final directions for the removal for the body to Elmira, N. Y.

The coffin was taken from Stormfield this evening in time to be placed on the 7 o'clock train for New York. Several of the household servants accompanied it with a few of the most intimate friends of Miss Jean Clemens and of Mr. Clemens.

A great many messages of sympathy from friends in all parts of the country were received today by Mr. Clemens.

Clemens A.D. for this day is listed by MTP.

Dr. Shobal Vail Clevenger (1843-1920), sent Clemens an inscribed copy of his new book, Fun in a Doctor's Life, Being the Adventures of an American Don Quixote in Helping to Make the World a Better Place (1909): "To Sam L. Clemens / from his old townsman / of St. Louis in the 50's / S.V. Clevenger / Park Ridge, Ill / Christmas 1909" [Gribben 147]. Note: in the late 1850s, when Sam was a pilot on the Mississippi, Clevenger would have been a teenager, eight years younger than Sam, who was often in St. Louis while a pilot.

December 26 Sunday – Sam drafted instructions to a printer for a card he wished printed for answering the many dozens of letters that poured in expressing sorrow and condolence upon the death of Jean Clemens.

Somewhat after this date he sent this card to many friends and associates. The following survive—to: Lilian W. Aldrich, Grace E. King, Marguerite Schmitt, Frank J. Sprague and Harriet Sprague, Bram Stoker, John L. RoBards, Josephine S. Hobby, Charles J. Langdon and Family, Mary E. Moffett, Elisabeth N. Fairchild, Virginia Frazer Boyle, Margaret Blackmer (postmarked Jan 15, 1910), Paul Kester (Postmarked Jan. 17, 1910), Helen Keller (Jan. 26, 1910 from Bermuda), Katherine

B. Clemens (postmarked Mar. 16, 1910) [MTP]. Note: many more were likely sent to those whose letters and telegrams during this period are listed.

Paine writes of this day's activities:

Next day [Dec. 26] the storm had turned into a fearful blizzard; the whole hilltop was a raging, driving mass of white. He wrote most of the day, but stopped now and then to read some of the telegrams or letters of condolence which came flooding in. Sometimes he walked over to the window to look out on the furious tempest. Once, during the afternoon, he said:

"Jean always so loved to see a storm like this, and just now at Elmira they are burying her."

Later he read aloud some lines by Alfred Austin, which Mrs. Crane had sent him lines which he had remembered in the sorrow for Susy:

When last came sorrow, around barn and byre
Wind-careen snow, the year's white sepulchre, lay.
"Come in," I said, "and warm you by the fire";
And there she sits and never goes away.

It was that evening that he came into the room where Mrs. Paine and I sat by the fire, bringing his manuscript.

"I have finished my story of Jean's death," he said. "It is the end of my autobiography. I shall never write any more. I can't judge it myself at all. One of you read it aloud to the other, and let me know what you think of it. If it is worthy, perhaps some day it may be published" [MTB 1551]. Note: Alfred Austin (1835-1913) [Gribben 35].

December 27 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Mai H. Coe.

Dear Mrs. Coe: / You must not think I am melancholy. No, I am not. It wrung my heart to lose Jean, who was so dear to me, & was all I had, now that Clara has gone to Europe to live; but I know my nature, & I knew I should soon be happy again, & not mourning any more, but only absorbed in remembering how beautiful her character was & how fine—how exquisitely fine—the very finest I have known except her mother's & your father's. And so I am already rejoicing that she has been set free. It is always so with me. My grief for the loss of a friend is soon replaced by gratitude that that friend is released from the ungentle captivity of this life. For sixteen years Jean suffered unspeakably, under the dominion of her cruel malady, & we were always dreading that some frightful accident would happen to her that would stretch her mutilated upon her bed for the rest of her life—or, worse—that her mind would become affected; but now she is free, & harm can never come to her more.

Eight months ago we got her back from her long & bitter exile in sanitariums, & from then until her last moment she was utterly & exultingly happy. I am so happy in this memory, that the very thought of it almost makes me cry.

We had two splendid days together—Wednesday & Thursday—I can never forget them. Then at seven-thirty Friday morning our old Katy appeared, gasping & quaking at my bedside & said words that are burnt into my memory:

“Miss Jean is dead!”

Yesterday evening at 6 I stood at my window & saw her borne away from this home to another, whence she will not return any more. I remained here. I saw her mother buried. I will never endure that shock again.

It is lovely of you to ask me to come; & some day I will.

It is good for me to be busy, these days, & I am. Ninety-five percent of the letters & telegrams that came yesterday & to-day & will begin to come from foreign countries a week hence, can be answered with a card. I shall answer the others with a pen.

With sincere thanks, & with love to you both, / SLC

The newspapers are mistaken about my health—I brought it back from Bermuda perfect [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Joe Twichell and Harmony C. Twichell.

Dear, dear Joe & Harmony:

Do not come—until by & bye. I am not suffering. My darling Jean is set free! That is the blessed music that rings in my heart all the time. For sixteen years she suffered—exile, pain, humiliation, despair—& now that dear sweet spirit is at rest. Jean was so fine, so admirable, so noble—just her incomparable mother over again! Think what I have lost in her. But think what she has gained.

We had two splendid days together—Wednesday & Thursday. Then at 7.30 the next morning Katy appeared at my bedside & said—without preliminary—

“Miss Jean is dead!”

When Clara got married & would have to go to Europe, my thought was, “My God, what is to become of Jean if I die!”

That terror cost me much sleep since.

Joe, Jean had a fine mind, a most competent brain. That [possibly canceled by someone other than SLC:] ~~she~~ said she was insane! She & her confederate told that to everybody around here. Jean's last act, Thursday night, was to defend her when I burst out upon her! It makes me proud to remember that. . . O blessed Jean,

I saw Livy buried. I will never consent to see another dear friend put under the ground.

How sweet, & peaceful, & beautiful Jean was, in her coffin, with that classic face!

With lots & lots of love— / Mark [MTP].

Paine included a segment Sam added to his piece “The Death of Jean Clemens”:

December 27. Did I know Jean's value? No, I only thought I did. I knew a ten-thousandth fraction of it, that was all. It is always so, with us, it has always been so. We are like the poor ignorant private soldier-dead, now, four hundred years — who picked up the great Sancy diamond on the field of the lost battle and sold it for a franc. Later he knew what he had done.

Shall I ever be cheerful again, happy again? Yes. And soon. For I know my temperament. And I know that the temperament is master of the man, and that he is its fettered and helpless slave and must in all things do as it commands. A man's temperament is born in him, and no circumstances can ever change it.

My temperament has never allowed my spirits to remain depressed long at a time.

That was a feature of Jean's temperament, too. She inherited it from me. I think she got the rest of it from her mother [MTB 1552].

December 28 Tuesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to Harriet E. Whitmore.

She is out of it all, dear Mrs. Whitmore—the first kindness that has come to her from the Source of All Kindness in sixteen years. She & I had a long & loving chat the night before the blow fell, & she gave me a commission for you. I said I would write you my side of that matter, & I proceeded to map it out, but she stopped me & asked me not to write in that heated vein—& not to try to write at all, because I would not be able to keep my temper. She told me to ask you to come down here & let me state the case orally. I promised at once. She had been shamefully & criminally abused for three years, through the plots & lies & malignities of that unspeakable person; & when I got her home again months ago I was resolved that I would not say no to any request of hers while my life should continue. I wish, from the bottom of my unforgiving heart, that that person.

But no, I promised my poor wronged child, & I will not finish that sentence.

After a few weeks I shall ask you & Mr. Whitmore to visit me, & then I will tell you my side. Doubtless all Hartford has listened to the other side—& believed it. I judge so because in to-day's & yesterday's avalanche of sympathizing letters & telegrams Hartford is substantially unrepresented. There was a time when this would have profoundly distressed me, but nothing can distress me any more, now. / Sincerely Yours / ... December 29 Wednesday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to daughter Clara .

O, Clara, Clara dear, I am so glad she is out of it & safe—safe!

I am not melancholy; I shall never be melancholy again, I think.

You see, I was in such distress when I came to realize that you were gone far away & no one stood between her & danger but me—and I could die at any moment, & then—oh then what would become of her! For she was wilful, you know, & would not have been governable.

You can't imagine what a darling she was, that last two or three days; & how fine, & good, & sweet, & noble—and joyful, thank Heaven!—& how intellectually brilliant. I had never been acquainted with Jean before. I recognized that.

But I must n't try to write about her—I can't. I have already poured my heart out with the pen, recording that last day or two. I will send you that—and you must let no one but Ossip read it.

Good-bye. I love you so! And Ossip! / Father [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mrs. Harriet A. Rathbone in Elmira, N.Y. “Dear Mrs. Rathbone—I know of your lovely tribute to the memory of my lost Jean, & out of my heart thank you. She was worthy of that gracious kindness. / Most sincerely Yours / ...” [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.).

You are your old self again, Mary dear, & I am glad. If you had failed me at this time it would have hurt me—and you would not wish to do that.

The first letter to come from a friend was from Mrs. Coe; & the same mail brought six others. I answered them all, & it took me all day. The evening mail brought some more from friends, but I was very tired, & gave up trying to answer them: every mail since has brought others—among them, letters from Mrs. Broughton & Mrs. Benjamin—but I did not try to answer. Of the letters brought by yesterday's two mails, 63 ought to be specially answered. I am not equal to it. Of the letters in this mornings mail, 22 ought to have special answers—but I will begin & end with yours, & content myself with that. I have kept all the letters from the beginning (many of them, from utter strangers, are very beautiful & touching), & shall only answer them with the usual printed card of acknowledgment & thanks. I have read every one of them. Indeed I have done nothing but read letters and telegrams (& annotate and classify them) since mid-afternoon of Christmas Eve. I would specially answer every one of them if I could.

We are in a turmoil yet, & can't take care of a guest, for we are re-arranging things. My secretaries (Mr. & Mrs. Albert Bigelow Paine & wife) & their little daughter have moved into Jean's apartment to-day & vacated their house. They will constitute my family henceforth & be a wholesome change from Miss Lyon & the confederate whom she married to keep him from turning State's evidence against her. I like them greatly—and so will you. Jean liked them.

My other niece (Mrs. Edward Loomis) [Julia Langdon Loomis] & her husband, who represented me at Jean's burial, are coming next Monday; Robert Collier & his wife are coming a day or two later (Wednesday)

& I hope you can & will come a couple of day's later (Saturday). (The train leaves Grand Central—LEXINGTON AVE SIDE, at 3.32 p.m & reaches Redding in an hour & 40 minutes.)

(Let me know, so I can send a carriage to our station.) I want Mrs. Sybil to come by & by—& Harry; but they would not feel at home in this wrecked & ruined house now. With real love / Your uncle Mark.

P.S. There is also a good train at 8.50 a.m. [MTP].

January 1 Saturday – Sam signed a typewritten letter to an unidentified person concerning the appointment of Albert B. Paine as his secretary and manager of his affairs [MTP: American Arts Association-Anderson Galleries catalogs, No. 4346, 11-12 Nov. 1937, Item 89].

Sam also wrote to Elizabeth Wallace.

Dear Betsy: / I cant write. For I am ill with a cold—the first one I have had in two years. The pain in my breast has come back—so I am leaving for Bermuda next Wednesday, for an indefinite stay.

I enclose a sheet which I wrote to Clara to comfort her.

I shall stay with the Allens if they’ve got room for me. / Always affectionately, ... [MTP].

Virginia Frazer Boyle sent a letter of condolence [MTP].

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence C. Buel sent a small card of condolence [MTP].

Nettie S. Gaines for the Stockton Record wrote to Sam referring to her letter of two months prior asking permission to republish “Jumping Frog” in a school reader. Clemens had referred her to Harpers who had refused her; did Harpers still retain that old copyright? She also offered condolences [MTP].

January 3 Monday – Albert B. Paine wrote to William H. Allen in Bermuda, advising them of Sam's preferences during his stay there. Paine's protectiveness of Clemens is quite evident:

For Mr. Clemens, I want to say that he is more than anxious to go to your house [Bay House] during his stay in Bermuda, for he does not like hotel life... but he feels he could not take advantage of this generosity on your part for any length of time without some compensation....

Now, as to other matters; you have already realized, of course, that Mr. Clemens has to be protected from the great number of people who wish to use him as the means of their own social advancement, or as an ornament for their drawing-rooms and dinner tables....

He is also to be guarded from business propositions of every sort—schemes, plans, investments, and the like. These things have been his undoing through a long period of years....He does not wish ever to make an investment again. But, as I have said, he is impulsive, enthusiastic, and likely to fall in with the suggestion of a plan which would only mean discomfort, worry and nightmare for him later on, and he has had enough of such things....

You have, of course, already realized that Mr. Clemens's nature, like his genius, is an unusual one. His likes and dislikes are erratic, quickly formed, and like railroad time-tables, "subject to change without notice." The man or woman he is apparently delighted with today, he may not care to see tomorrow at all, and vice versa...

Paine also alerted the Allens that he was sending along Sam's value, Claude Benchotte, with instructions and medicine should Sam have severe angina. If it wasn't possible for the Allens to put him up, Sam would try as best he could to stay in the Hotel [MTAq 143-4].

January 4 Tuesday – D. Hoffman writes: "Clemens took the train to New York on Tuesday, January 4, and had dinner that night with Howells and Paine at the home of Edward Eugene Loomis, who was married to Livy's niece, Julia O. Langdon" [144]. (Editorial emphasis.) Note: it would be the last time Howells and Clemens met. Though the date is off by one day, MTHL carries the following note:

At dinner and afterwards, they talked of the Clemeses' butler George [Griffin], "that peerless black ex-slave and children's idol"...of labor unions as the "sole present help of the weak against the strong," and of dreams. When Howells left, he declared to Paine, “There was never anybody like him [Twain]; there never will be” [MTHL 850; MTB 1557]. Note: see later source for a fuller account.

Newton R. Heber wrote from NYC to offer condolences [MTP].

Dr. Edward W. Kellogg wrote from Santa Fe, Cuba to offer condolences: “To me she was still the sweet child for whom I often cared professionally...” [MTP].

Charles T. Lark wrote to Sam.

Enclosed herewith please find copy of a letter which just arrived from London relative to the Ashcroft tobacco incident. You will not that they are making further inquiries, and until this final report comes, we will hardly be in a position to advise the institution of injunction proceedings.

You will remember that Mr. Paine suggested that he thought it quite probable that the advertisement in question was in the form of a half tone or a block insert at the time it reached the hands of the tobacco firm...[He wished Sam] “a pleasant trip” [MTP].

Julia H. Pullen wrote from Memphis, Tenn. to offer condolences. She signed “Miss Jean’s nurse” [MTP].

January 5 Wednesday – Sam sailed “unexpectedly” for Bermuda on the Bermudian. Paine did not accompany him; instead his valet, Claude Benchotte [Paine to Quick Jan 17; D. Hoffman 158]. Note: Paine also had written the Allens that Sam would likely make another trip during the winter to Bermuda; Sam, down with a cold on New Year’s Day, planned to leave on this day for Bermuda, so just how “unexpected” the trip was, it may have seemed so to Paine.

January 6 Thursday – Sam was at sea on the Bermudian headed for Bermuda. It would be his last stay there and last 95 days, his longest [D. Hoffman 158].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens: “Matters are going well. Mrs. Paine & I are sending out the cards, and I shall order two hundred more bought. Already there are over three hundred letters and telegrams and a number came in today—one from Helen Keller, which I enclose to you” [MTP].

John W. Crawford “Poet Scout” sent a letter of condolence with verse [MTP].

Zoheth S. Freeman for Liberty National Bank wrote to Sam enclosing a check for $229.19 for interest accrued [MTP].

The Jeanne D’Arc Suffrage League per W.R. Mitchell wrote from NYC, offering “...sincerest compliments and in grateful recognition of your splendid history of our patron saint” [MTP].

Jeanne Robert wrote from France to offer condolences in French [MTP].

January 7 Friday – Sam arrived in Hamilton, Bermuda, where he wrote from the Allen’s Bay House, Pembroke Parish, to Frederick A. Duneka or Frederick T. Leigh at Harper’s.

Dear Duneka

or The Major:

Please get for me with good dispatch, & send to me to the above address, these things, to-wit, and charge to me:

“Old Rose & Silver,” by Myrtle Reed;

“Their Heart’s Desire” (illustrated by Harrison Fisher);

“The Master’s Violin,” by Myrtle Reed

SLC used mourning border for most letters from Jean’s death on.

Can you send me the cover-picture of Xmas No. of the Bazar, without the rest of the page—just the picture alone, for framing? Can you?

With love to you all, / Your/ Uncle Mark [MTP].

Notes: D. Hoffman writes this letter delivered with a black mourning border for Jean. Myrtle Reed (1874-1911): Old Rose and Silver (1909); The Master's Violin (1905); Reed wrote a number of best sellers and cookbooks under the pseudonym Olive Green. She took her own life. See Gribben 573. Francis Foster Perry: Their Heart's Desire (1909), Illustrated by Harrison Fisher and decorated by Theodore B. Hapgood; not in Gribben. Was this Hapgood related to Sam's old friend Norman Hapgood? This doesn't seem to be the sort of pulp tear-jerker that Clemens would otherwise be interested in. In a later letter (Jan 11-20) to Paine Sam requested "Harpers to send all books through the firm mentioned by Mr. Allen," so these may not have been for Clemens.

Sam also wrote to Edward Eugene Loomis and Julia Langdon Loomis.

Dear Edward:

I have just arrived, & am very much pleased with the weather. I am not writing for the sake of furnishing news, for there isn't any. I am only wanting to say how thankful I am to have a Mark Twain Company such as I have got—sterling men, every one, & to the last degree capable.

Julie dear, you are with the family now, I suppose, & I beg you to thank them earnestly for me, for their loving ministrations lately when my Jean was their guest, tarrying with them a day on her happy journey.

With love to you' & yours & mine / Uncle Sam [MTP].

Annie Colt McLeadeth wrote from London to offer "a few words of sympathy" [MTP].

January 7-31 – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Mr. Roberts. "Dear Sir, / You were so kind as to say you would play a selection for me, and this note is to beg you to play the Intermezzo of Cavallerio Sunday morning, if I am not trespassing too much upon your kindness / Very truly Yours, / ..." [MTP]. Note: Sam usually went to the Sunday band concerts at Prospect Military Park. This is likely a request for one Sunday while he was in Bermuda.

January 7-April 7 – In Redding, Conn. Sam sent a form letter to an unidentified person. "Dear Sir (or Madam):—I try every remedy sent to me. I am now on No. 67. Yours is 2,653. I am looking forward to its beneficial results" [MFMT 287].

January 8 Saturday – Amy C. Hayes wrote from Molokai, Hawaii to offer condolences from her and her son, Dr. Homer H. Hayes [MTP].

Frances Serrill Knowles wrote from Byrn Mawr, Penn. to offer condolences, fondly recalling the summer spent with Jean at Gloucester, Mass. "When sailing, she talked for hours to me of her home, and seemed to dwell in the past with the dear Mother of whom she never wearied of telling of her wonderful love and sympathetic nature which had been so much to the dear child..." [MTP]. Note: see August 1908 entry for inscription from Mrs. Knowles.

January 9 Sunday – Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens:

I am enclosing to you a letter from Clara, received yesterday. It seems to be postmarked the 27th, so it was written before she could have received a letter from you.

She probably received my first letter about Jan 1 and we may expect an answer to it by next steamer. I also am enclosing a letter from Margaret Blackmer and I will put in one or two foreign letters [MTP].

Margaret W. Patterson wrote from Iowa to offer condolences [MTP].

January 10 Monday – Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens:

The Lincoln pass-book came in this morning, and we have checked it through carefully, with cheque-book, cancelled cheques &c; the result shows an actual balance of $472 .¹³ on Jan. 4 instead of $332.⁵⁴ as entered in your cheque-book. Somehow Jean may have made a mistake in her adding, or subtracting, and we need not look it up—it does not matter. Nobody is wronged, and your balance is $139.⁵² more than she thought. [He directed Sam to enter several deposits and other details] [MTP].

D. Hoffman writes of Sam attending a lecture:

Helen [Allen] and her mother went with Clemens to a military lecture at Prospect on January 10. The speaker had sent a special invitation, saying he wished to address in particular Mark Twain, “the greatest living master of the platform-art.” They were greeted by Lt.-Gen. Frederick Walter Kitchener, the governor of Bermuda and a brother of Horatio Herbert Kitchener of Khartoum, commander in chief during much of the South African War of 1899 to 1902 . Clemens worried that on a previous occasion he had committed a breach of etiquette. He wrote Paine the next day [see entry] to express relief that the governor was “apparently as glad to see me as he said he was.” That night, Clemens planned to dine with the commandant of the Carnegie, who promised to arrange a private tour of his ship [145]. Note: Sir Frederick Walter Kitchener (1858-1912), veteran of the Boer War, served as Bermuda Commander and Governor from Oct. 1908 until his death.

Ginney (Virginia) Bissell wrote from Hartford to offer sympathy [MTP].

William W. Jackson wrote from Eau Claire, Wisc. “You do not know me but you do know my Dad, Wm. T. Jackson, as I was told you were kids together, although I presume kids were not kids in those days of long ago.” He enclosed a picture of Clemens and his old Hannibal home and invited him to spend the summer there [MTP].

Carlotta Welles wrote from Byrn Mawr College to offer condolences [MTP].

January 11 Tuesday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Albert B. Paine in West Redding, Conn.

Dear Paine,— Again I am living the ideal life & am immeasurably content. There is nothing to mar it but the bloody-minded bandit Arthur, who still fetches & carries Helen. Presently he will be found drowned. Claude comes to Bay House twice a day to see if I need any service. He is invaluable. There was a military lecture last night at the Officer’s Mess, Prospect, & as the lecturer honored me with a special & urgent invitation & said he wanted to lecture to me particularly, I being “the greatest living master of the platform-art,” I naturally packed Helen & her mother into the provided carriage & went.

As soon as we landed at the door with the crowd the Governor came to me at once & was very cordial, & apparently as glad to see me as he said he was. So that incident is closed. And pleasantly & entirely satisfactorily. Every thing is all right, now, & I am no longer in a clumsy & awkward situation.

I “met up” with that charming Colonel Chapman, & other officers of the regiment, & had a good time.

Commandant Peters of the “Carnegie” will dine here tonight & arrange a private visit for us to his ship, the crowd to be denied access. / Sincerely Yours, / S.L.C. [MTP: Paine’s 1917 Mark Twain Letters, p. 837-8; & marks replaced]. Note: Claude, Sam’s servant, likely stayed at the Hamilton Hotel. See Jan. 10 entry for D. Hoffman’s excerpt and Clemens’ relief about a breach of etiquette.

January 11-20 Thursday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Albert B. Paine in West Redding, Conn.

Dear Paine—

I want Helen to have the bicycle the thieves restored to the garret. Will you please send it according to the directions supplied by Mr. Allen in the accompanying letter. If you can pay the transportation costs in advance, I shall be glad.

Also, will you tell the Harpers to send all books through the firm mentioned by Mr. Allen. Then we shan't have any trouble about getting them promptly.

I hope you are all well. I would rather be here than anywhere else. / Sincerely Yours / SLC

Jan. 14.

The ship is in, your letters are received. Many thanks.

Mrs. Allen greatly wants to know if those plants survived & are flourishing. Please tell us.

Will Mrs. Paine please type the “last words” of my Autobiography (about Jean’s death) & mail it to Clara.
I will tell Clara it is coming. / With love to you all / ... [MTP].

Edgar & Curtis, Real Estate, NYC wrote to ask for the opportunity of offering your house (in Ridgefield) for sale [MTP].

January 15 Saturday – Mrs. W.F. Forbush wrote from Cannon Station, Conn. to offer some treatment for Sam’s indigestion [MTP].

Mildred C. Heywood (Mrs. Charles P. Heywood; widow) wrote from NYC to extend her “heart-felt sympathy.” She lost her husband six weeks before. Her sister was Mary B. (Mollie) Shoot (1863?-1954) who married Felix Wood (1845-1900) in 1879 and made her debut as Florence Wood with Augustine Daly’s stock company. She came to Daly’s troupe with a letter of introduction from Clemens [MTP].

An unidentified person (signed “Wanderer”) wrote from Vancouver, B.C. to Sam, having followed his career and wandered himself since 1869. He enclosed a clipping about Twain feeling old and feeling pain over his left breast, and said the clipping was what prompted him to finally write his praise [MTP].

January 16 Sunday

January 17 Monday – In Redding, Conn. Sam wrote to the New York Telephone Co. requesting telephone books. His letter is not extant but referred to in the Company's Jan. 20 reply; since Paine wrote the below for Clemens, it's probable he also wrote this letter [MTP].

Albert B. Paine wrote for Sam to Mrs. Emma Gertrude Quick.

Dear Mrs. Quick: / Mr. Clemens sailed for Bermuda unexpectedly on the 5th, and among his correspondence I found a letter from you which he may or may not have answered. At all events I am sure that he would wish me to thank you for your kind sympathy, and to say that by-and-by, when he returns, he will hope to have a visit from Dorothy and yourself. He went away in good spirits, feeling very well, but stunned by the sorrow that has so recently come to this beautiful house. We hardly look for him before pleasant weather.

With kindest regards to Dorothy and yourself, I am, / Very sincerely yours, / Albert B. Paine [MTP].

January 18 Tuesday – William Dean Howells wrote from NYC to Sam.

Dear Clemens: / While your wonderful words are warm in my mind yet, I want to tell you what you know already: that you never wrote anything greater, finer, than that turning-point paper of yours.

I shall feel it honor enough if they put on my tombstone, "He was born in the same Century and general Section of middle western Country with Dr. S. L. Clemens, Oxon., and had his Degree three years before him through a mistake of the University."

I hope you are worse. You will never be riper for a purely intellectual life again.* Yours ever * and it is a pity to have you dragging along with a wornout material body on top of your soul [MTHL 2: 851].

Notes: On Jan. 21 Clemens sent this letter to Paine. He wrote on it, "I reckon this spontaneous outburst by the first critic of the day is good to keep, ain't it Paine?" He asked if Paine would send Howells' letter to Clara. Harper's Bazar published a series by various persons, "The Turning-Point in My Life. The source notes that Sam's contribution "is notable as the first widely-circulated exposition of Mark Twain's determinist philosophy, and as an emphatic assertion of the view that the most important thing in his life was 'its literary feature'" [n.1].

Edward B. Hooker, M.D. wrote from Hartford to offer condolences [MTP].

January 19 Wednesday – Ragnvald Blix wrote on Simplicissimus notepaper from Munich, Germany:

I have just received the St. Sebastian [drawing] from my exhibition in Christiana and a friend of me, who goes to New York in some days, takes the drawing with him (I have heard that the luggage of drawings in America is very detailed and troublesome)

I hope, that the Sebastian is welcome in Stormfield? [MTP].

January 20 Thursday – W.H. Howe for H.H. Laboratory, Moorefield, Ky. wrote to ask for an autograph, after having visited Florida, Mo. and viewing the house where his aunt Polly said Clemens was born [MTP].

New York Telephone Co. per F.B. Ellis wrote to Sam: "I have your favor of January 17th, and wish to advise that 2 copies of the New York Telephone Directory issue of October 14th, 1909 have been sent to you by Adam's express to-day" [MTP].

Dora Prentice Wills wrote from Holmesburg, Phila. to Sam.

Dear Mark Twain, Thank you very much for introducing to your readers that charming little girl Marjorie Fleming. She is indeed a bewitching little maid & I feel a debt of gratitude to you as great as yours to Dr. Brown of Edinburgh.

I am an invalided old maid who has kept fairly young through an interest & affection for young ones & am particularly glad to add Marjorie to my book friends. She has an advantage over Rebecca & Rebecca Mary & Mrs. Harker's fascinating young people in that she really, truly was—

Your Christmas message also appealed to me most strongly. My one effort is to live decently today.

With cordial good wishes & trusting you will not confound me with the elderly females whose main object in life serves to be bothering writing people / Sincerely yours, Dora Prentice Wills [MTP]. Note: Paine wrote on the letter that he hadn't answered it yet and asked if he should or did Clemens wish to. Sam wrote on Wills' letter and returned it to Paine. See ? 25 Jan. entry.

January 21 Friday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn.

Dear Paine,—Thanks for your letter, and for its contenting news of the situation in that foreign and far-off and vaguely-remembered country where you and Loomis and Lark and other beloved friends are.

I have a letter from Clara this morning. She is solicitous, and wants me well and watchfully taken care of. My, she ought to see Helen and her parents and Claude administer that trust!

Also she says: "I hope to hear from you or Mr. Paine very soon."

I am writing her, and I know you will respond to your part of her prayer. She is pretty desolate now, after Jean's emancipation—the only kindness God ever did that poor unoffending child in all her hard life.

Ys ever

S. L. C.

Send Clara a copy of Howells's gorgeous letter. I want a copy of my article that he is speaking of [MTP: Paine's 1917 Mark Twain's Letters p.838].

January 22 Saturday

January 23 Sunday

January 24 Monday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn.

Dear Paine:

Can you get this note to Mr. Moroso for me?

And will you send the poem to Clara when you write her?

Life continues here, the same as usual. There isn't a flaw in it. Good times, good home, tranquil contentment all day & every day, without a break. I know familiarly several very satisfactory people, & meet them frequently: Mr. Hamilton, Mr & Mrs & Miss Sloane; Mr. & Mrs. Eels & Miss Waterman; Mrs. Hopkins—and so on. I shouldn't know how to go about bettering my situation [MTP]. Note: Mr. & Mrs. William Milligan Sloane.

Louis J. Keller wrote from Chicago, Ill. to ask for "a large picture of yourself with your autograph, or, better still, some sentiment or quotation from one of your books—anything you wish" [MTP].

January 25 Tuesday

January 25? Tuesday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote on the Jan. 20 letter from Dora Prentice Wills to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn.: "Paine, write her one of your darlinest letters for me. SLC / Paine, Claude does not want his money. He will cash the check, but don't send any more. SLC" [MTP].

January 26 Wednesday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Margaret Blackmer in Greenwich, Conn.

Dear Margaret— / So you have reached Rosemary Hall at last. I know it must be recently, or you would have run up to see me at Stormfield.

SLC used mourning border for most letters from Jean's death on.

I suppose I shan't see Stormfield again very soon. I have no sorrowful associations with Bermuda, so I expect to spend a good deal of my time here in future. I am not in any hurry to go back to America.

You & my Bermuda angel-fish are about the same age, and a couple of years ago about the same stature, and could have been weighed in the grocer's balances - - - but now!

Well, now it's a job for the hay-scales. Oh, stop growing, Margaret dear! / With lots of love, / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mrs. Margaret Illington Bowes in Tacoma, Wash.

You dear Margaret!

I am so glad to know you are happy! for I love you so. Some are born for one thing, some for another; but you were specially born to love & be loved, & be happy—and so things are with you now as they ought to be.

I fled to Bermuda when the disaster fell—the double disaster, for Clara was gone into permanent exile 13 days before Jean was set free from the swindle of this life. Stormfield was a desolation, its charm all gone, and I could not stay there.

My ship has gone down, but my raft has landed me in the Islands of the Blest, and I am as happy as any other shipwrecked sailor ever was. I shan't go "home" till - - - oh, bye and bye, I don't know when—there's no hurry. Hurry? Why, there's no hurry about anything; suddenly the hurry has all gone out of my life.

Bless your dear heart, I love you so! [MTP]. Note: Margaret Illington, Sam's unofficial Angel Fish, had divorced Daniel Frohman in Nov. 1909 and married Edward Bowes (1874-1946), who would become famous for his Major Bowes Amateur Hour radio show in the 1930s, which morphed into Ted Mack's Original Amateur Hour in 1947.

Sam also began a letter to Elizabeth Wallace that he finished on Jan. 29.

Dear Betsy—

No, revelation—of a valuable sort—does not come through sorrow when one is old. Before 70 the whole satire & swindle of life has been revealed—to all except the wilfully or constitutionally dull. What a silly invention human life is! & how like a glove its silliest religion fits it! & how perfectly our principal God & His Famblly harmonise with the outfit!

Do I "know more" than I knew before? Oh, hell no! There was nothing to learn, (about hereafters & other-such undesirables), there has never been anything to learn & know about those insulting mysteries. I am happy—few are so happy—but I get none of this happiness from "knowing more" of the unknowable than I knew before [MTP].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding:

"Your enclosing check for $3800- came yesterday, and I will send the cheque down for deposit, today." He gave more check and dividend deposit detail. "That Haithwaite letter is a gem: Ashcroftian in every line, only a trifle more clumsy—more openly vulgar. The boy is young; time will do much for him; he will acquire all the art and artifice of the master, by and by. I think his letter ought to be framed. / And was there ever a greater contrast in letters than between Haithwaite's and Howells's?" Paine told Twain he was lucky to be in Lotus land and deserved it [MTP].

Mary E. Claggett (Mrs. William H. Clagett) wrote to Sam.

Dear old friend;

I was grieved on receiving a Boston paper yesterday, to see you were in ill health, and my heart goes out to you in your sickness and sorrow; and I have been thinking of my girlish days with Belle Stott, Ella Creel, and Ella Patterson when you were an occasional visitor on the Hill in Keokuk; then of our friendship in Nevada, when we saw & heard more of your witticisms, & your meteor stay enlivened life for all of us. Do you remember the evening you spent at Judge Wellington Stewarts? when you came to pay your respects to Billy Clagetts Bride, in the Fall of 1862? ... [she goes on to relate the birth of her daughters Mary and Ida up to 1863] ... You went back to civilization and fame and honors went with you, and you have blessed the world with your pen, and good humor ever since. God bless you and be with you, and spare you many years yet to cheer the lonely wayfarers in the wilderness and at last bring you into His holy peace and Eternal joy, is the humble prayer of your old friend, / Mrs. Wm. H. Claggett [MTP].

January 27 Thursday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn.

Dear Paine; / While the matter is in my mind I will remark that if you ever send me another letter which is not paged at the top I will write you with my own hand so that I may use with utter freedom & without embarrassment the kind of words which alone can describe such a criminal; to-wit, ——— ——— ——— ——— ——— You will have to put into words those dashes because propriety will not allow me to do it myself in my Secretary's hearing. The other night I picked up three of your letters with the intention of answering them but they had lain several days on my extra bed and had gotten mixed to-gether with this result: that inasmuch as you had neglected to page them I was not able to hunt my way through them, and had to give up trying. There were several explosions of language. You are forgiven, but don't let this occur again—please, please don't.

One of these letters was about my bank account. A page was missing. It must have been from that missing page that I had gotten the impression that I had a personal credit in one of the banks of about $5000. The remains of that letter furnished me certain details to wit:—$332; $139; $3053; $229, total $3754— You suggested that I send a check transferring about $4000 to the Liberty. Very well I sent a check for $3800 and I find that this exhausts that credit and $50 more. Where is the other $1500 of the alleged $5000.

I am going to do as you suggested—as soon as I think of it—to wit: hand my check book to Mr. Allen and let him dig the insanities out of it, if he can. Which is doubtful as I have been meddling with it myself and now I can make neither head nor tail of it

Please send me another dozen of poor Jean's $50 worth of pads for I seem to have used up nearly all of those I brought with me.

Paine won't you tell the Major or Mr. Dunneka that I want to see what Howels & James say about the turning point of life when their articles appear in the Bazar.

I note that the bicycle is on its way and I wish to thank you for your prompt & intelligent execution of this Commission.

With assurances of my continued admiration & affection / Sincerely yours [in right margin, in hand of SLC: postage-economy.]

P.S. Never mind the pads—send me a lot of thin, strong paper such as the stenographers use. This is for postage-economy [MTP].

Sam's notebook: ~~W.W. Jacobs Doubleday~~ → ~~Kipling & "What is Man? (2)"~~ / ~~Duneka H.~~ / ~~Harvey Class~~ / ~~Twichell~~ ~~Mr. Littleton~~ ~~Lord Northcliffe~~ ~~Billie Burke~~ ~~Carnegie~~ [NB 49 TS 1].

Note: this the last notebook of Twain lacks any dates save for the names above. The TS is only 8 pages.

G.J. Stanley Fleming from Presidency General Hospital, Calcutta, India wrote condolences [MTP].

Robert E. Shafer wrote from Nazareth, Penn. to send Sam his "new national anthem," "Hymn of the Nation" (in the file) [MTP].

January 28 Friday – Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens:

I will forward our letter to the Poet Moroso. It will gratify him very much—more than any money payment he could receive, I am sure.

I am enclosing you an interesting batch best of all a letter from Clara, written eleven days ago. Perhaps she has one on the way to you, too—of course she has—but you will be glad to see this, no doubt. I'd like to have it again, by and by.

Then, there is this letter about the “Ashcroft-Player” forgery. That’s interesting, too, as you will agree. I’ve written Lark to go right ahead & if there’s anything to be done, we want to do it. What a paltry thief he is! [MTP]

Florence Cook Bronson wrote while sailing from Columbo, Ceylon to Naples, Italy to offer condolences [MTP].

January 29 Saturday – Sam finished his Jan. 26 to Elizabeth Wallace.

Jan. 29—noon. I intended to be lazy & dictate the rest of this, but my little secretary (Helen Allen, angel-fish) has escaped, & gone bicycling with a schoolmate. I am guest in her parents’ house—indefinitely. I never feel a desire to revisit Stormfield. Paine & his wife & little girl are occupying the house for me. The servants like them & will stay with them, I think. I have Claude, best of butlers, valets & everything-else, with me. He lives at the Hamilton House, but is in close touch with me by telephone and bicycle.

In England Ashcroft committed a forgery in the second degree upon me, & sold for £25 my name (& words which I would not have uttered for a hundred times the money.) Sh—! say nothing about it—we hope to catch him & shut him up in a British prison. It is not a strong hope, for he is smart in covering up his tracks, but we shall get out of it what we can.

He is a reptile—yes, but not so slimy a one as his wife. She was intended for an insect—capturable with a fine-tooth comb.

Helen has been gone an hour & a half, & will have to be severely scolded. Did you ever try to scold an angel-fish? I think a person could learn to do it. But he would have to have considerable practice.

Good-bye. Affectionately, S.L.C.

[in Helen S. Allen’s hand]

Apology. Mr. Clemens wants me to say I am sorry. So I say I am sorry. / Helen Schuyler Allen. / Secy. [MTP].

January 30 Sunday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Thomas Lemuel James (1831-1916), prior Postmaster General briefly under Garfield (1881-1882); afterward until his death James was chairman of the board of directors of the Lincoln National Bank, NYC . See also Feb. 15 entry.

Dear General—

Please send me fifty dollars. Send it in silver American quarter pieces. Don’t send old rusty ones. Send bright and white and new ones just out of the mint. I have a special use for them. I enclose a check.

Sincerely yours,

Mark Twain [MTP: NY Evening Mail May 2, 1910].

Sam also wrote to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn. “Dear Paine— / (in a desperate hurry) Please send me 200 visiting cards. / Ys ever / SLC” [MTP].

Sam also wrote another to Albert B. Paine, heading it “Bay House / Sunday,” which may have been this day:

Dear Paine;

Have you ever had a tooth-brush disembowel itself in your mouth? I have been trying this & it is not as amusing as it seems at first glance. This is because the bristles do not fall entirely apart but get crisscross & will not go down but lodge & get stuck except a random few & these go down only an inch or two & stop there & obstruct the successors. Detachments from the main bunch get under your tongue & you try to get them out with your fingers which causes writhings & convulsions of the tongue and proddings & stuckings and general discomfit & language; & after all, there is no success. Get the Colonel to try it / Yours Ever / S.L.C. / per HSA

[in SLC’s hand] P.S. Helen thinks such things are not worth recording [MTP].

January 31 Monday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam inscribed a copy of “Is Shakespeare Dead?” From My Autobiography to Marion S. Allen (Mrs. William H. Allen). “We ought never to break the Sabbath during a thunderstorm. /Truly Yours /Mark Twain / To / Mrs. William Allen / with the respect, esteem, and affectionate regards of / The Author” [MTP].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens:

“I held my letter for the statement, which Mrs Paine will have copied presently. The ice & coal hauling ran up to a high figure, owing to the fearful condition of the roads, but the sum-total of expense, this time is less than I expected.” Paine reported that by shutting off some radiators the house temperature was now more even and with some savings of coal [MTP].

January 31? Monday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam inscribed a copy of Extracts from Adam’s Diary to Helen Schuyler Allen. “To Helen Schuyler Allen / with apologies from /The Author / for offering her a book which exposes the fact (page 15) that the first Man introduced slang into the world, & thus tacitly, by his high authority,made its use legitimate forever” [MTP]

February – Sam’s contribution to the essays, “The Turning Point of My Life,” ran in this issue of Harper’s Bazar. This was a series of notable men who contributed individual essays on the theme. Hill writes of Twain’s contribution:

He began with the “Parable of the Two Apples,” a long and belabored fable on Circumstance, which neither Paine nor Jean liked. Their displeasure, according to Paine, brought on an attack of Clemens’ angina. A second version, the one published in 1910, was written in Bermuda in November or December and proved more acceptable. Its basis thesis was that the turning point of his life was a case of the measles which, through an inexorable chain of succeeding events, led to his choice of a literary career. External events—which Mark Twain recorded with close fidelity to his biography—had coincided to move him in an unalterable direction, with choice and free will totally absent from the process. The cause-and-effect sequence was more often than not farfetched, but the article gained pristine approval from Howells as the best thing Mark Twain had ever written [250].

February 1 Tuesday -Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens: “I sent you a good batch of stuff yesterday & found your letter ...at the station this morning. Also a letter for you from Clara which is here enclosed.” He offered bank data, and opinion on numbering letter pages and a few other short remarks [MTP].

February 2 Wednesday – Maude Jordan wrote from London to remind Sam of her letter and photos send for autograph and had not heard back [MTP]. Note: ABP: “Mr. Clemens is not in America & is not expected before May—”

Florence Rice Knox wrote “In the Suez Canal” (most certainly on a vessel) to offer condolences [MTP].

Los Angeles Saddle Club per J.H. Coker wrote to ask for Sam’s likeness to frame for their library wall [MTP].

Granville I. Chittenden wrote from Denver, Colo. to wish Clemens a “speedy recovery” from his ill health, and expressed that no reply was necessary [MTP].

February 3 Thursday – At the Bay House in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn. Written to Paine just two months before Twain’s death, this note, in its black-bordered envelope

(in mourning for Twain's daughter) concludes, as if in fun, with the words, "I've got some more to say, but my secretary is busy & I am lazy" [MTP; Paraphrase: Dawson's Bookshop catalogs, No. 150, Dec. 1940, Item 138].

Clara Clemens Gabrilowitsch wrote to her father, the letter not extant but referred to in Sam's Feb 21 reply [MTP].

February 4 Friday – At the Bay House in Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Andrew Carnegie.

Dear St. Andrew:

This will introduce & endorse to you Mr. Morgan; & as this is the first time I have ever given anyone a letter of introduction to you out of 150 applications, "dying I salute you!" and urgently beg you to let him talk to you on a matter which is not trivial but is of very high importance to our country & to its loftiest interests.

I got the whiskey—and something happened to it. Always does. I thank you ever so much, & am yours in the hope of a hereafter for both of us where the asbestos pyjamas you have been spending large money on will not be needed. /Affectionately [MTP].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens:

Mrs Paine is mailing you the visiting cards, & they will go by tomorrow's steamer and I will send this line to say that we will look up the Jacob book & get it off next week. I will also go into the matter of Clara's will with Lark first time I go [to] town. I had long letter from both Clara & Ossip a few days ago. They are well & happy. Matters here all in fine shape. Plenty of 'weather / Hurriedly & affectionately Will look up the Mysterious Stranger MS. too [MTP].

February 5 Saturday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam inscribed his photograph to an unidentified woman: "To Etheldoralinda, from her principal best friend" [MTP]. Note: The playfulness of the name used by Sam infers a young lady.

Sam also began a letter to Albert B. Paine that he finished Feb. 7.

Dear Paine:

Your preliminary report is very fine.

Under "Salaries" it lacks one item, not yet payable: Stanchfield, which is about $80 a month.

Now let us consider an idea of mine—to-wit: Clara is evidently not coming to America for a long time & then not to stay much.

As I shall probably see Stormfield but seldom, hereafter, & then only flittingly, we can go on reducing expense there & get them well down.

Suppose you stop all expense on Jean's farm as soon as you can:

1. By ceasing to raise poultry
2. By selling any live stock not needed—except Scott.
3. Or by renting the farm & its belongings to somebody.

The farm, the house, the tools, etc., might possibly be rented out for four or five per cent on $10,000 (which is about what they have cost, up to now.)

And suppose you discharge all servants not absolutely necessary to your little family's needs—thus diminishing food-expense & wage-bill.

When I am there for a while no additional servants & no change of menu will be needed.

When Clara & Ossip are coming, they will bring a servant, of course; & if they are likely to invite company, they would give Mrs. Paine a month's notice, so that extra help could be provided.

I would give notice, too, if I wanted to invite company. I foresee no such emergency, unless I could get Helen & her mother and brother to come for parts of August & September. Helen's school opens September 30.

I expect to run to America every few months & stay a while at Stanchfield's & a while at Stormfield.

I want Katy to remain, & be always there when Clara or I come. I shall keep Claude myself.

SLC used mourning border for most letters from Jean's death on.

The photographs have come & are all right, except I wanted a sepia. These are black & white. Please send a sepia.

Paine, we cannot afford to take any notice of Haithwaite's impudent letter to me. / As ever / S. L. C. [MTP]. Note: Haithwaite's letter not extant. Hill gives insight into who Haithwaite was and what his letter may have been about:

A young man named Haithwaite, apparently a friend of Ashcroft, tried to negotiate with the Mark Twain Company to purchase Clemens' shares in the Milk Products Company [Plasmon], but Haithwaite declined to pay the $35,000 par value which Clemens set as his asking price [252]. Note: Hill refers to the period just before the Dec. 11, 1909 discontinuation of the Company. Haithwaite, still poking around two months later likely referred to Sam's refusal to set a price acceptable to Haithwaite.

M. Cooke wrote to Sam after reading an account of him introducing General Joseph Hawley to a Republican meeting years before. She asked Sam to "let me have a line to know if any of the [Hawley] family are living" [MTP].

A.O. Kaplan wrote from Englewood, NJ to Sam, sending him his book, The New Baby's Biography [MTP]. Note: MT: Please give him the usual perfunctory words of thanks for his unwelcome book, Paine. / SLC"

February 6 Sunday – Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens:

"Mrs. Paine has found a book of Jacobs' which seems to fill the bill, and it will go by next steamer. "The Mysterious Stranger" is here in various forms. Part of it seems to have been made in duplicate by Miss Hobby (I judge from the typing) & the opening that goes with this form was typewritten by Jean." He advised that Harry Lounsbury thought he had a buyer for the "Italian farm," and had asked Paine to "make a price basis to work on." He calculated Clemens had paid about $9,000. He also enclosed a letter from Dorothy Quick [MTP].

February 7 Monday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam finished his Feb. 5 to Albert Bigelow Paine in Redding, Conn.

Monday, Feb. 7. Yesterday Mr. Allen took us on an excursion in Mr. Hamilton's big motor boat. Present, Mrs. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. & Miss Sloan, Helen, Mildred Howells, Claude, & me. Several hours' swift skimming over ravishing blue seas under a brilliant sun; also a couple of hours of picknicking & lazying under the cedars in a secluded place.

Mr. Hamilton had a stroke several days ago, & his life was threatened, but he is recovering now. The Orotava is arriving with 260 passengers—I shall get letters by her, no doubt.

P.S.—Please send me the Standard Unabridged that is on the table in my bedroom. I have no dictionary here [MTP].

Sten Drewsen wrote on Players notepaper: "First let me present myself as a Danish author and then as a friend of our young Norwegian protégé Mr. Blix on who's behalf I write to you. Mr. Blix has asked me to take one of his drawings 'The Holy Sebastian' with me to American and give it to you." He knew Clemens was not at home so inquired if he might come in mid-March, or should he send it? [MTP].

February 8 Tuesday

February 9 Wednesday – W.T. Whaley wrote in a child's hand from Waxahachie, Texas to offer condolences and ask for a photograph [MTP].

February 10 Thursday Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens: “Lounsbury thinks his man is going to take the Italian house at 5700⁰⁰. He will know in a day or two, and if he can, will close matters up this week or next”. He offered more details of costs and net [MTP]. Note: MT: “ans / approving / Feb. 14”

February 11 Friday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote per Helen S. Allen to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn.

Dear Mr. Paine, / Mr. Clemens wants me to tell you that he approves of your project and also the terms [in SLC's hand: suggested. /Helen.

P. S. The plan which would leave me 80 acres strikes me pleasantly.

I am afraid “The Mysterious Stranger” is causing you trouble. Never mind don’t send it, I have no particular use for it here. And if it should start by express it would be old & stale & illegible ages before it reached me.

I will stop here in order that this letter may catch the mail / S. L. C. / Per Helen [MTP].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens:

Dear Mr. Clemens: / Yours with suggestions about the farm &c at hand, tonight. If the title is satisfactory you will have no further worry about the farm, for Lounsbury’s man came up today & I closed with him for $6000⁰⁰ giving him the house and about 40 acres, with a 230 foot strip of the meadow to the East, for a lawn. The extra strip contains about five acres, & the land (bought with your second purchase, in 1907) cost you $30⁰⁰ an acre. I thought $60⁰⁰, now, a fair price, to close the trade, & as you have plenty of meadow left I don’t think you will be sorry. The man’s name is Nash & he is, I think, a fine fellow. He has deposited $100⁰⁰ to bind the bargain & is ready to pay the rest as soon as the title is established. I suppose that part of it is all right, though as I did not buy this piece (the Italian farm, I mean) I have no personal knowledge in that direction.

Now, as to the household Economies, you will see by Mar. 1st. statement very soon that things are moving in the right direction. Katy & I have just been discussing plans &c. Katy Murray will do laundry & upstairs work, as soon as Mary the Cook returns, & we will get a cheap kitchen maid—at say $12⁰⁰ a month. Jennie & Annie will go then and while the money saving of that change will not be much it will provide a first class cook to be on hand when you or Clara come [MTP]. Note: Paine continued with various miscellaneous items relating to keeping the household, the livery expenses and other bills, a letter from Clara, and a final disposition of Claude who was with Clemens. Paine felt that Clemens could not maintain a more economical home than Stormfield. He also paid $17 taxes on the Mark Twain Company assessed at only $1000—“small enough.”

William Dean Howells wrote from NYC to Sam.

I have not got a Fairy Princess to take my profane and abusive dictation, and so I cannot reply to your praises of our favorite author in fit terms, but you will find my joy in Harben in an early number of the N. American. You seem to require a novelist to be true to the facts and if the facts are not pleasant, to be pleasant himself. That seems rather difficult. You are the only man who can do it; but I believe you will end by liking poor old Harben as much as I do. He didn’t make North Georgia; he only made a likeness of it. Don’t shoot the artist.

I am glad you are out of this awful winter, where one spell of weather follows another like the rows of words in McGuffey’s spelling-book. We are just starting in for our third blizzard to-night. Pilla writes that it isn’t as tropical as it might be at Bermuda, but you haven’t got a snowstorm over your heads and under your feet. When I think of you at Stormfield I rejoice that you have a biographer to roost under your roof-tree for you.

I hear you want to see what I have written about my turning-point. Nothing but generous shame, and a wish to spare your feelings keeps me from sending you a letter which Duneka has just sent me about it. You will be brought low, soon enough.

I wonder if you have seen the autobiography of Stanley, the explorer. There is about the liveliest book I ever read. He starts in a Welsh workhouse, and he ends in such glory as few men ever won, and was then refused a grave in Westminster Abbey by a wretched, tyrannical parson. There is a lot about New Orleans in the middle '50s, and about Arkansas a little later which would make you feel at home.—I am slowly plowing through "Tristram Shandy." How tough is the humor that our poor ancestors batted on! But I will read it. The "Sentimental Journey" is all right, though nasty.—But get the life of Stanley. He was a Southern prisoner in the Northern prison pen at Chicago. If Andersonville was intentionally worse—but it couldn't be. / Yours ever / W. D. Howells [MTHHR 2: 852-3]. Notes: Howells referred to Helen S. Allen, Sam's "Fairy Princess." Evidently Clemens had ripped William Nathaniel Harben (1858-1919), author of The Woman Who Trusted (1901), Mam' Linda (1907), and other novels about life in N. Georgia. See other notes in source; also Gribben on Harben 291. Howells had reviewed Harben in the Mar. 1910 issue of North American Review. See also MMT p.42.

February 12 Saturday – Sam's new guestbook:

Name	Address	Date	Remarks
Irving Bacheller	[Illegible city] Conn.	Feb. 12, 1910

The Danish-American (Independent Weekly) per Emil Opffer wrote from the Tribune Bldg., NYC:

You would confer a great favor on the Danish-Americans, if you once for all would state in our paper, that you never read the story of Steen Steensen Blicher: 'Priesten Veilby.' (the Priest of Veilby). We Danish-American's think so much of you and your writings, that we don't want to see you unjustly accused [MTP].

Note: ABP: "Dear sir: Mr Clemens is not in America at this time, but I can state ... for him that he has never read the story "Priesten Veilby" nor had he to the best of his knowledge, ever heard of it when he wrote Tom Sawyer..."

Edward A. Murray wrote from Cape Colony, S. Africa: "...your books have been of infinite service to me and to offer you my sincerest sympathy in your recent troubles" [MTP].

February 13 Sunday

February 14 Monday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote a valentine poem to Helen S. Allen.

I know a precious little witch,
 And Helen is her name,
 With eyes so blue the asters say
 "They bring our blue to shame;"
 And cheeks so pink the eglantine,
 That by the roadway blow,
 Shed all their leaves when so they fail
 To match the dainty glow
 That steals across from ear to ear, and down from eyes to chin,
 When that sweet face betrays the thoughts
 That hidden lie within.
 Concerning Arthurs and their like
 Who long this maid to win;

And form so classic in its grace
 Of budding bust and tapering limb
 And rounded hip and slender waist
 And faultless features, that aghast
 The sculptured marbles of the Greek
 Grieving confess their chorus surpassed!

I am hers, though she's not mine—
 I'm but her loyal
 Valentine [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Albert B. Paine.

Dear Paine:

Don't you think you or Freeman could look in on Urban Broughton, President of that bank that is about a block above the Liberty National & ask him about Utah Consolidated? And what its prospects are?

My 1750 shares cost me $90,000. In one way & another it has returned me $20,000; so I could sell out for $70,000 ($40 per share), & be where I was when I first bought, about 4 years ago. I am moved to do that, & transfer the money to stocks to be chose by the Mark Twain Co., for I am very tired of Utah. Please get Broughton's views & then put the matter into the M.T. Co's hands, with authority to judge & act.

Yours ever

SLC.

P. S. Your letter of Feb. 10 has just arrived, & is pleasant reading. Eighty acres will be plenty for me, & will grow in value, I think.

Ashcroft will not be able to rob Lounsbury of his commission this time.

[MTP: on a separate sheet, possibly not part of this letter.]

In the five years that I have intimately known Ashcroft I have never heard him utter a single word about his past history except that his birthplace was Liverpool, that he retains his English subjectship, & that his father was a dissenting minister. He is absolutely corked-up & sealed, concerning himself. I have encountered nothing resembling this before.

I am sure he has been either a bedroom steward or a valet—perhaps both. He knows the latter trade to perfection.

Daily during 2 years he heard us talk of Redding & the house-building, yet never once mentioned that he had lived there in his boyhood in a prominent family! The Driggs's arrived here at the house a year ago in a motor car & "Ralph'd" him & gushed over him & took him home for a day! The first time we ever heard of them [MTP].

The Union Pacific Railroad per Alex Millar wrote to note Clemens' change of address [MTP].

February 15 Tuesday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Thomas Lemuel James.

Dear General,

The parcel of money shipped to me per Wells Fargo, February 4th has not yet arrived. I thought I would mention this in passing. But I mention it mainly to put you on your guard against sending anything to Bermuda or elsewhere by any express company, because the persons connected with those companies have been dead 30 years. This often causes delay, / Yours always / ... [MTP]. Note: see Jan. 30 to James.

Sam also wrote to Albert B. Paine, using Miss Helen Allen for dictation. Text not available [MTP: Dawson's Bookshop catalog 140, Feb. 1940, Item 79].

Joseph J. De Long wrote from NYC to ask permission to send a story "Hell-bent" [MTP]. Note: ABP: "Mr Clemens is not in America"

Lottie Hardy James (Mrs. William H. James) wrote from Haverhill, Mass. to ask for an autograph for her son [MTP].

February 16 Wednesday – Matthias Hollenbeck Arnot, Elmira financier and friend of Clemens, died at age 78 in Elmira, N.Y. reportedly worth fifty million dollars. He took none of it with him [NY Times, Feb. 16, 1910]. Note: Arnot was a principal backer of Sam's Paige Typesetter. See Vol. II.

Sam came down with a head cold that lasted four days [Feb. 20 to Leary].

Daughter Clara wrote to Sam. The letter is not extant but replied to in Sam's Mar. 6 [MTP].

February 17 Thursday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam began a letter to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn. that he finished Feb. 18, which was in Helen Allen's hand.

Dear Paine:

Let us not give up the tobacco forgery lightly. Even if Ashcroft could prove he was my authorized agent, he was still not authorized to use his authority to injure me & to steal £25 from me.

But was he my agent? He must have made the trade last June when he ran away to England & needed money. His Attorneyship had ceased there [MTP].

William Wymark Jacobs wrote from Essex, England to thank Sam for his letter [MTP].

February 18 Friday – In Hamilton, Bermuda, Helen S. Allen finished Sam's Feb. 17 to Albert B. Paine.

Mr. Clemens wants me to tell you that he has broken his hind leg also Mr. Clemens wants me to tell you that "his secretary will send you the check items at her leisure". He is glad you have sold the farm on such good terms & that it has gone to a man of whom people speak well. Mr. Clemens says that if that Wisteria could be softly removed from Jean house to the pergola he would like to buy it & move it, if it can be had at a reasonable figure. He would like to have it as a memento of Jean. The check items are,

It appears by a letter received to-day from Clara that she would read my books if she had them suppose you tell the Harpers to send her a cheap set

“We are mixing up the first & third persons in this letter but we are depending with confidence upon his well known intelligence to unmix them”. With love from us all including Mr. Clemens / Sincerely / Helen Schuyler Allen.

Clemens signed a limited power of attorney to Cornelius Vanderbilt III (1873-1942) authorizing a proxy vote for the annual meeting of the Robert Fulton Monument Association, to be held Feb. 24. It was witnessed and signed by Helen Schuyler Allen [MT Journal, 19:4 (Summer, 1979), rear cover]. Note: nicknamed “Neily” by his friends, the III was the great grandson of “Commodore” Cornelius Vanderbilt (1794-1877) who made his fortune in shipping. In Mar. 1869 Clemens’ scathing “Open Letter to Com. Vanderbilt” was published in Packard’s Monthly.

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens:

In a letter from Clara, a day or two ago, she asks about admission to St. Peters on Easter, and thinks you may know how to get it. I have written to Col. Henry who has a gift for such things, but if you have any special information, you might send it along, too.

I’ve written Loomis about selling fruit at 180, & will discuss the matter next time I go down—next week. Personally, I think the stock worth 200, at least, as it pays 8% regularly with the extra 10% every little while. There does not seem to be any panic ahead, & I think the stock much more likely to go to 200 & stay there than to drop back to say 165.

I am also enclosing you the deed to the farm-house for signature and acknowledgment. The title has been reported on... [MTP].

February 19 Saturday

February 20 Sunday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Katy Leary.

Dear Katie: / I enclose page 1 of a letter just received from Mrs. Ossip. It troubles me because she seems to have gotten the impression (the superstition), that your authority as housekeeper is not supreme. But it is supreme. There is no housekeeper but you. No one but you has anything to do with the housekeeping. No one but you can hire or discharge a house-servant, or give to a house-servant an order not proper for a guest to give.

Mrs. Paine is my guest—that is all. She understands this, & will not endeavor to help you keep house.

Mr. Paine is my business-agent. You can consult with him about any & all kinds of economies, & he will gladly be helpful to you in every way he can. But he will not try to assist in the housekeeping. He is aware that the housekeeping is strictly in your hands & that I want it so.

I hope you are all well & happy. I have had a cold for a few days, but am well again, this morning.

I suppose I may not be home until in April.

I have had a cold in the head 4 days, but it is gone now, & I have escaped without a touch of bronchitis.

At any time that I am needed at home, I will come. But ~~if~~ you & Mr. Paine will get along together perfectly, I think; for you are both rational people, & wise & intelligent. / Affectionately, / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Albert Bigelow Paine, letter not extant but referred to in Paine’s Feb. 25 reply [MTP].

In the evening Sam dined at the Princess Hotel with Helen Schuyler Allen and “some friends.” There, after one miscue, he met Mr. & Mrs. Lee, friends of Mary B. Rogers [Feb. 21 to Julie].

February 21 Monday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Julia Langdon Loomis (Mrs. Edward E. Loomis)

Julie dear, bless your heart it was a pleasure to serve Jervis, not a trouble. Think what he & Edward are doing for me & mine. I don't forget it, & I am very grateful for it.

Last night I went with Helen (aged 15 1/2) & her parents to the Princess hotel to dine with some friends. Among the groups in the great lobby after dinner was one which was partly composed of a handsome lady & a very pretty & sweet-faced young girl of Helen's age. Helen was strongly attracted, & said "Go and get acquainted with her, I want to know her."

So I went, & offered my hand, & said, "I have come, under the pretense that I know you & have met you some where before."

The mother said, "You are doing her a great honor, Mr. Clemens." Then added, "There was already a tie between us: I was Julie Langdon's room-mate at Miss Brown's school, & was present when you came there & read from The Yankee at King Arthur's Court. Who is that sweet child with you? My daughter was just saying she wished she could know her."

Wasn't it nice? I semaphored Helen to come, & the two fairies were inseparable the rest of the evening, till 10:30.

And there was another incident. Mrs. Harry Rogers wrote me that Mr. & Mrs. Lee—friends of hers—were coming to Bermuda, & would look me up. So, at the Princess I inquire if there were any Lees among the new arrivals. Yes—but they were at dinner. I got the head waiter to take me to their table. They were cordial—& knew me. Told me where & when they had met me. I asked after Mary Rogers—& damned if they had ever seen her! So I made the head waiter try again, & sure enough we found the right ones. It appears to be raining Lees this week.

With lots & lots of love to you & all the kin. Uncle Sam^L [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Mary B. Rogers (Mrs. H.H. Rogers, Jr.).

You dear Mariechen, I've made another botch! and I feel pretty badly about it. When your letter came I put it carefully away with one from Clara which would require about a week's reflection before I would know just how to answer it. Of course I couldn't find them again. Also of course I could not recal the names of those friends of yours whom you had instructed to see me & give me your love. For a few days I was not troubled, for I thought they would get my address at the hotel & call upon me at the private house where I am a guest. But time went on, & I got uneasy; but there wasn't any way to hunt them up, since I couldn't recal their names.

I never found the letters until yesterday evening, just as I was starting to the Princess hotel to dine with some friends. I found that the Lees were stopping there, but had already gone in to dinner. I got the head waiter to pilot me to their table—the table of "Mr. & Mrs. Cornelius Lee." It was another failure—it was the wrong Lees. I rejoined my party, & asked the head waiter to try again. He made a search & succeeded, this time, & I asked him to pilot me again. But he said "remain where you are—they are going to speak to you when they leave the dining room." We stayed at table till the place was emptied, but they did not come. I was obliged to think they were offended because I had not hunted them up when they first arrived. And yet—why? They had not hunted me up, & I was twice as old as both of them put together. I think they ought to have called upon me; & I think it is what you expected they would do. However, they were friends of yours, & this debarred me from standing upon a punctilio—I must not fail in any courtesy that might be due them. So I went to the great lobby & hunted them up. Naturally it was a little embarrassing, but—like the Essex band—I "done my best." I didn't tell them I had forgotten their names, through mislaying ~~their~~ your letter; I spared myself that pang. Mariechen, I think they are offended, & will not return my call. But do you think I am any more to blame than they are? I would have sought them earlier if I could have done it.

Would you expect a person to catch a bronchial cold in Bermuda? Well, I have achieved that miracle. A lady bought it from America & I sat at a bridge table with her 4 days ago & caught it, & carried it to bed & was not on my feet again until I turned out to keep that dinner-engagement yesterday evening. That was my very first game of bridge. It is a bad-luck game. It is not even lucky when you try, out of kindness, to help other people pass the time pleasantly when they are playing it. I have suffered violence for that act of benevolence.

You must pack your bag again, & keep your word, & pay the visit to Stormfield & help me hunt for the garboard strake when the pleasant weather comes. Only such as are purged of all worldliness can find it, for (necessarily this is confidential) it is really the Holy Grail disguised with a modern name. We can find it, for we are qualified, but no others are, in my opinion. I may not go home until the end of April—then the mystery & miracle of the birth of Spring will begin, & you must be ready.

This is a wonderful June day. Why don't you run down here? I wish you would. Come. You can easily employ yourself outdoors all day, with pleasure & profit. (You will note the spelling of that word.) My health is blemishless, except for the pain in my breast. That is permanent, I suppose. It doesn't allow me to work, & it doesn't allow me to walk even so much as a hundred yards; but as it lets me do all the things I want to do, it is not an incumbrance.

With all the love permissible by the statutes, / Affectionately, / ... [MTP].

Sam also began a letter to daughter Clara that he added to on Feb. 22 and finished on Feb. 23.

Clara dear, your darling letter of the 3^d reached me a couple of hours ago & gave me peace & deep pleasure. Yesterday I dictated a scrawl to you, for I couldn't very well write, for I had been laid up a few days with bronchitis & was just out of bed & feeling rusty and incompetent. I caught that cold from a person who had just brought it from America. I knew I was in danger, still I took the risk.

Don't you be afraid of making your letters too long—I love to read them; the longer they are, the better. But you must never tire yourself to write me; for that would distress me if I discovered it.

Indeed I don't “disclaim relationship” with you because you are married—no, you are nearer & dearer to me now than ever; of my fair fleet all my ships have gone down but you; you are all my wealth; but while I have you I am still rich [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Albert Bigelow Paine, letter not extant but referred to in Paine's Feb. 25 reply [MTP].

Herbert W. Burk for the Washington Memorial Chapel, Valley Forge wrote to Sam.

“Historians state that Washington rarely laughed. As ‘Mark Twain’ must be held largely responsible for this by declining to be one of the contemporaries of the Father of his country I write to ask if you will make an apology to his memory in the form of a book presented to the Washington Memorial Library, Valley Forge” [MTP].

February 22 Tuesday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam added to his Feb. 21 to daughter Clara.

Feb. 22. Paine has written to Col. Harvey & asked him to do his possible to get you those Easter-privileges at St. Peters, & I have written Harvey & reinforced that request. Dear Clara, my first impulse was to write my friend Archbishop Ireland, but that impulse was merely a lightning-bug flash, & died in a moment; for I can't bring myself to personally ask a favor of that odious Church, whose history would disgrace hell, & whose birth was the profoundest calamity which has ever befallen the human race except the birth of Christ—this, because if I asked a favor I couldn't talk against that rotten concern with limitless freedom & with an unblushing cheek afterward.

Roosevelt closed my mouth years ago with a deeply valued, gratefully received, unasked favor; & with all my bitter detestation of him I have never been able to say a venomous thing about him in print since—that benignant deed always steps in the way & lays its consecrated hand upon my lips. I ought not to allow it to do this; & I am ashamed of allowing it, but I cannot help it, since I am made in that way, & did not make myself.

Dear heart, I shall take care of myself, for your sake; I shall live as long as I may, for your sake,—not my own, for I believe I was born indifferent to this silly life—in fact I can't see how a person in his right mind can refrain from laughing at it & making fun of it [MTP]. Notes: John Ireland (1838-1918), first archbishop of St. Paul, Minn. He was instrumental in creating many religious and educational institutions in St. Paul and Wash. D.C. Theodore Roosevelt's “favor” which Clemens referred to was likely the “pass” given upon arrival in NY with Livy's body in 1907 (see NB 47 TS 16). Also, in the following letter to Harvey, it seems clear that Clara wished to see Easter services at St. Peter's in Rome and was asking her father to use his influence to accomplish the favor. Clara and Ossip were not allowed into the Pope's mass in Rome—see Mar. 27 NY Times article.

Sam also wrote to George B. Harvey.

Dear Old Man:

Paine says he has gone at you in Clara's behalf, to get her a chance to see the Easter services at St. Peter's, Rome, & I hope you will manage it for her. I don't know any way myself, for I am only a poor humble dam Presbyterian, with no influence in Catholic circles.

Mr. Frohman has been in & says you won't be going abroad for some time yet, he thinks: very well, then, run down here. Why not? And bring the others. Come—do it!

With the love of your Uncle Mark [MTP]. Note: see above to Clara.

W. North Robins, photographer in Syracuse, NY wrote to ask for an autograph [MTP].

February 23 Wednesday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam finished his Feb. 21 and 22 to daughter Clara, 117 W. 69 St. NYC c/o Miss Gordon.

Feb. 23. I don't know why you should love me, I have not deserved it; & the love Jean manifested for me astonished me daily: I recognised its sincerity, but could not divine the source of it, nor what had bred it & kept it alive, any more than I can divine why you love me nor how you keep it up. But I was deeply grateful to Jean for that unearned love, & I am deeply grateful to you for yours. More than once I have been humiliated by my resemblance to God the Father: He is always longing for the love of His children, & trying to get it on the cheapest & laziest terms He can invent.

Maybe I ought to have said "half-wasted." Bless your heart. I put in two or three years on that Autobiography in order to add 28 years to my book-lives. Congress has now gone & added 14 of the 28; & the law is now in such a sane shape that Congress can be persuaded presently, without difficulty, to add another 14. I can get it done myself if I live to go to Washington for half a week next winter.

My child, I wasn't doing the Autobiography in the world's interest, but only in yours & Jean's. But never mind, dear, I'm not going to "bury you alive."

Noon. Mildred Howells was cabled for, & sailed for home yesterday. "Nothing serious"—probably the usual kindly falsehood. It is her mother, no doubt.

With lots & lots & ever so much love, you dearest & only child, / Marcus.

Can't you send me a copy of Katy's letter? [MTP]. Note: evidently some conflict had been experienced over Katy's authority as housekeeper at Stormfield, what with Mr. & Mrs. Albert Bigelow Paine moving in after Jean's death. See Feb. 20 to Katy Leary, with Sam reassuring her that her role as housekeeper was supreme. It's likely that Katy had complained or questioned her position in a letter to Clara.

Sam also wrote to Louise Paine, and enclosed a valentine. Text not available [MTP: Seven Gables Bookstore letter, 5 Dec. 1969].

Edith Anderson Logan sent Sam a printed invitation for the wedding of her daughter for this date at St. Patrick's Cathedral, NYC [MTP]. Note: likely sometime before this actual wedding date.

February 24 Thursday – W.T. Mossman, music hall manager, Pittsburg wrote to Sam, "humorously complaining of the quality of printing in the Twain books, while lengthily recounting details of Twain's life" [MTP: J. Fricelli Assoc. auction, catalog #7, Brooklyn].

February 25 Friday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn.

Dear Paine.

Perhaps I have no business to be dictating, and I have refrained all day, because my bronchitis makes it troublesome for me to talk.

I have nothing to say that would not keep over another steamer, but I must bark enough to assure you that I am not in the least degree troubled about those stocks.

You and & Freeman & the others, are quite competent to take care of them and do the judicious thing at the judicious time. Jervis's Organ enterprise is probably going to fail. I am sorry,—so sorry, that if I could sell that copper stock at any profit at all—at least any considerable profit—I should be tempted to put a third of the money in there and help him out.

I see that Arnot is dead, he is the man who ought to have saved that enterprise. It would not have cost him a month's income to do it.

Please take Prof. Henderson on your shoulders, I can't dictate a letter for him, I am tired & must stop.

With love to all.

Clemens,
per M. S. A.

[MTP]. Note: Matthias H. Arnot died on Feb. 16. The Hope-Jones Organ Co. of Elmira, New York had been organized by Jervis Langdon II; Sam had invested modest amounts for each of his daughters. See Jan. 19, 1907 and others.

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens: "Yours of 20th and 21st met me at the station this morning. I had not ordered the Cyclopedia yet, so that is all right. I tried to see Broughton today, but he is no longer with that bank; has an office somewhere on lower Broadway. Freeman is going to get hold of him [about a stock] [MTP]. Note: Clemens' letters of Feb. 20 and 21 are not extant.

February 26 Saturday

February 27 Sunday— Amelia C. Householder wrote from Maple Glen, Penn. to offer condolences and hoped for a reply [MTP].

February 28 Monday — Lauren Clemens Sears wrote from Ada, Okla. "Dear Sir..I am a little boy 9 years old and am named after you In some way through the Johnson's we are related. I would like to exchange pictures with you so you would know what I look like. I know your picture wherever I see it. / I hope you will answer this" [MTP].

February 28? Monday — In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam replied to the NY Journal's inquiry into his health: "Not ill enough to excite an undertaker" [MTP: New York Journal, Mar. 3, 1910].

March 1 Tuesday

March 2 Wednesday — In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn.

Dear Paine: / We sent you a list of the checks but failed the one we finished with therefore we will rectify this blunder by making a new list & bringing it down to date.

The checks begin with Jan. 10th and run to & include Feb. 29th

$50.00	$19.28

18.60	29.56

25.92	44.00

3800.00	23.48

52.59	25.25

19.40	57.73

12.00	23.63

38.41

50.00

50.00

Please refrain from limiting your postage to two cents. I have to pay 35 cents additional when the letter reaches here. Moreover—which is a still more serious matter—there is a delay here of 24 hours before the delivery of such a letter.

Sometime or other I am going to die, & I want you & Stanchfield & Lark to be sharply on the lookout at that time because it will then begin to rain swindles & forgeries from the Ashcroft camp: theiving documents purporting to date back to the days of that power of attorney but really concocted since.

Did the last power of attorney abrogate the 1907 one? If it didn't the 1907 one is still in force isn't it?

The forgery published by Ashcroft in the Times & the tobacco-puff forgery indicate that Ashcroft has a supply of genuine signatures of mine in his possession on blank sheets of paper for I never signed either of those things. On this suspicion could I examine his premises with a search-warrant?

How much money has the Mark Twain Co. in bank? / Yours ever / S. L. C. / per. HSA [MTP].

Sam's copy of Essays on Modern Novelists (1910) by William Lyon Phelps was signed by another hand: "S. L. Clemens / from / Wm Lyon Phelps / 2 March 1910" [Gribben 542]. Note: see also Dec. 1909 entry for another Phelps book.

March 3 Thursday

March 4 Friday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn.

Dear Paine; / The statement of your stewardship for the month of Feb. is startling & gratifying. It is a good deal of a contrast with Miss Lyons constantly recurring $3400 a month for the past few years. Another contrast is the House Money. It shows a prodigious descent from $400 a month to practically nothing. It does really look as if you can run Stormfield at $10 000 a year. It will be a fine day & very satisfactory when that shall prove to be true.

Of course I am glad Ashcroft's suit has failed But his law expenses never cost him anything: he stole the money from me.

I do not grudge the money Jean spent on the farm. I would not grudge it if it were five times as much. It gave her the happiest eight months she ever spent in her life

The first of May the bank balance will be $25 000 or $30 000 & I am moved to tell you what to purchase with it, but I refrain. I will leave that to the Mark Twain Co.

This is a hurried note written at night to catch the steamer in the morning, & mainly to praise your Feb. exhibit. If I need to write more I can do it later at my leisure, as ever / S. L. C. / per HSA [MTP].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens:

I am sending you some tobacco, asked for by Claude in his letter to Katy.—I have put in some of the Durham, too, as you usually use that in the mixture. I should have mixed it for you, but thought you might have a new combination by this time.

I'm sorry to hear about your bronchitis. What are you doing for it? Have you an inhaler over there? / Of course you will see Mr & Mrs Collier before this reaches you. They sailed, according to the Times, on Wednesday. ...

It's too bad about Jervis's organ co., but I don't believe you could save it. Too much money would be required, and you have had your share of saving things, already.

I've written Henderson that you are in no condition to write letters of any kind, and let him down as gently as possible.

Harpers sent the $1500 cheque today, but the big royalty balance, due Mar. 1, has not come along yet. I suppose it will be here soon. Mr. Nash will be along with his $6000—in a few days, no doubt.

Everything is going very smoothly. The hens have begun to shed eggs at the rate of 18 to 20 a day, so they are more than self-supporting... [MTP]. Note: Archibald Henderson.

March 5 Saturday

SLC used mourning border for most letters from Jean's death on.

March 6 Sunday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote a humorous receipt for Miss Helen S. Allen.

Received of S. L. C.

Two Dollars and Forty Cents in return for my promise to believe everything he says hereafter.
[signed] Helen S. Allen

[verso] For Sale

The proprietor of the hereinbefore mentioned Promise desires to part with it on account of ill health and obliged to go away somewhere so as to let it recipricate, and will take any reasonable amount for it above 2 percent of its face because experienced parties think it will not keep but only a little while in this kind of weather & is a kind of proppity that don't give a cuss for cold storage nohow [MTP].

Sam also replied to daughter Clara's Feb. 16. Sam addressed the letter to Berlin, Germany; it was forwarded to Pontresina, Switzerland, Monte Carlo, Monaco, and Rome, Italy.

Clara dear, yours of Feb. 16 is just received.

Am I well? Yes—plenty well enough. I have had bronchitis for 2 or 3 weeks, with the proper cough, but it kept me in bed only about 3 days, instead of the customary 5 weeks. Therefore it has not been an inconvenience. I go & come as I please, & bark hardly any.

Concerning your suggestions to Paine about reducing the live stock & saving expense, I am writing him to stick to his own plans in that matter, as lately laid before me. He has probably laid the same before you by this time.

You see, I don't feel so cramped now, as I've been feeling for some years past. Paine's February report is in, & it changes the complexion of things. He has suddenly reduced monthly expenses to less than a third of what they have been for the past 5 years. He thinks he can run Stormfield for $10,000 a year, even when we are there.

I did not take any notice of Haithwaite's letter, & stopped Paine from doing it.

You say "I wasn't so far off in my guess about Miss Lyon, was I?"

Do you mean a recent guess? In your guess of a year ago you were unquestionably & unqualifiedly right. The severalties of that guess being that she was a liar, a forger, a thief, a hypocrite, a drunkard, a sneak, a humbug, a traitor, a conspirator, a filthy-minded & salacious slut pining for seduction & always getting disappointed, poor child.

Oh, by George I am glad to know of the success of Miss Jones's book, & proud to remember that it was your plucky & persistent fight for her & her rights that secured the book's birth when otherwise it would have perished in the womb. Yes indeed I am glad for Miss Jones, & very very proud & fond of her sweet champion my Clara. / Marcus [MTP].

Note: see Feb. 5 for more on Haithwaite. Miss Eudora ("Dora") Duty Jones (1859-1913), renowned educator and speaker, author of The Technique of Speech: A Guide to the Study of Diction, etc. (1909). Miss Jones, daughter of Greensboro Female College president Rev. Turner Myrick Jones, became Lady President of after her mother's death in 1884. From the mid 1890s on she lived in Europe and in London for the last two years of her life [Gribben 359; Museum of Greensboro College website].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens: "The farm deal is completed. Mr Nash came up yesterday and paid over the money and got his title. He is a fine man, I believe, and his wife seems an agreeable woman." More details about stock prices and sales, and a word about John Bigelow quoting Twain's tariff sentiment at a Chamber of Commerce dinner [MTP] Note: 'ans mch 11"

March 7 Monday

March 8 Tuesday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick. Text not available [MTP].

Albert B. Paine wrote to Sam. (Only the envelope survives) [MTP].

March 9 Wednesday – David Alexander Munro, age 66, assistant editor of the North American Review under Col. Harvey, died in NYC after a seven-week illness. Munro was also a Greek scholar [NY Times, Mar. 10, 1910, “David A. Munro Dead”]. See entries Vol. III.

March 10 Thursday – Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens about his bank statement and thanked Sam for his list of checks sent. He wondered if Jean’s estate should be settled and suggested a “Jean Clemens Memorial Library building on the lot Adams donated. Jean passed there every day on her way to the mail and the farm was her joy. She spent eight of her happiest months here in Redding, & she loved it here, and I would like the people to remember her and love her memory” [MTP].

March 11 Friday – Sam went to the Hamilton Hotel, Bermuda to hear the garrison band play. Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Collier arrived for a two-week stay in the Islands [Mar. 12 to Clara].

March 12 Saturday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Clara Clemens Gabrilowitsch and Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

Clara dear, last night I went to the Hamilton Hotel to hear the garrison band play, & in the crowd of familiar faces & of unfamiliar faces I encountered a countenance which I supposed I had seen before, & I saluted. The owner of it was a young gentleman whom I had not met; but he turned out to be the son of a gentleman who, entertained us when we were in Allahabad [sic]—he was Lieutenant Governor. The young man & I went aside & had a long chat. He is a lieutenant in the 2^d Bedfordshires, the regiment that arrived here 3 weeks ago.

My mamma has arrived with her husband & a suite of servants & secretaries & trained nurses & so-on, & will stay a fortnight. (Mrs. Robert J. Collier of Collier’s Weekly.) She regards her husband as her other (& eldest & most difficult & way ward) child. He is about 35, & she is about 29 & very small & sweet & gentle. He thinks she made a mistake when she adopted me, because she is not strong enough to take care of two children & do it with safety to herself. It may be that he is right—in fact I think he is right. I have asked him to resign. This will reduce the burden by more than half.

I am still calculating to go home about the end of April, & see the new leafage unfold upon the trees.

Paine has sold Jean’s house & 40 acres of her farm to a gentleman who will be a pleasant neighbor & a fine acquisition I guess. What we need there is company.

[new page]

Dear Son—

It is as you say—the form of address certainly has a new & startling aspect—but it is pleasant & welcome, & will quickly cease from startling. I am grateful to know that Clara & you are getting back your health & strength. Clara must not grieve about Jean, but rejoice that she has escaped & is free. Let us hope she will never wake from her sweet sleep, in this world or any other.

I am well, & hope to see you both by & by, on one side of the ocean or the other. Meantime I love you both & wish the best for you. / Father [MTP]. Note: like his Mar. 6 letter, forwarded to three cities, with Rome, Italy the last. Clemens was in Allahabad, India on Feb. 3-4, 1896 and toured the fort made by 16th Century Akbar, the Mogul emperor. The man he refers to in this letter is not named.

Sam then wrote another letter to daughter Clara, perhaps replying to one just received.

Clärchen dear, it rejoices me! You will be most cordially welcome. I will ask Paine to make those changes at once & arrange the rooms just as you want them. You must write & tell him where to get a piano. Of course it should be on hand & in tune when you arrive.

I am waiting for the mild weather to visit Stormfield—then I will go home. I will ask Paine to watch the opening Spring—& tell me when to sail.

My cough hangs on yet, but in this climate there is not enough of it to be an inconvenience. I shall be at home by the end of April anyway, if no sooner.

Yesterday I read "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court" for the first time in more than 30 years. I am prodigiously pleased with it—a most gratifying surprise.

I will now rush this note to the mail & catch the steamer.

Bless your hearts, both of you—& lots of love—/ Marcus [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Maud W. Littleton.

Dear Mrs. Linthicum:

In thanking you for the picture I can candidly say that whereas there is plenty of beauty under the hat, the hat itself doesn't catch any of it. I won't go so far as to say it is the damdest hat I ever saw, I will only say it is the derndest. Oh, who did start this hat-lunacy? I believe it is two years since I have seen a (woman's) hat that wasn't a horror. I suppose yours is no worse than the others, but Lord knows they are all bad enough.

No doubt I shall go home one of these days—possibly a month hence, or two months. Time drifts along here, at about the gait I like. There are no excitements, & I don't want any. Twice a week we go to hear the garrison band play; twice a week I go to hear the hotel string-bands play, & look on while the multitude dances; a drive once a day, & now & then a sail—these are my activities & they are sufficient. I do not go out to dinner oftener than once a week, & then only to feed with friends. When there's a stranger I don't go. There are no newspapers, no telegrams, no mobiles, no trolleys, no trams, no railways, no theatres, no lectures, no riots, no murders, no fires, no burglaries, no offences of any kind, no follies but church, & I don't go there. I think I could live here always & be contented. The weekly steamer passes by my window Friday mornings, & again next day outward bound—& that's the only disturbance.

You go to heaven if you want to—I'd druther stay here. / With love, / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to William L. Phelps.

Dear Professor Phelps:

I thank you ever so much for the book, which I find charming indeed, that I read it through in a single night, & did not regret the lost night's sleep. I am glad if I deserve what you have said about me; & even if I don't I am proud & well contented, since you think I deserve it.

Yes, I saw Lounsbury, & had a most pleasant time with him. He ought to have stayed longer in this little paradise—partly for his own sake, but mainly for mine.

I knew my poor Jean had written you. I shall not have so dear & sweet a secretary again.

Good health to you, & all good fortune attend you. / Sincerely yours / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote to Elizabeth Wallace.

Dear Betsy:

You "know there are worlds still unexplored," do you? Very well, then—you don't. Why do you want to talk like that, & wither a person's hopes? Isn't this life enough for you? Do you wish to continue the foolishness somewhere else? Damnation, you depress me!

Success to Zeublin! If I were to start over again I would be a Reformer. I certainly would. There would be an unceasing interest in it that would pay handsomely for all the hostilities I should raise.

I wish you had given me the name of your pretty & sweet friend who sailed for Bermuda the other day. I would have hunted her up. You know that, well enough. Maybe she looked for us in the donkey-cart—but I haven't been in it. Helen requires swifter transportation than that.

You ought to be here now! The weather is divine; & you know what it is to drive along the North Shore in such weather & watch the sun paint the waters. We had that happiness today. The joy of it never stales.

And there's others that don't stale. To-wit (do you remember?) There are no newspapers, no telegrams, no mobiles, no trolleys, no trains, no tramps, no railways, no theatres, no noise, no lectures, no riots, no murders, no fires, no burglaries, no politics, no offences of any kind, no follies but church, & I don't go there. I think I could live here always & be contented.

You go to heaven if you want to—I'd druther stay here.
As ever affectionately / ...

[in left margin of first page:] I have been reading Chapter XIII of "A Yankee at King Arthur's Court." Bless you I find it good [MTP].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens:

"Yes, I've had tooth-brushes do that to me. I didn't like it, at first, but I'm trained to it, now. I'm going to practice swallowing glass next; and tacks." And, "Yes, we could easily send Clara $200 a month, now, but don't you think we'd better wait until she uses up her Letter of Credit?" He mentioned David Munro's death, and also that Major Leigh & wife "are coming up Sat. I can beat the Major" at billiards [MTP]. Note: replied to in Sam's Mar. 18

Muriel Straithmore wrote from Brooklyn to ask Sam to pose for a drawing to be used in the London "Sketch" [MTP].

March 13 Sunday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Dorothy Quick, who evidently had just been in Bermuda with her mother but had left on a family emergency.

Dorothy dear, I am so sorry to hear the sad news that hurries you & your mother home. Yesterday you did not come to us, & we wondered if something was wrong. I could not go out at night yet, & had been shut up with my cough since Wednesday morning—a fresh accession to it—so I sent my man servant to inquire, & he brought word from the hotel that you had received a cable that your uncle was very ill & you had taken ship at once. The world seems full of trouble for us all.

The young people came yesterday afternoon, after the rain, & played tennis, but I did not go out doors; I was out Thursday afternoon & played games, but had a hard night to pay for it. This is now the fourth day that Helen has been in bed, & I think her mother ought to have been in bed yesterday, but she stayed up to take care of the company. All this illness comes of my catching a cold in the head 3 weeks ago from a visitor who brought it from America. The household caught it from me. Mine ran into bronchitis.

The Colliers arrived last Friday, but I only learned it this evening, for they sent me no word & will have to be scolded. Mr. Collier is ailing—the New York winter has been too much for him.

I am so sorry you had to go away, for I think a few weeks' rest in this climate would be good for you, dear.

Please give you mother my kindest regards. With lots of love / ... [MTP].

Owen M. Connelly wrote from Phila. to ask Sam if he saw "any merit in her compositions," seeing as she had "been a student of Shakespeare & Bacon for 25 years" [MTP].

Grace A. Hubbard wrote from Barnard College, NYC to ask Sam to appear at the college [MTP].

March 14 Monday

March 15 Tuesday

March 16 Wednesday – Elinor Comstock wrote from NYC, trusting that Clemens wouldn't mind including his name in her list of references for the formation of a new school in NY [MTP].

March 17 Thursday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam began a letter to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn. that he finished Mar. 18.

Dear Paine,

Yesterday afternoon I thought I was going to sail for home about a week from now and put myself in communication with Mr. Taft & the Secretary of State in regard to the vice-consulship here but it is not going to be necessary right away; for I have had a conversation this morning with the visiting inspector-general of consulships and find that Mr. Allen's occupancy of the post is not in immediate danger and that if at any time there should be any danger I can get news of it plenty long enough in advance to block the game.

~~Clara has not asked for any money, so I suppose she needs none, since I told her to speak freely in case she should want any. Still you may send her $200 a month for if she doesn't need it, it won't be in her way anyhow]~~

I hope you will make "Stormfield" absolutely fly-proof if by any possible ingenuity this can be accomplished.

I would rather have ten snakes in the house than one fly.

Of course Clara can have the lobster-pot and its land if that is her desire therefore don't sell it without consulting her if you can rent it [to] Jervis or somebody for a rental representing interest of 10% or 15% on its value I should like it very much [MTP]. Note: Sam crossed out the paragraph about Clara, referred to in his Mar. 18 addition to the letter.

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens beginning on Mar. 17 that he finished on Mar. 18. Again he wrote details of canceled checks and balances, and also again of the Fruit stock. Harpers had still not sent the Mar. 1 royalty of 15,000, but wouldn't "push too suddenly"

March 18 Friday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam finished his Mar. 17 to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn. after receiving Paine's Mar. 12 (not extant).

Yours of March 12th just received.

It will be best for you to make stable arrangements, horses & so forth according to your own judgement without consulting with Clara in Germany I desire this.

I have crossed out what I wrote about a monthly allowance for Clara. I didn't know she took so much money with her[.]

I thank Col. Harvey ever so much for getting admission for Clara for the Easter dissipation at Rome [.]

Poor David I am sorry for the survivors but he is in good luck himself a person who dies is always in good luck.

Yes if you keep my bank balance about $1000 it will answer my needs[.]

Yes I shall be glad if you will administer Jean's estate. Mr. Sark [sic Charles T. Lark] can tell you all you need to know as to what to do; I don't know what to say about investing. I would like "The Mark Twain Co." to invest according to its best judgment. Possibly you might look favorably upon these Telephone bonds.

As for my bronchitis I am very well satisfied with it. If I were at home I should have to go to bed but here no such care is required I have been coughing for some weeks but there is not enough of this cough to inconvenience me.

The pain in my breast still abides with me but it troubles me very little.

If you look in the magazine advertisements you will find one of those lists of standard dead copyright books which includes all the big names Scott, Cooper & the others—clear print, cheap binding & a whole library for sale for $10 or $20 I would like you to buy one of those cheap libraries & send it to me [.]

Yours ever

per HSA [MTP].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding finishing his letter started Mar. 17: "Mar 18: Hurrah! Clara is Coming! I'll have those doors cut, or anything else she wants, rest assured! We are delighted!" He also enclosed a letter from John Hayes Hammond (not extant) [MTP].

Robert Erskine Ely wrote from NYC to invite Sam to a luncheon on either Apr. 6 or 7 for Josephine Preston Peabody (Mrs. Lionel Marks) a playwright. A telegraph reply requested [MTP]. Note: ABP: "Mr Clemens is not in America and not expected before May"

March 19 SaturdayMarch 20 Sunday*March 21 Monday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Miss Sulamith Ish-Kishor.

Dear Miss Sulamith,

I think it is a remarkable dream for a girl of 13 to have dreamed, in fact for a person of any age to have dreamed, because it moves by regular grade and sequence from the beginning to the end, which is not the habit of dreams. I think your report of it is a good piece of work, a clear and effective statement of the vision.

I am glad to know you like the "Prince and the Pauper" so well and I believe with you that the dream is good evidence of that liking. I think I may say, with your sister that I like myself best when I am serious.

Sincerely yours

S. L. Clemens.

[MTP: Paine's 1917 Mark Twain's Letters p.841].

March 22 Tuesday – Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens: "I went on yesterday & was advised by Freeman to buy 'Am. Telephone & Teleg.' At 140 & 141, a suggestion to which Loomis & Lark promptly agreed." He bought 100 shares and wrote when the Harper money came they might want another 100 [MTP].

George Jay Gould and Edith M. Gould sent a wedding announcement and invitation at the wedding of their daughter Marjorie Gwynne on Apr. 19 [MTP].

March 23 Wednesday – Sophie Easton Woods wrote from St. Louis, Mo. to Sam: "I enjoyed your steamer letter so much, and it was so sweet of you to have written it. I will keep it always.... I did not see Captain Fraser, so I could not give him your message.... I am your loving little friend" [MTP].

March 24 Thursday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Katharine Boland Clemens (Mrs. James Ross Clemens) in Redlands, Calif.

Dear Cousin Katherine:

I am grateful for the prayers of those good nuns, & for yours; they have already answered themselves, in giving me a deep pleasure.

I have lost that dear Jean, & my sorrow lies heavy upon me—but I would not bring her back if I could. Nor Livy, nor Susy. Death is the most precious of all the gifts this life has for us—and it is theirs. Peace to their sacred ashes!

About a month hence I shall be homeward bound, after half a year's sojourn in these Islands of the Blest. Write me as soon as you get to New Caanan & tell me when I can have you at Stormfield. /Yours affectionately / ... [MTP].

Sam also wrote a postcard to Louise Paine in Redding, Conn. telling of his bronchitis. Text not available [MTP: Seven Gables Bookshop letter, 5 December 1969].

Sam also began a letter to daughter Clara that he finished Mar. 25.

Clara dearest, I hope my cablegram welcoming you home reached you. Paine is in a state of glad hurrah because you are coming, & I am the same. Claude & I are booked to sail April 23^d. I may possibly stay in New York a week or two, but shall be in the front door when you disembark at Stormfield. I suppose I shall lodge with my small mamma (Mrs. Robert J. Collier, who has adopted me.) She was here a week ago, with Robert, & I gave her your Berlin address, as she wanted to write to you.

My bronchitis has nearly disappeared, in this balmy summer weather, but the pain in my breast has attacked me frequently & severely these past 3 days—owing to extravagant & inexcusable imprudences in feeding—so I have spent the 3 days in my room, taming it down. I am in pretty good shape now, but shall keep to my room & a cautious diet a few days longer. I took Quintard's medicine the first two days—I had never touched it before—but I have gotten through this present day without it.

SLC used mourning border for most letters from Jean's death on.

My father died this day 63 years ago. I remember all about it quite clearly.

I miss Jean so! She was utterly sweet & dear those last days; & so wise, & so dignified, & so good. She is at rest; & for her dear sake I am so glad.

I would not bring back any of the hallowed Four [MTP]. Note: Four: Livy, Langdon, Susy, and Jean.

March 25 Friday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam finished his Mar. 24 to daughter Clara. “March 25. The portrait-postcard has just arrived from Geneva, & is very welcome, with its loving word from you, dear. / With heaps of love to you both / Marcus” [MTP].

Sam also wrote per Helen S. Allen to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn.

Dear Paine,

Mr. Allen has made the corrections in the check book suggested by you and now my book exactly corresponds with the pass book.

Yes I approve the Tel. & Tel. purchase at 140-,*41. You could buy another 100 shares if you had the Harper money, & maybe you can get it if you ask for it very sweetly and persuasively, tho I suppose it is not due until the 1st of May.

We must look into the Magic-lantern business. Maybe the modern lantern is too elaborate & troublesome for back-settlement use but we can inquire. We must have some kind of a show at “Stormfield” to entertain the countryside with.

We are booked to sail in the “Bermudian” April 23rd, but don't tell anybody, I don't want it known. I may have to go sooner if the pain in my breast doesn't mend its| ways pretty considerably.

I don't want to die here for this is an unkind place for a person in that condition. I should have to lay in the undertaker's cellar until the ship would remove me and it is dark down there and unpleasant.

The Colliers will meet me on the pier & I may stay with them a week or two before going home. It all depends on the breast pain—I don't want to die there. I am growing more & more particular about the place.
/ With love / ... [MTP].

Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens: “No news. Everything going nicely—weather pleasant. ... I have deposited $500 to your credit...Major Leigh came up Saturday.... I notice by the paper that Robt. Collier has returned, that he reports good news of your health” [MTP].

March 26 Saturday

March 27 Sunday – Easter – Clara Clemens Gabrilowitsch and Ossip Gabrilowitsch spent the day in Rome, Italy, having arrived there the previous Thursday, Mar. 24. The New York Times reported, p. C3, Apr. 3, dateline Rome Apr. 2, with sub-headline “Mark Twain's Daughter Has Unsatisfactory Experience and Leaves Town.”

One happy couple still on their honeymoon have not had a very pleasant experience in Rome at Easter. M. and Mme. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, perhaps better recognized as the musical son-in-law and the daughter of Mark Twain, were at Monte Carlo, perfectly happy in the sun and open air and sea, when the idea came that they would like to see Rome at Easter, and if possible to assist at the Easter mass of the Holy Father.

They arrived the Thursday before Easter. The train, of course, was late, and they went about to seventeen different hotels before they could get a place to lay their weary heads. At last they got in at a little hotel near the Piazza di Spagna, kept by some American ladies....They spent Easter Sunday morning at St. Peter's, but did not get to the Pope's mass, as only Catholics are now admitted. This is a hard and fast rule, or Mark Twain's daughter would certainly have been admitted.

They drove in the afternoon, but Monday morning inquiring friends found that they had disappeared. It was discovered later that they had removed to another hotel in which they could have sun and air. They are now off to Florence and Venice, winding up in Paris, but will spend the Summer at home with Mark Twain, and next Winter will settle in Berlin as their permanent abiding place.

March 28 Monday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote per Helen S. Allen to Albert B. Paine in Redding, Conn.

Dear Paine,

I reenclose the check indorsed.

Enclosed is the small library of 44 volumes which you may buy & send to Mrs. Allen let the books be sent through Mr. Allen's agent Depew, and you may prepay all charges if you can manage it.

I have been having a most uncomfortable time for the past 4 days with that breast-pain, which turns out to be an affection of the heart just as I originally suspected. The news from New York is to the effect that non-bronchial weather has arrived there at last, therefore if I can get my breast trouble in travelling condition I may sail for home a week or two earlier than has heretofore been proposed. / Yours as ever / ... [MTP].

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Scott sent Sam a printed invitation to their daughter's wedding [MTP].

March 29 Tuesday - Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens: "Your news about the pain distresses me, but I am glad you are coming home. The change and the quiet of Stormfield will no doubt be beneficial. I hope Collier will let you be very quiet in N.Y. Edward Loomis whom I saw this morning hopes you will spend a few days with him also." More discussion about AT&T stock: Paine bought another 100 shares [MTP].

March 30 Wednesday

March 31 Thursday - Albert Bigelow Paine wrote from Redding to Clemens: "Here is the March statement. It is a bit more complicated than the others, as I grouped the disbursements, but I guess you'll be able to work it out. Clara & Ossip write that they are afraid we are not getting enough to eat, from the amount of the food bill, but as I weigh about 193 and Katy is approaching 300 I consider their alarm unjustified"

April 1 Friday

April 1 ca. – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Joe Goodman: "Come on and visit me once before we get so old we can't hear each other swear" [MTP: San Francisco Examiner, 22 Apr. 1910].

April 2 Saturday

April 3 Sunday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to the Clowns of Barnum & Bailey Circus, who had cabled him this day asking him the following:

THE CLOWNS OF BARNUM AND BAILEYS CIRCUS RECOGNIZING YOU AS THE WORLDS GREATEST LAUGHMAKER WILL CONSIDER IT AN HONOR IF YOU WILL BE THEIR LUNCHEON GUEST AT MADISON SQUARE GARDEN SUNDAY AFTERNOON APRIL THIRD AT TWO WILL YOU PLEASE ANSWER COLLECT BARNUM AND BAILEY [MTP].

Sam's reply by collect cable:

"I am very very sorry, but all last week's dates are full. I will gladly come week before last, if that will answer.—Mark Twain."

April 4 Monday – Chauncey M. Depew wrote from Wash DC to ask Sam for an intro to a volume of his speeches, “no matter how short” [MTP]. Note: “Ans”

April 5 Tuesday

April 6 Wednesday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam wrote to Charles T. Lark.

Dear Mr. Lark,

I have told Paine that I want the money derived from the sale of the farm, which I had given, but not conveyed, to my daughter Jean, to be used to erect a building for the Mark Twain Library of Redding, the building to be called the Jean L. Clemens Memorial Building.

I wish to place the money $6,000.00 in the hands of three trustees,—Paine and two others: H. A. Lounsbury and William E. Hazen, all of Redding, these trustees to form a building Committee to decide on the size and plan of the building needed to arrange for and supervise the work in such a manner that they find shall amply provide for the building complete, with the necessary furnishings, leaving, if possible, a balance remaining, sufficient for such repairs and additional furnishings as may be required for two years from the time of completion.

Will you please draw a document covering these requirements and have it ready by the time I reach New York (April 14th). / Very Sincerely, / S. L. Clemens [MTP: Paine’s 1917 Mark Twain’s Letters, p.843].

April 7 Thursday

April 8 Friday

April 9 Saturday – In Hamilton, Bermuda Sam inscribed his photo (1906 of him sitting up in bed reading) to Marion S. Allen (Mrs. William H. Allen). “To Mrs. William H. Allen, with the high esteem & guarded affection of / Mark Twain Bermuda, April 9/ 10.” [MTP].

Sam began reading Jude the Obscure by Thomas Hardy (1840-1928). Gribben quotes Paine:

“This book was read by Mark Twain April 9-10-11 in Bermuda” (quotation supplied by Bigelow Paine Cushman). In a flyleaf inscription Paine recorded: “This is the last book he ever read through. He died April 21. When he finished it, he asked me to read it ‘so we can talk about it.’ I began it by his bedside and continued it on the ship. We did talk about it—more or less, and never afterwards of any other” [292].

April 10 Sunday – In Bermuda, Sam continued reading Jude the Obscure, by Thomas Hardy [ibid.]

April 11 Monday – In Bermuda, Sam finished reading Jude the Obscure, by Thomas Hardy [ibid.]

Robert J. Collier sent a telegram to Sam: “Will have motor meet you Thursday monrnning hope you are feeling better Sallie sends love / Collier” [MTP].

April 12 Tuesday – Sam left Bermuda bound for New York.

April 13 Wednesday

April 14 Thursday – Sam arrived back in New York aboard the Oceana. The New York Times, p. 6, Apr. 15, reported his feeble health:

MARK TWAIN BACK IN FEEBLE HEALTH

Distinguished Author Returns from Bermuda in Weakened State from Heart Trouble.

CARRIED OFF THE STEAMER

Physicians Meet Him and He is Taken Immediately to His Home at Redding, Conn.

Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) humorist and author, stricken in health, arrived yesterday from Bermuda on the Oceana. He was so ill when the vessel reached her pier in the morning that he could not be removed until the physicians summoned by wireless got to the pier, at the foot of West Tenth Street.

After an examination they consented to his removal. He was carried from the liner and taken across the city in a coach ambulance. He left on the 3:32 P. M. train for his home, at Redding, Conn.

Mr. Clemens's condition, it is admitted, is serious, but his physicians believe he will improve in the quiet of his country home. He has angina pectoris.

The author made the voyage from Bermuda ill in his stateroom. He spent the Winter in Bermuda, going there immediately after the sudden death of his daughter. He was accompanied only by Albert Bigelow Paine, the author, who has been acting as his secretary.

When the Oceana reached her pier Edward E. Loomis, Mr. Clemens's nephew, and the latter's wife and Robert Collier were on hand to meet him. They went at once to his cabin. A few minutes later Dr. Edward S. Quintard of 145 West Fifty-eighth Street, a long-time friend of the author, and Dr. Robert H. Halsey of 118 West Fifty-eighth Street arrived and went to Mr. Clemens's room.

The voyage north had not improved the condition of his health. About a week ago he had a severe attack, and from this he did not readily recover. The recent high temperature in Bermuda, according to Mr. Paine, had proved too much for him and went far toward bringing on the attack. Mr. Paine went to Bermuda about two weeks ago, when the news came that Mr. Clemens was failing in health. After the attack of a week ago the physicians concluded that the salt air was not good for him and ordered his immediate return to this country. At Mr. Clemens's request it had been planned that he was to return on the Bermudian, which is scheduled to arrive here on Monday. The author and Capt. Frazer, the skipper are old friends. Later it was decided that it would be dangerous to delay his homecoming.

Embarking on the Oceana was quite a task for the sick man. The vessel because of her great draught cannot go alongside a pier. She anchors in deep water, and her passengers are taken out to her in a tender. Mr. Clemens made the trip in a special tug, and was so weak that he had to be carried on board the Oceana.

On Wednesday when the vessel was passing through the Gulf Stream, with a fairly rough sea running, Mr. Clemens had a sinking spell. For a time, it is said, there was fear that in his weakened condition he would not rally.

Mr. Clemens occupied a starboard stateroom amidships. When the steamer got in his relatives and the physicians found him dressed and lying in his berth, propped up with pillows.

The Oceana reached her pier about 10:15 A. M., but it was not until afternoon that he was removed. It is said that the excitement of arriving proved a severe strain, and his departure to the station was preceded by another sinking spell.

"I have made but a superficial examination of Mr. Clemens," said Dr. Quintard. "When he gets home we will make a thorough examination of his heart. He has angina pectoris, which is a dangerous state for him. He looks much better than I expected he would."

Mr. Clemens was carried from the Oceana in an invalid chair by two stewards. He was assisted into the coach and with Dr. Halsey started for the Grand Central. Mr. Clemens appeared to be extremely weak. He had to rest a few minutes in the invalid chair on the pier before he could make the effort of getting into the vehicle.

On reaching the railway station a few minutes after 3 o'clock Mr. Clemens raised his arms feebly while two station attendants lifted him from the carriage to a wheel chair. They took him directly to a drawing room car.

Special to The New York Times.

REDDING, Conn., April 14—When the Pittsfield Express, on which Mr. Clemens came from New York reached here, he was carried from the car by his secretary, Albert Bigelow Paine, and his butler, placed in a carriage, and driven to his home, Stormfield, which is about three-fourths of a mile from the railroad station. A physician and nurse were also in the party.

The author appeared to be weak and haggard, but sat up during the half-mile drive, as he seemed to be more comfortable in that position. He attendants said that he stood the ride from New York very well and that the drive in the air seemed to relieve, to some extent, the difficulty he had in breathing during the trip up from Bermuda. The attending physician said that while there was no immediate danger, Mr. Clemens was seriously ill.

This is the first time he has been in Stormfield since the death of his daughter, Miss Jean Clemens, he having going to Bermuda directly after her funeral.

April 15 Friday – The New York Times, p. 1, Apr. 16, datelined Redding Apr. 15, did a follow up article on Sam:

MARK TWAIN HOLDS HIS OWN.

Passes a Comfortable Day—Country Air Has Good Effect.

REDDING, Conn., April 15.—Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) who arrived at his country home here last evening, fatigued from his long journey from Bermuda, and very ill, passed a comfortable day with no appreciable change in his condition and was holding his own pretty well. A second nurse arrived today.

Dr. R. H. Halsey of New York, who accompanied Mr. Clemens here yesterday, remained with him overnight and returned to New York this morning. The bracing air of the country, it is stated, has had a beneficial effect upon Mr. Clemens's respiratory organs since his arrival here, and much of the distress that accompanied his breathing during the ocean voyage from Bermuda to New York and after his arrival in New York has disappeared.

April 16 Saturday – Andrew Carnegie wrote from NYC to Sam: “So glad you are reported better this morning gives me hopes you are to weather the storm & be spared to us a while longer—so be it....When you get real chatty again if you can not come down I'd like to make a pilgrimage to your shrine just to get a few sniffs of a real genuine work a day saint...” [MTP].

Lincoln National Bank per David C. Grant wrote to advise of a charge to Sam's account for $202.89 “covering a draft for £41 by Mrs. Clara Gabrilowitsch against her letter of credit” [MTP].

Dr. Robert E. Williams wrote from Thomasville, Ga. to send Sam “an old Negro remedy for heart failure....If you come to Thomasville we will give you a remedy for anything you suffer” [MTP].

The New York Times, April 17, p. 2, reported on Clara's arrival in NYC on the evening of Apr. 16.

MARK TWAIN'S DAUGHTER HERE

Mrs. Gabrilowitsch and Her Husband, the Pianist, Called by Author's Illness.

Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, who was Miss Clara Clemens, the only surviving daughter of Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) and her husband, the Russian pianist, arrived last night on the American liner New York. Mr. Gabrilowitsch has not been playing for a year. He and his wife were in Rome when word reached them of the serious condition of Mr. Clemens. That was ten days ago, and since then they have been traveling to reach Mr. Clemens's home at Redding, Conn.

Before sailing they had been assured by Mr. Clemens's physician that his condition had improved. They were greatly relieved to learn upon their arrival that he had also improved since his return from Bermuda.

"We had intended coming to America to spend the Summer with Mr. Clemens," said Mr. Gabrilowitsch. "The news that he had been taken ill in Bermuda simply caused a change in plan and we are here sooner than we had expected."

Ossip Gabrilowitsch and Miss Clara Clemens were married at the Clemens home on Oct. 6, 1909.

April 17 Sunday – Clara Clemens Gabrilowitsch and her husband arrived at Stormfield. This was reported by the New York Times, p. 6, Apr. 18:

MARK TWAIN SEEMS BETTER.

Arrival of Daughter from Abroad Brightens Sick Man Considerably.

REDDING, Conn., April 17.—According to those in attendance, Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) who is ill at his home, Stormfield, seemed a little improved today. Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Mr. Clemens's daughter who reached New York Saturday from abroad, arrived here today, and her presence seemed to brighten her father very materially.

Dr. Robert M. Halsey of New York will remain with his patient until Monday.

John Bigelow wrote from Grammercy Park, NYC to Sam, glad he was home and offering the advice to change to a colder climate for health, not a warmer one. He enclosed a homeopathic pamphlet (not in file) [MTP].

April 18 Monday – The New York Times, Apr. 19, p. 9 datelined Apr. 18 Redding, announced improvement:

Mark Twain Improving.

REDDING, Conn., April 18.—Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) who is seriously ill with heart disease at his home near here had a restful night and was brighter and to all appearances better today. Dr. Robert H. Halsey who has been with Mr. Clemens since Saturday, went to New York this morning, seemingly satisfied with the progress Mr. Clemens was making.

April 19 Tuesday – The New York Times, p. 18, Apr. 20, datelined Apr. 19 Redding, announced:

Mark Twain a Little Weaker.

REDDING, Conn., April 19.—Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) who is here trying to regain his health after the severe attack of heart trouble that prostrated him on the voyage from Bermuda to New York last week, is a little weaker. Dr. Robert Halsey of New York issued a statement tonight as follows:

"Mr. Clemens is very comfortable tonight and passed a quiet day, though he seems to have grown a little weaker." Dr. Halsey will remain with Mr. Clemens.

George Buxton Byron wrote from Chicago to Sam.

Together with all other reading men and women, I deeply sympathize with you in your illness, and also together with them I rejoice at the favorable reports from your bed-side which we receive from day to day.

You have given me more delight than any other author I ever read, and if everyone whom you have charmed as you have charmed me, were to write you now and tell you about it, the post-office at Redding would be blockaded for months to come.—I believe you are better loved than any other living man, and if the heart-felt wishes of each and all of us for your speedy recovery can avail you anything, I am sure you cannot remain long sick. (Dear Mark, we simply cannot spare you, you must get well” [MTP]. Note: “Save this letter”

April 20 Wednesday – The New York Times, Apr. 21, datelined Apr. 20 Danbury, announced:

MARK TWAIN SINKING.

Author's Condition is Critical, but He Is Expected to Live Through the Night.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., April 20. — At 11 o'clock tonight Samuel L. Clemens, though he had been sinking all day, and at one time late in the afternoon was thought to be in a very serious condition, was resting at his residence, Stormfield, in Redding, Conn., comfortably enough to assure those in attendance on him that his chances for living through the night were very favorable. His daughter, Clara, and her husband, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, and Alfred Bigelow Paine, the humorist's manager and biographer, who comprise the household, felt confidence enough to retire for the night shortly before 11 o'clock.

Dr. Robert H. Halsey, the heart specialist who has been in attendance, admitted that his patient was in a critical condition giving his trouble as angina pectoris. Dr. Quintard was called from New York in consultation during the afternoon, but left this evening. Oxygen was resorted to early in the afternoon to stimulate vitality. Although he was weak on his arrival from Bermuda last Tuesday, and had not since recovered his strength, it was not until today that his symptoms became alarming.

He was noticeably weak this morning and did not respond to treatment as he had previously. As the day went on he became weaker and collapsed this afternoon. He has been almost in an unconscious condition during the afternoon and this evening. He did not show any interest in his surroundings and took no notice of the people around him. Early in the evening he aroused a little and talked for a short time with his daughter. He does not seem to be suffering any pain.

The daughters who have been watching Mark Twain agree that it is simply a case of how long his wonderful constitution can battle with the malady which is gradually overcoming him. He may die during the night or he may live for several weeks, there is no knowing.

Jervis Langdon II (1875-1952) diary entry:

Wed. April 20, 1910. Redding. Out to Redding at 8.50. Dr. Quintard on train. Lounsbury drove us out to Stormfield. Clara and Ossip there & Dr. Halsey. Uncle Sam sinking. I did not see him today. I returned with Dr. Quintard today, & went to Julie's for the night. Had left all my things scattered about room at Manhattan. Would otherwise have remained at "Stormfield" [Jerome & Wisbey 153].

April 21 Thursday – Sam began a note to daughter Clara which he evidently didn't finish: "Dear / You didn't tell me, but I have found out that you—well, I [rest illegible]."

At 7:30 a.m. Sam wrote a note to Albert B. Paine asking for his spectacles and for a glass pitcher. It was the 1st piece of writing he would ever do [MTP].

During the day, Albert B. Paine wrote for Sam to Dorothy Quick.

Dear Dorothy:

May I be permitted to send you thanks for your thoughtful expression, which I am sure Mr. Clemens would appreciate if he were well enough to receive the same. His health at this time is very poor, but we hope for speedy improvement.

Very sincerely yours,
 [signed:]A. B. Paine
 [handwritten:]
 My regards to your mother [MTP].

Jervis Langdon II diary entry:

Thur. April 21, 1910. Redding. Returned to "Stormfield" on 8.50 train. Found Uncle Sam to be brighter. Saw him for a minute & he knew me & feebly spoke my name. Julie & Edward [Loomis] arrived about 2 P.M., & Dr. Quintard a little later. Uncle Sam sank into unconsciousness & doctors agreed he was weaker than 24 hours ago & would likely not live through the night. Julie & Edward left the house about six. At six-twenty five—or thereabouts—Dr. Quintard noted sudden sinking, called Clara & Ossip & the grand old fellow peacefully breathed his last at 6.32. Phoned Edward at station. He & Julie continued to N.Y. Wired Father [Charles Langdon]. News given to Associated Press & newspaper men came out in the evening. Remained at Stormfield [Jerome & Wisbey 153].

At 6.22 p.m. Samuel Langhorne Clemens died. (some reports give 6:30; Jervis Langdon gives 6:32) Newspapers around the world announced the sad news. The New York Times, p. 1, Apr. 22 covered the passing:

MARK TWAIN IS DEAD AT 74

End Comes Peacefully at His New England Home After a Long Illness.

CONSCIOUS A LITTLE BEFORE

Carlyle's "French Revolution"
 Lay Beside Him—"Give Me My Glasses" His Last Words.

SURVIVING CHILD WITH HIM

Tragic Death of His Daughter Jean
 Recently Did Much to Hurry His End.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., April 21.—Samuel Langhorne Clemens, "Mark Twain," died at 22 minutes after 6 tonight. Beside him on the bed lay a beloved book—it was Carlyle's "French Revolution"—and near the book his glasses, pushed away with a weary sigh a few hours before. Too weak to speak clearly, "Give me my glasses," he had written on a piece of paper. He had received them, put them down, and sunk into unconsciousness from which he glided almost imperceptibly into death. He was in his seventy-fifth year.

For some time his daughter Clara and her husband, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, and the humorists' biographer, Albert Bigelow Paine, had been by the bed waiting for the end which Drs. Quintard and Halsey had seen to be a matter of minutes. The patient felt absolutely no pain at the end and the moment of his death was scarcely noticeable.

Death came, however, while his favorite niece, Mrs. E. E. Loomis, and her husband, who is Vice President of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railway, and a nephew, Jervis Langdon, were on the way to the railroad station. They had left the house much encouraged by the fact that the sick man had recognized them, and took a train for New York ignorant of what happened later.

Hopes Aroused Yesterday.

Although the end had been foreseen by the doctors and would not have been a shock at any time, the apparently strong rally of this morning had given basis for the hope that it would be postponed for several days. Mr. Clemens awoke at about 4 o'clock this morning after a few hours of the first natural sleep he had had for several days, and the nurses could see by the brightness of his eyes that his vitality had been considerably restored. He was able to raise his arms above his head and clasp them behind his neck with the first evidence of physical comfort he had given for a long time.

His strength seemed to increase enough to allow him to enjoy the sunrise, the first signs of which he could see out of the windows in the three sides of the room where he lay. The increasing sunlight seemed to bring ease to him, and by the time the family were about he was strong enough to sit up in bed and overjoyed them by recognizing all of them and speaking a few words to each. This was the first time that his mental powers had been fully his for nearly two days, with the exception of a few minutes early last evening, when he addressed a few sentences to his daughter.

Calls for His Book.

For two hours he lay in bed enjoying the feeling of this return of strength. Then he made a movement and asked in a faint voice for the copy of Carlyle's "French Revolution," which he has always had near him for the last year, and which he has read and re-read and brooded over.

The book was handed to him, and he lifted it up as if to read. Then a smile faintly illuminated his face when he realized that he was trying to read without his glasses. He tried to say, "Give me my glasses," but his voice failed, and the nurses bending over him could not understand. He motioned for a sheet of paper and a pencil, and wrote what he could not say.

With his glasses on he read a little and then slowly put the book down with a sigh. Soon he appeared to become drowsy and settled on his pillow. Gradually he sank and settled into a lethargy. Dr. Halsey appreciated that he could have been roused, but considered it better for him to rest. At 3 o'clock he went into complete unconsciousness.

Later Dr. Quintard, who had arrived from New York, held a consultation with Dr. Halsey, and it was decided that death was near. The family was called and gathered about the bedside watching in a silence which was long unbroken. It was the end. At twenty-two minutes past 6, with the sunlight just turning red as it stole into the window, in perfect silence he breathed his last.

Died of a Broken Heart.

The people of Redding, Bethel, and Danbury listened when they were told that the doctors said Mark Twain was dying of angina pectoris. But they say among themselves that he died of a broken heart. And this is the verdict not of popular sentiment alone. Albert Bigelow Paine, his biographer to be and literary executor, who has been constantly with him, said that for the past year at least Mr. Clemens had been weary of life. When Richard Watson Gilder died, he said: "How fortunate he is. No good fortune of that kind ever comes to me."

The man who has stood to the public for the greatest humorist this country has produced has in private life suffered overwhelming sorrows. The loss of an only son in infancy, a daughter in her teens and one in middle life, and finally of a wife who was a constant and sympathetic companion, has preyed upon his mind. The recent loss of his daughter Jean, who was closest to him in later years when her sister was abroad studying, was the final blow. On the heels of this came the first symptoms of the disease which was surely to be fatal, and one of whose accompaniments is mental depression. Mr. Paine says that all heart went out of him and his work when his daughter Jean died. He has practically written nothing since he summoned his energies to write a last chapter memorial of her for his autobiography.

He told his biographer that the past Winter in Bermuda was gay but not happy. Bermuda is always gay in Winter and Mark Twain was a central figure in the gayety. He was staying at the home of William H. Allen, the American Consul. Even in Bermuda, however, Mr. Clemens found himself unable to write and finally relied on Mr. Allen's fifteen year-old daughter Helen to write the few letters he cared to send.

His health failed rapidly, and finally Mr. Allen wrote to Albert Bigelow Paine that his friend was in a most serious condition. Mr. Paine immediately cabled to Mrs. Gabrilowitsch, his surviving daughter, who was in Europe, and started himself on April 2 for Bermuda, embarking with the humorist for he return to New York immediately after his arrival. On the trip over Mark Twain became very much worse and finally realized his condition.

"It's a losing game," he said to his companion. "I'll never get home alive."

Mr. Clemens did manage to summon his strength, however, and in spite of being so weak that he had to be carried down the gangplank he survived the journey to his beautiful place at Redding. The first symptom of angina pectoris came last June when he went to Baltimore to address a young ladies' school. In his room at the hotel he was suddenly taken with a terrible gripping at the heart. It soon passed away, however, and he was able to make an address with no inconvenience. The pains, however, soon returned with more frequency and steadily grew worse until they became a constant torture.

One of the last acts of Mark Twain was to write out a check for $6,000 for the library in which the literary coterie settled near Redding have been interested for a year, fairs, musicales, and sociables having been held in order to raise the necessary amount. The library is to be a memorial to Jean Clemens, and will be built on a site about half a mile from Stormfield at Selleck Cross Roads.

It is certain to be recalled that Mark Twain was for more than fifty years an inveterate smoker, and the first conjecture of the layman would be that he had weakened his heart by overindulgence in tobacco. Dr. Halsey said tonight that he was unable to say that the angina pectoris from which Mark Twain died was in any way a sequel of nicotine poisoning. Some constitutions, he said, seem immune for the effects of tobacco, and his was one of them. Yet it is true that since his illness began the doctors had cut down Mark Twain's daily allowance of twenty cigars and countless pipes to four cigars a day.

No deprivation was a greater sorrow to him. He tried to smoke on the steamer while returning from Bermuda, and only gave it up because he was too feeble to draw on his pipe. Even on his death bed when had passed the point of speech, and it was no longer certain that his ideas were lucid, he would make the motion of waiving a cigar, and smiling, expel empty air from under the mustache still stained with smoke.

Where Mark Twain chose to spend his declining years was the first outpost of Methodism in New England, and it was among the hills of Redding that Gen. Israel Putnam of Revolutionary fame mustered his sparse ranks. Putnam Park now incloses the memory of his camp.

Mark Twain first heard of it at the dinner given him on his seventieth birthday, when a fellow-guest who lived there mentioned hits beauties and added that there was a vacant house adjoining his own. "I think you may buy that old house for me," said Mark Twain. Sherwood Place was the name of that old house, and where it stood Mark Twain reared the white walls of the Italian villa he first named Innocence at Home, but a first experience of what a New England Winter storm can be in its whitest fury quickly caused him to christen it anew Stormfield.

Where Mark Twain Died.

The house had been thus described by Albert Bigelow Paine: "Set on a fair hillside with such a green slope below, such a view outspread across the valley as made one catch his breath a little when he first turned to look at it. A trout stream flows through one of the meadows. There are apple trees and gray stone walls. The entrance to it is a winding, leafy lane."

Through this lane the "Innocent at Home" loved to wander in his white flannels for homely gossip with the neighbors. They remember him best as one who above all things loved a good listener, for Mark was a mighty talker, stored with fairy tales for the maids he adored, and racier, ruder speech for more stalwart masculine ears. It is a legend that he was vastly proud of his famous mop of white hair, and used to spend the pains of a Court lady in getting it to just the proper stage of artistic disarray.

The burial will be in the family plot at Elmira, N. Y., where lie already his wife, his two daughters, Susan and Jean, and his infant son, Langhorne [sic Langdon] No date has yet been set, as the family is still undecided whether or not there shall be a public funeral first in New York City.

It is probable that Stormfield will be kept as a Summer place by Mrs. Gabrilowitsch, who is very fond both of the house and the country, although her husband's musical engagements make it necessary that she spend a part of each year abroad.

Mr. Paine said tonight that Mark Twain had put his affairs in perfect order and that he died well off, though by no means a rich man. He leaves a considerable number of manuscripts, in all stages of incompleteness and of all characters, many of them begun years ago and put aside as unsatisfactory.

Mrs. Gabrilowitsch will aid Mr. Paine in the final decision as to what use shall be made of these.

April 22 Friday – William Dean Howells wrote to Clara Clemens Gabrilowitsch after learning the sad news:

I found Mr. Paine's telegram when I came in late last night; and suddenly your father was set apart from all other men in a strange majesty. Death had touched his familiar image into historic grandeur.

You have lost a father. Shall I dare tell you of the desolation of an old man who has lost a friend, and finds himself alone in the great world which has now wholly perished around?

We all join in sending you our helpless love [MFMT 291].

Jervis Langdon II diary entry:

Fri. April 22, 1910. Redding. Funeral arrangements were practically completed last night. Edward in N.Y. consulted with Maj. Leigh & Mr. Duneka of Harpers. Clara in the end prefers a stop-off in N.Y. & service there. Open to the public except for some special cards sent out. Spent the day largely with Clara and Ossip. Clara is wonderfully calm and dear. Dr. Quintard spent last night here. Uncle Sam placed in mahogany coffin, which Edward picked out, in the evening & he lay all night in state in the beautiful library [Jerome & Wisbey 153].

The New York Times, p8, ran an editorial titled, "Mark Twain."

MARK TWAIN.

That SAMUEL L. CLEMENS was the greatest American humorist of his age nobody will deny. Posterity will be left to decide his relative position in letters among the humorists of English literature. It is certain that his contemporary fame abroad was equal to his fame at home. All Europe recognized his genius, the English people appreciated him at his own work, and the University of Oxford honored him with a degree. His writings commanded a higher price in the market than those of any other contemporary whose career was solely devoted to literature. His "public" was of enormous extent. From "The Jumping Frog" to the "Diary of Adam" everything that came from his pen was eagerly read and heartily enjoyed by multitudes.

Much that he wrote has already been forgotten, inevitably, and in spite of definitive editions and the admirably practical management of his business in the later years of his career. But nearly all that JONATHAN SWIFT, FIELDING, STERNE, and SMOLLETT wrote has been forgotten, though their fame, resting on a few books, still lives. ARTEMUS WARD, MARK TWAIN'S greatest predecessor as a National jester, is now little more than a name. NASBY belonged exclusively to the Reconstruction period. For any American humorous writer it would be fit to compare with MARK TWAIN we must go back to WASHINGTON IRVING. But the author of Knickerbocker's ironical history and the Sleepy Hollow legend did not surpass, in those denotements of the humorous genius, the author of "The Adventures of a Cub Pilot on the Mississippi" and "Huckleberry Finn." Indeed, it is hard to say that IRVING ever surpassed CLEMENS. Without belittling the first great American prose writer we are compelled to doubt if posterity will name him in the same breath with the humorist who has just passed away.

The "Innocents Abroad" and "A Tramp Abroad" are likely to be remembered among the great travel books of all time. Full of the audacity, the wild exaggeration and violent contrasts which distinguish the National humor, they are equally remarkable as the veracious record of fresh impressions on a fertile and responsive mind. Mr. CLEMENS'S more serious works, such as "The Prince and the Pauper," an incursion into the field of historical romance; "A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur," and "Joan of Arc," have been read by multitudes with great delight. He has been quoted in common conversation oftener, perhaps, than any of his fellow-countrymen, including BENJAMIN FRANKLIN and LINCOLN. He has been honored by misquotation, too, and the humorous sayings of the ancients have been attributed to him, though he never borrowed. His wit was his own, and so was his extravagance, and his powers of observation never failed him.

We have called him the greatest American humorist. We may leave it an open question whether he was not also the greatest American writer of fiction. The creator of Mulberry Sellers and Pudd'nhead Wilson, the inventor of that Southwestern feud in "Huckleberry Finn," which, with all its wildly imaginative details, is still infused with rare pathos, has certainly an undying vitality. An emotional and quite unconventional sort of man, CLEMENS was, whose early life was a hard struggle for existence. He obtained his education where he could get it. Presumably his faults were as large as his merits. Intellectually he was of Herculean proportions. His death will be mourned, everywhere, and smiles will break through the tears as remembrance of the man's rich gift to his era comes to the mourners' minds. However his work may be judged by impartial and unprejudiced generations his fame is imperishable.

The Times also ran a short piece, p. 2, of the reaction in England to Twain's death:

ENGLAND FEELS HIS LOSS.

Only Tolstoi's Death Could Be More Regretted, Says London Paper.

LONDON, April 22.—The British public followed the reports of Mark Twain's last illness with deepest sympathy, and the news of his death will be felt as a national loss. All of the London newspapers publish extended sketches of his career, with portraits and reminiscences, especially recalling his last visit to England in 1907, when Augustine Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland, presiding at the Pilgrims' dinner, paid an eloquent tribute to Mark Twain as a man Englishmen delighted to honor.

The news of his death arrived too late for editorial comment in the papers. The Morning Post obituary says that he enjoyed a popularity in Great Britain rarely exceeded by any American man of letters. The Daily Mail says that it is no exaggeration to say that Mark Twain was the greatest humorist the modern world had known.

"With the exception of Tolstoi," says The Morning Leader, "probably there is no writer whose death would rouse more universal emotions of respect and regret. Mark Twain's death leaves a blank in the purely human literature.

The Times ran another short piece of an old schoolmate of Sam's who claimed to be the original Huck Finn:

"HUCKLEBERRY FINN" TALKS.

Original of Character Calls Mark Twain Greatest American Literary Figure.

Special to The New York Times.

PARIS, Mo., April 21.—"The old days are passing. The men who made them are gone, and even the long sweep of the majestic yellow river seems to have dwindled and lessened. The noise of its traffic, the music of its many deep throated voices are practically no more. The man who caught them and froze them into human words for the delight of the world is dead."

So spoke B. C. M. Farthing, friend and schoolmate of Mark Twain, and the original "Huckleberry Finn," when told tonight of the death of his boyhood friend and companion.

"I can't talk to you about it," he said, "for all that I might say would be construed either as boasting intimacy with the greatest literary figure the Nation has ever produced or as an effect to gain cheap notoriety. I desire neither.

"I can see the gray-haired man who died at Redding today as he stood at the window of the old Hannibal Courier office fifty years ago, his sleeves rolled up, leaning on his case, bargaining with me and his younger brother, Henry, for a mite of a boat that lay down at the river's edge. I can see the shock of hair and the quizzical gray eyes, and the kindness, yet, with all the shrewdness, that shone from them. The racial love of adventure was in him, and the spirit of the river fanned it into flame."

April 23 Saturday – Jervis Langdon II diary entry:

Sat. April 23, 1910. Redding & N.Y. Beautiful weather continued. Up early. We left a little after nine the country hearse first, then Lounsbury driving Paine, Claude & I & later Clara, Ossip & Katy in the little old coupe. Newspaper men & cameras. Reached N.Y. at 12. Met by Edward, Maj. Leigh & Mr. Duneka. Clara & Ossip went with Edward to the apartment. The rest of us to the Brick Church where he was quietly laid before the pulpit. Simple service by Dr. Van Dyck & Dr. Twichell, & then three or four thousand passing in review. Young Herald reporter & I saw the coffin into Donnelly's hands at Hoboken Station. To Julies to dinner. All went to the car in good season & to bed by midnight [Jerome & Wisbey 153-4].

The New York Times, p. 20, Apr. 23, noted a tribute to Mark Twain by Missourians in New York:

TRIBUTE TO TWAIN BY HIS HOME FOLK

His Writings Clean Because He Was Clean, the Toast of Missourians.

A FORERUNNER OF REFORM

"The Gilded Age" an Up-to-Date Story of Grafters, Says ex-Gov. Folk—F. Hopkinson Smith's Eulogy.

The men and women in New York who come from Missouri, the State that produced Mark Twain, held their annual dinner last night at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, and almost every speaker paid a tribute to the great humorist.

F. Hopkinson Smith said that he had been asked to attend the dinner and say something about Mark Twain because he was from Virginia, the State that gave birth to Twain's father. "Tonight there lies cold in death almost within the sound of my voice," went on Mr. Smith, "a clean-minded man, whose pen stood for all that is beautiful in literature.

"There was never a line from his pen that left a sting. There was nothing bitter; no sarcasm, no irony, no so-called mud-slinging; and that, too, in an age when misjudging is rampant. There was not a sentence he wrote which the purest of women could not read with pleasure. Because he was clean, therefore none of his output could be otherwise.

"I ask, Mr. President, that we rise and drink a silent toast to the memory of Mark Twain."

The suggestion was acted upon with alacrity.

"We mourn tonight the death of Missouri's most famous son," said ex-Gov. Joseph W. Folk. "He had a deeper insight into nature than any author in the last century, not excepting Dickens himself. 'The Gilded Age,' he wrote twenty-five years ago describes the ways and doings of grafters better than any book written in recent years. His works have made millions of lives brighter, and the world is better for his having lived in it."

Mark Twain as a Reformer.

Ex-Gov. Folk thought that Mark Twain's works had marked the beginning of the great reform movement that has been sweeping over this country, and is still doing its work of regeneration. After the Civil War, he went on, people were busy trying to adjust their business and household affairs, and there was full opportunity for the sowing of the seed of corruption and their growth. Then the people, of whom the majority is always honest and straight, saw what had happened, whereupon there was a beginning made to clean out the houses of Government.

In passing he spoke approvingly of the work now being done by Mayor Gaynor and by Gov. Hughes. The Mayor's action in the matter of excise, keeping the police as far removed from contact with saloon men as possible, Mr. Folk said, was a strategic move against graft; for wherever privileges are enjoyed somebody at some point along the line steps in and asks payment for that enjoyment.

He mentioned Gov. Hughes in stating the markers that point how far the reform movement has got in this country and State.

"Ten years ago," he went on, "can you think of your Legislature investigation itself, and even throwing one of its members out? Now it comes out as a matter of course.

"But these investigations and exposures do not prove that there is more graft and vileness in Government now than they used to be. The newspapers tell more about them, because the public conscience is aroused and wants to know about them. There is more told now than used to be; there is not so much done that calls for telling."

Speaking of the ways of grafters Mr. Folk declared that they know very well that if a clear issue of right and wrong be put before the public the immediate verdict will be for the right; and, therefore, the grafters always adroitly manage to complicate the main issue with other questions, some of them popular, so as to bewilder and confuse men of even the best intentions.

[No further mention of Clemens was found in the remaining article.]

The New York Times, p. 3, dateline Paris, France, Apr. 23:

FRENCH SNEER AT MARK TWAIN.

Ernest Charles Calls Him "the Most Laborious Humorist."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 23.—Almost all of the French journals have published appreciative notices of the value of Mark Twain's literary work. One must suppose in reading these notices an extraordinarily widespread knowledge of the subtleties of the English language among Frenchmen.

A surprising exception is found in Ernest Charles, a critic much in the public view, who in a short article on Mark Twain seems determined to convince every reader possessing any degree of penetration that the views which he expresses are the product of ignorance and anti-Americanism combined. This article is published in Gil Blas, which has also been conspicuously unique in its sneering comments, not by any means witty, upon Theodore Roosevelt since his arrival in Paris.

Mr. Charles says in effect that Mark Twain did well to die, and that it was not his fault if while he was all his life the most laborious humorist, he was totally lacking in wit.

"Mark Twain's humor," M. Charles adds, "was painful, his fantasies dense and difficult to follow. By them, one may estimate the exact distance which separates the Yankee country from the civilized world; but anyhow, hurrah for Roosevelt!"

The New York Times, p. 3, Apr. 24, dateline Redding, Apr. 23, reported Sam's return to Stormfield.

LAST SCENE AT THE OLD HOME.

Mark Twain, When Ill, Wouldn't Be Carried in There—Stood for a Greeting.

Special to The New York Times.

REDDING, Conn., April 23.—Less than two weeks ago Mark Twain arrived at Stormfield, having been brought back from Bermuda by Albert Bigelow Paine when he was told that his friend was dangerously ill.

Mr. Clemens had to be carried from the steamer to his carriage, and in all the intermediate steps of the journey. But when he arrived at his hilltop home and the carriage drew up at the doorway, he insisted on getting out himself. This was because Katie Leary, his housekeeper for twenty-nine years, and his butler Claude, stood at the door to welcome him.

It did not suit Mark Twain's notion of courtesy, Mr. Paine said, to be carried in and not be able to greet them properly. He weakly alighted and then drew himself up to his full height. Off came his big hat with a full sweep, and then he made one of his old-fashioned low bows and spoke to them. Not until then would he allow himself to be helped. It was the last time he walked unaided.

Today before his body was carried to New York, he lay in the beautifully furnished living room on the lower floor, among his books. He had been dressed in one of his white cashmere suits and brought down there the night before. The unshuttered windows let in a stream of sunlight, and the breeze fluttered the light curtains. It was a perfect day.

At 9 o'clock it was announced that Mrs. Gabrilowitsch, his only surviving daughter, Clara, was coming downstairs. The other members of the household withdrew and she went into the living room alone. The doors were locked. In about half an hour she came out, drawing her veil about her face. The coffin was placed in the village hearse, drawn by a team of white horses, and the little procession started for the four-mile drive to the Redding station.

Mr. and Mrs. Paine and Jervis Langdon were in one carriage with the butler, Claude, and Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch followed in a carriage which had been presented to Mr. and Mrs. Clemens at the time of their marriage. On the front seat sat Katie Leary.

As they went over the hills to the railroad station many of the townsfolds were seen in front of their houses. The men uncovered as the hearse passed. On the way Dan Beard, his wife, and children joined the procession. Another group of country folk was gathered at the railroad station. Most of them were members of the Redding Library Club, in which Mark Twain was deeply interested, and to which, besides giving it all his superfluous books, he had drawn a check for $6,000 the day before his death. They stood in silence during the short wait for the train, and the men again uncovered as the coffin was lifted on the train.

Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch retired into the stateroom compartment of the parlor car. The remainder of the party was made up of Jervis Langdon, Albert Bigelow Paine, Dan Beard, and Harry Lounsbury, the Stormfield Superintendent.

The conductor of the train, which was the Pittsfield Express was M. H. Lyons. He had become well acquainted with Mark Twain owing to the fact that the author always waited for his train in going to and from the city. The dead author used to say that he enjoyed talking with Lyons.

The New York Times also ran a short article speculating the size of Twain's estate:

HIS ESTATE PROBABLY LARGE.

Publisher Says Mark Twain's Income in Late Years Was Enormous.

Mark Twain's royalties from books, which have sold in larger number than the works of any other American author, left him at his death a wealthy man. A member of the firm of Harper & Brothers, who for ten years have been his publishers, discussed his books and royalties yesterday afternoon.

"There have been published in America of Mark Twain's books," he said, "about 5,000,000 or 5,500,000 copies. And these do not take into consideration publications abroad, which have been made in many languages. While we do not care to announce the figures Mr. Clemens received for his stories that appeared in our magazines, still it may be said that his royalties were larger than those of any other contemporaneous author, and that his books had a larger sale even in the last year than any other writer of the period.

"Mr. Clemens's income of late years was enormous, and he always had large sums of ready money at his command. It is hardly probable that with such intimate friends as the late H. H. Rogers to advise him he failed to invest this money wisely and to his advantage.

"A short time ago Mr. Clemens desired to have his books a part of every household library, and entered into a contract with us to publish them at $25 for a set of twelve volumes. He received only a small royalty on this edition, but its sales astonished both himself and us, and we had counted on something extraordinary, too.

“Mr. Clemens’s books will sell for years to come both in this country and abroad, as he is more highly rated in Europe than he is in his own country. There he is counted a great philosopher, while here he is known at preset chiefly as a humorist.”

The NY Times also ran a short letter to the editor about Twain and Halley’s Comet:

Mark Twain and Halley’s Comet.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to draw your attention to a peculiar coincidence.

Mark Twain, born Nov. 30, 1835.

Last perihelion of Halley’s comet, Nov. 10, 1835.

Mark Twain died, April 21, 1910.

Perihelion of Halley’s comet, April 20, 1910.

It so appears that the lifetime of the great humorist was nearly identical (the difference being exactly fifteen days) with the last long “year” of the great comet.

The New York Times, p. 3, Apr. 24, reported on the New York funeral:

—————
They Opened the Coffin in the Brick Church and 3,000 Persons Saw His Dead Face.
—————

A TRAMP IN THE THRONG
—————

Dr. Van Dyke Pays His Tribute and the Rev. Joseph Twichell Chokes Down His Tears to Pray.
—————

A short pause was made in the journey of Samuel Langhorne Clemens to his final resting place in Elmira yesterday, and he was brought to the Brick Church, at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-Seventy Street, that those who knew him might not be deprived of opportunity to see his face for the last time. A reading from the Scripture, a short address, and a prayer constituted the simple service. Then, for an hour and a half, a stream of people from all walks of life passed in front of the bier.

The same spirit which had led to the unbarring of Stormfield to breezes and sunshine on the day after the death pervaded the church yesterday. There was no gloom; only the peace that Mark Twain would have desired. The people who passed by the coffin saw not so much the man Samuel L. Clemens, a philosopher through the necessity for bearing misfortune, as Mark Twain, who was everything from Huckleberry Finn and Colonel Mulberry Sellers.

Mr. and Mrs. Ossip Gabilowitsch, the latter heavily veiled, sat in the front pew on the left side of the church. With them were Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Loomis and William Dean Howells. Behind these sat the Albert Bigelow Paines and Jarvis [sic] Langdon. In another pew were the widow and children of Samuel Moffett, a favorite nephew of Mr. Clemens, who died in California several years ago.

The funeral party from Redding arrived in New York at noon, Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch going first to friends. The male members of the party accompanied the body to the Brick Church. At the Grand Central Station a few who knew the train on which the party was to arrive had gathered, and when the body was taken out a crowd collected and all heads were bared as the coffin was lifted into the hearse.

Throng at the Church.

It was originally intended to open the church to the public at 3 o'clock, after the holders of the 400 tickets which had been distributed had taken their seats. But the crowd at Thirty-seventh Street and Fifth Avenue threatened to block traffic on the avenue, and at 2:30 it was decided to let them in. the church was almost immediately filled. In fact, several hundred persons who could not be accommodated remained on the streets during the service until it was time to view the body.

Inside the church complete quiet was maintained, even while the people were taking their seats. The effect was enhanced by the soft tones of the organ when Clarence Dickinson began playing Chopin's Funeral March. As he changed to the Death's Chariot music of Grieg's "Death of Asa" the Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke and Dr. Joseph H. Twichell, both old friends of the author, came through the curtains into the pulpit.

Dr. Van Dyke stepped forward and began to read the Scriptural part of the Presbyterian funeral service. When he had finished he entered without a break on his address. It was a simple and dignified estimate of the worth of the work that Mark Twain's life had produced. Throughout it was evident that the speaker was making a strong effort to keep down his emotion and control his voice. There was a noticeable break in his voice when he said: "Now he is gone."

Dr. Van Dyke's Address

In part Dr. Van Dyke said:

"Those who know the story of Mark Twain's career know how bravely he faced hardships and misfortune, how loyally he toiled for years to meet a debt of conscience, following the injunction of the New Testament to provide not only things honest, but things 'honorable in the sight of all men.'

"Those who know the story of his friendships and his family life know that he was one who 'loved much' and faithfully, even unto the end. Those who know his work as a whole know that under the lambent and irrepressible humor which was his gift there was a foundation of serious thoughts and noble affections and desires.

"Nothing could be more false than to suppose that the presence of humor means the absence of depth and earnestness. There are elements of the unreal, the absurd, the ridiculous in this strange, incongruous world which must seem humorous even to the highest Mind. Of these the Bible says, 'He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Almighty shall hold them in derision.' But the mark of this higher humor is that it does not laugh at the weak, the helpless, the true, the innocent; only at the false, the pretentious, the vain, the hypocritical.

"Mark Twain himself would be the first to smile at the claim that his humor was infallible. But we may say without doubt that he used his gift, not for evil, but for good. The atmosphere of his work is clean and wholesome. He made fun without hatred. He laughed many of the world's false claimants out of court, and entangled many of the world's false witnesses in the net of ridicule. In his best books and stories, colored with his own experience, he touched the absurdities of life with penetrating but not unkindly mockery, and made us feel somehow the infinite pathos of life's realities. No one can say that he ever failed to reverence the purity, the frank, joyful, genuine nature of the little children, of whom Christ said, 'Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.'

"Now he is gone, and our thoughts of him are tender, grateful, proud. We are glad of his friendship; glad that he has expressed so richly one of the great elements in the temperament of America; glad that he has left such an honorable record as a man of letters, and glad, also for his sake, that after many and deep sorrows, he is at peace, and we trust happy in the fuller light.

"Rest after toil, port after stormy seas, Death after life doth greatly please."

Bad News to Dr. Twichell.

Then the Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Twichell of Hartford came forward to deliver the prayer. Associated with the dead author from the middle and happiest part of his life, the minister who performed the marriage that brought so much happiness into Mr. Clemens's life and lived to hold the funeral services of not only the wife, but of three of the children born of the marriage, it was no wonder that when he came to deliver a prayer at the death of his friend his voice should fail him. Throughout the short service he had sat with bowed head to conceal the fact that tears had found their way to the surface. Now he made a determined effort to control himself, and finally was able to say what he had to say.

Although fully as old as Mark Twain, Mr. Twichell carries his age well. He is a big, vigorous-looking man. With his mass of heavy white hair he does not look unlike Mark Twain himself. His prayer, except for the benediction by Dr. Van Dyke, ended the service. When he left the pulpit and retired into the robing room, he received a blow that was particularly sad owing to the circumstances under which it came—a telegram saying that his wife was seriously ill in Hartford and that he must return there at once. He left the church immediately and took the first train for his home. It was arranged that in his stead the Rev. Samuel E. Eastman, pastor of the Park Church, should officiate at the services in Elmira.

3,000 Passed the Coffin.

The service in the Brick Church lasted only twenty minutes. It is estimated fifteen hundred persons crowded to hear it. At its conclusion it was announced that the coffin would be opened. The lines of those within the church began to pass around it, and the crowd from the street pushed in. This was at half past three. there was no abatement in the stream for the next hour and a half. Finally at 5 o'clock it was found necessary to close the doors, as the body had to be taken to Hoboken and put aboard the special train for Elmira. More than three thousands persons meantime had passed in front of the coffin.

Every walk of life was represented in the line, which filed slowly past the coffin. Before the doors were opened a score of brightly dressed little girls appeared in front of the church, each with flowers in her hand. They were disappointed at not being allowed to enter, but the ushers appeased them by taking their flowers and setting them near the bier.

When the people had been filing past only a few minutes it could be seen that almost every nationality was represented. There were several negroes. Jervis Langdon, who was standing near the head of the coffin, was much interested in one of the persons who passed him. He said that the man looked the very picture of trumphood, but his bearing was easy, and he seemed to be unconscious of his tattered clothes, stopping for along look at he face of Mark Twain. Mr. Paine also saw him, and said he was probably some one who had seen better days, in which he had read Mark Twain and conceived a liking for his work.

All religions were represented. Some of those who passed crossed themselves as they did so.

Bay Wreath on the Coffin.

The idea of simplicity was carried out in all the arrangements. There were no pall bearers. Although surrounded by flowers, there was nothing on the coffin except a wreath which Dan Beard had made of bay leaves gathered the night before, at the request of the family, on the hill behind the house where Mark Twain spent a good deal of his time. This was put on the coffin when it was taken out of Stormfield, and will not be removed. A copper plate on the lid bore the inscription:

SAMUEL LANGHORNE CLEMENS,
MARK TWAIN,
1910

All the persons of literary prominence who are in this part of the country were present yesterday, besides delegations from the better-known clubs. Albert Bigelow Paine, biographer-to-be of the dead humorist, and Major Frederick Leigh and Frederick A. Duneka of Harper's were in the vestibule of the church to receive. Other than these the ushers were the undertaker's men.

Some of the Mourners.

Here are some of the prominent persons who were present:

William Dean Howells, Miss Mildred Howells, Andrew and Mrs. Carnegie, Prof. and Mrs. Brander Matthews, W. W. Ellsworth, and C. C. Buel of the Century Company; Davis Bispham, Will N. Harben, Peter Finley Dunne, Sydney Porter, (O. Henry,) James Lane Allen, Will Carleton, Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Collier, John B. Stanchfield, Philip V. Mighels, Robert Underwood Johnson, Joseph H. Choate, J. Henry Harper, Miss Elizabeth Jordan, Robert Bridges, Dan Beard, Henry Holt, Don Seitz, E. S. Martin, President John Finley, Col. Daniel Appleton, Mrs. George Harvey, Joseph W. Harper, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Alden, ex-Gov. Joseph W. Folk of Missouri, Julian Hawthorne, and Emma Thurston.

There were also delegations from the Pilgrims, both American and English; the Authors' Club, the Lotos Club, the Century Association, and the Players. Flowers came from the Aldine Association, the American Academy of Arts and Letters, the National Institute of Arts and Letters, Booth Tarkington, Mrs. H. H. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Rogers, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. William R. Coe, son-in-law and daughter of the late

H. H. Rogers; Robertson Coe, Mr. and Mrs. Urban H. Broughton, Robert J. Collier, the Robert Fulton Memorial Association, Mr. and Mrs. Philip James McCook, Col. and Mrs. George Harvey, Emily W. Burbank, the Pilgrims, (of both countries,) and Harper Brothers.

Last night the coffin was taken across the ferry and put aboard the private car Lake Forest, owned by E. E. Loomis, whose wife is a niece of Mr. Clemens. Immediately after the service Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch went to the apartment of the Loomises, which they left late last night for Hoboken. The party accompanying the body to Elmira consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch, Mr. and Mrs. Loomis, Albert Bigelow Paine, Frederick Duneka, and Major Leigh.

The preceding newspaper account related Twichell's receipt at the Brick Church, of bad news concerning his wife, Harmony Cushman Twichell. Courtney writes and gives more specifics:

In New York, preparing to mount the pulpit to offer the prayer, he was handed telephone messages from his son Joe and son-in-law John Hall: "Mrs. Twitchell seriously worse," read the message from Hall. Twichell sat through the hour-long service, gave a shaky prayer—the newspapers commented on how upset he seemed to be over his friend's death—and took the 4 o'clock train back to Hartford.

He arrived in time to talk to Harmony before she was operated on for ulceration of the bowels at Hartford Hospital. "It's all right," she told him, too weak to say more. She died shortly after midnight [267]. Note: Harmony's death Apr. 25.

MARK TWAIN AT REST; BURIED BESIDE WIFE

Simple Ceremony Held in the Home of His Brother-in-Law, General Langdon.

SCHOOL CHILDREN'S TRIBUTE

The 500 Boy Pupils of Louisville High School
Send Floral Piece—Rev. Samuel Eastman Officiated.

Special to The New York Times.

ELMIRA, N.Y.—April 24.—In a heavy downpour of rain the body of Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) was buried this afternoon in Woodlawn Cemetery beside that of his wife.

The body was brought to this city at 9:30 o'clock this morning in the private car of Vice President Loomis of the Lackawanna. In the party accompanying it were Mark Twain's daughter, Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch and her husband; Mr. and Mrs. Loomis, Mr. and Mrs. Jervis Langdon, Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Collier, Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder, Major Fred T. Leigh, and F. A. Duneka. At 3:30 o'clock funeral services were conducted at the residence of Gen. Langdon, brother of the departed wife of Mr. Clemens. The Rev. Samuel Eastman, who succeeded Thomas K. Beecher as pastor of the Park Congregational Church, officiated.

In keeping with Mr. Clemens's wish the ceremony was simple. There were no music, no honorary pallbearers—just the brief address and prayer by Dr. Eastman. The body lay in state in the very parlor where Mr. Clemens's marriage of forty years ago was held, and some of those who attended the wedding were there today to look for the last time upon the face of their friend.

The services at the house were public, but the attendance was not large. Besides the funeral party which accompanied the body from Redding, the little gathering included only a few relatives and old friends. Dr. Eastman said in part:

"We are not here at this time to speak of the great man whose going hence the whole world mourns, nor to claim for him that place in the halls of fame which only time can give him. We are here to weep with those that weep, to give thanks with those whose own he was in the sacred bonds of human kinship and family affection."

The last visit of Mr. Clemens to Elmira was two years ago, when he came especially to be present at the dedication of the new organ in the Park Church. It was suggested then that he go to the old home on East

Hill, where he wrote many of his early stories, but he demurred, replying that such a visit would awaken sorrowful thoughts. He had not been to that former abode since before the death of his wife.

It was recalled today that forty years ago Mr. Beecher held Sunday afternoon services at the Elmira Opera House, engaging a brass band, and thus shocking the Protestant Ministers' Union, which suspended Mr. Beecher from its rolls. Mr. Clemens came to the defense of Mr. Beecher and the methods he employed to elevate the masses, writing several articles on the subject for the local press. Just south of the Langdon residence in the park stands the Beecher statue. On the occasion of his last visit here Mr. Clemens viewed the statue.

Just before the hour of the funeral there arrived a large floral design with the following card attached: "From five hundred boys of Louisville (Ky.) Male High School. In remembrance of Samuel L. Clemens, who has brightened their lives with innocent laughter and taught them squareness and grit and compassion."

The piece receive a conspicuous place at the bier. Much sorrow was expressed when it was learned that the wife of the Rev. Mr. Twichell, who officiated at the services yesterday and who expected to assist Mr. Eastman here today, was dead.

The Elmira Advertiser, Apr. 25, 1910 gave a fuller description of the Elmira funeral services:

SAMUEL L. CLEMENS TO-DAY LIES BESIDE HIS WIFE AND CHILDREN IN WOODLAWN

Under a tent on the grassy slope of the Langdon plot in Woodlawn Cemetery, with rain beating fiercely against the canvas cover, a little group of mourners silently watched yesterday [Apr. 24] as the body of Samuel L. Clemens was lowered into an evergreen-lined grave beside those of his wife and children. Rev. Samuel E. Eastman, pastor of Park Church and a close friend of the dead humorist, conducted a brief but simple service and Mark Twain's first pilgrimage was at an end. To-night he lies sleeping under a grave piled high with flowers, the tributes of loving friends from far and near.

A former governess of the Clemens family and two of her friends and half a dozen newspaper men watched the little procession as the hearse bearing its precious burden and the accompanying carriages would their way slowly through the cemetery in a pouring rain to the tent that had been erected to give shelter from the storm. Aside from these and the sexton there was no one to intrude on the privacy of the ceremony.

The funeral services at the residence of General Charles J. Langdon, on Main Street, were extremely simple and in keeping with the expressed wish of the deceased. There was no music, no honorary pall bearers—just a brief address by Rev. Mr. Eastman. The body of the distinguished man of letters lay in state in the parlor where forty years ago he was married to General Langdon's sister. Some of those who attended the wedding were there yesterday to look for the last time upon the face of their friend. But neither Thomas K. Beecher nor Rev. Joseph Twichell, who performed the wedding ceremony, were in attendance. A bronze statue of Mr. Beecher, who died several years ago, stands in the center of a park across the street from the Langdon home. Mr. Twichell sent word of his inability to come on account of the illness of his wife, who later died in Hartford, Conn.

The services at the house were public but the attendance was not large. Besides the funeral party which accompanied the body from Redding the little gathering included some of the relatives and old friends of the Clemenses who reside here.

The body of the great humorist lay in the plain mahogany casket in the front parlor of the Langdon home. To those who came to pay their last respects to this man who had brightened their lives because he lived, Mark Twain appeared to be sleeping. Just before he died the newspaper dispatches told of how he had fallen into the first restful slumber he had experienced in a long time and as he lay in his casket one could hardly help but remark of the look of contentment on the man's face. He had longed for death and it came to him as a peaceful sleep. Death had wrought no changes in his features. The stained moustache told of the one joy of his declining years, outside of his only living daughter, his cigar.

Elmirans who had known Mr. Clemens personally, despite their age braved the storm to look once more upon the features of the grand old man. A comparatively few sat about and gazed at one another conscious of the fact that in the casket nearby rested a man who had won world-wide renown, yet whose funeral was to be of the simplest kind. It appears as if Elmirans had just come to realize what it was to have Mark Twain in their midst, even though the pen had been laid away and the kindly features had set never to relax. No more would he work for the entertainment of mankind. His work was done as far as he was concerned, but his memory and his works will long continue to be a monument, such as few men have ever enjoyed.

A Friend's Tribute

And then the reveries of these few was interrupted as the Rev. Samuel E. Eastman arose promptly at 3:30 o'clock and began the simple services. After reading several selected passages from scripture, he spoke briefly as follows: "Friends," he said, "we are not here at the time to speak of the great man whose going hence the whole world mourns, nor to claim for him that place in the halls of fame which time can give him. We are not here to try to estimate his worth to the world—the service he has rendered to civilization and the moral progress of mankind nor yet to eulogize him for the integrity, justice and magnanimity of his character. There will be time enough for all this in the days to come and many a voice more competent than mine to set for the lessons of his life. We are here to 'weep with those that weep,' to give thanks with those whose own he was in the sacred bonds of human kinship and family affection for all that he means to them, for the unfailing trust and help he gave them and gratefully took from them in turn: for the daily gospel of his life in his loving kindness which cluster about his name as father, husband, brother, uncle, friend, in their hearts."

Rev. Eastman's Prayer

Mr. Eastman then offered the following prayer which brought the services at the house to a close: "The heart knoweth its own bitterness and no stranger intermeddeth with its joy. We thank for each sorrowing soul's peculiar joy and its bitterness.

"May the joy deepen and the bitterness be dissolved in its depths, for sorrow indeed endureth for the night, but joy returneth with the morning."

"For the dear child who remains sole heir of a happy household's gracious memories we ask daily strength and wisdom and grace which shall make her rich inheritance a blessing to every soul she meets; for all those to whom the world is darkened by the going out of this light of a loving life, we pray thy comfort—the comfort of enobled thoughts, widening charity and enlarging hope. We lay to our hearts, the wise man's great words, "There can be no evil befall a good man either in life or after death," and the divine words of Jesus, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid, I go away and come back to you."

"We thank thee for the light that shineth in darkness, for the hope that riseth out of every good and beautiful life lived amid the shadows of mortality; even the hope of a higher service, a sweeter joy, a more abundant life beyond the sphere of time and space.

"We thank thee for all the works and words of cheer and good will our friend and sometimes neighbor has left us in the hearts of those who knew and loved him; that in his life he declared himself the friend of every living thing, that our hill side bears witness to this greatness of his heart who sought to bless even the passing beasts of burden with the joys that enriched his life.

"May we all take counsel in this hour with our better selves and learn that the only good which we can give away and yet possess forever, are honesty and justice, hope and love.

"So shall the house of mourning be better to us than the house of feasting and the blessing of them that mourn be ours.

"May the blessing of God that has followed us all the days of our lives abide with us all, though we be separated in worlds, but not in life. Amen."

Many A Tear-dimmed Eye

During his reading the reverend gentleman who had been a close friend of the deceased was nearly overcome with emotion and several times out of the fullness of his heart seemed to falter as he spoke. The little group present seemed to be imbued with the same spirit and there was a tear in many an eye. When the services were over those present slowly filed out of the house, and not until they had reached the street did they regain their composure.

Then began the slow procession to the cemetery where Mr. Clemens was to be laid beside the body of his beloved wife whose sudden death in Florence, Italy, had proven such a blow to his declining years. Here in the same plot lay the bodies of his three children, Langhorne, jr. [sic Langdon] Olivia Susan and Jean, the loss of whom together with his wife, had made Samuel L. Clemens weary of life. It was only last Christmas that Jean had died and at that time the father was in such feeble health that he could not come here to the burial. He was coming to rejoin her now.

As the burial was to be private, no one outside of the immediate family [and] a few faithful servants, except four newspapermen were on hand when the funeral cortege reached its destination on the top of a little hill where a tent had been put up as a shelter against the storm. The few outsiders stood at a distance while the casket was lowered in the midst of the sorrowing relatives.

Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, who was Clara Clemens, the only surviving daughter of the late author, bore up well under the trying ordeal and on leaving was escorted to her carriage by her husband, and cousin Jervis Langdon, of this city. After the carriages had left the scene Undertaker Smith permitted the few newspapermen to view the last resting place of the man who began his career in a newspaper office. The four stood with uncovered heads, the last to look upon all that was mortal of this great man.

His Last Resting Place

In years to come people will come from far and near to view this last resting place of Mark Twain as they have done for many years to Stratford-on-Avon where is buried William Shakespeare. Pilgrimages will be made to this spot in beautiful Woodlawn cemetery and thus has Mark Twain distinguished this Queen City where much of his labor was performed and where he met the girl whom he loved and where he finally came to lie in his last sleep. Elmira is to be envied in being the last resting place of this international figure. May he rest in peace.

Arrival of the Remains

The body arrived in this city from New York yesterday morning over the Lackawanna at 9:25 o'clock on the private car "Lake Forest." Accompanying it were the following: Mr. and Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Mr. Clemens' only surviving daughter and her husband; Edward E. Loomis, vice president of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad; and Mrs. Loomis [Julia Langdon Loomis], a niece; Albert Bigelow Paine; and Jarvis [sic] Langdon, a nephew; Katie Leary, the housekeeper, who thirty years ago entered the services of the Clemenses in this city; and Claude, the butler. F.A. Duneka and Major F.P. Leigh, of Harper Brothers, came on to Elmira to attend the funeral.

General Langdon was at the station to meet the party and the body was at once taken to the Langdon home.

It was hoped that the Rev. Joseph Twichell, of Hartford, Conn., a life-long personal friend of the later Mr. Clemens, could come to this city and deliver the funeral oration. The Rev. Joseph Twichell had intended to come but here another pathetic incident entered into this strange story. The wife of Mr. Twichell had been taken ill in Hartford and he had been hastily summoned from the funeral services over the remains of his friend in New York City, back to the bedside of his wife; and when morning came, the Angel of Death had entered his own household and snatched away a loving helpmate. The mourners around the Clemens' bier in this city were further grieved by the telegram announcing this death, yesterday morning. Mrs. Ossip Gabilowitsch immediately telegraphed to Hartford that she would hasten to that city together with her husband, as soon as the last rites had been held over the body of her dead father.

Elmira can not but help feeling a touch of pity for the daughter, the last of a noble family. Heartfelt sympathy goes out to her from even the remotest corner of the globe and [the] world mourns with her in this hour of sorrow. She has lost a father, and the world has lost a ray of sunshine that can never be replaced. Mark Twain sleeps in Woodlawn [Jerome & Wisbey quote, 155-9].

The New York Times, July 15, 1911

MARK TWAIN ESTATE ABOUT HALF MILLION Largely in Stocks and Estimated Worth of the Mark Twain Company PROPERTY IN TWO STATES

Principally In This City and at His Home in Redding, Conn.—Manuscripts Said to be Without Value. Deputy State Controller Julius Harburger filed with the Surrogates' Court yesterday the tax appraisal of the estate of Samuel L. Clemens, (Mark Twain.) Mr. Clemens died at his home in Connecticut on April 21, 1910. He left in this State and Connecticut an estate aggregating $471,136.

By the terms of the will, which was made on Aug. 7, 1909, the author leaves his entire estate to his sole surviving daughter, Mrs. Clara Clemens Gabrilowitsch. The witnesses to the will were Albert Bigelow Paine, Harry A. Lounsbury of Redding, Conn., and Charles T. Lark of 571 West 139th Street, this city. The executors of the will were Zoheth S. Freeman and Edward E. Loomis, both of New York, and Jervis Langdon of Elmira.

Mr. Clemens left no real estate in this State, but his personal property here amounted to $296,746. He held among his personal effects 929 shares of stock of five different companies at different times, which turned out to be worthless, as in most cases the companies were out of business.

Included in the estate in Connecticut were 1,750 shares of the Utah Consolidated Mining Company, valued at $80,377; 165 shares of United Fruit Company, valued at $29,370; 400 shares of Anaconda Copper Company, valued at $18,100; and 100 shares of Union Pacific Railroad Company, valued at $18,587.

His property at Redding, Conn., is valued at $70,000. A trunk containing manuscripts was said to be without value. Some of his important holdings in this State were fifty shares of the Mark Twain Company, valued at $200,000 and 100 shares of American Telephone and Telegraph Company, valued at $13,687, and 813 shares of J. Langdon & Co., valued at $21,674.

The author also left books valued at $2,000. An affidavit by Charles Lark, the witness, states that the appraisal value of $200,000 for the shares in the Mark Twain Company was considered too high by Harper & Brothers, who published Mr. Clemens's books, and who placed an upset value of $180,000 on the stock.

In commenting upon the appraisal there is also a letter from F. A. Duneka of Harper & Brothers, which says:

"A copyright is a very perishable and usually non-marketable thing, growing of less and less value very rapidly after an author's death.

"While we expect that during the next four years the Mark Twain estate will receive under existing contracts $18,000 a year upon copyright royalty account, yet this amount after the expiration of existing contracts will immediately tend to dwindle and diminish.

"We put an upset valuation of $180,000 upon his copyrights, and even this we regard as excessive.

Clara and Ossip sent out the following engraved notice thanking those who sent sympathy.

One or two wrote after Twain's death seeking books they'd sent him to autograph. These were found and sent.

Frederick A. Duneka offered Albert Bigelow Paine $10,000 for the serial rights to the biography he was writing on Clemens. He accepted on May 18 and selected chapters of the Biography ran in Harper's Monthly in 1911.

The index is organized alphabetically, not chronologically. The following have not been indexed: fictional characters, most newspaper articles and subheadings, all subjects of all letters, whether paraphrased, summarized, or quoted, as well as persons and places within autobiographical dictation summaries See AMT 1: for more on specifics. Not all subjects listed under Autobiographical Dictations have been indexed, but most have. These summaries were taken from AMT or Mark Twain in Eruption and are not comprehensive.

Items within the Addenda & Errata for Vol. III (as of print time) are included in this index. More recent updates may be found at MarkTwainDaybyDay.webs.com. This index includes books, plays and other literary works, as well as the authors of those works. Readers may seek up to date bibliographies for Samuel Clemens' vast array of writings, including the on-line site of Camfield's Oxford Companion to Mark Twain. Also, Thomas Tenney's Mark Twain, A Reference Guide (with many supplements) is still a central reference for works written about Clemens. Alan Gribben's Mark Twain's Library: A Reconstruction is an excellent source for Sam's literary interests and ownership of a vast library of works; many literary works and literary criticisms are beyond the scope of this work.

This index focuses on persons and places, with lesser emphasis on events and subjects, such as baseball or International Copyright efforts. Those who corresponded with Sam are indexed; locations are limited to those Sam stayed or planned to visit. Whenever possible, surname, first name and middle initial or middle name are listed. In some cases these are unknown; some individuals may be double listed, when it was undetermined if they were different people, such as a "Mrs." listing and a maiden name. If Sam referred to someone in a letter and only the last name is given, and no other reference was found, then the last name only is indexed. Merchants and commercial firms, when named as "John B. Smith, Plumber," are alphabetized and indexed in the same order as the literal company name, in this case under "John" not "Smith." Likewise, "Wm. H. Jackson & Co." as "Wm" not as "William" or "Jackson."

Mark Twain's major literary works, may be found directly by name of the work. His minor works, such as essays, sketches, poems, as well as a sprinkling of his interesting events, opinions and experiences may be found as subheadings under Clemens, Samuel L.: Sub headings are indented and underlined; sub-sub headings are doubly indented, etc.. The principal subheadings for Clemens are:

Many listings are mere mentions; some significant, some trivial. In a day-by-day chronology, much of a trivial nature is included, which scholars and researchers may ultimately judge, in context, to be significant. Many speeches, readings and lectures are indexed, but these are not meant to be complete. Readers should seek individual entries in a given timeframe for more specifics. Many readings included several set pieces, and not all lectures were such in the common meaning of the term at that time.

The index of a book should always be written by the author, even though the book itself should be the work of another hand. — Attributed to M.T. by Robert Underwood Johnson, Remembered Yesterdays, p 190n1.
